The Sasson Report, while concerned only with outposts, contains much insightful detail. It names 150 communities/outposts in the West Bank with incomplete or nonexistent PERMITS. Sasson cautions, however, that this list was not exhaustive due to the lack of cooperation of some ministries and government offices, which she asserts failed to provide her with relevant documentation that she requested. Among the outposts that she is aware of, Sasson found at least fifteen that had been built entirely on LAND privately owned by Palestinians and “are totally illegal and must be removed.” At least seven outposts are on disputed land, twenty-six are on land in the West Bank claimed by Israel as STATE LAND, and an additional thirty-nine are on parcels of land that include private Palestinian property.

The report places direct and major responsibility for this situation on ongoing secret cooperation among various government ministries and official institutions, specifically the Ministry of Defense and the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF), including the CIVIL ADMINISTRATION, the Ministry of Construction and Housing, the Settlement Division of the WZO, and the Ministry of Interior Affairs. It claims:

- The Housing Ministry supplied 400 mobile homes for outposts on private Palestinian land.
- The Defense Ministry approved the positioning of trailers to begin new outposts.
- The Education Ministry paid for nurseries and their teachers.
- The Energy Ministry connected outposts to the electricity grid.
- ROADS to outposts were paid for with taxpayers’ money.

According to the report, the Housing Ministry (HM) created a new budget line in 2001 called “miscellaneous general development” that was used to finance illegal outposts. The budget line doubled from 2001 to 2003, and during the period 2000–2004 the ministry gave more than $16.7 million to illegal outposts. The ministry also transferred 400 mobile homes to the outposts, placing them on private Palestinian land and in other unauthorized areas without official government approval. Additionally, the HM sent 140 trailers to the outposts even before the tender process for purchasing them was complete. “Not surprisingly,” Sasson writes, “the company that won the tender was the company that had already manufactured the trailers.”

The Israeli HM allocated the largest sum—$1.16 million for INFRASTRUCTURE and $167,000 for public structures—to the Nof Harim outpost, which was set up in 1995 when Israeli Knesset member BENJAMIN BEN-ELIEZER held the position of housing minister (and YITZHAK RABIN was prime minister). Nof Harim was established in part on privately owned Palestinian land.

The year 1995 also saw the illegal establishment, also on private Palestinian land, of two outposts in the Ofra-Beit El area—Pisgat Yaakov and Emunah. In the initial years after their establishment, these two outposts received funding of more than $1.33 million, half of which came from the HM. The Horsha outpost, set up that same year on land whose ownership Sasson stated was “yet to be determined,” received $347,000 from the Housing Ministry.

Sasson further wrote that the Migron outpost, established in May 2001, lies entirely on land belonging to the adjacent Palestinian villages of Ein Yabrud and Burka. The HM spent more than $780,000 on infrastructure and $178,000 on public buildings for Migron.

Other highlights of Sasson’s report include that the Defense Ministry approved and assisted in the positioning of trailers to establish new outposts. The IDF, “in practice . . . do not enforce the law. . . . The commander spirit, as described to me, sees the settlers’ acts building outposts as Zionist deeds, although illegal, and asks them not to inspect such acts through the eyes of the law. This commander spirit is nourished by the involvement of State authorities and public authorities in establishing unauthorized outposts.” The Education Ministry paid for nurseries and teachers in the illegal outposts. The Energy Ministry and the Israel Electric Corporation connected outposts to the electricity grid. The Mekorot Israeli WATER utility provided water systems for the outposts. Conversely, Sasson reports, taxpayers’ money paid for new access roads to the outposts.

Figures in the report’s appendix, correct as of June 2004, reveal that the funds were allocated to 753 settler families (plus a few dozen Israeli bachelors and students), who settled in sixty-one illegal outposts during BENJAMIN NETANYAHU’S term in office (1996–1999), and another 600 individuals who settled in outposts established during Ariel Sharon’s period as prime minister (2001–2006). Moreover, the sums noted in the appendix did not include tens of millions of shekels allocated to the outposts by the Israeli Defense Ministry, the WZO Settlement Division, regional councils, and private donors from Israel and abroad. The WZO did not furnish data on the funds it invested in the outposts and said only that it funded initial encampments, planning, production means, and generators.

The Sasson Report could have been embarrassing to Prime Minister Sharon because, when he was foreign minister under Netanyahu in 1998, Sharon publicly urged settlers to seize hilltops in order to break up the contiguity of Palestinian areas and prevent the establishment of a Palestinian state. The BBC reported his admonitions: “Let everyone get a move on and take some hilltops! Whatever we take will be ours, and whatever we don’t take will not be ours!” Sharon was not criticized for the report’s findings—at home or abroad—with some exceptions in the liberal Hebrew press. Despite the fact that Sasson demanded the criminal investigations of individuals involved in the outpost movement, and in the face of legal action called for against officials implicated in funding illegal settlements (by PEACE NOW and other groups), it does not appear that Sharon or any other, former or current, government official will face any legal repercussions. Sharon suffered a massive stroke less than a year later (January 2006), thus his responsibility became moot. As of July 2009 no one has been charged for these offenses.

Although, as prime minister, Sharon promised President George W. Bush that Israel would freeze all new settlement activity and dismantle illegal outposts erected since he came into office in March 2001, Washington had little comment on Sasson’s report. US officials said that they expected Sharon “to keep his promises to the president,” but it was also evident that Washington would not pressure Sharon on the issue while ISRAEL’S UNLATERAL DIS-ENGAGEMENT from GAZA was in play.

Settler leaders rejected all criticism of illegality and wrongdoing, protesting that they were participating in officially sanctioned community planning initiatives. Settler leader Shaul Goldstein said Sharon should be the one to face questioning over the report’s findings, adding, “It’s obvious that the one who sent us in order to protect the roads and land is the prime minister so he should look in the mirror. Mr. Sharon has to be questioned—not us.” A spokesman for the settlers’ YESHA COUNCIL said, “The report did not surprise us in terms of factual content. All along the council claimed that the government knew what was being done and we assumed that all that was being done was government-approved from the top down.” By mid-summer 2009 only four outposts (two uninhabited) had been dismantled and many new ones had been established.

See also ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA; OUTPOSTS; SETTLEMENTS; SETTLER VIOLENCE

Bibliography

- Alon, Gideon. "Construction on W. Bank Outposts Continues, Despite Sasson Report." Ha'aretz. 14 March 2005.
- Benn, Aluf. "Israel Still Expropriating Land to Expand Settlements." Ha'aretz. 26 September 2004.
- Cheshin, Amir S., Bill Hutman, and Avi Melamed. Separate and Unequal: The Inside Story of Israeli Rule in East Jerusalem. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1999.
- Eldar, Akiva. "One Person Is Enough." Ha'aretz. 18 March 2005.
- . "There's a System for Turning Palestinian Property into Israel's State Land." Ha'aretz. 27 December 2005.
- Erlanger, Steven. "Day after Report, Author Says Israeli Democracy Is at Risk." New York Times. 9 March 2005.
- . "Israeli Report Condemns Support for Settlement Outposts." New York Times. 9 March 2005.
- Harel, Amos. "The Extreme Right Has Sought to Establish a 'Balance of Terror.'" Ha'aretz. 11 March 2008.
- . "Laws of the Jungle Apply in the West Bank." Ha'aretz. n/d. <http://www.haaretz.com/hasen/spages/1020708.html>.
- King, Laura. "Israeli Ministries Aid Unauthorized Outposts, Report Says." Los Angeles Times. 9 March 2005.
- MacKinnon, Ian. "Israel 'Conniving' on Settlements." Sunday Times (London). 10 March 2005.
- Shelak, Ofer. "The Law Breakers' Defense Forces." Yedioth Ahronoth. 10 March 2005.
- Summary of the Opinion Concerning Unauthorized Outposts*. Full text. The Sasson Report about Illegal Outposts. Washington, DC: Foundation for Middle East Peace, 2005. <http://www.fmep.org/documents/sassonreport.html>.
- Yonah, Yossi, and Ishak Saporta. "The Politics of Land and Housing in Israel: A Wayward Republican Discourse." Social Identities 8:1 (2002).

Saudi Arabia

Saudi policies toward the Israeli-Palestinian conflict reflect a unique Islamic-Arabian worldview and an evolution in Saudi perceptions of how best to respond that are still in progress. The issue first came to light on 14 February 1945 when King Abd al-Aziz accepted an invitation for a secret meeting with President Franklin Roosevelt. They met at the Great Bitter Lake in the Suez Canal aboard the USS Quincy, which was carrying Roosevelt home from the Yalta summit conference. During the meeting, the king expressed his opposition to the partition of Palestine into Jewish and Arab states, saying that GERMANY was the cause of Jewish suffering during the HOLOCAUST, and it, not the Palestinians, should be punished. Roosevelt promised the king that he would never do anything that was hostile to the Arabs, and that the UNITED STATES government would make no change in its basic policy toward Palestine without full and prior consultation with both Jews and Arabs. Roosevelt put this promise in a letter to the king dated 5 April 1945. One week later the president was dead.

The following fall, Roosevelt's successor, HARRY TRUMAN, recalled the US envoys accredited to EGYPT, to Saudi Arabia, and to LEBANON and SYRIA, and the consul general in JERUSALEM to discuss the partition of Palestine. All agreed that the partition of Palestine would be a violation of the promises given to King Abd al-Aziz of Saudi Arabia by President Roosevelt and that it risked destabilizing the entire Arab world. Truman's reply was, "I am sorry gentlemen, but I have hundreds of thousands who are anxious for the success of ZIONISM; I do not have hundreds of thousands of Arabs among my constituents." Truman's response was a harbinger of things to come.

When the BRITISH MANDATE over Palestine ended and partition occurred in 1948, the Saudi Arabian kingdom shared the Arab consensus that partition of Palestine violated the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination. But the Saudi reaction differed to the extent that its view of foreign affairs is deeply embedded in ancient desert Arabian tradition overlaid in the seventh century by Islamic norms and values. Thus perhaps even more perfidious to the Saudis than the denial of self-determination, particularly to Prince Faisal, the Saudi foreign minister and Abd al-Aziz's son, was Truman's refusal to honor Roosevelt's promise to consult with his father and other Arab leaders before taking any action on partition. Breach of promise is highly dishonorable in traditional Saudi culture. Moreover, consultation (shura in Arabic) means far more than simply asking for one's opinion. It is an Arabian tradition to consult with major leaders and opinion makers in order to arrive at an overall consensus (ijma') that legitimizes group policy decisions.

Saudi foreign policy is also imbued with strict adherence to Islamic values that are compatible with its traditional conservative Islamic-Arabian culture. The political ideology of the Saudi regime has always been based on a puritan Islamic revival movement founded in the eighteenth century by Shaykh Muhammad ibn Abd al-Wahhab and labeled “Wahhabism” by his detractors. The founder of the Al Saudi dynasty, Muhammad ibn Saud, was one of its first followers. Wahhabism has historically had its opponents. The earliest were Arabian Muslims who opposed its strict teachings, which they felt undermined their social and economic welfare. But in recent years Wahhabism’s chief critics have been Westerners who link it to the rise of militant Jihadism, particularly since the rise of Islamist TERRORISM after the end of the Cold War. There are indeed some radical Wahhabis, but ironically the movement’s main emphasis is on strict monotheism and on opposition to any “innovations” that crept into the religion since the time of the Prophet Muhammad, not on militant Jihadism as holy war. Wahhabism stresses the broader meaning of Jihadism, which is the promotion of virtue and the prevention of vice in one’s personal as well as corporate life. (The full name of the Saudi religious police [Mutawa’a] is the Committee for the Promotion of Virtue and the Prevention of Vice.)

Islam is basically a legal system like Judaism, not a theological system like Christianity. Its theology can be captured in the Confession of Faith (Shahadah): “There is no god but God and Muhammad is His Messenger.” The Saudi constitution and judicial system are based on Islamic law (Shari’a). In addition, Saudi Arabia is the birthplace of Islam and the site of its two holiest places, Makkah and al-Madinah, which are located in the Hijaz, which is bounded by the Red Sea. It is not surprising, therefore, that as custodians of two holy places the kingdom feels a special responsibility for seeking the welfare of the Muslim world.

Operationally, King Abd al-Aziz’s major foreign policy priorities were the economic welfare of his subjects in the face of a harsh, subsistence environment, and national security threats that had expanded from local tribal warfare to include regional rivalries and conflicts. His vision of how to address both priorities, however, was to a great extent influenced by the traditional Arabian tribal tradition of seeking the cooperation of strong outside powers with mutually perceived self-interests, and for both he ultimately looked to the United States. Mutual Saudi-US economic interests date back to 1933, when the king granted an oil concession to US companies, fearing that if it were to grant concessions to European oil companies, European imperialism would follow in their wake. It was in dealing with what became the Arabian American Oil Company (Aramco) that Abd al-Aziz learned to admire and trust Americans.

Mutual Saudi-US security interests began during World War II, when Saudi Arabia had no standing armed forces, and matured in the 1950s with the advent of the Cold War; and the spread of atheist communism and the rise of radical secular Arab nationalism loomed as major threats to the kingdom. For protection, the king turned to the United States, the free world’s superpower. Atheist communism was seen by the Saudis as a threat to the entire Muslim world, and radical Arab nationalism as a threat to the entire Middle East. In return for US economic and security partnership, the kingdom would undertake to maintain a secure flow of oil for the global economy at stable market prices. From this vision, two pillars of Saudi foreign policy evolved: looking to the United States for national security and using “oil money diplomacy” in support of national foreign interests.

Although King Abd al-Aziz considered the partition of Palestine deplorable, he nevertheless believed that the Israeli-Palestinian conflict it spawned was less of a security threat to the kingdom and to the entire Muslim world than Soviet communism. And at any rate, the kingdom had little influence to reverse partition. As a result, initial Saudi policy toward the Israeli-Palestinian conflict focused on financial support to the Palestinians rather than the militant confrontation adopted by the radical Arab states.

King Abd al-Aziz died in 1953 and was succeeded by his son, Prince Saud. In 1964, Saud was succeeded by his half-brother, Prince Faisal. King Faisal can well be called the author of modern Saudi foreign policy. He was the kingdom’s first foreign minister under his father and then under his brother King Saud, and he remained foreign minister even as king. Faisal was the most experienced person in the country in international affairs. While still in his teens, after World War I, he represented his father on an official visit to Britain and FRANCE, and after World War II he participated in the creation of the UNITED NATIONS.

King Faisal was steeped in Islam, having been tutored by his mother’s family, the al-Shaykhs, who were descendants of Shaykh Muhammad ibn Abd al-Wahhab. Beginning with his father’s vision of foreign policy as a base, Faisal's Islamic vision of foreign affairs emphasized seeking the welfare and security of mankind, first for his citizens, then for the Arab world and the greater Muslim world beyond, and finally for all peoples in need and in search of freedom. The main vehicle for helping those in need was financial aid made possible by the kingdom's oil wealth.

He believed that the greatest foreign security threats to the kingdom came from three sources: imperialism, ZIONISM, and communism. Because the kingdom never experienced imperialism, his opposition to it lay for the most part in the political instability it spawned throughout the Arab and Muslim world by dissidents seeking independence. Like his father, Faisal also considered the partition of Palestine to be an abomination, but his opposition to the creation of a Jewish state did not focus on Judaism, which Islam recognizes as one of the great monotheistic religions. Rather, he castigated Zionism as a secular political movement that had no right to dispossess the indigenous Palestinian Muslims and Christians, who made up 70 percent of the population.

Nevertheless, Faisal, like his father, also believed atheistic communism to be the greatest threat to Saudi Arabia and the entire Muslim world. The classic Islamic worldview is bipolar: Dar al-Islam, the Abode of Islamic Law and Peace, and Dar al-Harb, the Abode of War outside the law. For the king, this bipolar vision meshed closely with the bipolarity of the Cold War between atheist communism and the free world led by the largely monotheistic Christian United States. But because he placed a higher priority on allying with the United States against communism than on castigating it for denying Palestinians the right of self-determination by supporting the creation of Israel, Faisal drew strong condemnation from militant, secular Arab nationalists outside the kingdom who were the most vocal supporters of the Palestinian cause.

The outcome of the 1967 WAR was a turning point for Saudi policy toward the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Although the Saudis had sent troops to JORDAN, they saw no action in the war. And although the loss of the rest of Palestine to Israel was humiliating to all Arabs, perhaps the most devastating loss from King Faisal's point of view was the AL-AQSA MOSQUE complex (AL-HARAM ASH-SHARIF), the third holiest site in Sunni Islam after the Haram Mosque in Makkah and the Prophet's Mosque in al-Madinah. The Saudi position on Jerusalem further hardened when Israel unilaterally "annexed" East Jerusalem after the war. Still, Saudi Arabia sought to avoid direct confrontation with the United States over Palestine.

The 1973 Arab-Israeli war began on 6 October with Egypt and SYRIA attacking Israel to regain the territories that Israel had occupied in the 1967 War. Initially, the war did not appreciably alter Saudi Arabia's low-profile approach to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. This changed, however, when President RICHARD NIXON sent a message to Faisal promising him that the United States would be evenhanded in the war. But on 18 October Nixon asked the US Congress to authorize $2.2 billion in emergency military aid to Israel. The request was a public acknowledgment that the United States had been transferring a massive amount of military equipment to Israel. Even worse, from Faisal's perspective, was the fact that Nixon had broken his personal promise to be impartial; it was a repeat of Truman's breaking President Roosevelt's personal promise to King Abd al-Aziz twenty-eight years earlier.

Faisal had been warning the West for almost a year before the war that unless there was progress on a Middle East settlement that addressed Palestinian rights, the Arabs would use oil production as a political instrument. Two days after Nixon announced his intention to provide arms to Israel, Faisal instituted the Arab oil embargo, enforced by members of the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC). Saudi Arabia had always considered that its economic interests lay in maintaining moderate oil prices, but in response to what Faisal perceived to be an egregious betrayal of a personal promise by Nixon, the king put politics ahead of economics. The response was immediate and worldwide. The global oil market was very tight, and, as prices spiked, so did a vitriolic campaign against Saudi Arabia, particularly from its critics in the United States and also from Israel, where the kingdom was now viewed as a powerful threat because of its economic influence as the world's leading oil producer. Nevertheless, although Faisal maintained an inflexible posture against Zionism, he continued to avoid playing a more active role in seeking a peaceful solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. He believed that only the United States had the capability to pressure Israel to address the key Palestinian issues required for a peace settlement: BORDERS, REFUGEES, SETTLEMENTS, and the status of Jerusalem. He was convinced, however, that it did not have the political will to do so because of US domestic politics, which determined unquestioning US support for the Zionist state.

Following King Faisal's assassination in 1975, the basic broad outlines of his foreign policies remained constant. Nevertheless, each successor has put his personal stamp on policymaking. In addition, changing conditions at home and abroad have altered foreign policy priorities. For example, imperialism was no longer a burning issue by the time of Faisal's death; by 1991 the Cold War had ended, making Faisal's bipolar, anticommunist policies less relevant; a new bipolar strategic threat to the region from militant Islamic Jihadist organizations began to evolve, pitting not only Muslims against non-Muslims but also Muslims against Muslims.

In this changing environment, a new Saudi policy toward the Israeli-Palestinian conflict also began to evolve. Faisal's immediate successor was King Khalid, and the Crown Prince was Prince Fahd, to whom Khalid delegated day-to-day government operations beginning in 1975. Both were adamant that the Palestinians must be accorded the full right of self-determination. Fahd also perceived that peace could not be achieved without Arab recognition of Israel's right to exist. Thus, while Saudi Arabia retained the policies toward the conflict laid out by King Faisal, the Crown Prince initiated a far more active and independent role as befitting the kingdom's new status as the world's leading oil producer in seeking a permanent peace settlement.

Fahd began by creating an Arab consensus for a more moderate, unified position toward the peace process. In the summer of 1977, he used his influence to persuade PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) chairman YASIR ARAFAT to back away from the PLO's claim to all of Palestine and to extend implicit recognition of Israel's right to exist by accepting UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 242, which called for Israel to withdraw from occupied Palestinian territories. Arafat agreed to do so but backed out at the last minute under heavy Syrian pressure, greatly embarrassing Fahd.

The kingdom was further frustrated when Egypt's President Anwar Sadat broke another Arab consensus for collective Arab peace negotiations with Israel. In 1977 Sadat traveled to Israel in a lone effort to negotiate a permanent settlement. Saudi Arabia was convinced that Sadat could not obtain anything more than a separate peace from Israel without US pressure and that his gesture would fail. In September 1978, when President JIMMY CARTER invited Israeli prime minister MENAHEM BEGIN and Sadat to Camp David for peace talks, there was hope in Riyadh that the United States would finally exert the needed pressure on Israel for a settlement. However, the CAMP DAVID ACCORDS that came out of the meeting, though hailed by the United States, Egypt, and Israel as a major step toward peace, were considered by the Saudis to be the realization of their worst fears. From their perspective, the Israelis gained a separate peace with Egypt while conceding nothing on the Palestinian right to self-determination; it was reduced to limited local autonomy. There was no mention of Palestinian refugees or of the status of Jerusalem. The Saudis were also irritated that Sadat agreed to the terms of the accords without consulting them or any other Arab leaders and without input from the Palestinians. On the urging of Carter, the Saudis did not condemn the accords outright. However, when Sadat signed a separate peace treaty with Israel the following year, Saudi Arabia joined the Arab consensus in expelling Egypt from the ARAB LEAGUE and severing diplomatic and economic relations.

While Israel and Egypt went on to sign a bilateral peace treaty, the Camp David Accords ultimately collapsed. Their failure convinced Fahd that the United States was unwilling or unable due to domestic political pressure to exert sufficient pressure on Israel to achieve a permanent settlement that realized Palestinian rights as well as guaranteed Israeli security. Though still seeking to maintain close relations with the United States, particularly on security matters, the kingdom was not willing to continue following Washington's lead on an Israeli-Palestinian peace settlement. In 1981, Saudi Arabia launched its own independent peace initiative. On 7 August Fahd announced an eight-point comprehensive peace plan that became known as the FAHD PLAN, which sought the following:

1. Israeli withdrawal from all Palestinian territory occupied in 1967
2. Removal of all Israeli settlements created in occupied Palestinian territories since 1967

3. Guaranteed freedom of worship for all religions at Israel/Palestine's HOLY SITES
4. Right of all Palestinians to return to their homes and compensation for those who chose not to do so
5. UN control of the WEST BANK and GAZA for a transitional period
6. Establishment of a Palestinian state with Jerusalem as its capital
7. Affirmation of all states in the region to live in peace
8. Implementation and guarantee of these principles by the United Nations or some of its members

Fahd had obtained Arab consensus for the plan, including concurrence with point 7, which was intended to give implicit Arab recognition to the existence of Israel. Israel, however, rejected the plan in its entirety, stating that it did not explicitly guarantee its right to exist. It also opposed any mention of Israeli settlements, Arab refugees, or the status of Jerusalem.

At the 1982 Arab Summit in Fez, Morocco, the plan was approved with slight modifications by the Arab League, but it was rejected by the United States. Fahd, who had become king the previous June, continued to push for a comprehensive peace, and in December 1982 the PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL accepted the partition of Palestine and the UN resolutions relating to it, including 242.

In September 1993, Israel and the PLO signed the Oslo DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES, in which they agreed formally to recognize each other. Saudi Arabia supported the OSLO ACCORDS, but it was not prepared to accept any peace settlement that did not address the Palestinian right of self-determination or that did not end Israeli control of the Muslim holy places in Jerusalem. After King Fahd suffered a stroke in November 1995, Crown Prince Abdallah, his half-brother, took over day-to-day government operations. Abdallah continued Fahd's insistence on Palestinian rights as well as control of the Muslim holy places. He also believed it imperative to find a just solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and was outspoken in his criticism of Israel's punitive tactics in response to rising Palestinian violence and terrorism. Israel and American Zionists responded by charging that Saudi support of charities that provided aid to impoverished Palestinians, including families of those who did SUICIDE BOMBINGS, was tantamount to supporting terrorism.

Nevertheless, Abdallah continued efforts to achieve a just and lasting peace. As violence between Israelis and Palestinians increased in the wake of the collapse of peace talks in September 2000, he initiated another Saudi peace plan at the Arab League summit meeting in Beirut in March 2002 where it was endorsed by all those in attendance. Labeled the "Abdallah Initiative," it called for complete Israeli withdrawal from all the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967; Israeli acceptance in principle of an agreed, just solution to the Palestinian refugee problem; and creation of a sovereign and independent Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza with East Jerusalem as the capital. In return, it called for the Arab states to accept that the Arab-Israeli conflict was over and to sign a peace treaty with Israel to verify a comprehensive peace for all the states of the region and the establishment of normal Arab-Israeli relations in the context of a comprehensive peace.

This initiative was more forthcoming than any previous Arab plan, and it was generally well received, even by some Israeli officials. Again, however, the Abdallah Initiative was rejected by Israel and subsequently by the United States.

Abdallah became king on 1 August 2005, following the death of King Fahd. Although longstanding Saudi priorities for an Israeli-Palestinian peace have not changed under King Abdallah, what has changed is the king's personal style in Saudi foreign policy. It is far less nuanced and cautious than that of his predecessor. Nevertheless, although he still values bilateral Saudi relations with the US, he has long been skeptical that any US administration will have the political capital to pressure Israel into accepting Palestinian priorities for a just settlement, namely a TWO-STATE SOLUTION, mutually agreed boundaries—essentially those before the 1967 War—withdrawal of Israeli settlements in Palestinian territory, acknowledgment of the Palestinian refugees' right of return if not their actual return, and a solution for Jerusalem that considers the rights of both Palestinians and Israelis in return for Palestinian/Arab acceptance of Israel's right to exist and pledging security guarantees.

In February 2007, Saudi Arabia exercised its role as a leader in Arab politics by brokering the Makkah Accord, aimed at creating a Palestinian national unity government and ending the violent power struggle between moderate FATAH, led by MAHMUD ABBAS, president of the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY, and HAMAS, a radical Islamist party that had won a majority in recent legislative elections. Although the accord was accepted by both parties, Hamas refused to agree to a conditional commitment to recognize Israel as a precondition to peace negotiations. A national unity government was established on 17 March, but Hamas's refusal foreclosed progress on peace negotiations. Backed by the United States, Israel labeled Hamas a terrorist organization and refused to negotiate without Palestinian prerecognition. There was much discussion in the Western media of Saudi Arabia having derailed the peace process, but in reality the kingdom has not deviated from the 2002 Abdallah Initiative. Nevertheless, negotiations were not resumed. Viewed from the Saudi perspective, in the absence of any commitment by Israel to address key Palestinian concerns over borders, settlements, refugees, and Jerusalem, renewed negotiations could not lead to a final settlement.

For the present, therefore, the kingdom will stick with the Abdallah Initiative, which was re-endorsed at the Riyadh Arab League Summit convened on 28 March 2007. From the Saudi point of view, if the United States would persuade Israel to agree to negotiations based on the initiative, Hamas's holding out could not overcome a broad Arab consensus created by the Arab League. Hopes were raised throughout the Arab world that incoming president Barack Obama would fulfill his campaign promise to restart the Arab-Israeli peace process. But when President Obama, meeting with King Abdallah in April 2009, asked him to make a gesture toward Israel in order to restart the peace process, the king declined. Saudi foreign minister Saud Al Faisal was even more adamant in rejecting the US request. Making incremental gestures to improve relations with Israel in the absence of any Israeli conditional commitment to withdraw from occupied Palestinian territories, he said, has not and in the Saudi view will not bring about a settlement.

Bibliography

- Cordesman, Anthony H. Saudi Arabia Enters the Twenty-First Century: The Political, Foreign Policy, Economic, and Energy Dimensions. Westport, CT: Praeger, 2003.
- Eddy, William A. F.D.R. Meets Ibn Saud. Amman: Salwa Publishing, 2002.

- Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, Ministry of Information. "King Faisal Speaks." Riyadh. n.d.
- Long, David E. The United States and Saudi Arabia: Ambivalent Allies. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1985.
- Long, David E., and Sebastian Maisel. The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, rev. ed. Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 2010.

—David E. Long

Saudi Peace Initiative (Fahd Plan), 1981

See FAHD PLAN; SAUDI ARABIA

Saudi Peace Plan, Abdullah Initiative, February 2002

See ARAB PEACE INITIATIVE, 2002 AND 2007; SAUDI ARABIA

Saunders, Harold H. (1930–), and the Saunders Plan, 1975

Harold Saunders was the architect of a peace initiative in 1975 that for the first time in US diplomacy articulated the issue of the political rights of the Palestinians as an essential element of Arab-Israeli peace.

Saunders was a longtime US public servant who had a Ph.D. from Yale, with a dissertation on US intellectual history. For six years, while already in government service, he lectured on US history and US diplomatic history at George Washington University. Saunders was a first lieutenant in the US Air Force and spent three years at the CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY before moving to the State Department. He served in the US government for twenty-five years under five presidents, from the time he joined the National Security Council in 1961 up to his resignation from the State Department as President JIMMY CARTER's term came to an end in January 1981. He received the President's Award for Distinguished Federal Civilian Service—the US government's highest award for civilian public servants—and the State Department's Distinguished Honor Award.

Saunders, as deputy assistant secretary of state, gave a speech to the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on the Middle East on 12 November 1975 in which he recognized, for the first time in US diplomacy, the political rights of the Palestinians. The context for the address involved a number of important factors, including the growing international legitimacy accorded the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO). In the 1974 RABAT SUMMIT, the Arab states had declared the PLO the sole, legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. In November 1974, the UN General Assembly had invited PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT to address it and had subsequently passed Resolution 3236 recognizing the national and political rights of Palestinians, as well as Resolution 3237, which granted the PLO permanent observer status at the UN General Assembly. Saunders thus put forward an outline, referred to as the Saunders Plan, of what he considered a necessary and appropriate change in US policy regarding the Middle East, especially concerning the Palestinians. In the speech, he said: "In many ways, the Palestinian dimension of the Arab-Israeli conflict is the heart of that conflict. Final resolution of the problems arising from the partition of Palestine, the establishment of the State of Israel, and Arab opposition to those events will not be possible until agreement is reached defining a just and permanent status for the Arab peoples who consider themselves Palestinians. . . .

"Today, however, we recognize that, in addition to meeting the human needs and responding to legitimate personal claims of the REFUGEES, there is another interest that must be taken into account. It is a fact that many of the three million or so people who call themselves Palestinians today increasingly regard themselves as having their own identity as a people and desire a voice in determining their political status. As with any people in this situation, there are differences among themselves, but the Palestinians collectively are a political factor which must be dealt with if there is to be a peace between Israel and its neighbors. . . .

"Other Arab leaders, while pressing the importance of Palestinian involvement in a settlement, have taken the position that the definition of Palestinian interests is something for the Palestinian people themselves to sort out, and the view has been expressed by responsible Arab leaders that realization of Palestinian rights need not be inconsistent with the existence of Israel. . . .

"What is needed as a first step is a diplomatic process, which will help bring forth a reasonable definition of Palestinian interests—a position from which negotiations on a solution of the Palestinian aspects of the problem might begin. The issue is not whether Palestinian interests should be expressed in a final settlement, but how. There will be no peace unless an answer is found."

Israel utterly rejected Saunders's statement and made its anger known in Washington. Saunders's ideas did not begin to bear fruit until more than twelve years later, when in 1988, PLO chairman Yasir Arafat announced that the PLO accepted UN RESOLUTION 242, recognized Israel's right to exist, and renounced TERRORISM. It required many more years before direct Israel-PLO negotiations actually began, and more years still before they failed. Nevertheless, Saunders's vision, while ahead of its time, is considered a highly significant contribution to US foreign policy on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Bibliography

- Kipper, Judith, and Harold H. Saunders. The Middle East in Global Perspective. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1991.
- Saunders, Harold H. "Arabs and Israelis: A Political Strategy." Foreign Affairs. 26 (1985).
- . "The Middle East: A Turning Point? An Israeli-Palestinian Peace." Foreign Affairs. 61:1 (1982).
- . The Other Walls: The Arab-Israeli Peace Process in a Global Perspective. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1985.
- . "Prenegotiations and Circum-negotiation: Arenas of the Multilevel Peace Process." In Turbulent Peace: The Challenges of Managing International Conflict. Edited by Chester A. Crocker, Fen Osler Hampson, and Pamela Aall. Washington, DC: United States Institute of Peace, 2001.
- . "Reconstituting the Arab-Israeli Peace Process." In The Middle East: Ten Years after Camp David. Washington, DC: Brookings Institution, 1988.
- . "U.S. Foreign Policy and Peace in the Middle East: Prepared Statement of Harold H. Saunders, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs, before the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on the Middle East, November 12, 1975." In The Israel-Arab Reader: A Documentary History of the Middle East Conflict, rev. and updated ed. Edited by Walter Lacquer and Barry Rubin. New York: Penguin Books, 1984. Full text online at www.mideastweb.org/saunders.htm.

Savir, Uri (1953–)

Uri Savir is an Israeli diplomat who played a crucial role in the negotiations leading up to the signing of the DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES by the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION and Israel.

He was a longtime member of the Knesset, where he was head of the Subcommittee for Foreign Affairs. Savir is a senior career diplomat, having served as the head of the Israeli Foreign Service, and was the chief negotiator of the OSLO ACCORDS, after which he entered private life. He established two international nonprofit organizations over which he presides: the Global Forum (Rome), which pursues a new balance between global and local forces in today's world, and the SHIMON PERES Center for Peace.

Bibliography

- Arbinger Institute. The Anatomy of Peace: Resolving the Heart of Conflict. San Francisco: Berrett-Koehler Publishers, 2006.
- Savir, Uri. The Process: 1,100 Days That Changed the Middle East. New York: Random House, 1998.

Al-Sayigh, Anis (1931–)

Anis al-Sayigh is a Christian Palestinian scholar and writer. Born in TIBERIAS, he was in boarding school in JERUSALEM when Tiberias fell to Israel. His family was forced to leave the city and became REFUGEES in LEBANON. He received his undergraduate education at the American University in Beirut and his Ph.D. in political studies from Pembroke College, Cambridge University. In the scholarly tradition of his prominent family, Sayigh has written more than twenty books on the history of the Arab world and on the question of Palestine. From 1966 to 1974, he directed the PALESTINE RESEARCH CENTER of the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION, which his brother FAYEZ established in Beirut. Anis al-Sayigh was the target of three Israeli assassination attempts, and one of them, a letter bomb in 1972, left him nearly blind. Nevertheless, he went on to be editor-in-chief of the six-volume Arabic-language Palestinian Encyclopedia.

See also PALESTINIAN SOCIETY, PRE-1948; TARGETED ASSASSINATIONS

Al-Sayigh, FAYEZ 'Abd Allah (1922–1980)

FAYEZ al-Sayigh was a Palestinian scholar and diplomat born in TIBERIAS, who together with his family became REFUGEES in LEBANON in 1948. He obtained a B.A. and an M.A. from the American University of Beirut and a Ph.D. from Georgetown University. He taught at several universities in the UNITED STATES, worked for the UNITED NATIONS, and was a member of the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, although as a young man he had belonged to the Syrian Social Nationalist Party (a pan-Arabist party). Al-Sayigh also served on the PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL and established the PLO's PALESTINE RESEARCH CENTER in Beirut.

See also PALESTINIAN SOCIETY, PRE-1948

Al-Sayigh, Yusif (1916–2004)

Yusif al-Sayigh was a renowned Palestinian economist, scholar, academic, and politician. Born just before his family's move to Palestine from LEBANON during the Druze Uprising of 1925, he attended school in Sidon and earned a B.A. in business administration in 1938 from the American University in Beirut (AUB), which he left to help support his five younger brothers through college. During the BRITISH MANDATE, al-Sayigh was an official in the national fund of the ARAB HIGHER COMMITTEE. In 1949, after spending nine months in an Israeli prisoner-of-war camp, he was deported, rejoined his REFUGEE family in Beirut, and returned to AUB. In 1952 he obtained an M.A. in economics and began teaching in the Economics Department at AUB. In 1954 he was awarded a Fulbright scholarship to study at Johns Hopkins University, where he received a Ph.D. in political economy in 1957. His doctoral dissertation was later published as Entrepreneurs of Lebanon: The Role of the Business Leader in a Developing Economy (Harvard University Press, 1962).

In 1957 al-Sayigh returned to AUB, where he was appointed assistant professor in the Department of Economics. He spent 1959–1960 at Harvard University as a visiting research associate, and in 1960 he was invited to Princeton University as a visiting associate professor. Back at AUB, he was promoted to full professor in 1963. He was director of the AUB Economic Research Institute from 1962 to 1964 and remained an active faculty member until 1974, when he took early retirement. Yusif al-Sayigh was an assiduous researcher and writer, with fifteen books to his credit (of which the two-volume study The Economies of the Arab World and Determinants of Arab Economic Development is the best known), as well as forty journal articles (in English) and numerous others in Arabic. His main field of specialization was eco-conomic development in the Arab world, but he also wrote about oil, the Lebanese economy, the Israeli economy, and Arab economic integration.

Al-Sayigh was active beyond the university as well. In 1964–1965, on sabbatical from AUB, he served as adviser to the Planning Board of KUWAIT, when he drew up a five-year development plan for the country. After retiring from AUB, he served as consultant to the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries, the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development, the LEAGUE OF ARAB STATES, the UNITED NATIONS Food and Agricultural Organization, and the Arab Industrial Development Organization. From 1968 to 1971 he directed the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION'S (PLO) Research Center, and during 1971–1974 he was treasurer of the PLO'S PALESTINE NATIONAL FUND and a member of the PLO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE. His last appointment was as the PLO'S senior economic adviser and official representative to the World Bank.

Yusif al-Sayigh was a founding member of the Centre for Arab Unity Studies, as well as of the ARAB THOUGHT FORUM (JORDAN) and of the Economic Research Forum for the Arab Countries, IRAN, and TURKEY. He was also president of the Arab Society for Economic Research from 1992 to 1995. He was the recipient of many awards, among them recognition from the Kuwait Institute for Scientific Research for distinction in the field of economic development in the Arab world (1981) and the Abdallah Al-Tariqi Award in 2000.

See also DEPORTATION; PALESTINIAN SOCIETY, PRE-1948

Scandinavian Countries

Since the 1980s, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark have all been involved in efforts to foster peace in the Middle East, specifically between the Israelis and Palestinians. These small Scandinavian countries share certain features that have allowed them to play a unique role in conflict-resolution efforts. In sharp contrast to other European states, the foreign policies of these three Western industrialized countries have tended to favor neutrality and non-alignment. Geographically they are on the periphery of Europe, but, more importantly, they have tended to take cautious positions in relation to the idea of a united Europe and the partisanship this has sometimes implied. Denmark did not join the European Community until 1973 and has opted out of several key aspects of EUROPEAN UNION (EU) policy. During the Cold War, Sweden viewed EU membership as contravening its neutrality and only joined in 1995. After two failed public referenda on the issue of membership, Norway has never joined the EU.

Additionally, all three countries espouse a "Nordic model," both at home and abroad. Domestically, this model is characterized by democratic openness and a strong role for the state in social welfare and in fostering ongoing dialogue and consensus building among social groups (especially business and labor). Internationally, among the industrialized countries, these countries have been leading donors of international aid and have taken an active engagement in the multilateral, cooperative, and peaceful resolution of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Not least of all, the governments of all three countries share the reputation of being "honest brokers" in their dealings with other states, precisely because they respect the norms and rules of other countries. In the Middle East, this characterization is further aided by the fact that none of the Scandinavian countries were directly implicated in the colonial history of the region (as were, for example, both Great Britain and FRANCE with the mandate system created by the League of Nations after World War I).

For the first two decades following World War I, the national claims made by Palestinians and the plight of Palestinians after 1948 were not centrally recognized issues in the foreign policies of any of the Scandinavian countries. A more immediate concern continued to be the horror of the HOLOCAUST and the plight of Jewish refugees in Europe during and after World War II. In 1947, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark all voted in favor of the Partition Plan (for separate Arab and Jewish states) in UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION 181. After the 1948 WAR, all three countries quickly established ties with the newly proclaimed Israeli state. Even given the role of the Israeli extremist STERN GANG in the 1948 assassination of Swedish diplomat COUNT FOLKE BERNADOTTE in his capacity as UN mediator in Israel, the Swedish government was largely supportive of the state of Israel. This support continued during the service of Swedish UN secretary general Dag Hammarskjöld, whose diplomatic activity was directed primarily toward supporting the ARMISTICE AGREEMENTS between Israel and the Arab states, as well as mediating the 1956 SINAI/SUEZ WAR.

As with other countries of the EU generally, however, the 1967 WAR marked a turning point in which political elites and the public in Sweden, Norway, and Denmark began to reflect more closely on the Palestinian issue. Specifically, the swift victory of the Israelis and the decisive capture of the Golan Heights, the Sinai Peninsula, the WEST BANK, East JERUSALEM, and the GAZA STRIP, coupled with the OCCUPATION, led to new questioning of who was David and who was Goliath. As a result, without ever becoming hostile toward Israel or employing coercive policies (e.g., economic or other sanctions), these states gave increased attention to the actual claims of Palestinians for recognition, representation, and even statehood. This attention increased with the institutionalization of the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) after 1964 and its call for a liberated, secular, and democratic Palestine.

There are also distinguishing characteristics and historical variabilities among the Scandinavian countries toward the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The 1973 War, the actions of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) that led to higher oil prices, and the ensuing oil crisis, which had special implications for resource-dependent European countries, heightened the attention of the Scandinavian countries toward the fundamentals of the conflict. By the 1980s, efforts at finding a solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict were taking place in Sweden, followed in the 1990s by Norway and, in the first decade of the twenty-first century, by Denmark. Occurring in different decades, these efforts have not involved any formal coordination among the countries. Their style of peacemaking has concentrated on facilitating dialogue and even fostering limited agreements among both state and non-state actors from the key parties (the UNITED STATES, Israel, and the Palestinians). Because these dialogues have mostly occurred behind closed doors beyond the scrutiny of the public and the MEDIA, academic analyses of the dynamics of these sessions are variable and difficult to authenticate. However, it is possible to generally outline the processes and to understand their timing in light of shifting regional dynamics in the Middle East and Europe as well as shifting global dynamics (the Cold War from roughly 1947 to 1989, the end of the Cold War in 1989, and the post-11 September 2001 period). These regional and international dimensions are presented chronologically in considering each country's peacemaking efforts.

Sweden

In 1988, Sweden took an active role in establishing a dialogue between the United States and the PLO. This initiative ultimately resulted in PLO leader YASIR ARAFAT's explicit recognition of the state of Israel and condemnation of all forms of TERRORISM, including state terrorism. The Swedish role in this development is related to the assumption to power of socialist prime minister Olof Palme in 1969 and the new perspective on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict he brought to the government. Under Palme, for both ideological reasons (Sweden's neutrality in the Cold War and its support of anticolonial national liberation movements) and pragmatic reasons (its dependence on oil), the position of the Palestinians began to receive greater legitimacy. Sweden was one of the first European countries to establish ties with the PLO; Arafat and Palme met in Algiers in 1974, and in 1983 Palme received Arafat in Stockholm. Throughout the 1970s, Sweden (unlike the United States and Israel) consistently supported the PLO as the representative of the Palestinian people as well as the right of Palestinians to self-determination. In this regard, UN SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTIONS 242 (1967) AND 338 (1973), which called for Israel's withdrawal from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES in exchange for an end to the Arab-Israeli conflict, served as the stated basis for peace. Sweden was, however, also critical of these resolutions for not going far enough in supporting Palestinian political interests. (The resolutions' only reference to the Palestinians was the call for "a just settlement of the REFUGEE problem." They failed to mention Palestinian political rights, which is why the PLO did not accept the resolutions until 1988.) At the same time, consistent with its mediating tradition in the Middle East, Sweden was careful to support Israeli security concerns and denounced as well UN General Assembly Resolution 3379 (1975), which equated ZIONISM with racism. Even so, in contrast to the period 1948–1969, there was greater friction between Israel and Sweden from 1970 onward.

When socialist Sten Andersson became Sweden's foreign minister in 1985, he took an active interest in the Middle East, and this interest continued after the 1986 assassination of Palme. As the construction of Israeli SETTLEMENTS in the Occupied Territories expanded and the First INTIFADA intensified, Andersson visited the Occupied Territories in 1988 and promoted the idea of an Israeli-PLO dialogue. As a first step toward this goal, and in recognition of the critical role played by the United States in the region, Andersson orchestrated and oversaw a discussion in Stockholm in late November 1988 that involved a small group of Jewish Americans (acting as private US citizens) and members of the PLO leadership (excluding Arafat). The basis for this dialogue was the legitimacy of Palestinian self-determination in an independent state and the PLO's acceptance of Resolutions 242 and 338 (accomplished in mid-November 1988 by the PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL).

Although US secretary of state GEORGE SHULTZ knew about and approved of this meeting, he considered the official statements that ensued from it, calling for mutual recognition and peace, as falling short of US requirements for a dialogue with the PLO. Thus, in December 1988, Andersson convened a second meeting in Stockholm that involved a larger group of Jewish Americans as well as Arafat. Parallel to this meeting and aided by the Swedes, Arafat also engaged in a direct round of discussions with Shultz. With the encouragement of Andersson, Arafat ultimately agreed to the US phrasing of a statement in line with Washington's conditions for a dialogue: Palestinian acceptance of UN Resolutions 242 and 338, a clear recognition of Israel's right to exist, and a clear renunciation of "all forms of terrorism." In making these declarations in 1988, the PLO, under Arafat's leadership, had moved from ARMED STRUGGLE and pursuit of the transformation of Israel and Palestine into a secular, democratic state to a TWO-STATE SOLUTION and the reliance on diplomacy to achieve a Palestinian state in the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem in coexistence with Israel. Thus in December 1988 a low-level US-PLO DIALOGUE commenced during the RONALD REAGAN administration. It lasted for eighteen months, ending in June 1990 by US fiat without the Palestinians having accomplished any of their objectives.

Despite the evolution in the PLO's tactics and strategy and the major concessions made by the Palestinians, President GEORGE H. W. BUSH unilaterally suspended the US-PLO dialogue after the PLO failed to condemn a foiled attack on a Tel Aviv beach by a small faction led by ABU AL-ABBAS. The US action emphasizes that small countries such as Sweden cannot alter the basic power dimensions of global politics without the willingness of key parties to the conflict. Moreover, suggesting the difficulty of being an "honest broker" in as contested a struggle as that between the Israelis and Palestinians tends to lead to zero-sum perspectives, especially on the Israeli side. For example, a number of influential Israeli leaders such as Foreign Minister Moshe Arens came to view Sweden as biased against Israel. Andersson's larger goal for an Israeli-PLO dialogue was further compromised when the Swedish Social Democrats, who had dominated Swedish politics for decades, were swept out of power in 1991.

Norway

Whereas Sweden was not, in the end, the site of an Israeli-PLO dialogue, another Scandinavian country, Norway, was. The position Arafat took in 1988 helped lay the basis for the 1993 OSLO ACCORDS, which resulted from unprecedented secret negotiations in Oslo, Norway, between Israel and the PLO. The OSLO PROCESS and the Oslo Accords (beginning with the DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES on Interim Self-Government and subsequent agreements) fostered a series of agreements in the 1990s that led to the Israeli withdrawal from parts of the West Bank and Gaza and the creation of a PLO-led administrative structure known as the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA). Although the passage of time showed Israeli-Palestinian peace to be elusive, the prominent role played by the Norwegians in the Oslo Process merits further examination.

There is evidence to suggest that because Norway had a closer relationship with the United States than Sweden (as a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization) and gave more unequivocal support to Israel, Arafat viewed Norway as an important state for possible mediation of the conflict. Even during the 1980s, the idea found some support among Norwegian politicians, such as Foreign Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg, who met with Arafat in 1989 to discuss the possibility of dialogue. Nonetheless, at that time there was little interest among Israeli leaders for such a process. By the 1990s, a number of factors converged to support a peace process. First, the end of the Cold War, as signified by the fall of the Berlin Wall and the collapse of the SOVIET UNION, changed the nature of relations at the international and regional levels. In relation to the Middle East, the so-called new world order was ushered in by the US-led 1991 GULF WAR following the Iraqi invasion of KUWAIT in 1990. The weakening of IRAQ made it clear that there was no realistic military option among Arab states and the PLO for achieving a Palestinian state. Second, the PLO, which was exiled in TUNIS, and specifically Arafat's leadership, faced new challenges. The support Arafat gave to Saddam Husayn during the 1991 Gulf War cost the PLO dearly in political and economic support from the Arab states. A new generation of Palestinian leaders, as evidenced by the Washington talks spawned from the MADRID CONFERENCE, began to emerge. Sponsored by the United States and supported by Russia, the conference of October and November 1991 brought together Israeli and non-PLO Palestinian representatives. In contrast, the Oslo Process gave Arafat the chance to potentially deliver something to the Palestinians and simultaneously revive his own tarnished leadership. For Israel, Oslo meant that it faced an extremely weakened PLO and the certainty that its interests would prevail in any negotiation; Oslo also provided Israel with an opportunity to counter the negative political fallout—domestically and internationally engendered by its human rights abuses during the First Intifada.

During the 1990s, mediation, including in the Middle East, emerged as an important component of Norwegian foreign policy—a development that paved the way for the country's role in other world conflicts, including in Guatemala, the Sudan, Sri Lanka, and Cyprus. This emphasis is related to Norway's long history as an advocate of peace since 1901, symbolized by the awarding of the Nobel Peace Prize. However, the role played by Norway in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is also due to the tenacity and actions of specific individuals, most notably TERJE ROED-LARSEN, the former director of the nongovernmental Norwegian Labor and Social Research Institute (FAFO).

From 1989 to 1991, Roed-Larsen was active in seeking opportunities to encourage the idea of talks among Palestinians and Israelis. Larsen's spouse, Mona Juul, was a high-level Norwegian diplomat involved in Middle East affairs, and their efforts were quickly communicated to the Norwegian Foreign Ministry. By September 1992, Jan Egeland, the Norwegian state secretary and an advocate of the power of small states to make a difference internationally, traveled to Israel on behalf of Foreign Minister Stoltenberg. The Norwegian channel, facilitated initially by Roed-Larsen and FAFO, evolved in 1993 into the venue in which the Israelis and Palestinians came to agree on an interim peace agreement that deferred the difficult and most intractable obstacles to peace (especially the question of Palestinian refugees and a Palestinian state) for later discussions. The secret meetings, held with the knowledge of the United States, ultimately brought together Arafat, Israeli foreign minister SHIMON PERES, and Israeli prime minister YITZHAK RABIN. Along the way, the Norwegian role seemed to move from one of facilitation to mediation, particularly once incoming Norwegian foreign minister JOHAN JUERGEN HOLST (who died in January 1994 according to his wife Marianne Heiberg because "he had worked himself to death with the peace process"), became involved after April 1993. The Oslo Accords were finalized in Norway on 20 August 1993 and culminated with the signing ceremony and handshake between Rabin and Arafat on 13 September 1993 in Washington, D.C., with US president BILL CLINTON acting as host and witness.

Subsequently, Norway played an important role in building a Palestinian structure to handle aid money and in the provision of aid, as well as in putting together a Palestinian police force, although it did not play any role in the INTERIM AGREEMENT on the West Bank and Gaza Strip signed in 1995 (Oslo II). Despite the good intentions and endless work, the Oslo Process and Accords failed to deliver a lasting peace. The reasons for this are manifold and include the fact that key issues, especially around Jerusalem, settlements, BORDERS, Palestinian statehood, and refugees, were not dealt with, largely because of the asymmetric power relations between Israelis and Palestinians and Israel's unwillingness to make compromises on these and other issues. A small power such as Norway could not affect the conflict in the absence of willingness by both Palestinians and Israelis and without the direct involvement of the key actor, the United States. In May 1996, Israeli prime minister BENJAMIN NETANYAHU essentially declared the end of the Oslo Process, with no repercussions from the United States.

Denmark

Attempts to revive the Oslo Process, such as the CAMP DAVID SUMMIT in 2000 orchestrated by President Bill Clinton, failed. By 2000 the AL-AQSA INTIFADA ushered in a new spiral of violence involving Palestinian SUICIDE BOMBINGS and a massive Israeli military response, including the reoccupation of the West Bank. The 11 September 2001 terrorist attack in the United States turned intense attention on the Middle East, but the Israeli-Palestinian conflict was a low priority under the presidency of GEORGE W. BUSH.

In contrast, in the context of the European Union, the post-September 11 period was characterized by a more explicit articulation of the relevance of dealing with the Palestine-Israel conflict as well as greater coordination among members. Thus European Council meetings of September and October 2001 stressed the need to restart Middle East peace talks, and in the latter part of 2002, when Denmark held the presidency of the European Council, the ROAD MAP was conceived. This performance-based peace proposal developed and adopted by the QUARTET (the United States, the European Union, Russia, and the United Nations) involved Denmark both in its capacity as EU Council Presidency and in shuttle diplomacy in the Middle East to help devise the steps for the Road Map. That the EU was a participant in the Quartet reflects the growing integration of Europe since the 1990s, its emerging common position, and the fact that it is now an international actor.

In the context of the EU, Denmark is, among the Scandinavian countries, the oldest member, having joined the European Community in 1973. Since joining, both civil society groups and political parties in Denmark have voiced criticisms about the pace and structure of European integration. In national referenda Danes rejected the Maastricht Treaty of 1992 and rejected joining the new European currency (Euro) in 1999. In contrast to this larger trend, Denmark may be seen to have shifted toward the emerging common position of the EU in relation to the Israel-Palestine conflict. In the 1970s and 1980s an atypical form of division had emerged among certain member states of the EU on the conflict: consequently, France, Ireland, Italy, and Greece were more willing to accommodate Palestinian considerations than were the Netherlands, Denmark, and GERMANY. However, the far-reaching position of some member states actually contributed to the advancement of the European position as a whole. Denmark, for example, finally accepted and recognized the PLO and the idea of establishing a Palestinian state—although almost twenty years after the French and Greeks had demanded it.

In addition to advocating a two-state solution today, Denmark has emerged as a major government donor of humanitarian and development funds to the Palestinian National Authority and Palestinian NGOs. Danish funding is provided through multiple channels: direct funding, government-funded Danish NGOs, and other European bodies. The three main frameworks for Danish government funding of NGOs are DanChurchAid (DCA), Mu'assasat (the Multi-donor Secretariat) and its successor, and the European Union, including support for the Euro-Mediterranean Human Rights Network (EMHRN), which is based in Copenhagen, and the European Instrument for Human Rights and Democracy (EIDHR). The Danish International Development Agency (Danida) reported that in 2007 alone, Danish assistance to the Palestinians amounted to approximately $35.5 million (almost 180 million DKK), making it one of the largest international donors to the Palestinians. Denmark is also one of the largest donors to the UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY FOR PALESTINE REFUGEES IN THE NEAR EAST (UNRWA). From 2002 through 2007, Denmark contributed more than $65 million to UNRWA's regular budget and in 2007 gave an additional $14 million in emergency appeals. Denmark's direct funding through Danish NGOs in 2007 was $197 million (932.4 DKK) for development projects and $86 million (407.1 DKK) for humanitarian assistance. Some of the NGOs receiving Danish funding are BADIL RESOURCE CENTER FOR PALESTINIAN RESIDENCY AND REFUGEE RIGHTS; the PALESTINIAN CENTER FOR HUMAN RIGHTS (PCHR); B'TSELEM, the Israeli Center for Information on Human Rights in the Occupied Territories; the World Council of Churches (WCC); AL-HAQ: LAW IN THE SERVICE OF MAN; Defence for Children International/Palestine Section (DCI/PS); Gisha, the Legal Center for Freedom of Movement; ADDAMEER: PRISONERS SUPPORT AND HUMAN RIGHTS ASSOCIATION; Mossawa: the Advocacy Center for Arabs in Israel; PHYSICIANS FOR HUMAN RIGHTS-ISRAEL; plus small grants to the ISRAELI COMMITTEE AGAINST HOUSE DEMOLITIONS, the Campaign for the Right of Entry/Re-entry to the Occupied Palestine Territory, the ARAB THOUGHT FORUM, and Stop the Wall Campaign.

In January 2007, Danish minister for foreign affairs Per Stig Møller delivered a major address at a conference held in Madrid entitled "Madrid: 15 Years Later.” In this address he stated: “a Roadmap for Peace has been formulated, endorsed by the UN Security Council, and accepted by the primary parties as the basis for how to reach that elusive, but desirable goal of two viable and sustainable states. In other words, we all know more or less what the solution will look like—the problem is how to get there.”

While the United States participated in developing the Road Map, it soon lost interest, in part because of Israel’s opposition. This provides an example of how the European Union’s tenuous common policy on the Israel-Palestine conflict may also be held back by Washington. While it remains to be seen what will evolve under the US presidency of Barack Obama, what has been a notable development since 2005 are the growing demands among civil society activists in European countries for Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions (BDS) against Israel as a means to hold the Israeli state accountable to INTERNATIONAL LAW and human rights norms. The inability or unwillingness of states to pursue BDS, especially following Israel’s war in Gaza in 2008–2009, fostered renewed calls from grassroots civil societies and local NGOs. In this context, developments in the Scandinavian countries are notable. For example, in 2005, Norwegian activists launched a national Boycott Israel campaign that led the local council of the region of Sør-Trøndelag to pass a motion for a comprehensive boycott of Israeli goods. Even though this motion was reversed in 2006, the new forms of coalition-building in Scandinavian and other European countries emerging from the BDS efforts are a relevant feature of the contemporary terrain of the Israel-Palestine conflict.

Bibliography

- Abadi, Jacob. “Sweden’s Policy toward Israel: Constraints and Opportunities.” Middle Eastern Studies. 37:2 (2001).
- Aoun, Elena. “European Foreign Policy and the Arab-Israeli Dispute: Much Ado about Nothing?” European Foreign Affairs Review. 8 (2003).
- Bakan, Abigail B., and Yasmeeen Abu-Laban. “Palestinian Resistance and International Solidarity: The BDS Campaign.” Race and Class. 51:1 (2009).
- Bengtsson, Rikard, Ole Elgström, and Jonas Tallberg. “Silencer or Amplifier? The European Union Presidency and the Nordic Countries.” Scandinavian Political Studies. 27:3 (2004).
- Corbin, Jane. “The Norway Channel: The Secret Talks That Led to the Middle East Peace Accord.” Atlantic Monthly. 1994.

- Egeland, Jan. Impotent Superpower—Potent Small State: Potentials and Limitations of Human Rights Objectives in the Foreign Policies of the United States and Norway. Oslo, Norway: Norwegian University Press, 1988.
- Henriksen, Hilde Waage. “Peacemaking Is a Risky Business”: Norway’s Role in the Peace Process in the Middle East, 1993–1996. Oslo, Norway: PRIO—International Peace Research Initiative, 2004.
- Hvidt, Nanna, and Hans Mouritzen, eds. Danish Foreign Policy Yearbook 2008. Copenhagen, Denmark: Danish Institute for International Studies.
- Ingebrietsen, Christine. “Norm Entrepreneurs: Scandinavia’s Role in World Politics.” Cooperation and Conflict: Journal of the Nordic International Studies Association. 37:1 (2002).
- . Scandinavia in World Politics. Boulder, CO: Rowman and Littlefield, 2006.
- Løj, Ellen Margrethe. “Interview.” Electronic Intifada. 21 July 2005.
- Møller, Per Stig. “Address by the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs—Madrid: 15 Years Later.” Conference, Madrid. 11 January 2007.
- . “Israeli-Palestinian Relations Bedeviled by Lack of Framework.” Deutsche Presse-Agentur. 2 July 2007.
- Rabie, Mohamed. “The U.S.-PLO Dialogue: The Swedish Connection.” Journal of Palestine Studies. 21:4 (1992).
- Sanders, Jacinta. “Honest Brokers? American and Norwegian Facilitation of Israeli-Palestinian Negotiations (1991–1993).” Arab Studies Quarterly. 21:2 (1999).
- Tahir, Naveed Ahmad. “European Policy on the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict: From Inception to the Present Day.” Journal of European Studies. 23/24:2/1 (2007–2008).

—Yasmeeen Abu-Laban

Seaport, Palestinian

See RESTRICTIONS ON MOVEMENT II

Security Fence

See BARRIER

Separation Wall

See BARRIER

Sephardi

A Sephardi (plural, Sephardim) is a Jew whose origins reside in the Iberian Peninsula; the descendants of Jews who left Spain or Portugal after the 1492 expulsion are Sephardim. In modern Israel, all non-European Jews (from Africa, the Middle East, etc.) are termed MIZRAHIM, and these terms are often used interchangeably; however, whereas all the Sephardim are Mizrahim, all Mizrahim are not Sephardim. The prevalence of the Sephardic rite among Mizrahim is largely due to migration of the population expelled from the Iberian Peninsula joining the Mizrahi communities. Over the last few centuries, the more prestigiously perceived Sephardic rite has influenced or altogether replaced the Mizrahi ones.

The situation for Jews in Spain blossomed in 711 when Spain fell under the rule of the Muslim Moors. Both Muslims and Jews built a civilization based in Córdoba, known as Al-Andalus, which was more advanced than any civilization in Europe. Jews coexisted peacefully with their neighbors, and the era of Muslim rule in Spain (eighth to eleventh centuries) was considered the Golden Age for Spanish Jewry. Jewish intellectual and spiritual life flourished, Jewish economic expansion was unparalleled, and many Jews served in Spanish courts. In Toledo, Jews were involved in translating Arabic texts into the Romance languages as well as translating Greek and Hebrew texts into Arabic. Jews also contributed to botany, geography, medicine, mathematics, poetry, and philosophy, and a number of well-known Jewish physicians practiced during this period, including Hasdai Ibn Shaprut (915–970), who was physician to the caliph (Muslim leader of Spain). Many famous Jewish figures lived during the Golden Age and contributed to making this a flourishing period for Jewish thought, including Samuel Ha-Nagid, Moses ibn Ezra, Solomon ibn Gabirol, Judah Halevi, and Moses Maimonides. Islamic culture also influenced the Jews, and Muslim and Jewish customs and practices became intertwined. For example, before entering the synagogue, Jews washed their hands and feet, a practice done before entering a mosque, and Arab melodies were often used in Jewish songs. The Sephardic Jews developed their own language, which was a combination of Old Castilian (Spanish) with borrowings from Sephardic Hebrew, known as Ladino. A Romance language, Ladino is still spoken by some Sephardic communities and is often used in their literature.

In 1098 the Christians conquered Toledo, and initially the Jews in Christian Spain were unharmed, while those in Muslim Spain did less well under the North African Almohad dynasty in the south. Still, both Jews and Muslims were involved in the cultural, economic, intellectual, financial, and political life of Christian Spain. However, by the mid-thirteenth century, the Christians controlled most of Spain and increasingly persecuted Jews and forced them to convert to Christianity. Those who did convert, called Marranos or New Christians, have sometimes been called “crypto-Jews,” because many practiced Judaism in secret and taught their children in the Jewish tradition. During the fifteenth century, the situation worsened for the Jewish community when the Marranos were tortured or killed in the Spanish Inquisition. Father Tomas de Torquemada, the pope’s inquisitor-general, felt that if the Jews remained in Spain, they would negatively influence the new converts to Christianity. In 1492 Torquemada convinced King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella that the Jewish community was expendable, and the monarchy forced some 200,000 Jews to leave Spain. In 1499 the last Moorish stronghold at Granada fell. Many Muslims escaped, but those who were unable to flee were forced to convert to Christianity and became known as Moriscos. In 1525 the monarchy militarily crushed their revolt, and a century later the 500,000 remaining Moriscos were expelled from Spain. After the exile from Spain, large Sephardic communities were founded in Venice and Leghorn, Italy; London; Bordeaux and Bayonne, FRANCE; and Hamburg, GERMANY. These immigrants spoke Portuguese and Spanish, and many adopted mainstream Western European culture. They tended to have a secular education and to accumulate great wealth. Many of the European Sephardim created successful business enterprises, and their trade networks became well-known worldwide. Throughout the medieval period in Europe, Jews treated the Sephardic Jews as elites.

Besides Europe, in the first Sephardic DIASPORA, a large number of Jews settled in North Africa and in the OTTOMAN EMPIRE. Spanish exiles brought with them a unique culture, language, and traditions. Many of these immigrants continued to speak Ladino until the twentieth century. For hundreds of years, Sephardic Jews lived in relative peace with their Muslim neighbors and rulers and prospered throughout the area, especially in Morocco and IRAQ. In the Ottoman dhimini system, they were officially considered second-class citizens but were free to practice their own religion and to participate in commerce. Much as in Spain and Portugal during the Golden Age, the Sephardic upper class in the Ottoman Empire were entrepreneurs, translators, and members of the professions. The Sephardic communities in the Arab world were more receptive to modernity than were their ASHKENAZI counterparts in Europe. Moreover, the Zionist movement was of far less interest to Sephardic Jews than it was to Jews in Europe, and very few came to Palestine until after it became Israel. Few Sephardic rabbis in the Ottoman Empire supported ZIONISM; fewer still immigrated to Palestine.

After the establishment of the state of Israel (1948), in the context of the Arab-Israeli conflict, conditions for Jews in many Islamic countries grew increasingly uncomfortable. Pressured by Zionist emissaries during the 1950s and 1960s, tens of thousands of Sephardic (and Mizrahi) Jews immigrated to Israel from North Africa and other countries in the Middle East. Once they came to Israel, however, the absorption ministry placed most of the Sephardic immigrants in transit camps, where they became dependent on welfare. The conditions in these camps were terrible, and it was difficult for the newcomers to work their way out of the lower rung of Israeli society, especially since the established Ashkenazi community held all the positions of power. Consequently, many worked in blue-collar professions.

Since its arrival, the Sephardic community (together with the Mizrahim) has been Israel's underclass, languishing far behind the Ashkenazim in economic, cultural, and educational status and success. The Sephardim make up 75 percent of Israel's poor, and, as one analyst noted, "women are the underclass of the underclass." Sephardic girls traditionally marry at a young age, have little formal education, and are expected to produce many children while helping to support the family. There have been a number of recent positive strides for the Sephardim, such as the growing number of intermarriages between the Ashkenazim and Sephardim and the respect for Sephardi Yitzhak Navon, the fifth president of Israel (1978–1983). But there are also more reports of resentment among Sephardim, brought on partly by the extraordinary Israeli efforts to accommodate the large-scale, middle-class influx of Jews from the former SOVIET UNION from 1968 to 1988. The Sephardim feel that they have been shunted aside and are still the have-nots in a society that has made great financial gains. The Ashkenazi elite discriminate against the Sephardim in housing, employment, and educational opportunities. The Sephardim possess no real power base—intellectual, political, or commercial. After fifty-plus years in the state of Israel, relations between the Sephardim and the European Ashkenazim still generate a great deal of tension in Israeli politics. Primarily, the Sephardim resent the dominance of Jews of European origin in the Israeli establishment and well remember the harsh welcome given to Sephardim settling in Israel. They accuse the Ashkenazim of showing no respect for their particular traditions and customs, of trying to turn them into Europeans, and of treating them as second-class citizens.

In 1977 Sephardi resentment toward the Ashkenazim led them to give their vote to the LIKUD PARTY and to MENAHEM BEGIN for prime minister, as a vote against the LABOR PARTY of the Ashkenazim. This has meant adopting right-wing Likud Party policies, especially toward the Palestinians. At a psychological level, the Sephardim have translated their feelings of inferiority to superiority over the Palestinians, and they make up the hard-core mass support for retaining the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES and for rejecting compromises with the Palestinians. Israeli-Sephardic scholar Sami Shalom Chetrit clearly expresses this complex phenomenon (using "Mizrahim" interchangeably with "Sephardim"): "When you learn that Jewish history is European Jewish history, and that the Arab culture is inferior or bad, and there's nothing to learn from the Arabs, and there's nothing in Jewish history where you see a positive benefit from Arab/Muslim experience . . . there is very little left for Mizrahim to experience something positive from their Arab/Muslim historical roots. . . . You grow up and you know that to be an Israeli is not to be an Arab, because an Arab is the enemy. It's not only what they teach you, it's the way they treat Arabs.

"You look at the Arab and actually you're looking in the mirror, and you've been taught that the reflection in the mirror is actually bad, negative, low, enemy, so you start spitting in the mirror. It's hard to spit in the mirror every day, because you go crazy. It's hard to live with self-hatred, you get sick, so what do you do? You channel everything to the Arab [Palestinian]. It's very simple social psychology. That is how we all became Arab haters, because if we don't hate them, we're going to hate ourselves. That's the trap, it's why they keep the OCCUPATION going and why they'll never end the Occupation, unless it comes to an end by force majeure or by outside forces—never because the Israeli establishment will never voluntarily cede the territories. They won't back down because if they do, they will lose their Ashkenazi, Zionist hegemony—I say that because today, many Mizrahim are Zionist you know. When I say Ashkenazi Zionist that includes many Mizrahi Jews. Once they give up the territories and let the Palestinians get on with their lives, and deal with the whole issue of the REFUGEES, and JERUSALEM, and we have a generation of a relatively peaceful life, everything in the Mizrahi identity will be channeled inside Israel, whether it's poverty or oppression or the need for educational reform. Right now, in my view, everything is collapsing but no one complains because 'we are at war,' and they, the Palestinians, are at war."

Bibliography

- Abarjel, Reuven, and Smadar Lavi. "Another Act in the Mizrahi-Palestinian Tragedy." Electronic Intifada. 24 July 2006. <http://www.electronicintifada.net>.
- Bennis, Phyllis. "Interview of Phyllis Bennis by Max Elbaum: For Jews Only—Racism inside Israel." ColorLines. 15 December 2000. www.hartford-hwp.com/archives/51a/093.html.
- Corre, Alan D. "Sephardic Identity: The Mizrahi Democratic Rainbow—New Discourse." Sephardic Heritage Update 181. (2 November 1977). Original lecture delivered at Congregation Ezra Besaroth, Seattle.
- Hirschberg, Peter. "A Divided Nation: Israeli Arabs May Have the Vote, but They Still Feel Like Second Class Citizens. As Do Many Jews Who Themselves Originated in the Arab World." New Statesman. 12 July 2004.
- Piterberg, Gabriel. "Domestic Orientalism: The Representation of 'Oriental' Jews in Zionist/Israeli Historiography." British Journal of Middle Eastern Studies. 23:2 (1996).
- Rabeeya, David. "The Double Exodus and the Economic Plight of Sephardic Jews." Sephardic Heritage Update. 145 (23 February 2005).
- Rosenblatt, Gary. "Despite Progress, Cultural Rift Still Exists in Israel." New York Jewish Week. 26 February 1999.
- Schattner, Marius. "Past Wounds, Future Fears: Challenge from Israel's Sephardi Right." Le Monde diplomatique. April 1999.
- Shalom-Chetrit, Sami. "Mizrahi Politics in Israel: Between Integration and Alternative." Journal of Palestine Studies. 24:4 (2000).
- . "Oriental Jewry (aka Mizrahim or Sephardim) and Israel." Interview by Samia Dodin. Culture Identity and Borders. Levantine Cultural Center. n.d. http://www.levantinecenter.org/pages/chetrit\_dodin\_interview.html.
- . "Peace, Justice and the Mizrahi Accounting." Alternative Information Center. News from Within. 14:2 (2003).
- . The Political History of the Mizrahim (Jews from the Muslim World) in Israel, from 1948 to 2003. Tel Aviv: Am Oved, 2004.
- Shalom-Chetrit, Sami, and Tikva Honig-Parnass. "Why Are Shas and the Mizrahim Supporters of the Right?" Between the Lines. February 2003.
- Sheleg, Yair. "It Wasn't the DDT; It Was the Humiliation." Ha'aretz. 14 October 2002.
- Shenhav, Yehouda. The Arab-Jews: Nationalism, Religion, and Ethnicity. Tel Aviv: Am Oved, 2003.
- . "Jews from Arab Countries and the Palestinian Right for Return: An Ethnic Community in Realms of National Memory." British Journal of Middle Eastern Studies. 29:1 (2002).
- . "The Truth about Jewish Assets in Iraq." The Scribe: Journal of Babylonian Jewry. 70 (1998).
- . "What Is There between the Mizrahi Issue and Palestinian Nationalism?" School for Peace Annual Review 1999–2001. Neve Shalom, Israel: The School for Peace (Neve Shalom/Wahat al-Salam), 2001.
- Shohat, Ella Habiba. "The Invention of the Mizrahim." Journal of Palestine Studies. 24:1 (1999).
- . "Mizrahim in Israel: Zionism from the Standpoint of Its Jewish Victims." Social Text. (Fall 1988).
- . "Rupture and Return: A Mizrahi Perspective on the Zionist Discourse." MIT Electronic Journal of Middle East Studies. 1 May 2001.
- . "Sephardim in Israel: Zionism from the Standpoint of Its Jewish Victims." Social Text. 19:20 (1988).
- Weiner, Rebecca. "Sephardim." Jewish Virtual Library. n.d. www.jewishvirtuallibrary.org/jsource/Judaism/Sephardim.html.
- Zimmels, H. J. Ashkenazim and Sephardim: Their Relations, Differences, and Problems as Reflected in the Rabbinical Response, rev. ed. Jersey City, NJ: Ktav Publishing House, 1997.
- Zohar, Zion, ed. Sephardic and Mizrahi Jewry: From the Golden Age of Spain to Modern Times. New York: New York University Press, 2005.
- Zucker, George K., ed. Sephardic Identity: Essays on a Vanishing Jewish Culture. Jefferson, NC: McFarland, 2005.

Settlements

Between 1967 and 2005, Israel established 152 settlements in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES that were recognized by the Interior Ministry: 121 in the WEST BANK, 12 in East JERUSALEM, and 16 in the GAZA STRIP. In addition, settler activists and/or the government established dozens of OUTPOSTS of varying size. Most of these outposts are actually settlements, but the Interior Ministry has not recognized them as such. In August 2005, the government unilaterally withdrew the settlements and its military installations from Gaza and has since focused on expanding the West Bank and East Jerusalem settlements. After more than a year of fighting for the freedom of information, the PEACE NOW movement succeeded in officially extracting from the defense establishment the fact that “about one-third of the Jewish settlements in the West Bank (44 out of 120) were built on privately owned Palestinian LAND that was seized, by means of confiscation orders, for ‘security needs.’ From the data it emerges that at least 19 of the 44 settlements were built on private land without the ‘security’ justification to confiscate the land and transform it into ‘STATE LAND,’ even after prime minister MENAHEM BEGIN decided in 1979 that the construction and expansion of settlements would take place only on state-owned land.” Additionally, the separation BARRIER consumes 8.6 percent of West Bank land and encompasses 49 settlements.

In 2009, B’Tselem reported that the settler population in the West Bank and East Jerusalem at the end of 2008 stood at 479,500, up from 370,548 in 2000. This figure is based on two components: according to Israel’s Central Bureau of Statistics (ICBS), in 2008, 285,800 settlers were living in the West Bank excluding East Jerusalem, up from 198,300 in 2000. The settler population in East Jerusalem at the end of 2008 was estimated at 193,700, up from 172,248 in 2000. In HEBRON, to take a dramatic case, 600 Jewish settlers live in the midst of 160,000 Palestinians and control 20 percent of the city, including the holy sites sacred to both Muslims and Jews.

From 2000 to 2008 there were 18,361 new housing starts and 105 new outposts. During 2008 alone the annual growth rate in the settlements was 4.9 percent, compared to Israel (areas inside the Green Line) where the annual growth rate in 2008 was 1.8 percent. During 2008, 1,518 new structures were built or set up (in the case of temporary housing, generally in the form of mobile homes, referred to as “caravans”) in settlements and outposts, compared to 898 structures in 2007. Of these, at least 261 were in illegal outposts. This constitutes a 60 percent increase in new structures compared to 2007, when 800 new structures were built in settlements and another 98 in outposts. In addition, the ground was prepared (INFRASTRUCTURE development, earthworks, etc.) for the construction of 63 additional new structures: 61 percent of the new structures (927 structures) were built west of the route of the Barrier and 39 percent (591 structures) east of it; of these, 25 percent of the new structures were in outposts.

Another indicator of settlement expansion is the issuance of tenders—invitations for construction in settlements. In 2008, tenders were issued for the construction of 539 new housing units in the settlements. This was an eight fold increase compared to 2007, when tenders were issued for only 65 housing units. An additional indicator is building starts, which are tracked by the ICBS. The ICBS figures for 2008, which only cover January through September, record 1,647 new housing units in settlements, compared to 1,389 in all of 2007. Moreover, despite government declarations that no new land was confiscated in 2008, Peace Now learned of and made public a number of decisions and orders whose practical effect is the confiscation of new land and its transfer to state ownership, in the amount of 275 dunums (approximately 69 acres). (This includes land of Al-Khadr, near the settlement of Efrata; land of Hussan, near the settlement of Beitar Illit; land of Brukin, near Ariel; and land of Al-Uddeisa, near Hebron.)

On 2 March 2009 the Israeli government announced plans to build more than 73,300 new housing units in the West Bank, out of which 5,722 will be in East Jerusalem. Peace Now estimates that if all of the units are built, it will mean a 100 percent increase in the total number of Israeli settlers and that some settlements, including the two largest, Ariel and MA’ALE ADUMIM, would double in size.

An examination by Peace Now of the 2009/2010 state budget shows that nearly 1 billion shekels (approximately $265 million) are explicitly designated for the settlements each year. This includes only special budget items for the settlements, without the general items where budgetary expenses involving the settlements are hidden and amount to approximately 100 million shekels (approximately $26.5 million). That amounts to 8.9 percent of the total transfers from the state to councils while the number of residents in the settlements was 3.8 percent of the residents of Israel. Therefore the budget for the settlements was more than double the relative size in the population. Moreover, “at least 16 outposts are enjoying department support. The socioeconomic situation of most West Bank settlers is comparable to the most affluent communities in Israel. Indeed, settlers enjoy annual incomes almost 10 percent higher than those of Israelis living inside the Green Line, with an average income of 13,566 NIS (approximately $3,600) per settler family per month in 2006 [$43,200 per year], compared to 12,343 NIS (approximately $3,300) per month inside Israel [or $39,600 per year]. Nonetheless, the settlements enjoy the status of ‘preferred area A’ and all the benefits that go with it.”

In the Occupied Territories, Israel has created a separation and discrimination regime in which it maintains two systems of laws, and an individual’s rights are based on his or her national origin. This regime is the only one of its kind in the world and brings to mind dark regimes of the past, such as the apartheid regime in South Africa.

As part of this regime, Israel has stolen tens of thousands of dunums of land from the Palestinians, on which it has established dozens of settlements in which hundreds of thousands of Israeli civilians now live. Israel forbids Palestinians to enter and use these lands, and it uses the settlements to justify numerous violations of Palestinian rights, such as the right to housing, to earn a living, and freedom of movement. The Palestinian right to self-determination in a viable state has been rendered impossible because of the extreme changes Israel has made to the map of the West Bank.

The settlers, on the other hand, benefit from all rights given to citizens of Israel who live inside the Green Line and in some instances additional rights. The great effort Israel has expended in the settlement enterprise—financially, legally, and bureaucratically—has turned the settlements into civilian enclaves within an area under military rule and has given the settlers a preferred status. To perpetuate this unlawful situation, Israel has continuously violated the Palestinians’ human rights.

Especially conspicuous is Israel’s manipulative use of the law to create a semblance of legality for the settlement enterprise. So long as Jordanian law assisted Israel in advancing its goals, Israel seized the argument that INTERNATIONAL LAW requires an occupying state to apply the law in effect in the territory prior to OCCUPATION, thereby construing international law in a cynical and tendentious way. When Jordanian law was unfavorable for Israel, it did not hesitate to revoke the law through military legislation and develop new rules to meet its ends. In doing so, Israel tramples on international agreements to which it is a party that are intended to reduce human rights violations and protect people under occupation.

Since the very establishment of the settlements is illegal, and in light of the human rights violations resulting from the existence of the settlements, B’TSELEM demands that Israel evacuate the settlements. Israel should undertake such action in a way that respects the settlers’ human rights, including the payment of compensation.

Clearly, evacuation of the settlements will be complex and will take time. However, Israel can undertake intermediate steps to reduce, as far as possible, human rights violations and breaches of international law. For example, the government should cease new construction in the settlements, whether to establish new settlements or to expand existing ones. It must also freeze the planning and building of new bypass ROADS, and it must cease expropriating and seizing land intended for bypass roads. The government must return to Palestinian villages all the non-built-up land that it placed within the municipal jurisdiction of the settlements and regional councils, eliminate the planning boards in the settlements, and, as a result thereof, revoke the power of the local authorities to draw up outline plans and grant building PERMITS. Also, the government must cease the granting of incentives to encourage Israeli citizens to move to settlements and instead make resources available to encourage settlers to move inside Israel’s BORDERS.

International Law

The establishment of settlements on the West Bank violates international humanitarian law, which enumerates the principles applying during war and occupation. Moreover, the settlements lead to the infringement of international human rights law.

The Fourth Geneva Convention prohibits the occupying power from transferring citizens from its own territory to the occupied territory (Article 49). The Hague Regulations prohibit the occupying power from undertaking permanent changes in the occupied area, unless these are due to military needs in the narrow sense of the term, or unless they are undertaken for the benefit of the local population.

The establishment of the settlements leads to violation of the rights of the Palestinians as enshrined in international human rights law. Among other violations, the settlements infringe on the right to self-determination, equality, property, an adequate standard of living, and freedom of movement.

The illegality of the settlements under international humanitarian law does not affect the status of the settlers. The settlers constitute a civilian population by any standard and include children, who are entitled to special protection. Although some of the settlers are part of the security forces, this fact has absolutely no bearing on the status of the other residents of the settlements.

Taking Control of the Land in the West Bank

Israel has used a complex legal and bureaucratic mechanism to take control of more than 50 percent of the land in the West Bank. This land has been used mainly to establish settlements and to create reserves of land for the future expansion of the settlements.

The principal tool used to take control of land is to declare it "State Land." This process, which began in 1979, is based on a manipulative implementation of the Ottoman Lands Law of 1858, which applied in the area at the time of Occupation. Other methods employed by Israel to take control of land include seizure for military needs, declaration of land as "abandoned property," and the expropriation of land for "public needs." A different legal foundation provides the justification for each of these. In addition, Israel has assisted private citizens who are purchasing land on the "free market."

The process employed in taking control of land breaches the basic principles of due procedure and natural justice. In many cases, Palestinian residents were unaware that their land was registered in the name of the state, and by the time they discovered this fact, it was too late to appeal. The burden of proof always rests with the Palestinian claiming ownership of the land. Even if he meets this burden, the land may still be registered in the name of the state on the basis that it was transferred to the settlement "in good faith."

Despite the diverse methods used to take control of land, all the parties involved—the Israeli government, the settlers, and the Palestinians—have always understood them as part of a mechanism intended to serve a single purpose: the establishment of civilian settlements in the territories. Accordingly, the precise method used to transfer the control of land from Palestinians to Israel is of secondary importance. Moreover, because this purpose is prohibited under international law, the methods used to secure it are also unlawful.

Israel uses the seized lands to benefit the settlements while prohibiting the Palestinian public from using them in any way. This use is forbidden and illegal in itself, even if the process by which the lands were taken was fair and in accordance with international and Jordanian law. Israel is the occupier in the Occupied Territories, and as such it is not permitted to ignore the needs of an entire population and to use land intended for public needs solely to benefit the settlers.

The ISRAELI SUPREME COURT of Justice has generally sanctioned the mechanism used to take control of land. In so doing, the court has contributed to giving these procedures a mask of legality. The court initially accepted the state's argument that the settlements met urgent military needs and allowed the state to seize private land for this purpose. When the state began to declare land "State Land," the court refused to intervene to prevent this process.

The Policy of Annexation and Local Government

The Israeli administration has applied most aspects of Israeli law to the settlers and the settlements, thus effectively annexing them to the state of Israel. This has taken place even though, in formal terms, the West Bank is not part of the state of Israel and the law in effect there is Jordanian law and military legislation. This annexation has resulted in a regime of legalized separation and discrimination. This regime has given rise to two separate legal systems in the same territory, with the rights of individuals being determined by their nationality.

Local government in the settlements is based on the usual model inside Israel and is managed in a similar manner, ignoring the relevant Jordanian legislation that should apply in the West Bank. Twenty-three Jewish local authorities operate in the West Bank: three municipalities, fourteen local councils, and six regional councils, including 106 settlements recognized as distinct communities. In addition, 12 settlements were established in the areas annexed to the municipality of Jerusalem in 1967, areas in which Israeli law has been officially imposed.

The areas of jurisdiction of the Jewish local authorities, most of which extend far beyond the built-up area, are defined as "CLOSED MILITARY ZONES" in military orders. Israel forbids Palestinians from entering these areas without authorization from the Israeli military commander. Conversely, it permits Israeli citizens, Jews from throughout the world, and tourists to enter these areas without the need for special permits.

Encouragement of Migration to the Settlement

Successive Israeli governments have implemented a consistent and systematic policy intended to encourage Jewish-Israeli citizens to migrate to the West Bank. One of the tools used to this end is the granting of financial benefits and incentives to citizens, both directly and through the Jewish local authorities. The purpose of this support is to raise the standard of living of these citizens and to encourage migration to the West Bank.

Israel defines most of the settlements in the West Bank as national priority areas (A class or B class). Accordingly, the settlers and other Jewish-Israeli citizens working or investing in the settlements are entitled to significant financial benefits. These benefits are provided by six government ministries, including the Ministry of Construction and Housing, which provides generous loans for the purchase of apartments, part of which are converted to grants. The ISRAEL LANDS ADMINISTRATION provides significant price reductions to persons leasing land. The Ministry of Education offers incentives for teachers, exemption from tuition fees in kindergartens, and free transportation to school. The Ministry of Industry and Trade provides grants for investors, infrastructure for industrial zones, and other benefits. The Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs gives incentives for social workers, and the Ministry of Finance provides reductions in income tax for individuals and companies. In 2003 the Ministry of Finance cancelled the income tax reduction that residents of settlements previously received.

The Ministry of the Interior offers more grants for the local authorities in the territories than for communities within Israel. In the year 2000, the average per capita grant in the Jewish local councils in the West Bank was approximately 65 percent higher than the average per capita grant in local councils inside Israel. The discrepancy in the grants for the regional councils is even greater: the average per capita grant in 2000 in the regional councils on the West Bank was 165 percent higher than for a resident of a regional council inside Israel.

One of the mechanisms used by the government to favor the Jewish local authorities in the West Bank is to channel funding through the Settlement Division of the WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION. Although the entire budget of the Settlement Division comes from state funds, as a nongovernmental body it is not subject to the rules applying to government ministries in Israel.

Private Settlement Financing from the United States

For many years, the UNITED STATES has had a policy against spending aid money to fund Israeli settlements in the West Bank, which successive administrations have regarded as an obstacle to peace. Yet, as the Washington Post revealed in March 2009, private organizations in the United States continue to raise tax-exempt contributions for the activities that the government opposes. All US taxpayers are thus supporting indirectly, through the tax-exempt contributions, a process that the government condemns. "A search of IRS records identified 28 US charitable groups that made a total of $33.4 million in tax-exempt contributions to settlements and related organizations between 2004 and 2007."

One of the Israeli organizations that has led the way in the settlement project in East Jerusalem is ELAD, which has developed the Ir David (or City of David) project in the heart of the Palestinian neighborhood of SILWAN. Like other pro-settlement groups, it engages in an active fundraising effort in the United States. According to Form 990s filed with the IRS, Friends of Ir David raised $8.7 million in 2004, $1.2 million in 2005, and $2.7 million in 2006. The group's primary tax-exempt purpose, according to the IRS filings, is "to create a charitable fund to provide financial aid and other reasonable assistance to benefit the Jewish people of the Old City of Jerusalem; to teach about the history and archeology of the biblical city of Jerusalem; and to offer aid and assistance for education, housing and the rehabilitation of distressed properties." In reality, pro-settlement groups such as ELAD are seeking to transform the demographic character of East Jerusalem so that a TWO-STATE SOLUTION with Jerusalem shared by Israeli and Palestinian governments will be impossible.

Hebron is another controversial area where settlements have received substantial tax-exempt gifts from the United States. According to IRS records, the Hebron Fund donated $860,637 in 2005 and $967,954 in 2006 for “social and educational well-being”; the fund’s online mission statement makes clear this is for Israeli settlers inside the city. The Hebron settlement of KIRYAT ARBA received $730,000 in 2006 from a group called American Friends of Yeshiva High School of Kiryat Arba.

Often such US charities specify that their gifts are going to charities in Israel, even though the recipients are in the West Bank or East Jerusalem, which the United States regards as occupied territory. American Friends of the College of Judea and Samaria, for example, said its donations were “to provide for the expansion and furtherance of the needs of educational institutions in Israel,” even though the college is in the settlement of Ariel. Similarly, other filings speak of gifts to “Elon Moreh, Israel,” “Gush Etzion, Israel,” “Karnei Shomron, Israel,” “Efrat, Israel,” and “Bat Ayin, Israel,” despite the fact that these are all settlements in the occupied West Bank and illegal.

A 2005 report by the Congressional Research Service stated: “The United States stipulates that US aid funds cannot be used in the Occupied Territories.” Of course money is fungible—the massive amount of aid given to Israel (without strings) frees up equal amounts of money from Israeli sources for the settlements. The issue came to a head during a 1992 dispute over the use of US loan guarantees. A story in the New York Times in January 1992 said that Secretary of State JAMES A. BAKER had cautioned Israel’s ambassador “that the administration was not going to underwrite Israeli policies that fundamentally contradict its own principles and long-stated policies.”

Settler Violence

A cardinal task of any government is to enforce the law and protect the life, property, and rights of persons under its authority. For Israel, this duty applies not only to Israeli citizens residing within the state or territories under Israeli control but also to Palestinians living in the Occupied Territories.

When Palestinians attack Israelis, the authorities invoke all means at their disposal—including some that are incompatible with international law and constitute gross violations of human rights—to arrest the suspects and bring them to trial. Defendants convicted by military courts can expect harsh sentences.

In contrast, when Israeli civilians attack Palestinians, the Israeli authorities employ an undeclared policy of leniency and compromise toward the perpetrators. This policy is reflected in the actions of officials in charge of law enforcement, the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) and the Israel Police Force (IPF), which do not do enough to prevent harm to the life and property of Palestinians and to stop the violent attacks by settlers while they are taking place. All law enforcement agencies and judicial authorities demonstrate little interest in uncovering the substantial violence that Israeli civilians commit against Palestinians in the Occupied Territories.

The many failures of law enforcement against Israeli settlers in the Occupied Territories, and the discrimination underlying these failures, greatly undermine the rule of law in Israel, not only in the Occupied Territories but also in the state of Israel.

East Jerusalem

Since 1967, when Israel annexed East Jerusalem, the government of Israel’s primary goal has been to create a demographic and geographic situation that will thwart any future attempt to challenge Israeli sovereignty over the entire city. To achieve this goal, the government has confiscated vast areas of land, constructed large settlements, and taken actions to increase the number of Jews and reduce the number of Palestinians living in the city.

In the immediate aftermath of the June 1967 WAR, Israel redefined the BORDERS of East Jerusalem. Under Jordanian rule, the city had covered 6.5 square kilometers (2.5 square miles); Israel expanded it to 64 square kilometers (24.7 square miles) or some 64,000 dunums. The newly designated area of “East Jerusalem” contained twenty-eight Palestinian villages together with their grazing and farming lands. According to Cheshin, Hutman, and Melamed, “Israel had purposely” drawn the new city borders “to include the maximum territory possible, with the minimum possible Palestinian population.” They described it thus: “The government simply issued orders to expropriate [land that was owned by Palestinians] . . . taking advantage of a legal system in Israel that gives [Arab] owners little recourse against the authorities taking away private property. . . . In January 1968, Israel carried out its first major expropriation . . . some 3,345 dunum (826 acres) were taken from . . . Arab landowners to build the Jewish [settlement] of Ramot Eshkol; 486 dunum (120 acres) were expropriated for [a second settlement]. Four months later another 900 dunum (222 acres). . . . But Israel's land grab in 1968 was nothing compared with the one that occurred at the end of August 1970, when eight separate expropriation orders were carried out, covering 10,000 dunum (2,471 acres) of land."

By 1970, at the end of the first three years of Occupation, Israel had expropriated more than © Foundation for Middle East Peace (FMEP), Washington, DC, reprinted with permission.

Map 38. East Jerusalem Land Expropriations

Table 7 B'Tselem: Statistics on Land Expropriation and Settlement in East Jerusalem

Neighborhood	Date of Expropriation	Amount of Land Taken (in Dunums)	Size of Neighborhood (in Dunums)	Number of Housing Units 2002	Number of Residents 2002
French Hill and Mount Scopus	8 Jan. 1968	3,345	2,019	2,108	7,867
Ramot Eshkol and Givat Hamivtar	8 Jan. 1968		588	1,153	2,948
Ma'alot Dafna (East)	8 Jan. 1968	485	380	907	3,617
Neve Ya'akov	14 April 1968	765 + 470 (at 30 August 1970)	1,759	4,735	20,250
Old City (Jewish Quarter)	14 April 1968	116	122	556	2,348
Ramot Alon	30 Aug. 1970	4,840	2,066	8,687	38,992
Shu'afat	30 Aug. 1970	2,240	No Data	2,165	8,000
East Talpiot	30 Aug. 1970		1,196	4,299	12,591
Gilo	30 Aug. 1970	2,700	2,859	8,911	27,569
'Atarot (including the airport)	30 Aug. 1970	1,200 + 137 (at July 1 1982)	3,327	290	10,781
Ben-Hinnom Valley	30 Aug. 1970	130	–	Public Area	Public Area
Jaffa Gate	30 Aug. 1970	100	–	Public Area	Public Area
Ramat Rachel area	30 Aug. 1970	600	264	In Planning	In Planning
Pisgat Ze'ev	20 March 1980	4,400	5,468	10,799	38,684
Har Homa	16 May 1991	1,850	2,523	No Data	No Data
Total		23,378	22,571	44,610	176,647

16,000 dunums (3,950 acres) of Palestinian land to constitute East Jerusalem. Following the land confiscations from 1967 to 1970, there was a ten-year hiatus until 1980, when Israel seized 4,400 dunums (1,083 acres) from Palestinian landholders. The next land grab was in April 1991, with the seizure of 1,850 dunums (457 acres) of Jabal Abu Ghanem. Altogether, as Table 7 illustrates, as of 2002, Israel has confiscated 23,378 dunums (5,777 acres) of Palestinian land in East Jerusalem for Jewish settlements.

At the end of 2002, the population of Jerusalem stood at 680,400: 458,600 Jews (67 percent) and 221,800 Palestinians (33 percent). About 58 percent of the residents live on land that was annexed in 1967 (45 percent of whom are Jews and 55 percent Palestinians). Since the Palestinians have a higher growth rate than the Jews, Israel has used various methods to achieve its goal of maximizing the Jewish population: (1) physically isolating East Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank, in part by building the separation Barrier; (2) demolishing houses and discriminating in land expropriation, planning, and building; (3) revoking residency and social benefits of Palestinians who stay abroad for at least seven years or who are unable to prove that their center of life is in Jerusalem; and (4) unfairly dividing the budget between the two parts of the city, with harmful effects on infrastructure and services in East Jerusalem. All of Israel's policies gravely infringe on the rights of Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem and seriously violate international law.

East Jerusalem is Occupied Territory. Therefore, it is subject, as is the rest of the West Bank, to the provisions of international humanitarian law that relate to Occupied Territory. The annexation of East Jerusalem breaches international law, which prohibits unilateral annexation. For this reason, the international community, including the United States, does not recognize the annexation of East Jerusalem.

Additionally, in what Israel has termed "the HOLY BASIN"—the area surrounding the OLD CITY—there are Jewish settlements in all the Palestinian neighborhoods, including SHAYKH JARRAH, A TUR, RAS AL-AMUD, ABU DIS, Silwan, and Abu Tor. In 2008, tenders were issued for the construction of 1,184 new housing units in East Jerusalem, compared to 793 in 2007, an increase of 50 percent (of the 793 tenders issued in 2007, 747 were issued in December 2007, immediately after the US-hosted Annapolis Conference, so the increase after Annapolis was twenty-five times more than the year before). Moreover, during 2008, construction plans for 5,431 housing units in East Jerusalem were submitted for public review, of which 2,730 housing units received final approval, compared to 391 housing units approved during 2007, an increase of 600 percent.

© Foundation for Middle East Peace (FMEP), Washington, DC. Jan de Jong cartographer, reprinted with permission.

Map 39. Israeli Settlements around the Old City of Jerusalem

The Future of the Settlement Project

From 1996 until 2008, no Israeli government had officially decided to establishment a completely new settlement in the West Bank; however, in 2008 Defense Minister EHUD BARAK approved Plan 303 for the establishment of a new permanent Israeli settlement in the JORDAN RIFT VALLEY. Israel began work on Maskiyot in late 2008, and in September 2009, Peace Now wrote: "Massive construction for some 20 permanent housing units and 5 caravans, in the settlement of Maskiyot, Jordan Valley has just recently begun." This new settlement, and the accelerated growth in all aspects of the settlement project, are occurring in a highly charged international political context that includes the settlement freeze demanded in the first phase of the 2002 ROAD MAP, Prime Minister EHUD OLMERT's pledge to freeze settlement growth in the context of the November 2007 Annapolis Conference, plus President Barack Obama's admonitions to Israel to cease all settlement construction. Settlement growth is the key impediment to a genuine Israeli-Palestinian peace, a violation of commitments undertaken by Israel, and a humiliating slap in the face to the US president.

Maskiyot, in the northern Jordan Valley, originally served as an IDF outpost in the 1980s, and since 2002 has been virtually abandoned. When the IDF left the base, a small group of religious students came to live there periodically. Following the evacuation of the Gaza Strip in 2005, a group of evacuees moved to the area to establish the settlement of Maskiyot. The creation of a new permanent, civilian settlement in the Jordan Valley is especially provocative, given periodically declared Israeli intentions to retain control of the Jordan Valley, even if there is a peace accord and despite the fact that such a demand would make a peace agreement difficult if not impossible. There are already twenty-seven settlements in the Jordan Valley, with a total population of 9,358, plus nine illegal outposts. In addition, a series of outposts has been established in recent years east of the settlements of Shilo, Itamar, and Elon Moreh. The apparent purpose of these outposts is to connect isolated mountain ridge settlements to the Jordan Valley. Moreover, virtually all of the land in the Jordan Valley, other than actual built-up areas of the Palestinian population, has been placed under the jurisdiction of the settlement regional councils in the area ('Arvot Hayarden and Megillot). This means that land not defined as belonging to a specific settlement is still under the control of the settlements' regional councils (and off-limits to the Palestinians), and in some cases is actively farmed by settlers. The Palestinian population in the Jordan Valley as of mid-2005 was around 53,000. In addition, the area is home to an unknown number of BEDOUIN, estimated at several thousand, who maintain a seminomadic lifestyle.

A second new settlement, Sansana, received a green light in 2008 from the minister of defense to proceed with the approval process for Plan 501/1 (i.e., initiating the procedures to gain the necessary approvals to start construction). This plan involves the construction of sixty housing units in the SOUTH HEBRON MOUNTAIN area at a site at which a group of settlers have been living in temporary housing for some time. Officially, the government of Israel defines Plan 501/1 as a plan for a new "neighborhood" of the settlement of Eshkolot. Eshkolot, however, is located 4 kilometers (about 2.5 miles) away from Sansana. The connection is even more tenuous than this distance implies: this distance is measured "as the crow flies," as there is no road connecting the sites. The plan clearly constitutes the establishment of a new settlement. An English-language website describes Sansana in detail but omits any mention of Eshkolot, making clear that Sansana is an independent settlement. Illegal construction of permanent structures at Sansana began a few years ago but was stopped following pressure by various organizations, including Peace Now and Bimkom: Planners for Planning Rights. As soon as Defense Minister Barak approved moving forward with Plan 501/1 in 2008, the settlers restarted construction, even though the plan itself has still not undergone all of the planning procedures or been granted all the necessary approvals (it was only at the beginning of January 2009 that the plan was deposited for public objections, a key stage in the approval process). It is worth noting that the Barrier route in this part of the West Bank has been gerrymandered to dip sharply into the West Bank to include Sansana and Eshkolot and surrounding land on the Israeli side of the Barrier.

On 7 September 2009 Prime Minister BENJAMIN NETANYAHU authorized tenders for 450 new housing units in the major East Jerusalem settlement of Pisgat Ze'ev, which in 2008 had nearly 50,000 settlers. According to Peace Now, this was "a deliberate decision to poke a finger in the eye of President Obama and Special Envoy GEORGE MITCHELL. It is the latest effort by Netanyahu to use settlement-related developments in East Jerusalem to challenge and undermine President Obama's peace effort. Thus, this appears to be a case of Netanyahu—just as in the Shaykh Jarrah evictions—of using East Jerusalem construction to 'up the political ante' domestically and with the US."

In November 2009, a government planning commission gave final approval to the addition of 900 housing units in Gilo, another major East Jerusalem settlement where 40,000 Israelis already live. The plan was initiated by the Israel Lands Administration and had received an initial green light, but on 16 November the authorization was finalized. In reality these units won't be inside the existing footprint of Gilo; rather, they will be on the settlement's southwestern flank, expanding Gilo in the direction of the Palestinian village of Wallajeh (a village in which a large number of the households are fighting Israeli demolition orders). This new Gilo plan clearly dovetails with another plan to build another new settlement, called Givat Yael, which would straddle the Jerusalem border and significantly extend Israeli Jerusalem to the south, further sealing the city off from the BETHLEHEM area and the West Bank (and connecting it to the Etzion settlement bloc). That plan, reported in the Israeli press, also appears to be suddenly gaining steam. Other building plans in various stages of approval include some 4,000 new housing units in Gilo and adjacent areas.

President Obama responded to Israel's commitment to build extensively in and around Gilo by declaring that it "complicates administration efforts to relaunch peace talks and embitters the Palestinians in a way that could be very dangerous . . . [and] that additional settlement building doesn't make Israel safer." Ha'aretz reported that an aide to Prime Minister Netanyahu dismissed US anger at Israel's building plan, calling it "a routine process." A member of the commission that approved the plan stated, "The fact that the United States is against this or not is not a factor." Based on the figures given at the outset and the concluding analysis, it can only be surmised that Israel and its US friends intend to push the settlement project to the fullest extent possible.

See also DEMOGRAPHY; GREATER JERUSALEM; HEBRON AND JEWISH SETTLEMENTS; HEBRON DISTRICT SOUTHERN; HOLY BASIN; ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA; JERICHO; JERUSALEM; JORDAN RIFT VALLEY; LAND; METROPOLITAN JERUSALEM; OTTOMAN EMPIRE; SETTLER GROUPS AND SETTLEMENTS IN EAST JERUSALEM PLAN; SETTLER VIOLENCE; THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT; WATER RESOURCES AND ACCESS

Bibliography

- Ahren, Raphael. "U.S. Politician [Rep. Dov Hikind] Wants American Jews to Buy West Bank Homes." Ha'aretz. 17 November 2009.
- B'Tselem. Land Expropriation and Settlements. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, n.d. <http://www.btselem.org/English/Settlements/Index.asp>.
- . Land Expropriation and Settlements: East Jerusalem. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, n.d. <http://www.btselem.org/english/Jerusalem/Index.asp>.
- . Land Expropriation and Settlements: Encouragement of Migration to the Settlements. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, n.d. <http://www.btselem.org/english/Settlements/Migration.asp>.
- . Land Expropriation and Settlements: International Law. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, n.d. http://www.btselem.org/english/Settlements/International\_Law.asp.
- . Land Expropriation and Settlements: The Policy of Annexation and Local Government. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, n.d. <http://www.btselem.org/english/Settlements/Annexation.asp>.
- . Land Expropriation and Settlements: Settler Violence. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, n.d. http://www.btselem.org/english/Settler\_violence/Index.asp.
- . Land Expropriation and Settlements: Taking Control of the Land in the West Bank. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, n.d. http://www.btselem.org/english/Settlements/Land\_Takeover.asp.
- . Statistics on Land Expropriation and Settlement in East Jerusalem. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, n.d. http://www.btselem.org/english/Jerusalem/Land\_Expropriation\_Statistics.asp.
- Cheshin, Amir S., Bill Hutman, and Avi Melamed. Separate and Unequal: The Inside Story of Israeli Rule in East Jerusalem. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1999.
- Director General, United Nations Economic and Social Council Commission on Human Rights. Sixty-first session. Item 8 of the provisional agenda. Question of the Violation of Human Rights in the Occupied Arab Territories, Including Palestine. Submitted by Habitat International Coalition (HIC), a nongovernmental organization in special consultative status.

- The Secretary-General has received the following written statement which is circulated in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/31. [2 March, 2005]. E/CN.4/2005/NGO/327. 18 March 2005.
- Dudai, Ron. Free Rein: Vigilante Settlers and Israel's Non-Enforcement of the Law. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2001.
- . Tacit Consent: Israeli Policy on Law Enforcement toward Settlers in the Occupied Territories. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2001.
- Felner, Eitan. A Policy of Discrimination: Land Expropriation, Planning and Building in East Jerusalem. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 1995.
- Foundation for Middle East. "FMEP Settlement Report: Statistics, Tables, Maps, and More on Settlements." Washington, DC. <http://www.fmep.org>.
- Friedman, Lara. "Bibi Goes Nuclear on Jerusalem Settlements." Ir Amin. Special analysis from Lara Friedman (Americans for Peace Now) and Danny Seidemann (Ir Amim). 17 November 2009.
- Friedman, Lara, with Daniel Seideman. The Battle for Jerusalem's Old City and Holy Basin. New York: Americans for Peace Now and Ir Amin, May 2006.
- . What Freeze? Netanyahu Clears the Way for 450 New Units (at least) in Pisgat Ze'ev. New York: Americans for Peace Now and Ir Amin, August 2009.
- Friedman, Lara, and Hagit Ofra. 2008—The Year in Settlements in Review. New York: Americans for Peace Now and Peace Now, February 2009.
- Ginbar, Yuval. Demolishing Peace: Israel's Policy of Mass Demolition of Palestinian Houses in the West Bank. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 1997.
- . Israeli Settlement in the Occupied Territories as a Violation of Human Rights: Legal and Conceptual Aspects. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 1997.
- . On the Way to Annexation Human Rights Violations Resulting from the Establishment and Expansion of the Ma'aleh Adumim Settlement. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 1995.
- Ha'aretz Staff. "Obama: Expanding Settlements Won't Make Israel Safer." Ha'aretz. 18 November 2009.
- Hass, Amira. "East Jerusalemites Will Need Permits to Visit Ramallah." Ha'aretz. 25 January 2005.
- . "If the Land Isn't Private?" Ha'aretz. 21 February 2006.
- Hasson, Nir, and Natasha Mozgovaya. "Israel Disregards Specific U.S. Objection, Approves Plan to Expand Jerusalem's Gilo Neighborhood." Ha'aretz. 18 November 2009.
- . "U.S. 'Dismayed' at Israel Plan to Build 900 Homes beyond Green Line." Ha'aretz. 18 November 2009.
- Ignatius, David. "A Tax Break Fuels Middle East Friction." The Washington Post. 26 March 2009.
- Klein, Menachem. "Jerusalem without East Jerusalemites: The Palestinian as the 'Other' in Jerusalem." Journal of Israeli History. 23:2 (2004).
- . "Old and New Walls in Jerusalem." Political Geography. 24:1 (2005).
- Kra, Baruch. "Dispute over Ateret Cohanim's Purchase of Arab Abu Tor House." Ha'aretz. 12 October 2001.
- Lein, Yehezkel. Disputed Waters: Israel's Responsibility for the Water Shortage in the Occupied Territories. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 1998.
- . Forbidden Roads: The Discriminatory West Bank Road Regime. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2004.
- . Foreseen but Not Prevented: The Israeli Law Enforcement Authorities' Handling of Settler Attacks on Olive Harvesters. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2002.
- . Land Grab: Israel's Settlement Policy in the West Bank. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2002.
- . Thirsty for a Solution: The Water Crisis in the Occupied Territories and Its Resolution in a Final Status Agreement. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2000.
- Lein, Yehezkel, and Alon Cohen-Lifshitz. Under the Guise of Security: Routing the Separation Barrier to Enable the Expansion of Israeli Settlements in the West Bank. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, and BIMKOM: Planers for Planning Rights, 2005.
- Lewis, Ori. "Israel Angers U.S. by Approving New West Bank Homes." Reuters. 17 November 2009.
- Margalit, Meir. Discrimination in the New Master Plan of Jerusalem. Israeli Committee Against House Demolition. 4 November 2004.
- Ofran, Hagit. Construction of a New Settlement: Maskiyot. Jerusalem: Peace Now, 6 June 2009.
- . Despite Promises—Land Confiscation Continues Throughout 2008—January 2009. Jerusalem: Peace Now, June 2009.
- . The Price of the Settlements in the 2009–2010 Budget Proposal—June 2009. Jerusalem: Peace Now, June 2009.
- Ofran, Hagit, and Lara Friedman. Outposts, Post-Annapolis—March 2008. Jerusalem: Peace Now and Americans for Peace Now, 2008.
- Peace Now. New Land Seizure Orders Issued during the Gaza Operation. Jerusalem: Settlement Watch Team, Peace Now, February 2009.
- Rappoport, Meron. "Government Decision Strips Palestinians of Their East Jerusalem Property." Ha'aretz. 20 January 2005.
- Rubinstein, Danny. "The Battle for the Capital." Ha'aretz. 31 March 2005.
- Shalita, Chen. "Brothers Seek to Develop Jerusalem-Bethlehem Land for New Settlement, Givat Yael." Globes Online: Israel's Business Arena. 12 November 2009.
- Shamseyeh, Haleem Abu. "Settling the Old City: The Policies of Labor and Likud." Jerusalem Quarterly File. 6 (1999).
- Swisa, Shlomi. Al-Mawasi, Gaza Strip: Impossible Life in an Isolated Enclave. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2003.
- Zartal, Idith. Lords of the Land: The War for Israel's Settlements in the Occupied Territories, 1967–2007. New York: Nation Books, 2007.

Settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip

The Jewish settlement project in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES—the WEST BANK (or, as some refer to the area in its biblical form, Judea and Samaria) and the GAZA STRIP (until 2005)—has had a profound and lasting impact on the development of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. From the Israeli perspective, and on the part of consecutive governments, it is the most committed expression of the intent to keep parts or all of the contested area under Israeli rule for an indefinite period. Furthermore, the settlements create and continuously recreate Israeli interests in the Occupied Territories. From the Palestinian viewpoint, the settlements are the most glaring symbols of Israeli OCCUPATION, repression, and exclusion, carrying with them numerous direct and indirect infringements on Palestinian human and legal rights, individual and collective, and representing the ongoing usurpation of their national patrimony. In terms of peace talks the expansion of settlements constantly redefines issues encountered by negotiators, and has transformed the time frame of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, adding urgency to decisions regarding the future of the Occupied Territories and possible political solutions.

The rationales through which Israel gives legitimacy to the settlements are manifold and have changed through time. Immediately following the Occupation of the territories in the 1967 WAR, Israel decided to keep some limited regions that hold historic and security value and trade the rest with the neighboring Arab countries for a comprehensive peace agreement. The main thrust of Jewish settlement in the early years of Israeli Occupation, until 1977, was along lines determined by the so-called ALLON PLAN, in accordance with Israel's perceived security needs.

With the appearance on the scene of the GUSH EMUNIM movement in 1974, which propagated an ideology that demanded Jewish settlement in all the biblical land of Israel as part of the implementation of divine redemption, and with greater force following the 1977 change of government from LABOR to LIKUD PARTY, the Occupied Territories were opened to wider Jewish settlement, based on ideological and theological motivations. Under the GREATER LAND OF ISRAEL MOVEMENT ideology, settlements were created wherever LAND was available, at times in close proximity to Palestinian villages and cities. Many of the smaller settlements were constructed through the ideological zeal of small groups of religious activists, while others, mainly those nearer to the Green Line separating Israel from the West Bank, were marketed to the general Israeli public using capitalist initiatives such as subsidies and tax breaks.

As a geographical consequence of these historical developments, Jewish settlement in the West Bank is roughly organized along three north-south strips. In the eastern strip, the JORDAN RIFT VALLEY, there are mainly small agricultural settlements, established in the early years after the 1967 War. In the middle strip lies a string of ideological settlements, mostly inhabited by hard-core supporters of the Gush Emunim movement and its fringe offshoots. On the western strip, closest to the Green Line, are relatively larger quality-of-life settlements, whose interests are less ideological and more practical, connected through population characteristics and economic interests to the Israeli urban centers west of the Green Line. (A decision about what should be discussed under the heading of Jewish settlements in the Occupied Territories is never devoid of political implications, and its presumptions should be stated up front. Eastern JERUSALEM was annexed to Israel immediately after the 1967 War. The approximately 200,000 Israelis who found residence there in a string of suburban neighborhoods will not be discussed here because the history and sociopolitical logic of their residential choices and the legitimacy claims of their presence raise different kinds of issues that merit a separate discussion. The same applies to the Jewish settlements in the Golan Heights and the settlements in the Sinai Peninsula evacuated in 1982.)

Estimates of the numbers of Jews residing in the settlements vary. The data for 2005, as informed by the Israeli Statistical Bureau, show 282,000 Jews living in the West Bank in 126 settlements of varying size, thirteen new colonies not formally accredited, and fifty-five illegal OUTPOSTS. They are set against a Palestinian population in the West Bank estimated by the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA) Statistical Bureau to be 2.5 million.

The Occupation of the West Bank in the 1967 War brought about two conflicting considerations that affected decisionmakers in Israel. On the one hand, many of the areas conquered by the Israeli army were considered the cradle of the Jewish nation, and many believed they should remain under permanent Israeli rule based on the fundamental tenets of Zionist ideology. Surrendering HEBRON or NABLUS was seen as a betrayal of national destiny. On the other hand, the relatively large number of Palestinians residing in the territories, as well as international opinion (e.g., INTERNATIONAL LAW, UN SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 242 [1967], and the position of the UNITED STATES and the European states), made it practically impossible for Israel to annex the territories in the aggregate. Consequentially, East Jerusalem was annexed, while the rest of the territories were defined as “bargaining chips,” to be kept temporarily until negotiated for in a comprehensive peace agreement.

Israeli settlement policy followed the Allon Plan of 1967, conceived by Vice Prime Minister YIGAL ALLON shortly after the war. The plan marked the Jordan River as Israel’s eastern border and suggested a limited autonomy for the Palestinians until the future of the area was decided. Although the plan was constantly debated and never formally adopted, it was accepted in general, at least rhetorically, by Israeli governments prior to 1977 and placed some limits on regions open to Jewish settlement. The first two settlements established, however, were the inverse of Allon’s plan and undermined its logic in that they didn’t involve security but instead ideology. In September 1967, Kfar Etzion was established several miles south of BETHLEHEM. The children of warriors who had lived and fought in the area in the 1948 WAR decided to return to the place where many of their fathers had died and rebuild the religious kibbutz. Because the 1948 fight over the region was one of the heroic stories of Israel’s war of independence, the return of the young settlers was accepted in the face of an ambivalent but acquiescent government but with much public approval.

The second settlement that reversed Allon’s logic was in Hebron. On Passover in 1968 a group of religious Jews headed by RABBI MOSHE LEVINGER rented rooms in the local PARK Hotel to celebrate the holidays. Refusing to leave after the holiday, they were allowed to move to a building belonging to the Israeli military administration. The government then constructed a settlement for them, and, by 1972, the group had moved into their new colony, KIRYAT ARBA, overlooking Hebron. From its early days, this group encountered Palestinian resistance and Israeli opposition, yet it enjoyed some support at the government level, especially from Allon, who integrated the new religious settlement in his plan for the territories.

These two settlement events, carried out by mainly religious groups, were an opening for things to come with the establishment of Gush Emunim in 1974. At the time, however, most settlements and settlers were secular and, conforming to the principal lines of the Allon Plan, built their homes mainly along the Jordan Valley, which was assumed to be the long-term eastern border of the state. The Jordan Valley settlements were built first as army outposts (through the NAHAL units) and later replaced by the civil population, reflecting the long-standing Zionist position that civil settlements are instrumental in fending off enemy armies. The Jordan Valley settlements continued established Zionist practices of agricultural outposts at the BORDERS of the state and were considered in Zionist circles as exemplifying the pioneering spirit in new terrain. Consonant with other historic Zionist practices, the Jordan Valley was portrayed as empty space with few or no Palestinian inhabitants. Although reality was somewhat different, the “land without people” prose enhanced the legitimacy of the Jordan Valley settlements. By 2004 there were twenty-six Jewish settlements in the Jordan Valley, approximately 7,500 settlers among some 47,000 Palestinians.

Overall, in the first few years after the 1967 War, Israeli settlement in the Occupied Territories was limited, rarely encountered local Palestinian resistance, and was not the object of much public debate. The voices calling for annexation of the territories and unlimited Jewish settlement at that time were marginal and contained. All this was to change in the wake of the 1973 War, the emergence of Gush Emunim, and the change in government in 1977.

Gush Emunim and Settling the West Bank

The development and expansion of Jewish settlement in the West Bank are connected to Gush Emunim, a JEWISH FUNDAMENTALISM movement that was established in March 1974, soon after the 1973 War, in which SYRIA and EGYPT attempted to retake their territories seized by Israel in 1967. After protesting and demonstrating against withdrawal plans, Gush Emunim proceeded to implement its major strategy to arrest further withdrawals through a physical presence in the contested areas. In the mid-1970s, Gush Emunim supporters attempted several times to settle in the Samaria region, under the slogan of bringing Jewish life back to the site of ancient Schlem (Nablus). However, the Israeli government, headed by YITZHAK RABIN, refused to allow them to stay, and the settlers were evicted by army forces until their eighth attempt in December 1975, when they succeeded in convincing the Israeli government to allow a group of families to stay. The so-called Kadum compromise, which brought about the establishment of ELON MOREH near Nablus, marks the beginning of a new type of Jewish settlement in the West Bank—that is, based on ideology. Whereas Elon Moreh symbolized the defiant nature of Gush Emunim's settlement project, Ofra, established in May 1975, represented the tacit agreement and cooperation with the government, another trademark of the Gush Emunim. A settlement group related to Gush Emunim worked at the nearby army base and built its residential camp nearby. The government, through the attempts of Minister of Defense SHIMON PERES, approved the site for settlement. The group, which originally planned to settle elsewhere, decided to stay in Ofra, ten miles north of Jerusalem, and this area became an important center of the Gush Emunim settlement project, where many leaders took up residence and major institutions formed.

Elon Moreh and Ofra remained the only Gush Emunim settlements established during Rabin's period as prime minister. Immediately after reaching power in 1977, the new prime minister, MENAHEM BEGIN, of the right-wing Likud Party, declared that there "will be many Elon Morehs." And indeed, with state backing and funding the number of settlements in the West Bank quickly increased. Israel's evacuation from Sinai, decided in 1978 and implemented fully in 1982, was a setback for Gush Emunim supporters, who were disappointed by the limitations placed on their expansion due to international pressure. However, most of the settlements existing today were built during the late 1970s through the 1980s. Gush Emunim held the advantage of arriving ready for the settlement project, with the ideology, motivation, manpower, logistics, and even a prepared map based on extensive knowledge of the terrain. Movement leaders put forward the Yesh (acronym for Judea and Samaria) Plan, which became the blueprint for further settlement in the West Bank, superseding the Allon Plan. According to the Yesh Plan, new settlements would be established in locations of strategic importance at close proximity to and overlooking Palestinian villages.

Through the years, Jewish settlements in the Occupied Territories have undergone a process of institutionalization. In the initial years, settlers created organizations to coordinate action and bring their voice to the Israeli population. The charismatic young leaders of Gush Emunim became well-known MEDIA figures who were well connected to high Israeli political echelons. New organizational initiatives mushroomed, most important among them Emuna, the official settlement organization of Gush Emunim that helped new settlements in their first steps; the monthly journal Nekuda (Hebrew for "full stop," a point, or a location on the map), which expressed the views of the settlers and their supporters; and the YESHA COUNCIL, an informal umbrella organization that represented the settlers and fought to enhance their project. During the 1970s, Gush Emunim faded out, and the Yesha Council gradually replaced its functions and took upon itself the leadership of the struggle. The numerous Jewish settlements gave rise to new local organizations and jobs, mainly in administration, education, and religious services, and often held by former Gush Emunim leaders. Through its institutional development, the settlement project received state funds that were often, in turn, used to finance further settlement activity and the political struggles against government decisions unfavorable to the settlements.

The Gush Emunim settlements are planned communities, established by the willful acts of visionaries and designers through a political and administrative process. In this respect, Gush Emunim settlements followed the well-established Zionist practice of political settlement and resemble other types of planned rural settlements in Israel, such as the KIBBUTZ and the MOSHAV. Hence, the construction of the Israeli settlements always meant more than merely finding a place to live for a growing population; it held national import and was the object of heated political controversy. In many other respects, however, the Gush Emunim settlements are unique in the landscape of Israeli rural settlements. Previously, Zionist settlements were considered to have intrinsic social value as special types of human organizations that radiated their influence inside and across the Israeli borders. The kibbutzim, as the main example, were regarded and admired as an important social experiment, and their attempt at sharing production and consumption among residents, as well as restructuring family roles, was viewed by many with great interest. According to Zionist perception, establishing a presence on the land, although certainly an important national goal in itself, should be complemented with an ideological statement about communal life.

In the Gush Emunim settlements, however, the residents usually work elsewhere and share neither production nor consumption. Much as in the modern suburb, many of the workers leave home each morning and return in the evening. The settlers prefer this arrangement because of the terrain, which does not favor intensive agriculture; the proximity to Israeli urban centers; and the social makeup of the residents, most of whom are white-collar workers. Gush Emunim targeted mainly middle-class city dwellers, who would probably not have come had the settlements demanded transformation of lifestyle and redistribution of property. Thus, whereas the kibbutzim demanded the redemption of man (which is one reason they remained small and exclusive), the Gush Emunim settlements strove for the redemption of land.

Unlike the kibbutz movement, Gush Emunim has little to say about social and economic relations and the structure of communities, beyond a general penchant for religious communal life. The religious decree and political will to settle the entire Land of Israel are much stronger than any urge to transform Israeli society or create a new Israeli man. The Gush Emunim settlements have a distinctly religious nature, and the wish to live within an observant community is an important motivation for moving to a settlement. The secluded religious community offers a fuller religious experience than the average Israeli city. Local rabbis enjoy more authority, the gates to the settlement are closed on Shabbat, and the environment is controlled to exclude behaviors that offend religious sensibilities. Regardless of these differences, the Gush Emunim settlers attempted to connect themselves to the founding myth of Zionist settlement and compared themselves to the early Zionist pioneers (the halutzim). This historical analogy, which attempted to legitimize the Gush Emunim project using sacred national memory, enraged many Israelis. While outside of Israel, Jewish settlements in the Occupied Territories were considered as infringing upon the human rights of Palestinians, they were also harshly criticized within Israel for a variety of reasons. The opposition, consisting of Israeli political parties and social movements, most notably PEACE NOW (Shalom Achshav), protested the settlement project in general and many settlements in particular. Their main claims were that settlements on contested territories block peace possibilities, infringe on the human rights of Palestinians, and divert valuable resources from important social projects to risky and unjust operations. Furthermore, whereas the settlers claim to embody true ZIONISM, their opponents claim that they undermine the fundamental moral nature of Zionist ideology.

Although the Israeli peace camp has had some local and short-lived successes, the basic differential of resources has made their struggle difficult and frustrating. Whereas the settlers were based on their home territory and most of their leaders were funded by the state and worked in the local municipality, the peace protesters had to return to their homes within the Green Line and found it difficult to sustain pressure on the settlers. The Israeli peace camp has developed strategies aimed at confronting this power differential—for example, publishing reports directed at the Israeli and international public on the settlement project's advancement. The Israeli peace camp sees its main achievement as keeping the settlement question in front of the Israeli public despite the massive national investment in the territories. Some critics claim that the Israeli peace movement has had a paradoxical role of legitimizing the settlements in that it has displayed Israel's democratic virtue of freedom of speech, thereby diverting criticism from military occupation and state-sponsored settlement in contested areas.

Settlements created their own dynamics—demanding new spaces in which to expand and flourish, ROADS that were convenient and safe, and army camps nearby for protection. Whenever there were violent acts by Palestinians against the settlers, the settlers demanded what they referred to as “a proper Zionist response,” such as constructing a new settlement or clearing trees and buildings along the roads leading to existing settlements. In other words, the very existence of the settlements re-creates and redefines their interest in the area, bringing about recurring conflicts with their Palestinian neighbors. This, in turn, forces the Israeli government and army to deepen their involvement in the well-being of the Jewish settlers.

Ideological Jewish Community

The Jewish ideological settlement is concomitantly a political statement and a living, developing community. It is the most important resource that the Israeli right wing holds, and it exemplifies both the possibilities and problems of maximalist territorial policy. Along with the strategic rationale, the new settlements were established according to historic, religious, and symbolic logic. The names of the settlements reveal a craving to return to biblical times and to rebuild ancient locations—such as Giveon, Beit-El, or Tekoa—in roughly their original spots. Other settlements reproduce through their name later Talmudic times, such as the HAREDI town of Beitar. A special case is Susia, south of Hebron; a village by that name was never mentioned in ancient Jewish texts but was revealed in archaeological excavations. Thus the concrete settlement map can also be understood as a symbolic map, encompassing various periods of Jewish existence in the area. Some second-generation Jewish settlers, nicknamed “the youth of the hills,” attempt to connect to symbols of authenticity in a more direct way by adopting simple ways of life, traditional occupations, and other neobiblical symbols and characteristics.

Some of the settlements were established by government decision, whereas others were started as unauthorized outposts that gradually received legitimacy and became institutionalized. While in some settlements the houses were complete before the arrival of residents, in most a temporary camp preceded construction. The future residents live at the new site in various types of shelters, including old Jordanian houses, army barracks, old police stations, or, more often, mobile homes. The erection of a temporary camp pressures the government to authorize the settlement deed and hasten construction work. When the fixed settlement is established, the temporary camp is usually not dismantled but used for public institutions or to absorb new families. Some of the mobile homes are reused in the next settlement site elsewhere. The temporary mobile home became an important symbol of the defiant nature of the Gush Emunim project, especially the concept of the movement as a vanguard, capturing one hill after the next. The outpost indicates temporality—under constant threat of eviction by the Israeli army in case of a government decision and a prelude to the settlement that will be established on roughly the same spot, freeing the mobile home for further uses. As a sign of pioneering bravery and commitment, the mobile homes star in the lore of the settlers.

Apart from the very first ones, settlements are often found on the top of hills, are built according to similar principles, and share common visual features. As a natural element, the hilltops determined much of the settlements’ architectural designs. Following the topographical contours of the specific hill chosen, the settlements were built in concentric rings—round or elliptic. The lots for residential buildings are of roughly equal size and shape and are located in long chains on the perimeter, encircling, in a sense protecting, the public buildings in the high middle. Settlements stick out of their environment, usually as a human presence within a desert or among barren hills or as a uniform structure adjacent to traditional Palestinian villages. Whereas their names represent their commitment to biblical tradition, their construction declares a commitment to modernistic aesthetic values and suburban lifestyle. Because they are so radically different from their environment, some architects, landscape artists, and others have described the settlements in negative terms. For example, Israeli architects Eyal Weizman and Rafi Segal had the following to say about the design of Israeli settlements: “Palestinian human and political rights are violated not only by the presence of the settlements, but also by their location, size, form, and internal layout—in short by their very design. Just like the tank, the gun, and the bulldozer, here building materials and INFRASTRUCTURE are used as weapons to commit crimes. Planning in the West Bank finally shed the last shred of its social pretense of facilitating the welfare of an abstract ‘public’ and ended up as the executive arm of the strategic and geopolitical agenda of the Israeli state.”

Because of security considerations and symbolic significance, Gush Emunim settlements are usually located on high ground, overlooking their surroundings. The land that was traditionally occupied and cultivated by the Palestinians was mainly in the valleys, and, because there was little organized land registered for the area, Israel claimed rights, not recognized in international law, to confiscate land that was not cultivated. As a result, substantial parts of the West Bank were divided vertically, with the hilltops practically annexed to Israel and the lower areas remaining in Palestinian hands. This geostrategic division results in the settlements being isolated from each other and contiguous Jewish regions. At the same time, this division also precludes any possibility of a continuous Palestinian space, hindering the feasibility of a Palestinian state.

Quality-of-Life Settlements

After the 1977 government victory for the expansionist Likud, Israel's settlement policy was to open the entire space of the Occupied Territories for Jewish settlements. Most of the new settlers are not connected to the theological and ideological camp but rather moved their residence over the Green Line for practical reasons, such as quality of life, cheap housing, and nearness to the main Israeli metropolitan centers. Plots of land and houses were marketed using capitalist marketing strategies, government subsidies, financial incentives, tax advantages, loan forgiveness, and other inducements. As a result, these methods brought to the Occupied Territories religious and secular Jews of various socioeconomic interests and political opinions. As part of the promise, the quality-of-life settlements were located, whenever possible, relatively far from Palestinian villages, where newly built roads could connect settlers to the large Israeli urban centers without passing through potentially hostile environments. This type of settlement can be understood, and was marketed, as an integral extension of the Israeli metropolitan areas beyond the Green Line separating Israel from the West Bank.

The largest Jewish settlement in the Occupied Territories is Ariel, placed near the main road crossing the Samaria region and designated the "capital city of Samaria." The Judea and Samaria College, moved from the nearby small ideological settlement of Kedumim to the town, draws students from nearby cities and towns, mostly from inside the Green Line. Near Ariel is a large industrial zone named Barkan. Apart from being the urban center for the nearby settlements, Ariel is an expansion eastward of the dense Israeli Coastal Plain. The quality-of-life settlements open opportunities for other colonies to engage in the settlement project. Some new towns are Haredi (ultra-Orthodox)—Beitar Ilit, Modi'in Ilit, and Immanuel—and are tightly connected to the Haredi centers inside Israel, especially to Bnei-Brak and Jerusalem. The isolation enables the Haredim to preserve their secluded lives and to enhance the religious character of their communal existence. Within Haredi enclaves in the Occupied Territories, the population can express its values and style of life without the pressures of secular neighbors and consumer culture to adapt to more modern ways. Thus, for example, in the municipal elections of Immanuel, the community decided not to allow women to vote, a decision that would have cost them political power if it had been a mixed city.

Palestinians and most of the international community recognize little difference between the quality-of-life settlers and the more ideological ones, viewing them both as illegal appropriators of Palestinian land. The ideological settlers also prefer to obscure the differences and are especially content to see "regular" Israelis joining their ranks for whatever reason. However, most of the residents in the quality-of-life settlements, as well as most other Israelis, make clear and important distinctions between types of settlers, seeing the nonideological settlers as a distinct category. Secular settlements face toward Israel and, in some important respects, turn their backs to the ideological settlers. Their everyday life, places of work and leisure, political alignments, and identity formation can all be seen as a continuation of the attributes of Israelis on the western side of the Green Line.

Although the quality-of-life settlers are, in general, uncommitted to the Greater Israel ideal, and their place of residence is a consequence of their wish to improve their standard of living, the political meaning of their residential choice is crucially important to the future of the West Bank. Political geographer MERON BENVENISTI claimed as far back as the 1980s that the situation in the West Bank had passed the irreversible point, not because of the deeds of the ideological settlers but rather through the expansion of Israeli urban centers eastward toward the new spaces opened by the 1967 War. In his analysis, the quality-of-life settlements have erased the Green Line as a viable option for future Israeli withdrawal, and the fact that the nonideological settlers are "innocent victims" strengthens the commitment that the Israeli government and the Israeli public hold toward them. Furthermore, the new settlements beyond the Green Line have transformed the Israeli state in such a profound way as to merit a new definition, which Benvenisti names "the second Israeli republic." This new republic includes under its wide wings citizens and noncitizens, Israelis and Palestinians, in a demographically indivisible, continuous space from the Mediterranean Sea to the Jordan River. In other words, because of the arrival of regular Israelis, the ideological settlers may have practically fulfilled their dream of Greater Israel.

Removal of the Gush Katif Settlement

In August 2005, Gush Katif, a settlement bloc in southwest Gaza Strip comprising sixteen settlements and housing approximately 6,000 residents, was evacuated. The Jewish settlements in the Strip, where Palestinians number 1.5 million, took up 20 percent of the land and a great portion of other resources and came to symbolize the problematic nature and the stubborn resoluteness of the Israeli presence in the occupied areas.

During the first years following the Occupation, the Israeli army partly evacuated Palestinian residents from the area that became Gush Katif. The first settlement, Kfar Darom, was established in October 1970. Similar to Kfar Etzion, Kfar Darom was described as a return and reconstruction of an earlier settlement that was evacuated and destroyed in the 1948 War. Other settlements soon followed. At the northern tip of the Gaza Strip, there were three small settlements, and Netzarim was established between the Palestinian city of Gaza and the Dir el-Balah refugee camp. Within the contiguous area of Gush Katif, at the southeastern tip of the Strip, the largest settlement was Neve Dekalim, home to approximately 2,000 residents. Gush Katif was situated between the dense Palestinian population and the sea, but within the Gush area several thousand Palestinians remained. As a result of the evacuation of the Sinai settlements and the bulldozing of the buildings in April 1982, Gush Katif received support and a demographic boost. Some of the settlements commemorated, through their name, the destroyed region, and, in Neve Dekalim, a monumental building for the Yamit yeshiva was built in the form of a Star of David, with one point buried in the ground, symbolizing the demise of the Sinai settlements. The Katif region became the border region between Israel and EGYPT and accordingly received more government assistance.

Economically, the Jewish residents of the Gaza Strip made their living from agriculture, especially greenhouse vegetables and crops uniquely suited to the Israeli religious community. With swimming beaches and a hotel, the residents attempted to develop local and international tourism but, because of the precarious situation of the region, the tourists who came were mainly visitors from the national religious camp, combining vacation with a political statement of solidarity.

The private houses, gardens, swimming pools, and open spaces were a glaring contrast to the lives of the Palestinians around the settlements, many in refugee camps. Apart from Palestinians who worked inside the settlements, mainly in construction and greenhouses, the two populations were completely distinct. For many years, the settlements were targets for Palestinian attacks, which grew in number and intensity with the start of the AL-AQSA INTIFADA in September 2000. Most attacks involved firing on the settlements with rifles and locally made rockets, penetrating into the settlements and settlers' homes, and targeting cars on the roads to the Israeli region.

In 2003, after the Knesset elections, Prime Minister ARIEL SHARON initiated his plan of ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA: an evacuation and destruction of all settlements in the Gaza Strip and four small settlements in the northern West Bank. Immediately, the Gush Katif residents and their supporters from other settlements and the Israeli national religious camp in general led a struggle to try to prevent the evacuation. However, despite numerous demonstrations and protests, and a victory in a plebiscite in the ruling Likud Party, the disengagement plan was implemented and the Gaza Strip was evacuated of Israeli civil and military presence. The failed struggle to save Gush Katif sent shock waves through the settlements, especially those connected most intimately with Gush Katif, namely, the ideological Gush Emunim settlements. It became clear that the Israeli government could initiate, organize, and follow through with a large-scale evacuation, while the relevant agencies, especially the army and police, had little reservation in carrying out such orders. It was also evident that the general Israeli public, apart from the national religious camp, would either support or sit idly by while settlements were being dismantled. Some settler leaders lamented that, although they succeeded in settling on the ground, they failed in settling in the hearts of most Israelis. Others vowed to use more extreme measures should such events repeat themselves in the West Bank.

All sides involved see the Gaza evacuation as an experiment for possible future larger evacuations. Indeed, Prime Ministers Sharon and EHUD OLMERT stated that such steps were forthcoming, and it is clear that a further massive evacuation will encounter greater resistance. Following the eruption of Palestinian violence in the Gaza Strip, including rockets fired at nearby Israeli towns, and the 2006 war in LEBANON illustrating the damaging military potential of nonstate organizations, plans for further evacuations are currently on hold.

Position of Israeli Government

Since the beginning of Jewish settlement in the Occupied Territories, Israeli governments and governmental offices, almost regardless of partisan lines, have either shown support for or expressed ambivalence toward the settlers. Even though the settlers were often unruly and sometimes posed a threat to state legitimacy, their ideological zeal and political power, along with thinly veiled threats to use violence, made government officials comply with many of their demands. Furthermore, many politicians and officials at all levels of government sympathized wholeheartedly with the settlers and their ideology. Often governments spoke with two voices, condemning the illegal and violent acts of the settlers while providing them with funds, building their infrastructure, and supporting them politically. Influential posts within ministries responsible for Israeli settlement policy were often occupied by settler leaders, both at top levels as ministers and ministerial general managers and as employees in the offices administering the Occupied Territories, and they assisted the settlements often in ways directly opposite to declared governmental policies.

The ambivalence toward the settlers reaches back to the very beginning: the decisions to enable Jews to return to Kfar Etzion and the reluctant acceptance of Rabbi Levinger's dramatic acts in Hebron. The Israeli government was divided over both issues, and the settlers manipulated the doubts and inconsistencies to their advantage. Israeli governments were often worried about the international implications, possible Palestinian resistance, and the trickle-down effect of unruliness on Israeli society, yet the Greater Israel ideal was close to the heart of many government officials, and the memory of the Zionist pioneers, on whom the settlers modeled themselves, was a strong compelling image. Security issues and real-estate considerations also played a large part in decisions to assist the settlers.

In the years 1974–1977, Yitzhak Rabin's government had to contend with the attempts of Gush Emunim to settle in the West Bank without authorization. Although Rabin himself was hostile to these efforts, his minister of defense, Shimon Peres, was more favorably disposed toward the settlers, allowing them, for example, to establish the settlement of Ofra. The inner conflicts within the government enabled the Kadum compromise in 1976, which allowed settlers in limited numbers to remain in the Samaria district. Though Menahem Begin promised, both before and after his arrival to power in 1977, that the Occupied Territories would be open to unrestricted Jewish settlement, he could not fulfill his words. International pressures, especially with the advancement of the peace negotiations, forced the Israeli government to exercise some control over its settlement activity. However, as with all governments in all periods while Israel formally stopped building new settlements, various government agencies continued to assist the settlers, and the settlement project continued to expand.

The ambivalence was also apparent in the all-important issue of gaining control of enough land to enable the settlements to emerge and prosper. In June 1979 a major legal case came before the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT in the context of private Palestinian land confiscated in order to establish Elon Moreh. The state claimed that the confiscation was justified because of security reasons and brought experts, including ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) chief of staff Rafael Eitan, to back its claim. The plaintiffs brought their own security experts, including former Israeli generals, to claim the contrary. The settlers undermined their own case by declaring that they intended to stay indefinitely, regardless of security needs. In a watershed decision, the Supreme Court annulled the confiscation and thereby forced the government to search for other legal means to implement its settlement policy. Although land confiscation continued, the legal solution chosen to enable further settlement was based on an old Jordanian law stating that land at a certain distance from villages was considered as belonging to the state. Using this law, large portions of the Occupied Territories were declared STATE LAND and used for settlement. The Supreme Court did not contest this principle, ignoring the fact that it was contrary to an important tenet of international law that prohibits moving other populations into occupied territories or using resources from the area for the benefit of anyone other than the local population. On these matters the Israeli courts refrained from intervening, claiming those issues to be of an inherently political nature, beyond its jurisdiction. Critics of the settlement project in Israel and abroad therefore consider Israeli courts and the judicial system as accomplices in legitimizing Israeli civil presence in the Occupied Territories.

Law enforcement is another institutional realm in which the Israeli state played a double game with the settlers. Regular Israeli law is enforced only partially in the Occupied Territories. For example, violence toward Palestinians is usually ignored and rarely punished. The small ideological communities, whose residents are frequently implicated in vigilante actions against Palestinians, form tight groups that protect each other and do not enable police penetration. Furthermore, agencies of social control rarely wish to pursue legal matters to their conclusion when the suspects are settlers and the victims are Palestinians.

Israel has invested billions, much of it well hidden in obscure clauses in the national budget, in settlement financing. Although the real amount is a matter of conjecture and will probably never be calculated, the Ha'aretz Israeli daily newspaper (in a special September 2003 supplement) estimated that the sum approximates US$10 billion of extra civil expenditure, excluding military expenditure for guarding the settlers. Critics of the settlement project argue that these funds could have been used to achieve important social goals inside the Green Line. Furthermore, the settlements have, in a sense, created a partial alternative for the weakening Israeli welfare system, offering cheap housing and subsidies to many who chose to leave poor neighborhoods and development towns and move to the Occupied Territories.

The illegal outposts are a glaring example of the inconsistency of state agency vis-à-vis the settlement project. These outposts, mushrooming in the West Bank since the mid-1990s, manifest young settlers' zeal and dedication. Their practice evolved out of what they believe is necessity, as consecutive Israeli governments slowed the establishment of new settlements, giving the settlers an excuse to forge ahead with new settlement activity, knowing from experience that governments tend to accept a fait accompli. The new outposts, built without permission, license, or government decision, were brought to the attention of peace movements in Israel and global civil rights organizations. Their unlawful establishment and the often illegal deeds of their residents, which spread fear in the nearby Palestinian villages, were widely known to Israeli law enforcement agencies. Nevertheless, various government agencies assisted the outposts in a variety of ways and enabled the legal, economic, and military substructure necessary for their success. Although there were occasions when the Israeli army evacuated an outpost, even in the face of violent settlers' opposition (Amona in 2005 being the most notable example), in general, Israeli governments have been characterized by the contradictory interests of different state agencies, which enabled the outposts to survive and even thrive.

The ambivalent complacency of Israeli governments in the development of the settlement movement raises two important questions: whether the settlement project can be understood as an integral part of the Zionist project, and whether the Judaization of the land within the pre-1967 borders, widely legitimized by the Israeli public, will be equally accepted with new frontiers absent Gaza in the Occupied Territories. The ideological settlers have a vested interest in presenting their project as a continuation of the century-old Zionist project, while their critics vehemently dispute this claim, drawing a distinct line between traditional Zionism and the new settlements in the Occupied Territories. Researchers are divided in their judgments according to their own academic conceptions. Critical political scientists, sociologists, and historians, such as Oren Yiftachel, Ilan Pappé, and Gershon Shafir, claim that settlement and Judaization of the Occupied Territories are a direct continuation, albeit using new strategies, of Zionist logic and basic motivations. Notably, however, they are highly critical of the original Zionist project. The inconsistent behavior of Israeli governments enables both the critical scholars and their opponents to build and strengthen their case.

Impact on the Palestinians

The settlements' impact on the lives and well-being of the Palestinians residing nearby is extensive and harsh, though it cannot easily be detached from the general effect of Israeli Occupation. On the macro level, the settlers symbolize for the Palestinians the most enduring aspect of the Occupation and the greatest threat to their collective future. On a more daily basis, many of the settlers are involved in numerous breaches of human rights and, through direct and indirect actions, participate in injuring the communal and private lives of Palestinians. In turn, the settlers are hardest hit by Palestinian rage and violence.

Although the Palestinian presence is crucial for understanding the settlement project, it is nevertheless often denied and overlooked by the settlers. On the one hand, the settlement project is a direct contestation of the Palestinian claims to nationhood, sovereignty, and native status on their land, and, in one sense, the Israeli-Palestinian conflict can be conceived as a geopolitical war over territorial interests in the contested area. On the other hand, the Palestinian population is often declared inconsequential to the determination of the area's future. For example, the first Jewish settlers in the Jordan Valley arrived under the explicit assumption that the presence of Palestinians in the area had no relevance to the settlers' future. Gush Emunim settlers, who could not ignore the massive presence of Palestinians around their settlements, claimed that their neighbors ought to accept their presence. Their reasoning was based on the religious and historical basis for Jewish return to the land, which they argued should be well understood by religious Palestinians, who are themselves, according to the settlers' worldview, descendants of the same biblical patriarch, Abraham. At the same time, the settlers' religious leadership declared that the Palestinians are temporary visitors in a land that can only belong to the Jews and that they should be thankful for the right to remain on Jewish soil and not be evicted to their assumed Arab "homelands."

These images and concepts, in turn, influenced government policies and resource allocation. The government rarely considered the well-being of the Palestinians in the development of the settlement project and did not view the local population as holding collective rights or interests in the area or having a voice in the development of the territory. Furthermore, land and WATER resources were diverted to assist Jewish settlement, further weakening and impoverishing the local Palestinian population. In fact, Israel has contributed to the decline of Palestinian agriculture, curtailed the development of industry, and kept the territories as an open market for its own products. The settlers further restricted the Palestinian economy by overusing resources, especially water, and demanding ROADBLOCKS and CURFEWS, carried out by the army. They also actively harmed the Palestinian subsistence economy through violent acts, for example, OLIVE TREE UPROOTING or driving shepherds from grazing fields. Because of the threatening presence and violent actions of the Hebron and Kiryat Arba settlers, the Hebron Arab Market was slowly destroyed until it eventually closed. On the other hand, Palestinians found work, mainly in construction, building the emerging settlements. Apart from that, the economies of the settlers and the Palestinians are distinct and verging on apartheid.

More than other groups in Israeli society, the settlers have suffered from TERRORISM. For the Palestinians, the settlers represent the Occupation, and their proximity makes them relatively easy targets for violent actions. All through the 1980s, Palestinians' main action against the settlers was throwing stones at vehicles driven by Israelis, especially when the settlers were inside Palestinian towns. In addition, some settlers were killed by shooting or knifing, especially in the city of Hebron. The retaliation of the settlers included the actions of the so-called Jewish underground, whose leaders were important members in the settlement movement, which targeted Palestinians and made plans to blow up the mosques on the TEMPLE MOUNT in Jerusalem. In 1984, when the group was exposed and its members apprehended by Israeli security forces while it was attempting to blow up Palestinian buses, an argument ensued among the settlers regarding their rights to retaliate and use force against their neighbors. While the emergence of another organized clandestine network among the Jewish settlers is possible, in the meantime individuals and small groups have often taken the law into their own hands and targeted Palestinians.

Starting in December 1987, the First INTIFADA targeted mainly Israeli soldiers and Jewish settlers. From mainly stone-throwing, the Palestinian uprising escalated to gunfire and resulted in about 100 Israeli deaths. In 1994 a Kiryat Arba physician, BARUCH GOLDSTEIN, murdered twenty-nine Muslims at prayer in the CAVE OF MACHPELAH, and in the following violent demonstrations, more Palestinians were killed by the army. Under Prime Minister Rabin, the Israeli government considered evacuating the Jewish enclave in Hebron but decided against such action. The Palestinian SUICIDE BOMBINGS reached their height during the Second (al-Aqsa) Intifada and targeted mainly Israeli cities inside the Green Line. However, the settlers were still the main victims of Palestinian rage and accounted for approximately 20 percent of Israeli dead in the Intifada years. Another 20 percent were killed inside the Occupied Territories, mainly IDF soldiers. Counting the number of Palestinian attacks during the Second Intifada, more than 95 percent occurred in the Occupied Territories. The settlements were subjected to gunshots, makeshift missiles, and penetrations into houses and public buildings.

For the settlers, the violent events changed their conception of possible peaceful relations with their neighbors, resulting in important policy changes and strategic decisions. The idea of bringing prosperity to all residents of the region was replaced with unveiled anger, hate, and alienation. Before the Intifada, most settlements refused to accept fences around the perimeter, claiming that it limited their possibility for expansion in their homeland. However, with the growing dangers, most settlements accepted and even demanded electronic fences and stronger security measures. The settlers were also critical of the decision, following the OSLO ACCORDS between the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION and Israel, to construct bypass roads around Palestinian villages, claiming that they needed to bring a Jewish presence to every spot in the land, all of which belonged to them. Currently they are content to use the safer bypass roads and mostly refrain from driving through Palestinian towns.

The first settlers in the Occupied Territories did not take the rage of the Palestinians into consideration, but it turned out to be the most crucial factor affecting their prospects for the future. Palestinian violence has had paradoxical consequences. On the one hand, it pulls the Israeli army inside the Occupied Territories to strengthen its control on Palestinian movement and everyday life. On the other hand, it has raised the price for individuals considering a move to the territories and raises the overall Israeli cost for maintaining the settlements. Sharon's disengagement plan has shown that the cost of holding settlements in close proximity to hostile Palestinians is a price that many Israelis are unwilling to pay.

Future of the Settlements

Although the Jewish settlement project across the Green Line enjoyed direct or tacit governmental support for most of its existence, starting in the early 1990s, it has found itself in growing difficulties and facing problems that, while not curtailing its expansion, have cast doubt on its chances of long-term survival. In the second Rabin government that came to power in 1992, certain Knesset members, especially from the left-wing MERETZ PARTY, were openly hostile to the settlements and suggested "drying them out," that is, decreasing subsidies so they would leave. At the same time, the Oslo Accords with the Palestinians were the greatest political failure of the Israeli right and a disastrous blow to the settlers for numerous reasons. They narrowed the land that the settlers believed should eventually belong to them. Arming the Palestinian police formed an immediate threat, and the result was building fences around the settlements and constructing bypass roads. All this marked the Israeli government's distancing from the settlers, the Israeli public's relative indifference to the settlers' change in status, and the demise of the Greater Israel ideology.

The settlers, however, responded by opening up their settlements. Supporters who had hesitated to move to the territories decided it was time to strengthen the project, and the number of settlers doubled in the few years after the Oslo Accords. At the same time, the number of settlements stayed roughly the same, as Israel found itself constricted by growing international pressure and binding agreements with the Palestinians. The solution found by the settlers was the creation of new neighborhoods at the fringes of the established settlements, thus expanding the existing settlements to include new land. Against governmental restrictions, a large number of illegal outposts were created, each housing a few families and individuals. While some are in a process of evolving into full-fledged settlements, others remain small and are centers of the so-called youth of the hills.

The prospects for the settlement project received two substantial blows in the new century. Following the suicide attacks in Israeli cities, Israel began construction in 2002 of a BARRIER separating the Occupied Territories from Israel—in many places deep into the West Bank, dividing the space between the Mediterranean Sea and the Jordan River. Although human rights organizations point to the suffering that the Barrier causes the large Palestinian population in the divided area, this wall also posits grave problems to the settlers. In fact, many claim that the Barrier will decide Israel's future borders, dooming many of the settlements on the "wrong" side to a slow process of degeneration. Symbolically, the Barrier defines the settlers as being outside the territory that would eventually be left in Israeli hands. The second blow was a more direct and unequivocal one, namely, ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA in 2005 and the destruction of twenty-two settlements there, ordered by Sharon, who was considered until then the builder and guardian of the settlements.

Although their future looks uncertain, Jewish settlements have had profound influence on the territories where they have been planted. Realizing that they were losing land and resources with every day that passed, the Palestinians found themselves needing to change the situation, either through diplomatic means or through escalation of violence. At the same time, the Israelis found newly established interests in protecting the territories under their control, while realizing the high cost of continued Occupation. The ideological settlers residing in the Occupied Territories are a determined group, refusing any territorial compromise. Although the Israeli settlements and the Greater Israel ideology are currently out of favor with much of the Israeli public, the settlers' sheer numbers and resolute determination ensure that any Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank will be met with great resistance and come at a dear cost to Israelis and Palestinians alike.

See also DEMOGRAPHY; GREATER JERUSALEM; HEBRON AND JEWISH SETTLEMENTS; HEBRON: DISTRICT, SOUTHERN AREA; JERUSALEM; SETTLER GROUPS AND SETTLEMENTS, EAST JERUSALEM; SETTLER VIOLENCE; SUICIDE BOMBINGS; THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT

Bibliography

- Applebaum, Leviah, and David Newman. Between Village and Suburb: New Forms of Settlements in Israel (Hebrew). Rehovot: Center for Rural and Urban Settlement, 1989.
- Aran, Gideon. From Religious Zionism to Zionist Religion: The Roots and Culture of Gush Emunim (Hebrew). Ph.D. dissertation, Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 1987.
- . "Jewish Zionist Fundamentalism: The Bloc of the Faithful in Israel." In Fundamentalism Observed. Edited by Martin E. Marty and R. Scott Appleby. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1991.
- Be'er, Haim. "Gush Emunim—Canaanites Who Wear Phylacteries." Davar. 15 October 1982.
- Benvenisti, Meron. Intimate Enemies: Jews and Arabs in a Shared Land. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1995.
- B'Tselem (Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories). West Bank Settlement Population by Year. www.btselem.org/English/Settlements/Settlement\_population.xls.
- Feige, Michael. "Jewish Settlement of Hebron: The Place and the Other." GeoJournal. 53 (2001).
- . One Space, Two Places: Gush Emunim, Peace Now and the Construction of Israeli Space (Hebrew). Jerusalem: Magnes Press, 2002.
- . Settling in the Hearts: Jewish Fundamentalism in the West Bank. Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 2009.
- Franke, Anselm, Rafi Segal, and Eyal Weizman, eds. Territories: Islands, Camps, and Other States of Utopia. Koln, Germany: Verlag der Buchhandlung König, 2003.
- Goldberg, Giora, and E. Ben-Zadok. "Regionalism and a Territorial Rift: Jewish Settlement in Occupied Territories." State, Government and International Relations (Medina, Mimshal VeYechasim Beinleumim). 21 (1983).
- Ha'aretz*. The Price of the Settlements. Special report. 26 September 2003.
- Harnoi, Meir. The Settlers (Hebrew). Jerusalem: Ma'ariv, 1995.
- Huberman, Haggai. "Kfar Etzion: Pioneer of Settlement in Judea and Samaria." In Ascent to the Mountain: Renewal of Jewish Settlement in Judea and Samaria (Hebrew). Edited by A. Shvut. Beit El, West Bank, 2002.
- . "Ofra: From a Working Village to a Settlement." In Ascent to the Mountain: Renewal of Jewish Settlement in Judea and Samaria (Hebrew). Edited by A. Shvut. Beit El, West Bank, 2002.
- Kaniel, Shlomo. "The Settlers of the Hill—The Biblical Sabra? A Pilot Study of the Hill Settlers in Judea and Samaria." In The Religious Zionism: An Era of Change: Studies in Memory of Zvulun Hamer. Edited by A. Cohen and I. Harel. Hebrew. Jerusalem: Bialik Institution, 2004.
- Lustick, Ian. For the Land and the Lord: Jewish Fundamentalism in Israel. New York: Council on Foreign Relations, 1991.
- . Unsettled States, Disputed Lands. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1993.
- Neuman, Tamara. "Maternal 'Anti-Politics' in the Formation of Hebron's Jewish Enclave." Journal of Palestinian Studies. 33:2 (2004).
- Newman, David, ed. The Impact of Gush Emunim. London: Croom Helm, 1985.
- Ohana, David. "Kfar Etzion: The Community of Memory and the Myth of Return." Israel Studies. 7:2 (2002).
- Roth, Anat. The Secret of Its Strength: The Yesha Council and Its Campaign against the Security Fence and the Disengagement Plan (Hebrew). Jerusalem: Israeli Democracy Institute, 2005.
- Segal, Haggai. Dear Brothers: The West Bank Jewish Underground. New York: Beit-Shamai Publications, 1988.
- Shafat, Gershon. Gush Emunim: The Story behind the Scenes (Hebrew). Beit El, West Bank, 1985.
- Sharvit, Yosef. "The History of the New Settlement in Hebron." In Book of Haggai (Hebrew). Edited by Y. Ariezer. Kiryat-Arba: Haggay Foundation and Nir Kiryat-Arba Yeshiva, 1985.
- Shvut, Avraham. "The Jewish Settlement in Judea and Samaria Facing the Oslo Process." In Ascent to the Mountain: Renewal of Jewish Settlement in Judea and Samaria (Hebrew). Edited by A. Shvut. Beit El, West Bank, 2002.

Sprinzak, Ehud. The Ascendance of Israel's Radical Right. New York: Oxford University Press, 1991.

———. "Gush Emunim: The Iceberg Model of Political Extremism." Jerusalem Quarterly. 21 (1981).

Weisburd, David. Jewish Settler Violence: Deviance as Social Reaction. University Park: Pennsylvania State University, 1989.

Weizman, Eyal, and Rafi Segal. "The Mountain Settlements: Principles of Building in Heights." Studio Art Magazine. 134 (2002).

—Michael Feige

Settler Groups and Settlements, East Jerusalem

Since the OCCUPATION began in 1967, successive Israeli governments have made efforts to transform the Arab character of East JERUSALEM, eradicate all Palestinian signifiers, and create a Jewish mass that will in turn construct a new geopolitical reality. This process is aimed at assuming control not only of the physical space of the city's eastern half but also of its local identity, thus Judaizing East Jerusalem at the expense of its Palestinian heritage.

When Israel conquered East Jerusalem in June 1967, it adopted two basic principles with regard to the city. The first was to rapidly increase the Jewish population in the eastern sector in order to maintain a demographic ratio of 70 percent Jews to 30 percent Arabs. The second was to hinder the growth of the Palestinian population and to force Arab residents to make their homes elsewhere. This logic has driven Israeli policymakers from 1967 through the present. On 30 July 1980, the Knesset passed a BASIC LAW making Jerusalem unified and the eternal capital of Israel.

Immediately after the 1967 WAR, the Israeli government also undertook a policy of Israelization with regard to East Jerusalem by annexing land that was confiscated from twenty-eight Palestinian villages, expanding the area of what was previously considered East Jerusalem from 6.5 square kilometers (2.5 square miles) to 71 square kilometers (27 square miles). On this confiscated land Israel built twelve major SETTLEMENTS in a ring around East Jerusalem with Israeli-only roads and associated INFRASTRUCTURE. In 2009, the combined population of these ring settlements stood at 235,000.

Consecutive governments have pursued implementation of increasing the Jewish population and hindering the growth of the Palestinian community by integrating two forces that operate in tandem and feed on each other. One is the official, state organ that expropriates LAND and builds Israeli neighborhoods and enterprises. The second, unofficial organ is composed of settlers who perform what the state is unable to do for legal reasons, that is, establish Jewish neighborhoods within Palestinian neighborhoods and try to force the Palestinians out. The settlers' amutot (nonprofit associations) are the long arm of government, moonlighting contractors for the Israeli government—both LABOR and LIKUD PARTY. They have flourished and developed with governmental backing and sponsorship and are embraced by every lawful authority—from the municipality to the police to the national government. As a result a close, almost symbiotic relationship has formed between the settler groups and national government representatives, to the extent that occasionally it is unclear who is running whom—the state the settlers, or the settlers the state.

In the wake of the 1993 OSLO ACCORDS, the 2000 CAMP DAVID SUMMIT, and the election of Barack Obama, the possibility that Jerusalem could be divided as part of an overall peace agreement has given the Jewish settlement project in East Jerusalem its greatest impetus. Israel's government and the Jerusalem municipality work on the assumption that the Western powers will eventually enforce a diplomatic arrangement roughly in the form of the ROAD MAP, and featuring some sort of division of the city between Palestinians and Jews. When that time comes, the existence of settlements will determine the city's boundaries, just as it did in 1948 when the map of settlements was used to chart the new state's BORDERS. As a result, the state, the municipality, and settler organizations are making tremendous efforts to create "facts on the ground" that will rule out any future division of the city.

The spatial spread of the East Jerusalem settlements is part of a comprehensive religious-political strategic program. The settlers' objective is to create a strip of Jewish localities around the OLD CITY—the historical and spiritual Jerusalem for Christians, Muslims, and Jews—that will fulfill two roles: sever Palestinian territorial contiguity between the north and south of the city, and envelop the Old City with Jewish "islands" that will rule out the possibility that East Jerusalem can function as the capital of the Palestinian state if and when it is declared. This is particularly obvious when one locates those Jewish islands on the map: from the south a broad belt starts in SILWAN with the City of David complex and continues toward RAS AL-AMUD and Kidmat Zion, from where it continues toward the E1 area and MA'ALE ADUMIM.

The Jewish settlements in Palestinian neighborhoods—whether a single house or an entire colony—rapidly become fortified sites. Every Jewish site in East Jerusalem requires a security fence, guard posts with armed security personnel, projectors, and often closed-circuit cameras, plus a provocative Israeli flag. In their wake come the Border Police with their jeeps, who patrol the site and are a constant irritation to Palestinian residents. Whenever Jews leave their home in the Old City, they are escorted by a pair of armed security guards, attesting to the provocative nature of the way in which settlers mark their presence there.

This entry focuses on actions by settler groups in the heart of East Jerusalem's Palestinian population. It does not deal with the twelve major settlements built in the eastern half of the city that are a well-known and thoroughly documented phenomenon, but with the blocs of houses being built in the midst of the Arab population in Jerusalem's Old City and in the surrounding neighborhoods.

The settler project is a well-thought-out attempt to thwart future peace plans. Quietly and furtively, Israel's government is using the settlers to seal the last loopholes through which peace could conceivably occur and is creating indelible facts that preclude any Palestinian authority in the city. It is not certain whether the string of settlements will manage to significantly modify East Jerusalem's character, but what is certain is that they are capable of sabotaging any form of peace agreement. Both the Israeli government and the Palestinians are aware that when the belt of colonies encircles the city and settlers have taken possession of sites that are important to Islam, East Jerusalem will be unable to function as the capital of a Palestinian state.

Several settler associations operate in East Jerusalem, the most notable being ATERET COHANIM, BEIT OROT, ELAD, and Shimon Ha'Tzadik. Pivotal figures in those associations are Matti Dan, David Beeri, Arie King, BENYAMIN ELON, Avi Maoz, Meir Davidson, Rabbi Elhanan Bin-Nun, and Rabbi Shlomo Aviner. Their major efforts are focused on the Old City and the area of Silwan, which they call Ir David (City of David), and other neighborhoods surrounding the Old City—from Wadi Kadum in the south to SHAYKH JARRAH in the north. All the organizations collaborate in a framework known as the JERUSALEM FORUM, which provides a linkage among the groups working to Judaize East Jerusalem, including the messianic groups hoping to build the THIRD TEMPLE on the TEMPLE MOUNT/AL-HARAM ASH-SHARIF.

Types of Land Purchases

In terms of formal affinity, Jewish groups within East Jerusalem consist of three principal types: settler-controlled ideological groups, real-estate ventures by businesspeople, and government initiatives. There is no comprehensive statistical information available on the number of properties acquired by settler associations, because they have not yet occupied some of the properties and Arab middlemen are living in others. Nevertheless, a reliable picture can be put together from the information available, even if incomplete.

Settler-Controlled Areas. Within the Old City's walls, operations are coordinated by Ateret Cohanim, which has taken over thirty-one buildings in the Muslim and Christian quarters, in which sixty families, or some 300 Jews, reside. Most of the buildings are grouped along Al-Wad Street (HaGai Street in Hebrew) near the Damascus Gate; the most famous of them is the symbolic but unused home of former prime minister ARIEL SHARON. In 1990, Ateret Cohanim acquired St. John's Hostel, a large building of fifty-three rooms close to the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, although a legal dispute is still pending over settlers' rights to the hostel. More recently, it purchased two hotels near the Jaffa Gate—the Imperial and the Petra hotels, over which legal proceedings continue. The association has submitted plans to build an Israeli enclave in Burj Il Laqlaq, just inside Herod's Gate, one of the northern gates to the Old City. The association also operates outside the walls of the Old City and is behind the unlicensed construction of a seven-story building in the area known as the Yemenite neighborhood on the outskirts of Silwan.

Abetting the settlement process in the Old City is the Company for Rehabilitation and Development of the Jewish Quarter, a subsidiary of the municipality and the national government. In 2001 it published a grandiose plan to build hundreds of homes in the Jewish quarter and on Mount Zion, as well as several tourism projects, at a cost of $36.4 million. In the project's marketing brochure the objective of the project is stated as "bringing back a strong Jewish presence to the Old City." The trend is to create continuity between the Old City and the rest of Jerusalem by augmenting the Old City with hundreds of housing units for Jews, thus "improving" the demographic balance. A tunnel will be excavated beneath Mount Zion linking West Jerusalem to the WESTERN WALL, and a residential and business center will be built. A promenade is to be built over the roofs of the Arab market, connecting the Jewish quarter with the other islands of Jewish presence scattered throughout the Muslim and Christian quarters. Public buildings are planned on Mount Zion.

The Palestinian neighborhood of Silwan and its surrounding area are the focus of the ELAD association, which was founded in 1986 and in 1991 took over two Palestinian homes in Wadi Hilweh, the Ir David area of Silwan. Today, twenty-seven Jewish families live in ten buildings in Ir David. The association owns another twenty buildings, most of which were seized from Palestinians for settler housing in February–April 2004, and twenty-three families now live there. In all, the number of settler families residing in Silwan is around fifty, comprising some 250 persons. ELAD's official publications reflect pride in having seized more than 55 percent of the area of Ir David. It is believed that many more buildings inhabited by Palestinians have been targeted by ELAD and that the association is poised for the most suitable moment—politically—to take possession of them. In addition, in an area of Silwan that the settlers have renamed the Yemenite neighborhood, Ateret Cohanim members are planning a large Israeli complex.

At the entrance to Silwan, on an 11.5-dunum (2.5-acre) plot known as the Givati Park, a five-story building is planned that would include a banquet hall, a commercial center with a view toward the Western Wall plaza, and an underground car park. Although the investors have shrouded the project in secrecy, it is known that they are members of ELAD.

In the Shaykh Jarrah Palestinian neighborhood, the SHIMON HA'TZADIK ASSOCIATION has established a strong presence in what it has renamed the Shimon Ha'Tzadik neighborhood and has taken over seven buildings from Palestinians that provide homes for around forty people, as well as a yeshiva where another fifty young people study. Across the road are more than twenty buildings to which the association claims ownership, alleging that the land was purchased by the SEPHARDIC Jewish community at the end of the nineteenth century. The community granted power of attorney to the Shimon Ha'Tzadik Association to file a legal claim for the property under the law of right of return. It should be noted that the families currently living in these houses are REFUGEES from West Jerusalem, and were relocated to this area after the 1948 War by JORDAN and UNRWA; they have no recourse to reclaim their West Jerusalem property under Israeli law. At present the court has ruled in favor of the Shimon Ha'Tzadik association in four cases, and the families living in these houses have been evicted; rulings on the remaining houses are pending. The association claims ownership on an additional seventeen dunums (four acres) in the area surrounding Shaykh Jarrah, purchased by an American company named Nahlat Shimon International, and plans to build a complex of 160 housing units.

In July 2009 the municipality approved plans to build thirty-one residential units in the Shepherd Hotel located in Shaykh Jarrah on the road to Mount Scopus. IRVING MOSKOWITZ, a US citizen who is one of the biggest donors to the settler movement, is the developer, and acquisition connections lead to Ateret Cohanim. The plans involve the construction of ninety-plus housing units. Near that location, Moskowitz has also acquired a GREEN AREA, called Kerem el Mufti, comprising sixteen dunums (four acres). No request for a building PERMIT for this area has yet been submitted, possibly out of concern that an application to amend the existing law that preserves green areas would set off an outcry among green organizations. Significantly, this development is one of the links in the chain that connects the Shimon Ha'Tzadik neighborhood to the government complex in Shaykh Jarrah.

The Beit Orot yeshiva is an ideological settlement strategically situated at the intersection between Mount Scopus and the Mount of Olives. Founded by Rabbi Benny Elon in the early 1990s, the yeshiva houses eighty students. When Elon was minister of tourism, he transformed the area near the yeshiva into a national park, known as Ein Tzurim, and in 2006 the municipality approved a plan that includes public buildings and housing units on an overall area of ten dunums (2.5 acres). The plan was submitted by Irving Moskowitz. In 2007, settlers acquired two four-story buildings not far from Beit Orot in the Palestinian neighborhood of A TUR. The site was announced as a new settlement called Beit HaHoshen and, together with Beit Orot, ensures Israeli control on either side of A Tur.

In 1998, Ma'aleh HaZeitim, an Israeli settlement consisting of 132 apartments, was established in the Palestinian neighborhood of RAS AL-AMUD. An adjacent building, which housed the Judea and Samaria Police Headquarters, a special police force responsible for enforcing Israeli law on settlers, was purchased by Moskowitz and is currently being converted to include an additional 104 units and will be called Ma'alot David. The police station has been moved further into Palestinian areas in the West Bank, into a new facility that was constructed in a politically sensitive area called E1 situated near the settlement of Ma'ale Adumim that threatens to bisect the West Bank.

On the outskirts of ABU DIS, Moskowitz is financing the Kidmat Zion complex, consisting of 340 housing units on a thirty-dunum (seven-acre) plot. Although the plans were approved in 2002 and passed all the statutory committees, construction is on hold due to US pressure stemming from their concern over Kidmat Zion's proximity to the Palestinian parliament building in Abu Dis. Given the collapse of the peace process, however, it is possible that the settlement plans will ultimately be implemented. The settlers have seized possession of two buildings in Abu Dis—one they purchased and another they built—which are intended to stress their presence and safeguard the land from the Palestinians.

There are also several isolated settler buildings throughout East Jerusalem, including in Abu Tor, MUSRARA, and Jabel Mukaber, where a few families live and operate offices. There are approximately ten such housing units. Other settler properties throughout the eastern half of the city—for example, in the Shuafat–Beit Hanina area—are apparently intended for use as bargaining chips for land that interests the settlers, such as in Silwan and the Old City. The settlers' assumption is that Palestinians living in highly congested areas where building permits are not granted will gladly exchange their homes for more spacious ones in areas where building permits can be more easily obtained.

In addition, several yeshivot (ultra-Orthodox schools) serve the purpose of staking out a Judaic religious presence in every Palestinian neighborhood in the Old City. The most notable are the yeshivot of Aderet Eliyahu, Ateret Cohanim, Ateret Yerushalayim, Hazon Yehezkel, Shuvu Banim, and Torat Haim.

Private Developers. The Nof Zion complex, a settlement located in the Palestinian neighborhood of Jabel Mukaber, is part of a growing trend of settlements built by real-estate developers unconnected with ideological settlers. The development extends over 115 dunums (28 acres) and will eventually contain 350 housing units, a 150-room hotel, and service buildings. Plans have been submitted for a similar project on a 12-dunum (3-acre) plot in Shufat, which would include five buildings of four or five stories each and a commercial center.

A third settlement of this kind was approved in October 2009. Private Jewish real-estate developers will build 398 residential units over an area of 624 dunums (156 acres) near Mar Elias Monastery just north of BETHLEHEM. The plan was first submitted in 2001, but was then suspended until it was resubmitted in early 2009, with one telling difference—the original name, Bethlehem Gates, was changed to Homat Shmuel, in order to give the impression that it is a suburb of the nearby settlement of HAR HOMA, which was built in memory of Shmuel Meir. The change obfuscates the fact that it is a new settlement meant to link Har Homa and Gilo, in clear violation of BENJAMIN NETANYAHU's promise to Obama not to change the status quo in Jerusalem.

Government Sources. At the government's initiative, generally that of the Housing Ministry, several complexes are planned for construction in East Jerusalem. In the Givat HaMatos area, a new neighborhood comprising 1,500 homes will soon be constructed. Although the site has been occupied for over a decade by new immigrants and disadvantaged families, it is presented as a new project. Part of the area of Givat HaMatos is land belonging to the Palestinian neighborhood of Beit Safafa.

A vast development project that is partly within the Jerusalem municipality and partly within the West Bank is planned for construction near the Palestinian village of Wallajeh. With 3,500 homes, Givat Yael will be the largest settlement in the Jerusalem area and is intended to be the link connecting Jerusalem with the Gush Etzion settlement in the West Bank. Government officials have offered plans for 2,000 dunums (about 500 acres) to the Ministry of Interior, while another 1,000 dunums (about 250 acres) are in reserve.

The Housing Ministry is also planning to expand the settlement of Har Homa in two directions: the Har Homa C complex will extend toward Gilo, while Har Homa D will be built on land close to Khirbet Mizmoriya-Nuaman. Together with the Housing Ministry, the Jerusalem municipality is drawing up a framework plan to augment the Jewish presence in the city's southeastern part by creating a wall that would prevent continuity among Palestinian Beit Sahur, Sur Bakher, and the neighborhoods to the south of the city.

In the el-Bustan area in the village of Silwan, the Jewish municipality is planning to build an "archaeological park" where eighty-eight Palestinian buildings now stand, although international pressure has caused the government to temporarily suspend the project. In the Tel-el-Ful area, the ISRAEL LANDS ADMINISTRATION claims ownership of 200 dunums (50 acres) of land and is pressuring for the evacuation and destruction of the existing buildings to make way for industrial and commercial development.

The planned settlement in Burj Il-Laqlaq near Herod's Gate in the Old City cuts through both the ideological and governmental categories. Although a government initiative, it is designed for the settlers of Ateret Cohanim. Plans show that thirty-three buildings will be erected together with a synagogue that will soar seven meters over the Old City wall, presumably attempting to compete with the DOME OF THE ROCK.

In February 2009, a plan was submitted to the Ministry of Interior for the demolition of the wholesale market located just outside Herod's Gate. This site is to be rebuilt as a tourist complex including 200 rooms and halls, which will undoubtedly fall in the hands of Jewish contractors from Israel or abroad. The site represents one very important link to complete the ring of control around the Old City.

"Green" Settlements

Another method for increasing the Israeli presence in East Jerusalem in sites where residential construction is not an option is transforming extensive swaths of land into "green" and "tourism" areas with an overwhelming Jewish cultural ambience. Transforming open space into parks is specifically aimed at preventing a Palestinian presence or, as the state calls it, the Arab takeover of the land. Typically, in the ensuing stage, Israeli institutions and housing for Israeli residents are built there. But even if no institutions or homes are constructed, public parks are enough to reinforce the Israeli hold over the site. The signposts, guards, and paths in the parks create continuity between Israeli sites, and the architectural style contributes to an extensive network of Israeli sites with political significance and weight. An example of this from the 1970s is Canada Park, a beautiful nature park that is a major tourist attraction for visitors to Israel. It was constructed on the former site of three Palestinian villages—Yalu, 'Imwas, and Beit Nuba in the Latrun area of the West Bank that Israel demolished after the 1967 War—though picnickers and hikers would never know, as the erasure of the Palestinian presence is complete. The JEWISH NATIONAL FUND, with the assistance of the Jewish community in Canada, provided funding for the park. The former inhabitants of the villages, whose population, including their descendants, reaches 30,000 to date, are now REFUGEES and are prohibited from visiting their former homes as well as from visiting and preserving three Muslim cemeteries that remain intact but in poor condition after the destruction.

The project to create Israeli parks in the Jerusalem area has been managed by the public parks authority in the Jerusalem District, headed by Evyatar Cohen, who lives in the settlement of Ofra and is a former employee of ELAD. Thus the government's goals are the same as the settlers'. For example, the parks authority declared the area of land known as Tzurim Park in the A-Swanna neighborhood a national park, which has been fenced off by the municipality to prevent Palestinian owners of the land from building there. The state accomplishes two goals simultaneously in designating this land as Tzurim Park: it prevents Palestinians from building on the land, and it gains control of the land without expropriating it and without compensating its owners.

Another project that uses natural and scenic values to bolster the Israeli presence in the Old City is being implemented by the East Jerusalem Development Company—another of the municipality's subsidiaries. Costing 75 million shekels ($20 million), this project entails designing a national park composed of fifteen separate areas, located from A Tur via the King's Valley (Silwan), the Sultan's Pool, the Lions Gate, Mount Zion, and up to the foothills of the Mount of Olives, all connected by a network of paths. A brochure outlining the project demonstrates the merging of tourism with political considerations: "due to the deteriorating situation of the tourism infrastructure, resulting from wide-scale illegal construction and squatters, rapid action is necessary to preserve the area's status as a tourist attraction," although much of this deterioration is due to a lack of municipal budgeting for Palestinian areas. The government has defined the project as a "national mission," which, as stated before, means more than planting trees and placing park benches—something more political and ambitious. When interviewed by a local newspaper, the development company's spokesperson used the phrase "the battle for Jerusalem," which has the short-term goal of preventing Palestinian construction and the long-term objective of emptying the city of its Palestinians. These projects should therefore be considered as constituting further tools for the takeover of the city, and as an integral part of the overall settler plan.

Methods for Acquiring Property

Settlers acquire Palestinian properties in East Jerusalem by using three methods: legally purchasing the property, taking over absentee property, and arranging business deals with Palestinians. In the first case, Palestinians are offered exorbitant sums of money for their property, making it very difficult for them to resist the temptation to sell. A brochure published by Ateret Cohanim targeting potential donors offers sums between one and two million dollars for relatively small properties.

The second way is through the CUSTODIAN OF ABSENTEE PROPERTY, a body subordinate to the Justice Ministry. The ties between the custodian and the settlers were revealed in 1992 when YITZHAK RABIN's government set up a state commission headed by Haim Klugman, then director-general of the Justice Ministry. According to the KLUGMAN REPORT, in the 1980s the custodian regularly and clandestinely transferred to the settlers properties belonging to Palestinians who were allegedly absentee owners. First the custodian declared a property "an absentee-owned building," on the basis of information and documents given him by the settlers. Without thoroughly examining the veracity of the documents, he then transferred the property, in a circuitous process, to the settlers. Although these dealings were ended for a time, the practice has not completely stopped.

In the last case, settlers exploit vulnerable persons who are more easily convinced to sell their properties. First, a member of a Palestinian family who is involved in criminal activity is willing to sell everything he can for financial gain. People like these are easy prey and can be tempted without special efforts. Second, in properties where a HOUSE DEMOLITION order is shortly to be carried out, usually due to lack of a building permit, the Palestinian owners face the alternative of selling their home to settlers or losing everything. In such cases, municipal inspectors pass on information to the settler associations concerning homes about to be destroyed and dispatch an Arab broker who closes the deal on the settlers' behalf. Third, families who have fallen into debt and must sell their property to remain solvent are also easy prey for the settlers. This has been a common phenomenon over the past few years, particularly since the Second INTIFADA, when the Palestinian economy collapsed and many workers in the construction, hotel, hospitality, and other sectors lost their jobs. Trade and tourism also slumped because of the security situation, severely harming the livelihood of many families in East Jerusalem.

When seizing buildings, the settlers typically use a Palestinian COLLABORATOR from a village, who usually is a new resident in the neighborhood, not from the neighborhood, and in economic straits that make him unable to buy or even rent a place of comparable size. By operating through a collaborator, the settlers avoid arousing a seller's suspicion that his house is being purchased by Israelis. The new resident continues living in the building until the settlers decide the time is ripe to seize the building themselves. Until then, the collaborator lives for free.

Another source of real-estate transactions has involved the GREEK ORTHODOX CHURCH. Although this highly sensitive issue has not been thoroughly clarified, the Greek Orthodox patriarch has himself sold or enabled others to sell church property to both the Israeli government and settler associations. In the Old City such a transaction occurred in connection with St. John's Hostel, the Imperial and Petra hotels, and a string of shops close to the Jaffa Gate. In at least one case, the transaction was executed by Richard's Marketing Corporation, a straw company headquartered in the Virgin Islands that is represented in Israel by attorney Yossef Richter. Church sources also sold a large building in the A Tur neighborhood to settlers and a substantial plot of land near the Mar Elias monastery. In his November 2005 petition for recognition from the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT, Orthodox patriarch Theophilos III declared that he accepted the state of Israel's condition that it recognizes his appointment based on his authorizing land transactions. Later, the patriarch maintained that government pressure forced him to make the statement.

The settlers also are working for the "reclamation" of land they claim is STATE LAND, as well as of land privately owned by Jews. Arieh King, one of the most prominent individuals in settler circles and chairman of the Jerusalem branch of the MOLEDET PARTY, maintains that the state owns 3,000 dunums (740 acres) in East Jerusalem and that a further 702 dunums (173 acres) are privately owned by Jews, although these figures cannot be verified. For the most part, State Land is owned by the Jewish National Fund and the majority of the land is in the north of the city—in Atarot, Qalandiya, Neveh Ya'akov, and K'far Aquab—while the land privately owned by King and Moskowitz is in Anata, Beit Hanina, Shuafat, and Abu Dis. King maintains that much of that land is in separate blocs registered in the Land Registry; for example, a 160-dunums (39-acre) bloc is in the Beit Hanina area, which was bequeathed to the Hebrew University by a man named Nahum Honig. But ownership of only 96 dunums (23 acres) of that land has been identified. King is energetically working for the destruction of Palestinian houses on land he maintains is state owned and for what he terms "fulfilling Jewish sovereignty in those areas." (See the SILWAN entry for a detailed discussion of the work of a collaborator.)

Settler Ideology

The ideology that motivates the settlers in East Jerusalem is a combination of messianic and nationalistic ideas and thus differs little from that of settlers elsewhere in the West Bank—especially those in HEBRON, KIRYAT ARBA, and the GUSH EMUNIM. Their primary goal is to redeem the land in East Jerusalem and hand it over to the Jewish people. An Ateret Cohanim advertisement defines its goal as engaging in "buying, renovating and introducing new Jewish tenants into houses and properties in and around the Old City, plot by plot, home by home, step by step, a little at a time." Fueled by a radical interpretation of religious commandments and the sense of a divine plan guiding their work, they consider their activity in East Jerusalem a mission that fulfills not only the nation's supreme goals but also the divine will. It is a belief that imbues their life with significance and fills them with pride. Those sentiments were borne out by a settler from the City of David complex who reported, "Living here is a huge privilege! It means living in a place with immense value, not only archaeological and historically, but a place with inner spiritual value, it really is the Holy Land. Living here means being plugged into eternal values." In the settlers' world of metaphors, they are actively planning to establish a Kingdom of Israel in which Jewish religious law will supersede secular law and democratic values. As a result, they are ready to sacrifice a safe and comfortable life for the sake of the overarching goal. That integration of nationalistic and messianic ideas makes for a highly inflammable situation in Jerusalem.

Beyond religious motivations, the underlying political intentions are clearly visible. The settlers want to, as noted, create "facts on the ground" that will render impossible any future division of Jerusalem. The website of Ateret Cohanim states this openly: "Determination and collaboration with the authorities have proven the old method of ZIONISM—it is Jewish settlement that determines the borders of the state!" Aryeh King, one of the instigators of the Ras al-Amud complex, has remarked that its construction was aimed at protecting Jerusalem by creating a buffer on its eastern side. After seizing sixteen houses in Silwan, a member of ELAD said that the association's plan is "to unite Jerusalem with deeds, not words."

In tandem with the physical Jewish presence itself, the settler associations have educational and informative activities, including tours, lectures, and seminars, that are part of the battle for the hearts and minds of the broader Jewish population. Also intended to promote beliefs in Israel's history, the settler associations are involved in ever multiplying ARCHAEOLOGY digs in and around the Old City. Of these, potentially the most inflammatory is the dig being carried out in the Muslim quarter near the Muslim shrine of al-Haram ash-Sharif. Intended to reveal concrete evidence of Jewish history even where there is none, the excavations damage traces of other historic periods that do not match the ideological aspirations of the untrained settler “archaeologists” directing the work. Even more dangerous are the constant attempts to reach the remains of the Temple. Since 2003, the Western Wall Heritage Foundation, a governmental agency working in close collaboration with Ateret Cohanim, has been carrying out an extensive archaeological project on El-Wad Street, only meters from the AL-AQSA MOSQUE and the Dome of the Rock, a project liable to plunge Jerusalem into violence if these two sacred Islamic sites are damaged. The settlers do not conceal their opinion about what should happen on the Temple Mount/al-Haram ash-Sharif, and they are generating personal ties with messianic organizations intent on destroying the al-Haram ash-Sharif and building the THIRD TEMPLE in its place. For the settlers, a war between the Muslim world and the state of Israel, following damage to the Haram, is considered a phase in the biblical War of Gog and Magog, which will hasten redemption. They dream of bringing redemption closer by whatever means, so that the coming of the Messiah, Son of David, will expedite the establishment of the Kingdom of Israel.

Funding Sources

Both state and private sources fund the settlers’ operations in East Jerusalem. The governmental sources are clouded in secrecy and pass through various government ministries under confusing names. Until 1992 the state transferred absentee property and vast sums to the settlers through different ministries, in particular the Housing Ministry. The Klugman Report (1993) estimated that the government transferred around $8.2 million to the settlers to buy buildings and an additional $12.8 million for renovating old buildings. The report also disclosed that the Jewish Quarter Renovation Company transferred $1.7 million to the settlers in the form of monies originating in the Housing Ministry. A $7 million transfer was also made to the Imanuta Company to facilitate the acquisition of St. John’s Hostel in the Christian quarter. However, following Klugman’s report, the pipeline through the Housing Ministry was significantly narrowed. Currently the state provides support to the settlers in two ways: it finances the security companies at an annual cost of 40 million NIS ($10 million) and also employs many of the settlers as security guards and in managing the City of David archaeological site.

Regarding the purchase of the Petra and Imperial hotels, it is noteworthy that the state refuses to disclose to the church’s legal counsel the transaction’s financing sources, which raises concerns about whether state funds are still making their way to the settlers. It is equally hard to distinguish the private donors because they demand anonymity. Best known is Moskowitz, who has become the financial patron of the East Jerusalem settlers and around whom a group of Jewish millionaires from the UNITED STATES have formed and who generously support the settlers. Another well-known figure is US billionaire Ira Rennert of Brooklyn, who is a major supporter of the Ateret Cohanim association and, among other things, funded the opening of the WESTERN WALL Tunnel. Money also flows from US Christian fundamentalist groups, who are anxious for the fulfillment of biblical prophecy (i.e., the return of the Jews, the construction of the Third Temple, and the second coming of the Messiah). On several occasions, state organizations have actively helped to raise funds for the settlers’ associations. While serving as mayor of Jerusalem, EHUD OLMERT addressed an event organized by Moskowitz that was aimed at raising funds for building projects in Ras al-Amud.

The Case of Silwan

Silwan is one of the Arab neighborhoods around the Old City where it is difficult for a Palestinian to receive a building permit. Because of its archaeological sensitivity, building is not allowed—neither on plots of land nor as additions to existing buildings. Palestinian residents who enlarge their homes by constructing annexes or additional stories are fined and the additions demolished. However, over the past few years, several Jewish enclaves have sprung up without receiving building permits, and the municipality has not halted their construction or removed the buildings. Three recent cases throw light on the contrast between the treatment of Palestinians and Jews who live in the same neighborhood.

In early 2002, construction began on a seven-story building in the middle of Silwan, but it was only “discovered” in June the following year when the building was occupied by the Ateret Cohanim association. Though registered in a local resident’s name, the plot had been sold to Ateret Cohanim settlers, who paid for the construction work. When the lack of a permit was discovered, the municipi-pality took no action but instead left matters as they were, citing the grounds that it was not clear “who the owners of the building were.” From 2003 until March 2004, city hall investigated the matter but refrained from filing charges against the tenants. In the same period, the municipality issued dozens of demolition orders against Palestinian homes that lacked permits and brought them to trial. Similarly, the municipality refrained from charging the Ateret Cohanim building’s tenants the arnona (municipal tax). The manager of the Billing Division wrote in March 2005 that no records were kept concerning the building, which contravenes internal procedures that require city inspectors to report any new building to the billing division, so it can bill for arnona—even if it is illegal.

In the second case, criticism regarding the discrepancy between the treatment of Israelis and Palestinians emanated from the legal establishment. Presiding over the district court, Justice H. Lahovtzky revoked an administrative demolition order against a building owned by Palestinians because the municipality discriminated in failing to file indictments against Israeli neighbors for the same offense. As soon as the lack of a permit was discovered, the Arab-owned building received an administrative demolition order. In contrast, a building intended to serve as an ELAD association yeshiva, with three stories, only received a cessation-of-work order. In dismissing the charges filed by the municipality, the judge commented that, while the two offenses were identical, the municipality applied the most stringent procedures permitted by the law against the Palestinian-owned building while it “chose to act in a more lenient judicial way” against the Israeli-owned building. The judge concluded: “Whatever the ownership of the two buildings and whatever the designated purposes of both buildings the difference in the procedures applied by the respondent [the municipality] towards the two is discordant and insufferable to such an extent that the court can no longer disregard it.”

The third case involves an open space on the way to the Siloam Pool, where, in 1998, a mini-settlement started to grow composed of mobile homes and guard posts. Though temporary in nature, that sort of construction is prohibited under the Planning and Building Law, and Palestinians who place mobile homes on sites immediately receive evacuation or demolition orders. Nevertheless, for years the municipality refrained from issuing any kind of order against the settlers. In February 2002 a file was opened, and in October 2004 the district court handed down its ruling. Then, at the last moment, the settlers’ attorney produced a document stating that the complex was not, in fact, owned by ELAD but by an Arab named Yussuf Gamal, who holds a British passport, and the indictment should be in his name, not the settlers’. The court agreed and indicted Gamal. The ploy of settlers registering a property in the name of Arabs is an old story at the municipality. Moreover, the municipality’s behavior raises questions about the ties between the settlers and the municipal authority.

See also ABSENTEE PROPERTY LAW; ABU DIS; A TUR; DEMOGRAPHY; HOLY BASIN; JERUSALEM; KLUGMAN REPORT; MUSRARA; OLD CITY; RAS AL-AMUD; SASSON REPORT; SETTLEMENTS; SHAYKH JARRAH; SILWAN; THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT

Bibliography

- Abu Shamsyeh, Haleem. “Settling the Old City: The Policies of Labor and Likud.” Jerusalem Quarterly File. 6 (1999).
- Anderson, John Ward. “Israelis Act to Encircle East Jerusalem: Enclaves in Arab Areas, Illegal Building Projects Seen Intended to Consolidate Control.” Washington Post. 7 February 2005.
- Bannoura, Saed. “Right-Wing Israeli Settlers Will Move into Palestinian Town of Ras al-Amud.” IMEMC News. 28 April 2008.
- Berkowitz, Shmuel. Wars of Holy Places. Jerusalem: Jerusalem Institute of Israel Studies, 2000.
- Cheshin, Amir, Bill Hutman, and Avi Melamed. Separate and Unequal: The Inside Story of Israeli Rule in East Jerusalem. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1999.
- Company for the Rehabilitation and Development of the Old City. Areas for Planning and Development in the Jewish Quarter and Its Environs, 2001–2004. CRDOC (2003).
- Dagan, Hagai. “The Concept of Moledet (Birthplace) and the Jewish Ethos.” Alpayim. 18 (1999).
- Dumper, Michael. The Politics of Sacred Space: The Old City of Jerusalem in the Middle East Conflict. Boulder, CO: Lynne Rienner Publishers, 2003.
- Elmer, Jon. “New Settlement Puts Pressure on Jerusalem Palestinians: Nof Zion and Palestinian Jabel Mukaber.” The New Standard. 16 August 2005.
- European Union. Jerusalem and Ramallah Heads of Mission. EU Report on East Jerusalem. 2005. www.nodo50.org/CSCA/agenda05/palestina/jerusalemue\_eng.pdf.
- Friedman, Matti. “House by House.” Jerusalem Report Magazine. 1 November 2005.

- Hass, Amira. "East Jerusalemites Will Need Permits to Visit Ramallah." Ha'aretz. 25 January 2005.
- International Crisis Group. The Jerusalem Powder Keg. Middle East Report No. 44. 2 August 2005.
- Ir Amim. Israeli Attempt to Impose Absentee Property Law to Arab Property in East Jerusalem. Washington, DC: Foundation for Middle East Peace, 22 April 2005.
- Al-Ju'be, Nazmi. "The Ghettoization of Arab-Jerusalem." Jerusalem Quarterly File. 16 (2002).
- Klein, Menachem. "Israel's Jerusalem Policy, Sparta and Apartheid." Jerusalemites. 26 October 2003.
- . "Jerusalem without East Jerusalemites: The Palestinian as the 'Other' in Jerusalem." Journal of Israeli History. 23:2 (2004).
- . "Old and New Walls in Jerusalem." Political Geography. 24:1 (2005).
- Kra, Baruch. "Dispute over Ateret Cohanim's Purchase of Arab Abu Tor House." Ha'aretz (Jerusalem). 12 October 2001.
- Lynfield, Ben. "Settlers Vie for East Jerusalem." Christian Science Monitor. 12 December 2003.
- Margalit, Meir. Discrimination in the New Master Plan of Jerusalem. Jerusalem Israeli Committee Against House Demolition, 4 November 2004.
- . "Settlements and Settlers in the Old City." Challenge (Tel Aviv). January–February 2006.
- Peace Now. "Targeting Jerusalem Old City's Muslim Quarter." Ir Amin, Jerusalem: Peace Now, 22 August 2005.
- POICA. Israel Continues to Cram Jewish Settlers into Jerusalem. Applied Research Institute–Jerusalem (27 October 2004).
- Pondemiski, Kuti. "The Holy Basin Plan." Jerusalem Newspaper. 11 February 2005.
- Rappoport, Meron. "City to Raze Homes of 1,000 Residents in East Jerusalem Neighborhood." Ha'aretz. 31 May 2005.
- . "Demolition of Silwan Homes Will Go Ahead." Ha'aretz. 2 June 2005.
- . "Government Decision Strips Palestinians of Their East Jerusalem Property." Ha'aretz. 20 January 2005.
- . "Our Man in Silwan." Ha'aretz Supplement. 1 April 2005.
- Rubinstein, Danny. "The Battle for the Capital." Ha'aretz. 15 April 2005.
- Schneor, Revital. "The City Where Davidaleh Walked." B'Sheva. 84 (11 March 2004).
- Schwartz, Michal. "How the Government and the Settlers Conspire to Take Over Houses and Land." Challenge: A Jerusalem Magazine on the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict. 50 (2 August 2005).
- Shapira, Yair. "The City of David in Our Hands." Mekor Rishon. 5 September 2003.
- Ushpiz, Ada. "They Came at Night and Walked In." Ha'aretz. 20 February 2004.

—Meir Margalit

Settler Violence

Settler violence against Palestinians in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES is a widespread and ongoing phenomenon that began during the early 1970s with the first settlers and has continued unabated. The scope and intensity of settler violence surged during the Palestinian uprisings of the First INTIFADA (1987–1993) and increased again dramatically during the AL-AQSA INTIFADA (2000–). Between 9 December 1987 and 18 March 2001, Israeli settlers killed 119 Palestinians, of whom 23 were minors. Between 30 December 2001 and 30 December 2008, settlers killed 45 Palestinians. In thousands of other incidents, settlers have wounded Palestinians, caused extensive property damage, and committed a variety of acts of vandalism. The essential objective of the violence and harassment is to intimidate the Palestinians to such an extent that they will leave voluntarily.

The Israeli government at all levels has afforded tacit support to the settlers who engage in this behavior. Various Israeli bodies, including the KARP COMMISSION, the SHAMGAR COMMISSION, and numerous detailed reports from B'TSELEM, the Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, have censured law enforcement policy and the judicial system in cases of violence against Palestinians. Each stated that Israel's law enforcement authorities—the military, the police, the state prosecutor, and the court system—have adopted an undeclared policy of absolution, compromise, and mitigation for Israeli citizens who harm Palestinians in the Occupied Territories, and that this attitude has emboldened the settlers to continue their attacks.

Violence Dating to Early Days

From the earliest days of the settlement project, the Israeli government authorized settlers to carry weapons, and the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) issued Uzi and M-16 assault rifles to early settlers. As the settlement enterprise became more firmly established and the numbers of settlers grew, the IDF expanded its institutionalized security role for the settlers. In June 1988, soon after the outbreak of the First Intifada and increased confrontation between settlers and Palestinians, Defense Minister YITZHAK RABIN authorized "civilians living in the territories who see Arabs holding petrol bombs . . . to shoot at them." He reportedly said that civilians can shoot in response to other unspecified "imminent dangers." Less than a week before the 1994 massacre of 29 Palestinians in AL-IBRAHIMI MOSQUE in HEBRON, Minister of Police Moshe Shahal announced the formation of civil guard units in all major SETTLEMENTS to provide security in the Occupied Territories. The first of the units was established in the settlement of MA'ALE ADUMIM, east of JERUSALEM, in December 1993. These "organic military units," composed of settler-residents, were granted authority to detain Palestinians but only within settlement confines. The IDF provided settlers with weapons, training, and equipment as part of a program aimed at increasing settler participation in military security operations.

A more recent development is armed patrols that act on their own initiative and are not part of any official framework and not subject to the IDF or the Israel Police Force, although sometimes given unofficial cover by them. The patrols focus on the areas around NABLUS, in the JORDAN RIFT VALLEY, and the settlements around Ramallah and Gush Etzion. In addition, settlers established independent guard posts on the Qalqiliya BYPASS ROAD between Kedumim and Alfe Menashe.

Amos Harel described this phenomenon in Ha'aretz: "Also acting within this Wild West are the settlers. Their regional defense army units are at least subject to military command. The armed patrols operating now in four sectors in the WEST BANK and in the Jordan Valley do not receive instructions from anyone. The IDF, like the government, does not dare prevent the patrols from operating." Settler violence takes many forms. By definition, the phenomenon is Jewish settlers, individually or in organized groups, carrying out attacks on Palestinian persons and Palestinian property. The most severe result, of course, is loss of life. In August 2005, for example, Asher Weisgan shot dead four Palestinian employees at the Shilo settlement—two he was driving home after work. Prosecutors said he had hoped to stop Israel's withdrawal from the GAZA STRIP by diverting resources to the West Bank to quell unrest. Weisgan was convicted of murder, but he is one of few settlers who have been so punished, and it remains to be seen if he will serve his full sentence.

In addition to murder, other settler actions against Palestinians include beating, hurling stones, chasing stone-throwers and firing at them, abusing merchants and owners of market stalls, destroying their goods and ruining produce, hurting Palestinian medical crews, and attacking journalists. Settler violence also involves killing livestock; poisoning wells; destroying crops; uprooting trees; torching automobiles, trucks, and homes; burning mosques; shooting solar panels and WATER storage tanks on the roofs of buildings; shattering windowpanes and windshields; preventing farmers from getting to their fields; and preventing Palestinian vehicles from using the roads. During the olive-picking season, when many Palestinians are at work in the orchards, settler violence increases. This violence takes the form of gunfire that prevents Palestinians from harvesting their crops, causes destruction of trees and theft of the olive crops, and sometimes results in casualties among the Palestinian olive pickers. In 2008 the IDF began refusing permission to Palestinian farmers to harvest in order to "protect them" from the settlers in nearby settlements. In retaliation for Palestinian attacks on settlers, settlers also engage in mass rioting. The riots involve large numbers of participants, are anticipated by the security forces, and are committed openly. Many of these riots occur in broad daylight, sometimes in front of television cameras. In most cases, the settlers attack by the tens or hundreds.

Some acts of the settlers have caught the attention of international organizations. For example, in April 2005, Amnesty International issued a special report calling "on the Israeli authorities to investigate recent incidents of poisoning of Palestinian fields and the increasingly frequent attacks by Israeli settlers on Palestinian villagers in the West Bank. . . . In recent weeks, toxic chemicals have repeatedly been spread on fields located near the villages of Tuwani, Umm Faggara and Kharruba in the southern Hebron region."

Israeli Response to Violent Offenses

Over the years, law enforcement in the Occupied Territories against settlers who have harmed Palestinians has been severely criticized. The 1982 report of the commission headed by Deputy Attorney General Yehudit Karp indicated serious defects in the manner in which Israeli authorities enforced the law against Israeli civilians suspected of committing offenses against Palestinians. That same year, the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT also sharply criticized the failures of the police in investigating Palestinian complaints.

The Karp Commission's conclusions included the following:

- The police failed to honor its commitment to the High Court of Justice in showing vigilance regarding violence in sensitive locales and preventing unlawful actions.
- The number of cases that police closed on grounds of “offender unknown” was inordinately high, and in some cases the police did not make a significant effort to locate the offenders.
- The police were lenient with settlers who refused to cooperate under interrogation.
- Investigation results showed that the police were ambivalent in their investigations.
- The police rarely questioned eyewitnesses, making the investigations one-sided.

Studies conducted subsequent to the Karp Commission indicate that the police have not implemented the commission’s recommendations. For example, in 1985 the Palestinian Human Rights Information Center released research on 23 cases in which Palestinians were killed and settlers were the suspected perpetrators. In all 23 cases, only one settler was tried. Similarly, Knesset member Dedi Zucker studied 40 police investigations of offenses committed by Israeli civilians against Palestinians and found that suspects were tried in only 5 cases. B’Tselem’s 1994 report indicated a similar situation. From a sample of 158 cases in which Israeli civilians had injured Palestinians or damaged their property, only thirty-two indictments were filed.

The 1994 Shamgar Commission, established following the massacre of twenty-nine Palestinian worshippers by settler BARUCH GOLDSTEIN, concluded that law enforcement against settlers in the Occupied Territories was a failure and that over the years no measures had been taken by the Israeli government to improve it. The commission said that law enforcement failed to investigate incidents in which settlers were involved and was inadequate in prosecuting the settlers to the extent of the law.

In 1988, for the first time, procedures were formulated to regulate the division of powers between the police and the military in matters relating to law enforcement against settlers. In practice, however, these procedures have virtually never been implemented. Ten years later, in 1998, Israel’s attorney general instituted a new procedure for “enforcing law and order on Israeli offenders in YESHA [an organization that represents settlers],” which was formulated together with the IDF, police, and the General Security Service. However, it too has not proven effective.

The settler practice of blocking roads illustrates this problem. The practice, which takes place throughout the West Bank for months at a time, involves prohibiting Palestinians from using West Bank roads. The IDF and the police almost never take action against individuals who block roads, although these illegal and violent actions are committed openly and during daylight hours. For example, in response to information that a road blockade had been set up by armed settlers south of Nablus, the IDF spokesperson stated, “The IDF has no orders for settlers to set up ROADBLOCKS.” Yet, no real effort was made to combat the phenomenon. An article in Ha’aretz, an Israeli daily newspaper, described a roadblock in Gush Etzion by settlers from Neve Daniel: “Armed settlers prevented Palestinian vehicles from traveling toward Jerusalem, and threw stones at cars whose drivers did not obey. IDF officers and police stood aside and did not intervene. One of the offenders did not hesitate being interviewed for the newspaper article, with his name being mentioned, indicating his lack of fear that action would be initiated against him. The blocking of roads is organized and on more than one occasion, has been announced in the MEDIA.” Another example involves the handling of the case in which Fahed Bachar ‘Odeh was killed by a settler on 7 October 2000. In a letter sent to B’Tselem on 30 January 2001, the police contended that they had no record of this incident even though the press and IDF had reported the event. An announcement by the IDF spokesperson, given a day after the incident, stated that during “Palestinian and Israeli disturbances” in the West Bank, “a Palestinian was shot and killed by a resident from the area of Bidia Village.” No investigation into the murder was ever initiated.

Of the 119 Palestinians killed by settlers between 1987 and 2001, 29 were killed in the al-Ibrahimi Mosque by Goldstein, who was himself killed during the incident. Of the remainder, B’Tselem’s research found:

- In six homicides the police did not open an investigation.
- In 39 cases, the investigation file was closed (fifteen files were closed by the police and twenty-two by the State Attorney’s Office, while two other files were closed by the military). The vast majority were closed on grounds of “offender unknown” or “lack of evidence.” Five files were closed because of “lack of culpability.”

- Of the 22 cases in which the defendants were convicted, six were convicted of murder. The others were convicted of lighter offenses: seven for manslaughter; seven for causing death by negligence (five of whom had initially been charged with manslaughter); and two for firing in a residential area, possession of a weapon without a permit, and endangering persons on a roadway.
- Four of the six settlers convicted of murder had their sentence reduced, by pardon or shortening of the sentence by Israel's president or when the Parole Board reduced the sentence by one-third.
- The sentences of seven settlers convicted of manslaughter ranged from eighteen months to four years of imprisonment. In another case, the defendant was sentenced to seven and a half years in prison and another to six months of public service.
- Five of the seven settlers convicted of causing death by negligence were sentenced to public service. The two others were sentenced to five months and to eighteen months of imprisonment, respectively.
- In the other cases, 9 are still unresolved, and in 5 cases the defendants were acquitted.

In 2005 a new Israeli human rights group, YESH DIN, emerged with the specific objective of enforcing the laws against settlers who engage in violence against Palestinians. In June 2006, twenty-four years after the Karp Commission report, Yesh Din released a 148-page report based on 92 cases, entitled A Semblance of Law. Among its findings are the following:

- Ninety percent of the police investigations dealing with settler violence end in failure. Most of the files are closed on grounds of "lack of evidence" or "perpetrator unknown," and a significant percentage of complaints filed by Palestinians are "lost" and thus not investigated.
- The IDF repeatedly shirks its law enforcement responsibilities in the territories. Often IDF soldiers do not prevent Israeli civilians from committing criminal acts and almost never arrest them.
- Palestinians attempting to file complaints face obstacles from the police, who are often not available to take complaints or refuse to take them, and in many instances the police require Palestinians to present documents before filing a complaint.

Yesh Din explains the high rate of failure in investigations:

- Testimony often was not taken from key witnesses, including suspects and Palestinian and Israeli eyewitnesses.
- In the files examined in which the suspects claimed alibis, none of the claims were verified before the file was closed.
- Police investigators rarely went to the scenes of the offense, and, if they did, they failed to document the scene.
- Live identification lineups with Israeli civilian suspects were rarely conducted.
- About one-third of the investigation files were thin and indicated a hasty closure of the file.
- The decision to close files on grounds of "no criminal culpability" appeared questionable, and the cases appeared to be insufficiently investigated.

Another factor in the issue of settle violence is that Palestinians in the Occupied Territories are subject to military rule, whereas Israeli settlers are subject to the Israeli judicial system and are afforded liberties and legal guarantees that Palestinians are denied. The government has created an extraterritorial personal status for Israeli civilians living in the Occupied Territories, regulations that the Knesset regularly extends under the Israeli local government system of regional councils.

B'Tselem and the Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI) issued numerous reports from 2007 to 2009 on the continuing settler violence. Several examples from their reports:

- March 2007. "In a new settlement in the heart of the a-Ras Palestinian neighborhood in Hebron the Palestinian residents have suffered great harm and extensive infringement of their human rights . . . settlers attacked Palestinians . . . includ[ing] beatings, blocking of passage, destruction of property, throwing of stones and eggs, hurling of refuse, glass bottles, and bottles full of urine, urinating from the settlement structure onto the street, spitting, threats, and curses. . . . The soldiers and police who witnessed attacks failed to take sufficient action to stop the attacks and enforce the law. At times, they did nothing. . . . Palestinians who sought the aid of security forces standing at the site of the attack were told that their only duty was to protect the settlers. . . . Violence against Palestinians by soldiers and police. . . [in] the a-Ras neighborhood . . . has included beatings with rifles or hands, frightening Palestinians by firing blanks or by threatening live gunfire, destruction and theft of property, blocking of passage, and swearing and making racist comments.”

- 22 March 2007. “Police severely beat S’adi J’abri, 18, a resident of Hebron, and then handed him over to soldiers who, along with a settler, continued to beat him.”
- 24 July 2008. “Settlers assaulted Palestinians in the area of Yitzhar and damaged orchards and property. . . . Settlers assaulted shepherds and torched houses in Burin burning them to the ground, and a settler threw stones at a vehicle driving on Route 60 severely wounding a woman and her daughter.”
- 18 September 2008. “Settlers threw stones at Palestinian vehicles at the Shilo intersection, torched olive orchards . . . and some twenty masked settlers assaulted farmers, causing serious damage to their farms.”
- October and November 2008. In Hebron “settlers . . . repeatedly assaulted Palestinians living nearby and their property. . . . includ[ing] stone throwing, setting fires to fields and homes. . . . Security forces entered the village and attacked the Palestinians, using crowd control measures and gunfire. . . . As a result, Palestinians were injured and much damage was done to Palestinian property.”
- 4 December 2008. “Dozens of settlers enter[ed] a Palestinian neighborhood in Hebron and the security forces enabled them to assault Palestinians. . . . [They] fired at members of one family, injuring two of them.”
- 22 June 2009. “Settlers uprooted around 150 olive and grape leaf trees in Safa and in the village of Susya settlers set fire to one of the main tents with people inside at four in the morning.”
- 21 November 2009. “During the previous week settlers cut down 300 olive and fruit trees in Mureir and 90 olive trees in Burin in the Nablus district.”

See also HEBRON; OLIVE TREE UPROOTING

Bibliography

- Amnesty International. “Amnesty: Israeli Authorities Must Put an Immediate End to Settler Violence.” Press release. London: Amnesty International, 25 April 2005.
- Ashkar, Antigona. Means of Expulsion: Violence, Harassment and Lawlessness against Palestinians in the Southern Hebron Hills. Jerusalem: B’Tselem, July 2005.
- Awadallah, Said M. S. “Settlers Watch Hotline: Overall General Narrative Report on Activities.” Palestinian Human Rights Monitor. 7:2 (2004).
- BBC. “Settler Guilty of W Bank Murders.” 11 September 2006. http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/middle\_east/5336356.stm.
- Bomse, Audrey. “Separate and Unequal: Disparate Treatment in the Israeli Criminal Justice System of Palestinians and Israelis Who Kill.” Palestinian Human Rights Monitor. 6:2 (2002).
- B’Tselem. The Dual System of Law in the Occupied Territories. n.d. www.btselem.org/english/Settler\_Violence/Dual\_Legal\_System.asp.
- . Handling of Complaints of Settler Violence. n.d. www.btselem.org/english/Settler\_Violence/Handling\_of\_Complaints.asp.
- . Handling of Complaints of Settler Violence by the IDF. n.d. www.btselem.org/english/Settler\_Violence/IDF.asp.
- . Handling of Complaints of Settler Violence by the Israel Police Force. n.d. www.btselem.org/english/Settler\_Violence/Police.asp.
- . Hebron: The Israeli Settlement in the a-Ras Neighborhood. B’Tselem and The Association for Civil Rights in Israel. 19 October 2007. http://www.btselem.org/english/Hebron/20071015\_New\_Settlement.asp.
- . The Nature of the Violence. n.d. www.btselem.org/english/Settler\_Violence/Nature\_of\_the\_Violence.asp.
- . Security Forces Must Prepare for Settler Revenge. 6 March 2009. http://www.btselem.org/english/settler\_violence/20090604\_settler\_violence\_following\_evacuation\_of\_outposts.asp.
- . Settler Violence. 2005. http://btselem.org/English/Settler\_Violence.
- . Settler Violence: Background. n.d. www.btselem.org/English/Settler\_ViolenceIndex.asp.
- . Testimonies. April 2006. <http://btselem.org/English/Testimonies/Index.asp>.
- Dudai, Roni. Free Rein: Vigilante Settlers and Israel’s Non-enforcement of the Law. B’Tselem. 2001. www.btselem.org/English/Publications/Summaries/200110\_Free\_Rein.asp.
- . Tacit Consent: Israeli Policy on Law Enforcement toward Settlers in the Occupied Territories. B’Tselem. 2001. www.btselem.org/English/Publications/Summaries/200103\_Tacit\_Consent.asp.
- Fafo. Judicial Control and the Israeli Civil Administration. Report 151. Al Mashriq—the Levant (2001). http://almashriq.hiof.no/general/300/320/327/fafo/reports/FAFO151/1\_4.html.

- Foundation for Middle East Peace. "Israel's Policy of Arming Israeli Settlers Endangers Palestinians in the Territories." FMEP. 4:3 (1994).
- Al-Haq. "Settler Violence in Hebron." eDocs: Al-Haq. June 2005. http://asp.alhaq.org/zalhaq/site/eDocs/settler\_violence.htm.
- Humphries, Isabelle. "The Tip of the Iceberg: Israeli Settler Violence . . . a Colonialist Strategy?" Palestine Monitor: The Voice of Civil Society. 3 June 2003. www.islamonline.net/english/views/2003/06/article02.shtml.
- Lein, Yehezkel. Foreseen but Not Prevented: The Performance of Law Enforcement Authorities in Responding to Settler Attacks on Olive Harvesters. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2002.
- Levy, Gideon. "Mourning Uprooted Olive Trees in West Bank Villages." Ha'aretz. 21 November 2009.
- . "The Price of Restraint." Palestine Monitor. 24 July 2001. www.palestinemonitor.org/settlements/price\_of\_restraint.htm.
- Shahak, Israel. "The Religious Settlers: Instrument of Israeli Domination." Middle East Policy Journal. 3:1 (1994).
- Yavne, Lior. A Semblance of Law: Law Enforcement upon Israeli Civilians in the West Bank. Jerusalem: Yesh Din, 2006.

—Julia Pitner

Al-Shafi, Haydar 'Abd (1919–2007)

Haydar 'Abd al-Shafi was one of the most influential and respected leaders in the Palestinian national movement. He was a prominent physician and politician who was head of the Palestinian delegation to the MADRID CONFERENCE. A longtime affiliate of the PALESTINIAN COMMUNIST PARTY, al-Shafi consistently eschewed ARMED STRUGGLE, recognized Israel's existence, and advocated a TWO-STATE SOLUTION. He was born in the GAZA STRIP and studied medicine at the American University in Beirut, where he joined the MOVEMENT OF ARAB NATIONALISTS. He graduated in 1943, returned to Palestine, and worked briefly at a British government hospital in JAFFA. From 1943 to 1945 he served as a medical officer in the Trans-Jordanian Arab Legion. In 1948 al-Shafi ran a medical clearing station in Gaza, working closely with the Quakers to provide relief for the more than 700,000 REFUGEES from the 1948 WAR. When the UN RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY FOR PALESTINE REFUGEES IN THE NEAR EAST (UNRWA) was established in 1951, he left Gaza for the UNITED STATES, where he studied surgery for two years; he returned to Gaza (then under Egyptian administration) in 1954 and established a private practice. When Israel temporarily occupied Gaza in 1956, it installed a municipal council and appointed al-Shafi as one of its ten members. However, al-Shafi compared Israeli rule unfavorably to Egyptian control and refused to serve on the council.

Al-Shafi was a delegate to the first all-Palestine conference (PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL), which convened in Jerusalem in 1964 and established the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO), and served as a member of the first PLO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE (1964–1965). Throughout this time, al-Shafi developed a constituency and political base through the Gaza clinic system, and by 1966 he was the leading PLO figure in the Gaza Strip. During the 1967 WAR, al-Shafi worked as a volunteer at Gaza City's Shifa hospital; at war's end he was temporarily detained by Israel for allegedly supporting the military activities of GEORGE HABASH'S POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE (PFLP). Upon his release from prison in 1968, he refused to cooperate with Israel's plans to develop a common INFRASTRUCTURE for Gaza and Israel. As punishment, Israeli defense minister MOSHE DAYAN deported him for three months. In September 1970 al-Shafi was again subjected to DEPORTATION for two months, this time to LEBANON, together with five other prominent members of the Gazan leadership, in retaliation for a PFLP hijacking with which he had no connection.

From 1972 until his death, al-Shafi was a founder and director of the Palestine Red Crescent Society in the Gaza Strip, providing free medical care and a forum for cultural activities to the refugee population. Because he was critical of the 1979 CAMP DAVID ACCORDS between Israel and EGYPT, Israel prohibited him from leaving Gaza and threatened the Red Crescent with closure. In May 1988, during the First INTIFADA, al-Shafi was one of three Palestinians (together with SAEB EREKAT and HANAN ASHRAWI) to participate in ABC-TV Nightline's "Town Hall" meeting from JERUSALEM. In 1991 he led the Palestinian element of the Palestinian-Jordanian delegation to the Madrid peace conference and subsequently headed the Palestinian negotiating team for twenty-two months in the bilateral Washington talks (1992–1993). In April 1993 he resigned from the negotiations over the issue of Jewish SETTLEMENTS but later resumed his position under pressure from his colleagues. In May 1993, however, he urged the Palestinians to completely suspend their participation in the talks.

Eventually he made a final break with the Palestinian negotiating team over the OSLO ACCORDS between the PLO and Israel and was one of the first to predict that the OSLO PROCESS would collapse because it failed to tackle the settlement issue.

In 1996 al-Shafi was elected to the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY'S (PNA) Palestinian Legislative Council (PLC), but in October 1997 he resigned from the PLC because the legislature did not have any real power to change the Palestinians' situation. He became one of PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT'S strongest critics, calling for more democracy within the PNA, transparency, and a national unity leadership. Al-Shafi was lukewarm toward the US-backed ROAD MAP, believing that the Palestinians should focus on ending settlement activity and only then move step by step to a two-state solution on the basis of the 1967 borders. Al-Shafi was also commissioner-general of the PALESTINIAN INDEPENDENT COMMISSION FOR CITIZENS' RIGHTS, a founding member of the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL INITIATIVE launched in June 2002, and a member of the BIRZEIT UNIVERSITY Board of Trustees.

Bibliography

- Ashrawi, Hanan. This Side of Peace: A Personal Account. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1995.
- Lawrence of Cyberia. "Haydar 'Abd al-Shafi." Palestinian Biographies. Palestine/Israel Resources. 2002. <http://geocities.com/lawrenceofcyberia/palbios/index.html>.
- al-Shafi, Haydar 'Abd. "Haydar 'Abd al-Shafi: 'Looking Back, Looking Forward.'" Interview. Journal of Palestine Studies. 32:1 (2002).
- . "Haydar 'Abd al-Shafi: 'Moving beyond Oslo.'" Interview. Journal of Palestine Studies 25:1 (1995).
- . "Haydar 'Abd al-Shafi: The Oslo Agreement." Interview. Journal of Palestine Studies. 23:1 (1993).
- . "Haydar 'Abd al-Shafi: Reflections on the Peace Process." Interview. Journal of Palestine Studies. 22:1 (1992).
- . "Haydar Abdul-Shafi." Interview. Middle East Policy. 6:1 (1998).
- . Madrid Conference Opening Speeches, October 30–31, 1991. Address by Dr. Haydar 'Abd al-Shafi. Jerusalem Media and Communication Center. n.d. www.jmcc.org/documents/haidarmad.htm.

Shahak, Israel (1933–2001)

Israel Shahak was a Jewish intellectual in the broad, classical meaning of the term and a moral philosopher, political activist, and chemist. His childhood was spent in Nazi Poland, the Warsaw Ghetto, and the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp. At the end of the war, he was the only male left in his family. He was liberated from Bergen-Belsen in 1945 and immigrated to Palestine with his mother. As a HOLOCAUST survivor, he dedicated his life to opposing all forms of racism and oppression. Shahak had a distinguished career as professor of chemistry at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, where he was repeatedly voted the most admired teacher by his students. By the end of his life, he had produced a scholarly body of work that showed the connection between messianic delusions and racial and political ones. During his chairmanship of the Israeli League for Human and Civil Rights, he set a personal example that has been difficult to emulate.

In the 1960s, Shahak's first political steps were in the Israeli League Against Religious Coercion. However, after the 1967 WAR, he disavowed this organization because while his colleagues were using liberal principles to fight against religion, they were silent on the crimes of the Israeli OCCUPATION of the Palestinian territories. Shahak quickly evolved from radical opposition to the Occupation to an overall challenge to ZIONISM as a regime based on structural discrimination and racism. Following the 1967 War, Shahak became a leading member of the Israeli League for Human and Civil Rights and was elected chairman in 1970. He devoted the rest of his life to opposing Israel's inhumane treatment of its Palestinian citizens and oppression of the Palestinians in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. In 1970 Shahak established the Committee Against Administrative Detentions (CAAD) and always insisted that members of the CAAD work together for the common good. This principle was especially applicable when Shahak brought together activists from the PALESTINIAN COMMUNIST PARTY and MATZPEN, despite their ideological differences and the reluctance of the communists to be identified with a group that openly supported the Palestinian national resistance.

Shahak dedicated much of his time to collecting and translating into English articles from the Israeli mainstream MEDIA, which he used as documentary proof for his radical criticism of Zionism. For many years, the Shahak Papers were the only valuable resource for any scholar or anyone else abroad who was interested in knowing what was going on in Israel or who wanted to challenge the Zionist discourse. In his last years, Shahak increasingly focused his public attacks—especially in letters to the Ha'aretz and Kol Hair newspapers—against the Palestinian national movement and the radical left in Israel. In his eyes, the Israeli left was not critical enough of the Palestinian nationalists, whom he saw as corrupt and authoritarian. For Shahak, the duty of an honest person was, first and foremost, to tell the truth and to unmask the hypocrites, no matter what the political implications and the effect.

Israel Shahak's vision can perhaps best be found in his books, Jewish History, Jewish Religion, and Jewish Fundamentalism in Israel. In Jewish History, Shahak pointed out that while Islamic fundamentalism is vilified in the West, JEWISH FUNDAMENTALISM goes largely ignored. He argued that classical Judaism is used to justify Israeli policies, which he viewed as xenophobic and similar in nature to the ANTI-SEMITISM suffered by Jews in other times and places. In his view, this is nowhere more clearly evident than in Jewish attitudes toward the non-Jewish peoples of Israel and the Middle East. In Jewish Fundamentalism in Israel, Shahak and coauthor Norton Mezvinsky lament the dramatic growth in recent years of Jewish fundamentalism, which manifested itself in opposition to the peace process and played a role in the TARGETED ASSASSINATION of Prime Minister YITZHAK RABIN and the murder of twenty-nine Muslims at prayer by the US-born fundamentalist BARUCH GOLDSTEIN.

It troubled Shahak greatly that the lesson many Jews learned from the Nazi period was to embrace ethnocentric nationalism, which had created such tragedy in Europe, and to reject the older prophetic Jewish tradition of universalism. He was particularly dismayed with the organized Jewish community in the UNITED STATES and other Western countries, which promoted ideas of religious freedom and ethnic diversity in their own countries but embraced Israel's rejection of these same values. During his life Shahak was rebuked, spat upon, and threatened with death for his defense of human rights. It was his view that bigotry was morally objectionable regardless of who the perpetrator was and who the victim. Shahak once declared, "The support of democracy and human rights is . . . meaningless or even harmful and deceitful when it does not begin with self-critique and with support of human rights when they are violated by one's own group. Any support of human rights for non-Jews whose rights are being violated by the 'Jewish state' is as deceitful as the support of human rights by a Stalinist."

MICHEL WARSCHAWSKI, one of his Israeli colleagues, wrote of Shahak in an obituary: "I think Shahak was above all one of the last philosophers of the 18th century school of enlightenment, rationalism, and liberalism, in the American meaning of the concept. While rejecting Marxism, Shahak was deeply committed to social justice and to what he called a humanist socialism."

"As a true liberal, he was deeply opposed to any kind of religious coercion against individual life and equally opposed to religious involvement in politics. Shahak, on the other hand, was not only ready to speak out loudly against Occupation, ADMINISTRATIVE DETENTIONS, HOUSE DEMOLITIONS, and torture, but also ready to act on these issues. He did so with people and organizations that were very far from his own milieu, both socially and ideologically."

Bibliography

- Brownfield, Allan C. "With Israel Shahak's Death, a Prophetic Voice Is Stilled." Washington Report on Middle East Affairs. October 2001.
- Farmelant, Jim. "Israel Shahak." The Nation. 23–30 July 2001.
- Mezvinsky, Norton. "Remembering Israel Shahak." Washington Report on Middle East Affairs. August–September 2001.
- Pallis, Elfi. "Obituary: Israel Shahak." The Guardian (London). 6 July 2001.
- Shahak, Israel. Israel's Global Role: Weapons for Repression. Belmont, MA: Association of Arab-American University Graduates, 1982.
- . Jewish History, Jewish Religion: The Weight of Three Thousand Years. New York: Pluto Middle Eastern Studies, 1994.
- . Open Secrets: Israeli Foreign and Nuclear Policies. New York: Pluto Press, 1997.
- Shahak, Israel, and Norton Mezvinsky. Jewish Fundamentalism in Israel, new ed. New York: Pluto Middle Eastern Studies, 2004.
- Warschawski, Michael. "The Last Israeli Liberal—Remembering Israel Shahak (1933–2001)." Jerusalem Quarterly File. 13 (2001).

Shahar

Shahar (Dawn Movement), an acronym for Peace, Education, and Welfare, was founded by YOSHI BEILIN, former Israeli justice minister, a leading dove in the Israeli LABOR PARTY and one of the architects of the OSLO ACCORDS between the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION and Israel. Its purpose was to unify the pro-peace groups into a powerful political movement that could stop Israel's march to war and self-destruction. At its founding on 3 June 2002, Beilin told his supporters: "You called me to run, and I call on you to join me in forming a new movement with the goal of uniting the peace camp and guaranteeing that the state will be founded on democracy, social justice, and peace."

Beilin lashed out at Labor Party prime minister EHUD BARAK for the failure of the July 2000 CAMP DAVID SUMMIT among Barak, PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY president YASIR ARAFAT, and US president BILL CLINTON: "Camp David failed because Barak did not know how to negotiate; not because peace is unattainable. If Camp David had been handled properly, this debilitating war [the AL-AQSA INTIFADA] could have been avoided." He blamed Barak for convincing the public that the Intifada began because of the Palestinians' rejection of peace. He called for a peace plan along the lines of the Saudi initiative and the CLINTON PARAMETERS (TWO-STATE SOLUTION and Israeli withdrawal to 1967 lines) and said that the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is the only one with an obvious solution. "Achieving peace is not difficult at all," he said, but entails the Israeli withdrawal from the WEST BANK and GAZA STRIP, the evacuation of Israeli SETTLEMENTS, and the establishment of a Palestinian state.

Beilin's initiative came amid a raging debate within Israel on how to unite the peace camp into an effective political force, one that could defeat the rising right wing. Attempts at achieving this unity had so far failed because of Labor's presence within the national unity government, where it rubber-stamped Prime Minister ARIEL SHARON's most extreme policies, including turning the West Bank into eight BANTUSTANS. After the peace camp's poor showing in the 2003 elections, Shahar merged with MERETZ and the Democratic Choice Party to form YACHAD, which also focused on uniting and resuscitating the Israeli peace camp. In March 2004 Beilin was elected to a two-year term as the first chairman of Yachad. In the 2006 elections Meretz-Yachad won 3.8 percent of the vote, giving it five seats in the Knesset. In the elections of 2009, Meretz-Yachad won 3 percent of the vote, giving it three seats.

See also BARAK'S GENEROUS OFFER; ISRAELI POLITICAL PARTIES AND SETTLEMENTS

Bibliography

- Andromidas, Dean. "Israel's Beilin Forms New Political Movement." Executive Intelligence Review. 14 June 2002.
- Beilin, Yossi. The Speech of Yossi Beilin at the "Run Beilin" Gathering. Tel Aviv, Israel. 3 June 2002. www.beilin.org.il/Eng/whatsup/speechshahareng.html.
- Diskin, Abraham. The Last Days in Israel: Understanding the New Israeli Democracy. London: Routledge, 2003.

Shaka'a, Bassam (1930–)

Bassam Shaka'a is a former politician; elected mayor of NABLUS, WEST BANK; and survivor—though he lost both legs—of a TARGETED ASSASSINATION attempt by extremist Israelis. Born to one of the wealthiest and most distinguished families in Nablus, he was the most prominent Palestinian politician in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES during the 1970s and 1980s.

As a young man in Jordanian-occupied Nablus at the beginning of the 1950s, Shaka'a joined the Ba'ath Party, a secular, pan-Arab nationalist party that propounded the unity of the Arab world. For his participation, the Jordanian authorities persecuted Shaka'a, forcing him underground and then into exile in SYRIA, LEBANON, and EGYPT. In 1965 he was permitted to return to Nablus, where he headed the West Bank National Bloc of PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) leaders in the city and was elected mayor in 1976, serving until the Israeli military government deposed him in 1982.

Shaka'a was a dominant figure in the NATIONAL GUIDANCE COMMITTEE (NGC), a body established in the Occupied Territories to organize nonviolent resistance to the Israeli OCCUPATION. In 1979 the Israeli military issued a DEPORTATION order against Shaka'a after the defense establishment accused him of incitement to murder Israelis. Shaka'a petitioned the order to the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT, won his case, and returned to Nablus a hero. On 2 July 1980, his car exploded after the settler underground placed a bomb in it. Shaka'a continued to serve as mayor until the Israeli military government deposed him again. Hundreds of individuals from all walks of life came to visit the former mayor, confined to a wheelchair, as Israel kept him under house arrest.

Shaka'a was an early critic of the OSLO ACCORDS and later a vocal critic of the corruption and cronyism in the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA), led by YASIR ARAFAT. On 29 November 1999, Arafat put the now-elderly Shaka'a under house arrest, while arresting seven others because of their criticism of Arafat and the PNA.

Bibliography

- Barat, Frank. "Interview with Bassam Shaka'a: The PLO Must Go Back to Its Roots." The Palestine Chronicle. 13 August 2008.
- Bishara, Ghassan. "Interview with Bassam Shaka'a: All Palestinians Are Living One Battle, Inside and Outside." Journal of Palestine Studies. 11:4 (July/October 1982).
- Rapaport, Era, and William B. Helmreich, eds. Letters from Tel Mond Prison: An Israeli Settler Defends His Act of Terror. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1996.
- Woolfson, Marion. Bassam Shaka'a: Portrait of a Palestinian. London: Third World Centre, 1981.

Shamgar, Meir (1925–)

Meir Shamgar was a Jewish lawyer and jurist who became president of the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT. Born in Danzig (Gdansk, Poland), he immigrated with his family to Palestine in 1939. He studied history and philosophy at the Hebrew University of JERUSALEM and law at the Government Law School of London University. During his service in the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES, he attained the rank of brigadier-general and, as the military advocate-general (1961–1968), he wrote the Manual for the Military Advocate in Military Government. He subsequently became president of Israel's Supreme Court (1983–1995).

In his Manual, Shamgar created the "legal" framework for the Israeli military government in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. Written prior to the 1967 WAR and Israel's subsequent OCCUPATION of the WEST BANK and GAZA STRIP, it outlines the principles of a legal doctrine for Occupation. In what became official Israeli policy, Shamgar determined that Israel would not "occupy" these areas but rather "administer" them and that therefore the Fourth Geneva Convention (pertaining to occupation of conquered territories and their civilian population) was inapplicable (though Israel could choose to abide by certain of its humanitarian considerations). Shamgar further determined that Palestinians would have no inherent legal rights under Israel's administration and that Israeli SETTLEMENTS in the "administered areas" would be legal.

In 2005 Shamgar received the prestigious Democracy Award from the Israel Democracy Institute for his "unique contribution to Israeli democracy in establishing normative administrative procedures, in inculcating the rule of law, in defending human and civil rights and in making law and justice more accessible to the general public." He headed two significant investigatory bodies, both named after him: the SHAMGAR COMMISSION to Investigate the Massacre Perpetrated by BARUCH GOLDSTEIN and the Shamgar Commission to Investigate the Assassination of YITZHAK RABIN. In both cases, the commissions found that a single gunman, acting alone, perpetrated the crime. In the case of YIGAL AMIR, Rabin's assassin, the commission refuted the possibility of more than one gunman and the involvement of some elements of the security services. In Goldstein's case, the Shamgar Commission dispelled arguments that sought to exonerate Goldstein, a settler who murdered twenty-nine Palestinians.

See also ISRAELI MILITARY COURT SYSTEM IN THE OCCUPIED TERRITORIES

Shamgar Commission, 1994

Subsequent to the massacre of twenty-nine men at prayer in the AL-IBRAHIMI MOSQUE in HEBRON, perpetrated by BARUCH GOLDSTEIN on 25 February 1994, the Israeli government appointed a commission of inquiry headed by MEIR SHAMGAR, president of the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT. The findings of the Shamgar Commission, submitted in June 1994, included the following:

- Goldstein, a US-born settler, acted alone in planning the massacre, telling no one of his scheme.
- Coordination among the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF), the police, and the CIVIL ADMINISTRATION was problematic.
- The political leadership and security forces could not have predicted the massacre.
- Testimony from survivors referring to IDF assistance to the settlers and grenade explosions during the massacre were found to be contradictory and inconsistent.
- Prior to the massacre, Palestinian residents of Hebron were notified by the Ez a-Adin Alqass [sic] through leaflets, loudspeakers, and wall inscriptions to stock up on food, for a large attack on Jews would take place and a CURFEW would probably follow.

Additionally, the commission's conclusions strongly and broadly criticized the authorities' failure to enforce the law in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES against settlers and Israeli citizens who had committed crimes against Palestinians and noted serious defects in the handling of law enforcement. The commission noted that police failed to properly investigate incidents involving settlers and to implement the judicial processes against them. It repeatedly emphasized that general principles of the Israeli criminal procedure law must be applied to police investigations in the Occupied Territories. These principles stipulate that the police must investigate every incidence of a crime and not only when the victim files a complaint. Investigations should only be closed for reasons such as insufficient evidence or "lack of public interest," according to the principles established by the criminal procedure law. The commission recommended clearly defining police unit tasks in the territories, reinforcing police presence in the SETTLEMENTS, and providing a suitable budget. In addition, it recommended improving coordination between military forces in the area and the police to ensure dissemination of information about crimes and military assistance for police investigations.

Subsequent to the Shamgar Commission's recommendations, several measures were taken to rectify deficiencies in law enforcement. Police presence in the area was expanded, a new police district—the Shai district—was created for the WEST BANK, an additional police station was established in Hebron, and a new prayer schedule was set at the al-Ibrahimi Mosque/Cave of the Patriarchs for settlers and Palestinians. In addition, shortly after the massacre, the authorities took measures against the settlers, including ADMINISTRATIVE DETENTION, restrictions on their freedom of movement, and the banning of the militant KACH and KAHANE CHAI movements, which were declared illegal pursuant to the Ordinance to Prevent Terror. Nevertheless, law enforcement vis-à-vis settlers, and particularly settlers in Hebron, has remained seriously deficient, and SETTLER VIOLENCE in Hebron is among the most egregious in the West Bank.

See also HEBRON AND JEWISH SETTLEMENTS; HEBRON CITY; HEBRON DISTRICT, SOUTHERN AREA; SETTLER VIOLENCE

Bibliography

Israel, Government of. Shamgar Commission Report. Jerusalem. 1994.

Shmuel, David. Human Rights in Hebron since the Massacre at the Cave of the Patriarchs. Jerusalem: B'Tselem (Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories), 1995.

Shamir, Moshe (1921–2004)

Moshe Shamir was a Jewish author and dramatist. Both for the volume of his work and for its direct confrontation with issues of Israeli society, he is considered one of the most important writers of Israeli literature. Born in SAFED, Palestine, he grew up in Tel Aviv, was active in HASHOMER HATZAIR, and lived in KIBBUTZ Mishmar Ha'emek for six years before returning to live in Tel Aviv. After the 1967 WAR, Shamir's left-wing political views were radically transformed, and he became a strong proponent of the GREATER LAND OF ISRAEL ideology. From 1977 to 1981, he was elected to the Knesset as a member of the LIKUD PARTY but left the party over its decision to return the Sinai to EGYPT. Shamir was one of the founders of the ultra-right-wing TEHIYA PARTY.

Shamir's literary career began in 1947 as the editor of Bamahaneh, the underground weekly of the HAGANA, the Jewish underground military organization, and later the official publication of the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES. He went on to write in many genres, including fiction, historical fiction, drama, children's literature, poetry, essays, and literary criticism. For his prolific career and major contribution to Israeli literature, Shamir was awarded the Israel Prize in 1988. Shamir's work directly tackles issues of modern Israeli society through various stages. His early fiction, written immediately before and after the establishment of the state (1948), focuses on the pioneering spirit, which he felt was essential to realizing the Zionist dream. The hero of his 1947 novel, He Walked the Fields, for example, is the strong native-born kibbutznik who struggles with issues of family, society, and the army as he demonstrates his dedication to his country. Shamir's laudatory stance toward the young, idealistic Israeli and Israeli society is characteristic of his early work.

Shamir's later work becomes both more questioning and more critical of Israeli norms. His historical novels, written in the 1950s, are metaphors for modern problems of leadership as well as character studies of individuals, such as Alexander Yannai of the Hasmonean era and King David. Other contemporary and later works dwell on problems of class and social structure in Israel, issues in kibbutz life, and an emptiness in Israeli values. Among his most famous works are The Frontier (1966), which examines the moral decline of Israeli values in the 1960s, and the trilogy Far from Pearls (1973–1992), which deals with Jewish life in Eastern Europe in the twentieth century.

See also HEBREW LITERATURE

Bibliography

Gale Research. Biography—Samir, Moshe (1921–2004): An Article from Contemporary Authors Online. Gale Reference Team. 16 December 2007.

Shamir, Moshe. The King of Flesh and Blood. Spencertown, NY: Hebrew Publishing Co., 1970 [1958].

———. With His Own Hands. Tel Aviv: Israel Universities Press, 1970.

Shamir, Yitzhak (1915–)

Yitzhak Shamir (born Icchak Jaziernicki) was an underground guerrilla leader during the BRITISH MANDATE, spymaster, parliamentarian, foreign minister, and prime minister of the state of Israel. Born in Ruzhany, Poland (now Belarus), he attended Bialystok Hebrew secondary school, where, at age fourteen, he joined the BETAR youth movement. In 1935 he left Warsaw, where he was studying law, immigrated to Palestine, and enrolled at the Hebrew University. In 1937, opposing the mainstream Zionist policy of restraint vis-à-vis the British Mandatory administration and the Palestinian Arabs, Shamir joined the IRGUN TZEVA'I LE'UMI (Etzel), one of the Revisionist Zionist underground organizations. When the Irgun split in 1940, Shamir sided with the most militant faction, headed by AVRAHAM STERN—LEHI (LOHAMEI HERUT YISRAEL, Fighters for the Freedom of Israel). This group proposed to GERMANY that it would open a military front against the British in the Middle East in exchange for the expulsion of the Jewish population of Europe to Palestine, but the Nazis rejected the offer. In LEHI, Shamir was part of the leadership troika coordinating organizational and operational activities. Israeli author Avishai Margalit describes an incident involving Shamir and Lehi: “In July 1946 British troops surrounded Tel Aviv in an effort to wipe out the headquarters of the Jewish underground fighters, who they assumed were somewhere in the city. Yitzhak Shamir, one of the commanders of the underground Lehi—or the Stern gang—happened to be in Tel Aviv that day, to meet with MENAHEM BEGIN, the commander of the other underground group, the Irgun. Shamir was disguised as an Orthodox rabbi in traditional dress and he used the name Rabbi Shamir. A British detective officer, John Martin, identified him immediately in spite of his disguise and ordered his arrest. That he did so cost the detective his life. Two gunmen from the underground, dressed as tennis players, waited for Martin at the court of his tennis club on Mount Carmel, and there they shot him down.”

During Shamir's leadership of LEHI, it was responsible for the 1944 TARGETED ASSASSINATION of Britain's minister of state for the Middle East, LORD MOYNE, and an assassination attempt against Harold MacMichael, the British High Commissioner for Palestine in the same year. In 1948, LEHI assassinated the UNITED NATIONS representative in the Middle East, COUNT FOLKE BERNADOTTE, who, although he had secured the release of 21,000 Jewish prisoners headed for Nazi extermination camps during World War II, was seen by Shamir and his collaborators as an anti-Zionist and “an obvious agent of the British enemy.”

Following the 1948 WAR, which established Israel's independence as a state, Shamir worked for several years managing commercial enterprises, then joined Israel's security services and held senior positions in the MOSSAD, the Israeli intelligence agency, from 1956 to 1965. He returned to private commercial activity in the mid-1960s and became involved in the struggle to free SOVIET JEWS. In 1970 he joined Menahem Begin's opposition HERUT PARTY and became a member of its executive. In 1973 he was elected a member of the Knesset for the LIKUD PARTY, a position he held for the next twenty-three years. During his first decade as a parliamentarian, Shamir was a member of the Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, and in 1977 he became speaker of the Knesset. In this capacity, he presided over the historic appearance of Egyptian president Anwar Sadat in the Knesset and the debate that ratified the CAMP DAVID ACCORDS two years later, although he abstained in the vote on the accords, primarily because of the requirement to dismantle Jewish SETTLEMENTS. As minister of foreign affairs from 1980 to 1983, Shamir achieved closer ties with Washington, reflected in the Memorandum of Understanding on STRATEGIC COOPERATION with the UNITED STATES and the agreement in principle on free trade between the two nations. He also initiated diplomatic contacts with many African countries that had severed diplomatic ties during the 1973 oil crisis. After the 1982 LEBANON WAR, Shamir directed negotiations with LEBANON that led to the 1983 peace treaty (never ratified by the Lebanese government).

Following the resignation of Begin in October 1983, Shamir became acting prime minister until the general elections in the fall of 1984. During that year, he concentrated on economic matters (the Israeli economy was suffering from hyperinflation), while also nurturing closer strategic ties with the United States. Indecisive results in the 1984 general elections led to the formation of a National Unity Government based on a rotation agreement between Shamir and LABOR PARTY leader SHIMON PERES. Shamir served as vice premier and minister of foreign affairs for two years, while Peres was prime minister (then the positions were reversed). Subsequently, Shamir served for six years as prime minister, from 1986 to 1992, first heading a National Unity Government and then as head of a narrow coalition government. During the period of his prime ministership in the national unity arrangement, he torpedoed a peace accord known as the London Agreement, or the HUSAYN-PERES AGREEMENT, arranged by Shimon Peres and King Husayn of JORDAN.

Yitzhak Shamir's term as elected prime minister was marked by several major issues: the 1991 GULF WAR, during which Shamir, under enormous pressure from Washington, chose a policy of restraint, and the October 1991 MADRID CONFERENCE, which inaugurated direct peace talks between Israel and the neighboring Arab states as well as multilateral regional talks. Two events overshadowed all other issues on Shamir's public agenda. The first, beginning in 1989, was the victory in the long struggle for Soviet Jewish emigration, which brought 450,000 immigrants to Israel in the next two years; the second was Operation Solomon in May 1991, in which 15,000 Ethiopian Jews were brought to Israel in a massive airlift.

After his party lost the 1992 elections, Shamir stepped down from the party leadership, and in 1996 he also retired from the Knesset. Upon his electoral defeat, Shamir made clear his passionate views on the GAZA STRIP and WEST BANK in an interview he gave to the Israeli newspaper Ma'ariv. He discussed the Likud Party's commitment to the ideology of the GREATER LAND OF ISRAEL, which posits that the entire land of Israel, including the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES, belongs exclusively to the Jewish people, and his commitment to expanding the Israeli settlements in these areas in an effort to incorporate the region into the state of Israel. He stated that he viewed the Arabs as a monolithic and implacable entity bent on destroying the state of Israel and "throwing all the Jews into the sea." Shamir dismissed all of the compromises put forward by the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) and its chairman, YASIR ARAFAT, in November–December 1988, as nothing but a "propaganda exercise" by an eternally terrorist organization.

In May 1989, in the context of the First INTIFADA and under intense pressure from Washington (President GEORGE H. W. BUSH and Secretary of State JAMES BAKER) to come up with something that could contribute to peace, the Israeli prime minister put forward the "Shamir Plan." It called for ELECTIONS in the West Bank and Gaza to select non-PLO Palestinians with whom Israel could negotiate an interim agreement on limited autonomy. The negotiations would be based on the principles laid down in the Camp David Accords. It also stated that there could be no "additional Palestinian state in the Gaza district and in the area between Israel and Jordan," reflecting Shamir's and the Likud's position that there already is a Palestinian state, namely, Jordan; that "Israel will not conduct negotiations with the PLO"; and that "there will be no change in the status of Judea, Samaria and Gaza other than in accordance with the basic guidelines of the [Israeli] Government." Hence, the issue of self-determination for Palestinians was negated. The basic premises of Shamir's plan incorporated the "Four No's" of the official Labor Party program: no return to the 1967 borders, no removal of settlements, no negotiations with the PLO, and no Palestinian state. The United States fully endorsed this proposal. Secretary Baker explained, "Our goal all along has been to try to assist in the implementation of the Shamir initiative. There is no other proposal or initiative that we are working with."

In December 1989 the US Department of State released the BAKER PLAN, which mirrored Shamir's proposals and stipulated that Israel would attend a "dialogue" in Cairo with EGYPT and "acceptable" Palestinians (vetted by Israel), who would be permitted to discuss implementation of the Shamir Plan but would not vote or have a decisionmaking role. Secretary Baker embraced the plan presented by Prime Minister Shamir in 1989, calling it “the only game in town”; however, Shamir reneged on his plan and the Cairo meeting never occurred. Shamir did not generally support negotiations and compromise because he believed that Israel could not retreat from any territory—including all the territory of “Eretz Yisrael.” Thus, he opposed the Camp David Accords and Israel’s withdrawal from Sinai, and he supported Israel’s annexation of the Golan Heights. In his peace plan, he reaffirmed this position, knowing that no Arab or Palestinian state or group would negotiate on this basis. That the United States supported it and later put it forward as the Baker Plan demonstrates the extent of American deference to Israel’s positions. Moreover, even the limited conditions Shamir offered in 1989 were a pretense, as he admitted some years later, saying, “I would have carried on autonomy talks for ten years, and meanwhile we would have reached half a million people in Judea and Samaria.”

Ironically, then, Baker’s first initiative for a Palestinian-Israeli settlement was thwarted by the very person who had defined the parameters and determined the prerequisites of the scheme. Nevertheless, the United States soon after attempted to catalyze the peace process with what became the Madrid Conference. Secretary Baker engaged in intense shuttle diplomacy to persuade Israel, the Arab states, and West Bank and Gaza Palestinians to attend the Madrid Conference. From March to September 1991, he made eight trips to the Middle East. Israel, opposed to the conference from the outset, made no concessions (except to attend) and greeted each visit by Baker with a new settlement. The Arab states, however, made numerous concessions, which were incorporated into a letter of invitation signed by the United States and the Soviet Union on 18 October 1991.

While essentially eschewing participation in a peace process, Israel was in a very strong position. During the Gulf War, IRAQ had lobbed several Scud missiles onto Israeli territory but, bowing to US importuning, Tel Aviv did not retaliate. Israel promoted itself as a victim and this, combined with the upheaval of the Intifada (the stone-throwing and civil disobedience of which were also presented as a major security threat and further victimization), consolidated the hard-line forces in Israel. The war thus provided Israel with an opportunity to impose its diplomatic framework on any negotiations in which it participated. Ultimately Shamir provided Baker with a list of stipulations, which the United States had to fulfill if Israel was to come to Madrid. It was Shamir, for example, who insisted on two parallel negotiating tracks and on the replacement of an international conference called for in UN SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 242, with a regional conference hosted by the United States and the now powerless Russian Federation, although both were congruent with US policy, as was ensuring that the UNITED NATIONS had no substantive role. Baker’s preconference diplomacy reflected the administration’s strong pro-Israel bias, which involved highly unequal treatment for the Palestinians and dismissal of their fundamental interests. A few examples shed further light.

Baker’s acquiescence in Shamir’s exclusion of any delegates from the PLO, the DIASPORA, or Jerusalem seriously undermined the Palestinians’ ability to credibly press for their rights. The exclusion of the PLO from the Madrid Conference was not a mere formality. Rather it signaled the intention to disarticulate Palestinian national rights, including the right to self-determination in a sovereign state anywhere in Mandatory Palestine and the right of return. By excluding Palestinian residents of Jerusalem, Israel’s claim to all of Jerusalem was reinforced.

Discussion of the fundamental issue of OCCUPATION was placed beyond the parameters of debate through the numerous encumbrances built into the conference, including its structure, participants (including the Mandatory joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation), the limits on speech, and the frequency of meetings.

The two-track approach also represented a mechanism for sidestepping the Palestine question as the central issue in the Arab-Israeli conflict. Issues of arms control, WATER resources, economic development, regional security, and ENVIRONMENTAL DEGRADATION, which made up the agenda of the multilateral talks, did not arise out of an ideological conflict between the Arabs and Israel: they derived naturally from the central issue, Palestine.

The transitional period represented another substantive issue packaged as procedural. An unrepresentative segment of the five and a half million Palestinians, carefully chosen to satisfy Israeli requirements and meticulously screened for their willingness to operate within defined constraints, would, after an interim period of limited autonomy, sit across the table from an Israeli team free of any constraints to negotiate the final status of the Occupied Territories.

With Secretary Baker's acceptance and implementation of Shamir's demands, Israel came to the Madrid Conference, which opened on 30 October 1991, but made no concessions on any issue.

See also JAMES BAKER; GEORGE H. W. BUSH; IMMIGRATION; MADRID CONFERENCE

Bibliography

- Elon, Amos. A Blood-Dimmed Tide: Dispatches from the Middle East. New York: Columbia University Press, 1997.
- Gazi, Mordechai. Israeli Diplomacy and the Middle East Peace Process. London: Routledge, 2002.
- Heller, Joseph. The Stern Gang: Ideology, Politics, and Terror, 1940–1949. London: Frank Cass, 1995.
- Margalit, Avishai. "The Violent Life of Yitzhak Shamir." New York Review of Books. 39:9 (14 May 1992).
- Shamir, Yitzhak. Summing Up: An Autobiography. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1994.
- Shlaim, Avi. The Iron Wall: Israel and the Arab World. New York: W. W. Norton, 2000.

Shamir Plan

See YITZHAK SHAMIR

Shaml

Shaml: Palestinian Diaspora and Refugee Center, located in Ramallah, WEST BANK, is an independent nongovernmental organization dedicated to researching issues related to Palestinian REFUGEES and the PALESTINIAN DIASPORA. It was established in 1994 by a group of concerned academics and human rights activists who wanted to explore issues pertaining to Palestinian refugees in a comparative perspective, encompassing relevant experiences of peoples in other parts of the world. Shaml aims to:

- Raise public awareness, regionally and globally, about the conditions of Palestinian refugees and their basic rights and the problems and difficulties they face.
- Conduct primary research on refugee issues in Palestine and elsewhere, including comparative research in the sociology of migration.
- Help formulate and develop a coherent long-term policy for Palestinian refugees in the context of promoting a greater understanding of their needs.

- Strengthen links between Palestinian communities in the Diaspora and their homeland.

(www.shaml.org/zshaml/site).

Shammut, Isma'il Abdul-Qader (1931–2006)

Isma'il Shammut was the founder of modern Palestinian visual arts and a leading Palestinian painter as well as an art historian. The first Palestinian to enroll in the Cairo College of Fine Arts, he later studied at the Academia de Belle Arti in Rome. He was a prolific and consistent painter of realistic scenes of the Palestinian tragedy and struggle; his paintings, in a variety of styles, deal primarily with the exodus of REFUGEES, civilian massacres, the rise of resistance to Israel, and the fida'iyyun, although he also painted idyllic depictions of Palestinian rural life. Palestinian publications have reproduced many of his works, which have become domestic icons of sorts.

Born in LYDDA, Palestine, Shammut was dispossessed in the 1948 WAR and, after a tortuous journey, settled in Khan-Yunis refugee camp in the GAZA STRIP. In 1950 he began his studies in Cairo, and in 1953 Shammut had his first exhibition in Gaza City. In 1954 he opened his first major exhibition in Cairo, sponsored and inaugurated by Egyptian president JAMAL 'ABD AL-NASIR. Also exhibiting at the same time was the Palestinian artist Tamam Aref Al-Akhal, a refugee from HAIFA who originally fled to Beirut and who later became his wife. In 1955 Shammut moved to Rome and the following year to Beirut, where he lived and worked at various artistic and cultural endeavors. In 1969 he joined the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) as director of arts and national culture. In 1983, following the LEBANON WAR, Shammut left Beirut with his family for KUWAIT, but the 1991 GULF WAR and the forced expulsion of Palestinians put Shammut adrift again. This time he migrated to Cologne, GERMANY, but in 1994 Shammut settled in Amman, JORDAN, where he resided until his death.

Shammut exhibited widely in almost every Arab capital, Europe, the UNITED STATES, and elsewhere. He received, among many honors, the Revolution Shield for Arts and Letters, the Jerusalem Medal, and the Palestine Award for the Arts, yet he was often described as a solitary, melancholy, and bitter man. Undoubtedly the events of 1948 scarred him deeply. After describing the idylls of his youth, Shammout related: "Then there was the Nakba [Palestinian exodus] of 1948. I lived through it in excruciating detail; every part of me experienced the Nakba as fully as possible. I became a refugee." In his painting The Rift, Shammout depicted the Palestinian defeat of 1948 and the establishment of the state of Israel in a graphically symbolic mode: a bride stands at the edge of a great abyss where the land is split in two; on the other side, tortured Palestinians hang and squat, half naked, in chains. He once said, "During the period of dispossession we were in great need of a loaf of bread, the price of which, my father did not possess." For a year, Shammout abandoned his education and worked in Gaza to help with the family's finances. "You want to know what I did? I sold halawa [sesame candy]. I was a halawa peddler. The lengths and breadths of Gaza I crossed in full, on foot, selling halawa."

During the 1953 exhibit in Gaza, Shammout had something of an epiphany: "I saw, clearly for the first time, the extent to which art is capable of affecting the psyche. People would be standing before the paintings, staring at them, and suddenly they would burst out crying as they discovered how another Palestinian human being had managed to express their pain and hope, emphasize their identity and picture their lives. It was then that I made my historic decision that art would be my road and the human side of the Palestinian issue, my subject."

In 1997 Shammout and his wife visited Palestine for the first time since they left. "This visit had a tremendous effect on the two of us; we relived the events of 1948 and their repercussions," he said. "We returned to Amman with the notion of producing something monumental and comprehensive in which to summarize our experience through the last five decades." The project, which took "four years of constant toil," yielded the epic Al-Sira wal-Masira (Epic Procession). Shammout said: "These paintings are not for sale; they are our gift to the Palestinian people. The Geneva-based WELFARE ASSOCIATION, which funded the exhibition's journeys over the past year and with which we concluded the deal, has a budget of over $10 million to establish a museum [in Amman, Jordan], and these paintings will be the kernel of the plastic arts department."

See also PALESTINIAN SOCIETY, PRE-1948

Bibliography

- El-Haddad, Laila. "In Memory of Ismail Shammout." 9 July 2006. <http://a-mother-from-gaza.blogspot.com/2006/07/in-memory-of-ismail-shammout.html>.
- Halaby, Samia. "In Remembrance: Ismail Shammout, 1931–2006." The Electronic Intifada. 5 July 2006. <http://www.electronicintifada.org>.
- Joury, Mary. "Ismail Shammout: The Long March East." Jerusalemmites. n.d. www.jerusalemmites.org/memoirs/men/4.htm.
- Rakha, Youssef. "Ismail Shammout: Rhetorical Brush Strokes: Epic Processions, Engaging Parables, and Unlikely Triumphs." Al-Ahram Weekly (Cairo). 14–20 March 2002.
- Shammout, Ismail. Art in Palestine. Kuwait: n.p., 1989.
- . Palestine, Illustrated Political History. Beirut: n.p., 1972.
- . Palestine in Perspective. Beirut: n.p., 1978.
- . Palestinian National Art. Beirut: n.p., 1978.
- . The Young Artist. Beirut: n.p., 1957.
- . www.shammout.com.
- El-Zabri, Haithem. "Obituary: Ismail Shammout (1930–2006): Artist, Activist, Legend." If Americans Knew. 4 July 2006. www.ifamericansknew.org/cur\_sit/shammout.html.

Sharabi, Hisham B. (1927–2005)

Hisham Sharabi was a Palestinian intellectual, academic, writer, and activist. Born into a wealthy family in JAFFA, Palestine, he studied at the Friends School in Ramallah, and in 1947 he received a bachelor's degree in philosophy from the American University of Beirut (AUB). During his years at AUB, he was a member of the Syrian Social Nationalist Party (SSNP—founded in Beirut in 1932, it is a secular, nationalist political party in SYRIA and LEBANON and advocates the establishment of a Greater Syrian nation-state spanning the fertile crescent, including Syria, Lebanon, IRAQ, JORDAN, Palestine, Cyprus, KUWAIT, Sinai, south-eastern TURKEY, and southwestern IRAN). The group's commitment to Palestine appealed to the young Sharabi, who, in turn, impressed the group's leader with his intellectual acumen. On graduating, Sharabi left for the UNITED STATES to pursue graduate studies; however, in 1948 he put his academic studies on hold and returned to Lebanon, where his family fled after their dispossession from Palestine. Sharabi resumed his activities with the SSNP, becoming the editor of its monthly magazine, al-Jil al-Jadid (The New Generation). Soon thereafter, the Lebanese government began to repress the SSNP, and Sharabi fled to Jordan, then returned to the United States. In 1948 Sharabi earned an M.A.

in philosophy and, in 1953, a Ph.D. in the history of culture—both from the University of Chicago. In 1955 he officially ended his affiliation with the SSNP.

Sharabi's first academic position was teaching intellectual history at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., where he was Omar al-Mukhtar Professor of Arab Culture and where he remained until he retired. In 1975, together with several colleagues, Sharabi founded the Center for Contemporary Arab Studies at Georgetown, the only academic institution at the time in the United States focusing solely on the study of the modern Arab world. For twenty-four years, he served as editor of the English-language quarterly Journal of Palestine Studies, published by the INSTITUTE FOR PALESTINE STUDIES. After the 1967 WAR, Sharabi again became politically active. In 1970 he moved to Beirut to work in the Palestine Planning Center and was visiting professor at the American University in 1970–1971. The eruption of the Lebanese civil war in 1975, however, thwarted his plans to settle in Lebanon permanently, and he returned to Georgetown University.

In 1977, along with like-minded colleagues and friends, Sharabi founded the Jerusalem Fund for Education and Community Development in Washington. The fund's original mission was to provide scholarships to Palestinian-Israeli university students for study in Israel, the WEST BANK, and abroad. In 1981 the fund expanded its mission to provide direct assistance for Palestinian educational, cultural, health, and community service institutions. In 1991 Sharabi and the Jerusalem Fund Board of Directors established the Center for Policy Analysis on Palestine (later renamed the Palestine Center) to provide a Palestinian/Arab perspective for political, academic, and MEDIA establishments in Washington. In 1979 he founded the Arab-American Cultural Foundation and the Alif Gallery in Washington.

Sharabi is the author of eighteen books, numerous articles, monographs, and conference papers, published in the United States, Europe, and the Middle East. Unlike most expatriate intellectuals, he maintained a continuous dialogue with the Arab world, with which he charted a new epistemological approach. Some of the books that established this tradition are Muqaddimat li Dirasat al-Mujtama al-Arabi (Introduction to the Study of Arab Society), published in 1975; his two-volume autobiography, Al-Jamr wa al-Ramad: Dhikrayat

Muthaqqqa Arabi (Embers and Ashes: Memoirs of an Arab Intellectual), published in 1978; and Suwar al-Madi: Sira Dhatiyya (Images of the Past: An Autobiography), published in 1993. Perhaps Sharabi's most well-known work in the United States, published in 1988, is Neopatriarchy: Theory of Distorted Change in Arab Society (al-Nizam al-Abawi), which provided an alternative way to understand Arab society and has had a great impact on scholarly and intellectual circles in the Arab world and the West.

The issue of women was one of Sharabi's most crucial concerns. He understood that the oppression of women is the cornerstone of the neopatriarchal system and argued that the liberation of women is an essential condition for overthrowing neopatriarchal hegemony. Sharabi returned to Lebanon to spend his last years.

Bibliography

- Agbarieh, Asma. "Interview. Hisham Sharabi: We Must Change Our Palestinian Government." Challenge: A Jerusalem Magazine on the Israeli Palestinian Conflict. 62 (July–August 2000).
- Antoon, Sinan. "Hisham Sharabi." In Encyclopedia of the Palestinians. Edited by Philip Mattar. New York: Facts on File, 2000.
- Davidson, Lawrence. "Remembering Hisham Sharabi (1927–2005)." Journal of Palestine Studies. 34:3 (2005).
- Sullivan, Patricia. "Arab Intellectual Hisham Sharabi, 77, Dies." Muslim Information Technology Association. 25 January 2005. www.MIFTA.org.

Sharansky, Natan (1948–)

Natan (Anatoly) Sharansky is a well-known Soviet human rights activist and dissident. Born in Ukraine, he graduated from the Physical Technical Institute in MOSCOW with a degree in mathematics. For a period he worked as an English interpreter for the human rights activist Andrei Sakharov. Sharansky's human rights work focused mainly on the issue of SOVIET JEWS and their right to immigrate to Israel. In 1973 he applied for an exit visa to immigrate to Israel, which Moscow refused, but Sharansky remained active in Zionist politics. In 1977 he was arrested and accused of treason and of spying for the UNITED STATES; in 1978 he was convicted of these charges and sentenced to thirteen years' imprisonment. Sharansky spent sixteen months in Moscow's Lefortovo prison before being transferred to a prison camp in the Siberian gulag.

After his imprisonment, intense high-level international diplomatic efforts were made to secure Sharansky's release, and he was finally freed in 1986 as part of an East-West PRISONER exchange. When he was released on the border of a still-divided GERMANY, the Israeli ambassador met him and presented him immediately with his new Israeli passport under the Hebrew name of Natan (rather than Anatoly) Sharansky. When he arrived in Israel on 11 February 1986, he was greeted by Prime Minister SHIMON PERES and given a hero's welcome.

Many expected that Sharansky would continue his human rights work once in Israel; however, this did not happen and he became a right-wing politician. Prior to his emigration to Israel, Sharansky portrayed himself as a symbol of the struggle for human rights as universal norms, but his activities in Israel have raised questions about his belief in human rights as universal and indivisible. Not only does he oppose any Israeli concessions that could lead to Palestinian self-determination, but he also advocates policies that could lead to the dispossession of Palestinians living in Israel, the WEST BANK, and the GAZA STRIP. In 1988 Sharansky was elected president of the newly created Soviet Jewry Zionist Forum, an organization dedicated to lobbying on behalf of Soviet immigrants. He also served as an associate editor of the Jerusalem Report. In 1995 Sharansky created a new political party, YISRAEL B'ALIYA, to represent the interests of Soviet Jewish immigrants. In the elections the following year, the party won seven Knesset seats and Sharansky became minister of industry and trade, a position he held from 1996 to 1999. He served as minister of the interior from July 1999 until his resignation in July 2000, and as minister of housing and construction and deputy prime minister from March 2001 until February 2003. As housing minister, he systematically enlarged SETTLEMENTS on expropriated Palestinian LAND in the West Bank. In February 2003 Sharansky was appointed minister without portfolio, responsible for JERUSALEM, social, and DIASPORA affairs. However, he resigned from the government on 2 May 2005 because of his opposition to Prime Minister ARIEL SHARON's plan for ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA. Politically, he is considered right of Sharon, especially on the Palestinian issue. Sharansky has opposed all Israeli concessions that could eventually have led to the creation of a Palestinian state, and he believes that Israel must hold on to all the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES.

One of the first signs of Sharansky's attitude toward the Palestinians occurred with the so-called Husayni affair. A meeting had been arranged between Sharansky and FAYSAL AL-HUSAYNI, the leader of the Palestinian community in East Jerusalem. Sharansky agreed but at the last moment withdrew, saying that he had not known that al-Husayni belonged to the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION.

In 2004 Sharansky published a book, The Case for Democracy: The Power of Freedom to Overcome Tyranny and Terror, in which he wrote that the world is "divided between those who are prepared to confront evil and those who are willing to appease it." He wrote that peace between Israel and the Palestinians will prevail only if the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA) is transformed into a truly free society, where the Palestinian people's natural inclination toward peace can prevail over the manipulations of their hate-mongering leaders. Sharansky was dismissive of the election of MAHMUD ABBAS as the new head of the PNA on 9 January 2005 and wrote that it would take time to extirpate YASIR ARAFAT's entrenched legacy of hatred. Sharansky believes that true Palestinian democratization might take "many years, even decades," and, in the meantime, that Israel should avoid the fatal mistakes of the OSLO ACCORDS (between the PLO and Israel), especially territorial concessions. Even following a successful Palestinian transition to full democracy, Sharansky would not unambiguously recommend an Israeli withdrawal from the Occupied Territories, saying only that the final status of the West Bank "must be determined through negotiations between Israelis and Palestinians."

Bibliography

- Avnery, Uri. "Natan Sharansky: Minister of Ignorance: Bush's Guru." CounterPunch. 10 March 2005. www.counterpunch.org/avnery03102005.html.
- Barry, Tom. "Natan Sharansky and US Israel Policy." Antiwar.com. 8 February 2005. www.antiwar.com/barry/?articleid=4755.
- Redress Information and Analysis. Profile: Natan Sharansky. n.d. www.redress.btinternet.co.uk/sharansky.htm.
- Sharansky, Natan, Ron Dermer, and Anatoly Shcharansky. The Case for Democracy: The Power of Freedom to Overcome Tyranny and Terror. New York: Public Affairs, 2004.
- Snyder, Jack. "Book Review—Sharansky: The Case for Democracy—The Power of Freedom to Overcome

Tyranny and Terror. Washington Post Book World. 2004.

Sharett, Moshe (1894–1965)

Moshe Sharett (originally Shertok) was an Israeli statesman and Zionist leader. He was the second prime minister of Israel, serving for a little less than two years (1954–1956) between DAVID BEN-GURION'S two terms.

Born in Kherson, Ukraine, he immigrated with his family to Palestine in 1906. Sharett's first home was in the Palestinian village of Ein Sinia, where he learned the Arabic language as well as Arab customs and culture. In 1910 Sharett and his family moved to JAFFA, where they became one of the founding families of Ahuzat Bayit, the earliest nucleus of the city of Tel Aviv. He was a member of the first graduating class of the first Hebrew high school in the country, the Herzliya Gymnasium.

Sharett began studying law in Istanbul, TURKEY, but World War I interrupted his studies when the German army operating in Turkey enlisted him as a translator. On returning to Palestine, he worked as an Arab affairs official and LAND purchase agent for the postwar Palestine Jewish Community's Representative Council. He was a member of AHDUT HA'AVODAH (Unity of Labor) and later of MAPAI (Israel Workers' Party). From 1922 to 1924 he studied at the London School of Economics and was active in PO'ALE ZION (Workers of Zion). Then, in 1925 he became deputy editor of the HISTADRUT labor federation's daily Davar newspaper, and he edited its English-language weekly until 1931, when he assumed the post of secretary of the JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL'S Political Department. In 1933, after the murder of HAIM ARLOZOROV, he became head of the department and held the post until the establishment of the state of Israel in 1948.

From 1933 until 1948, Sharett was in effect the Zionist movement's ambassador and chief negotiator vis-à-vis the BRITISH MANDATE authorities. His function was to maintain day-to-day contacts with the British in Palestine and to conduct a wide range of public relations activities furthering the Jewish cause before the long series of British commissions of inquiry regarding the status of the region. During World War II, Sharett worked to establish the British army's Jewish Brigade, which provided the postwar lifeline and illegal IMMIGRATION route to Mandatory Palestine for tens of thousands of European Jews. Together with other leaders of the Jewish Agency and of the prestate Yishuv, he was arrested by the British in June 1946 and detained for four months at Latrun prison.

In 1947 Sharett appeared before the UNITED NATIONS General Assembly in the debate over Palestine's partition into a Jewish and Arab state and was one of the signatories of Israel's DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE. After becoming Israel's first foreign minister in 1949, he established the nation's diplomatic service, as well as bilateral relations and embassies with dozens of countries. In January 1954 he succeeded Ben-Gurion as prime minister when the latter resigned. However, Ben-Gurion opposed Sharett, who, as a moderate, advocated diplomacy with neighboring Arab states, and he deposed Sharett from the prime ministership. On leaving the top office, Sharett again accepted the post of foreign minister but, because of sharp disagreements with Ben-Gurion, eventually resigned and left the government in 1956. In 1960 he was elected chairman of the executive of the WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION and of the Jewish Agency for Israel, and he devoted his last years to Zionist and literary activities.

Sharett's central achievement was the development of the methods and machinery of Zionist and Israeli diplomacy. Twenty-five years of his life were devoted to the task of training men for diplomatic work, in particular with the developing nations among whom Sharett believed Israel could play a special role. He was not only a deft politician but also a keen translator of poetry, a powerful public speaker, and a master of the Hebrew language. Upon retirement, he became the head of the Am Oved (Working Nation) publishing house, chairman of Beit Berl College, and representative of the LABOR PARTY at the Socialist International.

Bibliography

- Grossback, Lawrence J., David A. M. Peterson, and James A. Stimson. Mandate Politics. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 2006.
- Rokach, Livia. Israel's Sacred Terrorism: A Study Based on Moshe Sharett's Personal Diary and Other Documents, 3rd ed. Boston: Association of Arab-American University Graduates, 1985.
- Rosensaft, Menachem Z. Moshe Sharett, Statesman of Israel. New York: Shengold Publishers, 1966.
- Sachar, Howard M. A History of Israel: From the Rise of Zionism to Our Time, 2nd rev. and updated ed. New York: Alfred Knopf, 1996.

Sheffer, Gabriel. Moshe Sharett: Biography of a Political Moderate. London: Oxford University Press, 1996.

Shlaim, Avi. Conflicting Approaches to Israel's Relations with Arabs: Ben Gurion and Sharett, 1953–1956. Washington, DC: Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholarship, 1981.

Sharm al-Shaykh Declaration, 1996

The Sharm al-Shaykh Declaration was a statement condemning TERRORISM and supporting the OSLO PROCESS, made by the leaders of thirty-one countries and the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA) at a conference in Sharm al-Shaykh, EGYPT, that was convened by the UNITED STATES at Israel's behest in March 1996. The immediate reason for the conference was four SUICIDE BOMBINGS carried out by the militant Islamic group HAMAS that killed approximately sixty Israelis. The meeting exclusively focused on Palestinian terrorism and the need for the PNA to restrain Hamas and guarantee Israel's security. Terrorism against Palestinians, whether the February 1994 massacre in HEBRON'S AL-IBRAHIMI MOSQUE, the ongoing SETTLER VIOLENCE, the government's TARGETED ASSASSINATIONS, or other forms of state terrorism, was not on the agenda.

In early January 1996, Israeli prime minister SHIMON PERES gave the General Security Services (SHIN BET) permission to assassinate a Hamas leader, YAHYA AYYASH, who was allegedly the mastermind behind several earlier suicide attacks. On 5 January 1996, Israel killed Ayyash by means of a booby-trapped cellular phone, and Hamas immediately declared him a martyr and promised revenge. Shortly thereafter, Hamas carried out the four bombings.

See also OSLO PROCESS; SUICIDE BOMBINGS; TERRORISM

Bibliography

Benziman, Uzi. "Think Again about Assassination Policy." Ha'aretz. 21 October 2001.

Kimmerling, Baruch. "The Right to Resist." Ha'aretz. 27 March 2001.

Levy, Gideon. "Defining Violence." Ha'aretz. 11 March 2001.

Palestinian National Authority et al. "The Sharm al-Shaykh Declaration, Sharm al-Shaykh, Egypt, 13 March 1996." Journal of Palestine Studies. 25:4 (1996).

Sternhell, Ze'ev. "Balata Has Fallen." Ha'aretz. 8 March 2002.

Sharm al-Shaykh Fact-Finding Committee

See GEORGE JOHN MITCHELL

Sharm al-Shaykh Memorandum, 1999

On 4 September 1999, Israel and the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) signed a memorandum of understanding in the Egyptian city of Sharm al-Shaykh, known both as the Sharm al-Shaykh Memorandum and as Wye II (Sharm al-Shaykh Memorandum on Implementation Timeline of Outstanding Commitments of Agreements Signed and the Resumption of Permanent Status Negotiations). Prime Minister EHUD BARAK signed for Israel and President YASIR ARAFAT for the PLO, while the UNITED STATES, represented by Secretary of State MADELEINE ALBRIGHT, sponsored the accord; President HOSNI MUBARAK of EGYPT and King Abdullah of JORDAN witnessed and cosigned the memorandum.

Initially, Barak, who had been elected in May of that year, had decided to put the Palestine question on the back burner and instead pursue a treaty with SYRIA. However, when Damascus failed to capitulate to Israel's demands regarding a final border, Barak turned his attention to the Palestinians, who were unhappy about a series of unfulfilled commitments made by Israel in earlier agreements. Negotiations at Sharm al-Shaykh revolved around reinvigorating the WYE RIVER MEMORANDUM and resulted in an understanding that Israel would implement, in three stages, the second redeployment specified in the HEBRON PROTOCOL. The date of redeployment and extent of territory of the third redeployment were left unspecified, but Wye II called for an immediate Israeli redeployment from a further 11 percent of the WEST BANK. The agreement required Israel to begin the release of Palestinian political PRISONERS with an immediate release of 350, to facilitate the construction of a SAFE PASSAGE between the GAZA STRIP and the West Bank, and to permit Palestinian construction of a SEAPORT in Gaza. At the same time, the PNA recommitted to the pledges it made at Wye River to guarantee Israel's security. A timetable for FINAL STATUS TALKS, which would deal with JERUSALEM, BORDERS, REFUGEES, and SETTLEMENTS, set a framework agreement to be achieved by February 2000 and a permanent agreement by September 2000. All the Israeli commitments made at Sharm al-Shaykh had been negotiated in prior agreements, several as far back as the GAZA-JERICHO AGREEMENT (1994), but had been suspended or canceled by various Israeli governments. Moreover, Wye II, as with previous agreements, was qualified by a series of appendices, modifications, and annexes insisted on by Israel.

Barak failed to implement the majority of the commitments he promised in the Sharm al-Shaykh Memorandum by the start of the July 2000 CAMP DAVID SUMMIT, which was the main reason the Palestinians did not want to hold the summit.

Bibliography

Beinin, Joel. "The Oslo Process—Back on Track?" Middle East Report. 7 October 1999.

"Israel and the PLO: Sharm al-Shaykh Memorandum on Implementation of Outstanding Commitments of Agreements Signed and the Resumption of Permanent Status Negotiations, Sharm al-Shaykh, Egypt, 4 September 1999." Journal of Palestine Studies. 29:2 (2000).

Migdalovitz, Carol. The Middle East Peace Talks: CRS Issue Brief for Congress. Washington, DC: Congressional Research Service, Library of Congress, 2003.

Pundak, Ron. From Oslo to Taba: What Went Wrong? Peres Center for Peace Research, 2001. www.peres-center.org/media/Upload/61.pdf.

Sharon, Ariel (1928–)

Ariel Sharon (originally Ariel Scheinermann) was an Israeli army general, defense minister, prime minister, and LIKUD PARTY leader. He was also a prominent and consistent proponent of military solutions to the Arab-Israeli-Palestinian conflict and a key supporter of SETTLEMENT expansion in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. He was born in Kfar Malal in BRITISH MANDATE Palestine to a family of "Lithuanian Jews"—Shmuel Sheinermann of Brest-Litovsk (now Brest, Belarus) and Dvora (formerly Vera) of Mogilev—who immigrated to Palestine during the second ALIYA.

Military Career

At age ten, Sharon entered the Zionist youth movement Hassadeh ("the Field"). In 1942 at the age of fourteen, he joined the Ha-Gadna, a paramilitary youth organization, and later became a member of the HAGANA, the underground military force that, after 1948, formed the basis of the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF). At the time of Israel's establishment, he was a platoon commander in the Alexandroni Brigade and was seriously wounded by the British-led Jordanian Arab Legion in the Second Battle of Latrun. From the outset of his military career, Sharon evidenced a remarkable will to fight and take risks and demonstrated immense physical courage. These qualities, along with his ideological commitment to the Jewish, more than the democratic, nature of the new Israeli state, attracted the attention of military leaders. In 1949 Sharon, then only twenty-one years old, was promoted to company commander (of the Golani Brigade's reconnaissance unit), and then in 1951 to intelligence officer. Sharon's own description of himself, as noted in his autobiography, is "Warrior." Yet questions have shadowed Sharon's military career for more than six decades. His role in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict has always been controversial and polarizing. Zionists view him as a tough and uncompromising hero capable of doing whatever is necessary to defend the Jewish state. Palestinians, as well as many others, view him as a war criminal who enjoyed immunity for a series of grave violations of international humanitarian law stretching from the early 1950s until the present day.

In the fall of 1951, Sharon studied history and Middle Eastern culture at the Hebrew University of JERUSALEM. Eighteen months later, he was asked to return to active service with the rank of major as leader of the newly formed group UNIT 101, Israel's first Special Forces platoon. Unit 101 quickly undertook a series of retaliatory raids against Palestinians and neighboring Arab states that helped bolster Israeli morale and fortified the young state's aggressive and deterrent image at home and abroad, while also drawing negative responses from the international community, including the UNITED STATES. In the fall of 1953, Unit 101 was criticized for targeting civilians in the widely condemned massacre in the West Bank village of QIBYA, then under Jordanian control. Sharon's troops blew up forty-five houses and killed sixty-nine Palestinian civilians, about half of them women and children.

The US Department of State issued a statement on 18 October 1953 expressing its "deepest sympathy for the families of those who lost their lives" in the Qibya attack, as well as the conviction that those responsible "should be brought to account and that effective measures should be taken to prevent such incidents in the future.” In a 1999 film documentary, Israel and the Arabs: The 50 Year War, Sharon recounted: “I was summoned to see [Prime Minister DAVID] BEN-GURION. It was the first time I met him. And right from the start [he] said to me: ‘Let me first tell you one thing: it doesn’t matter what the world says about Israel, it doesn’t matter what they say about us anywhere else. The only thing that matters is that we can exist here on the land of our forefathers. And unless we show the Arabs that there is a high price to pay for murdering Jews, we won’t survive.’” This philosophy underpinned Sharon’s entire military and political career.

Unit 101 was soon merged into the 202nd Paratroopers Brigade, of which Sharon became the commander. Under Sharon the brigade continued to attack military targets, culminating in an attack on the Qalqilya police station on the West Bank (then part of JORDAN) in the autumn of 1956. During the 1956 SINAI/SUEZ WAR, Sharon was responsible for taking the Sinai’s Mitla Pass from EGYPT. His forces were initially heading east, away from the pass, but he reported to his superiors that he feared a possible enemy attack in the Mitla Pass that could endanger his brigade from the rear. Although Sharon’s requests for permission to attack the pass were denied, he was authorized to send a small reconnaissance unit to backtrack, which met with heavy fire and became trapped in the middle of the pass. Sharon then unilaterally ordered the rest of his troops to attack the Egyptians to save their comrades. Over forty IDF soldiers died in the ensuing battle, but Sharon’s brigade succeeded in capturing Mitla Pass. In a scenario that would be repeated later in his career, Sharon’s commanding officers harshly criticized him for defying his superiors, taking risks, ignoring orders, and endangering his troops. In 1995 a controversy erupted when evidence came to light that paratroopers under Sharon’s command in 1956 had executed over 250 Egyptian prisoners of war. The killings were revealed in a paper on the Sinai campaign commissioned by the army’s military history division.

In 1957 Sharon studied at the Camberley Staff College in Great Britain. From 1958 to 1962, he served as an infantry brigade commander and then as infantry school commander, being appointed head of the IDF’s Northern Command in 1964 and head of the Army Training Department in 1966. In the mid-1960s, Sharon also obtained a law degree from Tel Aviv University. Although the 1956 Mitla incident slowed Sharon’s military career, his role in the 1967 WAR marked a change in his fortunes and ensured his upward trajectory in the ranks of the IDF. In the 1967 War, Sharon served as commander of the most powerful armored division in the Sinai, which broke through the Kusseima-Abu-Ageila fortified area, guaranteeing the IDF’s control of the Egyptian front.

In 1969 Sharon became head of the IDF’s Southern Command. Four years later, in August 1973, he retired from military service. However, Sharon’s military career was far from finished. Two months later, with the outbreak of the 1973 OCTOBER WAR with SYRIA and Egypt, he was called back to duty and commanded a reserve armored division. In this capacity, he identified a breach in the Egyptian forces’ lines that he rapidly exploited by capturing a bridgehead on 16 October and building a bridge across the Suez Canal the next day. As in the past, Sharon ignored or violated orders from his superiors and cut the supply lines of the Egyptian Third Army to the south of the canal crossing, isolating it from other Egyptian units. His troops then advanced into Egypt, eventually stopping just 100 kilometers (62 miles) outside of Cairo. Although a military tribunal investigated Sharon’s unilateral actions, no charges were brought given that his initiatives and risk-taking were crucial in defeating the Egyptian army. In fact, many Israelis viewed his actions as the key turning point of the war in the Sinai. Because of his prominence during the 1973 war, Sharon attained popular status as a gutsy war hero whose pluck and courage had saved Israel during a dark hour.

The mid-1970s marked the beginning of his political career, and in the early 1980s, as minister of defense in MENAHEM BEGIN’s Likud government, Sharon would once again figure prominently on the military scene—as would sharp controversies over his decisions on the field of battle.

Defense Minister and Lebanon War

Within the IDF Sharon’s hawkish political positions were controversial, and he was relieved of duty in February 1974. After retiring from military service, he was instrumental in establishing the Likud in July 1973 by a merger of HERUT, the LIBERAL PARTY, and independent elements. Sharon became chairman of the campaign staff for that year's elections, which were scheduled for November. Two and a half weeks after the start of the election campaign, the October War erupted and Sharon was called back to reserve service. In the elections Sharon won a seat, but a year later he resigned.

From June 1975 to March 1976, Sharon was a special aide to Prime Minister YITZHAK RABIN. He planned his return to politics for the 1977 elections; first he tried to return to the Likud and replace Menahem Begin as the head of the party. He suggested to Simha Erlich, who headed the Liberal Party bloc in the Likud, that he was more fit than Begin to win an election victory; he was rejected, however. He then tried to join the LABOR PARTY and the centrist Democratic Movement for Change, but was rejected by those parties, too. Only then did he form his own list, Shlomtzion, which won two Knesset seats in the 1977 elections. Immediately after the elections he merged Shlomtzion with the Likud and became minister of agriculture.

Sharon's political fortunes and Israel's electoral landscape changed dramatically after he forged a strategic alliance with Begin in the late 1970s. In 1977, in cooperation with Begin, the center-right Likud defeated Labor in the Israeli elections for the first time. Upon assuming office in the new right-wing government, Sharon became an avid supporter of the GUSH EMUNIM (Bloc of the Faithful) settlers, eventually becoming identified as the patron of the messianic political movement. Under Begin and Sharon, Jewish settlement construction in the Occupied Territories escalated dramatically. Sharon facilitated a network of new settlements in the West Bank, creating "facts on the ground" meant to prevent any future return of these territories to the Palestinians. His unstinting efforts doubled the number of settlements in the West Bank and GAZA STRIP in just a few years. Though he was never religious himself, Sharon's support for Gush Emunim reflected his commitment to a GREATER LAND OF ISRAEL.

After the 1981 elections, Begin rewarded Sharon for his important contribution to Likud's narrow win by appointing him minister of defense. On 16 January 1982 US president RONALD REAGAN, in his diary, wrote that Sharon was "the bad guy who seemingly looks forward to a war." Indeed, the 1982 LEBANON WAR proved Reagan's remarks prescient.

The most controversial chapter of Sharon's military career and role in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict unfolded in 1982 as Israel launched OPERATION BIG PINES (Peace for Galilee) and invaded war-torn LEBANON. In 1981 Begin had appointed Sharon as his defense minister, and Sharon used this post, together with a broad right-wing network he had cultivated in Israel and abroad during the previous two decades, to strengthen an existing alliance with Lebanese Christian militias and lobby the Reagan administration for wider leeway for Israeli military intervention in Lebanon—ultimately to launch the IDF's 1982 military adventure in Lebanon. The stated purpose of the invasion was twofold: to retaliate for the attempted assassination of Israeli ambassador Shlomo Argov in London and to prevent attacks on northern Israel from PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) positions in southern Lebanon, even though Israel's northern border had been relatively quiet throughout 1981–1982 and Argov's would-be assassins turned out to be unaffiliated with YASIR ARAFAT'S PLO. Sharon's actual aim in invading Lebanon was to destroy the PLO's INFRASTRUCTURE in Beirut and thereby weaken the political will of Palestinians in the Occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

In May and June 1982, Sharon and his allies, including US secretary of state ALEXANDER HAIG, laid the groundwork for the invasion of Lebanon, a military operation that involved laying siege to Beirut and destroying the PLO's institutions and presence in Lebanon. According to statistics published in the Third World Quarterly in 1984, Israeli forces killed or wounded over 29,500 Palestinians and Lebanese between 4 July 1982 and 15 August 1982. Most of these were civilians, and approximately 40 percent were children. The IDF used cluster, phosphorus, and vacuum bombs in the densely populated western half of Beirut. In August relentless air strikes on the city killed hundreds in a matter of hours. For the first time in the history of the Jewish state, world opinion began to turn against Israeli military actions. The invasion of Lebanon also catalyzed significant opposition to Sharon from within Israeli society, mobilizing many to speak out, including decorated IDF officers and prominent intellectuals.

The darkest chapter of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, and the darkest chapter in Sharon's military career, was the September 1982 massacre of over 1,000 Palestinian and Lebanese civilians at the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps on the southern outskirts of Beirut. The slaughter in the two contiguous camps, which lasted from the evening of 16 September until the morning of 18 September, took place in an area under the undisputed control of the Israeli armed forces. The perpetrators were members of the SAAD HADDAD'S SOUTH LEBANON ARMY and the PHALANGE (Kata'eb) militia, Lebanese forces that were armed, trained by, and closely allied with Israel since the onset of Lebanon's civil war in 1975.

The question of direct Israeli involvement in the SABRA AND SHATILA MASSACRE is one that has never been fully resolved. However, as many journalists and investigators noted, it was not credible that Israeli troops surrounding the two camps were unaware of the atrocities occurring inside. The IDF's observation post atop the Kuwaiti Embassy afforded a clear view into the camps, including areas where bodies were piled. Sharon had given assurances in August 1982 to US envoy Philip Habib that Israeli and Phalangist forces would not enter West Beirut following the negotiated departure of PLO leader Yasir Arafat and Palestinian fighters. However, following the assassination of Israel's ally and newly elected Lebanese president Bashir Gemayel on 14 September 1982, Sharon and his staff ordered the Israeli army to enter West Beirut to "keep the peace." IDF control of West Beirut facilitated the entry of Phalangist and other forces into the camps. Once inside, the IDF supplied the Christian militia with food, water, medicine, and ammunition throughout the hours of the massacre, and provided light with illuminated flares during the nights of the massacre.

An official Israeli commission of inquiry, chaired by Yitzhak Kahan, president of the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT, investigated the massacre in the fall of 1982. In February 1983, the Kahan Commission, as the nonjudicial inquiry is known, published its findings that Sharon, among other Israelis, bore "personal responsibility" for the massacre while carefully sidestepping any accusation of direct IDF involvement in the killings. The KAHAN COMMISSION REPORT stated: "It is our view that responsibility is to be imputed to the Minister of Defense [Ariel Sharon] for having disregarded the danger of acts of vengeance and bloodshed by the Phalangists against the population of the REFUGEE camps, and having failed to take this danger into account when he decided to have the Phalangists enter the camps. In addition, responsibility is to be imputed to the Minister of Defense for not ordering appropriate measures for preventing or reducing the danger of massacre as a condition for the Phalangists' entry into the camps. These blunders constitute the non-fulfillment of a duty with which the Defense Minister was charged." The commission also concluded: "[I]n his meeting with the Phalangist commanders, the Defense Minister made no attempt to point out to them the gravity of the danger that their men would commit acts of slaughter. . . . Had it become clear to the Defense Minister that no real supervision could be exercised over the Phalangist force that entered the camps with the IDF's assent, his duty would have been to prevent their entry. The usefulness of the Phalangists' entry into the camps was wholly disproportionate to the damage their entry could cause if it were uncontrolled." The commission further noted, "It is ostensibly puzzling that the Defense Minister did not in any way make the Prime Minister [Menahem Begin] privy to the decision on having the Phalangists enter the camps."

The taint of the Sabra and Shatila Massacre did not fade with time. In 1987, Time magazine published a story implying that Sharon was directly responsible for the massacres, and Sharon sued Time for libel in US and Israeli courts. Time won the suit in the US court because Sharon could not establish that the magazine's editors had "acted out of malice," as required under US law, although the jury found the article false and defamatory. Nearly a quarter of a century after the massacre, just as Sharon was emerging as the lead candidate for prime minister in early 2001, twenty-eight survivors of the massacre filed a formal legal complaint in Belgium charging Sharon, IDF generals Amos Yaron and Rafael Eitan, and various Phalangist leaders with war crimes and crimes against humanity. From 1993 until 2003, Belgium had an "anti-atrocity" law that enabled victims of violations of international humanitarian law to seek justice in Belgian courts under the principle of universal jurisdiction. Four months before the trial was to begin, the Belgian legislature, responding to US pressure, rescinded this law and halted the use of Belgium's national courts for the pursuit of international justice—this after the Belgian Supreme Court ruled in 2003 that the Sabra and Shatila plaintiffs had a sturdy case and that investigations could begin concerning the roles of all but Sharon in the lead-up to and commission of the massacre. As a sitting prime minister, Sharon would have enjoyed procedural immunity, in keeping with a decision in a similar case by the International Court of Justice in the Hague in February 2002. The Sabra and Shatila case raised new questions about overall IDF involvement in the massacre, alarmed the Israeli government, and disturbed Israeli-Belgian bilateral relations.

Political Career

In 1983, because of the Kahan Commission findings, Sharon resigned from the Defense Ministry but remained a member of the Knesset and a minister without portfolio. He subsequently served as minister of trade and industry (1984–1990) and minister of construction and housing (1990–1992). In the Knesset, he was a member of the Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee (1990–1992) and chairman of the committee overseeing Jewish IMMIGRATION from the Soviet Union. During this period he was a rival to Prime Minister YITZHAK SHAMIR, but failed in various bids to replace him as chairman of Likud. Their rivalry reached a head in February 1990, when Sharon snapped the microphone from Shamir, who was addressing the Likud central committee, and famously exclaimed: “Who’s for wiping out TERRORISM?” The incident was widely viewed as an apparent coup attempt against Shamir’s leadership of the party.

In 1996 Sharon became minister of national infrastructure in BENJAMIN NETANYAHU’S cabinet, and in 1998 he was also appointed foreign minister. After Netanyahu lost the prime ministership to ONE ISRAEL (LABOR) PARTY leader EHUD BARAK in 1999, Sharon succeeded Netanyahu as leader of the Likud bloc.

In the realm of international relations, Sharon played a key role in renewing diplomatic relations with African states that had broken ties with Israel during the 1973 War. In November 1981, he engineered a more detailed STRATEGIC COOPERATION agreement between Israel and the United States and widened defense ties between Israel and many nations, including South Africa. While he served as minister of trade and industry, he concluded the Free Trade Agreement with the United States. As minister of construction and housing, he oversaw a massive increase in settlement construction in the Occupied Territories. Following the fall of the Soviet Union and the waves of immigration to Israel from Russia, Sharon initiated and carried out a program to absorb the immigrants throughout the country, including the construction of 144,000 apartments. He also helped bring thousands of Jews from Ethiopia to Israel through Sudan. In 1998 Sharon was appointed foreign minister.

Apart from his close association with the Sabra and Shatila Massacre, perhaps the greatest impact Sharon has had on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict has been his successful and unrelenting efforts to consolidate settlements and associated infrastructure in the occupied Palestinian territories. According to an Agence France-Presse report of 15 November 1998, while addressing a meeting of militants from the extreme right-wing TZOMET party, then-foreign minister Sharon stated: “Everybody has to move, run, and grab as many hilltops as they can to enlarge the settlements because everything we take now will stay ours. Everything we don’t grab will go to them.” During the Oslo period, owing to efforts by both Sharon and the Likud and Labor governments, Israel established thirty new settlement outposts and thus nearly doubled the settler population in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, from 109,000 in 1993 to nearly 200,000 in 1999.

After Ehud Barak became prime minister in 1999, Sharon succeeded Netanyahu as leader of the Likud bloc. One year later, in late September 2000, he made headlines and helped provoke the Palestinian uprising, the AL-AQSA INTIFADA, when he visited the AL-HARAM ASH-SHARIF (which most Israelis call the TEMPLE MOUNT) in the company of hundreds of security guards. Sharon’s visit to the third holiest site in Islam was an attempt to demonstrate Israel’s sovereignty over all of Jerusalem, especially over the al-Haram ash-Sharif, and to provoke an angry response. Ever the strategist, though, Sharon’s ultimate goal was not to make a symbolic statement but to catalyze the right wing of the Israeli public, which later castigated Barak for being too restrained in the face of the ensuing Palestinian uprising. On 19 October 2000, the UN Human Rights Commission, meeting in an emergency session, condemned “the provocative visit to the Al-Haram Ash-Sharif on 28 September 2000 by Ariel Sharon, the Likud party leader, which triggered the tragic events that followed in occupied East Jerusalem and the other Occupied Palestinian Territories, resulting in a high number of deaths and injuries among Palestinian civilians.”

Despite the Kahan Commission's findings in 1983, which many thought would halt Sharon's political as well as military career, he was elected prime minister of Israel in February 2001. Following the 11 September 2001 al-Qaida attacks in New York and Washington, D.C., Sharon's unilateralist and aggressive strategies toward the Palestinian people and their political representatives received increased support from the administration of GEORGE W. BUSH. Discourses emphasizing a "clash of civilization," a need to confront "the axis of evil," and the equation of Islamic political movements with terrorism enabled Sharon to undertake, with impunity, a wide-ranging military thrust, OPERATION DEFENSIVE SHIELD, and other major military offensives in the West Bank in the spring of 2002. In response to a series of SUICIDE BOMBINGS against Israeli civilians and soldiers by Palestinian militants, most but not all of whom were members of Islamist groups, the IDF reoccupied towns and villages that had been under control of the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA) in the mid-1990s. The headquarters (al-muqata') of PNA president Arafat in Ramallah was a target of particularly relentless IDF attacks. Its destruction and Arafat's subsequent isolation and marginalization in the bombed-out al-muqata' symbolized Palestinian powerlessness. In addition to destroying numerous homes, businesses, and much of the JENIN refugee camp during the spring of 2002, the IDF under Sharon's prime ministership also destroyed the law enforcement and security structures of the PNA. Despite pursuing a policy of decapitating the Palestinian leadership and the emerging institutional legal frameworks in the West Bank and Gaza, Sharon continued to call upon the Palestinians to exercise more control over their violent factions and to guard the security of the Israeli state in return for a resumption of negotiations.

Paralleling the US "global war on terror," the IDF under Sharon's government used F-16 fighter jets, armored bulldozers, Apache attack helicopters, TARGETED ASSASSINATIONS, systematic HOUSE DEMOLITIONS, and the killing of international peace observers and journalists to crush the al-Aqsa Intifada. In July 2002, the Israeli air force dropped a one-ton bomb on a heavily populated apartment building in the Gaza Strip to assassinate an alleged HAMAS party leader, killing more than a dozen other people, seven of them children. Sharon termed this operation a "great success." Despite worldwide outrage at the IDF's heavy-handed techniques in suppressing the Intifada, Sharon continued to be warmly welcomed in Washington as a "man of peace" by President Bush.

Sharon's national unity government collapsed in October 2002, forcing him to call elections for early 2003, which resulted in another Likud victory. In 2003 his government accepted the internationally supported ROAD MAP for peace, with, however, fourteen "clarifications" that repudiated the plan's essence. He briefly resumed negotiations with the Palestinians in 2003, but in the same year the IDF launched massive incursions into the Gaza Strip, razing homes and refugee camps in the Rafah area and killing hundreds of civilians in the process. On 20 July 2004, Sharon called on French Jews to emigrate from FRANCE to Israel immediately, in light of an increase in French ANTI-SEMITISM, causing a confrontation with French president Jacques Chirac. From 16 August to 30 August 2005, as a means of consolidating Israel's control over the West Bank and preventing the establishment of a viable, contiguous Palestinian state, Sharon instructed the IDF to remove 8,500 Jewish settlers from twenty-one settlements in Gaza. ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA was welcomed by some Israelis and by some in the PNA, as well as by the United States and the EUROPEAN UNION, as a step toward a final peace settlement, but it drew criticism from within the Likud Party, which believed it was unacceptable to withdraw from any part of Eretz Yisrael. Despite emotional protests and threats emanating from those to the right of the prime minister, Israeli settlers and soldiers formally left Gaza on 11 September 2005 after bulldozing every settlement structure except for several former synagogues.

Never a supporter of the OSLO ACCORDS initiated by Rabin with the PLO, Sharon pursued policies that many believe have permanently damaged the prospects for a TWO-STATE SOLUTION, the most salient being the BARRIER separating Palestinians from their lands, families, and religious and educational institutions. In a July 2004 advisory ruling, the International Court of Justice at The Hague declared the Barrier to be a violation of international humanitarian law. As initially proposed by Labor leaders and resisted by the Likud, the Barrier would have demarcated Israel's borders with the Palestinians on the internationally recognized Green Line separating Israel from the Occupied Territories. Under Sharon, however, the Barrier has been built in such a way as to include Israeli settlements and prime Palestinian farmlands on the Israeli side of the Barrier while leaving Palestinians in isolated communities on the other side. Using arguments that resonate with current US and even European Union concerns with security and the prevention of terrorist attacks, Sharon managed to prevent Israel from paying any price for building this structure in violation of INTERNATIONAL LAW.

In November 2005, in the context of refusing to resume any bilateral negotiations with SYRIA, Sharon stated that Israel would not return the Golan Heights (which Israel had taken in the 1967 War) to Syria and hinted at Israel's next move—annexing the JORDAN RIFT VALLEY. On 27 September 2005, Sharon narrowly survived a leadership challenge by a 52–48 percent vote. His main rival, Netanyahu, who had left the cabinet to express his opposition to Sharon's Gaza withdrawal, launched his challenge to Sharon within the Likud Party's central committee. Sharon responded by creating a new party, KADIMA, taking with him many Likud members as well as some individuals from Labor.

In early January 2006, Ariel Sharon suffered a massive stroke and never regained consciousness, although he remains alive in early 2010.

Bibliography

- Benziman, Uzi. Sharon: An Israeli Caesar. New York: Adama Books, 1985.
- Borneman, John, ed. The Case of Ariel Sharon and the Future of Universal Jurisdiction. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2004.
- Finkelstein, Norman H. Ariel Sharon. New York: First Avenue Editions, 2005.
- Fisk, Robert. Pity the Nation: The Abduction of Lebanon. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1990.
- Glazov, Jamie. "Ariel Sharon—Ending the Occupation." FrontPage Magazine. 28 May 2003. www.FrontPageMag.com.
- Gozani, Ohad. "Israelis Admit Massacre." The Daily Telegraph. 16 August 1995.
- Kahan Commission. Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Events at the Refugee Camps in Beirut. Jerusalem: Israel Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 1983.
- Kimmerling, Baruch. Politicide: Ariel Sharon's War against the Palestinians. London: Verso, 2003.
- Miller, Anita, Jordan Miller, and Sigalit Zetouni. Sharon: Israel's Warrior-Politician. Chicago: Academy Chicago Publishers, 2002.
- Miller, Robin. "Ariel Sharon's Vision: Maximal Killing." Common Dreams. 12 July 2002. www.CommonDreams.org.

- Pfaff, William. "Ariel Sharon's Legacy." International Herald Tribune. 5 January 2006.
- Pipes, Daniel. "Ariel Sharon, Escapist." FrontPage Magazine. 28 November 2005. www.FrontPageMag.com.
- Pryce-Jones, David. "Book Review: Who Is Ariel Sharon? Sharon: Israel's Warrior-Politician." National Review. 16 September 2002.
- Randal, Jonathan. The Tragedy of Lebanon: Christian Warlords, Israeli Adventurers, and American Bunglers, 2nd ed. London: Chatto and Windus, 1984.
- Schiff, Ze'ev, and Ehud Ya'ari. Israel's Lebanon War. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1984.
- Sharon, Ariel. With David Chanoff. Warrior: The Autobiography of Ariel Sharon, 2nd ed. New York: Simon and Schuster, 2001.
- Shlaim, Avi. The Iron Wall: Israel and the Arab World. New York: W. W. Norton, 2000.
- Siegmán, Henry. "Sharon and the Future of Palestine." New York Review of Books. 51:19 (2004). www.nybooks.com/articles/17591.

—Laurie King-Irani

Sharon's Unilateral Disengagement from Gaza

See ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA

Shas

Shas (Shomerei-Torah Sephardim or Shisha Sedarim, meaning Six Orders of the Mishnah and Talmud) is a HAREDI SEPHARDIC political party in Israel. Founded in the early 1970s, it first entered the Knesset in 1984, winning 4 seats (of 120). In the 1999 election it won 17 seats; in 2003 it won 11 seats; and in the 2006 elections it gained 1 more seat and joined EHUD OLMERT's coalition. In 2009 Shas won 11 seats and became part of the coalition government of BENJAMIN NETANYAHU. Often the third largest party in the Knesset, Shas has frequently served a pivotal role in the formation of governing coalitions. Although Shas defines itself as an Orthodox religious party, it draws votes from the wider Sephardic and MIZRAHI communities, largely because it has secured increased government allotments to education, housing, and HEALTH CARE services for its constituencies.

Shas's position on the Palestinian issue is somewhat ambiguous and has changed over time. The following constitute Shas's primary principles:

- Supports the Talmudic precept of the supreme value of preserving life and is therefore amenable to an unspecified territorial compromise if that would bring true peace
- Supports the Greater Israel consolidation movement
- Supports autonomy for Palestinians but opposes a Palestinian state
- Supports existing Jewish SETTLEMENTS but would agree to freeze settlement expansion activity in the Occupied Territories under certain, unspecified circumstances
- A strong advocate of Halakha (Jewish religious law) playing a pivotal role and providing a fulcrum for the operation of the state and its identity
- Opposes negotiations with the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION or any other Arab “terrorist” organization
- Demands and endorses an immediate compensation package for those Sephardi and Mizrahi Jews who were forced to leave their host countries and their subsequent property behind

In the past, Shas’s views on the Palestinians were relatively flexible. More recently, however, it has moved to the right because many Haredi now live in West Bank settlements, and Shas has a vested interest in incorporating the territories into Israel. The Haredi came to the settlements for three reasons: they needed affordable housing no longer available in and around JERUSALEM or Tel Aviv for their typically large families of eight to twelve children; they were rejected by other Israeli cities as too cultlike; and officials wanted their presence to broaden Israel’s narrow BORDERS. Major Haredi settlements include Beitar Illit with a population of 40,000 and Modi’in Illit, the largest settlement, with 45,000 residents and sixty births a week, the fastest-growing Jewish community in the WEST BANK. Other Haredi settlements, smaller in size, are Immanuel, Matityahu, Ma’ale Amos, Nahliel, and Asfar. In 2005 there were over 70,000 ultra-Orthodox living in the West Bank.

Originally Shas was created to provide representation for the ultra-Orthodox Sephardim and to promote Torah education. It came about as a result of ethnic and religious divisions in Israel between the Sephardic-Mizrahi communities on the one hand and the ASHKENAZI (European) Jews on the other. During the first decades of Israeli statehood, Oriental Jews—that is, Sephardic and Mizrahi—did not establish their own political or religious movements or institutions, and most were absorbed into the established Ashkenazi bodies. The main religious political movements, the AGUDAT YISRAEL and the prestate Mizrahi (which evolved into the NATIONAL RELIGIOUS PARTY), had few Sephardim among their leadership. By the mid-1970s, the Agudat Yisrael movement continued to see itself as an Eastern European constituency, and the great Sephardic rabbinic authorities were often held in disdain. The result was the creation of a Sephardic equivalent to Agudat Israel—Shas, with its own Council of Torah Sages. (www.aishdas.org/webshas).

See also ISRAELI POLITICAL PARTIES AND SETTLEMENTS; RABBI OVADIA YOSEF

Bibliography

- Alush, Zvi. “Shas Spiritual Leader Ovadia Yosef: Hurricane Katrina Result of Bush’s Support for Disengagement.” YnetNews.com. 7 September 2005. www.ynetnews.com/articles/0,7340,L-3138779,00.html.
- Ben-Rafael, E., and S. Sharot. Ethnicity, Religion and Class in Israeli Society. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1991.
- Berman, Daphna. “Evangelical Christians Team Up with Shas against Gay Parade.” The World Congress of Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, and Transgender Jews. 15 March 2005. (Article from Ha’aretz, 15 March 2005.)
- Bronner, Ethan, and Isabel Kershner. “In West Bank Settlements, Sign of Hope for a Deal.” New York Times. 26 July 2009.
- Etikes, Dror, and Lara Friedman. The Ultra-Orthodox Jews in the West Bank—October 2005. Jerusalem: Peace Now, 2005. <http://www.peacenow.org.il/site/en/peace.asp?pi=62&docid=1515>.
- Friedman, M. The Haredi Society: Sources, Trends, and Processes (Hebrew). Jerusalem: The Jerusalem Institute for Israel Studies, 1991.
- Pelham, Nicolas. “Israel’s Religious Right and the Peace Process.” Middle East Report Online. 12 October 2009. <http://www.merip.org/mero/mero101209.html>.
- Ravitzky, A. “Exile in the Holy Land: The Dilemma of Haredi Jewry.” In Israel: State and Society, 1948–1988. Edited by P. Medding. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1989.
- . “Religious Radicalism and Political Messianism in Israel.” In Religious Radicalism and Politics in the Middle East. Edited by E. Sivan and M. Friedman. Albany, NY: SUNY Press, 1990.
- Segal, Eliezer. “Developments in Israeli Sephardic Orthodoxy.” Varieties of Orthodox Judaism. n.d. www.ucalgary.ca/~elsegal/363\_Transp/Orthodoxy/Shas.html.
- Wallace, A. “Revitalization Movements.” American Anthropologist. 58 (April 1956).

Willis, Aaron P. "Redefining Religious Zionism: Shas' Ethno-Politics." Israel Studies Bulletin. 8:2 (1992).
 ———. "Shas—The Sephardic Torah Guardians: Religious 'Movement' and Political Power." In The Elections in Israel—1992. Edited by Asher Arian and Michael Shamir. Albany, NY: SUNY Press, 1995.

Sha'th, Nabil (1938–)

Nabil Sha'th is a Western-educated, wealthy Palestinian businessman and a senior PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) and PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA) official; he was also a close personal adviser to the late YASIR ARAFAT. Born in JAFFA, Palestine, he was dispossessed with his family in the 1948 WAR and settled in the Egyptian city of Alexandria. After his studies in Alexandria, he earned a Ph.D. from the Wharton School of Economics at the University of Pennsylvania. After Sha'th returned to Cairo from the UNITED STATES in 1965, he went to LEBANON in 1969 to teach at the American University in Beirut. While at the university, he also worked as an industry consultant and management trainer (heading a company called TEAM) in Algeria, KUWAIT, SAUDI ARABIA, and Lebanon. Sha'th also worked with several Arab governments as a consultant. He established the Engineering and Management Institute and the Arab Center for Administrative Development in Beirut and Cairo with fourteen branches throughout the Arab world that trained thousands of Arab business managers.

Sha'th joined the PLO in 1970, served as an adviser to Arafat from 1971 until Arafat's death in 2004, and was the head of the PLO Planning Center from 1971 to 1981. For years he dreamed of a single, secular nation of Muslims, Christians, and Jews in Palestine, and he is credited as being the founder of the Democratic Secular State approach, although today he is committed to the TWO-STATE SOLUTION of separate Jewish and Palestinian states. In 1974 he wrote the "gun or the olive branch" speech that Arafat delivered to the UNITED NATIONS General Assembly and subsequently headed the first Palestinian delegation to the United Nations. In 1993 Sha'th, together with AHMAD QUREI' (Abu Ala), founded the PALESTINIAN ECONOMIC COUNCIL FOR DEVELOPMENT AND RECONSTRUCTION (PECDAR).

In March 1990 Sha'th was appointed to the Fatah Central Committee. He was a member of the delegation to the MADRID CONFERENCE and played a leading role in the OSLO ACCORDS between the PLO and Israel, writing the Palestinian draft of the DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES for the Oslo agreement and helping to write the GAZA-JERICO AGREEMENT I. Sha'th served as the PLO's chief negotiator at the TABA TALKS and was a Palestinian Legislative Council member for Khan Yunis in the GAZA STRIP. Sha'th made news in October 2005 by commenting for a BBC documentary that in a 2003 meeting with US president GEORGE W. BUSH, Bush was "driven with a mission from God," a claim he later retracted. On 15 December 2005 Sha'th became acting prime minister of the PNA after Ahmad Qurei' resigned. He lost that position nine days later when Qurei' returned to office.

Despite Sha'th's vast personal wealth, which is believed to be extensive from his business enterprises around the Arab world, in 1997 he was accused by the Palestine National Council (PNC), the PLO legislative body, of gross corruption. The PNC demanded that he give up his positions in the PNA and be brought to trial, and recommended his imprisonment. Although in August 1998 a commission found evidence of criminal corruption, Sha'th remained in power and was given another high position in the PNA under the presidency of MAHMUD ABBAS. Considered aloof and arrogant, Sha'th does not have a local power base among Palestinians in the WEST BANK and Gaza. He is known to be pro-United States, favors concessions to Israel, especially on security issues, and opposes rights for Palestinian REFUGEES.

At Fatah's sixth general conference, held in BETHLEHEM in August 2009, Nabil Sha'th was elected to the twenty-one-person ruling Central Committee.

Bibliography

- Khalidi, Rashid. The Iron Cage: The Story of the Palestinian Struggle for Statehood. Boston: Beacon Press, 2006.
 Norton, Augustus, and Martin Greenberg, eds. The International Relations of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Carbondale and Edwardsville: Southern Illinois University Press, 1989.

Shaw Commission, 1930

The Shaw Commission was a British committee of inquiry sent to Palestine to investigate the 1929 WESTERN WALL DISTURBANCES, which led to the deaths of 133 Jews and 116 Palestinians. Its mandate was to determine the cause of the violence and to propose policies that would prevent further conflict. Headed by Sir Walter Shaw, the commission issued its findings in March 1930 and linked the violence with the Palestinians' feeling of animosity and hostility toward the Jews due to the rapid development of the Yishuv, their increasing economic insecurity, LAND confiscation, and continuous Jewish IMMIGRATION, in addition to the Palestinians' own political and national aspirations. The report stated that Palestinians feared that through "Jewish immigration and land purchases they may be deprived of their livelihood and placed under the economic domination of the Jews."

Based on these findings, the Shaw Commission recommended a British policy of restricted Jewish immigration and limited land purchase. The British government, however, took no action on the commission's recommendations and instead sent another committee of inquiry to Palestine—the HOPE-SIMPSON COMMISSION—in May 1930 to study and investigate the issues further. The findings of the Hope-Simpson Commission were made public in the 1930 PASSFIELD WHITE PAPER.

See also BRITISH MANDATE

Bibliography

- Matthews, Weldon. Confronting an Empire, Constructing a Nation: Arab Nationalists and Popular Politics in Mandate Palestine. London: I. B. Tauris, 2006.
- Segev, Tom. One Palestine, Complete: Jews and Arabs under the British Mandate. New York: Henry Holt, 2001.
- Shepherd, Naomi. Plowing Sand: British Rule in Palestine, 1917–1948. Piscataway, NJ: Rutgers University Press, 2000.

Al-Shawwa, Hajj Rashad (ca. 1908–1988)

Rashad al-Shawwa was a leading Palestinian citrus merchant and large landowner, a conservative, pro-Jordanian politician, and twice mayor of the GAZA STRIP. In September 1971, hoping that he could help to quell the Palestinian disturbances in the Gaza Strip, Israel appointed al-Shawwa mayor. His mayoralty, however, did nothing to calm the nationalist uprising (a feat ultimately accomplished by ARIEL SHARON in a massive military operation in 1972). Al-Shawwa formed a municipal council, but he and his council received intense criticism because many nationalists in the Gaza Strip viewed the appointments as collaboration with Israel. In October 1972 al-Shawwa resigned, and Israel immediately reinstated direct military rule throughout the Gaza Strip. However, in 1975, at Israel's request, al-Shawwa agreed to a reappointment as mayor. In 1981 the Israeli government imposed a CIVIL ADMINISTRATION, an integral part of the military structure in Gaza (and the WEST BANK), which was given responsibility for HEALTH CARE, EDUCATION, social services, and civic matters. In protest, Mayor al-Shawwa announced a general strike, which caused Israel, in turn, to again dismiss him and the municipal council in 1982.

Although al-Shawwa had a long history of shifting his loyalties among Israel, JORDAN, and the FATAH party, for many years he attempted to get Palestinian notables to support Jordan's King Husayn in an effort to create a Jordanian-Palestinian federation. Al-Shawwa intensely distrusted nationalist passions, but, under immense pressure from Palestinian nationalists in the Gaza Strip, he pledged support to the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO). However, few believed that he was sincere, and al-Shawwa was the target of several assassination attempts. He eventually formed an alliance with the Fatah leadership, which placed him on the Council of Higher Education in 1980. After Israel dismissed him from the mayoralty, he signed the (unreleased) "Palestinian Peace Document" of November 1982, which recognized the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinians, but urged them to authorize King Husayn to negotiate on the Palestinians' behalf and to accept a confederation with Jordan.

Al-Shawwa enjoyed the exclusive franchise, granted by Israel, for issuing travel PERMITS for Gazans who wanted to visit Jordan—the so-called Shawwa passports—and applicants formed a crowd outside his offices daily. However, the al-Shawwa permit system for leaving the Gaza Strip was widely resented because of the personal control he used over the allocation of travel documents. He was the founder of al-Kharaiyeh, a benevolent society in Gaza to provide services to Gazans and to ensure his continued control. Al-Shawwa also established the Shawwa Cultural Center in Gaza City, which is used today for numerous functions.

Shaykh Jarrah

Shaykh Jarrah is a Palestinian neighborhood to the north of the OLD CITY OF JERUSALEM. In the western portion of Shaykh Jarrah, close to the 1949

Armistice Line, or Green Line, lies an 18-dunum (4.5-acre) area known as Shimon Ha'Tzadik (Simon the Just), after the Second Temple high priest believed to be buried there. This area has become a focal point of settler development plans in the neighborhood. Under contention are approximately twenty-eight residential structures, currently housing descendants of twenty-seven of the Palestinian families who arrived in 1956 (about 500 people) and five or six settler groups (about 30 people). Since 1972, Israeli settlers have been working to establish Jewish land claims and a Jewish presence in the area, and Palestinian residents have faced legal challenges regarding landownership and residency rights.

Right-wing settlers, led by ultranationalist Knesset member BENYAMIN ELON (minister of tourism in ARIEL SHARON's government), who is an advocate of TRANSFER, and his activist HOMOT SHALEM ASSOCIATION, together with the even more aggressive Nahalat Shimon Settler Association, have spearheaded the drive.

As of August 2009, settlement activity in Shaykh Jarrah included the existing settlement of Shimon Ha'Tzadik Compound, made up of eight families and twenty Yeshiva students (approximately fifty people). There were also significant settlement developments in process: Shepherd Hotel Compound (Town Planning Scheme, TPS, 2591), 31 housing units, building PERMIT approved to IRVING MOSKOWITZ in July 2009; Shepherd Hotel Compound (TPS 11536), 90 housing units with public building of a kindergarten and synagogue, plan submitted by C & M Co. to municipal planning department in 2005; Shimon Ha'Tzadik Compound (TPS 12705), 200 housing units, plan submitted by Nahalat Shimon Ltd. and archived by the municipal planning department in May 2009.

Eviction activity related to this settlement development included the Hanoun and Rawi extended families on 2 August 2009 (approximately fifty-three people); the al Kurd family in November 2009; and judicial evictions in process for another four extended families.

On 17 May 2009 two Palestinian families from the Shaykh Jarrah neighborhood of East Jerusalem received court orders to vacate their homes by 19 July. At that point, the houses were turned over to the landlord: the settler organization Nahalat Shimon International. The actual and pending evictions of several Palestinian families from Shaykh Jarrah have sparked international controversy. Israeli authorities claim that Palestinian residents have lost their rights as protected tenants due to delinquency in rent payments, while Palestinians maintain that Israeli ownership claims are baseless. Currently, settlers inhabit six buildings in the area, and active court cases threaten four Palestinian extended families.

Complementing Nahalat Shimon International's legal battle against Palestinian residents is that same group's plan to demolish the existing residential structures and evict hundreds of Palestinian residents to clear the way for a new Israeli settlement that would be a massive expansion of the existing Shimon Ha'Tzadik compound. This project constitutes one of a series of plans that seek to penetrate and surround Shaykh Jarrah with Israeli settlements, yeshivas, and other Jewish institutions as well as "national" (i.e., Jewish) parkland, and to complement government efforts to ring the Old City with Jewish development, effectively cutting it off from Palestinian areas.

The struggle for the area highlights the ongoing attempt of Israeli settlers, backed by the ISRAEL LANDS ADMINISTRATION (ILA), to "reclaim" plots of land in East Jerusalem that were owned by Jews under BRITISH MANDATE or Ottoman rule. These efforts continue throughout East Jerusalem, despite the ongoing refusal of Israeli courts to recognize similar claims by Palestinian owners in West Jerusalem.

Shaykh Jarrah in Context

On 28 August 2008, Nahalat Shimon International, a settler-related real estate company, filed TPS 12705 with the Jerusalem Local Planning Commission. If TPS 12705 comes to pass, the existing Palestinian houses in this key area would be demolished, about 500 Palestinians would be evicted, and 200 new settler units would be built for the expanded Shimon Ha'Tzadik area. Such a plan would advance the creation of Israeli and Jewish strongholds in the HOLY BASIN surrounding the Old City. In Shaykh Jarrah (north of the Old City), the Mount of Olives to the east, and SILWAN to the south, development plans aim to ring the Old City with Jewish settlements and public projects abound, aimed at severing Palestinian territorial contiguity with the Old City. These developments unilaterally create an integral Jewish population link between the Old City and West Jerusalem, strengthen Israeli control of this sensitive area, and thwart the feasibility of future agreed-upon BORDERS for Jerusalem in the context of a TWO-STATE SOLUTION.

In recent years, settler organizations have made great strides in the Shaykh Jarrah area, acting with varying degrees of public funding and support. Recently completed projects in the area include the BEIT OROT Yeshiva with a number of student and teacher housing units and the adjacent Ein Tzurim “National” Park. ELAD, the settler organization known for its archaeological and settlement activity in Silwan, is involved in running the park. Three additional Israeli development plans are being advanced in the Shaykh Jarrah vicinity.

Historical Background

Much of the following involves complex legal issues, as discussed by IR AMIM, but these should be considered as merely one facet of the Shaykh Jarrah story. Official Israeli statements on Shaykh Jarrah have framed events as being solely within the domain of the courts. However, a broad look at recent events in Shaykh Jarrah reveals the differential use of the legal system to carry out eviction orders against Palestinian residents but not against settlers, and to support pre-1948 Jewish LAND claims in East Jerusalem while opposing pre-1948 Palestinian land claims in West Jerusalem. This systemic distortion results in the cynical use of a highly politicized legal system in the service of advancing an inequitable and inflammatory political agenda. Employment of the legal system to establish facts on the ground prejudices the results of a land claims reconciliation process that will inevitably take place in the context of a political resolution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

These legal battles have focused on three intertwined issues:

- Legal recognition of land and building ownership
- Tenancy rights of the Palestinian residents
- Differential enforcement of the law regarding settlers and Palestinians, living in the structures without legal recognition

There are currently four relevant legal cases in regard to this area:

- Sephardic Community Committee vs. Sabbagh (seven family members). This Civil Court case charges the defendants with rent delinquency and seeks their eviction.

- Mohammed Kamel Al-Kurd vs. Avi Dichter, Minister of Public Security, and Nitzav Ilan Franco, District Police Chief. In this Supreme Court case, the al-Kurd family charges the Israeli police with differential law enforcement regarding the settlers in their home. The case was heard in November 2009, and the family was evicted.
- Sephardic Community Committee and Nahalat Shimon International vs. Abed Al-Fatah Ghawi and Maher Khalil Hanun. In this Civil Court case, the plaintiffs sought to evict the Ghawi and Hanun families from their homes, on the grounds of rent delinquency. The families were also tried for contempt of court. This case was heard 17 May 2009, and the families were evicted in August.
- Suleiman Darwish Hijazi vs. Sephardic Community Committee, the Knesset Israel Committee, Nahalat Shimon International, and the Jerusalem Lands Settlement Officer. In this Magistrate Court appeal, Hijazi challenges the grounds upon which the 1982 case was decided and seeks to prove his ownership of the disputed land. The case is still in court.

Pre-1967. A small Jewish community established in the late nineteenth century around the site of the tomb of Shimon Ha’Tzadik was gradually abandoned beginning in the 1920s and 1930s through the 1948 WAR. No Jews were left in the area after 1948. In the period of Jordanian rule from 1948 to 1967, the Jordanian government took control of these plots under the Enemy Property Law. In 1956, twenty-eight Palestinian families who had been receiving REFUGEE aid and assistance from UNRWA were selected to benefit from a relief project in conjunction with the Jordanian Ministry of Development. According to the agreement, the families would forfeit their baskets of refugee assistance and would pay token rent for three years until the ownership of the houses would be transferred to their names.

The houses, according to the agreement, would be built on “formerly Jewish property leased by the Custodian of Enemy Property to the Ministry of Development, for the purpose of this project.” Three years passed and ownership was not formally transferred to the families.

1972–2001. In 1972 twenty-seven families (one family had left of its own accord) received notice that rent was due to the Sephardic Community Committee and the Knesset Israel Committee—landlords they had not known they had. That year, the committees initiated a process in coordination with the Israel Lands Administration (ILA) to register the lands in their names, based on nineteenth-century, Ottoman-era documents.

Ten years later, in 1982, the two committees brought a legal case against twenty-three families for rent delinquency. Itzhak Toussia-Cohen, the lawyer representing the Palestinian families, did not contest the legitimacy of the committees' ownership claims, and instead arrived at a court-sanctioned agreement—a binding agreement that can be appealed only if proven to be based on false grounds—that secured “protected tenancy” status for residents. Families claim Toussia-Cohen did not have their authorization to make this agreement.

The decision would come to serve as the legal precedent for rulings on subsequent appeals, including the present-day cases. Most families, not wanting to authorize the Sephardic Committee's ownership claims, refused to pay rent. In 1997, following years of lawsuits filed for rent payment and eviction, a Palestinian Jerusalemite, Suleiman al-Hijazi, filed a lawsuit that challenged the ownership claims of the committees and asserted his ownership of the disputed territory. His case was rejected in 2002, as was its SUPREME COURT appeal four years later, and a Magistrate Court appeal was rejected on 31 March 2008. The residents' legal counsel is reviewing options for further legal recourse. Though the committees' ownership was not corroborated in the 2006 “Agreement Between the HASHEMITE Kingdom of JORDAN and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) for an Urban Housing Project at Shaykh Jarrah Quarter, Jerusalem,” 3 July 1956, under this classification tenants and their cohabiting kin are guaranteed the security of living in their units, so long as they pay rent and abide by rigid restrictions regarding maintenance and renovation. The court decision was never revoked, and subsequent rulings have reinforced the 1982 precedent.

In 1999, settler activity in the neighborhood began in earnest and has continued unabated. The first group of settlers acquired one family's tenancy rights and subsequently subdivided the structure to make room for additional families. Today a small playground stands on a formerly empty lot with a booth for an armed guard who provides settlers with twenty-four-hour-a-day protection and reportedly prevents Palestinian children from playing on the playground. A second guard booth stands above an adjacent structure. The Sephardic Community Committee, which as co-owner is legally required to approve tenancy changes, has historically avoided commenting on the political dimensions of the conflict.

Also in 1999, following charges of rent delinquency and illegal renovation/construction, a member of the al-Kurd family was forcefully evicted from the added section of the home and the section was sealed. Two years later, settlers illegally broke into the addition and established residence there.

2001 and After. On 28 March 2004, Mohammed and Fawzia al-Kurd were ordered to evict the settlers from the added section of the house, demolish it, and seal any remaining openings. The sentence was reiterated on 25 February 2007. Being unable to demolish the house with the settlers inside it, the al-Kurds repeatedly sought police assistance and filed requests and complaints with the district police. Eventually they sued the police in the lower courts, and a hearing at the High Court of Justice was scheduled for November 2009.

In November 2008, following the loss of a protracted appeals process, Fawzia and Mohammed al-Kurd were forcefully evicted from their home, to much local and international attention. The settlers left in February 2009, and the renovated section is now sealed. Residents and lawyers have evidence, however, that settlers have returned and are residing inside.

A fourth family, Sabbagh, has been sued for rent delinquency and eviction. The case has not yet been heard. The exact number of families paying rent—and therefore still considered protected tenants—is unknown. According to residents, a number of the other households may soon find themselves at risk of eviction. Suleiman Hijazi's appeal to the Magistrate Court to establish his ownership of eighteen plots in the disputed territory was rejected on 31 March 2009. He had presented an official letter from the Ottoman archive in Ankara stating that the archive had no record of the Sephardic Committees' 1875 registration.

See also BENYAMIN ELON; HOLY BASIN; JERUSALEM; IRVING MOSKOWITZ; OTTOMAN EMPIRE; SETTLEMENTS; SETTLER GROUPS AND SETTLEMENTS, EAST JERUSALEM; THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT

Bibliography

- Alternative Information Center. "Settler Violence: Developments in Jerusalem." Settler Violence Report 37. 1 July 2002.
- Applied Research Institute–Jerusalem. "In Al Shaykh Jarrah Neighborhood in Occupied East Jerusalem Israel Engages in Effective Ethnic Racist Steps to Forcibly Alter the Residency of a Palestinian Neighborhood." 15 July 2008.
- . "Shaykh Jarrah: ARIJ Monthly Report on the Israeli Colonization Activities in the West Bank." 22 May 2002.
- Barrows-Friedman, Nora. "It Will Take the World to Save These Homes." Global Issues: Social, Political, Economic and Environmental Issues That Affect Us All. 7 April 2009. <http://www.globalissues.org/news/2009/04/07/1138>.
- Breger, Marshall J. "The New Battle for Jerusalem." Middle East Quarterly. 1:4 (1994).
- Eldar, Akiva. "This Election's Real Meaning." Ha'aretz. 8 December 2008.
- Electronic Intifada. "Shaykh Jarrah Residents Organize in the Face of Mass House Evictions." Electronic Intifada. 7 April 2009. <http://www.electronicintifada.net>.
- Elmer, Jon. "New Settlement Puts Pressure on Jerusalem Palestinians." The New Standard. 16 August. 2005.
- European Union. EU Heads of Mission Report on East Jerusalem. EUObserver Document. 9 March 2009. euobserver.com.
- Frey, Annabel. "Settler Violence and Harassment in Shaykh Jarrah." Palestine Monitor. 5 May 2003.
- Glick, Caroline B. "Interview: Benny Elon." Jerusalem Post. 15 July 2003.
- Ir Amin. The Eviction of the Two Families in Shaykh Jarrah: A Dangerous Move for Expanding the Jewish Settlement in the Neighborhood. Jerusalem. June 2009.
- . Evictions and Settlement Plans in Shaykh Jarrah: The Case of Shimon HaTzadik. Jerusalem. 2009. <http://www.ir-amim.org.il/Eng/?CategoryID=299>.
- . Israeli Settlement in Palestinian Communities in East Jerusalem: Snapshot. Jerusalem. August 2009.
- . Urgent: Shaykh Jarrah Action Alert. Jerusalem. 25 March 2009.
- International Solidarity Movement Media. "Israeli Forces Demolish Shaykh Jarrah Protest Camp." Press Release: International Solidarity Movement Media. 22 December 2008. <http://www.scoop.co.nz/stories/WO0812/S00494.htm>.
- Israeli Committee against House Demolitions. "Shepherd's Hotel in Shaykh Jarrah Targeted by Settlers." 1 April 2009.
- "Israel to Build New Israeli Settlement in Shaykh Jarrah." The Orient House. 7 May 2001.
- Jerusalem Coalition on Shaykeh Jarrah Case. "Shaykh Jarrah Case." Press Release. Jerusalem. 19 February 2009.
- Johal, Am. "The Diplomat of Shaykh Jarrah." Countercurrents.org. 18 September 2004.
- Levy, Gideon. "Twilight Zone/Non-Jews Need Not Apply." Ha'aretz. 22 December 2008.
- Lis, Jonathan, and Meron Rapoport. 2005. "Plan to Build 90 Apartments in the Shaykh Jarrah Neighborhood." Ha'aretz. 3 November 2005.
- Margalit, Meir. "Like a Thorn in the Heart." Israeli Committee Against House Demolitions. 31 October 2005.
- . "Nof Zion vs. Jabal Mukhaber: Manipulations to Erase Reality." Occupation Magazine. Jerusalem. 2 October 2006.
- Ofran, Hagit. Eviction of Palestinian Families to Take Place in Shaykh Jarrah in East Jerusalem. Jerusalem: Peace Now, 17 March 2009.
- "Plans for New Settlement in Shaykh Jarrah." Jerusalem Times Weekly. 11 May 2001.
- Prusher, Ilene R. "Moving into East Jerusalem: An EU Report Criticizes Israeli Expansion into the Annexed Part of the Capital." The Christian Science Monitor. 2 December 2005.
- Rubinstein, Danny. 2005. "The Battle for the Capital." Ha'aretz. 1 April. http://www.kibush.co.il/show\_file.asp?num=1372.
- "Settler Activity within Palestinian Communities." Friends of al-Aqsa: Defense of al-Aqsa and Peace in Palestine. n.d. <http://www.aqsa.org.uk/chapterContents.aspx?id=7>.
- "Settlers Occupy House in Shaykh Jarrah." Jerusalem Times Weekly. 16 March 2001.
- "Shaykh Jarrah: Jerusalem Settlement Update Report." Orient House. 8 May 2000.
- Tristram, Claire. "Benny Elon's Long, Strange Trip." Salon.com. 14 May 2003.
- Weatherill, James. "Demolition in Shaykh Jarrah and Demolition Orders in Silwan." United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA). 22 February 2009.

Shehadeh Family

The Shehadeh family is a Christian clan from JAFFA, Palestine, that was dispossessed in the 1948 WAR; remaining family members mostly live in Ramallah on the WEST BANK. The family produced generations of well-educated and talented writers and especially lawyers.

Shehadeh, Bulus (1882–1943). Bulus Shehadeh was a journalist, poet, and politician. Director of the Orthodox School in HAIFA from 1907, he was active in Palestinian national politics, serving on the ARAB EXECUTIVE, attending the ARAB CONGRESSES, and founding, with others, the Palestinian Arab National Party.

Shehadeh, Aziz (1921–1985). The son of Bulus, Aziz Shehadeh was a lawyer and political activist. Dispossessed in the 1948 War, he fled Jaffa and settled in Ramallah, where he worked as a journalist before being admitted to the bar. Aziz practiced law with his brother Fuad, and many considered their firm the best in the Jordanian-occupied West Bank. Politically, Aziz was an advocate of Palestinian self-determination in a TWO-STATE SOLUTION but at a time and in a political context when that was not yet acceptable to a variety of parties. He met with Israeli defense minister MOSHE DAYAN in 1968 to discuss the possibilities for such a solution, an initiative for which he was condemned by the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION and by West Bank leaders. In 1985 unknown assailants murdered him.

Shehadeh, Fuad (1925–). Son of Bulus and brother of Aziz, Fuad Shehadeh was also a lawyer. Together, Fuad and Aziz worked on many famous cases, including the 1951 defense of two men accused in the TARGETED ASSASSINATION of Jordanian King Abdullah I, the 1974 trial of Archbishop Hilarion Cappuci on charges of arms smuggling, and the 1979–1981 extradition case of Ziyad Abu Ayn, a senior Fatah operative.

Shehadeh, Raja (1951–). The son of Aziz, Raja Shehadeh is a lawyer, writer, prominent human rights activist, and the founder of AL-HAQ: Law in the Service of Man. Raja has written numerous books, including Palestinian Walks: Forays into a Vanishing Landscape (2008); The Third Way: A Journal of Life in the West Bank (1982); Occupiers' Law: Israel and the West Bank (1988); Strangers in the House: Coming of Age in Occupied Palestine (2003); Samed: Journal of a West Bank Palestinian (1984); When the Birds Stopped Singing: Life in Ramallah under Siege (2003); From Occupation to Interim Accords: Israel and the Palestine Territories (1997); and The Sealed Room (1992).

See also PALESTINIAN SOCIETY, PRE-1948

Shelli

The Shelli Party (Shalom L'Yisrael, or Peace for Israelis, Equity for Israelis) was created in 1977 by two existing Israeli parties—MAKI (the Israel Communist Party) and MOKED, from the Jewish pro-peace left. Shelli won no seats in 1981, merged into the RATS party in 1981, and disbanded before the 1984 elections.

Bibliography

- Diskin, Abraham. The Last Days in Israel: Understanding the New Israeli Democracy. London: Routledge, 2003.
- Elazar, Daniel. Israel at the Polls 1999: Israel: The First Hundred Years. London: Routledge, 2001.
- Maor, Moshe. Parties, Elections and Cleavages: Israel in Comparative and Theoretical Perspective. London: Routledge, 2000.

Shemer, Naomi (1930–2004)

Naomi Shemer was a prolific songwriter and composer known as the “First Lady of Israeli Song.” She was much beloved in Israel as the writer of “Yerushalayim shel Zahav” (Jerusalem the Gold), which became Israel’s unofficial national anthem and made her a nationalist cultural icon. Born in Kvutzat Kinneret KIBBUTZ, where her parents were among the founders, Shemer started playing piano at the age of six and began writing songs in her twenties. After serving in the military cadre NAHAL’s entertainment troupe, she left the kibbutz to study music at JERUSALEM’S Rubin Academy of Music in 1955 and later moved to Tel Aviv to devote herself to songwriting.

Many of Shemer’s songs were composed for army entertainment troupes. The song “Hoopa Hey,” which she composed for the IDF Central Command entertainment troupe, won an international song contest in Italy in 1960. In 1963 she wrote “Hurshat Haecalyptus” (The Eucalyptus Grove) for a musical marking the jubilee of Kibbutz Kinneret. Many of her texts were adapted from the poems of Rachel, which describe the landscape of the Kinneret and the JORDAN RIFT VALLEY where they both lived. When Shemer moved to Tel Aviv, she wrote the words to the musical Hamesh-Hamesh (Five-Five), first performed by the IDF Central Command entertainment troupe and later by Haohel Theater. In 1967, Jerusalem mayor TEDDY KOLLEK asked Shemer to write a song about the city. Several weeks after “Yerushalayim shel Zahav” was first performed at a Hebrew Song Festival, the 1967 WAR broke out, and the song became the war’s anthem. After the war, Shemer added an additional verse to reflect Jerusalem’s new reality.

After the outbreak of the 1973 War, Shemer wrote “Lu Yahi” (May It Be), which she originally conceived as a Hebrew version of the Beatles’ “Let It Be.” In 1977, Yehoram Gaon recorded Shemer’s “Lo Ahavti Di” (I Have Not Loved Enough), which quickly became a favorite, especially among folk dance enthusiasts. In 1979 the line “Do not tear up that which is planted” from the song “Al Kol Aleh” (For All These Things) became the slogan of the campaign against the evacuation of Yamit, a SETTLEMENT that was dismantled in the context of the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty. In 1987 Shemer was awarded the Israel Prize for her contribution to Israeli music.

Bibliography

- Avivi Gidi, Ben-Nun, Sagui. “Naomi Shemer: First Lady of Israeli Song.” Ha'aretz. 27 June 2004.
- Friedman, Motti. “Naomi Shemer.” The Pedagogic Center, Department for Jewish Zionist Education. Tel Aviv: Jewish Agency for Israel, n.d.
- Shuman, Ellis. “Israel Pays Tribute to Naomi Shemer of Gold.” Israelinsider. 27 June 2004. www.israelinsider.com.

Shimon Ha'Tzadik Association

The Shimon Ha'Tzadik Association, founded in 1967, is dedicated to reclaiming Jewish land and property in East JERUSALEM. It has established a strong presence in the Shimon Ha'Tzadik area in the Palestinian neighborhood of SHAYKH JARRAH, where activists claim to have taken over some seven Palestinian buildings that now house forty Jewish settlers and a yeshiva with approximately fifty students. The association works together with the Homot Shalem Association and its leader BENYAMIN ELON, Zion Settlers, and several other settler groups.

See also SETTLERS AND SETTLEMENTS, EAST JERUSALEM; SHAYKH JARRAH

Bibliography

- Benvenisti, Meron. City of Stone: The Hidden History of Jerusalem. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1998.
- Dumper, Michael. The Politics of Jerusalem since 1967. New York: Columbia University Press, 1996.
- . The Politics of Sacred Space: The Old City of Jerusalem in the Middle East Conflict. Boulder, CO: Lynne Rienner Publishers, 2002.
- European Union. EU Heads of Mission Report on East Jerusalem. EUOBSERVER DOCUMENT. 9 March 2009. euobserver.com.
- Yated Ne'eman Staff. “Jews Buy up Land Around Shimon Hatzadik Neighborhood.” Information and Insight: A Project of Shema Yisrael Torah Network: Del'ah ve Dibur. 24 October 2001. <http://chareidi.shemayisrael.com/archives5762/lechlecha/lshimon.htm>.

Shin Bet

The Shin Bet (General Security Service, GSS, Sherut Bitahon Kelali, or Shabak) is Israel's domestic secret security service. Its most important functions are upholding state security, exposing terrorist organizations among Israeli civilians (both Jewish and Arab), interrogating terror suspects, providing intelligence for counterterrorism operations in the WEST BANK and the GAZA STRIP, practicing counterespionage, and preventing the funding of underground movements and terror groups whose members are Israeli citizens. It accomplishes these goals primarily by using interrogations and secret agents, or HUMINT. (Short for human intelligence, HUMINT is an intelligence-gathering discipline for collecting information by either interviewing or tracking a subject of investigation or by using a combination of “black” techniques to gain confessions or involuntary disclosure of information.)

Shin Bet makes extensive use of informants—COLLABORATORS—from the local Palestinian population to gather intelligence about political activities, organizations, militant groups, and individuals. It attempts to learn about planned attacks against Israeli soldiers and settlers, SUICIDE BOMBINGS against civilians, and the location of leaders targeted for assassination. After 1967, Shin Bet's network of agents and informers in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES destroyed the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION's (PLO's) effectiveness, forcing it to withdraw to bases in JORDAN, and the agency continues to run a large network of Palestinian informants. Shin Bet also extracts information by interrogating suspects. B'TSELEM, the Israeli human rights organization, and Amnesty International regularly accuse Shin Bet of employing harsh physical methods that amount to torture according to international conventions. Shin Bet's interrogation methods, especially of Palestinians, have been controversial and highly criticized. Human rights groups have claimed that many PRISONERS have died at the hands of Shin Bet or were left paralyzed after a period of detention.

In 1987 the Israeli government-appointed LANDAU COMMISSION investigated the practice of torture and recommended that interrogators be permitted to use “moderate physical and psychological pressure” to secure confessions and obtain information. In addition, the Shin Bet chief is permitted by law to allow interrogators to employ “special measures” that exceed the use of “moderate physical and psychological pressure” when it is deemed necessary to obtain information that could potentially save Israeli lives. In 1992 the International Committee of the Red Cross declared that such practices violate the Geneva Convention on prisoner treatment. Human rights groups and attorneys have challenged the use of “special measures” before the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT on a number of occasions. Israeli authorities maintain that torture is not condoned but acknowledge that abuses sometimes occur. In 2000 the Israeli Supreme Court ruled against the use of torture by Shin Bet, although the use of informants as proxies is rumored to serve as a loophole.

Shin Bet is believed to have three operational departments and five support departments. Its Arab Affairs Department is responsible for antiterrorist operations, political subversion, and maintenance of an index on Arab terrorists. The department worked with undercover detachments (known as Mist'aravim) to counter the AL-AQSA INTIFADA and the military wing of the Islamic HAMAS organization. Shin Bet is at the forefront of undercover operations against Palestinian activists and militants. Israeli security experts say that Shin Bet has a large number of Jewish agents who are fluent Arabic speakers, able to pass themselves off as Palestinians, and move freely about the Occupied Territories.

See also COLLABORATORS, PALESTINIAN; ISRAELI MILITARY COURT SYSTEM; LANDAU COMMISSION; MOSSAD; TARGETED ASSASSINATIONS; TERRORISM

Shinui Party

Shinui (Mifleget Ha'Shinui, or Change) is a secular, Zionist political party that was established in 1974. In 1977 it joined the Democratic Movement for Change and formed the first non-Labor coalition government in Israel. In 1992 it joined MAPAM and RATS to create MERETZ, but in 1997 it split again and won six seats in the 1999 Knesset elections. In 2000 Shinui adopted a new platform, calling itself “a Democratic, Liberal, Zionist, Non-religious, Peace seeking party.” In 2003 the party won fifteen seats alone, but lost them all three years later after most of its Knesset members left to form new parties. The party was a member of Liberal International. Though it had been the standard-bearer of liberal economic policy and secular values in Israel for thirty years, the 2005 formation of KADIMA robbed Shinui of its natural constituency, and in January 2006 the party split into small factions, none of which managed to overcome the 2 percent threshold needed to enter the Knesset.

While the party is liberal in opposing ultra-Orthodox attempts to impose Halacha (Jewish religious law) on the state, its position on the Palestinian question is more conservative. According to Shinui's platform, it supports the peace process, although only through negotiations with “moderate Palestinians,” since “the cessation of TERROR[ISM] is an indispensable condition for progress in the diplomatic negotiations.” The group states that “illegal OUTPOSTS [linked to Jewish SETTLEMENTS] must be evacuated immediately. As part of the peace arrangements, Israel will also have to leave settlements scattered in the heart of Palestinian populations, but Israel will not evacuate settlement blocs, and these will be integrated within Israel's BORDERS. There are also large settlements, which will be subject to negotiation.” Shinui is committed to the BARRIER separation wall between Israel and the Occupied Territories “as a partial defense against the frequency of terrorist infiltrations.” Its position on JERUSALEM is “to find a modus vivendi . . . to enable both sides to coexist in peace, with respect for the holy sites of all the three religions.” And a Palestinian state “will be established only after the Palestinians renounce their right to return” to their homeland.

See also ZIONISM

Bibliography

- Locher, Neill. Israeli Labour Party: In the Shadow of the Likud. Ithaca, NY: Ithaca Press, 1997.
- Mahler, Gregory S. Readings on the Israeli Political System: Structures and Processes. Lanham, MD: University Press of America, 1981.
- Maor, Moshe. Parties, Elections and Cleavages: Israel in Comparative and Theoretical Perspective. London: Routledge, 2000.

Shministim

In June 2001, ten Israeli high school students, mostly from the Tel Aviv area, gathered to discuss new ways to resist Israel's OCCUPATION of the Palestinian territories. Following a tradition of protest letters by high school seniors to Israeli prime ministers, the group decided to write a letter and enlisted others to help draft it. The final version condemned the Occupation of 1967 and Israeli “war crimes” and pointed to the connection between Israeli aggression and the increase in attacks on Israeli citizens by Palestinians. In August 2001 the group published its first high school seniors' letter, with sixty-two signatories.

One year later, the number of signatories had more than quadrupled. Over the same time, the political situation had deteriorated. ARIEL SHARON'S government and the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES had reoccupied the territories with sweeping public support. The signatories of the high school seniors' letter felt a need to protest against the Occupation and decided to organize in a framework called the Shministim (High School Students) movement to help them to act and influence events. In September 2002 they published a second letter to Prime Minister Sharon with more than 300 signatories. The letter stated, in part: "When the elected government tramples over democratic values and the chances for a just peace in the region, we have no choice but to obey our conscience and refuse to take part in the attack on the Palestinian people. As youth about to be called to serve in the military, we pledge to do all that we see fit so as not to serve the Occupation. Some of us will refuse to serve beyond the Green Line, others will avoid military service in other ways—we view all these means as legitimate and necessary, and we call on other youth, conscripts, soldiers in the standing army, and reserve service soldiers to do the same."

In March 2005, 250 additional high school students sent a letter to Sharon that stated in part: "We the undersigned, Israeli boys and girls, believing in the values of democracy, humanism, and pluralism, hereby declare that we shall refuse to take part in the Occupation and repressive policy adopted by the government of Israel. . . . The Occupation has corrupted Israel, turning it into a militaristic, racist, chauvinistic and violent society."

This youth movement aims to expand the circles of CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS and to promote awareness of this phenomenon, primarily in high schools and within youth groups but also among the general public and the international community. They carry out their work in solidarity vigils, demonstrations, and other direct actions. In addition to street activity, the movement works to support those who refuse to serve and who suffer as a result, such as from discrimination in the schools or at work.

See also COMBATANTS' LETTER; COURAGE TO REFUSE; NEW PROFILE; PILOTS' LETTER

Bibliography

- Diskin, Abraham. The Last Days in Israel: Understanding the New Israeli Democracy. London: Routledge, 2003.
- Elazar, Daniel. Israel at the Polls 1999: Israel: The First Hundred Years. London: Routledge, 2001.
- Maor, Moshe. Parties, Elections and Cleavages: Israel in Comparative and Theoretical Perspective. London: Routledge, 2000.

Shoman Family

The Shoman family, originally from Bayt Hanina north of JERUSALEM, is one of the great banking families of the Arab world.

Shoman, Abd al-Hamid (1888/90–1974). Abd al-Hamid Shoman was born in Bayt Hanina and immigrated in 1911 to the UNITED STATES, where he became a successful businessman. He returned to Palestine in 1929 a wealthy man and founded the Arab Bank in 1930 in Jerusalem. During the years after he returned to Palestine, Shoman also took a keen interest in Palestinian nationalist issues. He had a close relationship with the mufti (AL-HAJJ AMIN AL-HUSAYNI) and was twice detained by the British during the 1936–1939 ARAB REVOLT for his support of the nationalist cause. In 1945 he financed a committee made up of Palestinian political parties that was aimed at slowing Jewish LAND purchases and IMMIGRATION to Palestine; ultimately this led to the reconstitution of the ARAB HIGHER COMMITTEE. At the same time, the bank expanded rapidly and had branches in all major towns in Palestine; it flourished until 1948, when the family was dispossessed in the 1948 WAR and moved to Amman, JORDAN. From Amman, the Arab Bank spread to all the capitals of the Arab world, becoming the most prestigious private Arab banking institution in the Arab world.

Abd al-Hamid became an enormously wealthy man, and he used his financial position to assist the Palestinian national cause, such as by helping establish the PALESTINE NATIONAL FUND, which funded the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION. He also became a noted philanthropist and patron of the arts and culture.

Shoman, Abd al-Majid (1912–2003). The son of Abd al-Hamid, Abd al-Majid Shoman was a banker also. Born in Bayt Hanina, he was dispossessed in 1948 and received an M.A. in economics from New York University. He started working at the Arab Bank in 1946, and by 1974 he was chairman and general manager of the bank. From 1964 to 1969, Abd al-Majid was the first chairman of the Palestine National Fund, and in 1983 he became chairman of the WELFARE ASSOCIATION, which supports sustainable development in Palestinian society. He served for a time in the Jordanian senate but resigned in 1988. In 1995 he led a group of prominent Palestinian businessmen on a visit to the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY to explore possibilities for investment.

Shoman, Khalid (1931–2001). The son of Abd al-Hamid, Khalid Shoman entered the family banking business after obtaining a B.A. and M.A. in economics in 1955 and 1959, respectively, from Cambridge University. He served as deputy chairman of the Abd al-Hamid Shoman Foundation and in 1993 cofounded the Darat el Funun artistic complex in Amman, Jordan, with his wife. He died in Europe in 2001, after which the family established the Khalid Shoman Foundation.

Shoman, Abd al-Hamid (1947–). The son of Abd al-Majid and the grandson of Abd al-Hamid, his namesake, Abd al-Hamid Shoman is also a banker. He received a B.A. from the American University of Beirut. Abd al-Hamid has worked for the Arab Bank since 1972 and has also served on the board of trustees of the Abd al-Hamid Shoman Foundation.

See also PALESTINIAN SOCIETY, PRE-1948

Shrines, Religious

See HOLY SITES IN PALESTINE

Shultz, George Pratt (1920–)

George Shultz served as UNITED STATES secretary of state from 1982 to 1989 under President RONALD REAGAN. Prior to that, he served as secretary of labor from 1969 to 1970 and as secretary of the treasury from 1972 to 1974. In 1942 Shultz received a B.A. in economics from Princeton University and joined the US Marine Corps, where he served until 1945, attaining the rank of captain. In 1949 Shultz earned a Ph.D. from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in industrial economics. Shultz was the second secretary of state in the Reagan administration, after the resignation of ALEXANDER HAIG.

In the context of the first Palestinian INTIFADA in January 1988, Shultz put forward a peace plan that proposed an international conference, termed an “event,” that would facilitate separate, bilateral negotiations for a final settlement between Israel and local Palestinian leaders but would have no veto or enforcement power. The event would be attended by all parties that accepted UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTIONS 242 AND 338, which called for Israel’s withdrawal from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES in exchange for an end to the Arab-Israeli conflict, and by all parties that renounced violence and TERRORISM. The PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) was excluded; instead, Shultz proposed that Palestinians from the Occupied Territories would be represented by a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation that would negotiate the terms of a three-year transitional period of self-administration for the territories. The plan suggested that ELECTIONS for a council of Palestinians would be held by fall and negotiations on a permanent solution would begin by December, based on the principle of exchanging territory for peace.

Essentially, the plan was a rehash of the 1979 CAMP DAVID ACCORDS, the September 1982 REAGAN PLAN, and others. Israeli prime minister YITZHAK SHAMIR rejected Shultz’s initiative out of hand, while EGYPT and JORDAN supported it, as did SHIMON PERES, then the Israeli foreign minister. Although SYRIA and the PLO objected to it, the Shultz Plan set off a debate within the PLO and the PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL (PNC) about accepting Resolution 242. As part of his initiative, on 26 March 1988 Shultz met with two US professors who were members of the PNC (although not authorized by that body or by the PLO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE to meet with Shultz)—IBRAHIM ABU-LUGHOD and EDWARD SAID. Both apparently saw the Shultz invitation as some form of recognition of the PLO’s right to represent the Palestinians. Although both succeeded in stating the Palestinian position forcefully to Shultz, the meeting did not alter existing US policy.

A 15 November 1988 PNC meeting in Algiers produced a PLO DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE, which included acceptance of Resolution 242, indicating a de facto recognition of Israel. This breakthrough by the PLO, however, did not alter its continued exclusion from the peace initiative but did lead to the refusal by Palestinians in the Occupied Territories to meet with Shultz on his various shuttle trips to the area. Shultz made several trips to the Middle East to promote his peace plan. However, President Reagan did not make his job easier when he told a Washington press conference, just before the secretary arrived in the region for the first time, that the unrest in the Occupied Territories was being fomented by “outsiders.” Shultz corrected the president, explaining that the anti-Israeli demonstrations by Palestinians were “essentially indigenous” and against Israel’s OCCUPATION.

In the end, as had all previous US initiatives, the Shultz Plan simply faded away. In December 1988, subsequent to further concessions by the PLO and YASIR ARAFAT personally, Shultz presided over the opening of a low-level, short-lived, but nevertheless historic US-PLO dialogue.

See also JAMES BAKER; BAKER PLAN; MADRID CONFERENCE; REAGAN PLAN; ROGERS PLAN; UNITED STATES–PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION DIALOGUE

Bibliography

- Christon, Kathleen. “The Arab-Israeli Policy of George Shultz.” Journal of Palestine Studies. 18:2 (1989).
- Hagopian, Elaine C. “Ibrahim and Edward.” Arab Studies Quarterly. Fall 2004.
- Shultz, George P. The First George P. Shultz Lecture on Middle East Diplomacy: September 16, 1988. Washington Institute for Near East Policy, 1988.
- . Turmoil and Triumph: Diplomacy, Power, and the Victory of the American Ideal, reprint ed. New York: Scribner, 1995.

Shuqayri, Ahmad (1908–1980)

Ahmad Shuqayri was once the symbol of the Palestinian national struggle and was the first chairperson of the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO). Born in Tibnin in South LEBANON, where his father was exiled by Ottoman authorities, he later moved to Tulkarm, Palestine, where he lived with his mother. In 1916 Shuqayri moved to ACRE, Palestine, for his education and completed high school in JERUSALEM in 1926. He joined the American University of Beirut but was expelled by the French authorities for participating in a demonstration. He then moved back to Jerusalem and completed law studies.

In the 1936–1939 ARAB REVOLT, Shuqayri was active both as a lawyer defending Palestinians accused by British authorities of various charges and as an author writing copiously in the Palestinian and Arab press against ZIONISM and the BRITISH MANDATE. In 1949 the SYRIAN government, impressed with his oratorical skills, appointed him a member of its UN mission, and later he served as assistant secretary-general of the ARAB LEAGUE. In 1957 he became the Saudi ambassador at the UNITED NATIONS, where he represented the Arab point of view and engaged in legendary, sometimes bombastic fights with Zionist representatives and journalists. In 1963, SAUDI ARABIA dismissed Shuqayri because he was sympathetic to EGYPT’s president JAMAL ‘ABD AL-NASIR’s views on inter-Arab politics. In 1964 the Arab League appointed Shuqayri the PLO’s first chairperson, but he did not have much political power. Nasir, who controlled the PLO, selected Shuqayri for that position because he trusted his utmost loyalty to the Egyptian regime. For many Palestinians, however, especially Palestinian revolutionaries, Shuqayri was increasingly seen as a tool of Nasir. Later he was seen as a buffoon, a perception contributed to by Western MEDIA, especially when they used his bombastic rhetoric to falsely attribute to him the threat to “throw the Jews into the sea.” Shuqayri denied in his memoirs that he ever said that, and nobody ever produced evidence that he actually did. After 1967, Palestinian revolutionaries forced his retirement, and by 1969 YASIR ARAFAT had taken over the PLO. During his retirement, Shuqayri resided in Cairo and spent his summers in Lebanon, but, after the 1979 Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty, which he considered an act of high treason, he relocated to Tunisia. He died in 1980 and was buried in JORDAN.

Bibliography

- Sayigh, Yasid. Armed Struggle and the Search for State: The Palestinian National Movement, 1949–1993. Oxford, UK: Clarendon Press, 1997.

—As’ad AbuKhalil

Siege

The term “siege” refers to the totality of restrictions imposed by Israel on the movement of Palestinians in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. Since the beginning of the 2000 AL-AQSA INTIFADA, these restrictions have reached an unprecedented level, including CLOSURES, blockades, CHECKPOINTS, ROADBLOCKS, and CURFEWS, and have negatively affected the lives of Palestinians in the WEST BANK and GAZA STRIP, as well as crippling the Palestinian ECONOMY. Unemployment and poverty have spiraled, malnutrition has emerged, anemia and other health problems have increased, and the quality of EDUCATION has seriously declined.

No Palestinian has escaped the impact of the RESTRICTIONS ON MOVEMENT in the Occupied Territories. In 2001 the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights described Israel as perpetrating “continuing gross violations of economic, social and cultural rights in the Occupied Territories, especially the severe measures adopted by the State party to restrict the movement of civilians between points within and outside the Occupied Territories, severing their access to food, WATER, HEALTH CARE, education and work.”

Amnesty International has detailed the myriad methods by which Israel’s siege restricts Palestinian movement and, more important, the consequences for Palestinians of these measures.

Physical Barriers

The Israeli army controls movement in and out of the main towns and many villages in the Occupied Territories by setting up checkpoints on primary and secondary ROADS, by blocking other roads with earth barricades and cement blocks, and by digging deep trenches across the roads to stop Palestinians from opening closed roads or from passing on foot. During the winter, rain and mud fill the trenches and make the slopes slippery, and the Israeli army sometimes diverts sewage into the trenches. Some villages are completely isolated by earth barriers, cement blocks, and trenches, making vehicle access impossible, even for ambulances and water tankers. Passage on foot is also difficult, requiring long detours and climbing up and down dirt mounds or trenches.

In addition to the permanent or long-term closures of roads by checkpoints, blockades, trenches, and other physical obstacles, other roads are often temporarily blocked by Israeli tanks or other military vehicles in what are called “flying” road-blocks. Israeli military and emergency legislation gives military commanders broad discretion to declare CLOSED MILITARY ZONES, restrict the use of roads, and impose curfews.

Curfews

West Bank towns and villages are often placed under curfew, in many cases for prolonged periods. After the Israeli army retook control of the main West Bank towns in the spring of 2002, it imposed twenty-four-hour curfews for days and in some cases weeks or months, preventing vital service providers and ambulances from functioning. At times Israel lifts curfews for a few hours to allow Palestinians to purchase essential supplies. NABLUS, under curfew for longer than any other city, remained under twenty-four-hour curfew for five months after 21 June 2002, apart from one month when it was under a night curfew only. In the H2 area of HEBRON, some 30,000 Palestinians have been under full or partial curfew most of the time in order to allow some 500 Israeli settlers to move freely.

The Barrier

The BARRIER separation wall, some 400 kilometers (around 250 miles) long and up to 100 meters wide, is built along the perimeter of the West Bank and north and south of JERUSALEM and comprises a complex of obstacles, including deep trenches, electric fences, trace paths, and patrol roads for tanks. The stated aim of the project is to prevent Palestinians from crossing clandestinely from the West Bank into Israel. However, Israel is constructing most of the separation Barrier on Palestinian land inside the West Bank to encompass a number of Israeli SETTLEMENTS. The Barrier cuts off scores of Palestinian villages from the rest of the West Bank or from their farming land. The land in these areas is among the most fertile in the West Bank, with better water resources than elsewhere, and agriculture in the region constitutes the main source of income for the Palestinians.

The Barrier has serious economic and social consequences for over 200,000 Palestinians in nearby towns and villages. Beyond LAND confiscation, the construction of the Barrier results in increased restrictions on movement. Palestinians who live in these areas have to cross the Barrier at designated checkpoints, which are only open at certain times, to go to work, to tend their fields, and to sell their agricultural produce, and have no access to education and health facilities. Moreover, Palestinians require special PERMITS to enter these areas.

Living Standards

Since 2000, some 60 percent of the Palestinian population is living below the poverty level of US$2.10 per day, and unemployment has risen to close to 50 percent. Because there is no unemployment benefit system in the Occupied Territories, an unemployed person’s only means of support is from family or community networks and the limited assistance available from the UN RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY, the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY's Ministry of Social Welfare, and charitable and humanitarian organizations. The dramatic decline in the standard of living among Palestinians in the Occupied Territories has led to increased malnutrition and other health problems. As Palestinians are increasingly forced to rely on charity to meet their basic needs, feelings of hopelessness and alienation have grown, damaging the fabric of society and fueling resentment. In the predominantly youthful Palestinian community, the lack of prospects for the future has contributed to increased radicalism and violence.

Unemployment

Loss of jobs in Israel, where wages are significantly higher than in the Occupied Territories, was followed by a reduction in demand for goods and services in the Occupied Territories. Closures and curfews have disrupted the import and transport of raw materials, creating shortages and sharply rising prices. Because of the closures, most Palestinian export businesses have lost their export markets and have difficulties transporting their products between the West Bank and the Gaza Strip or even short distances to local markets. Perishable foodstuffs spoil when repeatedly handled and delayed at checkpoints or border crossings, making them unmarketable or reducing their price.

In addition to increased unemployment, there has been a huge increase in underemployment and a significant drop in wages. Those who still have jobs have often been unable to reach their workplaces because of curfews and closures. For laborers who are paid on a daily basis, failure to show up for work means loss of a day's wages, as well as an increased risk that their place will be filled by another.

Farming

Families in rural areas traditionally turn to farming in times of rising unemployment and declining incomes, but farm incomes have also shrunk, and some farms operate at a loss because of restrictions on movement. In many areas, farmers do not have regular access to their land because it is within a closed military area or near an Israeli settlement or settlers' roads. Lack of access at key times of the year results in crops being lost or damaged or in yields that are severely reduced.

Expenditure on agricultural inputs, such as fertilizers, pesticides, and animal feed, has risen sharply, as suppliers have passed on increased transport costs. Some products are no longer available or farmers cannot afford to buy them. Some villages are not connected to a water network and farmers have to buy water, which has increased in price by an average of 80 percent because of increased transport costs. To cover their basic, immediate needs, some farmers have sold off productive assets, such as livestock and even land, thus jeopardizing their long-term prospects.

Use of Force to Enforce Closures and Curfews

When a town or a village is under curfew, the Israeli army usually allows the movement of civilians for a few hours during daylight. However, scheduled breaks in the curfew are often canceled without notice, so many Palestinians are caught unawares. To enforce closures, members of the Israeli security forces have frequently resorted to lethal force, killing or injuring scores of unarmed Palestinians. Soldiers have opened fire on Palestinians who have bypassed checkpoints, crossed trenches, removed barriers, broken curfews. They have fired at ambulance personnel, municipal employees, and journalists, including those who coordinated their movements in advance with the Israeli army.

Bibliography

- Amnesty International. Israel and the Occupied Territories: Surviving under Siege—The Impact of Movement Restrictions on the Right to Work. MDE 15/064/2003, London: Amnesty International, 8 September 2003.
- B'Tselem. Divide and Rule: Prohibition on Passage between the Gaza Strip and the West Bank. 1998. www.btselem.org/English/Publications/Summaries/199805\_Divide\_And\_Rule.asp.
- . Siege. n.d. www.btselem.org/English/Freedom\_of\_Movement/Siege.asp.
- Dudai, Ron. Free Rein: Vigilante Settlers and Israel's Non-enforcement of the Law. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2001.
- . No Way Out: Medical Implications of Israel's Siege Policy. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2001.
- Lein, Yehezkel. Civilians under Siege: Restrictions on Freedom of Movement as Collective Punishment. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2001.
- UNESCO. Submission of Reports by States in Accordance with Articles 16 and 17 of the Covenant. New York: E/C.12/1/Add.69, para. 13. UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 2001.
- World Bank. Two Years of Intifada, Closures and Palestinian Economic Crisis: An Assessment. Geneva, Switzerland: World Bank, 5 March 2003.

Silver, Abraham "Abba" Hillel (1893–1963)

Abraham "Abba" Hillel Silver was a rabbi and an American Zionist who had enormous influence in swaying US government policy and US public opinion in support of the Zionist cause. His leadership of the Zionist movement in the UNITED STATES was exceptional. Born in Lithuania, Silver was raised in a traditional home in which Jewish scholarship was strongly emphasized. In 1902 Silver's family immigrated to the United States, arriving in New York City, where Silver spent the rest of his youth. In New York he became president of the Herzl Zion Club, a Hebrew-speaking group that debated the Jewish issues of the day. Silver was ordained a Reform rabbi in 1915 by the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, Ohio. After his first two years as a rabbi in Wheeling, West Virginia, he was appointed rabbi at Congregation Tifereth Israel, a large Cleveland, Ohio, congregation, which was to be his home for the remainder of his career.

In 1937 Silver ardently opposed the PEEL COMMISSION plan, which recommended the partition of Palestine into Arab and Jewish states, claiming that the BRITISH MANDATE administration in Palestine violated its mandate of ruling Palestine. Silver held numerous influential positions in organized Jewish life in the United States: founder and cochair of the United Jewish Appeal and president of the United Palestine Appeal; representative of the American Zionist movement at WORLD ZIONIST CONGRESSES; and, from 1945 to 1947, president of the Zionist Organization of America and president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis (an American Jewish Reform organization).

Silver's skills as an orator were renowned—whether he spoke about social issues or on behalf of the Zionist cause. Although he identified with the Republican Party, he was also respected by Democrats. Most important, Silver was relentless in his pursuit of US governmental support for the creation of a Jewish state. Although many American Zionists believed that Jews should not pressure the US people and their government during wartime, Silver insisted that winning US public opinion was crucial to the cause. Under his guidance, the American Zionist Emergency Council (AZEC) was overwhelmingly successful in molding public opinion, and Silver transformed American ZIONISM into a vigorous activist movement, mobilizing both grassroots Jews and pro-

Zionist Christians to demonstrate, write, and pressure Congress and the White House to support Jewish statehood. In 1944 Silver convinced the Republican Party to include a pro-Zionist plank in its platform, which forced the Democrats to do likewise—a precedent that gave Zionist concerns a permanent place in US electoral politics. And Silver's nationwide protest campaign in 1948 against partition helped secure swift US recognition of the new state of Israel—the first step in cementing the US-Israel friendship.

Silver was also able to sway world opinion to favor the creation of a Jewish state. In his capacity as chairman of the US section of the JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL, he addressed the General Assembly of the UNITED NATIONS for the Zionists in 1947. However, after the establishment of the state of Israel, Silver faced opposition from within the Zionist movement as control of the movement slowly transferred to Israeli officials. The resulting power struggles and controversies about fundraising led Silver to resign his positions at the Zionist Organization of America, AZEC, and the Jewish Agency in 1948–1949. Nevertheless, Silver's support for Israel remained strong. In addition to his work in the political arena, Silver was a prolific writer. His sermons, articles, and books covered a range of topics relating to issues of Jewish concern.

Bibliography

- Eisenhower, Dwight David. "To Abba Hillel Silver." The Papers of Dwight David Eisenhower, Vol. XVI: The Presidency: The Middle Way. Part IX: "Concerning My Political Intentions"; December 1955 to April 1956: The Goal: A "Durable Peace." Chapter 19. Document No. 1836. Series: EM, WHCF, Official File 193. April 12, 1956.
- Raider, Mark A., Jonathan D. Sarna, and Ronald W. Zweig, eds. Abba Hillel Silver and American Zionism. London: Frank Cass, 1997.
- Raphael, Marc Lee. Abba Hillel Silver: A Profile in American Judaism. New York: Holmes and Meier, 1989.
- Silver, Abba Hillel. Therefore Choose life: Selected Sermons, Addresses, and Writings of Abba Hillel Silver. New York: Word Publishing Co., 1967.

Silwan

Silwan is a Palestinian neighborhood in East JERUSALEM that borders on the southern wall of the OLD CITY close to the AL-AQSA MOSQUE, Mount Zion to the north, the neighborhood of Abu Tor to the west, the Mount of Olives to the east, and the neighborhood of Jabel Mukaber to the south and southeast. It lies at the heart of the HOLY BASIN and has a population of some 31,000 Palestinians and about 500 Jewish settlers in a 2,194-dunum (542-acre) area. Wadi Hilweh and al-Bustan constitute two of the quarters of Silwan.

The process of Israeli takeover of Silwan has been accelerated, primarily in the area the settlers call the City of David, or Wadi Hilweh, as it is known by Palestinians. Indeed, Silwan stands on the front line of the Israeli offensive to erase the Palestinian presence in the east of the city, and its Jewish enclave has grown rapidly since 2004. Unlike most of the other Palestinian neighborhoods where settler groups are carving out enclaves, in Silwan ARCHAEOLOGY is being employed in the service of nationalism and as a justification for the dispossession of Palestinians. The settler group spearheading the drive, ELAD (the Hebrew acronym for “To the City of David”), is a far-right-wing ultranationalist association headed by David Be’eri, which is empowered by several arms of the Israeli government, including the Jerusalem Municipality (JM), the ISRAEL LANDS ADMINISTRATION (ILA), and the Israel Antiquities Authority (IAA), among others.

In recent years, significant parts of Silwan have been wrested from the local population. Public land and property have been “privatized” without tenders and handed to private organizations from the ideological right. These organizations act as contractors and receive the protection of government agencies, but they are not held accountable to the public or subject to the legal and administrative restrictions that apply to government bodies. Israeli policy openly discriminates against the Palestinian residents of Silwan and aims to displace them, most evident in the plan by the JM to evict the residents of al-Bustan, destroy their houses, and establish an archaeological park in their place.

The settler groups seeking to gain control of Silwan are supported with the initiative, encouragement, aid, funding, and protection of the government and its ministries and their national and municipal arms. They are motivated by two main forces. The first is the national-religious cause, which draws its strength from deep currents in the religious right. That is complemented by the political will, which significantly intensified after the 1993 OSLO ACCORDS, to thwart any possibility of dividing Jerusalem as part of a future peace agreement between Israel and the Palestinians. According to IR AMIM: “Silwan is the keystone to a sweeping and systematic process, whose aim is to gain control of the Palestinian territories that surround the Old City, to cut the Old City off from the urban fabric of East Jerusalem, and to connect it to Jewish settlement blocs in northeast Jerusalem and the E1 area.” Since the beginning of Israeli settlement in the area in the 1990s, Israeli officials and MEDIA have widely used the name “City of David” to describe Palestinian Wadi Hilweh. In the narrow sense, the name City of David refers to the hill allegedly upon which stood ancient Jerusalem; but for the Palestinians, the City of David area is simply a part of the Wadi Hilweh quarter of Silwan.

History

In the second half of the nineteenth century, archaeological missions began excavating this hill of ancient Jerusalem. Later, the Israel Antiquities Authority uncovered some extremely important findings in excavations at the City of David. The diggings, which have continued on and off to this day, have revealed that the area has been inhabited almost continuously since the fourth millennium BCE. Impressive fortifications were unearthed on the slope of the hill, as well as a sophisticated water system, all testifying that a sizable city stood in this place as early as the eighteenth century BCE—the Canaanite period, which preceded the Israeli conquest by 700 years. The excavations also discovered artifacts from the end of the First Temple period (the seventh and sixth centuries BCE), including important signets; and excavations at the Givati parking lot revealed the ruins of a palace dated to the Hellenistic period (331–323 BCE), a crowded neighborhood, and an impressive structure from the late Byzantine or early Muslim period (sixth to eighth centuries CE), including a rare trove of gold coins. Researchers are divided over the significance of the city in the tenth and eleventh centuries BCE, the period of the “united kingdom” of David and Solomon. According to Samuel 2, David conquered the city from the Jebusites and named it after himself. Not much has been found relating to the united kingdom, although material has been discovered suggesting that it was used as a Hebrew governmental center in the period of the late Judean Kingdom (eighth to sixth centuries BCE).

The archaeological excavations have also revealed evidence of the destruction of Jerusalem after Nebuchadnezzar conquered the city in 586 BCE. The area was populated later, in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah (sixth century BCE). In the time of the Second Temple, most of the Jewish population resided within the walls of the city. According to archaeological and historical findings, settlement in the area continued after the destruction of the Second Temple (70 CE). In the Byzantine and early Muslim periods, settlement in the area was quite developed, including a Karaite neighborhood. The area was destroyed in an earthquake in 1033, and from then until the start of the modern era the hill was only sparsely populated. Over the years, the village of Silwan grew on the hill east of the Kidron River Valley, and its Palestinian residents continued to cultivate the land of Wadi Hilweh, west of the river.

At the beginning of the twentieth century, BARON EDMOND DE ROTHSCHILD acquired land on the eastern slopes of the Wadi Hilweh hill with the intention of dedicating it to archaeological excavations. A short time earlier, in the 1880s, a group of Jews purchased lands in an area near southern Silwan, where they established a community known as Kfar Shiloah (Shiloah Village). At its height over a hundred Jewish families of Yemenite origin lived there. During World War I, residents began abandoning the village, and by the late 1920s and early 1930s all the Jewish residents of Kfar Shiloah had moved elsewhere.

Since 1967 the number of residents in Silwan has increased significantly, and the village has assumed a more urban character. But over the years, the neighborhood suffered from intense neglect on the part of Israeli authorities: Silwan ranks at the bottom of Palestinian Jerusalem neighborhoods according to the Central Bureau of Statistics' socioeconomic index. Many of Silwan's ROADS are unpaved. The neighborhood lacks regular garbage collection and some of its houses are not connected to the sewage system. One high school serves 31,000 residents, and students are forced to travel to distant schools in the city. The neighborhood does not have a public youth center or community centers in general, nor does it have a single public park. This situation is repeated throughout all of Palestinian East Jerusalem and reflects municipal and national government policy that encourages the Palestinians to leave. But the main tool that Israel has used to gain control over sizable parts of Silwan by undermining residents' hold on their land has been with "laws" in general, and with construction "laws" (or the lack thereof) in particular.

In the forty-two years of Israeli control over East Jerusalem, the planning institutions have approved only a few town planning schemes, and in only a small fraction of Silwan's territory. In the Wadi Hilweh and al-Bustan area, not a single town planning scheme has been approved. Since 1967, fewer than twenty construction PERMITS have been issued to Palestinians in the Wadi Hilweh area, and those were mainly for minor additions to existing construction.

As of 2009, the vast majority of buildings in Silwan in general and in al-Bustan in particular were built without permits, and thousands of residents of the neighborhood are "construction offenders" in theory and in practice. As such they face the constant threat of HOUSE DEMOLITIONS. Since 1967, hundreds of Palestinian residents have been convicted of building without permits and have been fined for amounts ranging from a few thousand to tens of thousands of shekels, and hundreds of houses have been demolished. Against this background, the JM announced that it intends to carry out massive house demolitions (of some ninety houses) in the al-Bustan quarter on the grounds of their being "illegal."

The policy of enforcing construction laws is completely different when it comes to settlers' homes in Silwan, as is seen in the case of Beit Yehonatan, a seven-story building built by a contractor for the ATERET COHANIM organization in the heart of the settler "Yemenite Neighborhood" in Silwan. The building was erected without a permit and deviated from the regional outline plan, which permits building up to two stories. The legal counsel of the JM testified in writing that he was under heavy pressure from right-wing Knesset members and even from senior officials of the JM to "legalize" Beit Yehonatan ex post facto. Despite the illegality of its very existence, the entrance to Beit Yehonatan received constant police protection, and as of today its tenants continue to receive ongoing security protection, financed by the Housing Ministry.

While Israel systematically undermines the legal connection between the Palestinian residents of Silwan and their homes and lands, it has deepened its control of the neighborhood in stages connected to rules regarding land and houses: until 1992, by seizing houses, some of which were declared “absentee property,” on the basis of the ABSENTEE PROPERTY LAW; after 1992, by buying houses from Palestinians, through a process that involved—according to witnesses, accomplices, and—Israeli court rulings threats, false depositions, forged documents, and posthumous witness signatures.

In the mid-1980s, ARIEL SHARON, then minister of planning and construction, encouraged Jewish settlement in East Jerusalem, and his office orchestrated the transfer of dozens of properties in the Old City and throughout East Jerusalem to settler organizations. This policy was temporarily delayed following the Klugman Commission’s presentation of its conclusions in 1992, but by the late 1990s, the momentum accelerated again.

The Takeover of Palestinian Homes

The first settlers from the ELAD organization entered the City of David/Wadi Hilweh area in October 1991 after comprehensive preparation by Ariel Sharon and with the active help of his ministry. Ministry companies transferred properties inhabited by Palestinian residents to ELAD in exchange for nominal sums of money, after some of those properties were taken away from their Palestinian owners on the basis of “absentee property” laws. The main (but not only) execution contractor of this policy was the ELAD organization. ELAD—there should be no doubt—is part and parcel of the settlement movement, but in the saga of Silwan ELAD serves for all practical purposes as a government agency.

The method of taking control of property worked like this: Be’eri, the JEWISH NATIONAL FUND (JNF), and Himnuta (a subsidiary private company of the JNF) reached an unwritten agreement that Be’eri would identify properties that had been owned by Jewish families in Silwan in the early twentieth century, and the JNF would act to evict the Palestinians who have lived in them for decades. Under the law, it is allowed to register property as “absentee” if it has been proven that the owner of the property was absent on the effective date in May or June 1948.

The registration of property as absentee is not public, and the owner of the property has no way of knowing that his property was so registered; he cannot stop the expropriation with legal measures; and he is not entitled to compensation for property registered as absentee. However, he can go to court and ask to cancel registration of the property as absentee if he can prove that the owner of the property was not absent on the effective date in 1948. ELAD undertook to compensate the Palestinians who were evicted from their homes and, in exchange, to rent or lease the properties from the JNF for token fees—usually protected tenancy—for an unlimited period of time in another location. Those agreements were reached and made without tender. So, for instance, in 1987 an agreement was signed between the JNF and ELAD that the organization would pay eviction compensation to the Gozlan family, who lived on a property that had belonged in the distant past to the Jewish National Fund, and in exchange the JNF gave ELAD a protected tenancy contract for the property. The fact that the father of the Gozlan family saved Jewish lives in the 1929 WESTERN WALL DISTURBANCES did not help Mohamed Gozlan and in 2005, after exhausting protracted legal procedures, he was evicted from his home with his family.

Another method of acquiring houses under the Absentee Property Law involves the CUSTODIAN OF ABSENTEE PROPERTY declaring certain Palestinian properties “absentee property” as a result of information that he received (sometimes from the very same settler organizations plus a Palestinian who worked in their service) and signing a series of depositions, many of which were false. The “absentee” homes were transferred to the ILA, then to the Jerusalem Development Authority, and from there to the Amidar Company or another branch of the Housing Ministry, which, in turn, transferred them to ELAD under protected tenancy contracts and in exchange for small sums.

It is of note that as early as 1968, Attorney General MEIR SHAMGAR forbade the Absentee Property Law from being applied to Palestinians from East Jerusalem, but after the administration of MENAHEM BEGIN was established in 1977, the law was reactivated at the initiative of then-agriculture minister Ariel Sharon. In 1992, following the KLUGMAN REPORT, Attorney General Harish ordered that the use of the law be terminated; but in 2004 Sharon, as prime minister, decided to activate it again. A year later Attorney General Mazuz, quoting Shamgar’s arguments, ordered application of the law to “stop immediately.”

Nevertheless, in the course of taking over property in Silwan, the problematic law was applied extensively. One of the properties the custodian seized in Silwan was the Abbasi family home near the Gihon Spring, which included nine apartments and two warehouses. David Be'eri of ELAD had his eye on the Abbasi house and posed as a tour guide so he could see the house from the inside. In September 1987 the Abbasi house was declared "absentee," as a result of the pressure that the ILA and Be'eri put on the Custodian of Absentee Property. In July 1991 the Amidar Company rented the property to ELAD, and on 10 October that year members of ELAD broke into the house in the middle of the night while the family was sleeping. The intruders suspended themselves by rope from a window in the roof, broke door locks, threw furniture into the courtyard, and ascended to the roof, where they broke into song and dance and waved the Israeli flag in the light of the breaking day. The Jerusalem District Court ruled that the declaration of the Abbasi home as absentee property was based on a false deposition, without any factual or legal basis, and the entire process was tainted by "extreme lack of good faith." Nevertheless, as of this writing (2009), that property remains caught in convoluted legal procedures, ELAD people live in it, and the Abbasi family remains dispossessed.

Altogether, in this manner sixty-eight properties in East Jerusalem were transferred to the hands of right-wing settler organizations, including fourteen in Silwan that were transferred to ELAD. Additionally, according to figures collected by advocate Daniel Seidemann of Ir Amim, the Jewish National Fund and the Custodian of Absentee Property transferred 28 dunums (7 acres) of Palestinian land in Silwan to ELAD. Moreover, according to Seidemann's figures, the government gave ELAD two more dunums that it owned in Silwan, a legacy of land that the BRITISH MANDATE government had expropriated, and lands that the state had purchased at the settlers' request. All in all, the state and the JNF gave ELAD 36 dunums (9 acres) of the total area (about 116 dunums, or 29 acres) of the City of David/Wadi Hilweh, or one quarter of the neighborhood's land.

In light of the findings of the Klugman Commission (1992), it is possible to outline the dynamic by which properties such as the Abbasi house were transferred from Palestinian hands to Israeli ownership, under the auspices and support of government agencies:

1. Representatives of the settlers' organizations (ELAD, Ateret Cohanim, etc.) identified Palestinian properties considered desirable for settler takeover and were involved in the process of declaring the property as absentee. Some of the depositions were signed before the organizations' own lawyers and many of them were signed by a serial deposer who was proven to be unreliable.
2. The Custodian of Absentee Property declared the property to be absentee without checking the veracity of the depositions.
3. The custodian "sold" (for nothing) the property to the Jerusalem Development Authority (of the ILA).
4. A joint committee of the Amidar Company and the Ministry of Housing decided to whom to lease or rent the properties. The committee included representatives of the same right-wing organizations that were involved, as described above, in "marking" the properties as absentee. As Amidar project managers they also determined the amounts of money that would be allocated for renovating the said properties before they were handed over to the Jewish tenants, and approved their security budgets. All told, such renovations amounted to tens of millions of shekels.
5. The same committee members also decided to lease or rent the properties to Ateret Cohanim (in the Old City) and to ELAD (Silwan)—that is, to the organizations they represented.

Following the findings of the Klugman Commission, the government, headed by Prime Minister YITZHAK RABIN, instructed the State Comptroller's Office to investigate the affair, but the investigation was discontinued at the request of the security cabinet. Additionally, the actions of the "shadow cabinet" were curbed, and in the following decade Israel's settlement enterprise in Silwan switched to a different method: the direct purchase of properties from their Palestinian owners. That is how the area called the "Givati parking lot" in the northern part of the neighborhood was bought. The area was part of the "Aderet compound" in the middle of Wadi Hilweh Street, which the municipality calls the "Ma'alot Ir David" ("the ascent of the city of David"), and which was bought by IRVING MOSKOWITZ's Everest Foundation, as well as the area containing "Beit Yehonatan." Likewise, representatives of the settlers have claimed in various interviews that they have bought additional properties in Silwan but haven't moved into them, in order to protect the lives of the Palestinian COLLABORATORS.

At least in some of the transactions in which Palestinians supposedly sold properties in Silwan to Jews, the buyers made use of fake documents. In at least one case the court nullified such a transaction. In another case police are investigating suspected criminal aspects in a transaction to Jews. There is also proof of pressure being placed on Palestinians to sell properties to Jews. The house purchases are conducted with the precision of military operations. "When I enter a house," Be'eri told Minister Avi Dichter, "I go in as if it were a military operation. . . . Always with a gun, with radio, with someone with me and with somebody outside that knows." Before the purchase, an intelligence network is used to find out about, among other things, conflicts and disputes among Palestinian families in Silwan that could help buying a property. Muhammad Maraga, who served as a straw man in transactions between Palestinians and settlers from Ateret Cohanim, testified that he had been recruited to work for the settlers after he got in trouble with the law. His recruiter was a member of the Jerusalem Police Department's minority division. According to Maghara, many of the Palestinian straw men used by the settlers have criminal records.

Muhammad Maraga's story, reported by Meron Rappoport in Ha'aretz on 1 April 2005, illustrates the settlers' methods in working with Palestinian collaborators. Maraga was induced—by vast amounts of money, good times overseas, casinos, limousines, and prostitutes—to forge documents, buy properties, and even sell a plot owned by his extended family. A man with a weak character and a criminal record, he began by buying property for the settlers, chiefly in the Yemenite quarter of Silwan. First, he bought the home of the Asla family for Ateret Cohanim and received brokerage fees of $10,000, and he later bought a plot from his uncle Hamidan Maraga, for which he was paid 20,000 Jordanian dinars ($28,000) and received a package holiday in Antalya and sessions with call girls in Jerusalem's finest hotels. Maraga was promised that once the building was constructed on the plot, the settlers would help his immediate family emigrate to Canada. He then bought two other buildings in the Yemenite neighborhood, one belonging to the family of Achmed Faraj and another in his own family's possession. For those two deals he was paid $30,000 and given a visit to Atlantic City, New Jersey. However, the owners of one of the buildings filed a complaint with the police declaring that the documents under which the transactions had been performed were forged. At that point Maraga realized he was in danger and began planning his flight from Israel, but the settlers convinced him to remain in the country until the transaction was completed and promised him a $150,000 fee and a plane ticket overseas. Before he could leave, however, Maraga was forced by the village elders to flee Silwan, and he hid out for a period in Eilat until he disappeared in August 2005. No trace of him has since been found.

In another case, a key decisionmaker in the purchase transactions of the right-wing organizations in Silwan introduced himself as a "real estate broker." He posed as an Israeli lawyer (which he was not) and informed Palestinian residents in writing that they had debts to the tax authorities, but could have them erased if they sold their properties.

As noted earlier, due to the lack of town plan schemes in Silwan, most of the Palestinian construction in the area is done without building permits; and legal procedures, fines, and demolition orders are pending against many residents. Residents of Silwan say that representatives of the settlers approach them and promise that if they sell their real estate to Jews, the legal procedures against them will be dropped. Senior officials in the Jerusalem Municipality confirmed that settler representatives approached them more than once to find out whether and how they could close illegal construction cases, after the real estate was sold to Jews.

Despite the suspicion of criminal activities in the Silwan transactions, no charges have so far been brought in these cases. Moreover, when members of the organizations enter or invade Palestinian homes, as in the case of the houses in the "Yemenite neighborhood," they receive police guards, without the police checking the legality of the transactions or the legal status of the buildings into which the Jews move. On the other hand, these cases illustrate the complaints of the Palestinians that the Jewish organizations, and the straw men who operate on their behalf, enjoy immunity before the law, and that their chances of winning legal disputes are scant when the settlers present "purchase papers" of their properties. Moreover, the legal procedures take many years, and most of the Palestinians whose properties have been seized have difficulty paying legal fees.

Wadi Hilweh is guarded by the Modi'in Ezrahi company for 20 million shekels a year (as of 2005), funded by the Housing Ministry. The Modi'in Ezrahi guards serve as a "private police force" for the settlers; they supervise the movement of the Palestinians in the neighborhood with cameras, restrict their movement, and in some cases even arrest them. The guards prevent Palestinians from parking near their homes and capriciously throw up ROADBLOCKS and frequently erect CHECKPOINTS at the entrance to the neighborhood, allowing only Jewish residents to pass through. The security company installed fifty-three cameras throughout Wadi Hilweh, some above private Palestinian homes, which broadcast to a control center in one of the buildings that is under the control of ELAD in the village. The supervision by the private guards employed by the settler organizations augments the RESTRICTIONS ON MOVEMENT imposed by the IDF and police on the residents of Wadi Hilweh.

The Takeover of Public Space

An additional stage in the program to assert Jewish control over Silwan began in the 1990s. It sought to take control of the public space in Silwan by transferring the national park that was under the control of the Israel Nature and Parks Authority (INPA), including the archaeological excavations in the area, to the exclusive control of ELAD. Settlement in the national park has proven an effective and sophisticated instrument for the de facto takeover of land, and for rewriting the historic memory of the area.

The area of the City of David National Park (CDNP) covers 24 dunums (6 acres). It is located at the heart of the Wadi Hilweh/City of David neighborhood, and includes sites such as Siloam Channel, Siloam Pool, and the excavation site at the City of David. In historical value it is significant, both nationally and universally. The park is one of the components of the Walls of Jerusalem National Park, whose area is 1,100 dunums (275 acres). For many years the INPA delegated management of the Walls of Jerusalem National Park to the Jerusalem Municipality. But in October 1997, a year after BENJAMIN NETANYAHU was elected prime minister and Ariel Sharon was appointed minister of infrastructure, an "authorization contract" was signed between the ILA and ELAD, giving the organization the "guardianship and maintenance" of the Walls of Jerusalem National Park within the confines of the City of David National Park in Silwan for seven years. The contract was signed without being preceded by a tender, and its existence was hidden from relevant government bodies such as the Israel Antiquities Authority. In its wake, the Jerusalem Municipality, which at the time was headed by EHUD OLMERT, transferred its powers over the park to ELAD. That contract too was made without a tender. The transfer of powers was done contrary to the opinion of the senior professional echelon in the INPA, but with the declared support of Minister of the Environment Rafael Eitan (a member of the ultra-right-wing TEHIYA PARTY, founder of the ultranationalist TZOMET party, and an advocate of TRANSFER).

The move drew opposition from archaeologists and the Israel Antiquities Authority. Following a petition to the Israeli Supreme Court, the Israel Lands Administration canceled its permission, and the attorney general told the court that control of the park would be restored to the National Parks Authority, as it had been in the past. Despite the commitment to the High Court of Justice, in 2002 the INPA renewed the agreement with ELAD to manage the City of David National Park. The minister of the environment, with whom the INPA is affiliated, was at that time Tzachi Hanegbi (a former justice minister who in 2006 was indicted for making political appointments to civil service posts during his time as environment minister). The agreement was made without a tender and without a discussion in the plenary of the Israel Nature and Parks Authority, which is supposed to oversee its activity. According to the chairman of the Council of National Parks and Nature Reserves, which supervises the INPA, the City of David is the only case in which the administration of a national park was delegated to a private political body. Nonetheless, as of this writing ELAD has managed the site, collected entry fees, and transferred the money to its coffers. Its representatives guide visitors on tours that include a visit to the Siloam Channel.

The handover of the control of the City of David National Park is significant for several reasons. First, it reduces the public space for the Palestinian residents of Silwan. About a quarter of all of the public areas that in the past were open to all are now closed to the local residents, and entry into them requires a fee and a security check. In addition, the transfer of the park to ELAD marks its transformation from a national park to “a park of the Jewish nation only,” while subordinating its history and archaeology to the service of the Jewish narrative. According to the authorization that ELAD received for managing the City of David National Park, it is the main underwriter of the excavations at that site, whose historic importance is enormous, and ELAD has the power to influence their location, dimensions, and goals. Moreover, ELAD decides almost exclusively how the findings will be presented to visitors at the CDNP as well as the content of the guided tours. Visitors to the park do not receive “regular” history lessons about the area’s past, including its Canaanite, Jewish, Byzantine, and Muslim history, but a lesson in Jewish history, with almost exclusive emphasis on the periods of Jewish settlement at the site. The ELAD guides either fail to point out anything that is not from the Jewish period or, worse, tell visitors that things from other periods are actually from the Jewish era.

The City of David is one of the most visited sites in Israel. According to figures provided by ELAD, 360,272 people visited the national park in 2007, and of those, 152,527 received guided tours from the ELAD visitor center. Moreover, tens of thousands of soldiers, on various joint programs run by ELAD and the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES, visit annually. The importance of these “heritage tours,” when conducted by tour guides informed by a declared national religious ideology, cannot be overstated. The tours are led by ELAD guides, for whom, according to a Tel Aviv University archaeologist who excavated the City of David in the 1980s, “history began with the Kingdom of David and ended with the destruction of the Second Temple, and began again when they [ELAD] settled here at Silwan.”

The tours for soldiers are part of two separate projects jointly run by the Israel Defense Forces and ELAD: the Moriah project, as part of the education corps, and a project by the chief military rabbinate. Many different parties are involved in the Moriah project, but one important one is the “City of David Visitor Center.” An officer from the education corps information unit (stationed in the Jewish Quarter), who served in the Moriah project, related that the tour, the buses, the entrance to the sites, and lunch are all at the expense of ELAD. As for the contents, he related, “It was important to the information unit to present the three religions in Jerusalem, but they [Be’eri and Dvir Kahane of ELAD] insisted only on Judaism. You could not pick between the periods. You had to take Second Temple.” Another officer who served in the project said, “They demanded that every tour go through the City of David.” An officer who served in the information unit said that he “was given training” by ELAD, and in it “they talked only about the Jewish narrative. They didn’t mention the Palestinian residents; as if they jumped over 2000 years of history.”

An additional problematic in the handover of the control of the City of David National Park to ELAD, with its sole focus on “Jewish” Jerusalem, became apparent in May 2008 when human bones from the eighth or ninth century, that is, the early Muslim period, were found at the Givati parking lot site. According to reports in Ha’aretz, the skeletons were cleared from the site without being reported to the Ministry of Religious Affairs, as required by the Israel Antiquities Authority’s (IAA) own regulations. The IAA called the incident a “grave mishap,” but there seems little doubt that the IAA is aware that ELAD, an organization with a declared ideological agenda, treats the archaeology of the City of David in a biased manner.

The greatest significance of the handover of the CDNP to ELAD is, simply, territorial. The case of “Plot #44” illustrates what the public areas of Silwan can expect in the future. This plot is east of the main road of the neighborhood of Wadi Hilweh. For many years the Kara’in family who lived nearby cultivated the plot and planted it with olive, almond, and other trees. When the national park was designated at Silwan in 1974, the plot was included in the boundaries of the park, but the family continued to cultivate it. In 2002, the family’s patriarch, Khaled Kara’in, stated that people of the Israel Nature and Parks Authority entered the plot with David Be’eri, who said, “there will be a nice kindergarten here.” A month later all of the trees that Khaled’s father had planted in the plot were uprooted and the land was leveled. Shortly thereafter several mobile homes were placed on the land, which serve as ELAD offices and warehouses. Next to them is a large tent that serves as a synagogue and a space for social functions. Five years later, on 17 December 2007, ELAD submitted to the Jerusalem planning committee a town plan scheme in which the organization asked permission to build a synagogue, kindergarten classrooms, ten housing units, and underground parking for 100 cars on Plot #44 and a nearby plot even though the Israel Nature and Parks Authority's law forbids any "degradation" of a national park, "including . . . a change of the terrain, including digging, constructing a building or facility," unless a written permit is received from the authority. There is no evidence of ELAD receiving any permit from the authority. Of note is that Plot #44 is adjacent to the Aderet compound, under the private ownership of the Irving Moskowitz Everest Foundation.

Additionally, the Israel Nature and Parks Authority's inspectors frequently harass Palestinians. In October 2008, when Kamal Jabr built a step out of soil in the area next to his house, so that his old father could reach the olive trees he cultivates, he received a letter from the INPA in which he was ordered to remove the dirt step or face legal proceedings. Other residents of Wadi Hilweh report cases in which INPA's inspectors entered their homes in the neighborhood and confiscated birds in cages, claiming they were protected birds, and cases in which inspectors who find garbage next to Palestinian homes fine them, claiming that the Palestinians are degrading the national park.

Control Underground

The Israeli takeover of Silwan goes beyond the aboveground space of the settlements and "nature and parks" to the underground area of archaeological digs. ELAD is deeply involved in all of the archaeological excavations at the City of David and Mount Zion, usually as underwriter and sponsor. These excavations have been greatly expanded during the years 2005–2009. Most of them are fenced off and closed to the general public, preventing the entrance of residents to large spaces that, until the 1990s, were part of the public space of Silwan.

The first excavations, carried out by the IAA, were begun in the early 1990s in the area of the "Fountain House" next to the Gihon Spring, on the eastern slopes of the City of David Hill. Since then, the excavations in the "Fountain House" area have been going on for fifteen years. In the last few years, excavation activity has expanded to other sites in the City of David/Wadi Hilweh, including Siloam Pool and the Givati parking lot.

Some of these excavations were carried out under residents' homes in violation of the law and in a way that caused harm to their property. In January 2008, parts of the road on Wadi Hilweh Street sank; only then did the residents discover that the excavation in the area went under their homes and the land they owned. Seven local residents filed a petition to the High Court of Justice to stop the work, and the court issued an order nisi to stop it. In addition, twenty-five Palestinian families living next to the Givati parking lot petitioned the High Court in November 2008 to stop work at that site. The petitioners complained that the excavations were causing various kinds of damage to their homes: floors sinking, parts of ceilings collapsing, cracks opening in the walls and floors. Moreover, the work was being performed from 7 A.M. to 7 P.M. without a break, using heavy machinery and causing intolerable noise. The petition went on to argue that the excavation was part of the groundwork for construction of a giant 115,000-square-meter (28.4-acre) commercial center, even though such a building does not have a construction license, nor was a town plan scheme submitted for it. In an order nisi issued by the High Court, the archaeological excavation itself was allowed to continue, but drilling, digging, and construction at the site were forbidden. The Jerusalem Municipality was to check whether work at the site was licensed, and if it was not, to stop it immediately. Work has not stopped. In February 2009, part of the stairwell leading from the City of David visitor center at the Gihon Spring collapsed, along with an electric pole that stood next to the stairs. Large amounts of dirt were cleared from the site, including many antique pottery vessels.

The Future Silwan as an Archaeological Amusement Park

The continuing expropriation of the geographical space of Silwan in favor of Jewish Jerusalem will soon reach a new record in the form of Town Plan Scheme 11555, deposited with the local building and planning committee at the end of 2007 and covering 548 dunums (135 acres) of the area of Silwan, including the eastern slopes of the Wadi Hilweh/City of David hillside and most of the al-Bustan quarter.

Town Plan Scheme 11555, developed by the Jerusalem municipality, intends to transform the whole area of the City of David/Wadi Hilweh from a Palestinian neighborhood into an Israeli and Jewish archaeological park, while building on an area of 100,000 square meters (24.7 acres). Implementing the plan requires destroying the al-Bustan area almost completely (the municipality says twenty-one to twenty-two houses will remain standing in it after the demolition), evicting more than a thousand of its residents, and expropriating large properties from the Palestinians. This area had been designated as an “open public area, special public area and area reserved for archaeological excavations”; however, the new plan designates it as “areas for roads, parking lots, paths, a promenade, open areas, a special public area, public buildings and institutions, engineering installations and housing.” Among the main features mentioned in the plan are: on the ruins of al-Bustan, an archaeological garden in the “spirit of the Second Temple” will be built; a promenade will be built from Mount Zion to Dung Gate; and there will be a cable car connecting the City of David to the Mount of Olives or between the City of David and Armon HaNatziv Promenade. Additionally, TPS 11555 involves building a tunnel (“a three-dimensional compound”) that will expose the city’s drainage system from Herod’s time. That tunnel will begin at Siloam Pool, ascend under the residents’ homes up to the Givati parking lot, run under the Dung Gate, and exit at the archaeological park in the southern Western Wall, a few meters from the al-Haram ash-Sharif and only a few dozen meters from the opening of the Western Wall tunnel (the HASMONEAN TUNNEL). The Western Wall tunnel itself is also undergoing a significant expansion and was recently connected by tunnels to a synagogue on al-Wad Street (HaGay) in the Muslim quarter of the Old City, on the way to which it runs under the homes of Palestinian residents. This plan is being carried out by the IAA in cooperation with the East Jerusalem Development Authority, underwritten by ELAD.

In the town plan scheme, al-Bustan is called “area cell 309,” and it will “be developed as a continuous garden . . . using historic elements and combining the water flowing from the Siloam Pool” and will include “shady sitting areas, various paths such as wooden decks and stairs . . . escalators and visitor transportation systems,” after a “landscape rehabilitation, including construction of traditional terraces,” with an emphasis on the “historic and cultural significance of the valleys, water works, necropolis and vegetation that characterized the site.” Added to this plan is another by the Jerusalem Municipality, born in a government decision from August 2001 and being carried out in cooperation between ELAD, the Ministry of Transportation, and the East Jerusalem Development Authority, to invest 30 million shekels (approximately $7.5 million) in upgrading the road ascending from Siloam Pool to the Givati parking lot. This plan includes building nine parking lots in Wadi Hilweh, most of which will be built on private Palestinian land, whose expropriation the Jerusalem Municipality announced in 2008. The residents, who asked to postpone the work, petitioned the court, with the help of the ASSOCIATION FOR CIVIL RIGHTS IN ISRAEL and Bimkom (Planners for Planning Rights, an Israeli nonprofit organization formed in 1999 by a group of planners and architects, to strengthen democracy and human rights in the field of planning), and asked for the land they owned to be used to build vital services for the residents and not parking lots for tourists coming to the City of David.

The idea to destroy al-Bustan and build a national park on its ruins was proposed in 1995 by the steering committee for the development of tourism in Jerusalem, but only in 2004 did Jerusalem city engineer Uri Shetreet instruct the building inspection department to clear the “illegal structures,” that is, the homes of Palestinian residents. Publication of the intention to demolish the homes drew Palestinian and international protest, and Uri Lupolianski, the mayor at the time, suspended the plan. In the last months of 2008 the demolitions in al-Bustan resumed, and city bulldozers, accompanied by a large police force, came to the neighborhood to destroy the home of the Siyam family and forcibly evict the family members.

After the November 2008 elections for mayor of Jerusalem that brought Nir Barkat to the position, the municipality began a new drive and asked the residents of the neighborhood to evacuate voluntarily to another part of East Jerusalem. The residents rejected the offer. On 1 March 2009 a commercial strike took place in East Jerusalem and the West Bank in protest against the intention to demolish the al-Bustan homes. Hillary Clinton, the new secretary of state in the Barack Obama administration, mentioned the issue during her visit to Jerusalem, when she said that demolishing the homes was “not helpful” to the peace process.

In March 2009, in the al-Bustan area of Silwan, eighty-eight to ninety homes, housing some 1,500 residents, were re-served with eviction notices— notices first issued in 2005 but deferred due to international and especially US pressure. With the reinstatement of the eviction decrees, Mayor Barkat, with the support of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, offered to transfer the residents to Beit Hanina or “somewhere else.” About seventy Jewish families already live in Silwan in homes previously owned by Palestinians or new homes built on land after a Palestinian home was demolished.

See also ABSENTEE PROPERTY LAW; ATERET COHANIM; ELAD; HOLY BASIN; ISRAELI SUPREME COURT; JERUSALEM; KLUGMAN REPORT, 1993; SETTLER GROUPS AND SETTLEMENTS, EAST JERUSALEM; THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT

Bibliography

- Architects and Planners for Justice in Palestine. Silwan Petition. Architects and Planners for Justice in Palestine. www.apjp.org.
- Associated Press. “Strife in Silwan.” The Jerusalem Post. 30 March 2009.
- Bronner, Yigal. “Archaeologists for Hire: A Jewish Settler Organization Is Using Archeology to Further Its Political Agenda and Oust Palestinians from Their Homes.” The Guardian. 1 May 2008.
- . “Israeli Settlers, Archaeologists and Dispossession in Palestinian Silwan.” Reported by the Israeli Committee Against House Demolitions (ICAHD). Jerusalem. Counterpunch. 3 June 2008.
- Bronner, Yigal, and Neve Gordon. “Beneath the Surface: Are Jerusalem Digs Designed to Displace Palestinians?” The Chronicle Review. 54:33 (25 April 2008).
- B’Tselem. House Demolitions in Silwan, East Jerusalem. 12 November 2008. http://www.btselem.org/English/Jerusalem/20081112\_House\_Demolitions\_in\_Silwan.asp.
- Cheshin, Amir S., Bill Hutman, and Avi Melamed. Separate and Unequal: The Inside Story of Israeli Rule in East Jerusalem. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1999.
- Clinton Proposal on Israeli-Palestinian Peace*. Meeting with President Clinton, White House. 23 December 2000. New York: Council on Foreign Relations. 7 January 2001. http://www.cfr.org/publication/13838/clinton\_parameters\_regarding\_israel\_and\_palestine.html.
- Eldar, Akiva, “The Very Eye of the Storm.” Ha’aretz. 3 April 2009.
- European Union. EU Heads of Mission Report on East Jerusalem. EUObserver Document. 9 March 2009. euobserver.com.
- Friedman, Joshua. “Palestinians, Israelis and Internationals Demonstrate against Land Confiscation.” Alternative Information Center. 3 April 2006.
- Friedman, Lara. “Settlements in Focus: Silwan: In Focus #28.” Jerusalem: Peace Now, June 2005.
- Gazzar, Brenda. “Silwan Residents Protest Demolition Plan.” The Jerusalem Post. 8 March 2009.
- Greenburg, Joel. “Settlers Move into 4 Homes in East Jerusalem.” New York Times. 9 June 1998.
- Hallward, Maia Carter. “Visit to Silwan with Bat Shalom and Meir Margalit.” Occupation Magazine. Jerusalem. 21 May 2005.
- Hasson, Nir. “Jerusalem Offers to Voluntarily Relocate 1,500 Palestinian Residents.” Ha’aretz. 22 February 2009.
- Hider, James. “Settlers Dig Tunnels around Jerusalem.” The Times Online. 1 March 2008.
- Ir-Amin. The Character of Settlements in Jerusalem. n.d. <http://www.ir-amim.org.il/Eng/?CategoryID=195>.
- . The Eviction of the Two Families in Sheikh Jarrah—A Dangerous Move for Expanding the Jewish Settlement in the Neighborhood. Jerusalem. June 2009.
- . Evictions and Settlement Plans in Sheikh Jarrah: The Case of Shimon HaTzadik. Jerusalem. June 2009. <http://www.ir-amim.org.il/Eng/?CategoryID=299>.
- . Excavations at Silwan. Jerusalem. 2008. <http://www.ir-amim.org.il/Eng/?CategoryID=299>.
- . Israeli Settlement in Palestinian Communities in East Jerusalem: Snapshot. Jerusalem. August 2009.
- . Severe Threat to Al Bustan-Silwan Neighborhood. Jerusalem. 25 February 2009.
- . Shady Dealings in Silwan. Jerusalem. May 2009.
- . State Funding of Security for East Jerusalem Settlers. n.d. <http://www.ir-amim.org.il/Eng/?CategoryID=301>.
- . State of Affairs—Jerusalem 2008: Political Development and Changes on the Ground. Ir Amim Annual Report. December 2008.
- . The Struggle over the “Holy Basin.” Jerusalem. n.d. <http://www.ir-amim.org.il/Eng/?CategoryID=269>.
- . Use of the Absentee Property Law in East Jerusalem. Jerusalem. n.d. <http://www.ir-amim.org.il/Eng/?CategoryID=190>.
- Israeli Committee Against House Demolitions. “The Process of Transfer Continues: The Jerusalem Municipality Plans to Demolish Silwan, East Jerusalem.” 6 June 2005.
- Kashti, Ori, and Meron Rapoport. “Settler Group Refuses to Vacate Land Slated for School for the Disabled in Silwan.” Ha’aretz. 15 January 2008.
- Lefkovits, Etgar. “Barkat May Relocate Silwan Residents.” The Jerusalem Post. 19 March 2009.
- Macintyre, Donald. “Plan for Tourist Theme Park Raises Jerusalem Tensions: Demolition Orders Served on Palestinian Homes.” The Independent. 6 March 2009.
- Margalit, Meir. “Playing with Fire: The Jerusalem Municipality Wants to Demolish a Neighborhood with 88 Houses in Silwan Village and to Expel 1,000 Palestinian Residents.” Translated by Mark Marshall. Occupation Magazine. 31 May 2005.
- Mizrahi, Jonathan. “Alternative Archaeology: From Shiloah to Silwan.” Jerusalem: Hagada Hasmatil,

- 11 February 2008. www.hagada.org.il/eng/modules.php?name=News&file=article&sid=225.
- New Urban Environment. "Armon Ha-Natziv: Background and Threats to the Ridge." Sustainable Jerusalem. n.d. http://www.sustainable-jerusalem.org/old\_site/jerusalem/envir33.html.
- Peace Now. "'Peace Now' Report: The Battle for Jerusalem's Old City and Holy Basin." Jerusalem. 28 May 2006.
- POICA. Ethnic Cleansing in Silwan, 14 June 2005. Applied Research Institute—Jerusalem. 2005. http://www.poica.org/editor/case\_studies/view.php?recordID=615.
- . Israeli Aggressions on Silwan's Land and Real Estates Continued—Jerusalem Governorate, 14 January 2006. Applied Research Institute—Jerusalem. 2006. http://www.poica.org/editor/case\_studies/view.php?recordID=746.
- Rappoport, Meron. "City to Raze Homes of 1,000 Residents in East Jerusalem Neighborhood." Ha'aretz. 31 May 2005.
- . "Demolition of Silwan Homes Will Go Ahead." Ha'aretz. 2 June 2005.
- . "Government Decision Strips Palestinians of Their East Jerusalem Property." Ha'aretz. 20 January 2005.
- . "Islamic-Era Skeletons 'Disappeared' from ELAD-Sponsored Dig." Ha'aretz. 1 June 2008.
- . "Our Man in Silwan." Ha'aretz Supplement. 1 April 2005.
- . "Police Arrest 5 Palestinians Who Petitioned against IAA Digs under Their Homes." Ha'aretz. 12 February 2008.
- . "The Republic of ELAD." Ha'aretz. 23 April 2006.
- . "Settler Group Takes Over Two Compounds in East Jerusalem." Ha'aretz. 3 April 2006.
- . "This Land Is Your Land, This Land Is My Land." Ha'aretz. 3 March 2005.
- Rubinstein, Danny. "The City of David, Below and Above Ground." Ha'aretz. 12 October 2007.
- Shragai, Nadav. "11 Jewish Families Move into J'lem Neighborhood of Silwan." Ha'aretz. 1 April 2004.
- Vitullo, Anita. "Erasing Arab Jerusalem." Middle East Report. 175 (March/April 1992).
- Weatherill, James. "Demolition in Sheikh Jarrah and Demolition Orders in Silwan." United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA). 22 February 2009.

Simpson Commission, 1930

See HOPE-SIMPSON COMMISSION

Sinai/Suez War, 1956

On 29 October 1956, in a premeditated agreement with the European powers, Israel attacked EGYPT through the Sinai Peninsula, and within forty-eight hours Great Britain and FRANCE invaded Egypt. France wanted to punish JAMAL 'ABD AL-NASIR, the Egyptian leader, for supporting the rebels against France in Algeria; Britain wanted to punish him for nationalizing the Suez Canal; and Israel wanted to topple him and acquire additional territory, including Sharm al-Shaykh, al-Arish, Abu Uwayulah, and the GAZA STRIP. The UNITED STATES, SOVIET UNION, and UNITED NATIONS exerted intense pressure on all three countries, which forced the French and British to depart on 7 November; however, Israel defied all entreaties to withdraw, remaining in occupation of the entire Sinai Peninsula and the Gaza Strip until March 1957. A United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) was stationed on the Egyptian side of the border and kept the peace until 1967.

Bibliography

- Bar-On, Mordechai. The Gates of Gaza: Israel's Road to Suez and Back, 1955–1957. Houndmills, Basingstoke, UK: Palgrave Macmillan, 1994.
- Cull, Brian. Wings over Suez: The Only Authoritative Account of Air Operations during the Sinai and Suez Wars of 1956. Toronto: Grub Street Books, 2006.
- Morris, Benny. Israel's Border Wars, 1949–1956: Arab Infiltration, Israeli Retaliation, and the Countdown to the Suez War. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1994.
- El-Shazly, Saad. The Crossing of the Suez, rev. ed. San Francisco: American Mideast Research, 2003.
- Shemesh, Moshe. The Suez-Sinai Crisis: A Retrospective and Reappraisal. London: Routledge, 1990.
- Smith, Simon C. Reassessing Suez 1956. Farnham, Surrey, UK: Ashgate, 2008.
- Tal, David. The 1956 War: Collusion and Rivalry in the Middle East. London: Routledge, 2001.
- Varble, Derek. The Suez Crisis 1956. Oxford, UK: Osprey Publishing, 2003.

Siniora, Hanna (1937–)

Hanna Siniora is a Palestinian journalist, editor, politician, and diplomat. Born in JERUSALEM to an Anglican Christian family, he was trained as a pharmacist in India and graduated in 1969. In 1974 Siniora became the editor of the Palestinian daily al-Fajr, following the disappearance of Yusuf Nasr, and he was editor-in-chief from 1983 to 1993. In 1978 Siniora established Al-Ushbu'a al-Jadid, a pro-PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION journal that appeared intermittently until becoming a weekly in 1982, then a bimonthly after November 1988. Israel allowed Al-Ushbu'a al-Jadid to circulate in the WEST BANK for only one year, during 1991. In 1985, under joint editorship with Zuhayr al-Rayyes, Siniora established a third publication, Al-Mawkef, that appeared weekly until April 1987. Israel permitted distribution of this journal only within Jerusalem, and political disagreement between the editors led to its demise. Siniora subsequently founded the Jerusalem Times and the New Middle East Magazine (both established mid-1994).

Siniora was active in the First INTIFADA (1987–1993), when he articulated strategies of nonviolent resistance. He advocated that Palestinian communities become self-sufficient in the basic necessities of life so they would not have to buy Israeli products, pay taxes, or work for Israeli employers. Siniora expressed the hope that such methods would do “what the Gandhi movement did in India and the black and civil rights movement did in the United States.” He served as adviser to the Palestinian delegation at the MADRID CONFERENCE (1991) and later joined the Palestinian-Jordanian negotiating team. He was elected to the Palestinian Legislative Council during the OSLO ACCORDS (1993–2000) but resigned in protest against the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY’S corruption. Siniora is cochair of the Israel-Palestinian Center for Research and Information (IPCRI) in Jerusalem and chairs the Palestinian Chamber of Commerce in its relations with the UNITED STATES and Europe. An occasional writer for the Jerusalem Times, he is also the general manager of the Biladi advertising agency in Jerusalem.

In June 2002 Siniora was a signatory to a statement that appeared in al-Quds appealing for an end to SUICIDE BOMBINGS of Israelis by Palestinians. In September 2005, together with Gershon Baskin and under the umbrella of the IPCRI, he produced “The Baskin-Siniora Peace Plan: Creating the Two-State Reality—The Six Point Plan.” More recently, Siniora has taken on a new vocation: he is broadcasting on the new Voice of Peace, a venture of Israel’s Givat Haviva Jewish-Arab Center for Peace. The station’s programming—music and news—is in Hebrew, Arabic, and English.

Six Day War

See WAR, 1967

Sokolow, Nahum (1859–1936)

Nahum Sokolow was a prominent Zionist leader, pioneer in Hebrew journalism, and prolific

Hebrew author. Born in Wyszogrod, Russian Poland, into a rabbinic family, he received a traditional Jewish education. In secular subjects, he spoke German, French, Spanish, and Italian as well as English, Yiddish, Hebrew, Polish, and Russian. At the age of seventeen, he began writing reports for the Hebrew newspaper HaTzefira and soon became a regular columnist, finally becoming its editor and publisher. He was unique in being able to attract as his reading public both Westernized Jewish intellectuals and extreme, anti-Haskalah Orthodox rabbis. By profession he was a journalist, but eventually he became an author and published a number of books, including one on Hebrew geography and another on ANTI-SEMITISM. In 1901 he wrote a tract in which he attempted to convince religious Jews that, despite the secular leadership of the Zionist movement, there was no ideological reason for them to oppose the cause. Sokolow later translated Zionist leader THEODOR HERZL’S Altneuland into Hebrew, giving it the title Tel-Aviv. In 1918 he wrote one of the earliest accounts of the history of ZIONISM, beginning his study in the mid-seventeenth century. In fact, Sokolow wrote so much and on so many topics that the Hebrew poet HAYYIM NACHMAN BIALIK once remarked that it would take 300 camels to bring all his writings together in one place.

When Herzl’s The Jewish State was published, Sokolow dismissed as an illusion the idea of Eretz Yisrael, which claimed the whole land of biblical Palestine for the Jewish people. However, Sokolow went through a metamorphosis and rallied to the Zionist movement, in particular after David Wolffsohn, Herzl’s successor as president of the WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION (WZO), called on him to become the WZO’s secretary general. Sokolow held this position from 1907 to 1909, but differences over the political nature of Wolffsohn’s Zionism led to a rift between the two men. In 1911, under a new administration, Sokolow became responsible for the political portfolio and tried to win support for the Zionist idea in the UNITED STATES and Britain. Just before the outbreak of World War I, he visited various Arab leaders with the same intention, but, with the outbreak of hostilities, he moved to England, where he worked closely with CHAIM WEIZMANN.

Sokolow became a key figure in the negotiations for the BALFOUR DECLARATION, in which the British government promised Zionists a national home in Palestine, when he met with French officials and won a pro-Zionist statement from them in May 1917. Cardinal Gasparri, the papal secretary of state, received Sokolow and assured him that Zionism need not fear opposition from the VATICAN. These missions elevated his status in the movement, as evidenced by the fact that, at the Paris Peace Conference in 1919, he headed the Zionist delegation. In 1921 Sokolow was elected chairperson of the ZIONIST EXECUTIVE, during which time he traveled extensively, putting the movement's case before various dignitaries, including Italy's Mussolini. In 1931, following Weizmann's departure from the WZO presidency, Sokolow assumed his mantle and continued his policies. When, in 1935, Weizmann returned to the presidency, Sokolow was elected honorary president and assumed responsibilities in the newly formed Cultural Department.

Bibliography

- Kling, Simcha. Nachum Sokolow: Servant of His People. New York: Herzl Press, 1960.
- Slousch, Nahum. The Renaissance of Hebrew Literature 1743 to 1885. Whitefish, MT: Kessinger Publishing, 2004.
- Sokolov, Nahum. History of Zionism 1600–1918: Two Volumes in One. Jersey City, NJ: Ktav Publishers, 1969.
- Sokolow, Florian. Nahum Sokolow: Life and Legend. Pittsburgh: Jewish Chronicle Publications, 1975.

Sons of Martyrs

The Sons of Martyrs is an institution of the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION that cares for and educates the children of men who have been killed fighting for the Palestinian cause.

South Hebron Mountain

See HEBRON, DISTRICT SOUTHERN AREA

South Lebanon Army

The South Lebanon Army (SLA), also "South Lebanese Army," was a Lebanese militia that emerged during the Lebanese Civil War (1975–1990). After 1979 the militia operated under the authority of SAAD HADDAD's Government of Free Lebanon.

In 1976, as a result of the civil war, the Lebanese army began to break up. Major Saad Haddad, commanding an army battalion in the south, broke away from the Lebanese army and founded a group known as the Free Lebanon Army, which was initially based in the towns of Marjayoun and Qlayaa in southern Lebanon. It fought against various groups, including the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO), AMAL, and, after the 1982 Israeli invasion, the newly emerging HIZBULLAH.

During the first Israeli invasion of LEBANON in 1978, when Tel Aviv established a self-proclaimed "security zone" in southern Lebanon, it allowed the Free Lebanon Army to gain control over a much wider area in southern Lebanon. The Free Lebanon Army was renamed the South Lebanon Army in May 1980. Following Haddad's death due to cancer in 1984, leadership was assumed by Antoine Lahad (a retired lieutenant general).

From its inception, the SLA was closely allied with Israel, policing its "security zone" and fighting against the PLO and other Lebanese guerrilla forces. In return, Israel supplied the organization with arms, uniforms, and other logistical equipment.

In 1985 the SLA opened the Khiam detention center in Khiam, southern Lebanon. It was widely reported that torture was a common tactic and occurred on a large scale in Khiam. Israel denied any involvement, even though the SLA and Israel were closely intertwined at this point in history, and claimed that Khiam was the sole responsibility of the SLA. This assertion has been contested by human rights organizations such as Amnesty International.

Because there were only 1,000 to 1,200 Israeli troops in southern Lebanon at any one time, the SLA carried much of the fighting itself. It also handled all civilian governmental operations in Israel's zone of control. Due to increasingly effective attacks on the SLA during the 1990s by Hizbullah, the SLA experienced a progressive loss of morale and members. By 2000 the SLA was reduced to 1,500 fighters as compared to 3,000 ten years earlier. (At its peak during the early 1980s, the SLA had been composed of over 5,000 fighters.)

When in May 2000 EHUD BARAK withdrew Israeli troops from Lebanon, Israeli forces handed over some forward positions in the occupied zone to the SLA; however, as the somewhat chaotic withdrawal progressed, civilians overran SLA positions and returned to their villages, while Hizbullah guerrillas quickly took control of the areas the SLA had previously controlled. With the Israeli retreat the SLA quickly collapsed, and on 24 May 2000 the sight of Saad Haddad's statue being dragged through the streets of Marjayoun was a sure sign that the South Lebanon Army was gone.

Many SLA members, some with their families, fled to Israel, while others gave themselves up to the Lebanese authorities or were taken prisoner by Hizbullah, who handed them over to the police. Some accepted Israel's offer of full citizenship and a financial package similar to that granted to new immigrants, and settled permanently in Israel. On 6 April 2006 the Israeli Knesset Finance Committee approved the payment of 40,000 shekels per family to SLA veterans, to be paid over the course of seven years. The Government of Free Lebanon, on whose behalf the SLA fought, has operated from JERUSALEM since 2000 and still claims to be the true government of Lebanon.

Bibliography

- Asser, Martin. "Analysis: Role of the SLA." BBC News. 23 May 2000.
- Fisk, Robert. Pity the Nation: The Abduction of Lebanon, 4th ed. New York: Nation Books, 2002.
- Hamizrachi, Beate. The Emergence of the South Lebanon Security Belt: Major Saad Haddad and the Ties with Israel, 1975–1978. Westport, CT: Praeger Publishers, 1988.
- Katz, Sam. Armies in Lebanon, 1982–84. Oxford, UK: Osprey Publishing, 1985.
- Nisan, Mordechai. "Did Israel Betray Its Lebanese Allies?" Middle East Quarterly. December 2000.
- Schiff, Ze'ev, and Ehud Ya'ari. Israel's Lebanon War. Clearwater, FL: Touchstone, 1985.
- Tristram, Pierre. "Saad Haddad and the South Lebanon Army (SLA): Why Haddad and the SLA Matter." About.com. Middle East Issues. n.d. middleeast.about.com/od/arabisraeliconflict/p/me081026b.htm.
- Wilkinson, Tracy. "Pro-Israel Militia in Lebanon Seeks Asylum." Los Angeles Times. 20 December 1999.

Soviet Jews

In the 1970s, the years of détente between the SOVIET UNION and the UNITED STATES, large numbers of Jews were allowed for the first time in some fifty years to leave the Soviet Union. The vast majority, over 130,000, made ALIYA to Israel. When the doors of détente closed in the late 1970s, once again the Soviet Jews (and everyone else) were locked in. The opportunity for emigration became available again only in the mid-1980s, after some strong lobbying by the West, especially by the RONALD REAGAN administration and through the Jackson-Vanick Amendment (which tied US trade with the Soviet Union to its release of Jews). Not surprisingly, tens of thousands of Jews clamored to leave. The question was to where?

The issue was made more difficult by the fact that Jews or anyone else could only leave the Soviet Union, with its record of ANTI-SEMITISM and persecution of Jews and Jewish life, if they had an official invitation and an entry visa to another country. Israel filled this role for the Soviet Jews, and virtually any Jew who wanted to leave could be assured of an automatic visa to Israel. On the strength of that visa, the person could leave Russia, and in the absence of direct flights to Israel, the would-be immigrants were taken to European destinations such as Vienna, where JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL representatives were on hand to complete the transfer to Israel. It soon became clear, however, that many of the Jewish emigrants from the Soviet Union were looking for a way to the West, that is, the United States.

Many organizations, not all Zionist, were involved with the issue of Soviet Jewry. The major welfare agency of American Jewry assisting Jewish immigrants, the United Hebrew Immigrant Aid Service (HIAS), believed that Jews who had escaped from Russia should be helped to start over wherever they wanted and lobbied the US Congress and government to give Soviet Jews special preference as refugees. US refugee status has been reserved traditionally for those with a "well-founded fear of persecution" based on race, religion, nationality, or political opinion. HIAS leaders argued that being a Jew in the lands of the Soviet Union automatically opened one up to persecution and that therefore each Russian Jew who had managed to leave Soviet Russia and wished to come to America should be welcomed. With the active help of American Jewish organizations such as HIAS and others, the United States opened an office in Rome to provide assistance, and thousands of émigrés left Vienna for Rome. In May 1978, out of 1,169 Jews who left the Soviet Union on Israeli visas, only 109 chose to go to Israel.

The WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION and the Israeli government were furious at the approach of the American organization. The foundation of Israel and ZIONISM is the idea that every Jew must return to Zion/Israel, and anything, or anyone, who helped the Russian Jews to settle anywhere but Israel as a traitor. In addition, Israel needed immigrants to maintain its demographic superiority over Israeli Arabs. In 2005, for example, the Jewish population of Israel (roughly 80 percent of the total) was 5,021,506. If the Soviet immigrants were subtracted from the total, the number of Jews in Israel would fall to 3,741,506, in comparison with the 1.3 million PALESTINIAN CITIZENS OF ISRAEL, altering the ratio of Palestinians to Jews considerably. Thus, from a demographic as well as a Zionist perspective, encouraging immigration from the Soviet Union has been an exceedingly important priority for Israel.

In the early 1980s, the Israeli government decided to fight the “dropout” issue of Soviet Jews choosing to immigrate to the United States in two ways. First, it exerted enormous pressure directly on the US government as well as on American Jewish leaders to reverse their position on refugee status for ex-Soviet Jews. Israel argued that these people were not Jewish refugees, since a refugee is a person who has no home to go to, whereas Israel was the natural homeland of Jews from all over the world, including all the Soviet Jews, according to Zionist ideology. Second, in a far more effective step, the Israeli government decided in June 1988 to organize more direct flights to Israel for Soviet Jews. Although HIAS opposed the Israeli government’s initiatives, other American Jewish groups supported it and intensely lobbied the US government. Bowing to Israeli and domestic pressure, Washington set new and stringent limits on the number of Russian Jews permitted to enter the United States. Once the Reagan administration decided to restrict immigration, most Jews who wished to leave Russia would have to go to Israel.

According to the American-Israel Cooperative Enterprise, between the late 1970s and the end of 2003, some 1.28 million Soviet Jews immigrated to Israel from the Soviet Union/Russian Federation. However, the fall of communism in 1991 transformed the situation. Because their absorption in Israel has been accompanied by many problems, such as employment and housing availability, many Jews in Russia no longer believe that aliya is the solution to all their woes. With this has come the start of a new era based on the attempt to rebuild Jewish life in the lands of the former Soviet Union.

See also DEMOGRAPHY; DIASPORA, JEWISH; IMMIGRATION

Bibliography

American-Israel Cooperative Enterprise. “Immigration since 1948.” Jewish Virtual Library. 2005. www

.jewishvirtuallibrary.org/jsource/Immigration/Immigration_Since_1948.html.

———. “The Jewish Population of the World.” Jewish Virtual Library. 2005. <http://72.14.207.104/search?q=cache:Eo9vxxmPoUiAJ:www.jewishvirtuallibrary.org/jsource/Judaism/jewpop.html+Population+Israeli+Jews&hl=en>.

Arbel, Andrea S. Riding the Wave: The Jewish Agency’s Role in the Mass Aliyah of Soviet and Ethiopian Jewry to Israel, 1987–1995. Lynbrook, NY: Gefen Books, 2001.

Huxley, Frederick Charles. Recent Soviet Jewish Immigrants to Israel: Hawkish on Issues, Noncommittal on Parties and Leaders. Washington, DC: Office of Research, U.S. Information Agency, 1991.

Israel, Steve. “Broadening the Picture—Beyond America: Russia: Spotlight on Russia: A Case Study in Diaspora-Israel Complexities.” The Zionist Century, Concepts: Israel Diaspora Relations. Jewish Agency for Israel. n.d. www.jafi.org.il/education/100/concepts/d2-2.html.

Jones, Clive. Soviet Jewish Aliyah, 1989 to 1992: Impact and Implications for Israel and the Middle East. London: Frank Cass, 1996.

Lazin, Fred A. Challenges of Absorption: Soviet and Ethiopian Immigrants in Israel, 1989–1993. New York: Hunter College of the City University of New York, 2001.

———. The Struggle for Soviet Jewry in American Politics: Israel versus the American Jewish Establishment. Lanham, MD: Lexington Books, 2005.

Lurie, Alan P. The Emigration of Jews from Russia to Israel: Background, Effects, and Attitudes. Maxwell AFB, AL: U.S. Air University, Air War College, 1976.

Quigley, John B. Flight into the Maelstrom: Soviet Immigration to Israel and Middle East Peace. Ithaca, NY: Ithaca Press, 1997.

Reiser, Stewart. Soviet Jewish Immigration to Israel: Political and Economic Implications. Brookline, MA: Susan and David Wilstein Institute of Jewish Policy Studies, 1992.

Soviet Union

See MOSCOW

State Land

Since the beginning of the OCCUPATION, Israel has used complex legal and bureaucratic mechanisms to take control of more than 50 percent of the LAND in the WEST BANK. This land has been used mainly to establish Jewish SETTLEMENTS and to create reserves of land for the future construction and expansion of settlements. The principal tool employed is to declare it “State Land,” a process that began in 1979 and is based on an interpretation of the Ottoman Land Law of 1858, which, according to Israel, was applicable in the West Bank at the time of Israel's 1967 Occupation of Palestinian territory. Other methods used to take control of Palestinian land include seizure for military needs, declaration of land as "abandoned property" or "absentee property," and expropriation of land for public needs—each based on different legal interpretations. In addition, the government of Israel has provided assistance to private citizens purchasing Palestinian land on the free market. Of all the methods used to gain Palestinian land, however, land seized by virtue of being declared State Land constitutes some 40 percent of the total.

In many cases, Palestinian residents have been unaware that their land has been registered in the name of the state, and by the time they discover this fact it is too late to appeal. The burden of proof rests with the Palestinian claiming ownership of the land, and, even if he meets this burden, the land may still remain registered in the name of the state on the grounds that it was transferred to the settlement "in good faith." Although the confiscation of land and the construction of settlements in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES are prohibited under INTERNATIONAL LAW, the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT of Justice has generally sanctioned the State Land method for acquiring territory for settlements. Initially, the court accepted the state's argument that the settlements met urgent military needs and allowed the state to seize private Palestinian land for this purpose. When the state began to declare land as State Land, the court declined to intervene to prevent this process.

Legal Foundations

In the 1970s, the Israeli government was faced with several demands. On the one hand, the government wanted to expand the settlement project, and others—the settlers, especially GUSH EMUNIM, and right-wing parties (for example, HERUT, GAHAL, and others)—were also exerting intense pressure on the government to accelerate settlement expansion. At the same time, the Supreme Court was receiving an increasing number of Palestinian petitions aimed at stopping land seizures, and the government feared the potential—actualized in the Elon Moreh case—that the court would thwart the establishment of a settlement. All this led the Israeli government to seek new mechanisms for confiscating West Bank land. The solution was found in the use of the Ottoman Land Law, which Israel used to declare approximately 40 percent of the area of the West Bank as State Land. According to Pliya Albeck, former head of the Israel Civil Department in the State Attorney's Office, "Approximately 90 percent of the settlements have been established on land declared state land."

The legal foundation used by Israel to undertake this procedure is based on two key articles from the 1907 Hague Regulations. The first, Article 43, requires the occupying power to respect the laws applying in the Occupied Territory. Israel argues that the essential elements of the Ottoman Land Law were adopted by BRITISH MANDATE (1917–1948) legislation and later by Jordanian legislation and thus, according to certain Israeli legal experts, continued to apply at the time of the Israeli Occupation in 1967. The second foundation is Article 55, which permits an occupying power to manage the properties of the occupied country and to derive profits therefrom, while at the same time maintaining the value and integrity of those properties. Based on this clause, Israel has argued that the establishment of the settlements is a lawful act of deriving profits, which also contributes to maintaining the properties of the Jordanian government.

The use of State Land for the establishment and expansion of settlements, unlike the use of private lands seized for military needs, has enabled the high court to avoid the issue. Petitions filed by Palestinians against the process of declaring State Land and against the existence of the Military Appeals Committee, which is the sole arbiter of Palestinian complaints, have been rejected by the court, which has affirmed the legality of these mechanisms. After recognizing the state's right to these lands, the Supreme Court refused to acknowledge the Palestinians' right to object to their use, claiming they could not prove that they personally were injured. Because no petitions have ever been filed with the high court challenging the legality of the settlements under the Hague Regulations, the Supreme Court has never had to state its position on this issue.

The Ottoman Land Law defines four types of possession or ownership of land.

1. Mulk—completely privately owned land. The proportion of land in the West Bank defined as mulk is negligible and found mainly within the built-up area of towns.

2. Waqf—includes two subtypes: land intended for religious or cultural activities and land used for all other purposes, which is protected against confiscation according to the laws of Islam. In general, Israel has refrained from taking control of both these types of land.
3. Miri—lands in Ottoman law that are situated close to places of settlement and suitable for agricultural use. A person may secure ownership of such land by holding and working the land for ten consecutive years. If a landowner of this type fails to farm the land for three consecutive years for reasons other than those recognized by the law (e.g., the landowner is drafted into the army or the land lies fallow for agricultural reasons), the land is then known as makhul, in which case the sovereign may take possession of the land or transfer the rights therein to another person. The rationale behind this provision of the Land Law was to ensure that as much land as possible was farmed, yielding agricultural produce that could then be taxed.
4. Mawat (dead land)—land that is half an hour's walking distance from a place of settlement or where "the loudest noise made by a person in the closest place of settlement will not be heard." According to the legal definition, this land should be empty and not used by any person. In this case, the sovereign is responsible for ensuring that no unlawful activities take place in such areas. Matruka land, a subcategory of mawat land, is intended for public use, where "public" may mean the residents of a particular village, as in the case of grazing land or cemeteries, or all the residents of the state, as in the case of roads.

An additional method of ownership, known as musha'a, exists alongside the above-mentioned types in many parts of the West Bank. According to this method, the residents of each village own land collectively. Each family is responsible for farming a particular section of land during a fixed period, at the end of which the plots of land are rotated. Although this method was not recognized in the Land Law or in the British and Jordanian legislation that the law absorbed, it continued to exist in the West Bank as a reflection of local tradition.

Process of Taking Land

The declaration of land in the West Bank as State Land was first based on the 1967 Military Order Regarding Government Property (Judea and Samaria No. 59), which authorized the person delegated by the commander of the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) in the region to take possession of properties belonging to an "enemy state" and to manage these at his discretion. Issued shortly after the Occupation began, this order was used through 1979 to seize control of land registered in the name of the Jordanian government when it controlled the West Bank in 1948–1967. Initial examinations revealed that a total of 527,000 dunums (130,000 acres) was eligible for the status of registered State Land, and additional searches of Turkish and British ownership certificates during the first five years of the Occupation found another 160,000 dunums (39,000 acres). Accordingly, in 1979, the custodian for government property (hereafter referred to as "the custodian") in the ISRAEL LANDS ADMINISTRATION declared an area of 687,000 dunums (170,000 acres), encompassing some 13 percent of the total area of the West Bank, as State Land. The LABOR PARTY–led governments through 1977 used some of this land to establish settlements within the borders defined in the ALLON PLAN and included land purchased by Jews (individuals or the ISRAELI NATIONAL INSTITUTIONS) prior to 1948. After the 1948 WAR, this land was held and managed by the Jordanian Custodian of Enemy Property, in accordance with the rules established in a British Mandatory order from 1939. One estimate puts the total area of such land at approximately 25,000 dunums (6,000 acres). In quantitative terms, the main concentrations of this land are in Gush Etzion to the south of Ramallah and around Tulkarm, while smaller areas are found in JERUSALEM and HEBRON.

In December 1979, following the ELON MOREH SETTLEMENT, the custodian began, with the guidance of the Civil Department of the State Attorney's Office, to prepare a detailed survey of all the ownership records currently available at the regional offices of the Jordanian Land Registrar. In addition, using aerial photographs taken periodically, the Civil Administration initiated a project to map systematically all areas under cultivation. This double investigation led to the location and marking of lands that the sovereign (Israel) felt entitled to seize under the Ottoman Land Law and the Jordanian laws that absorbed the Land Law.

These included miri land that was not farmed for at least three consecutive years and thus became makhul; miri land that had been farmed for less than ten years (the period of limitation), so that the farmer had not yet secured ownership; and land defined as mawat due to its distance from the nearest village.

In these investigations, the custodian located approximately 1.5 million dunums (370,000 acres), or some 26 percent of the area of the West Bank, as belonging to one of these categories. The process of declaring the land State Land comprised several stages after the initial phase of locating the land. In the first stage, the relevant decisions and documents relating to land earmarked for registration as State Land were forwarded to the State Attorney's Office for examination and for a decision as to whether the land was eligible for such status. If the decision was positive, the custodian began to act, forwarding the file to the District Office responsible for the area in which the land was situated. The custodian's representative in this office summoned the mukhtars from the villages adjacent to the declared State Land, took them for a tour of the intended site, and showed them the BORDERS of the area that the custodian believed was government property. Thus, the custodian transferred to the mukhtars the responsibility for informing those liable to be affected by the custodian's decision to seize possession of land. Once the declaration was made, those liable to be injured by the registration had forty-five days to submit an appeal to a military appeals committee.

During the period 1980–1984, approximately 800,000 dunums (197,000 acres) of Palestinian land were declared and registered as State Land. Thereafter, the pace of declaration decelerated, partly because of changes in the government's composition following elections, but mainly because, by this stage, the settlements had already been promised enormous reserves of land for the foreseeable future.

The declaration of hundreds of thousands of dunums in the Occupied Territories as State Land was made possible mainly because much land was not registered in Tabu (the Ottoman land registration office). Although the Ottoman Land Law required the registration of every plot of land, many residents during the period of Turkish rule did not observe this provision. The reasons for this included a desire to preserve the collective ownership system (musha'a), a desire to evade tax liability, and an effort to avoid being drafted into the Turkish army. The records that survived from this period are vague and do not easily permit the identification of a specific plot of land. Only in 1928, during the British Mandate period, was a systematic process introduced to survey all land and register ownership based on plot identification numbers. The process of regulation continued at an extremely slow pace during the period of Jordanian control of the West Bank. By the time Israel occupied the West Bank, regulation proceedings had been completed for approximately one-third of the area, particularly in the JENIN area and the JORDAN RIFT VALLEY. In areas where registration had not been completed, ownership continued to be managed over the years according to possession of land and the mutual recognition of the connection of each person to a given plot of land.

At the beginning of the Israeli Occupation of the West Bank, a military order was issued halting the registration of land owned by Palestinian residents of the West Bank. Israel said this was necessary to prevent injury to the rights of people who left the area during the 1967 WAR and were therefore unable to oppose the registration of their land under another person's name. However, to enable Israel to continue the process of registering land, it was determined that the order would not apply to the State Land in the custodian's name, and the declaration process continued at an accelerated pace based on a Jordanian law of 1964. In addition, another military order was issued establishing a Special Land Registry for the registration of transactions of land held by the custodian, which enabled the transfer of State Land use rights to one of the "settling bodies" (e.g., the Ministry of Housing or the WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION).

Military Appeals Committee

The military appeals committee is composed of three persons appointed by the commander, one of whom must have legal training. The central principle guiding the committee in hearing appeals by Palestinian residents against the custodian's rulings is that the burden of proof rests with the alleged landowner disputing the State Land claim. If the custodian has confirmed in a signed certificate that property is government property, it remains so until proven to the contrary. If the committee decides to reject an appeal or if an appeal was not filed on time (in forty-five days), the process is completed and the land is registered in the custodian's name. The chances that a Palestinian resident will be successful, by means of the appeals committee, in nullifying the process of declaring and registering an area of State Land that he believes he owns are extremely low. In most cases, the appeals committee merely rubber-stamps the military administration's decisions. Because the appeals committee is the only body before which the decisions of the custodian may be challenged, its existence has allowed, on one hand, the Israeli authorities to continue the process of declaring lands as State Land while claiming, on the other hand, that this process is under judicial review. Historically, the first obstacle facing Palestinian efforts to prevent the registration of their land as State Land was their ignorance of the procedure. The information provided by the mukhtars regarding the declared area was often vague because the mukhtars themselves received only partial information from the custodian. Also, the mukhtars, who were appointed by the military, had problematic relations with the residents and often preferred not to act as spokespersons for Israeli decisions. As a result, it was only when a settlement began to be built that the residents first realized their land had been declared State Land. Since actual construction usually began months or even years after the date of declaration, the forty-five-day period for filing an appeal had long since passed.

The case of the Makhamara hamula (clan) illustrates this problem. Four families from the Makhamara hamula jointly held some 280 dunums (69 acres) of land near Yatta (HEBRON DISTRICT, SOUTHERN AREA), southwest of the Ma'on settlement. The families had farmed the land consistently for over one hundred years. At the end of 1997, a settler from the Susiya settlement erected a trailer on Makhamara land and threatened members of the hamula with firearms, preventing them from reaching the field to farm their land. After the family filed a complaint at the Hebron police station claiming that the settler was trespassing on their land, a clerk representing the custodian informed them that the land had been declared State Land fifteen years earlier. For its part, the Mount Hebron Regional Council added that the land in question belonged to the council, based on a contract it had signed with the World Zionist Organization in December 1983.

The Makhamara hamula, represented by the ASSOCIATION FOR CIVIL RIGHTS IN ISRAEL, filed a protest with the appeals committee of the CUSTODIAN OF ABSENTEE PROPERTY. In his response to the appeal, the custodian claimed that, "according to the aerial photographs held by the Respondent [i.e., the custodian], the preparatory and farming work took place a few years ago in a completely rocky area, in a manner that does not grant rights to the Appellants." The custodian further said that the land the Susiya settler claimed "has been transferred to the World Zionist Organization in an allocation agreement, and in connection therewith the Respondent shall claim that the Appellants missed the date for submission of an appeal." The case is pending before the appeals committee.

"Palestinian residents who receive word of the State Land declaration in time to appeal encounter another obstacle. Preparing an appeal entails enormous expense, including payment of a fee upon submission, precise mapping by a qualified surveyor of the land of which the appellant claims ownership, and retaining an attorney to prepare an affidavit and represent the appellant before the committee. Additionally, those who overcome these obstacles and appeal the custodian's decision before the deadline have difficulty proving their rights to lands declared State Lands. Because the declarations generally take place in areas where the British or Jordanians did not register the land, the appeals committee hearings inevitably center on possession and farming as the basis for the right to the land. The appellant is required to prove that the land in question had been held and farmed for ten consecutive years to substantiate his ownership of the land. For the appeal to succeed, the evidence brought by Palestinians has to contradict the periodic aerial photographs taken by the custodian that indicated the cessation of farming at any stage. Receipts for payment of land tax, whether from the Jordanian authorities or the Civil Administration, may constitute prima facie evidence in disputes between two individuals but do not constitute evidence against the state or impair the state's rights."

Many Palestinians have discontinued or reduced their involvement in agriculture partly because of Israeli policies in two key spheres: WATER and the labor market. First, Israel rejects all applications submitted by Palestinians to receive PERMITS to drill agricultural wells. Second, during the 1970s and early 1980s, Israel encouraged the integration of Palestinians in its own labor market; many Palestinians were attracted because of the high salaries relative to those in the West Bank and then abandoned agriculture.

Even if a Palestinian appellant meets the burden of proof required by the committee and convinces its members that he indeed owns the land in question, the committee can still deny the appeal. Sometimes the hearing before the committee takes place after the custodian has already signed permission contracts with one of the settler groups and after preparatory work has begun on constructing a settlement. Accordingly, to prevent the reversal of an existing situation, Section 5 of Order No. 59 Regarding Government Property includes the following provision: "No transaction undertaken in good faith by the Custodian and another person in any property which the Custodian believed, at the time of the transaction, to be government property shall be nullified, and it shall continue to be valid even if it is proved that the property was not at that time government property."

The "good faith" argument has been used by Israel to approve new construction in the settlements, even when there was no permission contract for the land between the custodian and the body initiating construction. For example, the state comptroller notes that construction of three new neighborhoods in the settlement of Giv'at Ze'ev (Moreshet Binyamin A, B, and C) began before all the land on which these neighborhoods were established had been declared State Land and without the signing of permission contracts with the custodian. Despite this fact and the fact that the Civil Administration did not approve the outline plan for these neighborhoods, the planning board of Mate Binyamin Regional Council granted permits for development work and for private construction on all three sites. When this situation became apparent, the head of the Civil Department in the Ministry of Justice, Pliya Albeck, prepared a legal opinion in which she stated, "Notwithstanding the defects, questions and doubts, it would seem desirable to enable the continued construction of phase A of Moreshet Binyamin, both since the houses were built in good faith by residents who received building permits, and because the absence of objections provides a foundation for believing that the land was acquired lawfully."

Additional problems regarding the military appeals committee have to do with its place in the military hierarchy and its mode of operation. First, the appeals committee is dependent on the military administration or the commander of the IDF in the region, whose actions it is reviewing in the appeals process. Thus, the same body that issues land seizure orders is also the primary legislative body that established the committee—and the only body entitled to appoint or dismiss its members. Moreover, the Order Regarding Appeals Committees stipulates that the committee's decisions are merely "recommendations," while the final decision rests with the commander in the region, who is entitled to accept or reject these recommendations at his discretion without any public criteria established for his decision.

Second, the appeals committee is not subject to the rules of legal proceedings or the usual rules of evidence pertaining in Israel or in any other legal system. According to one of the sections in the order, "the Appeals Committee shall not be bound by the laws of evidence and legal proceedings, except for those established in this Order, and shall determine its procedures." The existence of a quasi-judicial body such as the appeals committee prevents the submission of petitions to the Supreme Court. One of the conditions for intervention by the high court is the absence of alternative relief. The presence of the appeals committee does not completely bar such intervention, but it significantly lessens the willingness of the court to intervene.

See also ABSENTEE PROPERTY LAW; ECONOMY; THE EFFECTS OF OCCUPATION ON THE PALESTINIANS; GUSH EMUNIM; INTERNATIONAL LAW; LAND; OTTOMAN EMPIRE; SETTLEMENTS; WATER; WEST BANK

Bibliography

- Eldar, Akiva. "Turning Palestinian Property into Israel's State Land." Ha'aretz. 27 December 2005.
 Lein, Yehezkel. Land Grab: Israel's Settlement Policy in the West Bank. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2002.

Stern, Avraham "Yair" (1907–1942)

Avraham Stern was a dedicated Zionist, a poet, and the founder of the militant underground group LOHAMEI HERUT YISRAEL (LEHI), also known as the Stern Gang. Born in Poland, he immigrated to Palestine in 1926 and studied in the Hebrew Gymnasium in JERUSALEM and afterward at the Hebrew University, where he specialized in classic languages and literature. On graduation, Stern received a scholarship to study Greek and Roman languages and literature at Florence University in Italy. As early as 1934, he prepared his first poetry book for publication. His most famous poem, “Hayalim Almonim” (Unknown Soldiers), became the anthem of the IRGUN T’ZEVA’I LE’UMI and LEHI. Together with David Raziell, he wrote The Revolver, a textbook on the training and use of revolvers, as well as numerous ideological articles on liberation and underground movements.

During the 1929 WESTERN WALL DISTURBANCES, Stern participated in their suppression as a member of the HAGANA, the main Jewish underground military organization in Palestine from 1920 to 1948. However, his views became more militant following the Arab uprising, and in 1931 he joined a group of fighters that split from the Hagana, believing that it was insufficiently militant vis-à-vis the Palestinians and the BRITISH MANDATE government, and helped found the Irgun Tzeva’i Le’umi. Stern took on the nom de guerre “Yair” in tribute to the commander of the Zealots at Masada, Eliezer Ben Yair. In 1937, during the ARAB REVOLT, the Irgun split and many of its members returned to the Hagana, but Stern and others remained in the Irgun under the command of VLADIMIR JABOTINSKY and continued their militant activities. In 1939 differences of opinion emerged between Stern and David, the commander of the Irgun, which led to a split in the organization and the establishment of a new faction, LEHI.

In August 1940 the Irgun decided to suspend their attacks on the British in the context of World War II, but Stern’s LEHI continued fighting them. Stern vehemently opposed tempering the resistance against the British in any way and maintained that, even in the face of the Nazi danger, it was the British who posed the major threat to the Jews. Doubting the Allies could win the war, he advocated an alliance with Nazi GERMANY and Fascist Italy, believing these ties would assist the ZIONISM effort in Palestine. In January 1941 Stern attempted to make an agreement with the Nazi authorities, offering to “actively take part in the war on Germany’s side” in return for “the establishment of the historic Jewish state on a national and totalitarian basis, bound by a treaty with the German Reich.” Another attempt to contact the Germans was made in late 1941, but there is no record of a German response in either case.

In 1942, British intelligence officers assassinated Stern, after which YITZHAK SHAMIR led the group. In 1944 two LEHI members assassinated Lord Moyne, the British minister for Middle East affairs in Cairo. In 1948 the group assassinated the UNITED NATIONS envoy to Palestine, COUNT FOLKE BERNADOTTE. In 1981 the town Kochav Yair (Yair’s star) was founded and named after Stern.

Bibliography

- Bauer, Yehuda. Jews for Sale? Nazi-Jewish Negotiations, 1933–1945. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1994.
- Bell, J. Bowyer. Terror out of Zion: The Fight for Israeli Independence, reprint ed. Piscataway, NJ: Transaction Publishers, 1996.
- Golan, Zev. Free Jerusalem: Heroes, Heroines and Rogues Who Created the State of Israel. Lynbrook, NY: Devora Publishing, 2003.
- Heller, Joseph. The Stern Gang: Ideology, Politics, and Terror, 1940–1949. London: Frank Cass, 1995.

Stern Gang

See LOHAMEI HERUT YISRAEL; AVRAHAM STERN

Strategic Asset

The term “strategic asset” reflects a perception or a belief about Israel’s ability to further the strategic objectives and interests of the UNITED STATES in the Middle East and globally. It is a concept that Israel and its US supporters have long and strenuously promoted. Some US analysts of the US-Israeli relationship believe that Israel’s utility in furthering US interests is so important that it constitutes the foundation of the relationship. Moreover, they believe that Israel’s utility justifies the massive amounts of military and economic aid Washington gives the Jewish state, the diplomatic support the United States affords Israel at the UNITED NATIONS and other global institutions, and the US deference to Israel’s position in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Most US administrations, from LYNDON JOHNSON—and perhaps including JOHN F. KENNEDY—through the present, have behaved as if Israel were a strategic asset. However, RONALD REAGAN was the first president to state explicitly that Israel functioned in this manner for the United States. Even before he was elected, he expressed his conviction: “Only by full appreciation of the critical role the State of Israel plays in our strategic calculus, can we build the foundation for thwarting MOSCOW’s designs on territories and resources vital to our security and our national well-being.”

Efraim Inbar, who supports the thesis, writes: “Despite the troubling questions regarding Israel’s

strategic behavior in the summer of 2006, Washington still understands that Israel remains its most reliable ally in the Middle East and the eastern Mediterranean. There is no other state in the Middle East where an American airplane can count with certainty on being welcomed in the near future. . . . Israel is one of the few countries in the world that does not see US primacy in international affairs as a troubling phenomenon. Unlike much of the rest of the world, Israel is not preoccupied with how to tame American power. In fact, Israeli foreign policy displays an unequivocal pro-American orientation . . . Israel's strategic culture is much closer to that of the US than to that of many of the US's European allies. . . . Israel supports America's unilateralism. . . . Cooperation with Israel on security matters confers many advantages [to the] American military . . . Israel is also an important source of military technology."

Leon Hadar, who opposes the theory, writes, quoting Anthony H. Cordesman, "'Far from Israel being the American proxy in a war against IRAN, we've become Israel's proxy in its war against Hizballah.' . . . At the same time, American policymakers need to recognize that the interests of Israel—a small Middle Eastern power focused on maintaining its security—are not necessarily compatible with those of the United States, a superpower with broad global interests that require cooperation with the leading Arab and Muslim states. In fact, taking into consideration the constraints on their relationship, Washington has never established a formal military alliance with Israel—whose status remains that of a client state that needs U.S. military support in order to preserve its margin of security . . . the [strategic asset] paradigm would make Israel a modern-day crusader state, an outlet of a global power whose political, economic and military headquarters are on the other side of the world. America's commitment to the security of the Israeli 'province' would always remain uncertain and fragile, reflecting changes in the balance of power in Washington and the shifting dynamics of U.S. politics and economics. . . . If Israel is limited in its ability to provide security services to the United States, American hegemony cannot make the Middle East safe for Israel. Perhaps it is not too late for the Israelis to figure out how to take a path toward normalcy in the Middle East that leads to peaceful coexistence with the Palestinians and their other neighbors in the next generations.

Achieving that goal would advance the long-term interests of both Israel and the United States. It is also the case that because of its relations with other nations in the Middle East, Israel has never been able to send troops to support American military operations in the region."

See also MOSHE DAYAN

Bibliography

- Ball, George W., and Douglas B. Ball. The Passionate Attachment: America's Involvement with Israel, 1947 to the Present. New York: W. W. Norton, 1992.
- Barbarash, Ernest. The Birth of Two Nations. New York: America-Israel Friendship League, 1985.
- Bard, Mitchell. U.S.-Israel Relations: Looking to the Year 2000. Washington, DC: American-Israel Public Affairs Committee, 1991.
- Bass, Warren. Support Any Friend: Kennedy's Middle East and the Making of the U.S. Israel Alliance. New York: Oxford University Press, 2003.
- Ben-Zvi, Avraham. The United States and Israel: The Limits of the Special Relationship. New York: Columbia University Press, 1993.
- Brzezinski, Zbigniew. Power and Principle: Memoirs of the National Security Adviser, 1977–1981. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1985.
- Chomsky, Noam. The Fateful Triangle: The United States, Israel and the Palestinians, updated ed. London: Pluto Press, 2000.
- Cooley, John K. An Alliance against Babylon: The US, Israel and Iraq. London: Pluto Press, 2005.
- Cristol, A. Jay. The Liberty Incident. Washington, DC: Brassey's, 2002.
- Dowty, Alan. Middle East Crisis: U.S. Decision-Making in 1958, 1970, and 1973. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1984.
- Friedlander, Melvin A. Conviction and Credence: U.S. Policymaking in the Middle East. Boulder, CO: Lynne Rienner Publishers, 1991.
- Gold, Dore. America, the Gulf, and Israel. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1989.
- Hadar, Leon. "Neocons amid Lebanon's Rubble: A Challenge to Krauthammer's Israel as a Strategic Asset Argument." National Interest Online. 14 July 2006.
- Inbar, Efraim. "Israel Still a Strategic Asset for the US." Scholars for Peace in the Middle East. 9 October 2006.
- Kissinger, Henry. The White House Years. Boston: Little, Brown, 1979.
- . Years of Renewal. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1999.
- Maisel, L. Sandy, and Ira Forman, eds. Jews in American Politics. Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield, 2001.
- Melman, Yossi, and Daniel Raviv. Friends in Deed: Inside the U.S.-Israel Alliance. New York: Hyperion, 1994.

- Organski, A. F. K. The $36 Billion Bargain. New York: Columbia University Press, 1991.
- Puschel, Karen. U.S.-Israeli Strategic Cooperation in the Post-Cold War Era: An American Perspective. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1992.
- Quandt, William B. Peace Process: American Diplomacy and the Arab-Israeli Conflict since 1967. Washington, DC: Brookings Institution, 1993.
- Reich, Bernard. Quest for Peace. Piscataway, NJ: Transaction Books, 1977.
- Rubenberg, Cheryl A. Israel and the American National Interest: A Critical Examination. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 1986.
- Safran, Nadav. Israel the Embattled Ally. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1981.
- Salinger, Pierre, and Eric Laurent. Secret Dossier: The Hidden Agenda behind the Gulf War. New York: Penguin, 1991.
- Schoenbaum, David. The United States and the State of Israel. New York: Oxford University Press, 1993.
- Slonim, Shlomo. Jerusalem in America's Foreign Policy, 1947-1997. New York: Springer, 1998.
- Spiegel, Steven. The Other Arab-Israeli Conflict: Making America's Middle East Policy from Truman to Reagan. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1986.
- Stevens, Richard. American Zionism and U.S. Foreign Policy 1942-1947. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1970.
- Swisher, Clayton E. The Truth about Camp David: The Untold Story about the Collapse of the Middle East Peace Process. New York: Thunder's Mouth/Nation Books, 2004.
- Washington Institute for Near East Policy. Enduring Partnership: Report of the Commission on U.S.-Israel Relations. Washington, DC: Commission on US-Israel Relations (1993).
- Wilson, Evan. Decision on Palestine: How the U.S. Came to Recognize Israel. Stanford, CA: Hoover Institution Press, 1979.

Strategic Cooperation

Strategic cooperation is the vehicle by which Israel's interests are embedded in the US government. It began during the JIMMY CARTER years but reached its apogee during and since the Reagan administration. RONALD REAGAN was the first president to formalize the idea when, on 30 November 1981, he signed a memorandum of understanding on "strategic cooperation" with Israel. On 29 November 1983, Reagan signed a new agreement creating the Joint Political-Military Group (JPMG) and a group to oversee security assistance, the Joint Security Assistance Planning Group (JSAP). The JPMG was originally designed to discuss means of countering threats posed by increased SOVIET UNION involvement in the Middle East. Subsequently, it placed increasing emphasis on bilateral concerns about the proliferation of chemical weapons and ballistic missiles in the Middle East, and more recently on global TERRORISM.

Formed in response to Israel's economic crisis in the mid-1980s, the JSAP is a binational group that meets annually in Washington to examine Israel's current and future military procurement requirements. It also formulates plans for the allocation of US foreign military sales credits in light of current threat assessments and US budgetary capabilities. An example of cooperation between the branches occurred on 23 January 1987, when the US Congress designated Israel as a major non-NATO ally, thus allowing Israel's industries to compete equally with NATO countries and other close US allies for a significant number of defense contracts.

In April 1988 President Reagan signed another memorandum of understanding with Israel that encompassed all prior agreements and institutionalized the strategic cooperation relationship. By the end of Reagan's term, the UNITED STATES had prepositioned military equipment in Israel, regularly held joint training exercises, began code-development of the Arrow Anti-Tactical Ballistic Missile, and was engaged in a host of other cooperative military endeavors. Since then, US-Israel strategic cooperation has continued to evolve. Today, these strategic ties are stronger than ever. To cite a few examples:

- The United States uses Israel for training, maintenance, and prepositioning of military material and supplies.
- More than 300 US Department of Defense personnel travel to Israel every month to consult about Middle East issues.
- Joint military exercises are regularly held. Israel has had more extensive naval exercises with the United States than has any other country in the Middle East and has conducted training exchanges with special US antiterrorist forces.
- Senior US Navy officials have declared Israel's HAIFA port the best and most cost-effective facility of its kind in the region. Haifa receives approximately forty US Navy ships each year, hosting thousands of US sailors and Marines.
- Israel makes other facilities available to the United States, including hospitals, training areas, and bombing ranges in the Negev Desert.

- There is a special joint Anti-Terrorism Working Group that collaborates to develop antiterrorism technology.
- The Pentagon and the Israeli Defense Ministry maintain a joint hotline.
- The United States continues to fund research and development of Israeli weapons systems and military equipment, including the Arrow missile, the Tactical High Energy Laser, the Barak Ship Self-defense Missile System, reactive armor tiles, crash-attenuating seats, the Have Nap missile, and unmanned aerial vehicles.
- In early 1997 the United States permitted Israel to link up to the US missile-warning satellite system, which will provide Israel with real-time warning if a missile is launched against it, and with much previously secret intelligence data.

The strategic cooperation agreements established Israel as a de facto ally of the United States, institutionalized military-to-military contacts, sent a message to the Arabs that the United States was not afraid to risk upsetting them, and shifted at least part of the focus of relations with Israel from Congress to the executive branch.

Bibliography

- Finkelstein, Norman. Friends Indeed: The Special Relationship. Minneapolis: Millbrook Press, 1989.
- International Institute for Strategic Studies. Strategic Survey 2003–2004. London: Routledge, 2004.
- Puschel, Karen L. US-Israeli Strategic Cooperation in the Post-Cold War Era: An American Perspective. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1992.
- Satloff, Robert, ed. U.S.-Israel Strategic Cooperation. Policy Focus No. 3. Washington, DC: Washington Institute for Near East Policy, n.d.

Suicide Bombings

Suicide bombings constitute one form of TERRORISM, which is defined as the intentional conduct of random political violence against protected categories of persons, namely, civilians and civilian sites such as schools, hospitals, restaurants, buses, trains, or planes; or is simply the random murder of innocent people. Palestinians have frequently used suicide bombings in Israel, terrorizing the population and causing death and injury.

According to B'TSELEM, from the outbreak of the AL-AQSA INTIFADA on 29 September 2000 until 26 December 2008, there were 54 suicide bombings, causing 349 fatalities. The Israeli Foreign Ministry cites a higher number of 144 bombings and 542 deaths, but it lumps together all bombings (roadside bombs, petrol bombs, etc.) with suicide bombings. For the eight-year period in total, B'Tselem states that 490 Israeli civilians were killed inside the Green Line (90 members of the security forces were killed in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES for a total of 580 Israeli deaths in the eight years of fighting). B'Tselem does not report on how the Israeli civilians died, but it can be assumed that the majority were killed in suicide bombings, although 23 were killed by QASSAM ROCKETS. For the exact same period, B'Tselem reports that Israeli security forces killed 4,837 Palestinians in the Occupied Territories, of whom 3,741 were civilians. Palestinian sources put the number higher but B'Tselem's figures serve well enough to make the point.

In responding to horror about the number of Palestinian suicide bombers, critics of Israel point out that Israel has dropped bombs on Palestinian neighborhoods, villages, and REFUGEE camps using F-16 and F-15 fighter-bombers, Apache and Cobra helicopter gunships, and, since 2004, unmanned drones with air-to-ground missiles. Additionally, Israel has used tanks, armored troop carriers, and armor-plated jeeps, from which soldiers fire heavy weapons. In contrast, the Palestinian arsenal includes demonstrations, commercial strikes, calls for a boycott of Israeli products, car thefts, leaflets, stones, Molotov cocktails, pistols, rifles and light machine guns, mortar shells, roadside bombs, explosive devices, hand grenades, homemade Qassam rockets, and "living bombs"—the suicide bombers. Some believe the disparity in the means of force between Israelis and Palestinians contributes to the impetus to suicide bombings, especially in the context of Israel's OCCUPATION of Palestinian territories. In a sense, perhaps, one can understand the suicide bomber as the weapon of the powerless in a conflict of vast power disparities in which the Palestinians, for forty years under Israel's military Occupation, have few other weapons with which to struggle for freedom.

The Occupation resulted from a military conquest of Palestinian territories and the imposition of a military regime over the people that has controlled every aspect of the lives of the Palestinians through armed force and other forms of repression. The late Israeli sociologist Baruch Kimmerling commented on this issue: "Since 1967, millions of Palestinians have been under a military Occupation, without any civil rights, and most lacking even the most basic human rights. The continuing circumstances of Occupation and repression give them, by any measure, the right to resist that Occupation with any means at their disposal and to rise up in violence against that Occupation. This is a moral right inherent to natural law and INTERNATIONAL LAW.”

Another issue raised by suicide bombings is “legitimate” versus “illegitimate” uses of violence and who determines this. Israeli intellectual and writer Meron Benvenisti analyzes this question: “Israelis are demanding for themselves the absolute right to determine when the use of violence is legitimate. Moreover they see themselves as the ones who have a total monopoly over legitimate violence, because violence derives from aggressive enforcement and its justification stems from the absolute imperative of self-defense and from the essential obligation of a ruling authority to maintain law and order and thwart killings and terrorism. . . . In essence the Israelis are striving to define the violence—theirs and the Palestinians’—for their own greatest convenience. When it suits them—as in the case of the assassination policy and regulations on opening fire—it is a ‘war’ and when it suits them—such as when soldiers are fired on—it is ‘attempted murder.’” Benvenisti continues, “The Palestinians cannot, of course, accept the Israeli definitions of legitimate and illegitimate uses of violence. They cannot agree to describe someone who challenges the occupying regime as a criminal offender.”

Adding to this perspective, Israeli analyst Amira Hass wrote the following: “According to this [Israeli] representation of reality, everything started with the first Palestinian stone, the first Palestinian bullet, and the roadside bomb on the Netzarim-Karni road. There is probably little chance of convincing the Israeli public today that there is a link between that stone, bullet and bomb and the fact that the Oslo years did not offer the Palestinian public a future of independence, nor a hope for social well being. Those who in recent years gladly adopted the victorious, Israeli version of reality . . . cannot be and are not interested in recognising the Occupied population’s right to rebel. Those who yield to the victim-mindset that is daily fed by Israeli Occupation mechanisms, those who count their own dead and wounded while remaining indifferent to the huge number of dead and wounded on the other side, are making no attempt to understand the meaning of the experiment that began in the last decade of the 20th century.”

Gideon Levy, another Israeli analyst, provides a further dimension to this discussion: “Who is a terrorist? Aida Fatahia was walking in the street; Ubei Daraj was playing in the yard. She was the mother of three; he was nine years old. Both were killed last week by IDF bullets, for no reason. Their killing raises once again, in all its horror, the question of whether Palestinian violence is the only violence that should be called terrorism. Is only car bombing terrorism, while shooting at a woman and child is not? Fatahia and Daraj join a long list of men, women, and children who were innocent of wrongdoing and killed in the past five months by the IDF. In the Israeli debate, their deaths were not the result of ‘terror actions’ or ‘terrorist attacks’ and the killers are not ‘terrorists.’ Those are terms used only for Palestinian violence.”

Reasons for Suicide Bombings

Amira Hass has also examined a variety of potential contributing factors for the existence of suicide bombers, including the poverty that has spread so widely; the wretchedness of begging for handouts in the face of unemployment; the RESTRICTIONS ON MOVEMENT; the “imprisonment in cages in the WEST BANK and GAZA”; the absence of a chance to study, to find independent housing, to offer their children more than just food and a roof over their heads; and so on. She concludes: “Potential suicide bombers know that the near future does not promise them a livelihood, decent housing, chances for study and personal development, travel abroad, life in orderly cities, the development of agriculture in their villages or high-tech initiatives. But each of these deficiencies and all of them together, are not enough to explain the readiness of so many to die at a young age. . . . These deficiencies, of the past and future, build up to internalize a conviction that there is an omnipotent force, a powerful country that since 1967 has dictated and intends to continue dictating, the Palestinian society’s scope of development and freedom to make decisions. This is a suffocating, unbearable feeling for the Palestinians, a feeling that the future is not worth living. The society raising this army of suicide bombers is convinced that Israelis, on the other hand, are able to look forward to a future that would be a shame to miss.”

There are numerous theories about suicide bombers. One highly popular but deeply flawed explanation resides in the version of Islam that says the bombers are brainwashed to believe that if they die martyred, they will go to paradise where some seventy-two virgins await them. Psychologist Michael Shaw Bond disputes this point: “[T]he reason for this [suicide bombing] has nothing to do with culture, and everything to do with human nature.” Very few young Palestinians have ever met an Israeli. “The only experiences they have of Israelis are the shells and missiles that are fired at them from F-16 bombers and Apache helicopters and tanks. . . . Thus Palestinians see only Israeli violence. Most have no experience of Israelis as human beings, capable of suffering, capable of compassion.”

Deprivation and Revenge. Yom and Saleh provide another plausible explanation, backed with quantitative data, for why individuals become suicide bombers. They argue that suicide bombing is a consequence of two overriding factors: economic deprivation and the natural human instinct for revenge. They consider suicide bombing a social and political phenomenon. Suicide bombers, they write, are not simply the instruments of terrorist organizations. Suicide bombings can be sustained over time only when there already exists a high degree of commitment among the pool of potential recruits—a commitment that primarily arises out of economic deprivation. Deprivation includes unemployment, poverty, and the inability to provide basic human needs to one’s family. The instinct for revenge occurs when a close relative has been killed, when one has been subjected to harsh and humiliating torture, and when one’s father has been humiliated, among other factors.”

Israeli historian Zeev Sternhell elaborates on the revenge dimension: “More and more people are beginning to understand that the Israeli reprisal operations only engender despair, and despair gives rise to suicide bombers. Israel’s assassination policy that has targeted political leaders from all the factions is certainly one that gives rise to extreme despair as well as rage and a desire for revenge.”

The overwhelming majority of suicide attacks within Israel proper have come in retaliation for an Israeli action—an assassination, incursions into areas controlled by the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA), or some other provocation. Typically, HAMAS or ISLAMIC JIHAD has taken credit for the actions; however, as the al-Aqsa Intifada entered its second year, several dissident FATAH factions claimed responsibility for some of the bombings. In an interview, a leader in Islamic Jihad said: “I hate this violence, I fear for my family. It’s not how I want to live. But if we cannot be safe in our cities, they will not be safe in theirs. If they kill our children, we will kill theirs.” The first suicide bombing inside Israel occurred on 4 April 1994 and was Hamas’s revenge for the settler BARUCH GOLDSTEIN’s murder of twenty-nine Muslims at prayer in the AL-IBRAHIMI MOSQUE in HEBRON on 25 February 1994.

A common cycle of Israeli attack and Palestinian revenge looks like this: On 14 May 2001, Israeli troops killed five Palestinian police officers staffing a PNA CHECKPOINT in the West Bank (which Israel later said was an “error”). In retaliation, a suicide bomber killed five Israelis and wounded forty others at a shopping mall in Netanya. In response, Israel bombed the West Bank towns of NABLUS and Ramallah using F-16 warplanes. This produced another two suicide attacks on 25 May—one in Hadera (Israel) and another at a security outpost in Gaza. On 1 June a suicide bomber killed nineteen Israelis at the Dolphinarium discotheque in Tel Aviv. PNA president YASIR ARAFAT condemned the attack and ordered an immediate cease-fire throughout the Occupied Territories. Israel, however, broke the truce when it shelled Gaza and killed three women huddled in a tent; it then assassinated, by helicopter gunships, three Palestinian activists associated with Hamas. Hamas retaliated with two car bombs in central Israel. Thus the cycle proceeds.

Revenge need not be a group response; indeed, not all of the suicide bombings are carried out by persons with a political affiliation or organizational backing, although most are linked to resistance groups. For example, Khalil Abu Ulba from Gaza, a middle-aged bus driver with a wife and eight children, was one out of 16,000 Palestinians (of a total of over three million) that Israel’s intelligence services considered apolitical and reliable enough to retain his PERMIT for working in Israel. On 14 February 2001 he rammed his empty passenger bus into a group of soldiers at a junction south of Tel Aviv, killing eight people. His family and friends confirmed that he was not affiliated with any political movement, but his wife stated, “Abu Ulba had talked about his deep despair over the on-going SIEGE and economic devastation, of his rage at the intense bombardment and gassing of Khan Yunis that week, and of his anger at the aerial assassination of a Palestinian activist in Jabalya, close to his home, the day before.” Other suicide bombers are assumed to have acted on their own—especially when no faction claims credit.

Despair and Role of Father and Power. Another explanation for the choice to become a suicide bomber resides in a despair so overwhelming that individuals believe they have no future and thus want to kill themselves. Psychiatrist Eyad Sarraj has written about despair and suicide bombers: “It’s despair—a despair where living becomes no different from dying. When life is constant degradation, death is the only source of pride.” That life begins after death is a widespread religious belief, certainly not exclusive to Islam, and in the context of the humiliations, depredations, and hopelessness of the Occupation, some choose to make their death a political statement. In fact, creating despair has been a long-standing Israeli tactic vis-à-vis the Palestinians. DAVID BEN-GURION, Israel’s first prime minister, wrote in 1936, “A comprehensive agreement is undoubtedly out of the question now. For only after total despair on the part of the Arabs, despair that will come not only from the failure of the disturbances and the attempt at rebellion, but also as a consequence of our growth in the country, may the Arabs possibly acquiesce to a Jewish Eretz [Greater land of] Israel.”

Sarraj, founder and director of the Gaza Community Mental Health Center, did a field research project in the summer of 2004 on twelve-year-old children in Gaza and found that 36 percent of the boys and 17 percent of the girls who were interviewed wanted to die as martyrs when they became eighteen. He believes the most important factor in the making of a militant and a suicide bomber is the relationship with power, particularly the relation between the son and the father. In Arab Palestinian society, Sarraj says, the father is the symbol of power, but, during the First INTIFADA, Israeli soldiers damaged this image of the father when children witnessed the beating and humiliation of their fathers.

“Many children seeing their father’s impotence immediately and unconsciously switched their identification from the father to new models of power. Some adopted the Israeli soldiers, an identification which resulted in their becoming aggressive and violent towards other children. Others identified with the Palestinian militant, the masked fighter with his gun.

“Since the first Intifada, these children searched for a replacement not only of the father but the family, a replacement that they found in political groups like Hamas and Islamic Jihad—groups that presented a new kind of family where the leader is strong and powerful, and the family is disciplined and loyal. The new family has its own system of ideology; it demands absolute loyalty and adherence to religious concepts and behavior. Hamas, one new family, has decided that it is their mission to protect the Palestinians, to liberate Palestine and to avenge the defeat of Muslims.”

Gideon Levy, an Israeli analyst already quoted, provides one final dimension to this discussion: “Are not massive LAND expropriations, systematic HOUSE [DEMOLITIONS], the uprooting of orchards and groves, cutting off entire towns and villages from their WATER source, denying medical attention to residents, forms of violence? A pregnant woman whose baby dies or a patient who died because they couldn’t get to the hospital—something that has become almost routine in the territories—aren’t they victims of terrible violence? What about the behaviour of soldiers and police at checkpoints, on the ROADS, everywhere? The humiliations, the beatings, and the settlers’ own violence against Palestinians—what should that be called?”

See also ECONOMY; THE EFFECTS OF OCCUPATION ON THE PALESTINIANS; OCCUPATION; SETTLER VIOLENCE; TERRORISM

Bibliography

- Benvenisti, Meron. “The Depth of Animosity.” Ha’aretz. 8 August 2001.
- Benziman, Uzi. “Think Again about Assassination Policy.” Ha’aretz. 21 October 2001.
- Berman, E., D. Laitin, and E. M. Milgrom. “Hard Targets: Theory and Evidence on Suicide Attacks.” In Suicide Bombing from an Interdisciplinary Perspective. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2006.
- Bloom, Mia. Dying to Kill: The Allure of Suicide Terror. New York: Columbia University Press, 2005.
- Bond, Michael Shaw. “The Psychology of Conflict: The Dehumanizing War of the Middle East.” Resurgence. 215 (n.d.). www.resurgence.org/resurgence/issues/bond215.htm.
- B’Tselem. “Fatalities.” Statistics. Jerusalem, 2006.
- Dabbagh, Nadia Taysir. Suicide in Palestine: Narratives of Despair. Fowlerville, MI: Olive Branch Press, 2005.
- Halper, Jeff. Despair: Israel’s Ultimate Weapon. Information Brief No. 72. Washington, DC: Center for

- Policy Analysis on Palestine. 28 March 2001. www.mediamonitors.net/halper2.html.
- Hari, Johann. "Suicide Killing Has Been Around for a Long Time." Mercury. 27 May 2003.
- Hass, Amira. "A Future Not Worth Living." Ha'aretz. 20 February 2002.
- . "The Revolt of the Guinea-Pigs." Ha'aretz. 21 February 2001.
- . "They Don't See Occupation." Ha'aretz. 21 August 2001.
- Kimmerling, Baruch. "The Right to Resist." Ha'aretz. 27 March 2001.
- . "The Right-Wing without Its Fig Leaf." Ha'aretz. 3 December 2001.
- Levy, Gideon. "Defining Violence." Ha'aretz. 11 March 2001.
- Mansdorf, Irwin J. The Psychological Framework of Suicide Terrorism. Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs No. 495. 15 April 2003.
- Margalit, Avishai. "The Suicide Bombers." New York Review of Books. 50:1 (2003).
- Pape, Robert A. Dying to Win: Logic of Suicide Terrorism. New York: Random House, 2005.
- Pedahzur, A., A. Perliger, and L. Weinberg. "Altruism and Fatalism: The Characteristics of Palestinian Suicide Terrorists." Deviant Behavior. 24 (2003).
- Reuter, Christoph. My Life as a Weapon: A Modern History of Suicide Bombing. Translated by Helena Ragg-Kirkby. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2004.
- Rose, Jacqueline. "Deadly Embrace." London Review of Books. 26:21 (2004).
- Sarraj, Eyad. "Why We Become Suicide Bombers." Centrum Voor: Islam in Europa. August 1997.
- Sternhell, Ze'ev. "Balata Has Fallen." Ha'aretz. 8 March 2002.
- Verter, Yossi, and Gideon Alon. "Sharon's Speech to the Knesset." Ha'aretz. 6 March 2002.
- Victor, Barbara. Army of Roses: Inside the World of Palestinian Women Suicide Bombers. Emmaus, PA: Rodale Press, 2003.
- Yom, Sean, and Salah Basel. "Palestinian Suicide Bombers: A Statistical Analysis." Economists for Peace and Security. 2004. www.epsusa.org. Text available from www.ecaar.org/Newsletter/Nov04/saleh.htm.

Supreme Court

See ISRAELI SUPREME COURT

Supreme Muslim Council

The transformation from Ottoman rule to BRITISH MANDATE governance in 1917 left the Palestinians without many of the fundamental institutions that had been part of their life. In the area of religion, the traditional Islamic waqf (religious trust) and the Shari'a courts no longer existed because the chief Muslim administrator under the Ottoman EMPIRE, the Shaykh al-Islam, no longer had authority over the Muslim community. Instead, Palestinians found themselves governed by a Christian power and administered by two Zionist officials—HERBERT SAMUEL (who was Jewish), the high commissioner, and Norman Bentwich, the legal secretary of the Mandate.

Recognizing the incongruity of this situation, in December 1921 Samuel proposed the creation of a Supreme Muslim Council that would be responsible for the management of the waqf and Shari'a affairs in Palestine. He appointed AL-HAJJ AMIN AL-HUSAYNI to head the council until an election could be held. In January 1922 al-Husayni won the election and went on to use the Supreme Muslim Council as his vehicle for creating an Islamic cultural revival in Palestine and for propelling himself to power.

The council established a Muslim orphanage, restored religious buildings, supported schools, and expanded health clinics. It also undertook a major renovation of the Muslim shrine AL-HARAM ASH-SHARIF and the buildings on it—especially the DOME OF THE ROCK and the AL-AQSA MOSQUE.

Al-Husayni remained president of the council until 1937. When JORDAN occupied Jerusalem in 1948, it dissolved the Supreme Muslim Council, but the council was reconstituted in Jerusalem after the 1967 WAR.

Bibliography

- Kupferschmidt, Uri M. The Supreme Muslim Council: Islam under the British Mandate for Palestine. Leiden, Netherlands: E. J. Brill, 1987.
- Lesch, Anne M. Arab Politics in Palestine, 1917–1939: The Frustration of a Nationalist Movement. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1979.
- Mattar, Philip. "The Supreme Muslim Council." In The Encyclopedia of the Palestinians. Edited by Phillip Mattar. New York: Facts on File, 2000.
- Reiter, Yitzhak. Islamic Endowments in Jerusalem under British Mandate. London: Frank Cass, 1996.

Sweden

See SCANDINAVIAN COUNTRIES

Sykes-Picot Agreement, 1916

The Sykes-Picot Agreement of 9 May 1916 was a secret understanding between the governments of Britain and FRANCE defining their respective spheres of post-World War I influence and control in the Middle East. The boundaries of this agreement remain today in much of the common border between SYRIA and IRAQ.

French diplomat Georges-Picot and British diplomat Mark Sykes negotiated the agreement in November 1915. Picot was far more experienced and managed to get more territory for France than expected. By the accord, Britain was allocated control of areas roughly comprising JORDAN, Iraq, and a small area around HAIFA, Palestine, while France was allocated control of southeastern TURKEY, northern Iraq, Syria, and LEBANON. The controlling powers were free to decide on state boundaries within these areas.

The area that subsequently fell under the BRITISH MANDATE of Palestine was designed for international administration, pending consultations with RUSSIA and other powers. This area, subject to significant subsequent controversy, had the following borders:

- Southern: approximately midway between Balah and the GAZA STRIP, eastward to the Dead Sea in a horizontal line, passing north of Beer-sheba and south of HEBRON
- Eastern: starting at the Dead Sea in the south and proceeding roughly due north along the River Jordan to Lake Tiberius and a few miles north of the lake
- Northern: a line approximately west-northwest from the area just north of Lake Tiberius, passing barely south of Tzfat to meet the sea approximately midway between Haifa and Tyre
- Western: the Mediterranean Sea

This agreement conflicted with the HUSAYN-McMAHON CORRESPONDENCE of 1914–1915 between the British and Arab nationalist leaders; London attributed the conflicting accords to changing imperial interests during the war. Britain initially needed Arab assistance to defeat the Ottoman Turks and promised the Arabs it would ensure the unity and independence of the Arab world if the Arabs would join forces and fight with it against the Turks (which they did). Subsequently, London attempted to enlist the help of Jews in the UNITED STATES in getting Washington to join the war effort (hence the BALFOUR DECLARATION, 1917).

The Sykes-Picot Agreement was later expanded to include Italy and Russia. Russia was to receive Armenia and parts of Kurdistan, while the Italians would get certain Aegean islands and a sphere of influence around Izmir in southwest Anatolia. The Italian presence in Anatolia, as well as the division of the Arab lands, was formalized in the 1920 Treaty of Sèvres. However, the Russian Revolution in 1917 led the new Soviet government to renounce previous imperial accords. At the same time, Lenin released a copy of the confidential Sykes-Picot Agreement as well as other treaties, causing great embarrassment among the Allies and growing distrust among the Arabs. The Sykes-Picot Agreement arbitrarily divided the Middle East into separate states, utterly negating the objectives of the pan-Arab nationalist movement for a unified and independent Arab state, and the Arabs felt intensely betrayed. The betrayal became even greater when the British facilitated the ZIONISM movement's objectives in Arab Palestine.

Attempts to resolve the conflict were made at the San Remo Conference of 1920 and in the CHURCHILL MEMORANDUM of 1922, which stated the British position that Palestine was part of the excluded areas of "Syria lying to the west of the District of Damascus" specified in the Husayn-McMahon Correspondence. However, an examination of that agreement, together with a map, demonstrates British dissemblance. The principal terms of the Sykes-Picot Agreement were reaffirmed by the inter-Allied San Remo Conference and by the ratification of the resulting League of Nations mandates by the Council of the League of Nations on 24 July 1922. Subsequently, in every new state (with the exception of Palestine), Britain and France imposed a puppet government, usually a monarchy, which led to enormous instability after the powers themselves withdrew. In carving up an area that was linguistically, socially, religiously, and in every other way a coherent nation, the Sykes-Picot accord and the system it created are responsible for the past seventy-five years of conflict in the Middle East.

See also OTTOMAN EMPIRE

Bibliography

- Caplan, Neil. Futile Diplomacy. London: Frank Cass, 1983.
- . Futile Diplomacy, Vol. II: Arab-Zionist Negotiations and the End of the Mandate. London: Frank Cass, 1986.
- Cohen, Michael J., and Martin Kolinsky, eds. Demise of the British Empire in the Middle East: Britain's Responses to Nationalist Movements 1943–55. London: Frank Cass, 1998.
- France and Great Britain. Sykes-Picot Agreement. Full text. Avalon Project. n.d. www.yale.edu/lawweb/avalon/mideast/sykes.htm.

© Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs (PASSIA), Jerusalem, reprinted with permission.

Map 40. Sykes-Picot, 1916

- Ingrams, Doreen. Palestine Papers 1917–1922: Seeds of Conflict. London: John Murray, 1972.
- Kedourie, Elie. England and the Middle East: The Destruction of the Ottoman Empire, 1914–1921. London: Bowes and Bowes, 1956.
- . In the Anglo-Arab Labyrinth. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1977.
- Khalidi, Rashid. British Policy towards Syria and Palestine 1906–1914: A Study of the Antecedents of the Hussein-McMahon Correspondence, the Sykes-Picot Agreement and the Balfour Declaration. London: Ithaca Press, 1980.
- Monroe, Elizabeth. Britain's Moment in the Middle East, 1914–1971. London: Chatto and Windus, 1981.
- Porath, Yehoshua. The Emergence of the Palestinian-Arab National Movement: 1918–1929. London: Frank Cass, 1974.
- Sicker, Martin. Reshaping Palestine: From Muhammad Ali to the British Mandate, 1831–1922. Westport, CT: Praeger, 1999.
- Stein, Leonard. The Balfour Declaration. London: Vallentine, Mitchell, 1961.

Syria

Syria's involvement in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict began even before the Syrian and Israeli states came into existence. As early as May 1910, a group of Muslim notables from the region around Aleppo petitioned the Ottoman authorities to block a prominent Beirut landholder from selling large tracts of agricultural LAND to Zionist agents. At the end of the year, articles strongly critical of increasing Jewish settlement in Palestine appeared in an Arabic-language newspaper published in Istanbul, TURKEY. These essays, which were written by individuals who later became leading figures in the Arab nationalist movement in Damascus, accused the settlers of treason against the OTTOMAN EMPIRE and demanded an end to the influx of European Jews into the sultan's domain. In December 1910, the Damascus daily al-Muqtabas published an open letter from the future Syrian nationalist Shukri al-'Asali to a senior Ottoman military commander that pointed out a wide variety of ways in which the new immigrants were flaunting both imperial law and local customs.

Attacks on Jewish IMMIGRATION in the Syrian press abated during the Ottoman crisis years of 1911–1912, then moderated somewhat in early 1913 after the editor of a pro-Zionist newspaper in Istanbul reached an informal agreement with influential Syrian members of the Ottoman Party for Administrative Decentralization (Hizb al-Lamarkaziyyah al-Idariyyah al-'Uthmani) to work together to press for greater provincial autonomy. By the fall of 1913, however, the Ottoman government's evident willingness to accommodate the party's program weakened its enthusiasm for tactical collaboration with the growing Jewish community in Palestine. In the months leading up to World War I, dealings between Arab nationalists in Damascus and the Zionist leadership collapsed.

After the war ended, leading Syrian nationalists expressed strong opposition to further Jewish immigration, most notably in the Damascus Program, which was presented to the KING-CRANE COMMISSION in July 1919. Popular demonstrations erupted throughout the country at the news that Great Britain had been granted a mandate from the League of Nations to administer Palestine. In February 1920 a rump grouping of radical representatives to the disbanded Syrian Congress in Damascus adopted resolutions that proclaimed Palestine to be an integral part of Syria and declared ZIONISM to be a threat to Syria's national interests. The influential Arab Club (al-Nadi al-'Arabi) in Damascus raised funds and recruited fighters to resist the creation of additional Jewish settlements. Nevertheless, the government of King Faisal bin al-Husayn proved willing to accommodate the Zionist movement. Faced with rising pressure from FRANCE and desperate to win the friendship of Britain, Faisal in January 1919 joined Zionist leader CHAIM WEIZMANN in signing a document that provided for Syrian recognition of a fully autonomous Palestine in which Zionist organizations would play a major role. The king added a handwritten codicil to the document stipulating that he would only be bound by the agreement "provided the Arabs obtain their independence as demanded in my memorandum dated 4 January 1919, to the Foreign Office of the Government of Great Britain." He continued: "But if the slightest modification or departure were to be made, I shall not then be bound by a single word of the present agreement which shall be deemed void and of no account or validity and I shall not be answerable in any way whatsoever."

That summer, Faisal drew up a draft treaty that provided for equal rights for all inhabitants of Palestine—Jews, Christians, and Muslims alike. The proposal was rejected out of hand by the Jewish National Council (Va'ad Leumi) as being a "ridiculous and dangerous scheme." In the wake of this episode, Faisal's tolerance for Zionist activism wavered. He told the Jewish Chronicle during a visit to London in September 1919 that he had envisaged Jewish immigration to Palestine to amount to only 1,000 to 1,500 persons per year and that he expected the Jews to administer no more than a province within an independent Arab state. Before the impact of this shift in posture could play out, the French army seized control of Damascus and ousted Faisal's government.

Syrian expatriates in Cairo, EGYPT, attempted to carry on Faisal's program under the auspices of the Party of Syrian Unity (Hizb al-Ittihad al-Suri). In 1922, Palestinian members resigned from the party, charging that it was devoting too much attention to Syrian and Lebanese affairs and too little to crucial issues regarding Palestine. Party leaders subsequently attempted to convince Palestinian representatives to come to terms with the Zionist movement and went so far as to talk directly with prominent Zionists in London and JERUSALEM in an effort to find a compromise. But after key figures in the party returned to Damascus in the fall of 1921, they concentrated their energies almost exclusively on winning independence for Syria. French authorities routinely muffled press criticism of Zionist activities in Palestine and suppressed popular pro-Palestinian protests, which were also strongly discouraged by the leaders of the influential National Bloc (al-Kutla al-Wataniyyah), on the grounds that they jeopardized the movement for Syrian independence. For this reason, the nationalist leadership in Damascus decided not to send a delegation to the 1931 congress in Jerusalem to debate the future of Palestine.

Popular Support for Palestinians

It required the 1936 ARAB REVOLT, a Palestinian general strike against the British occupation and Zionist settlement, to change the National Bloc's noncommittal posture toward events taking place in British-controlled Palestine. Those Syrians who championed the cause of pan-Arabism feared that an independent Jewish state would stand squarely in the path of Arab unity. Merchants engaged in foreign trade viewed with concern the rise of HAIFA as a threat to Beirut, while industrialists worried that well-capitalized Jewish factories might diminish demand for their own products. At the same time, workers remembered that their Palestinian comrades had supported them during the general strike of January–February 1936 and took pains to reciprocate. Consequently, large-scale anti-Zionist demonstrations were organized by the League of National Action (Usbah al-'Amal al-Qawmi), as well as by the heterogeneous collection of militant Islamist associations that later constituted Syria's MUSLIM BROTHERHOOD (Ikhwan al-Muslimin). These groups, along with the equally radical Independence Party (Hizb al-Istiqlal), smuggled arms and recruits to guerrilla units operating inside Palestine. In August 1936 a respected veteran of the 1925 Syrian revolt against the French, FAWZI AL-QAWUQJI, took command of a band of guerrillas in the name of "the Arab Revolution in Southern Syria."

Senior National Bloc leaders reacted to this explosion of popular support for the revolt by admonishing both Syrians and Palestinians to restrain themselves so as not to disrupt ongoing negotiations with the French government over Syrian independence. Some even held discussions with Zionist representatives in an attempt to defuse the gathering conflict. In July 1936 a delegation from the JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL traveled to Damascus to meet with a key figure in the National Bloc, Fakhri al-Barudi, who ended the meeting by soliciting the agency's help in persuading the French to act in a more conciliatory fashion in the Syrian negotiations. But other nationalists, including Shukri al-Quwwatli, took advantage of the Zionist-Palestinian conflict to enhance their influence and reputations as men of action. Al-Quwwatli played a major role in orchestrating support for al-Qawuqji and took an active part in the September 1937 BLUDAN CONFERENCE to protest the PEEL COMMISSION'S recommendation to partition Palestine into Arab and Jewish states.

When al-Quwwatli resigned his Syrian cabinet post in 1938 out of disgust with the government's lack of enthusiasm for the Palestinian cause, radicals in the League of National Action, the Independence Party, and the militant Islamist associations stepped up their efforts to support the Palestinian revolt. Yet the success of British military operations against Palestinians in Palestine as the year went by steadily sapped the public's will to send money and fighters to Palestine. As a result, Syrian nationalists of all stripes drastically curtailed their concern for and involvement in Palestinian affairs. Although Egypt and IRAQ tried to mediate between the British and the Palestinians during the fall and winter of 1939–1940, there was no sign of similar Syrian initiatives. There is, on the other hand, some evidence that Syrians engaged, as did the Zionists, in transferring abandoned Vichy weapons and supplies to Palestine after British troops occupied the country in June 1941.

In April 1946, Syria became fully independent. The following month saw the publication of the final report of the ANGLO-AMERICAN COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY, which recommended that Palestine be turned over to the UNITED NATIONS and wartime limits on Jewish immigration be repealed. These findings prompted a series of Arab summit conferences, at which Syrian representatives tended to argue that any attempt to reclaim Palestinian rights by force of arms must be postponed until British troops left the area. When US president HARRY S TRUMAN publicly urged the British to permit 100,000 European Jews to immigrate to Palestine five months later, the authorities in Damascus gave a green light to acts of sabotage along the route of the US-sponsored oil pipeline (Tapline) project. In early 1947, Syrian officials welcomed al-Qawuqji back to the country from Palestine, then worked to prevent the United Nations from implementing Israeli statehood. When it became clear that the effort was failing, al-Qawuqji began to issue increasingly belligerent calls to arms.

It was in this heated atmosphere that the ARAB LEAGUE's Political Council met in October 1947 in Alaih, LEBANON, where Syria agreed to join Iraq, JORDAN, Lebanon, and Palestine on a joint military committee to prepare for future conflict. Syrian commanders issued orders for a partial mobilization of the regular armed forces but rescinded them in the face of British protest. Army units were nevertheless deployed along the border with Palestine at the end of the month. News that the United Nations had approved partition sparked widespread rioting in Aleppo and Damascus. Syrian president al-Quwwatli told soldiers to be “strong and great in faith and honor to defend with our lives our unquestionable rights” in Palestine. The government then allocated $2 million to purchase weapons and ordered universal military training. Meanwhile, a number of organizations, including the Muslim Brotherhood and the Ba'ath Party, set up the Society for the Liberation of Palestine, which in turn sponsored the formation of a People's Army with al-Qawuqji in command.

At an extraordinary Arab League summit in December 1947, Syria agreed to host the headquarters for the guerrilla and popular units that the league's military committee entrusted with the task of fighting the Jews—the ARAB LIBERATION ARMY (ALA), commanded by al-Qawuqji. These formations initiated operations along the border in mid-December and moved into Palestine itself in January 1948. Syria's League of Religious Scholars issued a ruling that designated the conflict against the Jews as a holy war, and Jewish employees were fired from state offices and public utilities. Strikes by the Jewish underground military organization HAGANA against Palestinian villages in April 1948 generated public anger throughout Syria but failed to persuade the government to order either the ALA or regular Syrian troops to intervene. Not even an appeal from the head of the Palestinian guerrilla forces convinced al-Quwwatli to put Syria's meager forces in jeopardy. The government's unwillingness to back up the ALA contributed to the Hagana victory at SAFED over elements of the ALA led by Adib al-Shishakli, al-Qawuqji's primary lieutenant.

Fighting against Jewish Forces

Meanwhile, Syrian officials cultivated an alliance with EGYPT and SAUDI ARABIA in an attempt to block Jordan's ruler, King 'Abdullah bin al-Husayn, from controlling that part of Palestine designated for a Palestinian state. President al-Quwwatli reinforced positions on the borders with Palestine and Jordan until almost half of the regular armed forces were concentrated around Dir'a, a rural area south of Damascus. When major hostilities broke out on 15 May 1948, units advanced toward Samakh, just east of the River Jordan, and Jewish settlements south of the Sea of Galilee, but the offensive was beaten back with severe losses. More successful were operations between the Sea of Galilee and Lake Hula in the north and along the Yarmuk River to the east. As a result of these operations, some sixty-six square kilometers (twenty-five miles) of formerly Palestinian territory was occupied and held by Syrian troops.

On 11 June 1948, Damascus accepted the terms of the UN Security Council Resolution and ordered all forces under its command to cease firing. The Hagana then launched a counteroffensive between Lake Hula and the Sea of Galilee and pushed eastward from 'En Gev on the eastern shore. These activities prompted the Security Council to adopt a more comprehensive cease-fire resolution, which Syria immediately accepted, although the ALA refused to accept the truce and continued to fight in the Galilee hills throughout the summer. These activities were disowned by the Syrian government, which ignored al-Qawuqji's requests for assistance, and the ALA was finally pushed into southern Lebanon in late October. Al-Qawuqji turned to Jordan and the Syrian Social National Party for relief and threatened to collaborate with either one or both to overthrow the regime in Damascus.

In November 1948, Syria's delegate on the Security Council stated that the Arab governments would only negotiate with Jewish representatives if the WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION acknowledged the right of Palestinian Arabs to form an independent state, which it did not. Damascus did not join the UN-sponsored mediation process until March 1949. A month later, the Israeli-Syrian Armistice Conference opened, with Syrian representatives insisting that the talks deal exclusively with military issues, while the Israelis demanded that any agreement be considered a political measure. After thirteen meetings, the two sides signed a formal ARMISTICE AGREEMENT that set up four demilitarized zones along the border, backed by larger districts "in which defensive forces only shall be maintained." For practical reasons, but over Damascus's objections, these areas were patrolled by Israeli police units stationed at 'En Gev and Mishmar Ha-Yarden.

Negotiations regarding the armistice accompanied a dramatic change in Syria's domestic politics. On 30 March 1949 a group of officers led by Colonel Husni al-Za'im overturned the liberal democratic regime. The new leader quickly contacted US officials and offered to resettle as many as 300,000 Palestinian REFUGEES between the Euphrates and Khabur rivers. This proposal followed secret contacts with Israeli agents, in which al-Za'im had signaled that he would make peace with Israel in exchange for financial support for the coup. It remains unclear whether such payment was made. Shortly after seizing power, al-Za'im indicated a willingness to meet personally with DAVID BEN-GURION, but the Israeli prime minister, who made no attempt to encourage further negotiations, rejected this overture.

In August 1949, officers led by Colonel Sami al-Hinnawi ousted al-Za'im, and the new government's foreign policy concentrated on Iraq and Jordan. The political party that dominated the cabinet, the People's Party (Hizb al-Sha'b), stood firmly opposed to Israel but believed that Syria stood no chance of confronting this adversary successfully unless it forged close alliances with other Arab states. Four months later, this regime was ousted by officers led by Colonel Adib al-Shishakli, who resumed al-Za'im's campaign to improve relations with Israel and reiterated the offer to accept Palestinian refugees in return for secure access to the Jordan River and Sea of Galilee. Once again, Ben-Gurion dismissed the proposal.

In February 1951, Israel started work on a project to drain swampland at the southern end of Lake Hula. Syrian officials protested that the work infringed on the demilitarized zones and jeopardized the livelihoods of Arab farmers. While discussions took place under the auspices of the Mixed Armistice Commission (MAC), Israeli bulldozers set to work. On 15 March persons in Arab clothing shot at one of the earthmovers. Soon shootings became more frequent, and Israeli police ordered the residents of two Arab villages in the district to evacuate. On 4 April, in a skirmish with Syrian soldiers at al-Hamma along the Yarmuk River, seven Israeli police officers were killed, and the next day Israeli warplanes struck Syrian positions around the town. After Damascus brought the crisis to the UN Security Council, Israel relocated the project to a part of the demilitarized zone that had no Arab villages and resumed work. Israel subsequently refused to attend meetings of the MAC.

During the spring of 1954, armed skirmishes between Syrian and Israeli forces occurred along the northeastern shore of the Sea of Galilee. The MAC determined that responsibility for the incidents was evenly divided between the two sides. A more serious clash took place in December 1955, prompting the UN Security Council to adopt Resolution 3538, which charged Israel with flagrantly violating the Armistice Agreement. Documents captured during this incident show that Syrian commanders had standing orders to open fire on Israeli patrol boats if they came closer than 250 meters to the coastline. From February 1958 to September 1961, Syria played little part in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict but merged with Egypt to form the United Arab Republic (UAR). Officials in Damascus, however, expressed little enthusiasm for Cairo's landmark March 1959 proposal to create a "Palestine Entity" (al-Kiyan al-Filastini) that would enable the Palestinians to act "as a unified people rather than mere refugees." In March 1962 fighting resumed along the border. The ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) attacked the district around al-Nuqaib, north of 'En Gev in Syrian territory, claiming that Syrian troops had set up fixed fortifications in the area, although a UN investigation found no evidence that Syria had violated the terms of the armistice.

Arab Anger over Water Diversion Project

Meanwhile, Israel initiated a massive project to divert water from the Jordan River to the Negev Desert. The Ba'ath Party-led regime in Damascus, which had overthrown the post-UAR civilian government in March 1963, complained to the UN Security Council and called for all Arab heads of state to gather in Cairo for an extraordinary summit in January 1964. At the conference, the Arab leaders agreed to change the course of the Hasbani, Bani Yas, and Yarmuk rivers to reduce the flow of water into the Jordan River; to set up a joint military command to improve coordination among their armed forces; and to authorize AHMAD SHUQAYRI to orchestrate the establishment of the Palestine entity. In May, Palestinians residing in Syria took part in the inaugural congress of the PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL, which created the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) to act as the movement's vanguard, although the Ba'athist leadership in Damascus criticized the PLO almost immediately for pursuing a relatively moderate program. Syria tended to support the more revolutionary actions undertaken by the Palestine Liberation Movement (FATAH, or Harakah Tahrir Filastin), although on occasion it charged Fatah with splitting the Palestinian movement.

During 1964–1965, periodic skirmishes broke out along the Syrian-Israeli border. In July 1965, Fatah took advantage of the opportunity to launch a strike into Israel from Syrian territory; in response, Syrian security forces arrested Fatah officials in the country. Greater violence flared in the spring of 1966, when a number of armed incursions into Israeli-held territory took place and the Syrian leadership imprisoned PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT for two months—something he never forgot or forgave. The more radical Ba'athist leadership that took power in Damascus in February 1966, led by Salah Jadid, credited Fatah guerrillas with carrying out most of these operations and openly provided the organization with supplies and training facilities. Jadid's regime, galvanized by Israel's diversion of the water of the Jordan (the National Water Carrier), was the most militant and pro-Palestinian that Syria had witnessed. Israeli aircraft retaliated by attacking construction and farm machinery situated well inside Syrian territory, which led the Syrian air force to strike a pair of Israeli police boats in the Sea of Galilee on 15 August 1966. On that occasion, Radio Damascus declared that Syria had decided “that she would not confine herself to defensive action but would attack defined targets and bases of aggression within the occupied area. Syria has waited for a suitable opportunity to carry out this new policy. That opportunity was presented today.” Chief of Staff General Ahmad al-Suwaydani concurred: “We have always been the defenders, but in this battle we were not resisting blows, but delivering blows.” Furthermore, the government set up the PALESTINE LIBERATION FRONT (Jabhah al-Tahrir al-Filastiniyyah) to support Fatah's activities.

Throughout the spring of 1967, Damascus exhibited an increasingly belligerent posture toward Israel. In early April, when Israeli farmers moved armored tractors into the demilitarized zone north of the Sea of Galilee, Syrian units responded not only with artillery and mortar fire but also with tank and aircraft forays into the disputed area. Israeli armored and air force units counterattacked, bombarding villages across the border inside Syria and engaging Syrian warplanes in the skies over Damascus. In the wake of this battle, the Syrian government stepped up its support for guerrilla operations by Palestinian commandos based in Jordan and Lebanon. In addition, Damascus dispatched military missions to Cairo to persuade Egypt to implement a November 1966 mutual defense pact. Syrian pressure, accompanied by MOSCOW reports that the IDF had massed along the Syrian-Israeli border, convinced Egypt's president JAMAL 'ABD AL-NASIR to request the withdrawal of the UN Emergency Force from the Sinai and close the Straits of Tiran to Israeli shipping. On 5 June 1967, war erupted between Israel and Syria, Egypt, and Jordan.

Cautious Participation in Fighting

Syrian bellicosity played a crucial role in escalating the confrontation of April–May 1967 into full-scale warfare between the Arab states and Israel. Nevertheless, when fighting broke out, the Syrian high command proved inordinately cautious in joining the battle. Syrian artillery shelled Israeli settlements around the Sea of Galilee, and ground forces advanced across the border in two locations. However, combat only escalated after the IDF turned its attention northward on the fifth day of the war. After al-Qunaytirah quickly fell, Israeli troops occupied the surrounding Golan Heights. On 10 June the two sides agreed to a cease-fire. Embarrassed by the ease with which the IDF had captured the country's southwestern corner, Damascus flatly rejected Israeli calls to enter into negotiations. Senior officials urged Palestinian guerrillas to continue the ARMED STRUGGLE and refused to endorse UN Security Council Resolution 242, which called for Israel's withdrawal from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES in exchange for an end to the Arab-Israeli conflict. Military commanders remained careful, however, to prevent Palestinian guerrillas from striking across the Syrian border, lest such action provoke Israel retaliation. In December 1968 the Syrian government set up a guerrilla formation of its own, called SA'IQA (Bolt of Lightning), partly to counteract a rapprochement between Fatah and Cairo and partly to offset the emergence of the more radical POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE (PFLP), whose leader, GEORGE HABASH, the Syrians imprisoned for several months. Throughout 1969–1970, Sa'iqa joined various Palestinian militias in undertaking raids into Israel and Israeli-occupied territory.

November 1970 witnessed the downfall of Jadid's regime, which had orchestrated the runup to the 1967 WAR and its replacement by military officers headed by Ba'athist minister of defense General Hafez al-Asad. The new government continued to inveigh against Israel as forcefully as had its predecessor and remained unwilling to accept Security Council Resolution 242, although it gradually replaced the virulent anti-Jewish rhetoric of the mid-1960s with more nuanced condemnations of Israeli policy. Furthermore, the al-Asad regime adopted a more businesslike orientation toward the long-term struggle with Israel. New arms contracts were signed with the Soviet Union, greater efforts were made to coordinate military planning with Egypt and Jordan, and Palestinian guerrilla units were kept on a tight leash. Al-Asad's strategy was to contain Israel without giving it an excuse to attack. Commanders loyal to al-Asad had already put Sa'iqa under strict Ba'ath Party control.

Reining in the guerrillas turned out to be more difficult than Damascus had imagined. Following the Jordanian civil war of September 1970 (BLACK SEPTEMBER), most Palestinian commando units decamped to bases in Beirut, Tripoli, and southern Lebanon. The activities and often the mere presence of these formations attracted repeated Israeli air strikes. Al-Asad could not abide the PLO's insistence on maintaining its independence and formulating its own strategies, which led to continuous and increasing tension between Arafat and al-Asad. Nevertheless, from 1970 to 1975, Syria essentially supported the PLO. In February 1973, al-Asad prohibited Palestinian militias from launching raids into Israel or Israeli-occupied land from Syrian territory, and these constraints remained in place during and after the 1973 OCTOBER WAR, during which Egypt and Syria attempted to take back territory lost in the 1967 War (for Egypt, the Sinai; for Syria, the Golan Heights). The PLO, however, enjoyed significant freedom and Syria's blessing to launch raids from Lebanese territory. Meanwhile, Damascus rejected Egypt's March 1972 proposal to form a Palestinian government-in-exile, because such a move would weaken the armed struggle against Israel and it viewed the PLO as the only legitimate Palestinian authority.

Simmering hostility between Syria and Israel in the winter of 1973–1974, combined with the growing potential for US and Soviet military involvement in the conflict, persuaded US secretary of state HENRY KISSINGER to begin eight months of concerted mediation. In an effort to encourage Damascus to be flexible, Kissinger suggested the Israeli government offer to pull back to the positions in the Golan Heights that its troops had occupied prior to the outbreak of the October war. After initially rejecting the suggestion, Israeli officials eventually conceded and, in May 1974, signed a disengagement agreement with Syria. It provided for the withdrawal of Israeli troops from al-Qunaytirah, the creation of a buffer zone patrolled by UN peacekeeping forces, strict limitations on the number and composition of Israeli and Syrian units on each side of the buffer zone, and procedures for exchanging prisoners of war. At the same time, Damascus resisted Egypt's efforts to convene a GENEVA CONFERENCE, as well as the PLO's insistence that it be designated the sole representative of the Palestinian people. On the other hand, Sa'iqa joined Fatah in approving the "phased political program" that was ratified by the Palestine National Council in June 1974.

Despite the disengagement agreement, Syria's relations with Israel remained frigid. Damascus expressed sharp criticism of Egypt's accelerating rapprochement with Israel, but, as fighting intensified among Lebanese militias during the fall and winter of 1975–1976, Syrian officials moderated their vituperation against Cairo and made new overtures to Washington. In fact, the dominant aspect of these years was the civil war in Lebanon (a traditional Syrian sphere of influence). Given the factious character of Lebanon, the PLO held the key to war or peace. Al-Asad was anxious to maintain peace in Lebanon to deny Israel any excuse for intervention, but factions within the PLO elected to enter the conflict on the side of the leftist Lebanese forces. These developments set the stage for Syria's military intervention in Lebanon in the spring of 1976, as well as for US pressure on Israel to refrain from attacking Syrian forces north of a line from Saidah to Jazzin (the so-called Red Line). In return, Damascus refrained from interfering in the region south of the Zaharani River. Subsequently, al-Asad stated that he stood ready to negotiate a peace agreement with Israel if it pulled out of the lands it had seized in 1967 and recognized the Palestinians' right to set up a state. Such statements encouraged US secretary of state CYRUS VANCE to make a series of trips to Damascus, and al-Asad conferred directly with President JIMMY CARTER in Geneva in May 1977. Whatever potential there might have been for a thaw in relations between the two sides disappeared when Israel's LIKUD PARTY bloc gained control of the Knesset and its leader, the Revisionist Zionist MENAHEM BEGIN, became prime minister. Nevertheless, Damascus scrupulously prevented Palestinian guerrillas from crossing into Israel and Israeli-occupied territory from Syria, and it also restrained its troops from interfering when the IDF carried out a large-scale offensive against PLO bases in South Lebanon in March 1978.

Egyptian-Israeli Peace Process

Egyptian president Anwar al-Sadat's dramatic peace initiatives toward Israel in 1977–1978 convinced Damascus that Cairo was preparing to abandon its Arab allies and pursue a bilateral peace agreement. Al-Asad responded by trying to persuade the leaders of Jordan and Saudi Arabia to join him in condemning Egypt's policy, but an Arab summit meeting in December 1977 produced no more than vague pronouncements of the continuing need for Arab unity, although the PLO ended up endorsing Syria's position to a greater extent than expected. Because Damascus refused to put aside its long-standing differences with Iraq, it found itself unable to do more than protest the steadily accelerating Egyptian-Israeli peace process and the bilateral treaty that the two governments signed in March 1979. Determined that it would never again be left hanging by a strategic partner, the Syrian leadership undertook to achieve "strategic parity" with Israel by enlarging and upgrading its armed forces and signing a Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation with the Soviet Union. Damascus also sought to prevent the PLO from implementing the "phased program" based on PLO willingness to assume control over small areas of the WEST BANK as part of a graduated settlement.

During the first months of 1981, Israel began to complain that the Syrian military presence in Lebanon posed a strategic threat. Prime Minister Begin unleashed a succession of fulminations against Syria and hinted that the IDF might come to the rescue of Lebanese Christians. That December, the Likud government imposed Israeli law on the occupied Golan Heights. Subsequently, Israeli troops deployed along the northern border and, in June 1982, initiated the massive LEBANON WAR. For the first two days of the offensive, Syrian units held their fire, but they finally engaged with the IDF to defend Jazzin. Israeli aircraft and artillery then attacked Syrian positions in the Biqa' and clashed again when the Israelis rolled into the southern suburbs of Beirut. When the fighting ended, Damascus's relations with the PLO collapsed, with the two sides blaming each other for their evident lack of tactical coordination. Syrian agents even encouraged dissidents inside the PLO to challenge Arafat, who then distanced himself from al-Asad and made overtures to Jordan.

For the next three years, the focus of Syrian-Israeli relations remained fixed on Lebanon. Militias sponsored and supplied by Damascus engaged in a war of attrition against the IDF that ended up pushing Israeli troops south of the Litani River. In November 1985 a pair of Syrian warplanes buzzed an Israeli observer aircraft in Lebanese airspace, only to be shot down by IDF interceptors. Syrian commanders responded by deploying anti-aircraft missile batteries back to the Biqa' and along the Golan Heights. Three months later, Israeli military aircraft forced a Libyan jet carrying the speaker of the Syrian parliament to land in Israel and only permitted it to take off after Syria complained to the UN Security Council. Subsequent Israeli bombings against a variety of targets in Lebanon and Syria convinced the leadership in Damascus that renewed military confrontation with Israel was probable. In contrast to the situation in October 1973, however, Moscow made it clear that it would not come to Syria's assistance, and the threat of war gradually subsided. Sporadic attacks on Israel and Israeli-occupied territory by Syrian-sponsored guerrilla organizations in southern Lebanon nevertheless persisted, which heightened Israeli hostility toward the al-Asad regime. As a result, a February 1988 peace initiative undertaken by US secretary of state GEORGE SHULTZ elicited no more than a flat rejection from Israeli prime minister YITZHAK SHAMIR.

A subtle but significant shift in Syria's stance toward the Israeli-Palestinian conflict was evident in 1989. Senior officials, perhaps encouraged by indications that the new US administration of GEORGE H. W. BUSH intended to adhere to a more evenhanded approach to the Middle East, hinted at a broad willingness to take part in negotiations based on the principles codified in UN SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTIONS 242 AND 338. More important, Damascus took steps to reconcile with Cairo and raised no public objection to the PLO's overtures to Israel. During the course of a July 1990 summit meeting with Egypt's president HOSNI MUBARAK, al-Asad told reporters that his government was fully prepared to sign a formal treaty with Israel based on exchanging territory for peace. Yet Damascus showed a marked reluctance to jump onto the bandwagon behind a US-sponsored effort to convene an international conference to resolve the Arab-Israeli conflict in the immediate aftermath of the 1990–1991 GULF WAR. Following a meeting with US secretary of state JAMES BAKER in early April 1991, Foreign Minister Faruq al-Shar' reaffirmed Damascus's position that the United Nations should play "a significant role" in such a conference and that the results of any negotiations must be "based on Resolutions 242 and 338." Although Syrian officials later retreated from their insistence that the United Nations sponsor the talks, they persisted in demanding that the two Security Council resolutions serve as the primary basis for deliberations. On the eve of the opening of the MADRID CONFER-ENCE, Damascus announced that it would take no part in follow-up talks concerning economic and environmental issues unless there was clear progress in resolving the issue of the Occupied Territories.

Israeli-Syrian Negotiations

Syria boycotted the January 1992 Moscow round of talks on the grounds that any discussion of long-term regional security issues was premature as long as Israeli troops remained in control of the Golan Heights, the West Bank, and Gaza. Bilateral negotiations in Washington two months later produced a virtual deadlock between Syria and Israel. While Damascus tried to focus attention on the Occupied Territories, the Israelis complained of Syrian threats to Israeli security. When negotiations resumed in August, Syrian delegates expressed optimism that the LABOR PARTY government in Israel would adopt a more conciliatory posture. Damascus reiterated its demand for the complete return of the Golan Heights, rebuffing Israeli hints that unspecified territorial concessions might follow the signing of a peace treaty. At the same time, the Syrians seemed willing to demilitarize the Golan Heights or place it under international supervision. Israel responded by stating for the first time that it considered the Golan Heights to be covered under the terms of Resolution 242, suggesting that it might be willing to give up territory. Such mutual flexibility resulted in a dramatic improvement in the atmosphere surrounding the talks, and in September the Syrian delegation circulated a draft Declaration of Principles that outlined the general terms of a comprehensive peace agreement.

Nevertheless, the seventh round of discussions in October evidenced none of the optimism that had pervaded the preceding session. Syria denounced Israel's rejection of a complete withdrawal from the Golan Heights, as well as the IDF's escalating air and artillery strikes in southern Lebanon. When Israeli delegates announced that they were going home early, the head of the Syrian team called the talks "frustrating." Syria's position became even more intransigent during the early November recess. When talks resumed, Syria restated its demand that a full Israeli withdrawal from the Occupied Territories precede discussion of any other issues. As the talks foundered, President al-Asad softened Syria's hard line. He told reporters that it was conceivable, even likely, that some aspects of the conflict would be settled in advance of others as long as the ultimate objectives of a comprehensive peace were kept firmly in mind. When a reporter asked whether Syria would be willing to sign an agreement that did not turn over the West Bank to the Palestinians, the president replied that he “did not want to go into details,” but that the notion of comprehensiveness referred to the range of topics under consideration, not to the amount of real estate involved. He then repeated that as long as all the Arab delegations retained their confidence in one another, “it would be possible for one side to progress more speedily than the others.” In mid-March, however, al-Asad reverted to a less conciliatory position. He told an audience in Damascus that any separate Syrian-Israeli settlement would be rejected and that Syria would under no circumstances abandon its Arab partners in the talks but could instead be counted on to treat issues vital to the Palestinians, Lebanese, and Jordanians as important to Syria.

Just prior to the ninth round of negotiations at the end of April 1993, Syrian delegates reaffirmed the president’s harder line. The head of the negotiating team told the Lebanese newspaper al-Diyar that Damascus had no intention of making a separate deal with Israel but instead remained “committed to a comprehensive peace, and solving the Arab-Israeli conflict on all fronts.” A week later Vice President ‘Abd al-Halim Khaddam stated: “Peace requires withdrawal from all the occupied Arab territories, and recognition of the national rights of the Palestinian people,” both of which were presently rejected by Israel.

By all accounts, President al-Asad was caught completely off-guard by the August 1993 DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES between Israel and the PLO. Syrian officials immediately branded the agreement a “partial solution” that effectively undermined the overall prospects for an honorable settlement. They also invited a variety of radical Palestinian groups, which were equally upset with the PLO, to set up offices in the Syrian capital. These included the PFLP, the POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE—GENERAL COMMAND, the Palestinian ISLAMIC JIHAD, and HAMAS. At the same time, Damascus opened the door to more active US mediation. Secretary of State WARREN CHRISTOPHER presented al-Asad with a secret offer from Prime Minister YITZHAK RABIN to pull out of the Golan Heights in exchange for security guarantees and normal diplomatic relations. While Rabin envisioned a withdrawal to the Golan Heights boundary that had been laid down by British and French authorities in 1923, which put the entirety of the Jordan River and Sea of Galilee inside Israeli territory, al-Asad wanted withdrawal to the border that had existed as of 4 June 1967. Consequently, al-Asad rejected the proposal but agreed to meet President BILL CLINTON in Geneva in January 1994, at which time al-Asad expressed commitment to “establish normal relations in the area.” Clinton inferred that Syria was willing to complement diplomatic ties with broader economic and social connections, but Israeli officials interpreted al-Asad’s statement as an intention to hold back until an agreement was reached concerning the West Bank and Gaza. Talks once again stalemated. In January 1995 al-Asad sent a letter to Clinton outlining the fundamental guidelines that might govern future security in the Golan Heights. The letter was reworked by US officials into a one-page Statement of Aims and Principles and presented to Syria and Israel in May. Rabin refused to accept any written version of the principles, prompting al-Asad to doubt that Rabin was serious about the oral pledges he had made. Before such misgivings could be assuaged, Rabin was assassinated, and US diplomats passed along the details of Rabin’s secret proposal to his successor, SHIMON PERES.

New Israeli Governments

President al-Asad found Peres to be an enigma. Whereas al-Asad understood diplomacy to involve precise language and firm commitments, Peres employed vague formulations and broad visions. Furthermore, Peres’s conception of a new Middle East, in which state borders became irrelevant and mutual prosperity trumped political differences, appeared to Syrian leaders to be simply a cover for Israel’s unlimited exploitation of the water resources of the Golan Heights and domination of the regional economy. Nevertheless, Damascus joined a new round of bilateral talks beginning in December 1995. But in early February 1996, Peres called new parliamentary elections and then suspended negotiations with Syria in the wake of a string of SUICIDE BOMBINGS inside Israel.

BENJAMIN NETANYAHU’s government in 1996 abandoned the “land for peace” formula that had long been associated with UN Security Council Resolution 242 and insisted instead on a less tangible concept, “peace with security.” The new prime minister pledged that Israel would never return the Golan Heights and announced that any talks with Damascus would proceed “without preconditions”; that is, he would ignore his predecessors’ proposals and actions. Syrian officials demanded that talks be resumed at the point where they had been broken off by Peres and said that any other procedure would imply that “the negotiations could last another century . . . since every time there is a new Israeli government we have to return to point zero.” US representatives elicited support from Damascus for resurrecting negotiations, but there were no reciprocal signals from the Israeli government. Syrian-Israeli relations remained frozen while Netanyahu served as prime minister.

Damascus welcomed the May 1999 electoral victory of EHUD BARAK. The incoming prime minister signaled that he was willing to negotiate the Golan Heights issue on the basis of the 4 June 1967 boundary, although he added that any final agreement might require “very marginal border adjustments” to ensure Israel’s security and access to vital water supplies. The thaw in Syrian-Israeli relations prompted the PFLP to reconcile with the mainstream PLO. That December, al-Asad informed US secretary of state MADELEINE ALBRIGHT that Syria was prepared to restart negotiations “where they had left off.” Washington immediately organized a new round of bilateral talks and put together a draft peace treaty to provide a basis for discussion. However, the Syrian delegation soon discovered that the Israelis were basing their proposals on the 1923 border. Furthermore, Israel demanded unrestricted access to the water resources of the Golan Heights, including the various tributaries of the Jordan River, while the Syrians maintained that water rights would conform to conventional international standards. After three months of sparring, the Israeli government pulled out of the talks.

In June 2000 al-Asad died unexpectedly, and his successor, Bashar al-Asad, hinted on a number of occasions over the summer of 2000 that he hoped that negotiations with Israel would resume. Before the two sides could work out a mutually agreeable starting point, however, the second Palestinian uprising (AL-AQSA INTIFADA) erupted. At the end of October, the Israeli government began building 1,500 new houses for Jewish settlers in the Golan Heights. February 2001 saw the electoral defeat of Barak and his replacement by hard-liner ARIEL SHARON. The Sharon government stepped up Israeli military operations in South Lebanon, and in April it attacked a Syrian radar post in retaliation for operations by the Shi’a Islamist group Hizbullah along the Lebanese border. Despite these setbacks, Damascus again signaled that it would be interested in reopening bilateral discussions. Israel rebuffed the signals, to the growing irritation of the Syrian president, who escalated his anti-Israel rhetoric. More important, al-Asad revived the notion that any Syrian-Israeli peace must be predicated on a just resolution of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Such sentiments led Washington to exclude Syria from the initial stages of the so-called ROAD MAP to peace that was drawn up by the QUARTET—the United States, the United Nations, the EUROPEAN UNION, and Russia—in the fall of 2002.

The US invasion of IRAQ in March 2003 accompanied renewed signs of Damascus’s interest in resuming bilateral talks with Israel. Sharon appeared receptive to the idea as long as discussions took place “without conditions.” However, the Israeli government linked the resumption of negotiations to an end of strikes against Israeli targets by Hizbullah and other guerrilla organizations. Taking the hint, Hamas and Palestinian Islamic Jihad closed their Syrian offices, while the PFLP reduced its activities to a bare minimum. In October 2003 the IDF bombed an alleged Palestinian training camp north of Damascus. The year closed with the announcement that Israel intended to double the number of Jewish settlers in the Golan Heights. Yet al-Asad took advantage of a December interview with the New York Times to reiterate his willingness to pick up talks where they had left off in January 2000.

During 2004, US and Israeli demands that Syria eject all radical Palestinian organizations from its territory heightened tensions. In September Israel uncharacteristically claimed responsibility for the killing of an influential member of Hamas outside his Damascus house. The attack derailed Syrian overtures to the Sharon government, which were being undertaken through the former US ambassador to Israel, MARTIN INDYK. Nevertheless, between September 2004 and July 2006, in a series of secret meetings in Europe, Syrians and Israelis formulated understandings for a peace agreement between Israel and Syria. What happened to this agreement is unclear. Further initiatives proved impossible in the wake of the February 2005 assassination of Lebanese prime minister Rafiq al-Hariri, which sparked a major crisis in Syria's relations not only with Lebanon but also with Israel, the United States, and France.

On 6 September 2007, in an operation code-named "Operation Orchard," Israel bombed a site in the Deir ez-Zor region of Syria, claiming the site was a nuclear facility. Syria denied the nuclear allegation, and International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) tests came up with no indication to back the claims of Israel. Israel also made allegations about "significant" traces of uranium found at the site, but these findings have been disputed by Syria. The IAEA discovered possible evidence of uranium processing at the site, but the evidence has been inconclusive and attempts at investigation are ongoing.

Perhaps more important, Israel has actively sabotaged Syrian initiatives by undercutting its influence and credibility abroad. The aforementioned attack on Syria's perceived nuclear facility and the involvement of Mossad in the 13 February 2008 assassination of Imad Mugniyah (Hizbullah's top military commander) in Damascus serve as recent examples of such efforts.

See also ARMED STRUGGLE; BA'ATHISM; LEBANON; UN TRUCE SUPERVISION ORGANIZATION; WAR, 1948; WAR, 1967

Bibliography

- AbuKhalil, As'ad. "Syria and the Arab-Israeli Conflict." Current History. 93:2 (1994).
- Al-Azm, Sadik J. "The View from Damascus." New York Review of Books. 47:10 (2000).
- Drysdale, Alasdair, and Raymond Hinnebusch. Syria and the Middle East Peace Process. New York: Council on Foreign Relations Press, 1991.
- Eldar, Akiva. "Israeli, Syrian Representatives Reach Secret Understandings." Ha'aretz. 28 February 2007.
- Haimsky, David J. "The Syrian Card." Small Wars Journal. 6 July 2008. <http://smallwarsjournal.com/blog/2008/07/the-syria-card/>.
- Hajjar, Sami G. "The Israel-Syria Track." Middle East Policy. 6:3 (1999).
- Khouri, Fred J. "Friction and Conflict on the Israeli-Syrian Front." Middle East Journal. 17:2 (1963).
- Khoury, Philip S. "Divided Loyalties? Syria and the Question of Palestine, 1919–39." Middle Eastern Studies. 21:3 (1985).
- Lawson, Fred H. "Syria." In Echoes of the Intifada. Edited by Rex Brynen. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1991.
- . Why Syria Goes to War. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1996.
- Mandel, Neville J. The Arabs and Zionism before World War I. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1976.
- Ma'oz, Moshe. Syria and Israel. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1995.
- Ma'oz, Moshe, and Avner Yaniv. "On a Short Leash: Syria and the PLO." In Syria under Asad. Edited by Moshe Ma'oz and Avner Yaniv. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1986.
- Seale, Patrick. Asad: The Struggle for the Middle East. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1988.
- . "The Syria-Israel Negotiations: Who Is Telling the Truth?" Journal of Palestine Studies. 29:2 (2000).
- Shemesh, Moshe. The Palestinian Entity 1959–1974. London: Frank Cass, 1988.
- Shlaim, Avi. "Husni Za'im and the Plan to Resettle Palestinian Refugees in Syria." Journal of Palestine Studies. 15:4 (1986).
- Talhami, Ghada Hashem. Syria and the Palestinians: The Clash of Nationalisms. Gainesville: University Presses of Florida, 2001.
- Yaniv, Avner. "Syria and Israel: The Politics of Escalation." In Syria under Asad. Edited by Moshe Ma'oz and Avner Yaniv. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1986.

—Fred H. Lawson

Syrian-Israeli Conflict over Water, 1950–1965

See UNITED NATIONS TRUCE SUPERVISION ORGANIZATION

---

Ta'ayush

Ta'ayush (Life in Common) is a grassroots movement of Palestinians and Israelis who, in their own words, "work to break down the walls of racism and segregation by building a true Palestinian-Jewish partnership." In the fall of 2000, a group of like-minded individuals came together and proclaimed that, as "Arab and Jewish citizens of Israel . . . a future of equality, justice and peace begins today, between us, through concrete, daily actions of solidarity to end the Israeli OCCUPATION of the Palestinian Territories and to achieve full civil equality for all Israeli citizens."

Ta'ayush's ongoing activities include a campaign against the BARRIER separation wall, donations to families in the Rafah refugee camp and to the cave dwellers of the South Hebron Mountains for strengthening their steadfastness (sumud), protests against Palestinian HOUSE DEMOLITIONS, and solidarity activities with the Yanoun villagers in the southern hills of Hebron and with Palestinian residents of the Susiya region. (www.taayush.org).

See also HEBRON DISTRICT, SOUTHERN AREA

Taba Talks, 2001

The Israeli-Palestinian talks held at Taba, EGYPT, from 21 to 27 January 2001 were the last negotiations in the OSLO PROCESS between Israel and the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION. Considerable progress was made on many issues that had been left unresolved at the CAMP DAVID SUMMIT six months earlier, but, rather than pursuing peace, the newly elected prime minister, ARIEL SHARON, escalated the AL-AQSA INTIFADA, and the achievements made at Taba were not followed up. The EU envoy to the talks, Miguel Moratinos, took extensive notes, which are paraphrased here. Both sides accepted Moratinos's notes as an accurate record of what took place.

In order to find ways to arrive at joint positions, the two sides referred to the extensive work that had been undertaken on permanent status issues such as territory, JERUSALEM, REFUGEES, and security. At the same time, there were serious gaps and differences between the two sides, left to be overcome in future negotiations.

Territory

The two sides agreed that, in accordance with UN SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 242, which called for Israel's withdrawal from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES in exchange for an end to the Arab-Israeli conflict, the basis for the BORDERS between Israel and a future state of Palestine would be the 4 June 1967 lines. Also, it was implied that the GAZA STRIP would be under total Palestinian sovereignty, but the details were not worked out. If Israel gave up control, the Jewish SETTLEMENTS in Gaza would be evacuated.

Safe Passage/Corridor from Gaza to the West Bank

Both sides agreed to a SAFE PASSAGE for Palestinians from the north of Gaza (Beit Hanun) to the HEBRON DISTRICT, and that the WEST BANK and the Gaza Strip must be territorially linked. However, Israel insisted that it retain sovereignty over the safe passage, with the Palestinians receiving only usage rights to the land. The issue of control over Palestine's international BORDERS remained unresolved for the same reason, as did the question of who would control the border control posts.

Jerusalem

Both sides accepted (in principle) US president BILL CLINTON's suggestion of Palestinian sovereignty over Arab neighborhoods and Israeli sovereignty over Jewish neighborhoods in Jerusalem. The Palestinians agreed to discuss an Israeli request for sovereignty over Jewish settlements in East Jerusalem that were constructed after 1967, but not Jabal Abu Ghanem and RAS AL-AMUD or settlements in the Jerusalem metropolitan area; namely, MA'ALE ADUMIM and GIV'AT ZE'EV.

"The Palestinian side understood that Israel was ready to accept Palestinian sovereignty over the Arab neighborhoods of East Jerusalem, including part of Jerusalem's OLD CITY. The Israeli side understood that the Palestinians were ready to accept Israeli sovereignty over the Jewish Quarter of the Old City and part of the Armenian Quarter."

A Palestinian State – Historical Comparison

© Foundation for Middle East Peace (FMEP), Washington, DC., Jan de Jong cartographer, reprinted with permission.

Map 41. Map Presented by Israel at Taba, 2001

Both sides favored the idea of an open city. The Israelis' geographical scope encompassed the Old City of Jerusalem, plus an area defined as the HOLY BASIN (or Historical Basin), which includes the Jewish cemetery on the Mount of Olives, the City of David, and Kidron Valley. It also contains numerous Palestinian neighborhoods, including SILWAN, SHAYKH JARRAH, Ras al-Amud, ABU DIS, and others. Although the Palestinians agreed to consider Israeli interests and concerns provided that these places remain under Palestinian sovereignty, they rejected the Israeli parameters for the open city and instead supported one that encompassed the full municipal borders of both East and West Jerusalem.

The Israeli side accepted Jerusalem as the capital of the two states: Yerushalaim, capital of Israel, and Al-Quds, capital of the state of Palestine. Regarding a capital, the Palestinians were only concerned that East Jerusalem be their capital.

Holy Sites

Both parties accepted the principle of control over each side's respective HOLY SITES. Accordingly, Palestinians recognized Israel's sovereignty over the WESTERN WALL, although there was disagreement over the delineation of the Western Wall. The Palestinian side insisted on distinguishing between the Western Wall and the Wailing Wall segment, which is recognized in the Islamic faith as the Buraq Wall.

Although no resolution was reached on the question of TEMPLE MOUNT/AL-HARAM ASH-SHARIF, the coexisting Jewish temple and Muslim shrine, both sides were close to accepting Clinton's proposal for Palestinian sovereignty over al-Haram ash-Sharif.

Refugees

Both sides agreed that the issue of the Palestinian refugees was central to the Israeli-Palestinian relationship, and that a comprehensive and just solution was essential for a lasting peace. The two parties further agreed that the basis for a settlement of the refugee problem was UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 194, which calls for return or repatriation to Palestine/Israel of the refugees and for their compensation. The Palestinian side reiterated that the refugees should have the right of return to their homes, whereas the Israeli side said that return and repatriation should be either to Israel, to Israel-swapped territory, or to the Palestine state; that rehabilitation should take place in the host country where the refugee currently resides; and that relocation should be to a third country.

Both sides agreed to the establishment of an international commission and an international fund as a mechanism for dealing with compensation. Both sides agreed that "small-sum" compensation should be "fast-tracked" to refugees for loss of property. They also saw progress on Israeli compensation for material losses and expropriated land and assets, including agreement on an Israeli lump sum payment or amount to be agreed upon that would feed into the international fund. However, the Israelis sought to base the calculation of this payment on a macroeconomic survey that would evaluate the assets in order to reach a fair value, whereas the Palestinians wanted to calculate a fair value based on the records of the UNITED NATIONS CONCILIATION COMMISSION FOR PALESTINE, and other relevant data, with a multiplier.

Security

Both sides committed to promoting security cooperation and fighting terror. Specifically, the Israelis wanted three early warning stations on Palestinian territory, which the Palestinians accepted, subject to certain conditions. In addition, Israel wanted to maintain and operate five emergency locations on Palestinian territory (in the JORDAN RIFT VALLEY), although the Palestinians agreed to only two emergency locations, conditional on a time limit for their dismantling, and only if maintained by an international body rather than by Israelis. During emergency situations, Israel also wanted to deploy its armed forces on Palestinian territory, which the Palestinians refused although they were open to international forces used in that capacity, particularly within the context of regional security cooperation efforts. The two sides were also unable to agree on the scope of arms limitation for a Palestinian state. While Israel wanted a non-militarized Palestine, per the Clinton proposals, the Palestinians were prepared to accept some limitation on its acquisition of arms, but not a total ban.

In the sphere of civil aviation, the Palestinians were interested in exploring models for broad cooperation and coordination but were unwilling to cede overriding control to Israel. At the same time, the Israelis requested military operations and training in Palestinian airspace, but the Palestinians rejected this as inconsistent with the neutrality of the state of Palestine.

Annexation

The large stretch of territory between Ma'ale Adumim and Giv'at Ze'ev contains both a fairly large Palestinian population and East Jerusalem's most important land reserves. Initially, the Palestinians were amenable to having these two settlements be annexed to Israel but changed their minds after Israel insisted on annexing also the large tract of land that joins them, upon which event Palestinian citizens would find themselves in sovereign Israeli territory.

Another dispute that remained unresolved stemmed from Israel's refusal to accept the Palestinian demand for a 1:1 ratio between the area of the West Bank annexed to Israel and the parts of Israel that would be given to the Palestinians in exchange. Instead, Israel proposed a ratio of 1:2, in its favor. In addition, the Palestinians rejected Israel's proposal that the Halutza Dunes in the Negev, the area of safe passage between the West Bank and Gaza, and the part of Ashdod Port that would be set aside for Palestinian use be considered part of the land swap. Instead, they insisted that the land they received be contiguous with either the West Bank or Gaza, and that it not include any land over which they would not have sovereignty.

See also OSLO PROCESS

Bibliography

- BADIL. "Analysis of the Israeli and Palestinian Taba Proposals on Palestinian Refugees with the Full Texts as Annexes, Bethlehem, 13 November 2001 (Excerpts)." Journal of Palestine Studies. 31:2 (2002).
- Eldar, Akiva. "Dispute over Ma'aleh Adumin." Ha'aretz (Jerusalem). 15 February 2002.
- . "How Long Is the Western Wall?" Ha'aretz. 15 February 2002.
- . "Moratinos Document: The Peace That Nearly Was at Taba." Ha'aretz. 14 February 2002. www.mideastweb.org/moratinos.htm.
- . "A Negative Balance of Return." Ha'aretz. 15 February 2002.
- . "Symbols of Sovereignty." Ha'aretz. 15 February 2002.
- Foundation for Middle East Peace. Settlement Report: Deconstructing the Taba Talks. 11:2 (2001). Washington, DC.
- Gresh, Alain. "Israel versus Palestine versus the World: The Middle East—How the Peace Was Lost." Le Monde diplomatique. September 2001.

Ha'aretz. "EU Description of the Outcome of Permanent Status Talks at Taba." Ha'aretz Features: Weekend Edition. 15 February 2002.

Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization. "Israeli-Palestinian Joint Statement on Taba Talks, January 27, 2001." Jewish Virtual Library, n.d. www.jewishvirtuallibrary.org/js/Peace/Taba1.html.

Kassisiyyeh, Issa. "Second Track Negotiations." Jerusalem Quarterly File. 15 (2002).

Klein, Menachem. "The Origins of Intifada II and Rescuing Peace for Israelis and Palestinians." Ariga. 28 February 2003.

Rabbani, Mouin. "The Peres-Arafat Agreement: Can It Work?" MERIP Press Information Note 38. 3 November 2000.

Schiff, Ze'ev. "What Was Obtained at Taba Regarding Palestinian Refugees." Ha'aretz. 13 September 2001.

Segal, Jerome M. "The Palestinian Peace Offer." Ha'aretz. 2 October 2001.

Tabenkin, Yitzhak (1887–1971)

Yitzhak Tabenkin was a founder of the Meyuchad KIBBUTZ movement and one of the principal thinkers and founders of the kibbutz movement in general. A prominent LABOR PARTY leader, in 1967 he was a founder of the GREATER LAND OF ISRAEL MOVEMENT, which holds that the entire land of Israel belongs exclusively to the Jewish people. After the 1967 WAR, he was the leading ideologue for retaining all of the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES, opposing even the ALLON PLAN as too lenient.

Born in Byelorussia, Tabenkin had an Orthodox education until he attended university, studying in Warsaw, Vienna, and Berne. In Poland, he was one of the founders of the socialist Zionist party PO'ALE ZION and a strong supporter of agricultural settlements in Palestine. In 1911, he immigrated to Palestine and worked as a "watchman" in the settlements of Rehovot, and later Kinneret, eventually joining the paramilitary organization HASHOMER. After World War I, Tabenkin was involved in the founding of AHDUT HA'AVODAH, the underground military organization HAGANA, and the labor federation HISTADRUT. In 1921, he joined JOSEPH TRUMPENDOR'S Gedud ha-Avoda (Jewish Labor Legion) and settled in En Harod, beginning its transformation into a major collective.

Tabenkin believed firmly in kibbutz living and supported the idea of big collective settlements open to large membership. He also became involved in Labor Party politics and was one of the founders of the MAPAI, and later of MAPAM. After the establishment of the state (1948), Tabenkin became a member of the Knesset and was a key Labor leader. He consistently upheld the importance of the Land of Israel. When in 1947, Israel founder DAVID BEN-GURION could not decide how to respond to UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 181, on partition, he asked Tabenkin for advice. Tabenkin told him that the Land of Israel does not belong to any particular generation, but is the patrimony of all generations, and that there could be no compromise to the Jews having the whole of Eretz Yisrael. It was out of this commitment that Tabenkin joined the Greater Land of Israel Movement after the 1967 War and became its chief thinker.

See also GREATER LAND OF ISRAEL MOVEMENT

Bibliography

- Ben-Ami, Shlomo. Scars of War, Wounds of Peace: The Israeli-Arab Tragedy. New York: Oxford University Press, 2006.
- Blech, Benjamin. If God Is Good, Why Is the World So Bad? Deerfield Beach, FL: Simcha Press, 2003.
- Burston, Bradley. "Want Greater Israel? Vote for the Left." Ha'aretz (Jerusalem). 10 February. www.haaretz.com/hasen/pages/ShArt.jhtml?itemNo=681161&contrassID=2.
- Jewish Agency. "Yitzhak Tabenkin, Yitzhak: Labor Leader and Kibbutz Activist." Jewish Agency Department of Jewish Zionist Education: Israel and Zionism. n.d. www.jafi.org.il/education/100/people/tabenk.html.
- Jewish Virtual Library. "Yitzhak Tabenkin." Jewish Virtual Library, n.d. www.jewishvirtuallibrary.org/jsourc/biography/tabenkin.html.

Tal al Za'tar

Tal al Za'tar was the largest Palestinian refugee camp in LEBANON, situated in the outskirts of Christian east Beirut. In the mid-1970s, it had a population of approximately 15,000 REFUGEES, a result of the 1948 WAR between Israel and its Arab neighbors. Palestinians were less welcome and more oppressed in Lebanon than in any other country in which they took refuge—primarily because of the country's Christian dominance. During the 1975–1976 Lebanese civil war between rightist Christian forces and the leftist Sunni, Shi'a, and Druze coalition, Palestinian factions joined the leftists. In June 1976, the Christian Lebanese Front, composed mainly of rightist Phalangist forces, laid siege to Tal al Za'tar. In addition to the 15,000 civilians in the camp, some 2,000 armed Palestinian guerrillas had collected there. During the siege, which lasted for three months until 12 August, when Christian fighters overran the camp, some 1,600 people died in the fighting and blockade, and 4,000 were wounded. When the Lebanese forces entered the camp, they carried out a wholesale massacre of Palestinian civilians, and then leveled the camp with bulldozers. The surviving civilians were relocated to other Palestinian refugee camps.

See also LEBANON; LEBANON WAR; PHALANGE; SABRA AND SHATILA MASSACRE

Bibliography

- Bawley, Dan, and Eliahu Salpeter. Fire in Beirut: Israel's War in Lebanon with the PLO. Briarcliff Manor, NY: Stein and Day, 1984.
- Dawisha, Adeed. I. Syria and the Lebanese Crisis. London: Macmillan, 1980.
- Deeb, Marius. The Lebanese Civil War. New York: Praeger, 1980.
- Gabriel, Philip Louis. In the Ashes: The Story of Lebanon. Ardmore, PA: Whitmore Publishing Co., 1978.
- Gilmour, David. The Dispossessed. London: Sedgwick and Jackson, 1980.
- . Lebanon, the Fractured Country. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1983.
- Gordon, David C. Lebanon, the Fragmented Nation. London: Croom Helm, and Stanford, CA: Hoover Institution Press, 1980.
- Hagopian, Elaine Catherine, ed. Amal and the Palestinians: Understanding the Battle of the Camps—Viewpoints. Belmont, MA: Association of Arab-American University Graduates, 1985.
- Haley, Edward P., and Lewis W. Snider, eds. Lebanon in Crisis. Syracuse, NY: Syracuse University Press, 1979.
- Joumlatt/Junblat, Kamal. I Speak for Lebanon. London: Zed Books, 1982.
- Jureidini, Paul A., and William E. Hazen. The Palestinian Movement in Politics. Lanham, MD: Lexington Books, 1973, 1982.
- Khalidi, Rashid. "The Asad Regime and the Palestinian Resistance." Arab Studies Quarterly. 6:4 (1984).
- Khalidi, Walid. Conflict and Violence in Lebanon. Boston: Harvard University Center for International Affairs, 1979.
- Petran, Tabitha. The Struggle over Lebanon. New York: Monthly Review Press, 1987.
- Rabinovich, Itamar. The War for Lebanon, 1970–1983. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1984.
- Randal, Jonathan. Going All the Way: Christian Warlords, Israeli Adventurers and the War in Lebanon. New York: Vintage Books, 1984.
- Sayigh, Rosemary. Palestinians: From Peasants to Revolutionaries: A People's History. London: Zed Books, 1979.
- . Too Many Enemies: The Palestinian Experience in Lebanon. London: Zed Books, 1994.
- Tabbara, Lina Mikdadi. Survival in Beirut: A Diary of Civil War. London: Onyx Press, 1979.

Talk Peace Make Peace

The Talk Peace Make Peace (Re'ut-Sadaka) project is a HAIFA-based organization that works to improve relations between Israelis and Palestinians at the individual level. The goals of the Talk Peace Make Peace program are to build trust between young Palestinians and Israelis as a basis for multi-cultural and multinational coexistence and cooperation, established through mutual respect and equality. In keeping with this mission, the following objectives have been set for the program: promoting interpersonal relationships; acquiring awareness of each other's culture and of pluralism within each group; reducing stereotypes, prejudice, and ethnocentrism; internalizing feelings of respect for others; and increasing the ability to deal with conflict through communication rather than violence.

The project involves a series of weekend workshops that begin as separate uninational events devoted to discussions about participants' expectations, stereotypes, prejudices, and the Israeli-Palestinian conflict itself. This is followed, a month later, by a second uninational workshop for each community. Then come four binational weekend workshops, held once a month, in which Israeli and Palestinian participants meet in mixed educational groups to discuss personal, cultural, and ethnic identities; to deal with each other's feelings; and to recognize and break down stereotypes and prejudices. (www.bkluth.de/reut/TPMP.html).

Tami

Tami (Movement for the Heritage of Israel) was a MIZRAHI-dominated political party in Israel during the 1980s. It was founded shortly before the 1981 elections and was led by Aharon Abuhatzira. It won three seats in the elections; however, in 1984 it won only one seat, after which it merged into the LIKUD PARTY and ceased to exist.

Tanzim

In its first incarnation, the Tanzim (the Organization) was a military force set up in 1995 by PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA) president YASIR ARAFAT and the FATAH party leadership to offset the growing power of the Palestinian Islamist groups. At least part of Fatah's motivation in establishing such a group came from a series of armed confrontations between Fatah and the Islamist parties. In November 1994, for example, a showdown between PNA security forces and the Islamic group HAMAS resulted in the death of thirteen civilians in the GAZA STRIP.

The character of the Tanzim evolved fairly quickly, and as it did, the relationship between the Tanzim and Fatah grew increasingly contradictory. On the one hand, the Tanzim provides the military and political base of the PNA's rule. On the other, its members are potentially its most seditious opposition. The Tanzim is the stronghold of the insiders, or the YOUNG GUARD, who represent the common Palestinian in the "street" (as opposed to the TUNISIANS or the elite OLD GUARD). At the beginning of the OSLO PROCESS between Israel and the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION, the Tunisians largely marginalized the young guard, although some were co-opted into the PNA's new ministries or into one of its myriad police and intelligence forces. Despite its origins in the Fatah/PNA, the Tanzim, in its second incarnation, has been largely a grassroots organization with branches throughout the Palestinian territories and its leadership based at community levels rather than national. The vast majority of its leaders are graduates of the First INTIFADA, many of whom spent time in Israeli prisons for their activities during the Palestinian uprising. One of the most senior Tanzim figures is MARWAN AL-BARGHUTHI, the WEST BANK Fatah chief, who narrowly escaped TARGETED ASSASSINATION by Israeli rockets in 2001 and subsequently was arrested and given multiple life sentences.

The Tanzim members see themselves as being in the vanguard of the future Palestinian state. One of the lessons born of Fatah's long experience with the governments of the Arab world is the need for self-sufficiency, an idea the Tanzim has vigorously promoted. The group also advocates for Palestinian nationalism and the mobilization of young people into nationalist frameworks by motivating them to take an active role in the nationalist and political activities of Fatah as well as in demonstrations and military operations. Its organizational structure consists of geographical sectors subdivided into cells, and it has branches in every neighborhood, village, REFUGEE camp, and high school. In Ramallah, for example, the Tanzim has ten neighborhood branches in addition to its main headquarters. The organization's strongest branches operate within the universities—BIRZEIT, Bethlehem, and An-Najah. It claims both to have tens of thousands of members (mainly Palestinian men aged twenty to thirty-five) and that virtually every Fatah member ever imprisoned in Israel belongs to the Tanzim, although neither assertion can be verified. The fact that a number of the Tanzim's leading members also serve in the Palestinian security services provides another contradiction.

After 1996, as popular discontent with the Oslo Process grew and support for Fatah as a movement independent of the PNA declined, opposition to Oslo was expressed at various levels. Within the PNA's new institutions, especially the elected Palestinian Legislative Council, it tended to be Fatah Tanzim deputies who led the crusade against the general corruption, mismanagement, and lawlessness of the PNA's governance. On the street, Tanzim activists took the lead in protests against Israel's SETTLEMENT policies and for the release of Palestinian political PRISONERS. On occasion, the Tanzim sponsored protests against the PNA, especially against the old guard-led security forces, who were known for arresting, torturing, and sometimes killing detained Fatah activists.

Most important, the Tanzim promoted a process of democratic reform that began years earlier. In 1991, West Bank leaders established the Fatah Higher Council, made up of the former Intifada leadership and consisting of local leaders and ex-prisoners drawn from throughout the West Bank. According to journalist Graham Usher, from 1994 to 1999, some 122 Fatah conferences were held in the West Bank, involving the participation of some 85,000 Fatah activists and resulting in the election of 2,500 leaders. A similar process occurred in Gaza, but at a slower pace, and with less participation. The aim of these regional conferences, according to Usher, was to convene the first meeting of the Fatah General Conference in eleven years to elect a new FATAH CENTRAL COMMITTEE (FCC) and a new Fatah Revolutionary Council (FRC), the two highest decision-making bodies of the movement. It was clear that once that conference convened (it did convene in August 2009), there would be a massive increase in the representation from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES' leadership at the expense of the pro-Oslo leadership formerly exiled in Tunisia. To prevent this, Arafat repeatedly intervened to stall the democratization process, usually in the name of national unity but actually to protect those he appointed to the FCC in 1989, and who have since become the inner core of the national leadership. These leaders—AHMAD QUREI', MAHMUD ABBAS, SAEB EREKAT, NABIL SHA'TH, and Tayyib

'Abd al-Rahim—are generally viewed as the most pro-American of the leadership, and the Tanzim badly wants to replace them.

The Tanzim's politics are somewhat difficult to ascertain, because they are committed to the basic nationalist ideology of Fatah. However, with the demise of the Oslo Process, three themes appear to be common among its grassroots leaders. The first, according to Usher, is a growing critique of the Oslo terms, in which Palestinian national aspirations are suborned to a negotiating strategy based on US-led diplomacy and security cooperation with Israel's military and intelligence forces. In its stead, the Tanzim puts forward other options than negotiations and the consolidation of the PNA. Relations with the Israeli government, the peace camp, and diplomatic cooperation with the UNITED STATES and the EUROPEAN UNION are acceptable, but not as substitutes for other options. In al-Barghuthi's words, "We can negotiate, but we must also have action on the ground."

The second theme calls for wrenching the Palestinian struggle out from under the tutelage of US regional diplomacy and Israeli hegemony to where the Tanzim believes it properly belongs—the UNITED NATIONS and the Arab world. Usher states, "The Tanzim asserts that any 'end of conflict' must be predicated on Israel's full withdrawal to the 1967 lines, including East JERUSALEM, and recognition of the principle of Palestinian refugees' right of return 'to their homes' in geographic Palestine."

Finally, the West Bank insiders advocate a "genuine national coalition among all the Palestinian factions, especially the non-PLO Islamist movements of Hamas and ISLAMIC JIHAD, united behind the commonly held national goals of independence, return, sovereignty and ending the OCCUPATION." The precondition of such a coalition is the destruction of the terms of the OSLO ACCORDS, and especially the security cooperation it envisioned among the PNA, Israel, and the US CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY.

Bibliography

- Alon, Gideon. "Ramon Unveils Tanzim Truce Plan Made before Shehadeh Hit." Ha'aretz (Jerusalem). 30 July 2002.
- Ariga. "A Declaration to the Peaceful and Progressive People of Israel and the World: Fatah-Tanzim Statement September 10, 2002." Ariga (Israel).
- Childs, Nick. "Tanzim: Shock Troops of the Uprising." BBC. 17 October 2000.

- Global Jewish Agenda. "Ataf Abayat, Head of Tanzim Assassinated in Bethlehem Tonight." 2001. www.jafi.org.il/agenda/2001/english/wk36/1.asp.
- PBS. "Battle for the Holy Land." Frontline. April 4, 2002.
- Usher, Graham. "Fatah's Tanzim: Origins and Politics." Middle East Report. 217 (2000).
- . "War of Attrition between Palestinian Factions: Dead End for the Palestinian Resistance." Le Monde diplomatique. September 2003.

Tanzimat

The Tanzimat (Reorganization) was a program of political reform in the OTTOMAN EMPIRE that began in 1839 and lasted until 1876. It was initiated and promoted by prominent reformers, who were European-educated and deeply influenced by European systems and ideas. Many of the changes introduced in this period were symbolic, but others were attempts to graft successful European practices onto the Turkish empire. The reforms included universal conscription, educational reform, and the elimination of corruption. At its heart, the Tanzimat was an attempt to institute limited modernization in the Ottoman Empire, so as to preserve it from penetration, fragmentation, and domination by European countries, but the effort came far too late.

Bibliography

- Divine, Donna Robinson. Politics and Society in Ottoman Palestine: The Arab Struggle for Survival and Power. Boulder, CO: Lynne Rienner Publishers, 1994.
- Eisenman, Robert H. Islamic Law in Palestine and Israel: A History of the Survival of Tanzimat and Sharia in the British Mandate and the Jewish State. Leiden, Netherlands: Brill Academic, 1997.
- Lewis, Bernard. What Went Wrong? The Clash between Islam and Modernity in the Middle East. New York: HarperPerennial, 2003.

Targeted Assassinations

The concept of "targeted assassination," an Israeli term, is deeply rooted historically, institutionally, and theoretically in the political and ideological life of the Jewish state. Israel's political use of assassination, mostly of Palestinians, dates to the pre-state period (before 1948) of the Yishuv. For many years, assassinations of Palestinians were typically the work of the militant Zionist groups IRGUN and LEHI, but on 27 December 1947, the HAGANA, the main Jewish underground military organization at the time, issued a general order for what became the first comprehensive operational plan for assassination. Operation Zarzir (Starling) was carried out by the Fourth Battalion of the PALMAH, the Hagana's elite strike force, which included the Arab Department (Shahar, or Dawn)—Jewish soldiers disguised as Arabs—today called Mist'aravim.

Under Operation Zarzir, the list of assassination candidates was long and, in Israeli analyst Ze'ev Schiff's words, "testified to the political-strategic intentions of the Hagana on the eve of the 1948 WAR. Assassins were told, among other things that 'the operation should look like an Arab action,' i.e., as though it was an Arab who had murdered an Arab. All the brigade commanders were asked to assist in Zarzir actions. The commander of the whole operation had to report on his activities once a week and Allon ordered Agmon to give a direct and regular report of the assassinations to MOSHE DAYAN. Before the war broke out in full force, the country was [geographically] divided between two officers who were in charge of the assassinations. When the war was over, the assassination activities ended for a while. The original list of candidates for assassination included twenty-three Palestinian leaders and high-ranking officers from all over the country. The largest group was in the JERUSALEM area; the second largest was in JAFFA. Several of them, like Emile al-Ghuri, were political leaders. Others were prominent military leaders, such as Hasan Salamah and ABD AL-QADIR AL-HUSAYNI both of whom were killed during battles with Israel."

During the late 1950s, Israel returned to a policy of assassinations, although on a smaller scale. The effort was directed against Egyptian intelligence personnel and attachés involved in organizing Palestinian groups for the purpose of attacking Israelis. In 1963, while YITZHAK SHAMIR was a member of the secret intelligence service MOSSAD (1955–1965), Israel sent booby-trapped packages to Germans accused of assisting EGYPT in developing its missile program. Many of them were killed. During the 1970s and early 1980s, Israel made wide use of assassination when it sought revenge for acts of TERRORISM perpetrated by the BLACK SEPTEMBER ORGANIZATION, although, of the many dozens of Palestinians assassinated, very few were connected with Black September operations. Eitan Haber, who served as the spokesperson for the late prime minister YITZHAK RABIN, told the Israeli newspaper Yedioth

Ahronoth “that several persons were killed ‘by mistake’ despite the fact they had no relations with any Black September group . . . but that . . . the operation managed to spread fear among the Palestinian community in Europe.” On 13 June 1980, Israel assassinated Yehia El-Mashad in Paris. He was an Egyptian nuclear scientist and a professor at Alexandria University.

In 1987, Israel carried out one of its most spectacular operations with the assassination of FATAH party cofounder KHALIL AL-WAZIR (Abu Jihad) in his home in Tunis. The killings that have occurred in the Oslo period are part of an explicit policy, a policy employed by the Yishuv/Israel in Palestine and abroad for well over the past half century.

The targets of such assassinations have not been limited to Palestinians. In February 2007, the Israeli daily Ha’aretz reported that “in the late 1970s and early 1980s, the Mossad was involved in the deaths of scientists involved with the IRAQ’s nuclear program. At least three scientists were killed in those operations.” In 1990, the Mossad assassinated Canadian engineer Gerald Bull in Brussels, allegedly because he was involved in Iraq’s drive to build a “super-gun.” In 1992, Israel assassinated the leader of the Lebanese resistance party HIZBULLAH, Abbas el-Moussawi, his wife, and his son. The occasion for the Ha’aretz article was Mossad’s assassination, in January 2007, of Professor Ardashir Hosseinpour, a world authority on electromagnetism, who until his death was working on uranium enrichment at a facility in IRAN.

In the Palestine theater, according to B’TSELEM, the Israeli human rights group, Israel assassinated 621 Palestinians from the beginning of the AL-AQSA INTIFADA in September 2000 through December 2008. Of the 621 who were killed, 234 persons were actually “targets”; the remaining 387 were civilian bystanders. It was during this period that, in response to strong international criticism, Israel changed the name from simply “assassination” to “targeted assassination” to convey the perception that its hits were precise and clean.

Unnamed security personnel, together with the Israeli army, play the role of informer, attorney, judge, and executioner, and the decision to kill is implemented with no judicial process whatsoever. The target of the assassination is not given a chance to present evidence in his defense or to refute the allegations against him.

During the Yishuv, assassination techniques were primitive compared to the variety of methods Israel now uses, including air-to-surface rockets launched from Israeli helicopters, booby-trapped mobile phone explosions, car bombs, sprays of gunfire at a target as he approaches a CHECKPOINT, hunting down and killing individuals in their homes, poisonous injections, and explosions in homes. Such methods are, however, highly problematic. Most of the assassinations are carried out in densely populated civilian areas, and there is a high risk that bystanders will be killed—as is evident in the above numbers. Errors may also occur both when selecting the target and while carrying out the assassination. Those who carry out the assassination may err in the identification of the victim. Israeli undercover units have killed the wrong person more than once. As Yael Stein from B’Tselem noted, “Problems are rife from the initial decision through all stages of the process, problems which render any legal justification Israel could mount irrelevant.”

B’Tselem regards Israel’s assassination policy as illegal and a departure from the principles of Israeli and INTERNATIONAL LAW. In addition, the policy of assassination is a political failure, because it has never stopped Palestinian resistance to the Israeli OCCUPATION, and generations of murdered activists have been replaced by new waves of leaders. In fact, assassinations lead directly to SUICIDE BOMBINGS by Palestinians, as can be shown by correlating the dates of assassinations and the dates of suicide bombings and matching groups that claim responsibility for bombings with the assassinations of such groups’ leader or senior official. A nearly certain predictor for a suicide bombing is when Israel assassinates a senior commander or political leader of a militant group, especially when it does so during or in negotiations for a truce.

See also MOSSAD

Bibliography

- Abdul Jawad, Saleh. The Israeli Assassination Policy in the Aqsa Intifada. Jerusalem: Jerusalem Media and Communication Center, December 2001.
- Al Banna, Yaseer. “Half Century of Israeli Assassinations.” LINK: Islam-On-Line. 23 August 2003. <http://www.islamonline.net/English/News/2003-08/22/article07.shtml>.
- BBC. “Profile: Israel’s Shin Bet Agency.” BBC News. 30 January 2002.
- B’Tselem. Statistics: Palestinians Killed by the Israeli Security Forces during the Course of an Assassination.

2006. www.btselem.org/English/Statistics/Casualties\_Data.asp?Category=1.
- Goldenberg, Suzanne. "Palestinian Survives 'Israeli Bomb.' Senior Political Leader Accuses Hit Squad after Blast at Home." The Guardian (London). 1 September 2001.
- Al-Haq. "Willful Killings: A Sustained Israeli Policy in the Occupied Territories." Human Rights Focus. Ramallah: Al Haq, 21 November 1992.
- Human Rights Watch. A License to Kill: Israeli Undercover Operations against "Wanted" and Masked Palestinians. New York: Middle East Watch/Human Rights Watch, July 1993.
- International Middle East Media Center. "Haber: 'Israel Assassinated Pal. Novelist Kanafani and Other Figures.'" International Middle East Media Center. 4 October 2005. http://www.imemc.org/index.php?option=com\_content&task=view&id=14261&Itemid=1.
- Kafala, Tarik. "Israel's 'Assassination Policy.'" BBC News Online. 1 August 2001.
- Melman, Yossi. "Mossad Killed Iranian Nuclear Physicist." Ha'aretz. 4 January 2007. www.haaretz.com/hasen/spages/821634.html.
- Palestine Human Rights Information Center. Targeting to Kill: Israel's Undercover Units. Jerusalem: Palestine Human Rights Information Center, May 1992.
- Schiff, Ze'ev. "On the Origins of Targeted Assassination." Ha'aretz. 5 June 2006.
- Stein, Yael. Israel's Assassination Policy: Extra-judicial Executions. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2002.

Tax Revolt: Bayt Sahur

During the First INTIFADA, which erupted in December 1987, Palestinians developed several strategies of NONVIOLENCE to challenge the Israeli OCCUPATION. One involved a January 1988 exhortation by HANNA SINIORA, the editor of al-Fajr, a Palestinian newspaper, that Palestinian communities become self-sufficient in the basic necessities of life so that they will not have to buy Israeli products, pay taxes, or work for Israeli employers. Another Palestinian, Mubarak Awad, established in 1985 the PALESTINIAN CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF NON-VIOLENCE, which sponsored a number of nonviolent actions during the early months of the Intifada, including calling for tax revolts and the planting of olive trees on land slated for new settlements, thereby taking advantage of an Israeli law forbidding the confiscation of land upon which fruit trees grow.

The most rigorous application of the idea of nonviolent resistance took place in the predominately Christian community of Bayt Sahur. The encouragement of church leaders gave the population moral sustenance, but the strength and endurance of the people arose from their opposition to the Occupation and their desire to end it.

A village close to BETHLEHEM, Bayt Sahur initially promoted backyard gardening, which expanded into the development of a dairy farm that Israel viewed as a security threat and subsequently attempted to eliminate. However, the operation to seize the cows failed after the residents of Bayt Sahur moved them to a secret location. In July 1988, Bayt Sahur residents undertook a tax revolt against the Occupation and invited Israeli Jews to come to the village and pray with them. Seventy Israeli peace activists responded and prayed in Palestinian homes on the Jewish Sabbath. In November 1988, this was followed by a service for peace in Bayt Sahur's GREEK ORTHODOX CHURCH, which had become a center of nonviolent resistance. Anglican archbishop Desmond Tutu lent his support to this effort. In response, the Israeli army arrested eighty-nine people and besieged the town. The UN Security Council proposed a resolution condemning Israel's actions in Bayt Sahur, but the UNITED STATES vetoed it.

Largely due to enormous international pressure, Israel lifted the SIEGE after forty-four days. However, on the forty-third day, Israel closed all the entrances connecting Bayt Sahur with other towns and cities, including Bethlehem, cut phone lines, imposed a CURFEW, and prohibited mass MEDIA representatives from entering the town. Then the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) rampaged through the town. Workshops, factories, and homes were ransacked. Machinery, cars, tools of production, jewelry, and money were stolen. Israel confiscated outright NIS 600,000 ($385,000) in bank accounts, and the commercial, industrial, and economic INFRASTRUCTURE of the town was destroyed. Moreover, the soldiers and tax collectors proceeded to seize all the property of the residents and businesses, including machinery, tools, cars, ovens, refrigerators, clothing, and washing machines, in order to compensate for the taxes that Bayt Sahur was refusing to pay. Medical supplies were destroyed. Israeli-confiscated goods from homes were valued at $15 million. When the pressure of the Israeli tax authority and the IDF reached an unbearable level, Palestinians from Bayt Sahur passively handed their IDENTITY CARDS to the Israeli authority.

Israel deported Mubarak Awad before the end of 1988, and membership in committees organizing nonviolent protests became punishable by ten years in prison. Israel arrested nonviolent organizers and rescinded the right to judicial review of jail sentences.

See also NONVIOLENCE IN ISRAEL/PALESTINE

Bibliography

- Atran, Scott. "Stones against the Iron Fist, Terror within the Nation: Alternating Structures of Violence and Cultural Identity in the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict." Politics and Society. 18:4 (1990).
- Bucaille, Laetitia. Growing Up Palestinian. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2004.
- Grace, Anne. "The Tax Resistance at Bayt Sahur." Journal of Palestine Studies. 19:2 (1990).
- Rouhana, Kate. "The Other Intifada: The Crucial Economic War Heats Up." The Nation. 1 January 1990.

Tehiya Party

The Tehiya (Renaissance) Party was founded in 1979 during the term of the ninth Knesset, in a split from the LIKUD PARTY by settler activists angry at MENAHEM BEGIN's agreement to return the Sinai Peninsula to EGYPT and the eviction of the Israeli settlers there. It was composed of both secular nationalists and religious fundamentalists, led by Geula Cohen and Moshe Shamir, and was an extreme right-wing party. Tehiya was strongly affiliated with the extraparliamentary movement of GUSH EMUNIM, and included prominent members of Israeli SETTLEMENTS in the WEST BANK and GAZA STRIP such as Hanan Porat, Elyakim Haetzni, and physicist Yuval Ne'eman. On 9 May 1984 Yuval Ne'eman endorsed the car bombing of three Palestinian mayors as "positive." He said it "paralyzed the main instigators of the [West Bank] without killing anyone."

In its first electoral test, the 1981 elections, Tehiya won three seats. Despite their previous disagreement, they were included in Menachem Begin's coalition alongside Likud, the NATIONAL RELIGIOUS PARTY, AGUDAT YISRAEL, TAMI, and the TELEM PARTY. Although Cohen did not take a ministerial position, Ne'eman became minister of science and development.

In the 1984 elections, Tehiya became the third largest party in the Knesset after the Alignment (LABOR PARTY) and Likud, albeit with only five seats. However, they were excluded from SHIMON PERES and YITZHAK SHAMIR's national unity government. During the Knesset session, Rafael Eitan defected from Tehiya to found a new party, TZOMET. In the 1988 elections, the party was reduced to three seats and was again left out of Shamir's national unity government. However, when the Alignment left the coalition in 1990, Tehiya was invited into a new, narrow, right-wing government that included Likud, the National Religious Party, SHAS, Agudat Israel, DEGEL HATORAH, and the Party for Advancing the Zionist Idea. Although Cohen again declined a ministerial position, Ne'eman was appointed minister of energy and infrastructure and minister of science and technology. Despite its late entry to the government, the party pulled out of the coalition on 21 January 1992 in protest over Yitzhak Shamir's participation in the MADRID CONFERENCE. In the 1992 elections the party failed to gain enough votes for even one Knesset seat and subsequently disappeared. It is likely that most of its electorate went to Eitan's Tzomet, which jumped from two seats in the 1988 elections to eight in the 1992 votes. The two parties had competed for the same secular right-wing electorate, though Tzomet had a much more pronounced secular, even antireligious, stand.

Bibliography

- Lustick, Ian S. "Israel's Dangerous Fundamentalists." Foreign Policy. 68 (Fall 1987).
- Ravitzky, Aviezer, and Michael Swirsky. Messianism, Zionism, and Jewish Religious Radicalism. Translated by Jonathan Chipman. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1996.
- Sprinzak, Ehud. "Fundamentalism, Terrorism, and Democracy: The Case of the Gush Emunim Underground." Paper presented at a colloquium at the Wilson Center, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC, 16 September 1986.
- . "The Israeli Radical Right: History, Culture and Politics." In Encounters with the Contemporary Radical Right. Edited by Peter Merkl and Leonard Weinberg. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1993.
- Tal, Uriel. "Foundations of a Political Messianic Trend in Israel." The Jerusalem Quarterly. 35 (Spring 1985).

Tekuma

Tekuma (Rebirth) Party was an extreme right-wing Israeli political party founded in 1998 in the WEST BANK as a faction that broke away from the Orthodox NATIONAL RELIGIOUS PARTY. Led by legislators Hanan Porat and Zvi Handel, the party was a strong advocate of the GREATER LAND OF ISRAEL MOVEMENT, adamantly opposed a Palestinian state, and advocated TRANSFER of the Palestinians from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. Together with MOLEDET and HERUT they formed the NATIONAL UNION PARTY, which won four seats in the 1999 elections. For the 2003 elections YISRAEL BEITENU joined the National Union (though Herut left), and with its increased support helped Tekuma to win seven seats. The party was included in ARIEL SHARON'S coalition alongside the LIKUD PARTY, SHINUI, National Religious Party, and YISRAEL B' ALIYA.

Tekuma was ideologically opposed to ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA, and one of its leaders, Handel, lived in a Gazan SETTLEMENT. There was much infighting. Sharon sacked National Union ministers BENYAMIN ELON and AVIGDOR LIEBERMAN, and the party left the coalition. However, the National Union was bolstered by the addition of Ahi, which had split off from the National Religious Party when they decided to remain in the coalition.

Before the 2006 elections, Yisrael Beitenu left the alliance to fight the election alone. However, at the last minute the National Religious Party decided to join the alliance, which won nine seats, two of which were allocated to Tekuma and were taken by Hendel and Uri Ariel.

On 3 November 2008, Tekuma announced a merger with Ahi, the National Religious Party, and Moledet to form a new right-wing party, which was later named The Jewish Home. However, around half the former Tekuma members later left the party to reestablish the National Union alongside Moledet, Hatikva, and Eretz Yisrael Shelanu.

See also TEHIYA PARTY

Bibliography

Maor, Moshe. Parties, Elections and Cleavages: Israel in Comparative and Theoretical Perspective. London: Routledge, 2000.

Ravitzky, Aviezer, and Michael Swirsky. Messianism, Zionism, and Jewish Religious Radicalism. Translated by Jonathan Chipman. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1996.

Telem Party

In 1981 Minister of Foreign Affairs MOSHE DAYAN formed the Telem Party, which advocated unilateral disengagement from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. That same year, Dayan was elected to the Knesset on the Telem slate but died shortly thereafter. The party received only two seats in the subsequent elections.

Bibliography

Maor, Moshe. Parties, Elections and Cleavages: Israel in Comparative and Theoretical Perspective. London: Routledge, 2000.

Temple Institute

See THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT

Temple Mount

The Temple Mount (Har HaBayit in Hebrew; AL-HARAM ASH-SHARIF in Arabic [Noble Sanctuary]) is a compound sacred to Jews and Muslims, covering some thirty-five acres in the OLD CITY of East JERUSALEM, and is at the very center of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Considered under INTERNATIONAL LAW to be Occupied Territory, the compound is a rectangular area that towers over its surroundings and houses two of Islam's holiest sites: the DOME OF THE ROCK and the AL-AQSA MOSQUE. It was the site of the First and Second Jewish Temples in the first millennium BCE and, according to Judaism, will be the site of the third and final temple in the time of the coming Messiah. As such, it is the holiest site in Judaism. One of the walls surrounding the compound, the WESTERN WALL of the Temple Mount, is sacred to Jews as the last remnant of the Second Temple. For religious Jews, the Mount is where redemption will take place when the Messiah arrives; for secular Jews, the Temple Mount is a profound national symbol. Israel's capture of the Western Wall in 1967, along with the WEST BANK, GAZA STRIP, and East Jerusalem, was considered a great national achievement. Yet the same area is of deep religious, political, and national significance to Palestinians and to Muslims around the world: Palestinians consider it imperative that East Jerusalem be the capital of their future state and that al-Haram ash-Sharif be under Palestinian-Muslim sovereignty.

Jewish and Muslim Traditions

According to the Bible, King David purchased a threshing floor overlooking Jerusalem to erect an altar to Jehovah so that the plague would spare Jews. The construction of a permanent temple fell to his son Solomon, who completed the First Temple circa 950 BCE. After this temple stood for 410 years, Nebuchadnezzar and the Babylonians destroyed it in 586 BCE. The reconstruction that became the Second Temple began after the seventy-year Jewish exile in Babylonia. In 63 BCE, the Romans entered Jerusalem, and Judea became a subject kingdom of the Roman Empire. The most famous of the client kings was Herod, who was a great builder, and one of his major construction projects, around 20 BCE, was the renovation of the Second Temple to make it more grandiose than the First Jewish Temple. Around the Mount, Herod built four large walls, with a large surface between them, turning the area into a giant rectangle, which has been retained in the current shape of the Temple Mount; one of Herod's walls is the Western Wall.

In 70 CE, Titus destroyed the temple, although the Romans were unable to topple the walls. The Roman rulers, who later converted to CHRISTIANITY, did not allow Jewish pilgrimage to the Temple Mount. Later on, the rabbis themselves forbade Jews from ascending the Mount; in their view, so long as Jews are in DIASPORA, no Jew will be pure enough to enter the site of the Temple. However, Jews continued to pray at the site of the Western Wall.

According to medieval Jewish Geniza documents, when Muslims first entered the city of Jerusalem in 638 CE, the Christian inhabitants were using the ruins of the temple as a rubbish dump to humiliate the Jews and fulfill Jesus's prophecy that not a stone of the temple would be left standing. Caliph Umar ibn al-Khattab (companion of Muhammad) was horrified to see it in such a state and ordered the temple cleaned. He also built a mosque on the site to commemorate the Prophet Muhammad's journey to Jerusalem. Several of the earliest non-Muslim sources—notably the Byzantine chronicler Theophanes Confessor and the Jewish Secrets of Rabbi Simon ben Yohai—indicate that the Jews of the time hailed Umar's action as a restoration of the temple.

Subsequent to the Muslim conquest of this region, Muslims called the Temple Mount al-Haram ash-Sharif and have since considered it the third holiest site in Islam, after Mecca and Medina. Islam reveres David and Solomon as prophets and regards the temple (mentioned in Qur'an 17:7) as one of the earliest and most noteworthy places of the worship of God. In verse 17:1 of the Qur'an, there is mention of the "farthest Mosque," which Muslims traditionally interpreted as referring to the site on the Temple Mount where the al-Aqsa Mosque now stands. In 686 CE, the ninth caliph,

'Abd al-Malik, commissioned the construction of an octagonal shrine (not a mosque) built over the rock whence Muslims believe Muhammad ascended on his miraculous night ride to heaven; this shrine became known as the Dome of the Rock. In 715 CE, the Umayyads rebuilt Umar's mosque, by then almost a ruin, into a grand mosque, which they named al-Masjid al-Aqsa, the al-Aqsa Mosque—that is, "the farthest Mosque." Earthquakes have destroyed the al-Aqsa Mosque several times, and the current version dates from the first half of the eleventh century. For Muslims, the holiness of both the dome and the mosque contributes to the holiness of the city of Jerusalem.

Current Conflict

The Zionists who came to Israel at the end of the nineteenth century held Jerusalem as a Jewish symbol, even though the majority of them were not religious. After the British took control of Palestine in 1918, the Temple Mount and the Western Wall became a point of tension between Jews and Arabs inside the greater conflict for national sovereignty. The Arabs claimed that they traditionally held control over the arena in front of the Western Wall, and a Jewish attempt to put a bench next to the Wall during Yom Kippur in 1928 was one of the sparks that led to the WESTERN WALL DISTURBANCES in 1929. After the revolt, the BRITISH MANDATE government decided that the Western Wall arena should retain its status quo: nothing could be taken out of it or brought into it. Jewish tradition says that on the holidays of Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, a shofar (ram's horn) is to be blown. Violating the status quo, the Jews brought the shofar into the arena in 1930, which Muslims considered a provocation. The British decreed that the shofar must not be brought to the Western Wall. The unceasing efforts of some Zionist groups to bring the shofar into the arena have been a source of continuous friction.

In the 1948 WAR between Israel and its Arab neighbors, JORDAN occupied the Old City, including the Temple Mount and the Western Wall. Even though the cease-fire agreement between Jordan and Israel stated that Jews would have free access to the wall, this part of the agreement was never implemented. Israeli culture continued to cultivate a yearning for the Western Wall, and in the 1967 WAR, when Israel conquered East Jerusalem, including the Temple Mount, it was a dream come true for many Israelis. For Arabs, the defense of al-Aqsa became a major point in the conflict.

In 1967, Israel granted a waqf (an Islamic trust) partial autonomy on the Temple Mount to administer the mosque and shrine (as it continues to do), although Israel controls all security issues. Mainstream Jewish thought has held that the construction of the next temple on the Temple Mount would come with the arrival of the Messiah, and that ordinary people could not undertake its reconstruction. Moreover, until recently, rabbis admonished Jews not to climb the Temple Mount in impurity. These factors allowed the situation to remain stable for some time. However, the emergence of extreme, Jewish fundamentalist groups in the mid-1980s created new conflicts. In 1969 a young evangelical Christian set fire to the al-Aqsa Mosque and severely damaged it. In the 1980s two underground extremist Jewish organizations plotted, each separately, to destroy the Muslim sites, although both plans were thwarted. In 1990, an attempt by a small Jewish group to ascend the Mount brought about major demonstrations by Muslim worshipers who threw stones at Jewish worshipers at the Western Wall and overran a police station on the Temple Mount. Israeli border police officers opened fire at the demonstrators, killing seventeen. Palestinians refer to the incident as the al-Aqsa Massacre, and Israelis call it the Temple Mount Riots.

Even after the 1993 OSLO ACCORDS between Israel and the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO), the Temple Mount remained a source of conflict. Threats to the mosque were a rallying cause for PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT, who attempted to strengthen his claims in negotiations with the Israelis. In September 1996, the government of BENJAMIN NETANYAHU opened an ancient tunnel (the HASMONEAN TUNNEL) that borders on the Temple Mount without informing the Islamic authorities. Muslims saw the tunnel opening as both a threat to the physical stability of the mosque and the Dome of the Rock and a political statement about Israel's intention to control the city and the HOLY SITES. Fighting broke out between Israelis and Palestinians that lasted three days, in which fifty-eight Palestinians (including eleven Palestinian security officers) and sixteen Israeli soldiers and border police officers died.

The status of the Temple Mount was one of the main areas of disagreement in the negotiations for a final peace settlement in the OSLO PROCESS. While Jewish traditionalists as well as most of the secular Israeli public would not agree to give up control of what they regard as the holiest place in Judaism, the Muslim population saw any sign of Israeli sovereignty over the compound as a religious and political affront. Following rumors that Israeli prime minister EHUD BARAK was willing to cede control of the Mount, right-wing opposition leader ARIEL SHARON visited the Temple Mount on 27 September 2000 to make a political statement about Israel's sovereignty in all—East and West—Jerusalem. Palestinians viewed Sharon's presence as an intentional provocation, and the following Friday, demonstrations similar to the ones of 1990 broke out, triggering the AL-AQSA INTIFADA, which began in September 2000.

Complicating matters is the THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT, a widespread movement among Jewish fundamentalists, supported by Christian Zionists, to reconstruct the Third Temple over the ashes of the Dome of the Rock and the al-Aqsa Mosque.

Archaeological Claims

In addition to the contending claims of religious and historical sanctity, which have been transformed into opposing political claims, the rival archaeological interests make this site a place of inevitable conflict. In recent years, Israelis have voiced many complaints about Muslim construction and excavation on and underneath the Temple Mount, while Muslims have complained about Israeli excavations—two under the Temple Mount and others around it. Some claim the excavations will lead to the destabilization of the retaining walls of the Temple Mount, including the Western Wall, and allege that the other side is deliberately causing the collapse of their sacred sites. Israelis complain that the Palestinians are deliberately removing significant amounts of archaeological evidence about the Jewish past from the site, while Muslims accuse the Israelis of deliberately damaging (during excavation) the remains of Islamic-era buildings.

In 1968–1969, Israeli archaeologists carried out excavations at the foot of the Temple Mount, immediately south of the al-Aqsa Mosque, and opened two ancient Second Temple period tunnels that penetrate beneath the mosque, five meters into one and thirty meters into another. At the Temple Mount's south wall, Israelis uncovered Arabic Umayyad palaces and Crusader remains. Over the period 1970–1988, Israeli authorities excavated a tunnel passing immediately to the west of the Temple Mount and northward from the Western Wall, sometimes using mechanical excavators. Palestinians claim that these excavations have caused cracks and structural weakening of the buildings in the Muslim Quarter of the city above the tunnels. The dig was finally halted until steel buttresses were put in place to secure the al-Aqsa Mosque and the Dome of the Rock.

In 1997 the Western Hulda Gate passageway was converted into another mosque—the Marwani Mosque. In November 1999 a buried Crusader-era door was reopened as an emergency exit for the Marwani Mosque, opening an excavation claimed by Israel to be 18,000 square feet (1,700 square meters) in size and up to thirty-six feet (eleven meters) deep. According to the New York Times, the Israeli police had urged an emergency exit upon the waqf, and the Israeli Antiquities Authority acknowledged its necessity. In autumn 2002, waqf officials reported a significant bulge in the southern retaining wall of the Temple Mount. Waqf archaeologists feared that that part of the wall might seriously deteriorate or even collapse. Although waqf officials would not permit detailed Israeli inspection, an agreement with Israel led to a team of Jordanian engineers repairing the wall by January 2004, costing 100,000 Jordanian dinars (US$140,000) for restoration of 250 square meters (2,500 square feet) of wall.

On 11 February 2004 an earthquake damaged the eastern wall of the Temple Mount. The damage threatens to topple sections of the wall into the area known as Solomon's Stables. On 16 February 2004 a portion of a stone retaining wall collapsed; the wall supports the ramp that leads from the Western Wall plaza to the Gate of the Moors—Bab al-Maghariba (Arabic), Sha'ar HaMughrabim (Hebrew)—and on to the Temple Mount.

See also AL-AQSA MOSQUE; ARCHAEOLOGY; DOME OF THE ROCK; AL-HARAM ASH-SHARIF; JEWISH FUNDAMENTALISM; THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT

Bibliography

- Casper, Lionel I. The Agreement: The Epic Struggle for the Temple Mount. Jerusalem: Gefen Publishing House, 1999.
- Eliav, Yaron Z. God's Mountain: The Temple Mount in Time, Place, and Memory. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2005.
- Gonen, Rivka. Contested Holiness: Jewish, Muslim, and Christian Perspective on the Temple Mount in Jerusalem. Jersey City, NJ: Ktav Publishing House, 2003.
- Gorenberg, Gershom. The End of Days: Fundamentalism and the Struggle for the Temple Mount. New York: Oxford University Press, 2002.
- Hamilton, Robert William. The Structural History of the Aqsa Mosque: A Record of Archaeological Gleanings from the Repairs of 1938–1942. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1949.
- Johns, Jeremy. Bayt-al-Maqdis. Part II: Jerusalem and Early Islam. New York: Oxford University Press, 2000.
- Nuseibeh, Said. The Dome of the Rock. New York: Rizzoli, 1996.
- Price, Randall. The Battle for the Last Days' Temple. Irvine, CA: Harvest House Publishers, 2004.
- Raby, Julian, and Jeremy Johns. Bayt-al-Maqdis. Part I: 'Abd al-Malik's Jerusalem. New York: Oxford University Press, 1993.
- Ritmeyer, Leen, and Kathleen Ritmeyer. Secrets of Jerusalem's Temple Mount. Biblical Archaeology Society, 1998.

Temporary International Presence in Hebron

The Temporary International Presence in Hebron (TIPH) was a civilian observer mission in the WEST BANK city of HEBRON, created as a consequence of settler BARUCH GOLDSTEIN'S 25 February 1994 slaying of twenty-nine Muslims at prayer in the AL-IBRAHIMI MOSQUE and the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION'S (PLO) ensuing concern about the security of Palestinians in Hebron. TIPH'S main task was to monitor and report on misconduct by either side to Israel and the PLO. Israel prohibited TIPH from intervening directly in incidents, and it had no military or police functions.

The legal basis for TIPH resides in UN Security Council Resolution 904, which condemned the Goldstein massacre and called for a temporary international force in Hebron. The DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES between the PLO and Israel of 13 September 1993 also provided for such a presence. After the massacre, PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT announced that the PLO would withdraw from any further peace negotiations with Israel unless Israel agreed to international observers in Hebron. It was three years after the Goldstein affair, however, before Israel fully consented to international observers in the city. The first step in the process occurred on 31 March 1994, when representatives from the PLO and Israel signed an agreement asking Italy, Denmark, and NORWAY to provide support staff and observers for the first Temporary International Presence in Hebron. Its primary mandate was to assist in promoting stability and restoring normal life. On 8 May 1994, the TIPH mission was in place, but the PLO and Israel could not reach an agreement on an extension of its mandate, and it withdrew from Hebron on 8 August 1994.

On 28 September 1995, Israel and the PLO signed the INTERIM AGREEMENT, which called for a partial redeployment of the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) from Hebron and for another temporary international presence established during the redeployment. On 12 May 1996, the second TIPH mission, consisting of Norwegian members only, was created under the condition that it would be replaced by a new TIPH mission upon the IDF's redeployment from parts of Hebron. This second mission operated until the partial Israeli redeployment from Hebron, which was agreed upon in the HEBRON PROTOCOL of 17 January 1997.

On 21 January 1997, Israel and the PLO signed a new accord, "The Agreement on the Temporary International Presence in the City of Hebron," which called for Norway, Italy, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, and TURKEY to provide personnel for TIPH, with Norway as the coordinator. The agreement also delineated the tasks of TIPH and set the mandate period at three months, renewable for an additional period of three months, unless otherwise agreed between the two sides. Furthermore, with the consent of the two sides, TIPH could extend the period or change its scope of operation, as agreed.

On 30 January 1997 in Oslo, the six participating countries signed a Memorandum of Understanding in accordance with the TIPH agreement. On 1 February 1997, the multinational TIPH mission entered into force. However, TIPH's mandate was so restricted that it could not intervene in SETTLER VIOLENCE against the Palestinians, but could only observe it. In addition, Israel prohibited TIPH from speaking or writing about what it observed. The observer mission was disappointing to the Palestinians, who wanted protection from the settlers, but the settlers considered it so serious a threat that they harassed TIPH almost as much as they did Palestinians. (www.tiph.org).

See also HEBRON; SCANDINAVIAN COUNTRIES

Bibliography

Eva, E. A. "Hebron: The Cradle of the Circle of Violence." The Ecumenical Accompaniment Programme in Palestine and Israel, Geneva, 12 September 2002. Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization. The "Agreement on Temporary International Presence in the City of Hebron, January 21, 1997." US Department of State. July 2003. www.state.gov/p/nea/rls/22681.htm.

Palestine Monitor. "The Divided City of Hebron: The Impossible Coexistence between Extreme Jewish Settlers, Israeli Occupation and Palestinians." Palestine Monitor. 18 (27 June 2002).

Tenet, George (1953–)

President BILL CLINTON appointed George Tenet director of the CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY (CIA) in 1997. Prior to his nomination, Tenet had served as deputy director of the CIA for two years. Although CIA directors are usually replaced by an incoming administration, Clinton's successor, President GEORGE W. BUSH, kept Tenet in his position throughout most of his first term, reportedly out of respect for his independence from the previous Democratic administration. For example, during the US-brokered Israeli-Palestinian peace talks at Wye River in 1998, Tenet threatened to resign if Clinton acceded to Israeli demands that convicted Israeli spy Jonathan Pollard be pardoned. Tenet received harsh criticism for the CIA's failure to prevent the 9/11 terrorist attacks and his support of inaccurate intelligence estimates of IRAQ's biological and chemical weapons capability prior to the 2003 US invasion, although others argued that the bulk of responsibility for both failures lay primarily with the White House.

In June 2001, after the release of the findings from the commission headed by former senator GEORGE MITCHELL on ending Israeli-Palestinian violence in the context of the AL-AQSA INTIFADA, President Bush dispatched Tenet to the region to push for a cease-fire, as called for in the 2000 Mitchell Plan. Tenet apparently did not press Israel to alter its policies, such as the ongoing expansion of Israeli SETTLEMENTS in the occupied WEST BANK, which Mitchell's report cited as encouraging the violence. The Tenet Plan for a cease-fire called for a complete cessation of violence for one week, followed by a six-week cooling-off period during which Israeli forces would withdraw to where they were prior to the outbreak of violence in September 2000. It also called for an end to Israeli CLOSURES, enhanced security cooperation between Israeli and Palestinian officials, preemptive operations by the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA) against suspected terrorists in areas of PNA control, and Israeli action to prevent violence by Jewish settlers. The PNA also agreed to allow for CIA assistance in preventing terrorist attacks by Palestinians against Israelis.

Tenet's cease-fire plan technically went into effect on 13 June 2001 but never fully materialized, largely because it didn't provide the Palestinian population with adequate incentives to end their uprising. Not only did Tenet's proposal not stop Israel from building additional settlements, in contravention of the Mitchell Plan, but no international monitors were authorized to verify the cease-fire, and no buffer zones were established separating the two sides. Instead, the UNITED STATES essentially permitted Israel to serve as the monitor and verifier as well as the decisionmaker regarding implementation of the Tenet Plan and subsequent steps. Within days of the agreement, Israel launched TARGETED ASSASSINATION squads into PNA-designated areas, killing several Palestinian leaders, while asserting that these killings were not cease-fire violations but self-defense against TERRORISM. In response, the Islamic group HAMAS and armed Palestinian groups resumed their attacks against Israeli soldiers and civilians.

See also WYE RIVER MEMORANDUM

Bibliography

- Eldar, Akiva. "Did Israeli Government Approve Tenet-Mitchell Plan?" Ha'aretz (Jerusalem). 4 November 2002.
- Hardy, Roger. "Tenet Plan Open to Interpretation." BBC News. 3 June 2001.
- Reinhart, Tanya. "From Aqaba to Sharm—Fake Peace Festivals." Znet. 13 February 2005. www.zmag.org/znet.
- Tenet, George. The Tenet Plan: Israeli-Palestinian Ceasefire and Security Plan, Proposed by CIA Director George Tenet; June 13, 2001. Text of the Tenet Plan. Avalon Project at Yale Law School, n.d. www.yale.edu/lawweb/avalon/mideast/mid023.htm.

—Stephen Zunes

Terror Against Terror

Terror Against Terror (TNT) was a militant settler underground movement that was active throughout the WEST BANK from 1978 to 1984. Composed of religious Jews with a right-wing nationalist agenda, it functioned with financial support from many sectors, including sympathetic American Zionists and the KACH movement under RABBI MEIR KAHANE. Some American members received paramilitary training organized by the JEWISH DEFENSE LEAGUE. TNT also had strong ties with GUSH EMUNIM (Bloc of the Faithful)—the settler political movement centered in KIRYAT ARBA—and with many right-wing Israeli politicians and prominent rabbis.

According to Israeli police, TNT was composed of four main cells. The largest and most active of the four, named after its leader Yorem Livni, was the Livni cell, based in Kiryat Arba; it had among its members Israeli military officers and munitions experts. On 2 June 1980, the Livni cell planted bombs in the cars of NABLUS mayor BASSAM SHAKA'A (who lost both of his legs in the blast), and Ramallah mayor Karim Khalaf (who lost half his foot). Cell members also put a bomb on the garage door of el-Bireh mayor Ibrahim Tawil that blinded an Israeli soldier who tried to defuse the explosive. The settlers later claimed that their aim in attacking the West Bank mayors was "not to kill them; killed[,] they would become martyrs, while wounded they would serve as a living ongoing deterrent [to Palestinian political activity]." A TNT bomb exploded that same day in a crowded HEBRON market, injuring eleven Palestinians, among them four children. The Livni group obtained the weapons used in bombing the mayors' cars from the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES as part of a "regional defense program." The settlers were issued weapons while serving in the Israeli military reserve, service that they were permitted to perform near their settlements. They also stole mines left over from the Syrian defense positions on the Golan Heights.

In October 1982, TNT bombed a soccer stadium in Hebron, injuring two Palestinian children. In February 1983, Muslim guards found bombs in two mosques in Hebron just before they exploded. In July 1983, TNT carried out a military-style assault on the Islamic College of Hebron. Wearing Arab clothing and driving a West Bank car, the settlers sprayed machine-gun fire and tossed hand grenades, killing four students and seriously injuring over thirty others. Like the other TNT cells, the Livni group had an elaborate plan to blow up the DOME OF THE ROCK and the AL-AQSA MOSQUE in JERUSALEM. In the past, the members of this group had desecrated the mosque several times, but the bombing was called off, allegedly because the group could not get permission from the prominent rabbis in the Gush Emunim movement—leading to a split in TNT. Other settlers known as the "Tribe of Judah" tried to blow up the mosque in 1984 but were seen scaling the walls with guns and explosives by Arab guards, and were later arrested.

After the attempted bombing of six Arab-owned buses in Jerusalem in 1984, Israeli police broke up the Livni cell and arrested twenty-four settlers on charges ranging from conspiracy to premeditated murder. The settlers had planted three four-kilogram bombs packed with high explosives under each bus. Had the bombs exploded in central Jerusalem as planned, an untold number of people, including many tourists, would have been killed or injured. Few of the group were convicted and those who were received relatively light sentences, and were subsequently given pardons.

See also GUSH EMUNIM

Bibliography

- Friedman, Robert I. Zealots for Zion: Inside Israel's West Bank Settlement Movement, reprint ed. Piscataway, NJ: Rutgers University Press.
- Lustick, Ian S. For the Land and the Lord: Jewish Fundamentalism in Israel. New York: Council on Foreign Relations Press, 1988.
- . "Israel's Dangerous Fundamentalists." Foreign Policy. 68 (Fall 1987).
- Ravitzky, Aviezer, and Michael Swirsky. Messianism, Zionism, and Jewish Religious Radicalism. Translated by Jonathan Chipman. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1996.
- Sosebee, Steve. "Jewish Settler Terror Groups Have a Long History in Hebron." Washington Report on Middle East Affairs. June 1994.
- Sprinzak, Ehud. "Fundamentalism, Terrorism, and Democracy: The Case of the Gush Emunim Underground." Presented at a colloquium at the Wilson Center, Smithsonian Institution Building, Washington, DC, 16 September 1986.
- . "The Israeli Radical Right: History, Culture and Politics." In Encounters with the Contemporary Radical Right. Edited by Peter Merkl and Leonard Weinberg. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1993.
- Tal, Uriel. "Foundations of a Political Messianic Trend in Israel." The Jerusalem Quarterly. 35 (Spring 1985).
- Weinberg, Leonard, and Ami Pedahzur. Political Parties and Terrorist Groups. London: Routledge, 2003.

Terrorism

One cannot read or hear about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict without encountering the accusation of "terrorism." Terrorism is not a religious phenomenon, although some acts of terrorism have been given license by Jewish and Muslim religious authorities. Palestinian terrorists have ranged from leftist revolutionaries to Christian and Muslim nationalists to self-defined Islamic warriors. Israeli terrorists have included zealous settlers, Jewish millenarians, secular nationalists, racists, and state functionaries. In this essay, the focus is upon the deliberate, unjustifiable, and random uses of violence for political ends against civilian groups. The perpetrators may be states, agents of states, organized groups, or individuals acting independently. The qualifying condition is that their actions constitute a uniquely abhorrent and morally objectionable assault on noncombatants for political purposes.

In light of the size of the population of Israel (more than 6 million) and the size of the Palestinian population (about 5 million), the casualties on both sides caused by political violence, including clear acts of terrorism, have been considerable. For instance, from the beginning of the AL-AQSA INTIFADA in September 2000 until the end of 2008, more than 335 Israeli security personnel and more than 700 other Israelis were killed, including 490 within Israel (and the remainder in the Occupied WEST BANK and GAZA STRIP); these numbers include 123 Israeli minors. On the Palestinian side, the toll has been larger still: over 4,800 Palestinians were killed by Israeli security forces (98 percent in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES), including 950 youths. More than 500 Palestinians were killed by other Palestinians, one-fifth of whom were accused of being COLLABORATORS. Many of the dead on both sides were victims of terrorism.

History of Violence in Conflict

Some of the prototypical terrorist groups in the modern Middle East emerged in BRITISH MANDATE Palestine (1917–1948), the most famous being the IRGUN TZEVA'I LE'UMI (the National Military Organization), usually referred to as the Irgun or Etzel. The group was inspired by the right-wing Zionist revisionism of VLADIMIR (ZE'EV) JABOTINSKY and led by MENAHEM BEGIN (who became prime minister of Israel in 1977). Although the Irgun often attacked Palestinians, especially during and after the ARAB REVOLT of 1936–1939, its most sensational attacks were directed at the British Mandatory authorities. Although it largely suspended attacks on the British during World War II—judging Nazi GERMANY a greater threat to Jews than Britain—the attacks resumed in 1943. The most sensational act, and arguably an act of terrorism, was the blowing up of the KING DAVID HOTEL in JERUSALEM in which ninety-one people died, including many civilians. After Irgun terrorists were captured and hanged, Irgun kidnapped and hanged two British soldiers in retaliation. Begin's memoir, The Revolt, is widely considered a seminal insider's account of insurgency and terrorism, including by contemporary Arab groups (Lebanese HIZBULLAH for one).

A frequent ally of the Irgun was the more extremist LEHI (LOHAMEI HERUT YISRAEL), usually called the Stern Gang after its founder, AVRAHAM STERN. Stern was killed in 1942 by the British, and one of his successors was YITZHAK SHAMIR (who, like Begin, later went on to become prime minister). LEHI was committed to keeping open the doors to Palestine to Jewish IMMIGRATION, and, for this reason, the 1939 MACDONALD WHITE PAPER, which declared Britain's opposition to Palestine becoming a Jewish state, was considered a declaration of war on Jews. Significantly, both Irgun and LEHI shared the same nationalist ideology, which emphasized an expansive geographic definition of Israel—from the Nile to Euphrates rivers—but the two groups differed significantly on issues of strategy. Indeed, LEHI actually approached Nazi GERMANY to explore the possibility of an alliance against Britain, whereas the Irgun suspended attacks on the British during the war years.

Over the span of its existence, LEHI was responsible for at least forty-two TARGETED ASSASSINATIONS of Britons and Palestinians, including several consequential killings. In 1944, LEHI assassins felled Lord Moyne, the British minister of state for the Middle East, angering a number of leading British officials, reportedly including Prime Minister Winston Churchill himself. As a result, the Jewish underground military organization HAGANA cooperated with the British authorities in launching a campaign against the Irgun. The move to suppress the Irgun (which was not responsible for the murder of Lord Moyne) anticipated Zionist retaliation against Palestinian guerrilla groups in that mainstream Zionists held the organizations collectively responsible for acts of violence. In official parlance: "They are all terrorists."

In September 1948, just four months after the state of Israel came into existence, LEHI ambushed and killed Swedish diplomat COUNT FOLKE BERNADOTTE just outside of Jerusalem. Furthermore, both Jewish groups participated in an infamous act of terrorism against a Palestinian village in April 1948 when they attacked DEIR YASSIN, which lay on the outskirts of Jerusalem. Over 100 Arabs—all or nearly all the residents—were slaughtered, exacerbating the fears of Palestinians, who fled Palestine in greater numbers than ever before when news of the massacre spread throughout the country. To this day, the events at Deir Yassin are a durable component of the historical narrative of Palestinians, many of whom view the event as symptomatic of their suffering in their conflict with Israel. In retaliation for the Deir Yassin killings, Palestinians killed more than seventy medical workers from the Hadassah hospital on Jerusalem's Mount Scopus. Nearly a quarter century later, in 1972, a group of Japanese Red Army terrorists opened fire inside the Lod airport. Among the victims of the attack, which the group named Operation Dayr Yasin, were a group of Puerto Rican tourists who, the terrorists claimed, supported Israel merely by being in Israel—a claim not unlike that made by Begin in The Revolt about the British in Mandatory Palestine.

Palestinian violence during the Mandate period was significant as well, but much more fragmented in organizational terms. The Arab Revolt of 1936–1939 was sparked by growing Arab concern over rising numbers of Jewish immigrants in Palestine and the upsurge in LAND sales. Many of the protests and acts of violence committed by Palestinians during this period were directed at the British Mandate authorities, but there were also a number of attacks on Jewish settlements. Perhaps the best-known act of anti-Jewish violence during the uprising was in TIBERIAS in October 1938, when twenty Jews, almost all civilians, were killed by Palestinians. In retaliation, the Irgun launched its own anti-Arab campaign, which featured a number of bombings of crowded Palestinian shopping areas. In fact, during the uprising, the preponderance of casualties were inflicted on the Arabs, who suffered some 5,000 losses. During the same period, approximately 200 British officers and 415 Jews of the Yishuv were killed.

Escalation after 1967 War

The early 1950s were marked by Palestinian refugees' infiltrations into Israel and massive Israeli retaliations. The infiltrators were mostly unarmed and crossed the border from JORDAN, EGYPT, and LEBANON seeking to find relatives, to return to their homes lost in the 1948 WAR, to recover material possessions, to tend their fields, to harvest crops, and, occasionally, to seek revenge. According to Israeli historian Avi Shlaim, from 1949 to 1956, more than 90 percent of all infiltrations were motivated by social and economic concerns, while in the same period, Israel mounted punitive raids, killing between 2,700 and 5,000 persons. From 1956 through the early 1960s, organized Palestinian raids and guerrilla attacks were mounted from Gaza under the encouragement of the Egyptian army, but the small independent fida'i groups that existed were insignificant, and their raids into Israel were usually inconsequential. After the stunning Arab defeat in the 1967 WAR, this changed dramatically. The routing of Egypt, Jordan, and SYRIA in a mere six days left a void that the secular-nationalist fida'iyyun were intent on filling. Palestinians, who had put their trust in the Arab states, especially in JAMAL 'ABD AL-NASIR, the charismatic Egyptian president, when it came to defeating Israel, were now persuaded that liberation would come only by their own hands, not through the efforts of the discredited Arab regimes. Over the course of the ensuing twenty years, the major Palestinian umbrella group, the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO), gained legitimacy and notoriety, as did its constituent groups, for a variety of attacks, including a number of well-known acts of terror.

Throughout the 1970s and 1980s (until the 1993 OSLO ACCORDS between the PLO and Israel), almost any official or journalistic mention of the PLO in Israel included the adjective "terrorist." Any aerial bombardment by Israel against the PLO, which until the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1982 was a major armed presence in that country, was described routinely by Israeli spokespersons and journalists as an attack on "terrorist targets," even though hundreds of Palestinian and Lebanese civilians were killed in these bombing raids. This is not to argue that the label was undeserved in some instances—constituent groups within the PLO committed blatant acts of terrorism, including hijacking seven passenger jets from 1968 to 1970. When the POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE (PFLP) hijacked four civilian jetliners in the summer of 1970, it not only disrupted air travel around the globe, but its coordinated operation helped precipitate the civil war in Jordan known as BLACK SEPTEMBER.

Throughout the 1970s, fida'i attacks were launched at civilian sites throughout Israel, and scores of civilians were slaughtered, including many children in towns such as Misgav Am, KIRYAT SHMONA, Nahariya, MA'ALOT, and Beit She'an, either by the perpetrators or in the response by Israeli police and soldiers. Perhaps the most notorious incident of this period occurred during the 1972 MUNICH OLYMPICS when the previously unknown BLACK SEPTEMBER ORGANIZATION kidnapped the Israeli Olympic team. Eleven of the team members died in a blaze of gunfire and explosions when German police attempted a rescue operation as the perpetrators and their captives tried to board escape helicopters. Following the Munich incident, Israel launched a secret operation—Wrath of God—to kill those Palestinians deemed responsible. The victims included an unfortunate Moroccan waiter in Lillehammer, NORWAY, whose murder led to the arrest of five members of an Israeli assassination squad. Throughout much of the 1970s, a secret war between the Black September Organization and Israel continued and included letter bombs, assassinations, and hijackings.

In 1982, the attempted assassination of Ambassador Shlomo Argov by the Fatah Corrective Movement provided the pretext for the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, which was intended to destroy the PLO and put in place a Lebanese government willing to make peace with Israel (as Egypt had done in 1979). The Fatah Corrective Movement, known popularly as the Abu Nidal group, was led by SABRI AL-BANNA (widely known by his nom de guerre, Abu Nidal), a Palestinian dissident who was a rival of PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT, and his group targeted a number of PLO officials. (Al-Banna was assassinated in Baghdad in 2002.) When Israeli chief of staff Rafael Eitan was advised that the Abu Nidal group was responsible for the London attack, not the PLO, he replied: "Abu Nidal or Abu Smidal, the PLO must be f—." His response illustrates Israel's approach to Palestinian nationalist groups—they were all terrorists.

Beginning of Peace Process

The only way for Arafat to gain a seat at the negotiating table was his renunciation of terrorism, as well as the declared willingness of the PLO to accept Israel's right to exist. In 1988, in the final months of the RONALD REAGAN administration and a year into the First INTIFADA, which erupted in 1987, Arafat fulfilled these requirements, which led the UNITED STATES (Israel held out considerably longer) to recognize that there was no serious alternative to the PLO as a diplomatic interlocutor. Especially after the 1973 War, the momentum within the PLO was quite clearly toward the acceptance of a TWO-STATE SOLUTION between Israel and Palestine. The formulaic precision of Arafat's statement, which was presented twice, was necessary to satisfy the dictates of domestic politics in the United States, including the US Congress, which had passed legislation banning any diplomatic contact with the PLO as long as it espoused terrorism and refused to recognize Israel's right to exist. The fact that the breakthrough occurred in the last months of President Ronald Reagan's term in office, when he had little to lose, had as much to do with the degree to which the terrorist label has become entangled with interest group politics in the United States as with the factors on the ground in the Middle East.

As the peace process gathered momentum in the early 1990s with the signing of the DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES, the umbrella PLO and its largest component group, FATAH, were erased from the US State Department's list of terrorist organizations. During most of the two terms of President BILL CLINTON (1993–2001), Arafat, previously the quintessential terrorist in popular discourse in the United States, gained considerable respectability. Later, particularly after the failure of the Clinton-sponsored CAMP DAVID SUMMIT and more so following the 11 September 2001 attacks on the United States by al-Qaida, Arafat was ostracized by the administration of President GEORGE W. BUSH and Israeli prime minister ARIEL SHARON, who held Arafat culpable for the launching of the al-Aqsa Intifada in September 2000 and for supporting anti-Israeli terrorism. The example of Arafat, however flawed he was as a leader, is to illustrate that terrorists may be transformed, sometimes simply for political convenience or because the political context has changed substantially. In short, the question of who is and who is not a terrorist is sometimes, though not always, a matter of what his or her opponent seeks to achieve.

Even after the signing of the Oslo agreement in 1993, Israel continued to be the occupying authority in the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip. Since 1967, attacks launched against the OCCUPATION authorities could be, and were, punished by the Israelis. To the extent that the targets for attack were functionaries of the Occupation, the Palestinians enjoyed significant international support. But after 1993, when the peace process began to gain momentum, international support for "resistance" violence declined precipitously. Of course, since the assassination of Prime Minister YITZHAK RABIN in 1995, the peace process has almost collapsed. Significant elements on both sides have declared the Oslo Accords irrelevant, although both the Israeli government and the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA) accepted the QUARTET'S April 2003 ROAD MAP. The Road Map obliges both sides to take specific confidence-building steps, but, like the Oslo Accords that it is supposed to implement, the Road Map is observed in the breach. The Road Map commits the PNA to reiterate Israel's right to resist, to end violence and terrorism, and to pursue and arrest perpetrators who persist in carrying out violence. Israel is required to affirm its commitment to a two-state solution; to stop punitive attacks, including the destruction of homes and the destruction of Palestinian institutions; and to cease all SETTLEMENT activity. Both sides have paid little more than lip service to the Road Map, with Israel declaring that violence carried out by Palestinians violates the PNA's obligation to cease such attacks and with Israel continuing to confiscate land, expand settlements, and undermine and destroy Palestinian institutions. In 2002 the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) reoccupied the areas that it evacuated in the 1990s. The result is that the West Bank, notwithstanding the obligations of the Oslo Accords, is occupied territory. The legitimacy of armed resistance (as opposed to blatant acts of terrorism) under these conditions is at least debatable.

Terrorism as Defined by State

Academics, diplomats, and international lawyers have been struggling with the definition of terrorism for years. Acts that one state denounces as terrorism may be—and often are—justified by another state. Although scholars and practitioners have produced more than 100 definitions, there is no universally accepted definition of terrorism. Some authorities stress the illegality of terrorism, although legality is sometimes problematic. The laws of a state, taken as a whole, may be morally commendable or morally reprehensible. An example of the latter would be the apartheid-era race laws in South Africa. To argue that an act is unlawful (a factual statement) is not the same as arguing that it is illegitimate (a normative conclusion). It is important to distinguish between those political systems in which all citizens, regardless of their race, religion, or ethnicity, may effectively voice their demands and realize their rights, and those in which categories of citizens are disenfranchised. In the first category of states, political violence is both illegal and illegitimate, because the enfranchised citizen need not resort to violence to be heard and to enjoy the protection of the state. In contrast, in the second category, in which the state is deaf to its citizens and residents, violence may be justifiable and legitimate even though it is deemed illegal by the state. The question of what is and is not terrorism therefore turns, in part, on arguments about the legitimacy of violence.

As such, some anti-Occupation violence by Palestinians may be legitimate. The right of a people to resist foreign occupation is widely, if erratically, upheld. Few observers outside the Soviet Union described the Afghan resistance fighters as terrorists in the 1980s after the Soviet army invaded Afghanistan. Although the mujahedeen were often decried as terrorists in Moscow, so long as the Afghan mujahedeen directed their efforts against the Soviet occupation in Afghanistan, they were widely supported both in the Muslim world and in the West, especially by the United States. By the same token, though agreement is less general, especially in the United States, the resistance by the Lebanese to the Israeli occupation of a portion of southern Lebanon until 2000, despite Israeli spokespersons' penchant for describing those who attack its soldiers and client-militiamen as "terrorists," was undoubtedly permitted under the laws of warfare as widely understood around the world. Moreover, this point was tacitly conceded by Israeli officials, who never seriously challenged the right of Lebanese to attack occupying Israeli forces or Lebanese proxy forces directed by Israel. However, if Afghans or the Lebanese resistance forces broaden their campaigns to encompass protected categories of noncombatants, their actions lose their privileged status. It is possible to readily distinguish between attacks on soldiers occupying foreign lands and attacks on persons in universally accepted protected categories, such as children or, more broadly, noncombatants.

The disparate perspectives on terrorism help to illustrate that an international convention against terrorism would be unattainable in practice, and the UNITED NATIONS has never been able to craft a universally accepted definition. The contrasting views are illustrated by the different approaches of the Organization of Islamic Conference (OIC), which brings together Muslim states, and the United States. In the OIC's annual meeting held in TURKEY in 2004, the OIC urged the UN Security Council to ensure international peace and security by calling upon Israel to end its "state terrorism" and aggression. This was defined in the conference resolution as "the killing of civilians, assassinations, detentions, collective punishment, incessant incursions, occupation of cities, villages and Palestinian refugee camps, demolition of Palestinian homes, and destruction of the institutions and INFRASTRUCTURE of the PNA and the national economy." In particular, the OIC made reference to the protocols of the 1949 Geneva Convention and Israel's responsibilities under the convention, including observing the prohibition on colonizing occupied Palestinian territory.

In contrast, in 2004 the United States officially codified as public law (Title 22 of the US Code, Section 2656f[d]) the treatment of terrorism. Although the law emphasizes the targeting of innocent people as a defining aspect of terrorism, in practice it tends to be applied only against acts of violence perpetrated by enemies of the United States or enemies of the United States' friends and allies. Most important, the definition does not address the possibility that a state may engage in terrorism.

"The term 'terrorism' means premeditated, politically motivated violence perpetrated against noncombatant targets by sub-national groups or clandestine agents, usually intended to influence an audience."

"The term 'international terrorism' means terrorism involving the territory or the citizens of more than one country."

"The term 'terrorist group' means any group that practices, or has significant subgroups that practice, international terrorism."

The current legal description used by the United States is in contrast to a definition of terrorism developed by the US Department of State in 1983, which clearly addressed the role of states as sponsors or perpetrators of terrorism: "Terrorism is the threat or use of violence for political purposes by individuals or groups, whether acting for, or in opposition to, established governmental authority when such actions are intended to influence a target group wider than the immediate victim or victims" (emphasis added). Given the more restricted definition of terrorism now in use and the emphasis on its international dimension, terrorism as seen by the United States does not include any actions by the state of Israel, although it may include both Jewish and Palestinian groups.

Admittedly, the international system is biased in favor of the state (the alternative, at present, would be chaos), and states can often get away with heinous activities that would earn nonstate actors swift reprisal. Although often little can be directly done about the behavior of a state—particularly when it is acting within its own borders—this by no means precludes a moral indictment, which often has more weight than may be thought. Even the most autocratic and ruthless governments are often preoccupied with their image. Of course, condemnation is a sword that can swing both ways. Certain scholars, including the late Raymond Aron, describe the Anglo-American carpet-bombing of Germany in World War II as terrorism precisely because it was, by design, indiscriminate.

The Impact of 11 September 2001

Following the attacks by al-Qaeda on 11 September 2001, President Bush signed Executive Order 13224 specifying a series of steps that were to be taken to combat al-Qaeda, its affiliates, and their resources. The groups were described as terrorists of “global reach.” Neither the Islamic group HAMAS nor the Lebanese Islamist group Hizbullah was included in that executive order, although both were on the US State Department’s terrorist list. These omissions prompted a lively debate in which pro-Israeli lobbying groups, particularly the AMERICAN-ISRAEL PUBLIC AFFAIRS COMMITTEE, the influential Washington-based group that describes itself as “America’s pro-Israel lobby,” as well as a number of members of Congress, argued strenuously for including Hizbullah and Hamas in the executive order. Many US officials resisted the move, emphasizing that the focus should be on al-Qaeda, the group responsible for the attack, and noting that the United States would need the support of many Arab states that recognize Hamas and Hizbullah as bona fide resistance groups. Although leading figures in the Bush administration, notably Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld, argued that the additional designation was unnecessary and redundant, the administration amended the executive order to include Hamas and other groups as enemies in the “war against terrorism.” Meanwhile, in Israel in the days following 11 September, Prime Minister Ariel Sharon promptly moved to associate Israel with the US war on terrorism so as to gain further leverage and support for Tel Aviv’s policies against its enemies.

The United States listed the following twelve Middle East–related groups as “terrorist groups of global reach,” including seven Palestinian (P) groups and one Israeli (I) group: Abu Nidal organization (P), AL-AQSA MARTYRS’ BRIGADES (P), Hamas (Islamic Resistance Movement) (P), Harakat ul-Mujahidin, Hizbullah (Party of God), Islamic Jihad Group (P), KAHANE CHAI (KACH) (I), PALESTINE LIBERATION FRONT (P), Palestinian Islamic Jihad (P), the POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE (P), PFLP–GENERAL COMMAND (P), and al-Qaeda. Thus, by US law, anyone supporting, for instance, Hamas is supporting a terrorist group. By definition, any act of violence that it commits or seeks to commit is an act of terrorism. This designation may be convenient for law enforcement officials, spies, or soldiers, but it does not help to explain why Hamas has been able to sustain an impressive social and political following in the Occupied Territories.

Defining Terrorism in Moral Terms

As defined, the tactic of terrorism may be employed in a variety of contexts, including widely sanctioned struggles as well as regional conflicts. Thus, it makes more sense to concentrate on the moral legitimacy of the means rather than on the technical legality of the ends. It is also sensible to attempt to focus on categories of objectionable acts that may be clearly distinguished from general political violence. Legal character notwithstanding, there is a significant difference between an attack on a police station and an attack on a crowded shopping street.

From an analytical perspective, terrorism is construed as opprobrious because it is characterized by intentional political violence against protected categories of persons—namely, civilians—and civilian sites, such as schools, hospitals, restaurants, buses, trains, and planes. This perspective is close to that of political philosopher Michael Walzer, who argues that terrorism’s method is “the random murder of innocent people.” Randomness is the crucial feature of terrorist activity. Patent examples include the anonymous car bomb exploded on a crowded shopping street in Beirut, random shooting in the Rome and Vienna airport departure lounges, the destruction of Pan Am 103, and the wholesale slaughter of patients in a Mozambican hospital. Even warfare has a framework of moral rules. Although these rules fail to make warfare anything less than horrific, without them war would be even more horrendous. Noncombatant immunity is a basic principle of the laws of warfare. As a minimum standard, what is impermissible in war—specifically, and especially, the intentional targeting of civilians—should be just as impermissible outside war zones. The clear delineation of an ethical boundary separating clearly objectionable forms of violence from other acts of violence is not only morally compelling but of practical utility as well. In a complex, increasingly intertwined world, the minimal expectation must be that people can travel without fear of being blown up or raked by machine-gun fire.

The perpetrators of opprobrious violence, whether of terrorism or other types of violence that victimize protected categories of persons, go to lengths to justify their actions, often to the extent of blaming the victims. This is exemplified by the positions offered by both Israeli and Palestinian apologists. For instance, Efraim Inbar, the head of the Begin-Sadat Center for Strategic Studies at Ben-Gurion University, argues that "Palestinian losses are not Israel's moral responsibility. . . . War is a competition in inflicting pain, and the Palestinians must bear pain in even greater dosages than they have been accustomed to. . . . Palestinian casualties of all kinds are therefore the necessary condition for putting an end to Palestinian terrorism." More commonly, the protected status of non-combatants is recognized but described as "regrettable" collateral damage. The conventions of warfare, and especially "just war" theory, take account of the "doctrine of double effect," which refers to the fact that, in the course of war, although protected persons may not be intentionally targeted, they may permissibly be unintentionally killed or injured as a side effect of targeting the enemy. It is expected that combatants use weapons and tactics that do not cause excessive civilian casualties, but killing innocent people is not illegal, per se, in war, and it is not terrorism.

Over the course of the al-Aqsa Intifada, Israel has carried out what it calls "targeted killings"—political assassinations justified only by the assertion that the intended victim is either culpable for "terrorism" or is about to carry out "terrorism." Some of the victims are patently political officials who have little to do with security matters, and some have been notably associated with pragmatic wings of groups such as Hamas. Many of these assassinations have claimed the lives of innocent bystanders. When the leader of Hamas, SHEIKH AHMAD YASIN, was killed by Israel in March 2004, as many as six bystanders were also killed, and a dozen were wounded. Yasin's successor, ABD AL-AZIZ RANTISI, was also assassinated in April 2004, less than a month after Yasin was killed. Of the 350 Palestinians killed in Israeli assassination operations from the beginning of the al-Aqsa Intifada until the end of 2008, no more than 220 were the intended target.

Palestinian SUICIDE BOMBINGS have taken a large toll in Israeli civilian lives. Indeed, in contrast to the use of suicide attacks by Hizbullah in southern Lebanon during the 1980s, which were targeted precisely against Occupation forces, the Palestinian attacks have often been expressly aimed at causing mutilating injuries and deaths among Israeli civilians. These are blatant acts of terrorism. The years from 1993 to 2003 saw as many as 250 suicide attacks, of which 135 were carried out by Hamas, 70 by Islamic Jihad, 39 by Fatah, and the remainder by the PFLP and smaller Palestinian groups. This underlines that the tactic has arguably been motivated as much by Palestinian nationalist sentiment as by religion.

Some Palestinian officials have argued that the suicide bomber is merely a "low-tech" response to an enemy—Israel—that has a sophisticated arsenal. Thus, Dr. Ramadan Shalah argues: "Our enemy possesses the most sophisticated weapons in the world and its army is trained to a very high standard . . . . We have nothing with which to repel killing and thuggery against us except the weapon of martyrdom. It is easy and costs us only our lives . . . human bombs cannot be defeated, not even by nuclear bombs." However, the issue is not the technique, but the intended target: civilians. Were the suicide bombers to strike at Israeli Occupation forces, it would be hard to fault their method.

Some Muslim clerics have offered a tepid condemnation of these attacks on civilians and suggested that the attacks would be legitimate if they focused on the IDF in the West Bank and Gaza. Nonetheless, this position has not been sustained, and popular clerics, notably Yusuf al-Qaradawi, an Egyptian based in Qatar who is regularly featured on the al-Jazeera network, provide a novel defense. Although he does not deny the protected status of civilians in principle, he argues that Israel is an armed camp, and that all Israelis either are in the military, were in the military, or, potentially, will be in the military (including the young). The old, who are no longer fit to serve, would presumably qualify as victims by virtue of having served, or merely by having supported those who do. Implicitly, any victim who does not fit al-Qaradawi's category of a militarized Israel would count as collateral damage. Al-Qaradawi's argument is a slippery slope, and although he did explicitly condemn the 11 September 2001 attacks on New York for intentionally targeting civilians, it is only a few steps down the slope to al-Qaeda's formulation that all Americans are culpable for their government's actions because they live in a democracy.

It is important to point out that the use of suicide attacks has been no more mindless than Israel's assassination policy. In fact, it is demonstrable that the suicide bombings have often come in retaliation for Israeli attacks, especially when they inflicted large numbers of casualties on Palestinian civilians. For example, one wave of Palestinian suicide attacks followed the mass murder of twenty-nine Muslim worshippers in HEBRON in February 1994 at the hands of an Israeli settler named BARUCH GOLDSTEIN. Similarly, Palestinians returned to sending suicide bombers on Israeli buses in 1996 after Prime Minister SHIMON PERES ordered the killing of YAHYA AYYASH, a mastermind of Palestinian attacks.

Notwithstanding the moral condemnation that rightly follows attacks on innocent people, there is no denying that campaigns and sometimes single incidents have often had momentous political effect, sometimes quite counterproductive and sometimes not. The massacre at Deir Yassin in 1948 by Jewish terrorists lent momentum to the fear that propelled many Palestinians to flee their homes as refugees. The violence mounted by Hamas and Islamic Jihad prompted Rabin to make peace with the PLO in 1993 so as to forestall the rising power of Islamist groups. Suicide attacks in 1996 helped determine the course of the Israeli elections and prompted Israeli voters to cast their vote for BENJAMIN NETANYAHU rather than Shimon Peres, electing an avowed enemy of the peace process and a man who did as much as any Israeli to scuttle it. And no reader needs to be reminded of the extraordinary impact that attacks on a morning in September 2001 had on the course of world history in the early twenty-first century. These examples suggest that, notwithstanding the rightfully strong condemnations that terrorism and parallel acts provoke, terrorism is likely to continue as a weapon in the arsenal of at least some of the belligerents in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, at least until an equitable solution is reached.

See also AL-AQSA INTIFADA; HOUSE DEMOLITIONS; INFILTRATION AND RETALIATION; LEBANON WAR, 1982; SUICIDE BOMBINGS; TARGETED ASSASSINATIONS

Bibliography

- Aron, Raymond. Peace and War: A Theory of International Relations. New York: Anchor Books, 1973.
- Begin, Menahem. The Revolt: Memoirs of the Leader of the Irgun. New York: Dell, 1978.
- Central Intelligence Agency. "United States Official Definition of Terrorism." <https://www.cia.gov/terrorism/faqs.html>.
- Cook, David. "The Implications of 'Martyrdom Operations' for Contemporary Islam." The Journal of Religious Ethics. 32:1 (2004).
- Gross, Michael L. "Killing Civilians Intentionally: Double Effect, Reprisal, and Necessity in the Middle East." Political Science Quarterly 120:4 (2005–2006).
- Hoffman, Stanley. "The Political Ethics of International Relations." Morgenthau Annual Lecture on Ethics and Foreign Policy. New York: Carnegie Council on Ethics and International Affairs, 1988.
- Inbar, Ephraim. "Stop Saying Sorry." Jerusalem Post. 30 May 2004.
- Norton, Augustus R. "Drawing the Line on Opprobrious Violence." Ethics and International Affairs. 4 (1990).
- . Hezbollah: A Short History. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2007.
- Organisation of the Islamic Conference. Resolution to the UN Security Council. www.oic-oci.org/english/conf/fm/31/31%20icfm-fc-en.htm.
- Pape, Robert A. Dying to Win: The Strategic Logic of Suicide Terrorism. New York: Random House, 2005.
- Shlaim, Avi. The Iron Wall: Israel and the Arab World. New York: W. W. Norton, 2000.
- Sprinzak, Ehud. "Rational Fanatics." Foreign Policy. 120 (2000).
- US State Department. Patterns of International Terrorism. Washington, DC: Government Printing Office, 1983.
- Walzer, Michael. Just and Unjust Wars: A Moral Argument with Historical Illustrations. New York: Basic Books, 1977.
- Wilkinson, Paul. Terrorism and the Liberal State. New York: John Wiley and Sons, 1977.

—Augustus Richard Norton

Terrorists

See TERRORISM

Textbooks

See EDUCATION AND THE ROLE OF TEXTBOOKS

Third Temple Movement

Numerous groups are actively involved in a variety of ways in constructing the Third Temple on the TEMPLE MOUNT/AL-HARAM ASH-SHARIF in JERUSALEM. It is a serious movement with considerable resources, including significant funding from many US fundamentalist Christian churches. This temple is to be built over the destroyed Muslim sacred sites—AL-AQSA MOSQUE, the DOME OF THE ROCK, and the various other buildings presently on the Haram, the third holiest location in Islam after Mecca and Medina. This “Third” Temple is to replace the ancient First and Second Jewish Temples of Jerusalem, which once stood on the site.

Jews who want to reconstruct the Third Temple and extend Israel’s sovereignty to the whole “Land of Israel” base their position on a literal reading and a unique interpretation of what they believe is God’s word in the Covenant of Peoplehood between God and Abraham and his descendants. An essential feature of the covenant is that the children of Abraham and Sarah will be God’s chosen people—chosen to be in a covenant with God, to serve God, and to obey his commandments. Crucial to the Jewish notion of chosenness is that it creates obligations exclusive to Jews that, in order to fulfill, required a plot of land. The land was given to the children of Abraham and Sarah not as a reward, but because it is necessary and essential in fulfilling the covenantal task. The land is the means for the sanctification of everyday life, which is the purpose of the covenant. The Covenant of Peoplehood blossomed into the Covenant of Torah and mitzvot (commandment) made with the Jews as a people in the revelation at Mount Sinai. Taken together, the Covenant of Peoplehood, the Covenant of Torah, and mitzvot mean that Judaism is an indivisible partnership involving God, Torah, People, and Land. The Temple is sacred, for in its Holy of Holies was the Ark of the Covenant that held the two tablets of the law given to Moses by God. This innermost sanctuary of the Temple was considered the dwelling place of the Divine Presence (Shekhina) and could be entered only by the high priest and only on the Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur). Significantly, Jewish fundamentalists believe that the Temple must be rebuilt for the Hebrew Messiah to come and redeem the Jews from exile.

Writing in 1999, Yizhar Be’er of the Center for the Protection of Democracy in Israel demonstrated that there had been an enormous expansion and consolidation of Jewish groups targeting the Temple Mount. Until the early 1990s, the number of individuals involved in Third Temple activities, who considered destruction of the mosques on the Temple Mount a necessary goal, did not exceed a few dozen activists in a number of minimally influential movements. But in 1999 Be’er argued, “Threats to the Temple Mount have reached a critical stage. . . . Tens of thousands of people are actively engaged in establishing the Third Temple.” Ten years later, in 2009, that number has critically multiplied.

Among the various groups involved in the Third Temple Movement, there is what Ha’aretz correspondent Nadav Shragai, writing in January 2005, terms a “Temple Culture.” This culture is manifest in countless ways, including Temple songs, Temple literature, up-to-date models of the Third Temple and its environs, a huge stone block ritually paraded around Jerusalem as the “cornerstone” of the Third Temple, Temple games for children, formal study of Jewish laws about the Temple, the reproduction of historical Temple rituals and garments, sacrifices and offerings, and paintings and pictures of the proposed Temple.

There are “Temple Feasts” held annually, with a festive stage, a model ceremony in which the mincha (afternoon prayer service) sacrifice is prepared—a blend of loaves and crackers customarily sacrificed in the Temple in front of the gathered diners—preceded by a symposium of the luminaries of the movement and political leaders. At the March 2005 Temple Feast, more than 1,000 people, among them rabbis, professors, Knesset members, and Christians, all pursuing the goal of erecting the Third Temple, took part in the festive dinner. The participants were in unanimous agreement that God, acting through human agents, will find a way to rebuild the Temple. Subsequent Temple feasts have had increasingly greater attendance.

Many of the groups involved in Third Temple activities have their own special niche, but they all share the general ideology of Shocharey HaMikdash, the coordinating umbrella organization for the movement, based on the realization of their objective through stages, starting with studying and reinstating the sacred practices and rituals, and then constructing the Temple. There are broad categories of groups that engage in Third Temple work, including (1) Halachic (Jewish law) bodies such as the Temple Mount Rabbinical Court; (2) amutot (nonprofit organizations) located in Jerusalem, such as ATERET COHANIM, which focus on purchase of property near the walls of the Temple Mount; (3) extremist yeshivas such as

Shuvu Banim; (4) the YESHA COUNCIL (acronym for Judea, Samaria, and Gaza); (5) protest movements such as Zo Artzeonu (“This [is] our Land/Country”) and Matteh Maamatz (“United Headquarters in the Zionist Camp”); (6) political groups such as Medinat Yehuda (the State of Judea or Torah State) and the Manhigut Yehudit (the Jewish leadership) faction within the LIKUD PARTY; and (7) the “Repentant Jews.”

Encouragement by the Israeli state since about 2000 has in considerable measure contributed to the expansion in public consciousness regarding the Third Temple. The state also regularly finances the activity of the institutions acting to reinstitute the Temple rituals and the conventions of Shocharey HaMikdash. The Jerusalem Municipality also assists the organizations in their activities, and Jerusalem’s previous mayor (and former Israeli prime minister), EHUD OLMERT, placed himself at the head of the Temple Mount campaign. According to Israeli journalist Joseph Algazy, in 1997 Prime Minister BENJAMIN NETANYAHU gave a silver plaque with all the Muslim shrines replaced by a model of the Great Temple to Archbishop Maximus Salum of HAIFA on the occasion of the Christian New Year. Additionally, behind those taking the lead on the erection of the Temple are figures close to the Likud government—for example the right-wing politician Moshe Feiglin, who is head of the Temple Mount Faithful Movement.

The Israeli government reopened the Temple Mount to Jews in October 2004, and Ha’aretz reported that in the first eighteen months after its opening some 85,000 Jews visited the Mount. Tzachi Hanegbi (former Likud minister for internal security), who pressured the government to permit such visits, wrote that these visits, which necessitate the presence of a permanent police force on the Mount, “are getting the Palestinians accustomed to accepting the deep connection of the Jewish people to the place where the Temple stood. This, of course, will bolster our claim to sovereignty over the Mount.”

Many of the organizations within these broad categories present themselves as solely involved in history, culture, and education, but all are actively endeavoring to establish the Third Temple. Thousands of activists in dozens of organizations, some small and of minimal influence, others large and highly authoritative, dedicate their time and energy to “redemption of the Temple.” The activity of some of the groups can be perceived as legitimate because they ostensibly do not imperil anyone. In the broader context, however, the activity of all the groups together, which is often coordinated, has a cumulative effect. The ultimate objective of all is the same—establishment of the Temple in its original location, on the Temple Mount in the place of the Islamic mosques, and the establishment of a Halachic Jewish state in Israel.

In Be’er’s view, the most immediate danger of an attack on the Temple Mount is present primarily among fringe elements—isolated individuals or groups of Repentant Jews (such as Shuvu Banim) who will be willing to sacrifice themselves in the manner of YIGAL AMIR (who in 1995 assassinated Prime Minister YITZHAK RABIN) and BARUCH GOLDSTEIN (who in 1994 murdered twenty-nine Muslims at prayer in AL-IBRAHIMI MOSQUE/Cave of the Patriarchs). Be’er focuses on extremist Jewish groups not only because he sees a great potential for danger in their activities, but because many of the activists have a record of violent nationalistic criminal offenses. Such activists include, though not exclusively, former members and offshoots of the now-banned KACH Party, followers of late rabbi MEIR KAHANE, and former members of the defunct Jewish underground (TERROR AGAINST TERROR), operating in a context that includes calls by rabbis that are understood as permission to attack the mosques on the Temple Mount; the explicit urgings of Shocharey HaMikdash to “destroy the mosques”; and the desire to avenge the 2000 death of Rabbi BINYAMIN KAHANE (son of Meir Kahane), who led KAHANE CHAI.

Be’er argues that there are two main reasons for the growth of the Temple Mount movement among Jews, one external and one internal. The external reason is the fear of a peace agreement with the Palestinians that will institutionalize the existing situation in which the Palestinians hold the Temple Mount/al-Haram ash-Sharif. The internal reason is the increasing involvement of Jews with the concept of the Temple. What was once barely a part of the Jewish consciousness has now penetrated into all religious sectors. At the same time, the WESTERN WALL, historically the focus of Jewish emotional and theological yearnings, has diminished significantly in importance while the focus has been redirected toward the idea of the Third Temple. For example, while the subject of establishing the Temple was once attributed only to the will of the Almighty, the current attitude is that human action must be taken to prepare for the founding of the Temple.

Financial support for reconstruction of the Third Temple comes from various sources, but three are most important: (1) as noted, the Israeli government provides significant funding; (2) wealthy Jews from the DIASPORA, such as the American physician and bingo tycoon IRVING MOSKOWITZ and fugitive financier Jack Abramoff, who after his conviction in US courts fled to Israel, lives in the ultra-Orthodox WEST BANK settlement Beitar Illit, and changed his name to Shmuel Ben Zvi; and (3) American Christian Zionist groups are also a treasure trove for Third Temple organizations. Ralph Reed, who launched Stand for Israel; Jerry Falwell; and most importantly, Pat Robertson have provided tens of millions of dollars to the movement.

The following are among the most important Israeli individuals in the Third Temple Movement: Rabbi Yisrael Ariel, Rabbi Michael Ben Horin, Rabbi Elhanan Ben Nun, Chief Rabbi She'ar-Yashuv Cohen, Rabbi Yosef (Yossi) Dayan, Rabbi Yehuda Edri, Professor Aryeh Eldad, Rabbi Yosef Elbaum, Rabbi BENYAMIN ELON, Avigdor Eskin, Yehuda Etzion, Rabbi Moshe Feiglin, Rabbi Nachman Kahane, Rabbi Yehuda Kreuzer, Yoav Lerner, Rabbi Dov Levanoni, Rabbi Dov Lior, Baruch Marzel, Rabbi Moshe Chanina Neiman, Yaakov Novick, Member of the Knesset Moshe Peled, Member of the Knesset Hanan Porat, Rabbi Shlomo Riskin, Shmuel Sackett, Rabbi Yoel Schwartz, GERSHON SALOMON, Rabbi Dov Stein, Adin Steinsaltz, Professor Hillel Weiss, and Rabbi OVADIA YOSEF.

These thirty men are dedicated to the construction of the Third Temple and the institution of Third Temple culture, including reinstating the priesthood (Kohanim), and reestablishing the practices, rituals, sacrifices, clothing, and so forth that were employed during the time of the Second Temple. Some are scholars, but many are active in the various organizations in the Third Temple Movement. Among them nineteen are rabbis, three are academics, four are or have been Knesset members, fourteen are settlers, thirteen were members of Kach or one of its offshoot organizations, seven have been arrested for antistate activities, all oppose the OSLO ACCORDS, most support the TRANSFER of Palestinians from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES, most opposed ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA, and all support a Halachic state in Israel rather than a secular democracy.

According to Be'er's investigation in 1999, at least ten organizations were actively involved at the forefront of the practical promotion of establishing a Third Temple; however, by 2008 that number had risen to more than thirty groups. Each of the following entities is involved in its own unique manner, but all share the hope—indeed, expectation—of a Third Temple.

1. Shocharey HaMikdash (Temple Lovers Group). This is the umbrella group that unites most of the Third Temple organizations and it is headed by Hillel Weiss. It holds an annual feast to bring together all the leaders in the movement. According to Shocharey HaMikdash, the establishment of the Third Temple requires reinstating the Sanhedrin.
2. Sanhedrin (Council of Elders). The Sanhedrin was the highest judicial and ecclesiastical council of the ancient Jewish nation, Judaism's highest-ranking legal-religious tribunal. It was composed of from seventy to seventy-two rabbis and convened adjacent to the Temple before its destruction in 70 CE, and outside Jerusalem until about 400 CE. Individuals and groups involved with the contemporary Third Temple Movement have been keen to reestablish the Sanhedrin. A group appointed by the Sanhedrin will establish a forum of architects and engineers to begin plans for rebuilding the Temple.

In 2006, Rabbi Adin Steinsaltz was elected as temporary president of a group aspiring to become the renewed Sanhedrin. In addition to the election of Steinsaltz, the rabbis present chose a seven-man committee, headed by him, to publicly campaign for the acceptance of the idea of a Sanhedrin. In addition to Steinsaltz they chose Rabbi Nachman Kahane, Rabbi Dov Levanoni, Yisrael Ariel, Rabbi Yoel Schwartz, Rabbi Dov Stein, and Rabbi Yehuda Edri.

In 2007, according to the Israeli newspaper Ha'aretz, the Sanhedrin Rabbinical Court decided to purchase a herd of sheep for ritual sacrifice at the site of the Temple on the eve of Passover, "conditions on the Temple Mount permitting." It further called on the Jewish people to contribute to the acquisition of materials for the purpose of rebuilding the Temple—including the gathering and preparation of prefabricated, disassembled construction modules to be stored and ready for rapid assembly, “in the manner of King David.”

3. Malchut Israel (Kingship for Israel or Kingdom of Israel). Malchut Israel advocates the restoration of the monarchy in Israel in the person of the authentic heir to King David’s throne. A fair number of people have had their lineage traced back 3,000 years to the line of King David, but at this writing it appears that only three men fall directly in all-male unbroken lineage and would qualify as Kohanim (high priests): Yosef (Yossi) Dayan, Rabbi Nachman Kahane, and Rabbi Shlomo Riskin.

Two active groups provide the gateway to Malchut Israel, the Forum of the Three Commandments and Lishkat HaGazit (School of Government). The Forum is directed by Rabbi Yosef Dayan, and its most important activity is to gather those families who have Davidic roots and to encourage genealogical research. The Forum stands behind the initiative to construct a Psalms World Center in Jerusalem. The Lishkat HaGazit promotes itself as an “independent educational institution, established to cast the light of the Torah upon the question of Jewish government. It will prepare the future bearers of public office to serve the nation when the kingship is reestablished, the sooner the better.” It lists its academic staff as Yoel Lerner, Yosef Dayan, Baruch Ben Yosef, Hillel Weiss, Hayim Odem, and Shulamit Bar-Yitzhak.

4. Bet Din (“House of Judgment”; The Temple Mount Rabbinical Court). This body includes rabbis who are Temple Lovers, such as Dov Lior, Nahman Kahane, and Israel Ariel. It is an institution that seeks to alter the traditional Halachic prohibition on Jews ascending the Temple Mount. In August 2000, the Temple Mount Rabbinical Court issued a Halachic ruling allowing Jews to ascend the Temple Mount in places that are not part of the Holy of Holies enclosure. This provided the way for the Israeli government to officially open the Temple Mount to Jews in 2004. Other controversial Halachic rulings include those concerning the laws regarding a moser (someone who informs against or hands over another Jew) and a rodef (someone who pursues a person with the intent of killing him), which do not apply in the present-day Israeli government, although according to religious law these crimes are punishable by death. For example, the head of the Sanhedrin, Bet Din (rabbinical court) sent a letter to the head of the Israel Defense Forces Central Command, in which he accused an officer of being a moser for signing eviction notices for twenty Jewish outpost residents. According to Amiram Barakat, writing in Ha’aretz on 20 April 2006, the rabbis from the rabbinical court are planning legislation that would bypass Israel’s High Court rulings, subjecting all Israelis to the dictates of religious law.

5. Machon HaMikdash (Temple Institute). The Temple Institute was founded in 1983 by Moshe Neiman, Michael Ben Horin, and Rabbi Yisrael Ariel. Rabbi Ariel is the primary mover and head of the Temple Institute. He is also head of the Bet Din (Sanhedrin rabbinical court). Rabbi Yehuda Glick is director-general of the Institute. This is perhaps the largest—in terms of the breadth of its activities—of all the groups.

Rabbi Ariel believes that the Temple will be built not by miracles but through active human initiatives. Toward this end, Machon HaMikdash focuses on preparing the vessels for reinstitution of the 200 commandments that can only be performed when a Temple exists. By mid-2007 over a million people had visited the Temple Institute. Rabbi Ariel commented: “We have to prepare and behave as though the Temple will be built tomorrow.” Activities of the Temple Institute include

- Publication of a monthly newsletter (Welcome to the Temple Institute) describing the organization’s programs and achievements; books, including mahzorim (holiday prayer books), Temple siddurim (daily prayer books), and books about the Temple, rich in illustrations, diagrams, and drawings that bring the Temple ritual to life; a scholarly rendition of Tractate Yoma (regulations concerning the two goats on the Day of Atonement, how they were slaughtered, sent away, etc.); and a scholarly treatise on the use of the ashes of the Red Heifer
- Preparation of a Golden Menorah (candelabra) stored alongside the Yehudah Halevi staircase leading from the Jewish Quarter to the Western Wall Plaza for safekeeping until the Temple is complete

- Completion of a ten-year project producing precise reconstructions of the High Priest's garments: breastplate, vest, gold headband, and blue coat with bells and pomegranates
  - Reconstruction of some seventy Temple ritual objects, including a gold candelabrum, a gold altar, a showbread table, shovels, and the mizrak for collecting and pouring blood and incense, with plans to re-create another 150 such items
  - Establishment of a museum of Temple vessels, spices, priestly vestments, and other items
  - Establishment of a workshop on producing the colors of the bigdei kehuna (priestly garments)
  - Organization of a harvest of tolat shani (crimson worms) needed for creating the avnet, a sixteen-meter-long belt for the bigdei kehuna (priestly garments) now in production
  - Completion of the weaving of the linen mitznefet (the headgear worn by the Kohanim hedyotim, the "common" priests) and 120 sets of linen garments for lay priests
  - Completion of the tzitz (the golden crown worn by Kohanim Gado, the Jewish high priest) of pure gold; a reproduction of the Kinnor David (King David's Harp); and a new copper laver (a basin of water for the Kohanim to wash in at the start of the day)
6. House of Harrari. Micah and Shoshanna Harrari are the founders of this group, which is named after them. It builds exact reproductions of harps used in biblical times for use in the Third Temple. According to their website, they "have made an attempt to bring back the Biblical harp and its music to Israel after 2000 years." Built in a small workshop in the Jerusalem forest, "each harp is individually designed to combine the patterns of antiquity with the personal visions and ideas of each client, creating true Temple quality heirlooms of prayer and healing for the mind, body and soul." (www.harrariharp.com).
  7. The Red Heifer. In various locations in Israel, Shocharey HaMikdash has been attempting to raise a red heifer—an animal from whose ashes the Kohanim may be purified—and prepare for their sacred acts in the Temple. This purification is a necessary precondition for sacred acts in the Temple, because, according to Halacha, every Jew is impure from contact with or being in the same building as a human corpse (tumat metim). According to Halacha, the red cow must be three years old, perfectly red, and of uniform hue (even a few hairs of a different color invalidate it for sacred use). Its horns must also be red. It may not have a blemish, and a yoke must never have been placed on it. After many failures in Israel to produce a Halachaly pure red heifer, in 2006, Tennessee Pentecostal minister Clyde Lott and Israeli (American-born) Hasidic rabbi Chaim Richman began breeding red heifers to be sent to Israel when the Third Temple is built. These two believe that the coming of the Messiah will happen only when there is a Third Jewish Temple on the Temple Mount. (www.bible-prophecy.com/redheifer.htm; www.redheiferpress.com; www.templemount.org/heifer.html; www.haydid.org/redcow.htm).

8. Mitzpeh Yericho. This is a settlement of Orthodox Jews overlooking the Palestinian city of JERICO. It has a kolel (yeshiva for married men) that specializes in Temple studies. Every day at 6:00 A.M., a group of men, under the instruction of the settlement's rabbi, Yehuda Kreuzer, gather and study the laws about the Temple and the ritual sacrifices of slaughtering lambs, cows, and fowl. A second project of the settlement, headed by Moshe Neiman, is the building of a replica of the Temple on the hills of Mitzpeh Yericho. Neiman is also involved in raising funds and recruiting supporters for Temple organizations.
9. Begeg Ivri (Hebrew Clothing). The main goal of this group is to create and sell biblical clothing designs in preparation for the Third Temple. The group was founded by Reuven Prager and is both a commercial endeavor and a commitment to the Third Temple. Priestly garments have not been worn since the destruction of the Second Temple by Rome in 70 CE and cannot be used until a Third Temple is constructed. The Temple Institute inaugurated this workshop.

When the Temple is rebuilt, Kohanim, in particular, must wear the proper outfit to perform their obligations. Begeg Ivri is making individually tailored sets of clothing that include a turban, a light blue tunic threaded with silver, pants, and a crimson belt at a cost of NIS 2,500 ($675) per set. Years of diligent research were needed to create the garments in conformance with Jewish law. Special flaxen thread was imported from India, and overseas travel was necessary to obtain the correct colors for the clothes, including travel to Istanbul to purchase tola'at shani (crimson worms), because the harvest in Israel was insufficient to meet the need. The secret of the correct shade of blue had been lost since the destruction of the Second Temple, and the identification of chilazon (the snail from which it was extracted) was uncertain until the Ptil Tekhelet (the Association for the Promotion and Distribution of Tekhelet—biblical blue dye) discovered it. Begeg Ivri identified it as the murex trunculus found near the Mediterranean Sea.

The group is additionally working to revive ancient Jewish marriage ceremonies and biblically described prayer clothing. (www.israelvisit.co.il/begeg-ivri/; www.tekhelet.com).

10. El Har Hamor (To Mount Hamor). This is a group whose principal members are from the Yitzhar settlement, located in the West Bank near NABLUS. Over 130 families, some 500 people, live in this Orthodox Jewish community, which has many adherents in Third Temple groups as well as among settler and Third Temple rabbis. The goal of El Har Hamor is twofold: to bring to life the words of the rabbis and rebuild the Temple, and to open the Gates of Heaven to prayer by dancing and singing on the original grounds of the Temple. Every Rosh Chodesh (beginning of Jewish month) at approximately 6:45 P.M., a march around the gates of the Temple Mount is held in conjunction with the organization El Har Hamor.
11. Mishmarot HaKohanim (The Kohanim's Preserves). This organization is composed of members of the Cohen family, who are considered the descendants of Moses's brother Aaron, the Tribe of Levi, whose task is to assist in performing the sacred practices in the Temple. The sacred practices and the expertise required of Mishmarot HaKohanim include skills in building, cleaning, slaughtering, offering the ritual sacrifices, musicianship, and other matters. In the days of the Temple, Kohanim performed the most significant duties within the Temple. Approximately one-third of the commandments in the Torah cannot be accomplished without a temple, including the obligations of the Kohanim. Kohanim priests today must be directly descended from Aaron, recognized by the Temple Institute as such if their paternal grandfathers observed the tradition.
12. Hai v'Kayam (Enduring; David, King of Israel, Lives and Endures). This group was established in the early 1990s by Yehuda Etzion and a group from the Bat Ayin settlement and defines itself as a messianic "Redemption Movement to Renew the Kingdom of Israel." Its members describe themselves as belonging to the "Third Temple culture." In addition to advocating for reestablishment of the Temple, they are activists who have attempted to storm the Temple Mount on numerous occasions.
13. Institute for Talmudic Commentaries. The goal of this group is to undertake and publish research relating to the Third Temple. Rabbi Nahman Kahane heads it. Its major contribution to the movement is the maintenance of a computer database of all rabbis/priests in Israel. Some eighty-eight rabbis have gone to study at the Institute for Talmudic Commentaries.
14. The Movement for the Establishment of the Temple. This is a small and unique group within modern-day ultra-Orthodox circles in Israel. It is headed by Rabbi Yosef Elbaum, and the group's major activist is Yoel Lerner. This organization seeks to achieve a religious revolution within Israeli Orthodoxy through its demand to rebuild the Temple and to abolish the halakhic prohibition against entering the Temple Mount area. (The latter has been partially accomplished.) The movement argues that Orthodox passivity and theological error were responsible for this state, and accordingly offers an alternative historiographic and theological approach. Rabbi Elbaum commented: "The archeologists sold out to the enemy. The rabbinate are traitors." Its founding motivation was the OSLO ACCORDS and the fear that secular Israeli leaders would "give away" some of the land of Israel and the Temple Mount. The Movement for the Establishment of the Temple holds monthly “Temple Mount Gates Marches” in which typically some 1,500 people take part.

15. Lechatchila (At the Beginning). This group is headed by Rabbi Moshe Feiglin and centers its activities on building the Third Temple by human effort in accordance with the commandment “make me a Temple”—which is not dependent on the coming of the Messiah as it is in traditional Jewish theology. The conviction that man must intervene with God’s plan for redemption and rebuild the Temple now makes this group highly influential.
16. Mishnarot hamikdash (Temple Work Shifts). The founders of this organization are Yehuda Etzion and Moshe Feiglin. Their aim, in accordance with the ancient customs of the Second Temple period, is to have a continuous presence of activists in shifts at the entrance to the Temple Mount, bearded and dressed in white. Another purpose involves renewing the customs of the Temple. The group directs the people going up onto the Mount to the places where Jews are permitted to enter, according to the view of the rabbis who belong to Shocharey HaMikdash groups.
17. Ne’emaney Har HaBayit (Temple Mount Faithful). This group was founded by Gershon Salomon, who states on the organization’s website that its objective is building the Third Temple “in our lifetime” and securing its “liberation from Arab (Islamic) occupation.” Salomon describes himself as a “messenger” of God and the mission as a “fulfillment of end-time prophecy.”

The Temple Mount Faithful is a major organization in the movement, although it operates mainly outside the umbrella organization, Shocharey HaMikdash. Salomon raises funds from fundamentalist Christian communities in the United States and Europe, which consider establishment of the Third Temple a necessary theological stage preceding the Second Coming of Jesus. Salomon contends that nearly 10,000 Christians from around the world, including some from Muslim countries—EGYPT, Indonesia, and African states—have recently joined his movement. He further contends that his movement has a registered membership of more than 10,000 people in Israel.

The Temple Mount Faithful condemn Israeli leaders who have contemplated a settlement with the Palestinians, saying that “[o]ften weak leaders in Israel itself, under the pressure of the enemies, are ready to divide the land and to create an evil terrorist and anti-Godly state in the midst of the Land of Israel which God gave to His people alone—a so-called anti-Godly named ‘Palestinian’ state.” (www.templemountfaithful.org).

18. Hara’ayon Hayehudi (The Jewish Idea). This is a yeshiva and a movement that is a branch of the Kach movement, which remains active after having been declared illegal. It has a front organization called Hazit Hara’ayon (the Ideological Front), one of whose activists is Itamar Ben Gvir (a leader of and the spokesman for the Chayil Party, a far-right organization whose goals include the transfer of all non-Jews from Israel). The organization publishes a newsletter called The Youth of Jewish Sovereignty. The group is headed by Rabbi Nahman Kahane, brother of the late Rabbi Meir Kahane; it was also headed by Binyamin Kahane. The members of Hara’ayon Hayehudi play an active role in the Temple organizations. At Feasts of the Temple the activists distributed their newsletter, which calls for its readers “to remove and eliminate. . . . It is enough, we are fed up. The time has come to do what should have been done a long time ago. Government of Israel, remove the Gentiles and the Arabs from the Temple Mount.” (jidea@netvision.net.il; kahane.blogspot.com/2006/01/bsd-yeshivat-haraayon-hayehudi.html).
19. Revava (Masses). This is a small organization led by David Ha’Ivri, an outspoken advocate of theocracy for Israel, a follower of the late Rabbi Meir Kahane and resident of Kfar Tapuach, a West Bank settlement. Ha’Ivri has organized mass attempts to ascend to the Temple Mount, though most have been stopped by the police. Some have garnered significant media attention, particularly on 4 September 2008 when, according to Aaron Klein of WorldNet Daily, Ha’Ivri was able to bring 10,000 people to the Temple Mount. Ha’Ivri is the author of Reclaiming the Temple Mount, a book that describes the history of the Temple Mount and activities of the Jewish organizations involved in reclaiming the site for the Jewish people, and is publisher of the Ideas in Action newsletter. He advocates the - transfer of all Arabs from the land of Israel and the annexation of all parts of the historic land of Israel to the Jewish state. Since the murder of Binyamin Ze'ev Kahane, son of Rabbi Meir Kahane, David Ha'Ivri has assumed responsibility for the continuation of the Kahane publications, printing new editions of many Rabbi Kahane classics that had been out-of-print, as well as making available translations, websites, and printed newsletters. (www.revava.org; www.revava.org/content/section/4/53/).

20. Ascend the Temple Mount in Purity. Since 2004, Jews have been going up to the Temple Mount, among them rabbis, roshei yeshivat (deans of Talmudic academies), and their students. This group teaches the Temple aspirants the required rituals. After emersion in a mikva (ritual bath of purification), and after learning the laws of the permissible areas to walk in and other Halachot about the Temple Mount, Jews go up every day via the Mughrabi Gate to the territory of the Temple Mount.
  21. Virtual Beis Hamikdash. This is a website, designed by Rav Zalman Koren Shlit'a, that presents a computer-generated visual model of the proposed Third Temple and tells the biblical story of the Temple. (www.neveh.org/mikdash/default.html).
  22. Chai Vekayam (Alive and Existing Movement). There is little information available in English about this group. The head of the group, Yehuda Etzion, has said of the Third Temple: "[It is an] aspiration to a different culture and totality" and "[an] aspiration for a life of togetherness, a life of absolute mutuality, between us and the Blessed Be He, while the State of Israel of today is characterized by an attempt to create a reality of division—a reality of the individual who is unshackled from holiness." Together with Yoel Lerner and Avigdor Eskin, Yehuda Etzion is a member of the Temple Mount Treasury, a group that raises funds to rebuild the Temple.
  23. HaTenu'ah LeChinun HaMikdash. This group aims to generate popular commitment from the breadth of the Jewish people, its rabbis, and its leaders to rebuild the Third Temple and return the Kohanim (priestly class) to their service. They conduct national and regional conferences and organize ascents to the Temple Mount of individuals, groups, and the public at large. They also put out a publication called Yibane HaMikdash (The Temple Will Be Rebuilt), which serves as a forum on Jewish law and thought on subjects relating to the Temple Mount and the renewal of the Temple service and rituals. (yirmi@shani.net; www.kadosh.co.il).
  24. Sivuv She'arim (the custom of walking around the Old City). In July 2008 a group of some 3,000 Jews, mostly teenagers, armed with flags and loudspeakers and playing music, marched around all four sides of the Temple Mount, beginning at the Western Wall, entering four of its gates, passing through one gate on the northwest corner, and then continuing through three more gates on the northern edge. The group culminated its march by passing through the Dung Gate, exuberantly singing "Yibaneh Hamikdash" and dancing with linked arms.

The youth marched under the organization Sivuv She'arim, who has gathered people from across the country to march around the Temple Mount, uniting them in a desire to speedily rebuild the Temple. Sivuv She'arim founder Rabbi Tzvi Rogin (head of the Temple Mount Information Center) envisioned the marches as a means for all Jews to forge a connection to the Temple Mount, regardless of religious or political persuasion.
  25. El Har Hamor (To the Mountain of Myth), a yeshiva and Third Temple group that has overseen Sivuv She'arim since 2001, has as its main objective constructing the Third Temple as expeditiously as possible by mobilizing as many people as feasible to participate in the project, and opening the "Gates of Heaven" to prayer by dancing and singing on the grounds of the Temple Mount.
  26. The Temple Women. This group is headed by Michal Aviezer, a housewife and pleader in the rabbinical courts, resident of Kiryat Shmuel, near HAIFA. The organization collects gold jewelry and precious stones in preparation for establishment of the Temple. The jewelry and precious stones are kept in the safe of Machon HaMikdash (an organization in Jerusalem devoted to making replicas of Temple implements so that when the Third Temple is built, they will have something to use there).
  27. The Amutot for Settling Jerusalem (JERUSALEM FORUM). The Jerusalem Forum is an amuta (nonprofit organization with major tax exemptions) that unites and coordinates other amutot, for example, BEIT OROT, ELAD, Ateret Cohanim, and ATERET L'YOSHNA, that redeem houses in the HOLY BASIN and OLD CITY of Jerusalem. The defining ideology of the amutot is redemption of land in Jerusalem, with emphasis given to land near the wall of the Temple Mount. Many activists in the settlement amutot are also activists in Temple Mount organizations. See the text for discussions of each of these settler groups as well as the Palestinian neighborhoods wherein they have established colonies—for example, SILWAN, SHAYKH JARRAH, RAS AL-AMUD, and ABU DIS.

Christian Involvement in the Third Temple Movement

Christian Zionists, especially from the United States, share with the Jewish activists discussed above the goal of building the Third Temple on the Temple Mount, and provide a significant amount of financial support as well as services and information.

Christian Zionists are Premillennial Dispensationalists. Premillennialism teaches that the Second Coming of Christ will only occur after the Jews have returned to Zion, rebuilt the Third Temple, reintroduced the Mosaic sacrificial system, and re-established the priestly class. The Second Coming, then, is dependent on the construction of the Third Temple. This doctrine is largely based upon a literal interpretation of Revelation 20:1–6 in the New Testament of the Bible. Dispensationalism, an aspect of premillennialism, is a theological system that teaches that biblical history is best understood in light of a number of successive administrations of God's dealings with humankind, which it calls "dispensations." It maintains fundamental distinctions between God's plans for national Israel and for the New Testament Church. In other words, although the Jews' return to Israel and the reconstruction of the Third Temple are essential, after the Second Coming of Christ and the ensuing Day of Judgment, God's dealings with adherents to Judaism will have ended, with only Christians being saved.

Christian and Jewish Zionists are generally united in the conviction that the Muslim Dome of the Rock must be destroyed, the Third Jewish Temple built on that site, the priests consecrated, and the sacrifices reinstated in fulfillment of biblical prophecy to ensure the coming of the Messiah. The Christian Zionists who hold to this perspective have perhaps 30 million or more core members, with a subset of 3 million hard-core fundamentalist activists.

Gershon Salomon of the Temple Mount Faithful told a receptive Christian audience: "The mission of the present generation is to liberate the Temple Mount and to remove—I repeat, to remove—the defiling abomination there. The Israeli Government must do it. We must have a war. . . . The Messiah will not come by himself; we should bring Him by fighting." Some observers of Salomon's organization claim that he has a greater following among Christian premillennialists in the United States than he does in Israel among Jews. That is difficult to determine, but it is clear that without financial support from the United States, the work of the Temple Mount Faithful would not be possible.

Prominent, contemporary Christian Zionists who have written or preached in advocacy of the rebuilding of a Third Jewish Temple include the late Jerry Falwell, Pat Robertson, Oral Roberts, Ralph Reed, Ed McAteer, David A. Lewis, Thomas Ice, Randall Price, Mike Evans, Grant Jeffrey, Tim LaHaye, Dave Hunt, and Hal Lindsey (who is regarded as the Father of the Modern-Day Bible Prophecy movement). Their combined published book sales exceed 70 million in more than fifty languages. They are endorsed by some of the largest theological colleges and missionary institutions as well as a significant proportion of Evangelical, Charismatic, Pentecostal, and fundamentalist Christians worldwide.

Funding the Work: The Temple Treasury. Stephen Sizer, vicar of Christ Church, Virginia Water, UK, has revealed that the International Christian Embassy (Jerusalem), as well as megachurches such as Chuck Smith's Calvary Chapel in Costa Mesa, California, has been associated with the funding of the Jerusalem Temple Foundation (JTF) founded by an Israeli, Stanley Goldfoot (who died in 2006), and several leading US evangelicals. Goldfoot had been influential in raising large sums of money for the JTF through American Christian television and radio stations and evangelical churches. Although Jan Willem van der Hoeven (who died in 2008), the founder of the International Christian Embassy Jerusalem (ICEJ) and director of the International Christian Zionist Center (ICZC), denied direct involvement in efforts to see the Jewish Temple rebuilt, he did admit that "when supporters volunteer to give money for building a temple, he directs them to Goldfoot."

Pat Robertson's Christian Broadcasting Network has also assisted in raising enormous amounts of funds for Solomon's Temple Mount Faithful. Robertson is one of the most, if not the most, influential of American evangelists. He told a Ha'aretz reporter in October 2004 that Evangelical Christians feel so deeply about Jerusalem that if President GEORGE W. BUSH "shifted his position toward support for Jerusalem as a capital for both Israel and a Palestinian state, his Evangelical backing would disappear." Pastor John Hagee, who is a towering leader in the Evangelical Church, has dedicated a great part of his enormously successful ministry to raising money for the Third Temple.

Christian Zionists tend to find solidarity with the religious right wing of Israeli society, although every Israeli prime minister, LABOR PARTY or LIKUD PARTY, has spoken at each of the International Christian Zionist Congresses held annually in Jerusalem since 1980. In an open letter to BENJAMIN NETANYAHU, then Israel's ambassador to the UNITED NATIONS, the International Christian Embassy affirmed its commitment that Jews be able to worship again on the Temple Mount.

There is a clear and unambiguous symbiotic relationship between Christian and Jewish Zionist organizations committed to rebuilding the Jewish Temple. For example, Jews for Jesus provides information on, and offers direct Internet links to, eight extreme and militant Jewish organizations, including the Temple Institute and Temple Mount Faithful. Support for extreme Jewish organizations among Christian Zionists is also associated with an antipathy to Islam. At the Third International Christian Zionist Congress, for example, held in 1996 under the auspices of the ICEJ, the following affirmation was endorsed: "The Islamic claim to Jerusalem, including its exclusive claim to the Temple Mount, is in direct contradiction to the clear biblical and historical significance of the city and its holiest site."

Following are some of the Christian Zionist groups involved in Third Temple activities:

1. The Hope: To Realize the Vision of Jerusalem in Our Lifetime: The City of Peace, a House of Prayer for all the Nations. www.thehope.org.
2. National Leadership Conference for Israel. www.nlci.org.
3. Christians for Israel. www.c4israel.org.
4. National Unity Coalition for Israel. www.pinn.net/~sandy/linkspage.htm.
5. Bridges for Peace. www.bridgesforpeace.com.
6. Christian Friends of Israeli Communities. www.cfoic.com.
7. International Fellowship of Christians and Jews. www.ifcj.org/site/PageServer.
8. The Jerusalem Temple Foundation. www.namebase.org/xjam/Jerusalem-Temple-Foundation.html.
9. Pat Robertson. www.patrobertson.com/Speeches/speechreaction.asp.
10. Temple NOW: Rapture Utopia—Christian Zionism. www.scari.org/temple\_now.html.
11. Biblebelievers. www.biblebelievers.org.au.
12. International Christian Embassy Jerusalem. www.icej.org.
13. Temple Now (Christian), headed by Gus O. Kahan. www.scari.org/temple\_now.html.
14. Lovers of Israel, Inc. Mike Evans, founder and president of Christian Action for Israel. <http://christianactionforisrael.org>.

See also CHRISTIANITY; JEWISH FUNDAMENTALISM; TRANSFER AND DISPLACEMENT; ZIONISM

Bibliography

- Alexander, Desmond, and Simon Gathercole, ed. The Jewish Temple in Contemporary Christian Zionism: Heaven on Earth: The Temple in Biblical Theology. Carlisle, UK: Paternoster, 2004.
- Algazy, Joseph. "Israel at the Mercy of the Religious Parties: Who Is Who." Le Monde diplomatique (English). February 1998.
- Amanpour, Christiane. "God's Jewish Warriors." CNN.com. 21 August 2007.
- Avnery, Uri. "The Withdrawal from Gaza: A Massacre Foretold." Global Research. 7 August 2005.
- Barakat, Amiram. "Chief Rabbis Plan Legislation That Would Bypass High Court Ruling." Ha'aretz. 20 April 2006.
- Be'er, Yizhar. Targeting the Temple Mount: A Current Look at Threats to the Temple Mount by Extremist and Messianic Groups. Jerusalem: Keshev: The Center for the Protection of Democracy in Israel, 1999.
- Ben-Yechiel, Ze'ev. "Third Temple Coming Soon to Jerusalem!" Canada Now. www.canada.com.
- Berkowitz, Shmuel. Wars over the Holy Sites (Hebrew). Jerusalem: Institute for Israel Studies, 2000.
- Bermen, Daphna. "Christian Support for the Third Temple Movement—Ideology and Organization: Don't Touch Jerusalem, Evangelical Leader Warns Bush." Ha'aretz. 5 October 2004.
- Burston, Bradley. "Who's the Fascist? Feiglin? His Foes?" Ha'aretz. 2 January 2007.
- Chaitkin, Anton. "Temple Mount Fanatics Foment a New Thirty Years' War." Executive Intelligence Review. 3 November 2000.
- Dennis, Todd. "Theo-Politics of Christian Zionism." PRETERIST.com. n.d. www.preteristarchive.com/StudyArchive/c/christian-zionism.html.

- Dolphin, Lambert. ed. Preparations for a Third Jewish Temple. TempleMount.org. n.d. www.templemount.org/tempprep.html.
- Eliav, Yaron Z. God's Mountain: The Temple Mount in Time, Place, and Memory. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2005.
- Esteron, Yoel. "Who Will Get Rid of Feiglin, Who Wants to Build the Holy Temple on the Temple Mount?" Ha'aretz. 14 June 2004.
- Fendel, Hillel. "Support Sought for Temple Mount Synagogue." Arutz Sheva: Israel National News. 31 August 2008.
- Friedman, Robert I. "Inside the Jewish Terrorist Underground." Journal of Palestine Studies. (Winter 1986).
- Goldberg, Jeffrey. "Among the Settlers: Will They Destroy Israel?" The New Yorker. 31 May 2004.
- Gonen, Rivka. Contested Holiness: Jewish, Muslim, and Christian Perspective on the Temple Mount in Jerusalem. Jerusalem: Ktav Publishing House, 2003.
- Gorenberg, Gershon. The End of Days: Fundamentalism and the Struggle for the Temple Mount. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 2002.
- Halsell, Grace. Forcing God's Hand: Why Millions Pray for a Quick Rapture . . . and Destruction of Planet Earth, rev. ed. Beltsville, MD: Amana Publications, 2002.
- Hilsden, Wayne. Building the Third Temple. Jerusalem: King of Kings Community, 10 August 2008.
- Hirst, David. "Pursuing the Millennium." The Nation. 2 February 2004.
- Hunt, Dave. "Countdown to the Second Coming." The Berean Call. 2 April 2005. www.thebereancall.org.
- . "Judgment Day! Islam, Israel and the Nations." The Berean Call, 3rd expanded ed. 2006. www.thebereancall.org.
- Hutman, Bill. "Hai V'Kayam Members Held for Prayer Attempts on Temple Mount." Jerusalem Post. 9 May 1995.
- Ice, Thomas, and Randall Price. Ready to Rebuild: The Imminent Plan to Rebuild the Last Days Temple. Eugene, OR: Harvest House Publishers, 1992.
- Israel National News. "Rabbi Yisrael Ariel: Create a Jewish State in Gaza." IsraelNationalNews.com. August 2005.
- Jeffrey, Grant R. The New Temple and the Second Coming: The Prophecy That Points to Christ's Return in Your Generation. Colorado Springs, CO: WaterBrook Press, 2007.
- Katz, Yaakov. "Hear Ye, Hear Ye: Sanhedrin Seeks David's Scion as King." Jewish Whistleblower. 12 January 2005.
- . "US Politician Hopes to Speed Building of Third Temple." The Jerusalem Post. 25 January 2005.
- Klein, Aaron. "10,000 Jews to Ascend Temple Mount: Group Seeks to Reclaim Israeli Control of Holy Site." WorldNetDaily. 6 September 2008.
- Kubes, Danielle. "Third Temple Preparations Begin with Priestly Garb." The Watchman: Israel Watch. 3 July 2008.
- Lahaye, Tim. Babylon Rising: The Edge of Darkness. New York: Bantam, 2008.
- Levy, Eli, and Itamar Inbari. "Right-Wing Activists Hang Pictures of the Jewish Terrorist in Shefaram." Israeli Comments. 4 September 2005. www.nrg.co.il.
- Lindsey, Hal. Israel and the Last Days. Eugene, OR: Harvest House Publishers, 1991.
- Lis, Jonathan. "Correspondent Extremist Eskin Arrested, Suspected of Wiretapping Lieberman." Ha'aretz. 5 November 2007.
- Lurie, Kessia. "Surrounding the Walls (Sivuv She'arim)." Jerusalem Post. 31 July 2008.
- Marsden, George. Understanding Fundamentalism and Evangelicalism. Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1991.
- McCall, Thomas S. "Gershon Salomon and the Temple Mount Faithful: An Interview." Zola Levit Ministries. 1997.
- Montagna, Salvatore, Jeffrey Steinberg, Michele Steinberg, Scott Thompson, and Anton Chaitkin. "Temple Mount Fanatics Foment a New Thirty Years' War." Executive Intelligence Review. 3 December 2000.
- Motti, Inbari. The Oslo Accords and the Temple Mount—A Case Study: The Movement for the Establishment of the Temple. Paris: Institut de l'Information Scientifique et Technique, 2007.
- Mountain, Tom. "The Third Temple." Aeutz Sheva. IsraelNationalNews.com. 31 August 2008.
- Moyers, Bill (producer). "Christian Zionists in the Holy Land: The Theology of Christian Zionism." PBS, "NOW." 20 February 2004.
- Nahshoni, Kobi. "Youths Contribute to Advancement of Third Temple." YNetNews. 31 July 2008.
- Pomerance, Rachel. "Third Temple Booster Snags Bold-face Names for Savannah Parley." The Forward. 27 October 2006.
- Price, Randall. The Battle for the Last Days' Temple: Politics, Prophecy, and the Temple Mount. Eugene, OR: Harvest House Publishers, 2004.
- . The Temple and Bible Prophecy: A Definitive Look at Its Past, Present, and Future. Eugene, OR: Harvest House Publishers, 2005.
- Ravitzky, Aviezer, and Michael Swirsky. Messianism, Zionism, and Jewish Religious Radicalism. Translated by Jonathan Chipman. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1996.
- Rosenberg, Joel C. "Plans for Third Jewish Temple Developing." Catholic Apologetics. Washington, DC. 15 March 2007.
- Shargai, Nadav. "Increasing Number of Rabbis Are Allowing Jews to Enter Temple Mount." Ha'aretz. 9 May 2007.
- . The Mount under Dispute: The Battle over the Temple Mount (Hebrew), Jerusalem: Keter Publishing, 1995.
- . "The Settlers' 'Reserve Forces.'" Ha'aretz. 26 September 2003.
- . "The Temple Mount Is in His Hands." Ha'aretz. 6 March 2007.
- . "Third Temple Culture." Ha'aretz. 26 January 2005.

- Shindler, Colin. "Likud and the Christian Dispensationalists: A Symbiotic Relationship." Israel Studies. (Spring 2000) (hosted online 29 November 2006).
- Shuman, Ellis. "Battle for the Temple Mount." Israelinsider. 30 July 2001.
- Sizer, Stephen. "Dispensationalism and Christian Zionism: Justifying Apartheid in the Name of God." Global Connections. n.d. www.globalconnections.co.uk/findresources/missionissues/issues/Dispensationalism.htm.
- . Zion's Christian Soldiers? Downers Grove, IL: Intervarsity Press, 2008.
- Sizer, Stephen, and David Peterson. Christian Zionism: Road-Map to Armageddon? Downers Grove, IL: Intervarsity Press, 2005.
- Stern, Jessica. "Talking with Jewish Extremists." Frontline, Israel's Next War. n.d. www.pbs.org/wgbh/pages/frontline/shows/israel/extreme/nameof.html.
- . Terror in the Name of God: Why Religious Militants Kill. New York: HarperCollins, 2003.
- Tristram, Claire. "Benny Elon's Long, Strange Trip." Salon.com. 14 May 2003. http://archive.salon.com/news/feature/2003/05/14/elon\_visit/index.html.
- Weber, Timothy P. On the Road to Armageddon: How Evangelicals Became Israel's Best Friend. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Academic, 2004.
- WorldNet Daily*. "New 'Sanhedrin' Plans Rebuilding of Temple: Israeli Rabbinical Body Calls for Architectural Blueprint." WorldNetDaily.com. 8 June 2005.
- Wright, Lawrence. "Forcing the End: Why Do a Pentecostal Cattle Breeder from Mississippi and an Orthodox Rabbi from Jerusalem Believe That Red Heifer Can Bring Change?" Frontline. 1999.
- Yidith*. "Rabbi Shalom Elyashiv and Rabbi Ovadia Yosef Helped Renew Ordination for Sanhedrin." Yidith. IsraelNN.com. 10 January 2006.

Tiberias

The city of Tiberias is situated approximately at the midpoint on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee, the largest urban settlement in the Galilee region. In 1948, Tiberias was the site of the first wave of the mass exodus of Palestinians fleeing the Israeli army.

The city, which sits on a steep slope rising from the lake, was founded in the first century CE on the remains of the ancient city of Rakkath, by Herod Antipas, son of the Roman governor Herod, and was named after the then-reigning Roman emperor Tiberius. According to Christian tradition, Jesus performed several miracles in the Tiberias district, making it an important pilgrimage site for devout Christians. During the second century, the Sanhedrin (Jewish supreme lawmaking authority) chose the city as its place of residence, and a Jewish presence remained in Tiberias for hundreds of years thereafter.

The city was long an important part of the administrative apparatus in Palestine for various governments. It was the headquarters of the Jund al-Urdunn province during the early Islamic period as well as the subdistrict of Tiberias, itself subsumed within the district of ACRE during both the OTTOMAN EMPIRE (1516–1922) and BRITISH MANDATE (1922–1948) periods. Historically the walled town lay along caravan routes connecting SYRIA and EGYPT and therefore was a place of strategic importance. During the Crusader wars, Tiberias was virtually destroyed and was still only sparsely inhabited in 1523. A severe earthquake in 1837 destroyed the walls, which were never rebuilt.

The relatively continuous, if small, Jewish presence from the second century was augmented by an edict issued in 1562, by the Ottoman sultan Suleiman the Magnificent, which encouraged Jews to resettle in Tiberias. The town is the site of the tomb of the Jewish religious scholar Maimonides. In the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, Tiberias received an influx of rabbis who established the city as a center for Jewish learning, and Tiberias became one of the Jewish "four holy cities," together with JERUSALEM, HEBRON, and SAFED. ZIONISM attracted new immigrants, a process further encouraged under the British Mandate. Thus, in 1922, Jews constituted half of the town's total population of 6,950. By 1944, the population of Tiberias had increased to 11,310, with Jews accounting for just under half. Prior to the onset of Zionism the relationship between Arabs and Jews in Tiberias was good; however, in the context of Jewish IMMIGRATION and LAND purchase, relations were marred by several violent incidents, the worst of which occurred in October 1938 when, in the Palestinian uprising, anti-Jewish violence killed twenty Jews, almost all civilians. Still, the Jewish and Palestinian populations of Tiberias maintained relatively cordial, if distant, relations.

In the 1948 WAR, however, the situation changed drastically. After capturing the Arab villages along the Tel Aviv–Jerusalem Road in the second half of April, the Jewish underground military organization HAGANA began its offensive against major Palestinian population concentrations in the Galilee. On the night of 18 April, Tiberias's approximately 6,000 Palestinians, under pressure from the Hagana forces, fled the town for NAZARETH, later fleeing to distant countries. Following the war, no Palestinians remained in Tiberias.

According to Palestinian historian Walid Khalidi, one of the most significant aspects in the fall of Tiberias was the way the British forces handled the situation. Until their withdrawal from Palestine, it was the British duty to maintain security and peace. Yet, while Tiberias was under heavy mortar fire from the Hagana, the only effort exerted by the British was to advise the commander of the Arab garrison "to stop fighting and evacuate the Arab inhabitants." Justifying this passive stance, the British military historian Major Wilson said that the British forces were obliged to stick to a certain time schedule for the anticipated withdrawal. By the time the Hagana attacked Tiberias, the British troops were "too weak in number," making material intervention impossible.

See also PALESTINIAN SOCIETY, PRE-1948; WAR, 1948

Bibliography

- Fischbach, Michael R. "Tiberias." Encyclopedia of the Palestinians, rev. ed. Edited by Philip Mattar. New York: Facts on File, 2005.
- Khalidi, Walid, ed. All That Remains: The Palestinian Villages Occupied and Depopulated by Israel in 1948. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1992.
- . From Haven to Conquest: Readings in Zionism and the Palestine Problem until 1948. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1987.
- . "Selected Documents on the 1948 War." Journal of Palestine Studies. 27:3 (1998).
- Morris, Benny. The Birth of the Palestinian Refugee Problem, 1947–1949. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1987.
- Nazzal, Nafez Abdullah. "The Zionist Occupation of Western Galilee, 1948." Journal of Palestine Studies. 3:3 (1974).
- Palumbo, Michael. The Palestinian Catastrophe: The 1948 Expulsion of a People from Their Homeland. London: Farber and Farber, 1987.
- Sakhnini, Nizar. "The 1948 War: A Cover Up for Ethnic Cleansing." Al-Awda. 16 November 2005.

Tibi, Ahmad (1958–)

Dr. Ahmad Tibi is a Palestinian-Israeli physician, politician, and member of the Knesset. Born in al-Tayyiba in the Galilee, he received his education, including his medical degree, from the Hebrew University in JERUSALEM. He describes himself as Arab-Palestinian in nationality but has called Israel his "homeland."

During the 1980s Tibi was a major connection for Israelis (e.g., URI AVNERY, MATTIYAHU PELED, among others) seeking to meet with members of the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION, which was then illegal under Israeli law. By 1991 Tibi had become a vital emissary and mediator for the PLO. He advised the Palestinian delegation at the MADRID CONFERENCE; during the lead-up to and after the DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES, he mediated between YITZHAK RABIN and YASIR ARAFAT; and later he mediated between the PLO and HAMAS. In 1993, Tibi was appointed special adviser to Chairman Yasir Arafat for the negotiations that preceded the OSLO ACCORDS. For several years, he served as a political adviser to Arafat, representing the Palestinians at the 1998 Wye River negotiations.

In late 1995, Tibi formed the Arab Movement for Renewal (AMR, Ta'al) but backed away from it. After he resigned as Arafat's adviser in 1999, Tibi won a seat in the Knesset as a member of AZMI BISHARA'S BALAD PARTY. In 2002 right-wing Member of the Knesset Michael Kleiner initiated actions in the Knesset to restrict movement by Tibi inside the GAZA STRIP and the WEST BANK. Kleiner claimed that Tibi was assisting the Palestinians in their war against Israel. Tibi protested the Knesset's decision as unconstitutional and illegal under Israeli law, and appealed to the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT, which deferred a decision on the case. Ahead of Israel's 2003 elections, Tibi reconstituted Ta'al as an Arab nationalist party and prepared to run for the Knesset; however, several right-wing politicians, including the heads of the NATIONAL UNION PARTY and NATIONAL RELIGIOUS PARTY (Mafdal), sought to have Tibi banned from holding Knesset office because he was not a Jew. LIKUD PARTY Knesset member Michael Eitan brought the official motion to disqualify Tibi's candidacy. After the Israeli Supreme Court rejected their arguments, Tibi ran on the Ta'al slate on a joint ticket with HADASH, winning office. In 2004, Tibi served as a member of the house and economics committees in the Knesset. Before the 2006 elections, Tibi took his Ta'al party out of the Hadash coalition and joined the UNITED ARAB LIST. He retained his seat and became a deputy speaker of the Knesset. He was reelected on the joint UAL-Ta'al list in the 2009 elections.

See also PALESTINIAN CITIZENS OF ISRAEL; WYE RIVER MEMORANDUM

Bibliography

- Al-Haj, M., and H. Rosenfeld. Arab Local Government in Israel. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1990.
- Ghanem, A. The Palestinian-Arab Minority in Israel: A Political Study. New York: SUNY University Press, 2001.
- . "The Palestinian Minority in Israel: The Challenge of the Jewish State and Its Implications." Third World Quarterly. 21:1 (2000).

- . “State and Minority in Israel: The Case of the Ethnic State and the Predicament of Its Minority.” Ethnic and Racial Studies. 21:3 (1998).
- . “Zionism, Post-Zionism, and Anti-Zionism in Israel: Jews and Arabs in the Conflict over the Nature of the State.” In The Challenge of Post Zionism. Edited by Epraim Nemni. London: Zed Books, 2003.
- Ghanem, A., N. Rouhana, and O. Yiftachel. “Questioning ‘Ethnic Democracy.’” Israel Studies. 3:2 (1999).
- Ginat, J. “Israeli Arabs: Some Recent Social and Political Trends.” Asian and African Studies. 23:2–3 (1989).
- Rabinowitz, Dan, and Khawla Abu-Baker. Coffins on Our Shoulders: The Experience of the Palestinian Citizen of Israel. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2005.
- Reitter, I., and R. Aharoni. The Political Life of the Arabs in Israel (Hebrew). Beit Berl, Israel: Center for the Study of Arab Society, 1992.
- Rouhana, N., and A. Ghanem. “The Crisis of Minorities in Ethnic States: The Case of the Palestinian Citizens in Israel.” International Journal of Middle East Studies. 30:3 (1998).
- . “The Democratization of a Traditional Minority in an Ethnic Democracy: The Palestinians in Israel.” In Democracy, Peace, and the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict. Edited by E. Kaufman, S. Abed, and R. Rothstein. Boulder, CO: Lynne Rienner Publishers, 1993.
- Sultany, N. Israel and the Palestinian Minority. Haifa, Mada al-Carmel: The Arab Center for Applied Social Research, 2004.
- Tibi, Ahmed. “Ahmed Tibi Guest of Ha’aretz.” Ha’aretz (Jerusalem), 2 September 2004.

Tomb of the Patriarchs

See CAVE OF MACHPELAH; AL-IBRAHIMI MOSQUE

Torah and Shabbat Judaism

Torah and Shabbat Judaism is a coalition of ASHKENAZI ultra-Orthodox (HAREDI) parties who believe that government policies should be based on Halacha (Jewish religious law) and that the land of Israel was given to the Jewish people by God. This being the case, no compromises can then be made that would give up any part of the land—in other words, territorial compromise with the Palestinians is anathema. The coalition won six seats in the 2006 Knesset elections and six seats again in 2009.

Torat Cohanim

Torat Cohanim is a yeshiva in the Muslim quarter of the Old City of JERUSALEM, established by the settler group ATARA L’YOSHNA, which works to identify and reclaim Jewish property in the Muslim quarter. It was intended as a center for the study of Jewish law related to the Third Temple (thus the name Torat Cohanim). Over the years, Atara L’Yoshna, together with other associations such as ATERET COHANIM, have taken possession of numerous Palestinian buildings throughout the Old City.

See also SETTLERS AND SETTLEMENTS, EAST JERUSALEM; THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT

Torture

See COLLABORATORS; ISRAELI MILITARY COURT SYSTEM; ISRAELI SUPREME COURT; MOSSAD; SHIN BET

Transfer and Displacement

The assumption behind the notions of transfer and displacement is that there can be no viable Jewish state in all or part of Palestine unless there is a mass displacement of Arab inhabitants.

Separation, displacement, transfer, ethnic cleansing, and virtual imprisonment behind the twenty-six-foot concrete BARRIER appear to be the most extreme elements of a radical right-wing policy against the Palestinians. But they are not products of LIKUD PARTY governments alone, and did not even originate with them. Nor are they confined to the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES; rather, they represent a general approach of the Zionist movement, best described in 1923 by the Revisionist leader VLADIMIR (ZE’EV) JABOTINSKY as that of an “Iron Wall.” Indeed, the elements of displacement and transfer are not mere “policies,” but structural and ideological products of the Jewish nationalism expressed primarily in the Zionist claim that the entire land of Israel (i.e., the western part of the land of Israel stretching from the Mediterranean to the Jordan River) belongs exclusively to the Jewish people. Hegemonic exclusivity over a territory is inherent in any ethnocracy—namely, wherein one group within a multiethnic or multireligious state dominates to the extent that it determines the nature of the state. In the case of Israel, however, it takes on a special priority and urgency, since ZIONISM represents a form of ethnonationalism that was not in situ, a form in which the “natives” came from outside the country, claiming that they were “returning” to their native land, thus rendering the indigenous inhabitants “intruders.” The historical process in which conquest, displacement, and delegitimization of an existing majority population are carried out by an external minority one is, in Israel, called “Judaization,” which by definition relies heavily on issues of historic claims, rights, LAND, and DEMOGRAPHY and is inevitably accompanied by conflict and exclusion.

The various expressions of Judaization—separation, confinement, displacement, transfer—can be combined under the general rubric of displacement, or nishul in Hebrew. In Palestine/Israel, proposals for a transfer of Palestinians from their homeland go back to the very beginning of the Zionist enterprise, openly articulated and discussed as part of the process of “reclaiming” the country. It culminated during the 1948 WAR in the expulsion of 75 percent of the Palestinian people, who became either REFUGEES or “internally displaced” PALESTINIAN CITIZENS OF ISRAEL and who have not been allowed to return to their homes, with many living in UNRECOGNIZED VILLAGES in Israel. The process was repeated in the flight and DEPORTATION of Palestinians from the Occupied Territories in the 1967 WAR and thereafter. Judaization continues through policies of “quiet transfer,” continuing economic de-development, Israel’s PERMIT system for the Occupied Territories with its myriad restrictions, and other such policies designed to induce Palestinian emigration and the confinement of the remaining Palestinians to tiny “cantons.”

Before and during 1948, Zionist, Arab, and British leaders and officials understood and enunciated the logic of nishul. As early as 1895, THEODOR HERZL, the prophet and founder of Zionism, who anticipated the establishment of the Jewish state, wrote in his diary, “We shall try to spirit the penniless [Arab] population across the border by procuring employment for it in the transit countries, while denying it any employment in our country. . . . The removal of the poor must be carried out discreetly and circumspectly.”

Zionism did not always result in physical displacement. In circumstances where that proved impossible, nishul assumed other forms. Palestinians, for example, may remain more or less in place but lose title to their lands and property through expropriation or blocked access—a form of dispossession. When physical displacement was carried out on a massive scale, it also meant that the displaced group’s claims, narrative, and even identity were suppressed and denied by the dominant group, which asserts the validity only of its own claims and narrative. In Israel, this has taken the form of reducing the Palestinians to merely an ethnic or minority group, an excluded sector of the broader Jewish society, rather than recognizing them as an equal national entity. In fact, the Arabs (Israeli Jews refer to Palestinians inside Israel, and in general, solely by that generalized and undifferentiated term) fall outside the dominant narrative altogether and are rendered irrelevant, merely part of the landscape.

In the end, the prime goal of nishul is not only physical displacement, but also the normalization of displacement so that a previous reality cannot be recovered or even recalled. As a strategy and process of expansion and displacement, nishul has proven its effectiveness in Zionism’s attempt to wrest the land of Israel from its Palestinian inhabitants, especially in its ability to normalize displacement and turn it into a non-issue. This effectively devolves responsibility for the inevitable and endemic conflict from the perpetrators to the victims, casting the resistance of the latter as illegitimate violence or TERRORISM. In Israel’s case, it legitimizes the notion of a Jewish state and enables it to mobilize support from within its Jewish population and abroad for policies of nishul.

Stages of Displacement

The stages of displacement/nishul in the history of Israeli-Palestinian conflict may be generally summarized in five time periods.

Beginnings of Zionism (1904–1914). Elements of nishul were already appearing in the last years of the nineteenth century when Zionism crystallized as an ideology and movement, given the necessary political, organizational, and financial influence of the WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION. At this time, a self-contained, compelling metanarrative emerged asserting the Jews’ exclusive title to the country as returning natives. Although the terms “conquest” and “colonization” were used to describe the process of reclaiming the land, the claim itself was seen as just, self-evident, and beyond dispute, while Palestinian claims or rights were seldom entertained. Their presence in the land of Israel was cast as “the hidden question” or “the Arab problem,” which was to be addressed in various ways. For the century that followed, until (and even then indirectly and ambiguously) the signing of the OSLO ACCORDS between Israel and the PALESTINE

LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) in 1993, the existence of Palestinians as a national collective was denied, and their claims to both land and the country were dismissed.

Physical displacement began in 1904 with the establishment of the Palestine office of the World Zionist Organization and the systematic purchase of lands from Arab ABSENTEE LANDLORDS, which necessitated the removal of the Palestinian peasantry. The first tangible expression of physical displacement took place in the years before World War I, when HASHOMER (The Guardians), a heavily armed Zionist paramilitary group mounted on horses and attired as Arabs, forcibly evicted Palestinians from lands they had cultivated for centuries. In 1911, ARTHUR RUPPIN, the director of the World Zionist Organization's Palestine office, first publicly used the term "transfer" when he proposed that dispossessed Arab Palestinian peasants be resettled in SYRIA. ISRAEL ZANGWILL, a leading Zionist figure (who coined the expression "A land without people for a people without a land"), lobbied for an "Arab Trek," reflecting the trek of the Boers into Transvaal, though in the direction of other Arab lands.

Since they had no part in the Jewish national narrative (except as foils), Palestinian attempts to resist displacement, which became more organized and articulated after the Young Turk rebellion of 1908, further fostered the popular Zionist image of the Arabs as illegitimate claimants to Jewish land who were inherently hostile and violent. Such an image only legitimized whatever measures were necessary to realize redemption of the land and its inverse, displacement of the Arab population. Ideology was backed by force, organization, effective international political support, and massive financial support.

Systematic Zionist Expansion (1918–1947). Until the end of World War I, the process of nishul was still somewhat vague in its conception and scale, although the vision of reclaiming the entire country underlay all Zionist policies. The Jews comprised only 10 percent of the country's population, and Ottoman/Turkish rule seemed firmly in place, requiring great care in pressing the authorities for concessions to Zionist projects without directly confronting the Arab population. When Great Britain assumed governance over Palestine in 1917 (the BRITISH MANDATE), the Jewish community saw it as a pro-Zionist regime (especially after the 1917 BALFOUR DECLARATION), while the Palestinians and other Arabs, to whom the British had promised independence and unity in the 1914–1915 HUSAYN-McMAHON CORRESPONDENCE, considered it a betrayal. The years 1918–1920 represent the origin of what historian Israel Kolatt called "maximalist Zionism," the attempt to establish a Jewish state with an overwhelming Jewish majority on both sides of the Jordan River—that is, both Transjordan and Palestine.

In 1923, following the outbreak of what Israelis call the Arab riots of 1921 and Palestinians refer to as AL-NABI MUSA DEMONSTRATIONS, plus the subsequent 1922 CHURCHILL MEMORANDUM, which retreated from the Balfour Declaration's promise of a Jewish "homeland," Vladimir (Ze'ev) Jabotinsky, the founder of Revisionist Zionism and the ideological source of today's Likud Party, formulated his seminal "iron wall" doctrine: "Every indigenous people will resist alien settlers as long as they see any hope of ridding themselves of the danger of foreign settlement. This is how the Arabs will behave and go on behaving so long as they possess a gleam of hope that they can prevent 'Palestine' from becoming the Land of Israel. [The sole way to an agreement, then,] is through the iron wall, that is to say, the establishment in Palestine of a force that will in no way be influenced by Arab pressure. . . . A voluntary agreement is unattainable. . . . We must either suspend our settlement efforts or continue them without paying attention to the mood of the natives. Settlement can thus develop under the protection of a force that is not dependent on the local population, behind an iron wall which they will be powerless to break down."

This was certainly one of the first times the process of nishul was explicitly set forth. It was also one of the first formulations that considered the "natives" and their reactions to Zionism. Israeli-British historian Avi Shlaim and US political scientist Ian Lustick argue that DAVID BEN-GURION, Israel's founder, fully adopted the iron wall doctrine, and it became a central tenet of Zionist policy that continues to this day. Although Ben-Gurion entertained notions that the Jewish state could "expand to the whole of Palestine" through negotiations with Transjordan's Emir Abdullah, in the end the iron wall approach diminished the relevance of the Palestinians. It sought to co-opt them within a wider political arrangement struck between the Yishuv and Arab leaders such as Abdullah, thus eliminating them as a factor requiring consideration. In the current political context, in which the iron wall doctrine is often invoked, it is assumed that the Palestinians (Arabs) will be perpetually hostile to the existence of Israel, and that, in the absence of the JORDANIAN OPTION (that is, Jordan receiving all Palestinians), Israel must assert its claim over the entire country by force, only after which the Arabs will finally submit.

How, it might be asked, did a minority of less than 10 percent in the post–World War I years justify the displacement (politically, economically, and geographically, if not physically) of an overwhelming native majority? Kolatt makes the crucial observation that, for the Zionists, Palestine belonged to two unequal peoples: the worldwide Jewish people of 14 million, who are the country’s “true” natives in the process of returning to reclaim the land, and a Palestinian population of 600,000, generally cast as recent immigrants from other Arab countries and therefore “intruders,” with no legitimate counterclaim to the land.

Although characterized and minimized by analysts as mere “riots,” the ARAB REVOLT of 1936–1939 finally convinced the Zionists that they were facing a growing nationalist movement that made claims of its own to the country, and to its right of self-determination. At this juncture, the notion of “voluntary transfer” or “resettlement” of displaced Arab peasants gave way to the perceived Zionist need for “compulsory transfer.” In June 1938, Ben-Gurion reported to the JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL: “I am for compulsory transfer; I don’t see anything immoral in it. We have to state the principle of compulsory transfer without insisting on its immediate implementation.”

The riots and the 1937 British PEEL COMMISSION, which proposed partition of the country into separate Arab and Jewish states, for the first time galvanized the Yishuv leadership. From this point on, Jewish sovereignty over the entire country became a priority superseding any attempts to reconcile the conflict with the Palestinians. It might be more appropriate to characterize the Yishuv’s approach to the Palestinians as pragmatic rather than ideological. It was not directed against Arabs, because Arabs or Palestinians did not fit into the Zionist weltanschauung except practically. Ben-Gurion and the others believed that one day the iron wall and Jewish IMMIGRATION would lead the Arabs to accept the Zionist presence and, if not, that the Zionists would have the power to enact a transfer, if necessary. The issue was a purely technical one, as it is today. Witness this statement of Ben-Gurion: “If we have to use force we shall use it without hesitation—but only if we have no choice. We do not want and do not need to expel Arabs and take their places. Our whole desire is based on the assumption—which has been corroborated in the course of all our activity in the country—that there is enough room for us and the Arabs in the country and that if we have to use force—not in order to dispossess the Arabs from the Negev or Transjordan but in order to assure ourselves of the right, which is our due to settle there—then we have the force.”

In comments about Ben-Gurion, his official biographer, Shabtai Tevet, writes: “Prior to 1928–1929, we find no evidence that Ben-Gurion intended to dispossess and to ethnically cleanse the Palestinian people. . . . [Dispossession was conceived as] a Zionist rather than an Arab question, posed to Zionists who were perplexed about how they could fulfill their aspirations in a land already inhabited by a Palestinian Arab majority.” When, in 1942, the Zionist movement formally adopted the BILTMORE PROGRAM, it asserted that “Palestine be constituted as a Jewish Commonwealth.” The Palestinians were not mentioned. Instead, the problem of establishing a democratic Jewish state in a country where the Jews made up only a third of the population was presented solely as a practical demographic issue.

Exodus after the War (1948). By the end of World War II, faced with what it considered an anti-Zionist shift in British policy, the Yishuv leaders agreed to consider once again the idea of partition, which had been rejected in the Biltmore Program. The need to establish a Jewish state as soon as possible was seen as paramount. The 1948 War—for Israel the war of independence and for Palestinians the Nakba (catastrophe)—witnessed displacement as a conscious and active form of what today would be called “ethnic cleansing” (from the point of view of one group driving out or displacing another, not in terms of massive killing as in Bosnia or Rwanda). Research of recent years clearly shows that plans for transfer of Palestinians were prepared even before the war. The TRANSFER COMMITTEE, constituted in the spring of 1948 under the direction of YOSEF WEITZ, drew up plans for every phase of such a process. Even if the suddenness and scale of the Palestinian exodus initially surprised the Zionist leaders, by the second half of the war, the Israeli military actively and intentionally caused, encouraged, and facilitated the exodus.

“From April 1948, Ben-Gurion is projecting a message of transfer,” states an Israeli historian of that war, Benny Morris, in an interview in the Guardian. Although there was no explicit order or policy, “there is an atmosphere of [population] transfer. . . . The entire leadership understands that this is the idea. The officer corps understands what is required of them. Under Ben-Gurion, a consensus of transfer is created.” When the interviewer asks if Ben-Gurion was a “transferist,” Morris assents. “If he had not done what he did, a state would not have come into being. That has to be clear. It is impossible to evade it. Without the uprooting of the Palestinians, a Jewish state would not have arisen here.” As for the term “cleanse,” Morris said he found it in the 1948 documents he researched. “I know it doesn’t sound nice but that was the term they used at the time.”

The Israeli historian Ilan Pappé sums it up as follows: “If the Palestinians weren’t happy with the Zionist idea of partition, it was time for unilateral action. The Jewish leadership turned to its May 1947 map, showing clearly which parts of Palestine were coveted as the future Jewish state. The problem was that within the desired 80 percent, the Jews were a distinct minority (660,000 Jews versus 1 million Palestinians). But the leaders of the Yishuv had foreseen this difficulty at the outset of the Zionist project in Palestine. The solution as they saw it was the enforced transfer of the indigenous population, so that a pure Jewish state could be established. On 10 March 1948 the Zionist leadership adopted the infamous DALET [PLAN], which resulted in the ethnic cleansing of the areas regarded as the future Jewish state in Palestine.”

Preparations were also made for consolidating the gains that the exodus created, including preventing the refugees’ return. In the course of the 1948 War, the process of erasing the collective Palestinian presence from the country began. Entire villages were systematically demolished—not during the fighting, but after their residents had left. Eventually, by the 1960s, some 418 villages had been destroyed—two-thirds of the villages of Palestine.

Consolidation of Nishul (1948–1966). At partition, when the UNITED NATIONS passed UN RESOLUTION 181 (29 November 1947), Jews owned 7 percent of the land of Palestine but were allocated a full 56 percent. After the 1948 War, Israel controlled 78 percent of the country (of the other 22 percent, the WEST BANK was formally annexed by JORDAN in 1950, and the GAZA STRIP came under Egyptian administration). To consolidate its gains, Israel immediately instituted a legal system to expropriate vast tracts of land from its Palestinian population—external refugees, internal refugees, and in situ residents alike. The late Israeli social historian Baruch Kimmerling sets out four stages whereby Israel confiscated Palestinian land within Israel from its Palestinian owners. This process is implemented within Israel today and is currently being applied in adapted forms to the Occupied Territories.

Stage 1: Israel Claims Sovereignty. The Israeli parliament passed the ABANDONED AREAS ORDINANCE section 1(A) in 1948, which defines “abandoned territory” as “any area captured by the armed forces or surrendered to them or land abandoned by all or some of its inhabitants.” This definition allows land to be declared “abandoned” whether or not its residents have left it; it can then be appropriated by the state.

Stage 2: Creating “Present Absentees.” The Provisional Council of the State (1948) created a “CUSTODIAN OF ABSENTEE PROPERTY.” The ABSENTEE PROPERTY LAW (1950) defines an “absentee” as an owner of a property in 1947–1948 who was a national or a citizen of LEBANON, Syria, Transjordan (which became Jordan after 1950), IRAQ, Egypt, SAUDI ARABIA, or Yemen; who was in any of these places or in parts of Palestine outside of Israel (West Bank/Gaza and East JERUSALEM) in 1947–1948; or who was a Palestinian citizen who left his ordinary place of residence in Palestine for somewhere else before September 1948 or for “a place in Palestine held at the time by forces, which sought to prevent the establishment of the State of Israel or which fought against it after its establishment.” This definition includes almost all Palestinians, including Israeli citizens, who left their homes during the war, as most did, even to go to a neighboring village. Thus were created the internal refugees—the “internally displaced” or “PRESENT ABSENTEES.”

Palestinians were also removed from their land by other means. The DEFENSE EMERGENCY REGULATIONS (1945) empowered military commanders to declare certain areas as CLOSED MILITARY ZONES, for which entrance to or exit from was prohibited. Thirteen Palestinian villages and their lands were declared closed areas, and the policy of restricting Palestinians from their lands was reinforced by the CURFEW of the 1948–1966 military administration that ruled the Palestinians.

Actual evacuation of populations was made possible by several military orders, such as Regulation 8(A) of the Emergency Regulations, Security Areas (1949), which reads: “An authorized source may command a permanent resident of a security area to leave the area.” Most regions of the upper and eastern Galilee, as well as a ten-kilometer strip along the border with Jordan, were declared “security areas,” as were sections of the Negev. This allowed the expulsion of the residents of the Palestinian villages of Ikrit and Baram, for example, as well as BEDOUIN groups (such as the Jahalin tribe) from the Negev. This was reinforced by the Law of Land Acquisition in Time of Emergency of 1948, which empowered Israeli authorities to issue a land acquisition order in cases deemed “necessary for the defense of the state and public security.”

Extralegal means of expulsion were also employed from 1949 to 1959. Whole communities were expelled, including Mag’dal, now Ashkelon, to the Gaza Strip in 1950, and the Jahalin Bedouin from the Negev to Lod and subsequently to Jordan (the West Bank). These were presented by Israel as voluntary evacuations, although the circumstances were murky. By the time Mag’dal was captured by Israeli forces in Operation Yoav on 4 November 1948, for example, it had dwindled from a substantial town of about 11,000 Arab residents to just 1,000. Israeli general YIGAL ALLON ordered their expulsion, but the local commanders did not carry it out. During the next year or so, the Arabs were held in a confined area while a secret debate took place about their fate. Some, such as General MOSHE DAYAN and Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion, wanted them expelled, while others, such as the left-wing minority party MAPAM, wanted them to remain. The government finally decided that the Arabs should be expelled, but not without their consent, a concession probably due to growing international pressure; however, inducements to leave included harassment and nighttime raids. Eventually most of the Arabs agreed to leave “voluntarily,” though it was alleged that many never gave their consent. After the majority were taken on trucks to the Gaza Strip, only twenty Arab families remained by October 1950, most of whom later moved to LYDDA or Gaza.

Stage 3: Israel Takes Ownership. A number of legal means were instituted in the early years of the state to expropriate Palestinian lands and hand them over to Israeli owners. The Emergency Regulations for the Cultivation of Fallow Lands (1948) empowered the Israeli Ministry of Agriculture to seize lands not (or under-) cultivated to ensure their cultivation. When used together with the Security Areas Regulations and the Regulations on Closed Areas, both of which prevented Palestinians from reaching their fields, these laws proved an effective means of confiscation.

In 1950 the DEVELOPMENT AUTHORITY, which later became the ISRAEL LANDS ADMINISTRATION, was created with the goal of acquiring supposedly abandoned Arab territories and lands and developing them. This was in line with the policy of not allowing Palestinian refugees or present absentees to return to their land. Although compensation was offered for lands (at 1950 rates, well below later market prices), most Palestinian owners refused it, because taking compensation would validate the loss of their lands and signal their relinquishing them. Many owners also had no authority to sell what were collectively owned lands or could not agree to do so without other family members. Regulations issued in 1953 allowed the state to expropriate the lands of 250 abandoned Arab villages and individual parcels of land belonging to absentees, equaling 1.5 million dunums (375,000 acres).

Stage 4: De-Arabization. In general, Palestinians’ ownership of land or even their territorial presence was perceived as a threat to Israeli sovereignty and the Jewish character of the state. Therefore, the land had to be “nationalized.” After the 1948 War, Israel consisted of 20 million dunums (5 million acres), or 72 percent of Palestine. However, the JEWISH NATIONAL FUND owned only about 1 million dunums (250,000 acres), while Palestinians owned 5 million dunums (25 percent of the land in Israel, mainly in the Galilee). The Law of Absentee Property allowed the acquisition of millions more, so that by 1962, 92.6 percent of the land belonged either to the state (15,205,000 dunums, or 3,800,000 acres) or to the Jewish National Fund (3,570,000 dunums, or 893,000 acres). Palestinian ownership was down to 7.3 percent (1,480,000 dunums, or 370,000 acres).

By the time the process of physical displacement was largely completed within Israel proper, Jews had sovereignty over the entire country and actual control of almost 93 percent of the land. Now 70 percent of the Palestinians were refugees beyond Israel's BORDERS, and, of those that remained, some 40 percent were internal refugees who had been separated from their lands. Yet Israeli governments still felt their hold over the country was tenuous, and the process of nishul continued. By the early 1960s for example, only 8 percent of the population of the Galilee were Jews (10,000 of 120,000 people). This led the government to develop a policy of Judaizing the Galilee. Thousands of acres of Palestinian-owned land were expropriated for the building of Carmiel, Upper Nazareth (NATZERAT ILLIT), and other development towns. When the Jewish population still did not reach a critical point of domination, dozens of OUTPOSTS (community settlements) were established on hilltops to ensure territorial control even with limited Jewish populations. Other policies of nishul were developed for the center of the country, and especially for the Negev.

At the same time, legislation was strengthened (such as the BASIC LAW: "Israel Lands," 1960) to prevent lands or houses built on either STATE LANDS or lands controlled by ISRAELI NATIONAL INSTITUTIONS from being sold, leased, or rented to Palestinian citizens of Israel. This ploy, subcontracting state authority over land to nonstate yet national institutions such as the Jewish Agency and the Jewish National Fund, allows Israel to formally maintain its promise to "ensure social and political rights to all its inhabitants" while unofficially institutionalizing discrimination. Wherever possible—as in the current construction of the massive Trans-Israel Highway, which has the partial rationale of Judaizing the Galilee—maximum amounts of Arab land are expropriated. As a result, Palestinian ownership (formal or customary) was reduced from 93 percent in prewar 1948 to 25 percent immediately after the war to just 4 percent today.

Simultaneous with removing Palestinians from their land and title to their land, the process of nishul involved a thorough Judaizing of the landscape. The Israeli historian Meron Benvenisti, in Sacred Landscape, describes in detail the process of creating a Hebrew map of the country. The replacement of Arab place-names by Jewish ones had already begun in the 1920s when the Jewish National Fund set up a committee to determine Jewish names for all new settlements and their environs. Jews working for the British during the Mandatory period, either as employees of the survey department or within the British army, lobbied hard for Hebrew designations of sites, and when that failed they produced their own Hebrew maps, which proved invaluable to the Jewish underground military organization HAGANA in the 1948 War. With the establishment of the state, the Hebrew map became official, but there were still too many Arabic names for comfort. When Ben-Gurion convened the Committee for the Designation of Place-Names in the Negev Region in July 1949, he wrote: "We are obliged to remove the Arabic names for reasons of state. Just as we do not recognize the Arabs' political proprietorship of the land, so also do we not recognize their spiritual proprietorship and their names."

Occupation and Colonization (1967–Present). In the 1967 War, another 250,000 to 300,000 Palestinians were physically displaced or transferred from the Occupied Territories. Israeli forces destroyed the villages of 'Imwas, Yalu, and Bayt Nuba, located in the "no-man's-land" of Latrun, and expelled their 5,000 inhabitants. So, too, in the Mughrabi neighborhood in Jerusalem, Israel demolished 135 homes to create a large plaza in front of the WESTERN WALL. Since then, displacement in the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and Gaza (the last slightly modified by ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA in 2005) has taken three main forms:

1. Expansion of settlements. The process of displacement, including the denial of national rights of self-determination within Palestine, was to be halted and partially compensated by the TWO-STATE SOLUTION enshrined in UN RESOLUTION 242 and, most recently, in the US-sponsored ROAD MAP peace initiative. The territory envisioned for the future Palestinian state (the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and Gaza) constitutes only 22 percent of historic Palestine, yet successive Israeli governments have endeavored to incorporate large swaths of that territory into Israel proper. These efforts include policies of land expropriation, settlement activity, and a growing INFRASTRUCTURE OF ROADS that intersect with the Israeli highways, making a coherent Palestinian state impossible.

This policy of creating facts on the ground has resulted in massive expropriation of Palestinian land, part of a systematic campaign designed to confine Palestinians to small, disconnected enclaves while expanding Israel's SETTLEMENTS. Since 1967, Israel has expropriated Palestinian land for Israeli-only highways and bypass roads, military installations, nature reserves, and infrastructure; it has "frozen" Palestinian construction in some 24 percent of the West Bank and 89 percent of Arab East Jerusalem, thus creating space for Israeli settlements. More than 150 settlements have been constructed in the Occupied Territories, containing some 450,000 Israelis (220,000 in the West Bank and 225,000 in East Jerusalem), according to the Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics. The settlements, the infrastructure serving them, and the security system necessary to protect them have carved the Occupied Territories into some seventy Jewish enclaves that, under Prime Minister EHUD BARAK, were consolidated into seven settlement blocs that ensure Israeli control over any Palestinian entity.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli government and the municipality are quietly creating facts on the ground to Judaize the city and rule out any future division. Both are aware that East Jerusalem will not be able to function as the capital of Palestine, a goal of Palestinians, when a belt of settlements encircles it and settlers have taken possession of sites that are holy to Islam. The SETTLER GROUPS operating in East Jerusalem—ELAD, ATERET COHANIM, ATARA L'YOSHNA, BEIT OROT, and SHIMON HA'TZADIK—focus their activities primarily on the OLD CITY area: SILWAN (which they have renamed Ir David, the City of David) and Palestinian neighborhoods surrounding the Old City from Wadi Kadum in the south to SHAYKH JARRAH in the north. Further afield, the Israeli government has initiated the annexation of the GIV'AT ZE'EV, MA'ALE ADUMIM, and Etzion settlement blocs into a metropolitan Israeli Jerusalem controlling the entire central portion of the West Bank and stunting the urban growth of the Palestinian areas of the city.

The effect of the settlement enterprise is to preclude the establishment of a viable Palestinian state and effectively institutionalize an apartheid system of an expanded Israel controlling a dependent and truncated Palestinian state. Israeli government terminology phrases this process in the century-old Zionist notion of "separation," which finds its ultimate and decisive expression in the construction of the Barrier, or separation wall, intended to demar-cate the borders of the expanded Israel and permanently determine the extent of the cantons that Israel will reserve for the Palestinians.

2. Military measures inducing displacement. Although Israel presents its rule over the Occupied Territories as one of CIVILIAN ADMINISTRATION, it is nevertheless defined by its military presence and by the imposition of a military government empowered to rule by some 2,000 military orders. Military Order 59 (1967), for example, grants the Israeli Custodian of Absentee Property the authority to declare uncultivated, unregistered land as Israeli state land. Since Israel refuses to recognize Ottoman- or British-era land deeds and Military Order 291 (1968) stopped the process of land registration, Israel was able to classify a full 72 percent of the West Bank as state lands, making expropriation from their Palestinian owners an easy administrative matter. To take one more example from among many, Military Order 393 (1970) grants any military commander in Judea and Samaria (that is, the West Bank) the authority to prohibit Palestinian construction, if he believes it necessary for the security of the Israeli army or to ensure public order. By effectively curbing the development of Arab communities, preventing the construction of homes, and alienating land from its Palestinian owners, many Palestinians (from the middle class in particular) are forced to leave the country to seek a normal life. Another military policy, imposed since the early 1990s (1988 in Gaza), is an increasingly tight CLOSURE that limits internal movement and trade within the Occupied Territories, severely hampers export of commercial products, and locks Palestinian workers out of the Israeli economy. It has also had disastrous consequences for the ECONOMY and society, contributing measurably to the flight of the Palestinian middle class. Add to this the effect of outright and repeated Israeli military attacks on Palestinian population centers (from 2000 to 2008, some 6,816 Palestinians were killed, of whom some 60 to 70 percent were civilians) with massive damage to homes, public institutions, and infrastructure.
3. Administrative measures inducing emigration. ZONING LAWS and planning policies subtly obstruct the natural development of Palestinian towns and villages and ultimately induce emigration, hiding Israel's political agenda behind a facade of technical maps, neutral professional jargon, and administrative procedures. Two British Mandate planning documents—the Jerusalem Regional Planning Scheme RJ5 (1942) and Samaria Regional Planning Scheme RS15 (1945)—have been adopted as the basis of Israeli planning for Palestinian communities, which has the effect of freezing Palestinian development in Jerusalem and the West Bank as it was in the 1940s. RS15, for example, zones the entire West Bank as agricultural land, thus giving the Israeli authorities a “legal” basis for denying Palestinians building permits and demolishing illegal homes (12,000 homes since 1967).

In Jerusalem, the municipality, together with the Israeli Ministry of Interior, also employs planning and zoning, backed by an aggressive policy of HOUSE DEMOLITIONS to severely restrict Palestinian construction and, ultimately, maintain a 72 percent majority of Jews over Arabs. By constricting Palestinian housing construction, the municipality has created an artificial shortage of some 25,000 housing units in the Palestinian sector of the city, thereby raising significantly the cost of scarce shelter. Because 70 percent of Palestinians residing in Jerusalem live below the poverty line, they are forced to find affordable housing outside the city borders. Once they have shifted their “center of life” from Jerusalem, the Interior Ministry revokes their Jerusalem residency, turning them into West Bank residents (if they have not left the country altogether), thus bolstering the Jewish majority.

These, plus a variety of other administrative measures to further emigration and displacement, including the revoking of residency rights of Palestinians who have spent various periods of time studying or working outside of the country, have been called by the Israeli human rights group B’TSELEM Israel’s policy of “quiet deportation.” They accompany outright acts of exile and deportation, which have been denounced in several UN resolutions, as well as continued talk of transfer that has become an acceptable part of Israeli political discourse. Targeted in particular are the educated middle classes, whose departure would greatly weaken Palestinian society—a form of selective transfer.

Completion of the Nishul System

First Attempt: The Oslo Process (1993–2000). Although the OSLO PROCESS appeared to be a breakthrough in Israel’s opposition to Palestinian self-determination, in fact it represented a continuation of the process of nishul, seeking to formalize Israel’s control of the entire country while holding out (though not formally) the possibility of a Palestinian mini-state. Indeed, the Oslo Process did not recognize the Palestinians as a nation with legitimate claims to the land and the collective right of self-determination. On the contrary, in the Oslo Accords, Israel merely recognized the PLO as its negotiating partner. Even as Israel doubled its settler population during the seven years of negotiations and initiated the construction of twenty-nine major highways to link the settlements to Israel proper, it confined more than 90 percent of the Palestinian population in the Occupied Territories to about seventy disconnected enclaves (Areas A and B), which have since become permanent cantons. One could argue that, by the end of the Oslo Process in early 2001, the process of nishul had been essentially completed, with Israel firmly in control of the entire country—90 percent of it in its hands and the prospect of a viable Palestinian state virtually eliminated.

Second Attempt: Policy of Unilateral Separation (2001–Present). ARIEL SHARON’S rise to power and the creation of a broad national unity government with the LABOR PARTY heralded a new and final phase, Israeli policymakers hope, in the century-old process of displacement. First, the prime minister moved quickly to consolidate the matrix of control and those facts on the ground that might conceivably be reversed. Sharon adopted Barak’s METROPOLITAN JERUSALEM PLAN, that is, one including East Jerusalem, and the annexation of seven settlement blocs in the West Bank, and induced the GEORGE W. BUSH administration to formally recognize them, in April 2004, as parts of Israel, which was approved almost unanimously by the UNITED STATES CONGRESS.

Sharon then adopted the concept of separation as a means by which the displacement and containment of the Palestinians could be achieved. “The day he was elected prime minister,” relates Arnon Sofer, a professor of geography at Haifa University and the self-proclaimed intellectual progenitor of the separation policy, “Sharon asked me to bring him a [disengagement] map I published in 2001. . . . Look, these demographics are facts. The world is going insane. Islam is going wild. There is going to be a clash of civilizations. In the Middle East, there is going to be the highest Arab birth rate in the world. There cannot be peace. . . . This is why I keep saying that in order to save the State of Israel we will have to separate unilaterally, and as quickly as possible. . . . Unilateral separation does not guarantee 'peace'—it guarantees a Zionist-Jewish state with an overwhelming majority of Jews."

The Sharon government sought to unilaterally expand Israel to encompass those settlement blocs (including a Metropolitan Jerusalem) included within the Barrier, a policy pursued by his successors EHUD OLMERT and BENJAMIN NETANYAHU. In Sharon's and Olmert's conception, this would create a truncated Palestinian mini-state on 10–15 percent of the country that conforms to his declared plan of "cantonization," and the process of nishul would then be complete. Israel as a Jewish state would formally possess about 85 percent of the country west of the Jordan and all its resources and borders, and render any meaningful return of Palestinian refugees to the country infeasible. (Netanyahu, for whom even a truncated Palestinian BANTUSTAN is too great a concession, has not yet indicated whether he will seek a Bantustan defined by the separation Barrier and the settlement blocs or merely an indefinite prolonging of the status quo.)

As concern over the country's dwindling Jewish majority rises (recent census figures indicate that the Palestinians now constitute a majority in the area west of the Jordan River), overt public discussion about transferring the Palestinians out of the Occupied Territories—and even out of Israel proper—has become increasingly common in the MEDIA, the Knesset, and public forums. According to a poll conducted in 2005 by the Jaffee Center for Strategic Studies, a security-oriented think tank affiliated with Tel Aviv University, 46 percent of Israel's Jewish citizens favor transferring Palestinians out of the Occupied Territories, while 31 percent favor transferring Israeli Arabs out of the country; 60 percent of respondents said they were in favor of encouraging Israeli Arabs to leave the country.

See also ANTI-ZIONISM; DEPORTATION; FAMILY REUNIFICATION; OCCUPATION; OTTOMAN EMPIRE PALESTINIAN SOCIETY, PRE-1948; SETTLERS AND SETTLEMENTS, EAST JERUSALEM; WAR, 1948

Bibliography

Abu-Zayyad, Ziad. "Land: The Core of the Conflict." Palestine-Israel Journal. 2 (1997).
 Bazbaz, Marwan. "Settlement in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip." Palestine-Israel Journal. 4:2 (1997).
 Benvenisti, Eyal. Legal Dualism: The Absorption of the Occupied Territories into Israel. Jerusalem: Jerusalem Post Press (West Bank Data Project), 1989.
 Benvenisti, Meron. Sacred Landscape: The Buried History of the Holy Land since 1948. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2000.

Benvenisti, Meron, and Shlomo Khayat. The West Bank and Gaza Atlas. Jerusalem: The Jerusalem Post, 1988.
 Bishara, Marwan. Palestine/Israel: Peace or Apartheid. London: Zed Books, 2001.
 B'Tselem. The Quiet Deportation: Revocation of Residency of East Jerusalem Palestinians. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 1997.
 Cheshin, Amir, et al. Separate and Unequal: The Inside Story of Israeli Rule in East Jerusalem. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1999.
 Cohen, Shaul Ephraim. The Politics of Planting: Israeli-Palestinian Competition for Control of Land in the Jerusalem Periphery. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1993.
 Davis, Uri. Apartheid Israel: Possibilities for the Struggle Within. London: Zed Books, 2004.
 Dweik, Musa. "Settlements and the Palestinian Right to Self-Determination." Palestine-Israel Journal. 4:2 (1997).
 Flapan, Simha. The Birth of Israel: Myths and Realities. New York: Pantheon, 1987.
 ———. Zionism and the Palestinians. London: Croom Helm, 1979.
 Ghazi. "The 1948 Israeli-Palestinian War and Its Aftermath: the Transformation and De-signification of Palestine's Cultural Landscape." Annals of the Association of American Geographers. 86:2 (1996).
 Halper, Jeff. "The 94 Percent Solution: A Matrix of Control." Middle East Report. Fall 2000.
 ———. "Dismantling the Matrix of Control." News from Within. 15:10 (1999).
 ———. "Israel's War on Palestinians: The Campaign of House Demolitions." Tikkun. 13:5 (1998).
 ———. "The Road to Apartheid: The Trans-Israel Highway." News from Within. 16:5 (2000).
 Hass, Amira. "Clearing the Jordan Valley of Palestinians." Ha'aretz (Jerusalem). 16 February 2006.
 ———. "Down the Expulsion Highway." Counterpunch. 15 February 2006.
 ———. "The Silent Expulsion: Palestinian Businessmen Wonder Why Israel Wants Them out of the Territories." Ha'aretz. 5 September 2006.
 ———. "The Slippery Slope of Expulsion." Ha'aretz. 5 September 2006.
 ———. "Threats of Forced Mass Expulsion." Le Monde diplomatique. 19 February 2003.
 ———. "Will You Just Stand on the Sidelines?" Ha'aretz. 6 November 2002.
 Khalidi, Rashid. Palestinian Identity: The Construction of Modern National Consciousness. New York: Columbia University Press, 1997.
 Khalidi, Walid. All That Remains: The Palestinian Villages Occupied and Depopulated by Israel in 1948. Washington, DC: The Institute for Palestine Studies, 1992.
 Kimmmerling, Baruch. Land, Conflict and Nation Building: A Sociological Study of the Territorial Factors in the Jewish-Arab Conflict. Mimeo. Mt. Scopus: Hebrew University, 1976.

- . Zionism and Territory. Berkeley, CA: Institute of International Studies, 1983.
- Kolatt, Israel. “The Zionist Movement and the Arabs.” In Zionism and the Arabs. Edited by Shmuel Almog. Jerusalem: Zalman Shazar Center, 1983.
- Lustick, I. Arabs in the Jewish State: Israel’s Control of a National Minority. Austin: University of Texas Press, 1980.
- Matar, Ibrahim. “The Quiet War: Land Expropriation in the Occupied Territories.” Palestine-Israel Journal. 4:2 (1997).
- Mansour, Atallah. “Arab Lands in Israel: A Festering Wound.” LAW Report. Palestine-Israel Journal. 4:2 (1997).
- Morris, Benny. 1948 and After: Israel and the Palestinians. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1994.
- . The Birth of the Palestinian Refugee Problem, 1947–1949. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1979.
- Pappé, Ilan. “The Geneva Bubble.” The London Review of Books. 26:1 (2004).
- Savir, Uri. The Process. New York: Vintage, 1998.
- Shavit, Uriya, and Jalal Bana. “The Secret Exodus—Palestinian Emigration.” Ha’aretz Magazine. 5 October 2001.
- Shehadeh, Raja. “Land and Occupation: A Legal Review.” Palestine-Israel Journal. 4:2 (1997).
- Shlaim, Avi. Collusion across the Jordan. Oxford: Clarendon, 1988.
- . The Iron Wall: Israel and the Arab World. New York: W.W. Norton, 2000.
- Sofer, Arnon. Israel, Demography 2000–2020: Dangers and Opportunities. Haifa, Israel: National Security Studies Center, University of Haifa, 2001.
- . “The Jordan Valley Must Remain Part of Israel.” Omedia. 29 October 2006.
- . “Realignment or Extinction: More Withdrawals Crucial to Fight Demographic Threat.” YNetnews. 15 September 2006.
- Sternhell, Zeev. The Founding Myths of Israel. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1998.
- Teveth, Shabtai. Ben-Gurion and the Palestinian Arabs: From Peace to War. New York: Oxford University Press, 1985.
- World Bank. Four Years: Intifada, Closures and Palestinian Economic Crisis. Washington, DC: World Bank, 2004.
- Yiftachel, Oren. “Democracy or Ethnocracy: Territory and Settler Politics in Israel/Palestine.” Middle East Report. 1998.
- . “Judaize and Divide: Shaping Spaces in the Israeli Ethnocracy.” News from Within. December 1999.

—Jeff Halper

Transfer Committee, 1948

In May 1948, a Transfer Committee was established by non-Cabinet members of the first government of Israel to determine the feasibility of expelling the Palestinian population. YOSEF WEITZ, representing the JEWISH NATIONAL FUND, was the moving force behind it with the approval of Foreign Minister MOSHE SHARETT. Besides Weitz, the committee consisted of Eliyahu Sasson, who headed the Arab Affairs Department at the JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL, and Ezra Danin, representing the Israeli War Cabinet. The committee, especially Weitz, had open-door access to Prime Minister DAVID BEN-GURION, the rest of the Israeli Cabinet, and local HAGANA (the military organization) officials in the field, which enabled it to become effective in achieving its goals.

The Transfer Committee came into being as the result of a letter Danin wrote to Weitz, in May 1948, suggesting a committee to seek ways to carry out transfer of the Arab population at this opportunity when it had left its normal place of residence. “Let us not waste the fact that a large Arab population has moved from its home, and achieving such a thing again would be very difficult in normal times. . . . [I]f we do not seek to discourage the return of the Arabs . . . then they must be confronted with faits accomplis.” Among the faits accomplis he proposed were the destruction of Palestinians’ houses, “settling Jews in all areas evacuated,” and expropriating Palestinian properties.

On 28 May 1948, Weitz met with Sharett (who had played a role in the 1937 Transfer Committee set up by the Jewish Agency) and inquired whether “action should be taken to turn the flight of the Arabs from the country and blocking their return into an established fact.” If so, he proposed to entrust two or three persons “to deal with this according to a premeditated plan.” He also suggested that a three-person committee, composed of Danin, Sasson, and himself, be appointed to “work out a plan of action directed [at achieving] the transfer goal.” Sharett congratulated Weitz on his initiative and declared that he, too, believed that these “phenomena [Palestinian flight] must be exploited and turned into an established fact.”

Two days later, Weitz noted in his diary, “From now on, I shall call it the Transfer Committee. It seems that Sharett took measures approving the appointment of this committee the day before yesterday [on 28 May] in talks with secretaries. In the evening I discussed this question [population transfer] with [Eliezer] Kaplan [finance minister] and he also thinks that the transfer fact should be consolidated and the departing Arabs not allowed to return.” On 5 June 1948,

Weitz met Ben-Gurion in Tel Aviv and gave him the blueprint of the Transfer Committee, titled "Scheme for the Solution of the Arab Problem in the State of Israel." The document, contained in a three-page memorandum signed by Weitz, Danin, and Sasson, called for the following:

- "Retroactive transfer"
- Preventing Palestinian Arabs from returning to their homes
- Destroying Palestinian Arab villages during military operations
- Preventing cultivation and harvesting of Palestinian Arab lands
- Settling Jews in Palestinian Arab towns and villages
- Instituting legislation to bar the return of the REFUGEES
- Launching a propaganda campaign for the resettlement of the refugees in other places

According to Weitz, Ben-Gurion "agreed to the whole [transfer policy] line, but thought that the first priority should be destruction of the Palestinian villages, establishment of Jewish settlements and prevention of Palestinian cultivation and only later worry for the organized resettlement of the Palestinian refugees in the Arab countries." In early May 1948, Ben-Gurion gave his approval to the committee to oversee "the cleaning up [nikui in Hebrew] of the Arab settlements, cultivation of [Arab] fields and their settlement [by Jews], and the creation of a labor battalion to carry out this work."

Although the Israeli Cabinet had not yet given its approval of the Transfer Proposals, the committee supervised the systematic destruction of villages in various sectors as part of a policy designed to further Palestinian exodus and impede the return of the refugees. The actual destruction was the joint effort of the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) and the Jewish settlements. Israeli historian Benny Morris described the influence that Weitz and the Transfer Committee had on the Israeli Cabinet and the implementation of its goals: "At this stage [early June] Weitz was not to be deterred by the lack of formal, written permit for his [Transfer Committee's] activities. . . . [He talked] with Danin about how to go about destroying the abandoned villages—where would the money come from, the tractors, the dynamite, the manpower? And where was it best to begin? . . . With most able-bodied men conscripted into the Israeli Defense Forces, with most equipment, such as tractors and tracked caterpillars, in use by the army or in agriculture, and with dynamite in perennially short supply, Weitz had a job of it organizing what amounted to an enormous project of destruction."

There is no doubt that Ben-Gurion agreed to Weitz's blueprint. Eliezer Kaplan said as much to Weitz when they met on 8 June, adding his own endorsement of the plan. On 13 June, Weitz traveled north to Bet She'an and the Jezreel Valley, where he saw "[o]ur people . . . reaping in the fields of [the Arab village] Zar'in," as he recorded in his diary. In KIBBUTZ Bet ha-Shita, Weitz met David Baum from Kfar Yehezkeel and Avraham Yoffe, the commander of the IDF's Golani Brigade battalion in the Jezreel Valley. "From the start of our talk," Weitz recorded, "it became clear that there is agreement among us on the question of the abandoned villages: destruction, renovation, and settlement [by Jews]." On 16 June 1948, Weitz gave Ben-Gurion a progress report on the destruction of the Palestinian towns: "Maghar, Fajja, Biyar Adas have been destroyed. [Destruction is proceeding in] Miska, Beit Dajan (east of Tel Aviv), [in] Hula, [in] Hawassa near HAIFA, in Sumeiriya near ACRE and Ja'tun [Khirbat Ja'tun] near Nahariya, Manshiya . . . near Acre. Daliyat ar Ruha has been destroyed and work is about to begin at Buteimat and Sabbarin."

In late October 1948, as the majority of the Palestinian refugees had been already transferred, the Transfer Committee submitted its final memorandum to the Cabinet, stating: "The Exodus of the Arabs beyond the boundaries of the State of Israel was not from the start an impossible occurrence and its occurrence is not among the surprises that have never been predicted. . . . On the contrary, much had been said about such a possibility, which has come out of planned considerations, in recent years, as a solution to the problem of the whole Land of Israel." At that point, Israel came under increased UNITED NATIONS and international pressure to allow the return of Palestinian refugees to their homes, farms, and businesses. Sasson wrote to Sharett in September 1948, "I would advise reconsidering the refugee problem. . . . I do not by this advice mean, heaven forbid, the return of all the refugees. No, again no. My meaning is the return of a small part of them, forty to fifty thousand, over a long period . . . [starting] immediately, to silence a lot of people in the next meeting of the UN."

In August 1948 a report reached the leadership of the MAPAM party describing the destruction of the Palestinian villages. The report stated: "The destruction of the Arab villages has been going on for some months now. We [the Transfer Committee] are on the Syrian border and there is a danger that Arabs will use [the abandoned villages] for military operations if they get the chance. But I spoke to a number of members from [Kibbutz] Ma'ayan Baruch and nearby Kibbutzim and I got the impression that there exists the possibility that there is a desire to destroy the villages and houses so that it will be impossible for the Arabs to return to them. A week ago, a representative of the JNF [Jewish National Fund] came to visit. He saw that in the [abandoned Palestinian] village of As Sanbariya, which is a kilometer from Ma'ayan Baruch, several houses are still standing, albeit without roofs. He told the secretariat of the kibbutz to destroy the houses immediately and he said openly that this will enable us to take title to the village's lands, because the Arabs won't be able to return there. . . . [T]he kibbutz agreed immediately."

The committee stopped functioning in October 1948, but, soon after the war's end in 1949, Weitz pleaded with Ben-Gurion to take a firm and unequivocal stand against any possibility of restoring the Palestinian refugees to their homes. In September, he proposed a series of measures that would drive the refugees far from the border areas, deep into the Arab hinterland. He insisted that Palestinian refugees "must be harassed continually." In mid-1949, Weitz recommended that if Israel was to be compelled to repatriate Palestinian refugees in the future, it must categorically refuse to return them to their villages—but only to the towns where they would not exceed 15 percent of the Jewish population.

See also WAR, 1948

Bibliography

- Davis, Uri. Apartheid Israel: Possibilities for the Struggle Within. London: Zed Books, 2004.
- Fischbach, Michael R. Records of Dispossession: Palestinian Refugee Property and the Arab-Israeli Conflict. New York: Columbia University Press, 2003.
- Masalha, Nur. Expulsion of the Palestinians: The Concept of "Transfer" in Zionist Political Thought, 1882–1948. Beirut and Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1992.
- . An Israeli Plan to Transfer Galilee's Christians to South America: Yosef Weitz and "Operation

Yohanan," 1949–53. Durham, UK: Centre for Middle Eastern and Islamic Studies, University of Durham, 1996.

Morris, Benny. 1948 and After: Israel and the Palestinians. Oxford, UK: Clarendon Press, 1990.

———. 1948 and After: Israel and the Palestinians. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1991.

———. The Birth of the Palestinian Refugee Problem, 1947–1949, reprint ed. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1989.

Palumbo, Michael. The Palestinian Catastrophe: The 1948 Expulsion of a People from Their Homeland. New York: Olive Branch Press, 1991.

Peterberg, Gabriel. "Erasures." New Left Review. 10 July–August 2001.

Segev, Tom. 1949: The First Israelis, rev. ed. New York: Owl Books, 1998.

Truman, Harry S (1884–1972)

Harry S Truman was the thirty-third president of the UNITED STATES, serving from 1945, on the death of Franklin Roosevelt, through 1953. When he put the weight of the United States behind the UNITED NATIONS partition plan, without which UN RESOLUTION 181 would not have passed, Truman birthed the new state of Israel and committed the United States to supporting it thereafter.

Truman was born in Lamar, Missouri. When he was six years of age, his parents moved the family to Independence, Missouri, and it was there that Truman spent the bulk of his formative years. After graduating from high school in 1901, Truman worked at a series of clerical jobs before he became a farmer in 1906, an occupation in which he remained for another ten years. He was the last president not to earn a college degree, although he studied for two years toward a law degree at the Kansas City Law School.

With the onset of US participation in World War I, Truman enlisted in the National Guard and was chosen to be an officer, then commanded a regimental battery in France. At the war's conclusion, Truman returned to Independence and, together with his friend Eddie Jacobson, opened a men's clothing store. In 1922, the store went bankrupt, an event for which Truman blamed Republican economic policies; thus he joined the Democratic Party. He and Jacobson remained friends for the rest of their lives, and it was to Jacobson that he often turned for advice on the Zionist issue.

In the 1934 election, Truman ran for Missouri's open Senate seat, campaigning as a New Dealer. Once elected, he supported President Roosevelt on most issues. During his second term, Truman gained national prominence when his military preparedness committee (popularly known as the Truman Committee) made a scandal of military wastefulness by exposing fraud and mismanagement. His advocacy of commonsense, cost-saving measures for the military gained him wide respect, and he emerged as a popular choice for the vice-presidential slot in 1944. Truman was barely installed as vice president when Roosevelt died on 12 April 1945, elevating him to the presidency.

The new president had a plethora of major international problems on his platter, and the question of Palestine was not paramount. Yet by 1947 it had a prominence greater than its objective significance. When, in 1947, Great Britain announced its intention to withdraw from Palestine and turn the issue of partition over to the United Nations, the United States assumed the role of the dominant power in the conflict and was faced with the issue of whether or not to support the partition of Palestine into Arab and Jewish states. Truman was deeply committed, on a humanitarian basis, to Jewish refugees' admission to Palestine from Nazi camps. On 29 November 1945, the ANGLO-AMERICAN COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY recommended immediate admission to Palestine of 100,000 European refugees, although it did not recommend partition or formation of a Jewish state. On 30 April, Truman publicly backed the committee's request for 100,000 certificates of IMMIGRATION and called for an end to the MACDONALD WHITE PAPER limitations on Jewish immigration.

In 1947 the United Nations appointed a UN SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON PALESTINE to investigate the situation and report back to the world body. The committee itself was hopelessly divided, presenting two reports: the majority recommended partition, and the minority opposed it. Truman had not previously supported partition or an independent Jewish state, and, moreover, his closest advisors were seriously divided on the issue. Strong opposition came from the State Department, including Secretary of State George Marshall, Undersecretary of State Robert Lovett, John Foster Dulles, and Robert McClintock. Also opposed were the War Department, the Joint Chiefs, the Department of the Navy, and its secretary James Forrestal, among others. All feared that the establishment of a Jewish state in the midst of the Arab world would generate instability, foster communist penetration of the region, and impede US access—especially to the all-important commodity of oil. On the other hand, members of Truman's staff and a number of close personal friends strongly favored partition and convinced the president of its efficacy. These included David K. Niles, Clark Clifford, and Eddie Jacobson, who brought the future president of Israel, CHAIM WEIZMANN, to the White House. In the final analysis, Truman threw the weight of the United States behind the UN Partition Resolution, carrying with it a number of previously undecided countries, and, on 19 November 1947, Resolution 181 legitimized the Zionist project. To a considerable extent, Truman's pro-Zionist outlook was based on humanitarian, moral, and sentimental grounds, many of which were an outgrowth of the president's religious upbringing and his familiarity with the Bible.

Truman did not support the Zionists on all issues—for example, he rejected Israel's request for armaments. Instead, the president, on the advice of the State Department, instituted a formal arms embargo on 5 December 1947 in order to prevent a regional arms race. This position was consistent with the US view that security and stability in the Middle East were essential for Washington to pursue its interests in the area. Despite the formal embargo, Zionists were able to procure large amounts of weapons illegally in the United States and to raise enormous sums of money to purchase arms elsewhere, but not because of Truman's policies. Additionally, President Truman declined to provide US troops to assist the Zionist cause despite the importuning of Moshe Sharett of the Jewish Agency and others. Aside from not wanting to embroil the US military in the Palestine question, there were serious concerns about the United States' having insufficient leverage in Europe if its troops were tied down in Palestine.

Conversely, Truman gave the Zionists a huge boost by providing the new state, on the same day that it declared its independence (14 May 1948), immediate de facto recognition. He also strongly opposed the 11 June 1948 plan devised by Swedish diplomat COUNT FOLKE BERNADOTTE for a resolution of the conflict. Moreover, at the urging of Weizmann, Truman provided Israel with a $100,000 loan that was crucial to its economic development. He named as ambassador to Israel James G. McDonald, who had been sympathetic to the Zionists when he served on the Anglo-American Committee (and in so doing passed over the entire career foreign service bureaucracy). Further, Truman worked hard to ensure Israel's admission to the United Nations. Israel's 29 December 1948 application was rejected, but, due to intense US pressure, its second application, on 24 February 1949, was accepted.

It is significant, however, that although Truman backed the partition resolution and the independence of the new Jewish state, he ignored the provision for a Palestinian state. Moreover, despite his deep humanitarian instinct regarding European Jewish refugees, when the 1948 WAR created almost 800,000 Palestinian REFUGEES, he evidenced no interest in their plight. He once told a group of State Department representatives concerned about his policies on Palestine: "I am sorry, gentlemen, but I have to answer to hundreds of thousands who are anxious for the success of ZIONISM: I do not have hundreds of thousands of Arabs among my constituents."

See also SAUDI ARABIA

Bibliography

- Acheson, Dean. Present at the Creation: My Years in the State Department. New York: W. W. Norton, 1969.
- Anderson, Irvine. Aramco: The United States and Saudi Arabia: A Study of the Dynamics of Foreign Oil Policy, 1933–1950. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1981.
- Benson, Michael. Harry S. Truman and the Founding of Israel. Westport, CT: Praeger Publishers, 1997.
- Clifford, Clark. Counsel to the President: A Memoir. New York: Random House, 1991.
- . "The Unique and Inspiring Leadership of President Truman." In Harry S. Truman: The Man from Independence. Edited by William F. Levantrosser. New York: Greenwood Press, 1986.
- Cohen, Michael. Truman and Israel. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1990.
- Donovan, Robert. Conflict and Crisis: The Presidency of Harry S. Truman, 1945–1948. New York: W. W. Norton, 1977.
- Evensen, Bruce. "The Limits of Presidential Leadership: Truman at War with the Zionists, the Press, Public Opinion and His Own State Department over Palestine." Presidential Studies Quarterly. 23 (Spring 1993).
- Lilienthal, Alfred. "Remembering General George Marshall's Clash with Clark Clifford over Premature Recognition of Israel." Washington Report on Middle Eastern Affairs. June 1999.
- Miller, Merle. Plain Speaking: An Oral Biography of Harry S. Truman. New York: Berkley Books, 1974.
- Neff, Donald. "Truman Overrode Strong State Department Warning against Partitioning of Palestine in 1947." Washington Report on Middle Eastern Affairs. September/October 1994.

- Snetsinger, John. Truman, the Jewish Vote, and the Creation of Israel. Stanford, CA: Hoover Institution Press, 1974.
- Truman, Harry S. Memoirs. Vol. I: Years of Decisions. Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1955.
- . Memoirs. Vol. II: Years of Trial and Hope. Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1955.
- . Strictly Personal and Confidential: The Letters Harry Truman Never Mailed. Edited by Monte M. Poen. Boston: Little, Brown, 1982.
- Truman, Margaret. Harry S. Truman. New York: William Morrow, 1973.

Trumpeldor, Joseph (1880–1920)

Joseph Trumpeldor was a soldier and early pioneer-settler in Palestine who dedicated his life to organizing the military defense of the Jewish settlements in Palestine. His life and his death defending Tel Hai settlement made him a legendary hero.

Born in a small town in the northern Caucasus, Trumpeldor was strongly influenced in his youth by the model of collective communal life, which he witnessed at a nearby farming commune established by followers of the Russian writer Leo Tolstoy. In Trumpeldor's mind, the idea of collective living merged with the Zionist ideal of settling Palestine, and he dreamed of establishing agricultural communes in Palestine, which, if necessary, would be defended by armed force. Before he could realize his dreams, he was drafted into the Russian army and lost an arm while fighting in the Russo-Japanese war. In 1912, he immigrated to Palestine and worked for a while at KIBBUTZ Degania, participating in the defense of the Jewish settlements in the lower Galilee. When World War I broke out, he was deported to EGYPT after he refused to join the Turkish army. In Alexandria, he called for the formation of a legion of volunteers drawn from the Jewish deportees to be at the disposal of the British and help liberate the country from the Turks.

The British granted him permission, and in 1915 he founded the ZION MULE CORPS and saw action in Gallipoli, where he was shot in the shoulder. From 1915 to 1919, Trumpeldor traveled widely, spending time in England and Russia, promoting the organization of Jewish regiments, which would fight the Ottomans, and Jewish paramilitary units, which would protect the settlements in Palestine. In Russia, in particular, he was active in the organization of the He-Halutz movement, whose aim was the training of young Jews for settling in Palestine.

In 1919 he returned to Palestine, and in January 1920 he was called to the northern Galilee to help organize the defense of the settlements there, which had come under increasing Arab attacks. On 1 March, he was mortally wounded while participating in the defense of Tel Hai; his dying words were “Ein davar, tov lamut be’ad arzenu” (“Never mind; it is worthwhile to die for the country”). Trumpeldor was buried near Tel Hai, and in 1934 a memorial was erected at his gravesite. Shortly after his death, a new settlement at the foot of Mount Gilboa was named Tel Yosef in his honor, and songs, poems, and stories were written about him as a hero of the Jewish settlement of Palestine. His life story served as an inspirational model to both the pioneering socialist youth movements and the right-wing youth groups. One of the largest and most successful of the latter was named in his honor: BETAR, an abbreviation of Berit Trumpeldor.

See also OTTOMAN EMPIRE; ZIONISM

Bibliography

- Hazon, Yoram. The Jewish State: The Struggle for Israel's Soul. New York: Basic Books, 2000.
- Lipovetzky, Pesah. Joseph Trumpeldor: Life and Works. Tel Aviv: Youth and Hechalutz Department, World Zionist Organization, 1953.
- Zertal, Idith. Israel's Holocaust and the Politics of Nationhood. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2005.

Tsemel, Lea (1945–)

Lea Tsemel, a pioneer in the practice of human rights law, is a Jewish Israeli lawyer who defends Palestinians in the Israeli judicial system, especially before the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT. One of her colleagues, sharing a podium with Tsemel, called her “the valiant lawyer who defends Palestinian PRISONERS and the REFUSENIKS, who represent the conscience of Israel.”

Born in HAIFA to Jewish immigrant parents—her father from Poland and her mother from Russia—she grew up with a comfortable life style, which she later described as “typically middle class,” in a neighborhood full of Jews who came from different places. During her formative years, Tsemel was strongly socialized, both at home and at school, in the ideology of ZIONISM. She was taught that Zionist ideals and the Israeli state were the best in the world, while the Palestinians, whose defense was to become her life’s work, were invisible. In 1963 Tsemel joined the Israeli army, as obligated, but did not enjoy the experience and was discharged honorably after one year of service (rather than the usual two). It was during her military service that Tsemel began to study law at night at Tel Aviv University. Her interest in the law stemmed from her desire to pursue social justice: “I had such a strong feeling that injustice was intolerable that I had to do something about it.” After her discharge, she moved to JERUSALEM and continued her law studies full-time at the Hebrew University.

During the 1967 WAR between Israel and its Arab neighbors, Tsemel was a volunteer fighter near the BORDER in Jerusalem. When the war was over, Tsemel was one of the first Israelis to visit the OLD CITY and the first Israeli woman to see the WESTERN WALL. In appreciation of the volunteers’ service, the army took them on a victory tour, and it was on this excursion that Tsemel witnessed several events that affected her tremendously and drew her attention to the Palestinian cause. The first incident took place in a BETHLEHEM cinema where soldiers and Israeli civilians were celebrating raucously. In the middle of this triumphant jubilee, twenty Palestinian notables were brought in by the Israeli army to share in the festivities with the soldiers and Israeli civilians. Tsemel recalls that her first reaction was to feel sorry for them, but that this emotion was quickly displaced by a feeling of utter shame as the victors humiliated the Palestinians. She realized that there could never be peace between Israel and the Palestinians “because this great victory for us was a complete disaster for them.”

Her second disturbing experience on the victory tour took place on the road to JERICHO where she saw a whole new generation of REFUGEES carrying their belongings and fleeing the Israeli OCCUPATION. Tsemel recalls, “I couldn’t bear it. It was directly a picture of the Jews in Europe and it was clear that they were being forced to leave. The feeling in me was horrible.” She also witnessed the Israeli army’s destruction of a Palestinian neighborhood (the Moroccan Quarter) near the Wailing Wall and learned of an incident at the Damia Bridge where Palestinians were trying to swim across the Jordan River to return to their homes, and the Israeli army opened fire on the defenseless population. A final episode, shortly after the war, involved the destruction of three villages in the Latrun area near RAMLA. “So I was shocked, really, really shocked. I couldn't believe that we were doing these things."

At the Hebrew University after the war, Tsemel took an interest in politics and joined a radical movement, MATZPEN, whose main tenets were ANTI-ZIONISM and socialism. The organization was active throughout Israel—demonstrating, giving speeches, issuing pamphlets, and engaging in other forms of political activity. "But we were extremely isolated in Israeli society. We faced incredible opposition. I knew I was not accepted—people would see me and call me a traitor." Soon, Tsemel's views became widely known, and when she finished her formal studies in 1968, she had a hard time finding a lawyer who would accept her for the required two-year practicum. Eventually, she did locate someone to supervise her practicum, and she completed her legal apprenticeship. In 1970 she took her law exams, after having also obtained a certificate in criminal law from the Hebrew University. Her first case as a lawyer was defending the Black Panthers (underprivileged MIZRAHI/SEPHARDIC Jews) who were mobilizing and demonstrating for equal treatment in Israeli society. In 1972, she defended a Jewish-Palestinian network that belonged to an organization the state had declared illegal. Some had gone to SYRIA for training, and one of the Jews had given the Syrians some sensitive information. Tsemel defended them all the way to the Supreme Court, and the case was a turning point for the young lawyer, who met many Palestinian political prisoners in the military and civil courts. Thereafter, she dedicated her life to these prisoners and became the only Jewish lawyer, besides FELICIA LANGER in Israel, who fought for the Palestinians.

As a human rights lawyer, she has focused on cases of torture, FAMILY REUNIFICATION, DEPORTATION, HOUSE DEMOLITIONS, compensation for the deaths and injuries of Palestinian civilians uninvolved in political activity, and ADMINISTRATIVE DETENTION. Tsemel worked with Belgian attorney Luc Waulleyn, one of three lawyers representing twenty-three survivors of the 1982 SABRA AND SHATILA MASSACRE in LEBANON, in their case against ARIEL SHARON. Tsemel believes that the lawsuit's importance is primarily in "the message it sends to soldiers, army officers, and members of the other security organizations. They have to understand that there are legal aspects to every action they take against the Palestinian population.

A day will come when the people they uproot from their homes, the people they torture, will require legal aid from international courts."

Tsemel's tireless work on behalf of Palestinians, though deeply appreciated by the thousands she has helped, has not been, in her own mind, successful: "My parents left Europe just before the HOLOCAUST and they lost most of their family members in it. They came to that part of the world, which today is called Israel, and used to be called Palestine, to promise me a better life and the security of a state of our own. After almost 60 years I cannot say that they succeeded; on the contrary. It seems that my parents and others who wanted to build the state of Israel did not understand that it is impossible to build a new future on the relics of oppression. I've been defending Palestinians in Israeli courts for some 30 years and despite my efforts I have still not succeeded in making judges, whether in military tribunals or the Supreme Court of Justice, understand this basic truth. The situation deteriorates and last year, as in all of the past 25 years, I took two or three steps backwards for every one forwards."

See also ISRAELI MILITARY COURT SYSTEM IN THE OCCUPIED TERRITORIES

Bibliography

- Kol Ha'Ir Magazine*. "Belgian Attorney Visits Israel to Gather Evidence against Sharon." (Hebrew). 20 July 2001.
- Rubenberg, Cheryl A. "Lea Tsemel." In Women in Law. Edited by Rebecca Mae Salokar and Mary L. Volcansek. Westport, CT: Greenwood Press, 1996.
- Tsemel, Lea. "Double Standard Justice in Israel: The Case of the Jewish Terror Organization." In Palestine Yearbook of International Law 2: The Legal and Administrative System. Jerusalem: Association for Civil Rights in Israel, 1985.
- . "An Occupation That Creates Children Willing to Die." ZNet. 3 December 2003. www.zmag.org/znet.
- . "An Open Letter to Abu Jerry." Middle East Report. 213 (1999).
- . "Open Letter to Itzhar Nafsu." Ha'olam Hazeh (Hebrew weekly). 1985.
- . "Personal Status and Rights." In Occupation: Israel over Palestine. Edited by Naseer Aruri. Belmont, MA: Association of Arab-American University Graduates, 1983.
- . "The Political Prisoners." Edited by Erik Fosse, Ebba Wergeland, and Ibrahim Abu-Lughod. Special double issue. Israel and the Question of Palestine: Arab Studies Quarterly 7:2–3 (1985).
- . "The Supreme Court: Torture Outlaw." News from Within (Jerusalem). 15:9 (1999).

———. You Have the Right to Remain Silent. Tel Aviv: Key Publishing, 1978.

———. Zionism, Feminism, and Women's Liberation. Tel Aviv: Red Pages Publishers, 1980.

Tsemel, Lea, et al. The Trap Is Closing on Palestinian Jerusalemites: Israel's Demographic Policies in East Jerusalem from the 1967 Annexation to the Eve of the Final Status Negotiations (1996). Jerusalem: Alternative Information Center, 1996.

Tunis: The Tunisian Interlude

When Israel invaded LEBANON in 1982, the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) was expelled. In response, Tunisian president Habib Bourguiba invited the PLO to set up headquarters in Borj Cedria near Tunis, and the PLO leadership decamped to Tunis (most of the lower-level soldiers were sent to a variety of countries). The leadership remained in Tunis until 1994 when, under the OSLO ACCORDS between the PLO and Israel, they came to the GAZA STRIP. Tunis was also the headquarters of the ARAB LEAGUE, which had been transferred from Cairo to punish EGYPT for signing a peace agreement with Israel.

The expulsion of the PLO from Beirut marked the start of a long crisis for the Palestinian organization, isolated in North Africa, far from the countries where Palestinians were concentrated, and in dire financial straits. Although the elite lived well, the PLO could neither pay its employees nor help Palestinian REFUGEES. Moreover, after the PLO was forced to Tunis, many Palestinians increasingly questioned PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT's leadership. The more militant PLO factions based in SYRIA and Lebanon gained influence at the expense of the PLO's FATAH party, and Arafat seemed to lose his once-firm grip on Palestinian politics.

On 1 October 1985, allegedly in retaliation for the murder of three Israelis in Cyprus on 25 September, Israel bombarded the PLO's Tunisian beachfront headquarters, destroying almost the entire complex, including Arafat's bureau and the headquarters of FORCE 17, Arafat's security guard. Over sixty Palestinians were killed and another seventy injured; there were no Israeli losses. Arafat miraculously survived.

As the year 1988 opened, Arafat and the PLO were beginning the struggle for control, from Tunis, of the spontaneously ignited INTIFADA in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. The PLO saw much potential in the uprising against the OCCUPATION, if only it could harness and direct it. However, on 16 April 1988, Israel's intelligence agency

MOSSAD, authorized by Prime Minister YITZHAK SHAMIR, sent a commando team to assassinate Arafat's deputy, KHALIL AL-WAZIR (Abu Jihad), who was in charge of attempting to guide the Intifada. His death, in his Tunis home along with his bodyguards, was a significant loss to Arafat personally, to the PLO, and to the Palestinian cause.

By the year's end, worldwide MEDIA coverage of the Intifada had won new international sympathy for the Palestinian cause, support that reached beyond the traditional Arab/Islamic and Soviet blocs. At a PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL (PNC, the PLO's legislative body) meeting in Algiers on 12–15 November 1988, Arafat sought to capitalize on this groundswell of support by issuing a DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE for a Palestinian state. The PNC based the Algiers Declaration on UN RESOLUTION 181, the 1947 partition plan that divided BRITISH MANDATE Palestine into Arab and Jewish states. On 14 December 1988, Arafat for the first time told the UNITED NATIONS that the PLO denounced TERRORISM and recognized Israel's right to exist. He said the PLO supported the right of all parties to live in peace—Israel included. The UNITED STATES found these statements insufficient for engaging in direct talks, but using prominent American Jews as a back channel for communications, the RONALD REAGAN administration made it known that if Arafat would more explicitly renounce terrorism and more clearly recognize the state of Israel, the United States was prepared to enter into a dialogue with the PLO. In Geneva later that month, Arafat publicly accepted UN RESOLUTIONS 181, 242, AND 338 and “renounced” the use of terrorism. In turn, the United States acknowledged that all its preconditions had been met and opened low-level talks with the PLO in Tunis in December 1988 (which it terminated in June 1990).

Arafat, however, managed to squander these successes within three years by siding with IRAQ in the 1991 GULF WAR. Consequently, the PLO's very existence was at stake when the Israeli-Arab negotiations opened in the MADRID CONFERENCE on 30 October 1991, with the PLO excluded. Only non-PLO Palestinians “from inside” the Occupied Territories were allowed to participate. Arafat told his colleagues that the United States wanted “to humiliate and eliminate [him],” which meant “eliminating the PLO and all of you.”

The secret talks leading to the Oslo Accords offered Arafat a way out of this desperate corner. So weakened was the PLO at this juncture that Arafat endorsed a DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES, which was a retreat even from the autonomy plans put on the table with the 1979 CAMP DAVID ACCORDS. However, as political scientist Yezid Sayigh points out, for Arafat the main thing was that “it extended formal Israeli recognition of the PLO and ensured the transfer of the Tunis state-in-exile to the Occupied Territories.” It was the PLO’s political survival, then, rather than the substance of the Oslo Accords’ Declaration of Principles, that led to Arafat’s acquiescence. As time would show, it was a disastrous agreement for the Palestinian cause, but in 1994, Arafat and the PLO leadership were able to leave Tunisia for the soil of their homeland.

Bibliography

- Gresh, Alain. “From PLO to State: The Palestinians Dream On.” Le Monde diplomatique. September 1998.
- Sayigh, Yezid. Armed Struggle and the Search for State: The Palestinian National Movement, 1949–1993. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1997.

Tuqan, Fadwa (1917–2003)

Fadwa Tuqan is often called the “Poet of Palestine” for her forceful expression of a nation’s sense of loss and defiance. MOSHE DAYAN, the Israeli general, is said to have likened reading one of Tuqan’s poems to facing twenty enemy commandos. Yet the true power of her words derives not from warlike imagery, but from their affirmation of Palestinian identity and the dream of return.

Born in NABLUS, Palestine, her upbringing was privileged yet strictly circumscribed by social norms. During the 1948 WAR, when thousands of Palestinian Arab REFUGEES poured into Nablus, the town assumed the cultural mantle of the lost cities of JAFFA, HAIFA, and West JERUSALEM. Paradoxically, the Palestinian Nakba (catastrophe) and the death of Fadwa’s stern father in 1948 engendered a sense of liberation in the poet. Suddenly, young and educated women could mix freely with their male counterparts. “When the roof fell on Palestine, the veil fell off the face of the Nablus woman,” she wrote. Tuqan was the younger sister of the poet and playwright IBRAHIM TUQAN, who tutored her in poetry via letters posted from Beirut, where he was lecturing. Imbued with this heady spirit, Tuqan followed her initial collection, My Brother Ibrahim (1946), with new ones: Alone with the Days (1952), Give Us Love (1960), and Before the Closed Door (1967). They trace the evolution of Palestinian political consciousness: from shock, despair, and victimhood to sumud (steadfastness), resistance, and renewed pride.

Israel, however, was not her only foe. Another was Arab society itself and, in particular, its treatment of women. In her autobiography, translated as Mountainous Journey (1990), she describes how Arab women were hidden in the household like frightened birds in a crowded coop. Resisting those shackles, Tuqan studied at Oxford University during 1962–1964, studying English language and literature. She fell in love with the English countryside and wrote affectionately of the “aged metropolis,” London. Tuqan, who never married, traveled widely in Europe and the Middle East, borrowing motifs from her life in exile and mingling them with daring expressions of untrammelled sensuality.

But even poems based on distinctly non-Palestinian subjects—such as “Visions of Henry,” inspired by a painting—hark back to her “lost homeland” and reveal the clash between escapism and the “black rock” of memory. After Israel conquered Nablus in 1967, Tuqan’s poetry became more overtly nationalistic. OCCUPATION provided new topics—the ordeal of waiting at border crossings, the indignity of HOUSE DEMOLITIONS, and the fervor of the youth uprising. Yet her poems also display recognition of Israelis’ bonds to the land, which had previously been absent in Palestinian poetry.

After her poetry was translated into English in the 1980s, Tuqan gained an international audience. While young Arab Americans read her work to rediscover their roots, Israeli and Jewish feminists divined a sympathetic resonance from their sister across the border. Tuqan won poetry prizes from Italy, Greece, and JORDAN; gained the Palestinians’ Jerusalem Award for Culture and Art in 1990; and served on the board of trustees for An-Najah University in Nablus. Many Israelis, however, regarded her political analyses as simplistic, while some Palestinians felt that her attacks on Arab society merely reconfirmed the “orientalist” prejudices of Westerners. Ultimately, Tuqan will be remembered for the potency of her poetry and as a woman who preserved her people’s memories and expressed their aspirations.

See also PALESTINIAN SOCIETY, PRE-1948

Bibliography

- Handal, Nathalie, ed. The Poetry of Arab Women. New York: Interlink Publishing Group, 2000.
- Jayyusi, Salma Khadra, ed. Modern Arabic Poetry. New York: Columbia University Press, 1991.
- Nashat, Guity, and Judith E. Tucker. Women in the Middle East: Restoring Women to History. Indianapolis: Indiana University Press, 1999.
- Nye, Naomi Shihab. The Space between Our Footsteps. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1988.
- Tuqan, Fadwa. A Mountainous Journey: An Autobiography. Translated by Olive E. Kenny. Edited by Naomi Shihab Nye and Salma Khadra Jayyusi. New York: Graywolf Press, 1990.
- . Selected Poems of Fadwa Tuqan (English). Jordan: Yarmouk University, 1994.

Tuqan, Ibrahim (1905–1941)

A poet, playwright, and the director of Radio Palestine, Ibrahim Tuqan is considered by many to be the foremost Palestinian poet of the first half of the twentieth century. Reaffirming the continuing involvement of Arab poets in their societies, he fought for social and political justice. Born in NABLUS, Palestine, during Ottoman rule to a wealthy and prestigious family, Tuqan was the older brother of the poet FADWA TUQAN. He graduated from the American University of Beirut in 1934 and served as subdirector in charge of the Arabic Programme Section of the Jerusalem Palestine Broadcasting Station from 1936 to 1941.

Tuqan was, with Abu Salma ('ABD-AL-KARIM AL-KARMI) and Abd al-Rahim Mahmud, from the beginning of the 1930s the most prominent and popular of the nationalist poets who inspired the whole of Palestine. The work of these three men displays an extraordinary appreciation of what was going on politically, economically, and socially. For example, in 1932, the feudal-clerical leadership established a national fund, supposedly to prevent the LAND of poor peasants from falling into the hands of the Zionists. However, "Eight of those responsible for the fund project were land brokers for the Zionists," Tuqan wrote of this project.

As early as 1929, Tuqan began writing about the role that the big Arab landowners were playing in connection with the issue of land sales to the Zionists: "They have sold the country to its enemies because of their greed for money; but it is their homes they have sold. They could have been forgiven if they had been forced to do so by hunger, but God knows that they have never felt hunger or thirst. . . . Let him abstain from selling land and keep a plot in which to lay his bones." In the same year, Tuqan wrote his epic poem al-Thalatha al-Hamra (Red Tuesday) on the death sentences passed by the BRITISH MANDATE government on three Palestinian guerrillas—Fuad Hijazi of SAFED and Muhammad Jumjum and Ata al-Zir of ACRE. This poem became famous and part of the Palestinian revolutionary heritage. Tuqan is most respected for laying the foundations of Palestinian resistance poetry that later, under Israeli OCCUPATION, would become one of the most important manifestations of the endurance of the Palestinian masses.

See also PALESTINIAN POETRY; PALESTINIAN SOCIETY, PRE-1948

Bibliography

- Taha, Al-Mutawakel Said Bakker Saleh. Ibrahim Tuqan: A Study of His Poetry. Beirut, Lebanon: Arab Institute for Studies and Publication, 2003.
- . Study on the Poem "The Three Red": The Search for Another Poet. Beirut, Lebanon: Arab Institute for Studies and Publication, 2003.
- . This Is What Was Necessary: Letter from Ibrahim Tuqan to Fadwa Tuqan. Beirut, Lebanon: Arab Institute for Studies and Publication, 2003.
- . The Treasures: What Was Not Known about Ibrahim Tuqan, 2nd ed. Beirut, Lebanon: Arab Institute for Studies and Publication, 2003.

Turkey

Turkish government and military leaders of the Kemalist (secular) establishment have generally had positive attitudes toward and good relations with Israel. Throughout the Cold War and since, its leaders have considered ties with Israel a part of Turkey's Western orientation, indeed of its overall foreign policy. This pro-Israel orientation has also had a domestic component, as evidenced, for example, in the case of the June 1997 "silent coup" against Islamist prime minister Necmettin Erbakan and his Welfare (Refah) Party colleagues. At the same time, public opinion in Turkey has been generally more sympathetic than the government to the situation of the Palestinians, and consecutive governments have had to consider this, especially regarding relations with countries in the Arab world and with the increasing importance of world oil prices.

Although the Turkish government opposed the partition of Palestine in November 1947, since the 1948 WAR, it has tried to balance its relations with Israel and the Arab states, including the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO), with whom it established formal contacts in the mid-1970s. Yet Turkey's relations with Israel and the Palestinians have fluctuated depending on Turkey's perception of its national interests, either in terms of security or of economic issues. For the most part, during the 1950s and throughout the Cold War and again during the 1990s (at least until the 2000 Palestinian Intifada), when tensions with SYRIA increased over that country's support of the Kurdistan Workers' Party and Turkey's increased usage of upstream WATER resources of the Euphrates River, Turkish-Israeli relations were at their best. In the interim and since the start of the AL-AQSA INTIFADA, Turkish-Arab and Turkish-Palestinian relations were (or have been) closest.

All Turkish governments, with the exception of Welfare Party officials in Erbakan's coalition government (1996–1997), have been supportive of the Arab-Israeli and Israeli-Palestinian peace processes. Conversely, most Turkish Islamists, until the government of Recep Tayyip Erdogan and Abdullah Gul's Justice and Development Party (AKP), elected in November 2002, have been distrustful of Western initiatives, which they have considered as serving Israel's interests at the expense of the Palestinians. At the same time, Islamists (and leftists) have been the most critical of ZIONISM, the state of Israel, and Israeli policies in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. Indeed, while in late 2002 the AKP's vice chairman strongly criticized the policies of ARIEL SHARON's government toward the Palestinians, as had the previous Turkish government led by Bulent Ecevit, he also stated that strategic relations with Israel would not change and that religious and ideological concerns would not determine the AKP's foreign policy.

Despite opposing the 1947 UN General Assembly (UNGA) partition of Palestine, Turkey remained neutral during the 1948 War, although it sent tents and other supplies to Palestinian REFUGEES. Turkey also abstained on a UNITED NATIONS vote on admitting Israel to the world body. It eventually established de facto relations with Israel in March 1949 and exchanged chargé d'affaires with the Jewish state early the following year, becoming the first Muslim state to do so. Turkish foreign minister Necmettin Sadak explained his government's position in early 1949: as more than thirty countries had already recognized Israel, and the Arab states themselves were holding talks in Rhodes, Greece, with the Jewish state, Israel was a reality. Yet many in the Arab world saw Turkey's policy as a betrayal, as they did Ankara's trade relations with Israel in light of the Arab boycott.

During the 1950s, the Turkish government felt that cooperation with Israel would bring good press in the UNITED STATES and a more favorable reception in Washington for its political and economic interests. At the same time, Turkey granted IMMIGRATION of Bulgarian, Syrian, and Iraqi Jews to Israel. After the 1958 IRAQI revolution, Turkey, Israel, and IRAN developed extensive intelligence cooperation with US encouragement. Reportedly, in return for information from the Israeli intelligence agency MOSSAD on Soviet activities in Turkey, the Turkish National Security Service provided Israel with data on Arab agents. This top-secret program, code-named "Trident," fit perfectly into the Israeli-inspired "peripheral alliance," which also included Ethiopia. Another factor in Turkish-Israeli relations has been the Jewish community in Turkey, numbering more than 20,000. In 1955, when anti-Greek mobs attacked Jewish property in Istanbul during the Cypriot crisis, the Turkish government apologized and reassured Israel that it had no intention of prejudicing the security or the rights of Jews living in Turkey.

During the SINAI/SUEZ WAR of 1956, despite Ankara's distrust of Egyptian leader JAMAL 'ABD AL-NASIR and his opposition to Israel's right to use the Gulf of Aqaba (and the Suez Canal), Turkey disapproved of the British-French-Israeli military operation against EGYPT. Concerned that the Soviet Union would utilize the crisis to make inroads in the Middle East, Turkey withdrew its chargé d'affaires from Tel Aviv and declared that the diplomat would not return until the Palestine question was resolved in a just and lasting manner in accordance with United Nations resolutions. This proved to be a temporary and largely symbolic gesture, as Turkey also informed Israel that its diplomatic recall was intended to save the Baghdad Pact and should not be interpreted as a hostile act. Over the years until 1991, the legations in both countries were generally fully staffed and usually headed by diplomats of ambassadorial rank, despite their technical listings as chargé d'affaires.

After the 1960 Turkish military coup, which restored civilian rule the following year, Turkey greatly improved its relations with the Arab world. One motivating factor was to seek support for its Turkish Muslim brethren on Cyprus, especially after 1964, when the United States sternly warned Turkey against taking military action when the Greek Cypriots reneged on constitutional promises. Later, it sought to gain favor with petroleum-producing Arab states during the oil-price hike that followed the 1973 Arab-Israeli OCTOBER WAR. Just prior to the 1967 WAR, Turkey kept silent when Egypt closed the Gulf of Aqaba to Israeli shipping; moreover, the Turkish government reportedly told Egypt that it would not allow NATO bases to be used against Arab states (unlike in 1958, when the United States had intervened in LEBANON). In the war's aftermath, Israel's OCCUPATION of vast amounts of Arab land negatively affected Turkish public opinion toward Israel. Ankara made clear its opposition to territorial gains achieved by the use of force.

Ferenc Vali, in Bridge across the Bosphorus, describes Turkey's policy of "benevolent neutrality" as "diplomacy at its best," because that country was able to express sympathy toward the Arab states in the Arab-Israeli conflict without offending Israel. Indeed, Turkey has consistently refused to break off relations with Israel despite occasional pressure from some of the countries in the Arab and Muslim world. Furthermore, while Turkey called—and still calls—for the withdrawal of Israeli troops from territories occupied during the 1967 War, it never labeled Israel an "aggressor" in that confrontation. Turkey opposed Israel's annexation of East JERUSALEM following the 1967 War, but kept its consulate in that city open until 1980, when Israel's Knesset declared all of Jerusalem its capital. At that time, Turkish prime minister Suleyman Demirel told the ambassadors from Muslim countries in Ankara that Israel's action was "unwise, wrong and contrary to INTERNATIONAL LAW and fundamental justice."

During the 1970 BLACK SEPTEMBER crisis that pitted the Jordanian army against Palestinian guerrillas, Turkey took a cautious approach, despite its concern for the predicament of Jordan's King Husayn in his fight against the PLO. Ankara declared that it considered the events in JORDAN a domestic affair of that country and that foreign interventions would aggravate the situation and handicap efforts to end the fighting. The Turkish government thus refused to allow the US Sixth Fleet use of its harbors during the Jordanian crisis. It also did not permit the United States to use Turkish military facilities to ship supplies to Israel during the October War in 1973, but was quiet when the Soviets used Turkish airspace to supply Syria. In the face of severe domestic economic troubles and political problems associated with its 1974 military intervention in Cyprus, Turkey tilted more toward the Arab world, which it saw as a source of political and economic support. Indeed, it supported the November 1975 UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 3379, which defined ZIONISM as a form of racism, but in December 1991, when it upgraded relations with both Israel and the PLO to ambassadorial level, it abstained when that same resolution was repealed.

During the 1970s, Turkey opened contact with the PLO through its embassy in Cairo and, in October 1979, allowed the organization to open an office in Ankara, with its chief representative having the same rank as his Israeli counterpart—chargé d'affaires. A few months earlier, the PLO had helped mediate a peaceful ending to the takeover by Palestinian militants of the Egyptian embassy in Ankara. While the Turkish government was thankful for that assistance, it was concerned that the PLO might be training Armenian and Turkish left-wing terrorist groups.

In September 1986, Turkey decided to upgrade its relations with Israel and sent an experienced diplomat of ambassadorial rank, Ekrem Guvendiren, to Tel Aviv as chargé d'affaires; the following year, the size of the legation was greatly increased. In 1982, during its invasion of Lebanon, Israel captured a number of Turkish terrorists, whom it handed over to Turkey along with information on Armenian and Turkish terrorist groups. Also, by 1985 there was a drop in world oil prices, and Jordan and the PLO appeared to be undertaking a major peace initiative.

During the first Palestinian INTIFADA, which began in December 1987 and continued until 1993, Turkey occasionally publicly expressed disapproval of Israel's treatment of Palestinians in the Occupied Territories; however, at the same time, its political and economic relations with Israel improved. In 1988, Turkey opposed an Arab-sponsored attempt to withdraw Israel's diplomatic credentials at the United Nations, and, during the late 1980s and into the 1990s, Turkey's trade with Israel grew considerably. At the same time, trade with the Arab world decreased significantly from its zenith in the late 1970s and early 1980s. By early 1988, Turkey had contracted with Israel to upgrade its artillery force and F-4 Phantom jet fleet for some $2 billion.

In November 1988, when the PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL (the PLO's legislative body) met in Algiers to declare Palestinian statehood as well as accepting all UN resolutions, including 242, which recognized the right of Israel's existence, Turkey became the eleventh country in the world to recognize the new entity, and the only member of NATO to do so. It has continued to support the idea of an independent Palestinian state in the WEST BANK and GAZA STRIP, while criticizing excessive Israeli actions against Palestinians there.

In November 1993, just months after the signing of the PLO-Israel DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES, Turkey's foreign minister Hikmet Cetin visited Israel, becoming the highest-ranking Turkish official to do so. During the following year, Israeli president EZER WEIZMAN and Foreign Minister SHIMON PERES visited Turkey, while Turkish prime minister Tansu Ciller made a visit to Israel, where she compared Israeli founder DAVID BEN-GURION to Turkey's Mustafa Kemal Ataturk and declared Turkey's relationship with Israel as "strategic." While there, Ciller made an unannounced visit to East Jerusalem's ORIENT HOUSE to meet with a Palestinian delegation.

In February 1996, Turkey and Israel signed a Military Cooperation and Training Agreement, of which the full and official text was never made public. The agreement was publicly acknowledged by Turkey, and it received varying degrees of criticism in the Muslim world, the strongest of which came from Syria, a country giving sanctuary (until late 1998) to Abdullah Ocalan, whose Kurdish Workers' Party had been engaged in an insurrection against Turkey since 1984. A month later, Turkish president Suleyman Demirel visited Israel.

In May 2004, following a six-day Israeli attack on the Rafah refugee camp in the Gaza Strip, Turkish prime minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan told visiting Israeli infrastructure minister Josef Paritzky, who was in Ankara to sign an $800 million deal for the construction of three natural gas power stations in Israel, "You cannot fight TERRORISM with terrorism." In January 2005, when Foreign Minister Abdullah Gul visited Israel and the Palestinian territories, he told Al Jazeera TV that Turkey saw itself as a mediator between the Israelis and Palestinians, alongside efforts by both the United States and Egypt. Gul went on to say that Turkey's clear goal was to stop the "bloodbath" in the region and establish peace and stability there so that the Palestinians could set up their own state "in security." At the same time, he said Israel had to be assured of the same security in the region.

Israel's 2006 wars with HIZBULLAH and HAMAS exacerbated its relations with Turkey, but the latter attempted to broker peace between Israel and Syria. Turkey's Prime Minister Erdogan felt that Israel was responsible for the lack of success in that endeavor. Following Israel's 2009 war with Hamas, he got into a shouting match at the Davos economic conference with Israel's president Shimon Peres over what he regarded as Israel's excessive use of force in the war. In November 2009, Turkey joined a huge majority in the United Nations General Assembly by voting in favor of the Goldstone Report, which accused Israel and Hamas of committing international war crimes. A month earlier, Turkey had refused to participate together with Israel in a multinational air force exercise that was supposed to take place on its territory. Israeli defense minister EHUD BARAK downplayed the rift by stressing the two countries' "longstanding, important, and strategic" ties.

Bibliography

- Abadi, Jacob. "Israel and Turkey: From Covert to Overt Relations." Journal of Conflict Studies. 15:2 (1995).
- Altunisik, Meliha. "The Turkish-Israeli Rapprochement in the Post-Cold War Era." Middle Eastern Studies. 36:2 (2000).
- Aras, Bulent. The Palestinian-Israeli Peace Process and Turkey. Commack, NY: Nova Science Publishers, 1998.
- Aykan, Mahmut Ali. "The Palestinian Question in Turkish Foreign Policy from the 1950s to the 1990s." International Journal of Middle Eastern Studies. 25:1 (1993).
- Bengio, Ofra. The Turkish-Israeli Relationship: Changing Ties of Middle Eastern Outsiders. New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2004.
- Bengio, Ofra, and Gencer Ozcan. "Old Grievances, New Fears: Arab Perceptions of Turkey and Its Alignment with Israel." Middle Eastern Studies. 37:2 (2001).
- Bishku, Michael B. "How Has Turkey Viewed Israel?" In Israel and the Islamic World. Edited by Ephraim Karsh and P. R. Kumaraswamy. London: Routledge, 2008.
- . "Turkey and Egypt since the 1950s: Rivals for Influence in the Middle East." Journal of South Asian and Middle Eastern Studies. 27:1 (2003).
- . "Turkey and Its Middle Eastern Neighbors since 1945." Journal of South Asian and Middle Eastern Studies. 15:3 (1992).
- Bolukbasi, Suha. "Beyond the Turkish-Israeli Alliance: A Turkish View." Journal of Palestine Studies. 29:1 (1999).

- Cagaptay, Soner. "The November 2002 Elections and Turkey's New Political Era." Middle East Review of International Affairs. 6:4 (2002).
- Greun, George E. "Turkey's Relations with Israel and Its Arab Neighbors." Middle East Review. 17:3 (1985).
- Hale, William. Turkish Foreign Policy, 1774–2000. London: Frank Cass Publishers, 2000.
- Liel, Alon. Turkey in the Middle East: Oil, Islam and Politics. Boulder, CO: Lynne Rienner Publishers, 2001.
- Nachmani, Amikam. Israel, Turkey and Greece: Uneasy Relations in the Eastern Mediterranean. London: Frank Cass Publishers, 1987.
- Robins, Philip. Turkey and the Middle East. London: Pinter Publishers/Royal Institute of International Affairs, 1991.
- . "Turkish Foreign Policy under Erbakan." Survival. 39:2 (1997).
- Vali, Ferenc. Bridge across the Bosphorus: The Foreign Policy of Turkey. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1971.
- Yavuz, M. Hakan. "Turkish-Israeli Relations through the Lens of the Turkish Identity Debate." Journal of Palestine Studies. 27:1 (1997).

—Michael B. Bishku

Two-State Solution

"Two-state solution" is the name for a class of proposed resolutions for the long-running Israeli-Palestinian conflict that involve two independent, sovereign states—Israel and Palestine—living side by side in a formal condition of peace, with some sort of shared arrangement for JERUSALEM. Various proposals under this rubric differ in their details, although all share the basic concept of two states for two peoples, in contrast to the binational solution of a single democratic secular state, or the solution of the forced TRANSFER—expulsion—of all Palestinians.

Proponents of a two-state solution, which have included the UNITED NATIONS and the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO), generally advocate two separate states west of the Jordan River, one intended primarily for the Jewish population and one for the Palestinians. The territories that Israel captured in the 1967 WAR—the WEST BANK and GAZA STRIP, plus at least part of East Jerusalem—would become the new Palestinian state, although they constitute only 22 percent of historic Palestine. Their Palestinian inhabitants would be given citizenship by the new state, which might also be offered to Palestinian REFUGEES in the worldwide DIASPORA as well. Arab citizens of present-day Israel would likely have the choice of staying in Israel or becoming citizens of the new Palestinian state, though opinion polls have shown that most Israeli Arabs would prefer to remain in Israel.

Variations on the basic idea have a long history. The PEEL COMMISSION report of 1937 envisioned a partition of the BRITISH MANDATE Palestine area into three sections: Arab, Jewish, and a small continued Mandate area (effectively under international control), containing Jerusalem. The next major proposal to suggest a partition was the 1947 UN RESOLUTION 181, which also proposed a three-way division, again with Jerusalem held separately, under permanent international trusteeship. After the 1948 WAR, Israel controlled 78 percent of Mandatory Palestine—approximately one-quarter more than Resolution 181 allotted it. Concern for the fate of the Palestinians led to a series of UN Security Council resolutions, beginning in 1976, supporting the two-state solution; however, the UNITED STATES, standing with Israel, vetoed each one even as, since the mid-1970s, the idea has had overwhelming support in the UN General Assembly. However, by that time, Israel had begun to implement its massive SETTLEMENT program intended to colonize most of the West Bank and East Jerusalem in order to ensure that a Palestinian state could not emerge there.

In its goals for a solution to the conflict, the PLO underwent a number of transformations, the first being the liberation of Palestine. By 1967, however, that objective began to give way to the idea of a democratic, secular state, including Jews and Palestinians, in Palestine. The idea was dismissed by Israel, and the PLO had once again to rethink its position. At the close of the twelfth Palestine National Council (PNC), in June 1974, the PLO issued a political communiqué that called for the establishment of "a Palestinian national authority in any Palestinian areas liberated from Israeli control." This was the first formulation of the idea of an independent Palestinian state alongside Israel—the two-state solution.

Despite Israeli and US abjuration, the PLO achieved considerable international legitimacy for adopting and advocating the two-state concept. In October 1974, an Arab Summit conference meeting in Rabat, Morocco (the RABAT SUMMIT), proclaimed the PLO "the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinians." The following month, PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT was invited to address the UN General Assembly, and the PLO was accorded the status of an “observer-member.” At the thirteenth PNC, in March 1977, the two-state idea was further refined and clearly articulated as policy, and the PLO formally declared its willingness to participate in negotiations for a political settlement. Official PLO policy, then, from 1977 through 1993 (explicitly detailed in the 1988 PNC resolutions), was centered on the objective of securing an independent Palestinian state in the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem—the two-state solution. It also disclaimed the ARMED STRUGGLE and TERRORISM against Israel and sought to engage in a diplomatic process that would achieve its goals.

The momentous nineteenth PNC, in November 1988, concretized the PLO’s historic compromise, and, on 13 December 1988, the UN General Assembly convened a special session in Geneva specifically to hear an address by Arafat after the US government denied him permission to come to New York. In his speech, Arafat unequivocally reaffirmed the PLO’s commitment to diplomacy and a two-state solution. During all these years of PLO concessions, and adoption and advocacy of the two-state solution, Israel and the United States continued to reject the idea, the PLO, and Arafat. In the 1990s, however, the pressing need for peace in the Middle East brought the two-state idea back to center stage in US thinking. At one point in the 1990s, considerable diplomatic work during the OSLO ACCORDS went into negotiating a two-state solution between Israel and the PLO. However, because Israel wanted to retain significant amounts of the 22 percent of Occupied Palestine (settlements, WATER resources, ROADS, military bases, etc.), including East Jerusalem, no final agreement was achieved.

A significant number of Israelis hold that the two-state solution was implemented in 1922 when Britain split off the eastern part of the Mandate to create Transjordan, which became JORDAN, a state with a Palestinian majority due to the influx of refugees in 1948 and 1967. Some Israeli politicians argue for a form of two-state solution in which a Palestinian state is granted the symbolic attributes of an independent state—that is, autonomy—but without most aspects of sovereignty. The Palestinian leadership does not view such proposals as being in the true spirit of the two-state solution concept. In 2002, Crown Prince (now King) Abdullah of SAUDI ARABIA proposed an ARAB PEACE INITIATIVE, which garnered the unanimous support of the ARAB LEAGUE. President GEORGE W. BUSH initially announced his support for a Palestinian state, manifest in the US-backed ROAD MAP peace proposal, but nothing has come of either initiative. By 2005, Israel had control of over 50 percent of the West Bank and had created so many “facts on the ground”—settlements, roads, military installations, and others—that a viable, contiguous Palestinian state was essentially precluded, and most observers believe that the possibility of a two-state solution no longer exists.

See also BINATIONALISM; PEACE; TRANSFER AND DISPLACEMENT

Bibliography

- Palestine Liberation Organization. “Settlement Expansion East of Jerusalem Suggests That Israel Is ‘Disengaging’ from the Two-State Solution.” Negotiations Support Unit, Negotiations Affairs Department. August 2005.
- Weaver, Alain Epp. “The Slow Death of the Two-State Solution.” The Christian Century. 3 May 2003.
- Youmans, Will. “Goodbye and Good Riddance: The End of the Two-State Solution.” CounterPunch. 4 November 2002.

Tzomet

Tzomet (Crossroads—Movement for Renewed ZIONISM) is a small, secular, ultra-right-wing party in Israel. The party was the one that first brought the “peace for peace” slogan, which today is used by all Israeli right-wing parties and movements. “Peace for peace” means that Israel should not give up any territory in exchange for peace (that is, UN RESOLUTION 242’s core principle of land for peace) and if Palestinians really want peace they should stop the policy of demanding land and using threats but give up on their demands and accept that all of Eretz Yisrael belongs to Israel. In 1983 Israeli general Rafael Eitan founded the Tzomet Party after retiring from the position of chief of staff in 1982. He headed the party throughout its existence and modeled it as a secular, right-wing party with a strong agricultural component. Many of Tzomet’s members and Knesset members were Eitan’s neighbors in Tel Adashim (a small agricultural community). Tzomet’s focus was opposition to any accord with or any concessions to the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO), particularly the OSLO ACCORDS between the PLO and Israel.

Tzomet ran for the 1984 elections on a joint slate with the TEHIYA PARTY, and Eitan was its only Knesset member. In 1987, Tzomet and the Tehiya parted ways, and Tzomet ran independently in the elections of 1988 (winning two seats). The party joined YITZHAK SHAMIR'S government in 1990 and Eitan was appointed minister of agriculture; however, it left the coalition in December 1991 in protest at Yitzhak Shamir's participation in the MADRID CONFERENCE. In the 1992 elections Tzomet gained eight seats but was not included in the left-wing governing coalition. Moreover, the party's success was also its downfall. None of the new Knesset members had any political experience, and most were completely anonymous. Allegations of tyrannical behavior by Eitan were raised, and three members left and founded the Yiud party (which then splintered into Atid). One of the three who left did so because he was offered the position of minister of energy by YITZHAK RABIN if he voted in favor of the Oslo Accords, which Tzomet opposed.

All this reduced the popularity of the party, and in the 1996 elections it chose to run in a joint list with the LIKUD PARTY and GESHER under the name "National Camp List." Tzomet was assured several relatively high places in the combined list, partly as a reward for the withdrawal of Eitan as prime ministerial candidate (the 1996 elections were the first Israeli elections to feature a double vote, one for the Knesset and one direct vote for prime minister). Eventually, three Tzomet candidates were voted into the Knesset, though one of them, Moshe Peled, broke away to form his own faction and then joined MOLEDET.

In the 1999 elections Tzomet ran alone for the Knesset. However, it had lost almost all its support, and won just 4,128 votes, less than 10 percent of the number needed to cross the 1.5 percent electoral threshold. After the humiliating defeat, Eitan retired from the political life.

The party continues to exist and ran in both the 2003 and 2006 elections, winning only 2,023 and 1,342 votes respectively. In the 2009 elections it again failed. Tzomet's platform reveals its positions, which have far wider influence than the number of Knesset members from the party:

- "[Tzomet] [b]elieves in pursuit of peace, but [is] opposed to territorial compromise for security and secular, nationalistic reasons; Israel should annex Judea, Samaria and Gaza as part of the Land of Israel."
- "The Palestinians in the territories should be offered a very limited municipal autonomy."
- "Arab refugees in and from the territories should be resettled in Arab countries."
- Promotion of Jewish settlements in Judea, Samaria [the West Bank], and Gaza.
- Separation of religion and state.

Bibliography

- Diskin, Abraham. The Last Days in Israel: Understanding the New Israeli Democracy. London: Routledge, 2003.
- Maor, Moshe. Parties, Elections and Cleavages: Israel in Comparative and Theoretical Perspective. London: Routledge, 2000.

---

U

---

'Udwan, Kamal (1925–1973)

Kamal 'Udwan (Abu Hisham) was a Palestinian teacher, engineer, and founding member of the FATAH party. Born in Barbara Village, a district of the GAZA STRIP that came under Israeli control in November 1948, he was dispossessed along with all of Barbara's inhabitants, who became REFUGEES. 'Udwan played an active role in the UNITED NATIONAL FRONT that emerged in Gaza after the Israeli OCCUPATION in 1967 and was arrested by Israeli forces.

In the late 1950s, 'Udwan worked as a teacher in Qatar and then trained as a petroleum engineer in Cairo. In 1964 he attended the first PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL meeting, where he called for a war of popular liberation. Beginning in September 1971, PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION chairman YASIR ARAFAT appointed him head of the Occupied Homeland Bureau, and, at the same time, he became a member of the FATAH CENTRAL COMMITTEE. He is believed to have had a role in the BLACK SEPTEMBER ORGANIZATION's TERRORISM operations. On 10 April 1973, 'Udwan was assassinated in Beirut during an Israeli raid led by EHUD BARAK.

Bibliography

Sayigh, Yezid. Armed Struggle and the Search for State: The Palestinian National Movement, 1949–1993. Oxford, UK: Clarendon Press, 1997.

Unilateral Disengagement from Gaza

See ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA

Union of Zionist-Revisionists

See WORLD UNION OF ZIONIST REVISIONISTS

Unit 101

Unit 101 was an Israeli Special Operations unit of the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) organized and led by ARIEL SHARON on orders from Prime Minister DAVID BEN-GURION in August 1953. Ben-Gurion instructed Sharon to create a "Special Forces unit" that would operate behind the 1948 armistice lines in reprisal and preemptive strikes against the Arabs. Sharon was in charge of the military training as well as the psychological and ideological indoctrination of the troops. During a five-month period in 1953, Unit 101 carried out a series of terror raids across Israel's BORDERS into REFUGEE camps, villages, and BEDOUIN encampments, mainly in Jordanian- and Egyptian-controlled territory and mainly against civilians.

In Israel's Border Wars, Israeli historian Benny Morris describes the squad, which had no more than fifty men: "The new recruits began a harsh regimen of day and night training, their orientation and navigation exercises often taking them across the border; encounters with enemy patrols or village watchmen were regarded as the best preparation for the missions that lay ahead. Some commanders, such as [Shlomo] Baum and Sharon, deliberately sought firefights. Unit 101 recruits went on forced marches and did calisthenics, judo, and weapons and sabotage training, at their base camp at Sataf, an abandoned Arab village just west of JERUSALEM."

Immediately after its establishment, Unit 101 began a series of cross-border operations. On 28–29 August the unit attacked al-Bureij refugee camp in the GAZA STRIP (then under Egyptian administration). According to the local UN officer, Major General Vagn Bennike of the UNITED NATIONS TRUCE SUPERVISION ORGANIZATION, "One of the latest and gravest incidents in the Gaza Strip has been the attack upon several houses and huts in the Arab refugee camp of Bureij on the night of 28 August. Bombs were thrown through the windows of huts in which refugees were sleeping and, as they fled, they were attacked by small arms and automatic weapons. The casualties were 20 killed, 27 seriously wounded, 35 less seriously wounded."

Morris also records the attack on the civilian population: "Foreign observers called the Bureij raid 'an appalling case of deliberate mass murder.'" He quoted the acting director of UN Relief and Works Agency, Leslie Carver, as saying the "incident has caused intense alarm and unrest in the whole Strip" and said that Carver urged the UNITED NATIONS to strongly protest to Israel against the “unprovoked attack upon harmless and defenseless refugees. . . . Israel denied responsibility, leading diplomats and officials to the conclusion that ‘Israeli settlers’ or ‘a local kibbutz’ had carried out the raid on their own initiative.”

In the following month, September 1953, Unit 101 carried out an attack on the Azzama Bedouin in demilitarized Al-Auja, on the western Negev-Sinai frontier. According to E. H. Hutchison, a UN truce observer, “Israeli airplanes attacked Arabs and their herds of camels and goats. At the same time, incidents of increasing gravity occurred in the demilitarized zone itself. Israeli armed groups patrolled the zone; they shot at Bedouins at the two main wells; Arabs and their herds were killed by air and ground attacks; armed Israeli forces, up to approximately 30 men, shot the herds and burned the tents of Bedouins.”

In October 1953, Unit 101 carried out a raid on the village of QIBYA in the northern WEST BANK, then a part of JORDAN. Over fifty civilians were killed in this operation, which was similar to that of al-Bureij but on a much larger scale. Israel received wide international criticism for this attack, but Ben-Gurion denied any knowledge of it. Yet, in its aftermath, the Israeli leadership officially forbade the IDF from directly targeting innocent civilians.

By January 1954, Unit 101 had disbanded and merged with Tzanhanim Company, which became a brigade-size unit composed of two battalions: 869 Battalion (from the original Tzanhanim Company personnel) and 101 Battalion (from the former Unit 101 personnel). Sharon became the new commander of the enlarged Tzanhanim infantry brigade and was able to launch full-scale Special Forces attacks against Arab targets. Beginning in 1954, 101 Battalion’s activities were mostly confined to military targets. In particular, up to twenty such attacks were carried out in 1955–1956, culminating in the Qalqilya Raid of October 1956, a battle in which eighteen Israeli soldiers and upwards of 100 Jordanian Legionnaires died.

According to an Israeli military source, “The creation of Unit 101 was a major landmark in the Israeli Special Forces history. Unit 101 established small unit maneuvers, activation and insertion tactics that are utilized even today. Beside Sayeret MATKAL [an IDF infantry Special Operations unit], Unit 101 is considered to be the unit with the most influence on the Israeli infantry oriented units including both special and conventional units.”

See also ARMISTICE AGREEMENTS; INFILTRATION (PALESTINIAN) AND RETALIATION (ISRAELI)

Bibliography

- Bennike, Vagn. Report by Major General Bennike, Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine. New York: United Nations General Assembly, 1955.
- Bull, Odd. War and Peace in the Middle East: The Experiences and Views of a UN Observer. Barnsley, UK: Leo Cooper Press, 1976.
- Burns, E. L. M. Between Arab and Israeli. Toronto: Clarke, Irwin, and Co., 1962.
- Hutchison, E. H. Violent Truce: A Military Observer Looks at the Arab-Israeli Conflict, 1951–1955. New York: Devin-Adair, 1958.
- Morris, Benny. Israel’s Border Wars, 1949–1956: Arab Infiltration, Israeli Retaliation, and the Countdown to the Suez War. Oxford, UK: Clarendon Press, 1993.
- Rokach, Livia. Israel’s Sacred Terrorism: A Study Based on Moshe Sharett’s Personal Diary and Other Documents, 3rd ed. Boston: Association of Arab-American University Graduates, 1985.
- Shlaim, Avi. The Iron Wall: Israel and the Arab World since 1948. New York: W. W. Norton, 1999.
- Toye, P. L., and A. Seay. Israel: Boundary Disputes with Arab Neighbors, 1946–1964, 10 vols. New York: United Nations, 1964.

United Arab List

See RA’AM

United National Front

The United National Front (UNF), which was active from circa 1973 to 1976, was an indigenous opposition movement in the GAZA STRIP that was intimately connected to the PALESTINE NATIONAL FRONT in the WEST BANK. Gaza’s UNF, like its West Bank sister, was a coalition of Palestinian leftist-nationalists and communists. In part, it grew out of the communist NATIONAL LIBERATION LEAGUE, which had been active in the Gaza Strip since 1948. Despite its acknowledgment of the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinians, there can be little doubt that the decision to form the UNF and to mobilize Gazans for grassroots activism against the OCCUPATION came from within the Gaza Strip.

Throughout the early 1970s, Israel tolerated the communists’ existence and allowed them some level of political activity—possibly because the PLO refused to admit the PALESTINIAN COMMUNIST PARTY. In addition, since the communists had accepted partition in 1947, recognized Israel, and favored political over military struggle, they were initially less of a threat than other political parties in Israel's eyes.

The UNF was instrumental in nationalist politics, mobilizing and organizing at the grassroots level as well as engaging in institution building in Gaza. Like the National Liberation League, the UNF reached its supporters principally through high school and college student associations and, to a lesser extent, through labor and trade unions. In 1976, when Israel decided to crack down on all Palestinian political parties, it dismantled the UNF, imprisoned its leaders and activists, and outlawed all its activities.

See also PALESTINE NATIONAL FRONT

Bibliography

Aruri, Naseer. "Resistance and Repression." Journal of Palestine Studies. 7: 4 (Summer 1978).
Middle East Report and Information Project. "The Palestinian National Front." MERIP Reports No. 25. Washington, DC: MERIP, 1974.

United Nations

The Israeli-Palestinian conflict is one of the world's longest international conflicts, engaging most of the world's major powers, creating the world's largest refugee population, and involving some of the most widespread violations of international humanitarian law. As such, this conflict, more than any other, has occupied the attention of the United Nations' security, political, and humanitarian bodies.

Partition and the 1948 War

As the conflict between the Jewish and Arab communities in Palestine intensified in the late 1940s, Great Britain—which had served as Mandatory power following the collapse of the OTTOMAN EMPIRE—brought a partition plan before the United Nations. On 29 November 1947, based on the recommendations of the UNITED NATIONS SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON PALESTINE (UNSCOP), the UN General Assembly (UNGA) approved UN RESOLUTION 181, which created an international trusteeship for greater JERUSALEM, while allotting 57 percent of the remaining parts of Palestine for a Jewish state and 43 percent for a Palestinian Arab state. The vote was 33 to 13, with nearly unanimous opposition from Middle Eastern, African, and Asian states, which perceived that the United Nations was being used by Western powers to support the creation of a colonial settler state at a time when demands for decolonization were growing across the globe. Critics also claimed that the partition went beyond the powers vested in the General Assembly and that it violated the UN Charter provision that recognized the right of self-determination. Western governments saw it as the best means of resolving the conflicting claims of the two communities and addressing the desires for a national homeland by a persecuted people barely two years after the end of the Nazi-led genocide. At that time, Jews were less than one-third of the Palestine population and owned less than 10 percent of the LAND. In addition, much of the territory allocated for the Jewish state contained a majority of Arabs, and the Arab city of JAFFA was an isolated enclave, disconnected from the rest of the Arab state. Both the perceived unfairness of the partition and the partition itself led to the rejection of the UN resolution by the LEAGUE OF ARAB STATES. Zionist groups provisionally accepted it, though subsequently released documents revealed that many in the Zionist leadership saw partition as merely a first step toward controlling all of Palestine. On 14 May 1948, BRITISH MANDATE forces withdrew, and Israel declared itself an independent state that same day. After months of growing intercommunal violence, which resulted in the exodus of tens of thousands of Palestinians, armies from neighboring Arab countries joined in the battle that came to be known as the 1948 WAR.

On 11 June the Swedish UN mediator COUNT FOLKE BERNADOTTE arranged a cease-fire under the UNITED NATIONS TRUCE SUPERVISION ORGANIZATION (UNTSO). On 8 July fighting resumed after failure to arrange an extension to the truce and continued until 18 July 1948, when the UN Security Council (SC) passed Resolution 54 mandating a cease-fire and threatening armed intervention on behalf of the United Nations. By that time, Israel had seized control of close to 78 percent of Palestine, including the western half of Jerusalem. Egyptian forces were in control of the southeastern coastal area, which became known as the GAZA STRIP, and Jordanian forces took control of most of the highland regions, including the eastern half of Jerusalem, on the WEST BANK of the Jordan River. In the meantime, most of the Palestinian Arabs, totaling approximately 750,000 individuals, were transformed into REFUGEES.

Following Bernadotte's assassination by an Israeli terrorist in September 1948, American Ralph Bunche became head of UNTSO. Fighting resumed in October 1948 before a series of ARMISTICE AGREEMENTS in February and March 1949 led to Israeli withdrawal from parts of Egyptian and Lebanese territory seized during the fighting. In April an armistice agreement between Israel and JORDAN resulted in the division of Jerusalem, and in June a series of small demilitarized zones separated Syrian and Israeli forces. With Israel's conquest of the majority of the territory mandated by the United Nations to become part of the Palestinian state, Jordan annexed the West Bank (including East Jerusalem), and EGYPT instituted an administration over the Gaza Strip. Thus, the UN plan for an independent Palestinian state never came to fruition. In December 1948 the UN General Assembly passed UN RESOLUTION 194, which declared (among other things) that "refugees wishing to return to their homes and live in peace with their neighbors should be permitted to do so" and that "compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return." The resolution also mandated the creation of the UNITED NATIONS CONCILIATION COMMISSION FOR PALESTINE to solve the refugee problem and conclude the war. Neither refugee compensation nor return has been implemented, although Resolution 194 remains valid by virtue of renewal by the General Assembly every two years.

The 1956, 1967, and 1973 Wars

On 29 October 1956, in retaliation for Egyptian president JAMAL 'ABD AL-NASIR's nationalization of the Suez Canal, British and French forces attacked Egypt after Israeli forces had moved into the Sinai Peninsula. The vast majority of the international community, including the UNITED STATES, condemned the tripartite invasion. Because FRANCE and Britain were permanent members of the UN Security Council and could therefore cast a veto, the United Nations organized its first emergency Special Session of the General Assembly (under the 1950 Resolution 337 [V]) on 30 October 1956, which produced a cease-fire resolution (Resolution 997). On 4 November 1956 the General Assembly approved Resolution 998 (ES-1), a plan for an intervention force for the attack on Egypt, originally proposed by Canadian diplomat (and later prime minister) Lester Pearson. The resolution created the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF I)—the first-ever UN peacekeeping force and mission—along the Israeli-Egyptian border. Because Israel refused to allow UNEF forces on its side of the border, it was stationed only on the Egyptian side. Resolution 999 of 4 November 1956 gave the authority for organizing peacekeeping missions to the UN secretary-general.

In 1967, Israeli encroachments on the demilitarized zone with SYRIA led to a series of counter-moves from Syria and Egypt, including forcing the withdrawal of UNEF from the Sinai. On 5 June 1967, Israel attacked Egypt as well as Jordanian forces in the West Bank and later Syria. Within six days (the 1967 WAR), Israel seized the remaining parts of Palestine from Jordan and Egypt as well as all of Egypt's Sinai Peninsula and Syria's Syrian Heights (renamed the Golan Heights by Israel). On 22 November 1967, the Security Council adopted UN RESOLUTION 242, establishing a plan for creating a permanent peace in the Middle East. Written by the British and US ambassadors, it reiterated the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force but acceded to Israeli concerns regarding the ongoing threats by neighboring Arab states. The resolution therefore established the principle of "land for peace," which has since been considered the key to ending the Arab-Israeli conflict: Israeli withdrawal from the territories seized during the 1967 War in return for peace treaties and security guarantees from its Arab neighbors. The resolution said nothing about establishing a Palestinian state or Palestinian national rights; indeed, the Palestinians were not even mentioned aside from a provision calling for a "just resolution of the refugee problem."

Though the Arab states initially rejected Resolution 242, in the early 1970s, Egypt began to make overtures toward peace with Israel along the lines of the resolution. Following Israel's rejection of the offers, Egyptian and Syrian forces attacked Israeli OCCUPATION forces in the Sinai Peninsula and the Golan Heights (OCTOBER WAR). Fighting officially ended on 22 October with a cease-fire established by UN SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 338, which called for a realization of the principles for peace established in Resolution 242 (1967). Following continued Israeli advances into Egyptian territory on the west (Egyptian) side of the Suez Canal, the Security Council passed a second resolution (Resolution 339) the following day, resulting in a belated cease-fire between Egypt and Israel.

Israeli Military Actions against Lebanon

The government of LEBANON had largely avoided military engagements with Israel during the 1956, 1967, and 1973 wars, but, in the late 1960s, Israel initiated a series of air strikes and commando raids against Lebanese territory, allegedly in retaliation for attacks by Palestinian groups based there. Israel's actions led to a series of UN Security Council resolutions critical of Israel, particularly its attacks that resulted in large-scale civilian casualties and damage to the civilian infrastructure.

When Israeli forces invaded southern Lebanon in 1978 in response to a terror attack that killed a US tourist and thirty-seven Israelis, the Security Council passed Resolution 425, calling on all states to recognize Lebanon's legitimate sovereign territorial boundaries and demanding that Israel immediately and unconditionally withdraw from all Lebanese territory. Security Council Resolution 426 provided the guidelines for Resolution 425 and established the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) to help maintain peace and return legitimate power to the Lebanese government. Israel pulled back its occupation forces but did not completely withdraw from Lebanese territory as required. The UN Security Council passed eight subsequent resolutions reiterating the call for Israel's unconditional withdrawal from Lebanese territory, but, beginning with President RONALD REAGAN's administration, the United States vetoed subsequent draft resolutions calling for an Israeli withdrawal.

In June 1982, Israel launched a full-scale invasion of Lebanon (LEBANON WAR). Within weeks, Israel occupied nearly half the country and laid siege to Beirut; it also bombed Syrian positions in eastern Lebanon and shot down dozens of Syrian military aircraft. The United States vetoed a series of UN Security Council resolutions demanding an Israeli withdrawal. Subsequent resolutions that called only for a cease-fire were also blocked by US vetoes until August, when the United States allowed a cease-fire resolution to pass (Resolution 516), but this watered-down resolution failed to reiterate previous resolutions that required Israel to withdraw its forces from Lebanon. Over subsequent months, increased Palestinian guerrilla attacks against Israeli occupation forces led Israel to withdraw from most of Lebanon, but Israel maintained its occupation of a strip of Lebanese territory north of the Israeli border and along the northeastern edge of the occupied Golan region of Syria. UNIFIL forces were largely unsuccessful in maintaining peace between the Israeli occupation forces and a growing guerrilla resistance movement under the leadership of the Islamist HIZBULLAH.

Thereafter, a series of major Israeli assaults on civilian population centers in southern Lebanon resulted in the international community's condemnation of Israel, but US vetoes blocked the United Nations from enforcing peace. In 1996 the Israelis launched a mortar attack against a UN compound near the Lebanese village of Qana, which was sheltering Palestinian refugees from nearby villages that had been under Israeli assault for several days; the attack killed more than 100 civilians. A report by the United Nations—confirming earlier investigations by Amnesty International and others—indicated that the bombardment was, in all likelihood, intentional, but these conclusions were rejected by Israel and the United States. Some reports have indicated that the US decision to veto UN Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali's reelection the following year was related to his refusal to suppress or tone down the UN findings on the Israeli assault on Qana.

In May 2000, Israel finally withdrew from Lebanon, with the exception of the disputed Shebaa Farms area along the Syrian border, and, despite widespread violations of Lebanese airspace by the Israeli air force, the area remained largely quiet. However, an attack by Hizbullah fighters on an Israeli border post in July 2006 prompted massive Israeli air assaults on Lebanon's civilian INFRASTRUCTURE and an incursion by ground troops into Lebanese territory. After repeatedly blocking UN Security Council efforts for a cease-fire for nearly a month, the United States finally acquiesced to a cease-fire resolution in August (Resolution 1701), which eventually resulted in an Israeli withdrawal and a dramatically expanded UN peacekeeping force in southern Lebanon.

Peace Efforts

The United Nations has long advocated the need for a comprehensive peace settlement among the Arab states, the Palestinians, and Israel, stressing the importance of the inclusion of all parties in any peace initiative, but these efforts have been undercut by US and Israeli insistence on bilateral negotiations facilitated by the United States.

The one international peace conference the United Nations was able to organize took place between 21 December 1973 and 9 January 1974 in Geneva under UN Security Council Resolution 334. UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim supervised the conference, and invitations went to Egypt, Jordan, Israel, and Syria. However, the conference largely failed because the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION was not invited and Syria refused to attend the meeting. Nevertheless, it did establish a Military Working Group that would continue to negotiate peace between the parties after the conference ended. For example, the Military Working Group took part in the Syria-Israeli Agreement on Disengagement in 1974 as well as the Egypt-Israeli Agreements on Disengagement in 1974 and 1975.

The United Nations is one of the four members of the QUARTET—along with the United States, RUSSIA, and the EUROPEAN UNION—overseeing the “Performance-Based ROAD MAP to a Permanent TWO-STATE SOLUTION to the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict” put forward in 2003. The United States, however, demanded that INTERNATIONAL LAW and UN Security Council resolutions not be major components of the Road Map, and it has largely marginalized the UN role in the stalled peace effort. For example, the Annapolis Declaration of December 2007 declares that “implementation of the future peace treaty will be subject to the implementation of the road map, as judged by the United States” (emphasis added).

UN Peacekeeping Missions

In addition, the United Nations has set up peacekeeping missions in three states involved in the Israel-Palestinian conflict: Egypt, Syria, and Lebanon.

Egypt. The United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF I), which was established following the 1956 War, lasted until June 1967 and contained troops from Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, India, Indonesia, Norway, Sweden, and Yugoslavia, at a total cost of $214 million. Following the October 1973 War, UNEF II was established along Egypt’s Suez Canal between Egyptian forces and Israeli occupation forces. The mission lasted until July 1979, cost $446.5 million, and included troops from Australia, Austria, Canada, Finland, Ghana, Indonesia, Ireland, Nepal, Panama, Peru, Poland, Senegal, and Sweden.

Syria. The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) was established in March 1974 through the Agreement on Disengagement (S/11302/Add 1 Annexes I and II) and Security Council Resolution 350 following the October 1973 War. Since then, UNDOF has patrolled a narrow demilitarized zone separating Syrian forces and Israeli occupation forces in the Golan Heights. UNDOF tasks have included inspecting the region for military trespassing, identifying and marking all landmines, and supporting the Red Cross in its transportation of persons and staff in the region. Countries that contribute troops include Austria, Canada, India, Japan, Nepal, Poland, and Slovakia. UNDOF’s annual budget is approximately $42 million.

Lebanon. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), which was established following Israel’s March 1978 invasion of southern Lebanon, was stationed along the international boundary between Israel and Lebanon and tasked with monitoring violations at the border and preventing an outbreak of fighting. However, Israel’s refusal to withdraw completely from Lebanon forced UNIFIL to remain six to twelve miles north of the border. In the Lebanon War, it was unable to prevent Israel’s June 1982 invasion, and after that war UNIFIL’s role evolved into trying to protect civilians in the conflict zone from Israeli forces that were involved in an increasingly bloody counterinsurgency campaign against Lebanese guerrillas. In subsequent years, scores of UN peacekeepers were killed, primarily by forces from the SOUTH LEBANON ARMY, a right-wing rebel faction that served as a proxy of the Israeli armed forces. In May 2000, Israel finally withdrew from southern Lebanon, allowing UNIFIL forces to fulfill their original mandate from twenty-two years earlier to patrol the Israeli-Lebanese border and necessitating an increase in their numbers to over 7,000.

In March 2001, Security Council Resolution 1337, which established UNTSO, reduced UNIFIL troop strength to 5,700, and by 2002, as the border area remained relatively stable, down to 2,000. Following Israel’s assault on Lebanon during the summer of 2006, UN Security Council Resolution 1701 included provisions to increase UNIFIL’s numbers to 15,000 in order to assist Lebanese soldiers in maintaining security and sovereignty along the borders and to provide humanitarian aid. Countries contributing troops to UNIFIL included Belgium, CHINA, Cyprus, Denmark, Finland, France, GERMANY, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Korea, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Nepal, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, and TURKEY.

Humanitarian Relief

Starting in 1950, following its creation under UNGA Resolution 302 the previous year, the UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY (UNRWA) has provided medical, educational, and emergency relief, as well as social services, to 4.3 million Palestinian refugees. UNRWA operates in five locations: the Gaza Strip, Jordan, Lebanon, Syria, and the West Bank. Ninety-six percent of its money comes from monetary donations from the European Union and other governments around the world. Some 24,000 people work for UNRWA, most of whom are Palestinian refugees themselves. UNRWA, which has had its mandate extended every three years since 1950, works along the same lines as the UN High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR). However, as a result of a decision made at the 1951 Convention on the Status of Refugees, Palestinian refugees cannot participate in the international refugee law regime as long as UNRWA remains operational and thus cannot obtain direct assistance from UNHCR.

As of 2006, UNRWA works in fifty-nine official refugee camps with 267,915 families and 1,306,191 registered refugees inside the camps, with a total of 4,375,050 registered Palestinian refugees in all five areas of operation. In the Gaza Strip, UNRWA works in eight official camps with 92,322 registered families in the camps, including 474,130 registered refugees, with a total of 993,818 registered refugees in all of Gaza. The West Bank has nineteen official camps with 38,954 registered families and 185,121 registered refugee individuals in the camps, with a total of 705,207 registered refugees throughout the West Bank. Jordan has ten official camps with 61,063 registered families and 316,549 registered refugee individuals, with a total of 1,835,704 registered refugees in the country. Lebanon has twelve official camps with 49,836 registered families and 214,093 registered refugee individuals in the camps, with a total 405,425 registered refugees in the country. Syria has ten official camps with 25,740 registered families and 116,253 registered refugee individuals in the camps, with a total of 434,896 registered refugees in the country. The major functions of UNRWA have included the following.

Health Care. In the 1950s the major problems facing Palestinian refugees, in addition to being homeless, landless, and stateless, were malnutrition, communicable diseases, infant mortality, and poor sanitation. In 1951 UNRWA implemented a program that provided one meal a day to children fifteen and under as well as monthly rations of cod liver oil and milk for tuberculosis patients and expectant and new mothers. Immunizations through vaccinations began in 1954, and UNRWA organized several rehydration and nutrition centers throughout the five camp locations in the 1970s. It eradicated protein-calorie malnutrition during the early 1990s and achieved a significant decrease in mortality rates: from 180 per 1,000 births to 32–35 per 1,000. The HEALTH CARE program operates according to World Health Organization (WHO) guidelines.

Education. UNRWA, assisted in part by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), provides primary and junior high/middle school EDUCATION to all refugee children, equally to boys and girls, and offers college scholarships of $200–$1,000 each year to students who qualify. It also has eight vocational training centers for technical and vocational training.

Small-Business Initiatives. In the 1990s UNRWA established a microfinance and micro-enterprise program in the West Bank and Gaza Strip in response to the dramatic increase in unemployment and the growing poverty after the 1987 INTIFADA and the GULF WAR. The program was set up as an attempt to create business and work in these regions and to support small-scale enterprises, solidarity groups, and consumer lending programs. Because the program is not part of UNRWA's regular budget, donations and grants cover the costs.

Relief and Social Services. UNRWA administers a special hardship program that provides financial and material assistance to people with disabilities and chronic illness and single mothers and women who were left (in one form or another) by their husbands, including $136 per person per year for bimonthly food rations. In times of war or armed conflict, particularly with Israel's building of the BARRIER separation wall between Israel and the West Bank, an additional emergency relief assistance program allows for a temporary monetary boost in food, financial, and unemployment programs to all people in the region affected by war and conflict—refugees and nonrefugees alike. In 1993 another initiative was started to repair refugee shelters that were in damaged condition. Finally, UNRWA established specific centers for women and poverty alleviation in the UNRWA locations to teach women and others who are impoverished their legal rights, civic education, literacy, and monetary management, as well as providing childcare centers.

Over the years, UNRWA has faced allegations from various right-wing organizations in the United States and elsewhere claiming that it supports TERRORISM and teaches anti-Israeli and anti-Jewish themes in its education program. UNRWA has formally responded to such allegations on a number of occasions, including in its 9 April 2003 statement at the UN Human Rights Commission in Geneva as well as on its website (<http://www.ohchr.org>), which lists the most common allegations and provides data and other information to counteract each charge.

Role of the UN General Assembly

The UN General Assembly consists of representatives of all member states of the United Nations—51 nations at the founding of the United Nations in 1945 and now 192 countries. Each member state has one vote, and a simple majority makes most decisions. Though the General Assembly's recommendations are an important indication of world opinion and can represent the moral authority of the community of nations, it does not have the power to enforce its resolutions on states. Prior to the emergence of a sizable Afro-Asian majority resulting from decolonization in the 1950s and 1960s, the General Assembly—with the support of Western nations—was able to exert more power, but in recent decades its resolutions have become largely symbolic.

With the rise of nationalist governments in the third world during the 1970s, these former colonies—in alliance with the Soviet Union and its communist allies—passed a series of resolutions that focused on the major grievances of the world's poor majority, particularly the maldistribution of global wealth and other legacies of colonialism. Also of concern was what was largely seen as contemporary manifestations of colonialism, particularly the apartheid system then in effect in South Africa and the ongoing Israeli occupation of Arab land since the June 1967 War. A series of resolutions critical of Israel were pushed through the General Assembly, most of which were based on well-documented Israeli violations of the Fourth Geneva Convention and related international covenants on human rights, though others appeared to be largely based on ideological opposition to Israel itself. Particularly controversial was a resolution passed in October 1975 as an amendment to a General Assembly resolution establishing the Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, which claimed that ZIONISM was a form of racism and racial discrimination. In 1991 this resolution was repealed.

The Israeli-Palestinian conflict has been the subject of hundreds of General Assembly resolutions since the UN founding, more than any other conflict. For example, the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee), one of six committees of the whole assembly, spends nearly one-third of its time on resolutions and debates regarding Israeli policies. Given the ongoing refusal of Israel, often backed by Western powers, to abide by these resolutions, most of them are reiterations of resolutions passed during previous years. For example, resolutions calling for the enactment of UNGA Resolution 194, which was first approved in December 1948 and called for the repatriation of Palestinian refugees to their homes, have been passed by the General Assembly every year since then.

In 1974 the General Assembly granted the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) observer-member status, making it and the Southwest Africa People's Organization, then struggling against the South African occupation of Namibia, the only two national liberation movements to sit at the United Nations. The General Assembly also established a UN Division for Palestinian Rights and in 1977 dedicated 29 November as the annual UN Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People.

Role of the Security Council

As the body concerned with maintaining international peace and security, the Security Council has been actively engaged in the Arab-Israeli conflict. The UN Security Council is a fifteen-member body that includes five permanent members, which are the major victorious allies of World War II: the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Russia, and China. Each has the power to veto any Security Council resolution. Ten nonpermanent members representing regional blocs serve two-year terms and do not have veto power. Unlike the General Assembly, the Security Council does have the power to enforce its resolutions through sanctions, military force, and other measures if it deems there is a threat to international peace and security.

As of 2007, the UN Security Council had passed more than 265 resolutions regarding the Arab-Israeli conflict, many of which were critical of Israeli actions. More than 40 additional draft resolutions critical of Israel failed because of a US veto. (See Table 8.)

Israel remains in violation of most of the resolutions that have passed that challenge the legality of its policies. For example, Resolutions 446, 452, 465, and 471 require Israel to cease its colonization of the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES through the establishment of Jewish SETTLEMENTS—illegal under the Fourth Geneva Convention, which explicitly prohibits an occupying power from transferring its civilian population onto lands seized by military force. Another series of Security Council resolutions is concerned with Israel's alteration of the status of Jerusalem. Israel is currently violating Resolutions 262, 267, 476, and 478, which call upon Israel to rescind its annexation of Arab East Jerusalem and surrounding areas—seized in the early days of the 1967 War—and to cease other activities that attempt to change the city's status.

Other Security Council resolutions that Israel is currently violating are (1) Resolution 487, which calls upon Israel to place its nuclear facilities under the safeguard of the UN's International Atomic Energy Agency; (2) Resolution 497, which demands that Israel rescind its imposition of domestic laws in the occupied Syrian Golan region; (3) Resolution 573, which calls on Israel to pay compensation for human and material losses from its 1985 attack against PLO offices and nearby buildings in Tunisia; and (4) Resolutions 1402, 1403, and 1405, which require Israel to withdraw from Palestinian areas in the West Bank reoccupied in 2002. Over a dozen more resolutions still being violated insist that Israel abide by the Fourth Geneva Convention regarding the Occupied Territories, including ceasing its DEPORTATION and TARGETED ASSASSINATIONS of Palestinians and its HOUSE DEMOLITIONS of Palestinian dwellings and other forms of collective punishment, as well as controlling SETTLER VIOLENCE against the Palestinian population.

UN Security Council Resolution 242, passed following the 1967 War (reiterated in UNSC Resolution 338 in 1973), remains the key Security Council action related to peace between the Arab states and Israel. (A 1976 draft resolution reiterating 242, but with the added proviso of establishing a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, was vetoed by the United States.) The Arab states and the PLO initially rejected 242 and 338, though there were indications that some of them were moderating this rejectionist stance as far back as the early 1970s. By the beginning of the 1990s, the PLO and virtually every Arab state had indicated their readiness to accept the principle of land for peace. In March 2002 the Beirut summit of the League of Arab States unanimously adopted a resolution endorsing a peace plan by Saudi prince Abdullah, which, in essence, restated 242 and 338—the ARAB PEACE INITIATIVE.

Israel, however, backed by the United States, puts forward a far more limited definition of its responsibilities under the resolution. For example, the Israeli government claims that Resolution 242 spoke of "territories" rather than "the territories," implying that there is no obligation for a full withdrawal from the Occupied Territories. By this interpretation, previous Israeli withdrawals, such as the return of the Sinai Peninsula to Egypt in 1981, fulfilled Israel's obligations. However, the resolution's text in French (the other official language of the United Nations) does use the definite article. Furthermore, the authors of the original resolution, the US and British ambassadors, explicitly stated that they were thinking only in terms of very minor and reciprocal adjustments of the jagged BORDERS that were based on cease-fire lines in the 1949 armistice agreements.

There has also been an effort by Israel and the United States to expand the interpretation of security guarantees in Resolution 242, which were generally interpreted as peace treaties with promises of nonaggression by neighboring states, presumably enforced by some combination of arms control, demilitarized zones, early warning systems, and international peacekeeping forces. The United States and Israel now claim that the resolution essentially requires guarantees for the physical safety of every Israeli citizen. In effect, the Israeli and US governments argue that Israel is under no obligation to withdraw from the Occupied Territories unless there is a total halt to Palestinian terrorism and other violence. Because most SUICIDE BOMBINGS and other attacks against Israeli civilians come from terrorist cells that are beyond the effective control of any government (particularly a disempowered PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY under siege by Israeli occupation forces) and that explicitly want to sabotage the peace process

Table 8 US Vetoes in the Security Council on Behalf of Israel

Date	Issue	Vote
10 Sept. 1972	Condemned Israel's attacks against southern Lebanon and Syria	13 to 1, with 1 abstention
26 July 1973	Affirmed the rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, statehood, and equal protections	13 to 1, with China absent
8 Dec. 1975	Condemned Israel's air strikes and attacks in southern Lebanon and its murder of innocent civilians	13 to 1, with 1 abstention
26 Jan. 1976	Called for self-determination of Palestinian people	9 to 1, with 3 abstentions
25 March 1976	Deplored Israel's altering of the status of Jerusalem, which is recognized as an international city by most world nations and the United Nations	14 to 1
29 June 1976	Affirmed the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people	10 to 1, with 4 abstentions
30 April 1980	Endorsed self-determination for the Palestinian people	10 to 1, with 4 abstentions
20 Jan. 1982	Demanded Israel's withdrawal from the Golan Heights	9 to 1, with 4 abstentions
2 April 1982	Condemned Israel's mistreatment of Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip and its refusal to abide by the Geneva Convention protocols of civilized nations	14 to 1
20 April 1982	Condemned an Israeli soldier who shot eleven Muslim worshipers on the Temple Mount of the al-Haram ash-Sharaf near the al-Aqsa Mosque in the Old City of Jerusalem	14 to 1
9 June 1982	Urged sanctions against Israel if it did not withdraw from its invasion of Lebanon	14 to 1
26 June 1982	Urged sanctions against Israel if it did not withdraw from its invasion of Beirut, Lebanon	14 to 1
6 Aug. 1982	Urged cutoff of economic aid to Israel if it refused to withdraw from its occupation of Lebanon	11 to 1, with 3 abstentions
2 Aug. 1983	Condemned continued Israeli settlements in occupied Palestinian territories of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, denouncing them as an obstacle to peace	13 to 1, with 1 abstention
6 Sept. 1984	Deplored Israel's brutal massacre of Arabs in Lebanon and urged its withdrawal	14 to 1
12 March 1985	Condemned Israeli brutality in southern Lebanon and denounced Israel's "Iron Fist" policy of repression	11 to 1, with 3 abstentions
13 Sept. 1985	Denounced Israel's violation of human rights in the Occupied Territories	10 to 1, with 4 abstentions
17 Jan. 1986	Deplored Israel's violence in southern Lebanon	11 to 1, with 3 abstentions
30 Jan. 1986	Deplored Israel's activities in occupied Arab East Jerusalem that threaten the sanctity of Muslim holy sites	13 to 1, with 1 abstention
6 Feb. 1986	Condemned Israel's hijacking of a Libyan passenger airplane on 4 February	10 to 1, with 1 abstention
18 Jan. 1988	Deplored Israel's attacks on Lebanon and its measures and practices against the civilian population of Lebanon	13 to 1, with Britain abstaining
1 Feb. 1988	Called on Israel to abandon its policies against the Palestinian uprising that violate the rights of occupied Palestinians, to abide by the Fourth Geneva Convention, and to formalize a leading role for the United Nations in future peace negotiations	14 to 1
15 April 1988	Urged Israel to accept back deported Palestinians, condemned Israel's shooting of civilians, called on Israel to uphold the Fourth Geneva Convention, and called for a peace settlement under UN auspices	14 to 1
10 May 1988	Condemned Israel's 2 May incursion into Lebanon	14 to 1
14 Dec. 1988	Deplored Israel's 9 December commando raids on Lebanon	14 to 1

Table 8 (Continued)

Date	Issue	Vote
17 Feb. 1989	Deplored Israel's repression of the Palestinian uprising and called on Israel to respect the human rights of the Palestinians	14 to 1
9 June 1989	Deplored Israel's violation of the human rights of the Palestinians	14 to 1
7 Nov. 1989	Demanded that Israel return property confiscated from Palestinians during a tax protest and allow a fact-finding mission to observe Israel's crackdown on the Palestinian uprising	14 to 1
31 May 1990	Called for a fact-finding mission on abuses against Palestinians in Israeli-occupied lands	14 to 1
17 May 1995	Declared Israel's expropriation of land in East Jerusalem invalid and in violation of Security Council resolutions and the Fourth Geneva Convention	14 to 1
7 March 1997	Called on Israel to refrain from settlement activity and all other actions in the Occupied Territories	14 to 1
21 March 1997	Demanded that Israel cease construction of the settlement Har Homa (called Jabal Abu Ghneim by the Palestinians) in East Jerusalem and cease all other settlement activity in the Occupied Territories	13 to 1, with 1 abstention
26 March 2001	Called for the deployment of a UN observer force in the West Bank and Gaza	9 to 1, with 4 abstentions
14 Dec. 2001	Condemned all acts of terror, the use of excessive force, and destruction of properties and encouraged establishment of a monitoring apparatus	12 to 1, with 2 abstentions
19 Dec. 2002	Expressed deep concern over Israel's killing of UN employees and Israel's destruction of the UN World Food Program warehouse in Beit Lahiya and demanded that Israel refrain from the excessive and disproportionate use of force in the Occupied Territories	12 to 1, with 2 abstentions
16 Sept. 2003	Reaffirmed the illegality of deportation of any Palestinian and expressed concern about the possible deportation of Yasir Arafat	11 to 1, with 3 abstentions
14 Oct. 2003	Raised concerns about Israel's building of a security fence through the occupied West Bank	10 to 1, with 4 abstentions
25 March 2004	Condemned Israel for killing Palestinian spiritual leader Sheikh Ahmad Yasin in a missile attack in Gaza	11 to 1, with 3 abstentions
5 Oct. 2004	Condemned Israel's military incursion in Gaza, which caused many civilian deaths and extensive damage to property	11 to 1, with 3 abstentions
13 July 2006	Accused Israel of a "disproportionate use of force" that endangered Palestinian civilians, and demanded Israel withdraw its troops from Gaza	10 to 0, with 4 abstentions
12 Nov. 2006	Condemned Israel for its military actions in Gaza and called for an immediate withdrawal of Israeli forces from the area	10 to 0, with 4 abstentions
30 Dec. 2008	Called for a cease-fire in Israel-Gaza war	14 to 1 through violence, this effectively means that Israel is not obliged to withdraw. Moreover, because the Israeli definition of terrorism is so broad that it applies even to nonviolent political activities by individuals from groups Israel has designated as terrorist, the likelihood of Israel ever withdrawing from the Occupied Territories under such parameters is remote.

International Court of Justice

The International Court of Justice (also known as the World Court) has its origins in the Permanent International Court established in the Hague in 1899. Since the founding of the United Nations in 1945, the World Court has functioned essentially as the judicial arm of the UN system, designed to enable nations to settle their disputes nonviolently based on the rule of law. The court does not have the authority to enforce its decisions, though the Security Council has used its verdicts as the bases for binding resolutions. Based in the Hague, the court is made up of fifteen judges who are elected.

The most noteworthy decision related to the Arab-Israeli conflict concerned Israel's Barrier in the Occupied West Bank. In 2003 the General Assembly voted to send the issue to the World Court after the United States vetoed an otherwise unanimous UN Security Council draft resolution that declared, “the construction by Israel, the occupying power, of a wall in the Occupied Territories departing from the armistice line of 1949, is illegal under relevant provisions of international law and must be ceased and reversed.” The World Court claimed jurisdiction partly because the United States, by its veto, had frustrated the Security Council from exercising its authority to address actions by Israel that it deemed a “threat to international peace and security.” The court reasserted the authority of the General Assembly to seek such an advisory opinion to rectify what it considered Washington’s abuse of its veto power.

On 9 July 2004 the World Court determined that the Israeli government’s construction of the Barrier running through the occupied Palestinian West Bank was illegal. Among other things, the court noted that the construction of the first 125 miles of the proposed 450-mile Barrier built at that point had “involved the confiscation and destruction of Palestinian LAND and resources, the disruption of the lives of thousands of protected civilians and the de facto annexation of large areas of territory.” The court called on Israel to cease construction of the wall, to dismantle what had already been built in areas beyond Israel’s internationally recognized border, and to compensate Palestinians who have suffered losses due to the Barrier’s construction.

The vote was 14 to 1, a not unexpected margin given the overwhelming consensus of international legal experts regarding the responsibilities of occupying powers; the sole dissenter was the US judge, Thomas Buergenthal, who did so largely on procedural grounds. The fifty-seven-page decision examined in detail the various arguments raised by the interested parties and was consistent with strictures set by the UN Charter, a series of UN Security Council resolutions, previous World Court rulings, and relevant international treaties. Israel and the US government immediately denounced the ruling, and Israel has refused to abide by it.

Charges of Anti-Israel Bias

Despite the instrumental role of the United Nations in the creation of the state of Israel, critics have frequently charged it with having an anti-Israel bias. For example, those challenging the United Nations’ disproportionate attention to Israeli human rights abuses have observed that many of Israel’s most strident critics have often been governments whose human rights records are worse. However, most of Israel’s human rights abuses have taken place in territories recognized as being under belligerent occupation, so the inhabitants are therefore under the protection of the Fourth Geneva Convention, which is under the purview of the United Nations. Conversely, most other human rights abuses in the world take place within the territory of sovereign states, where the options for UN interference are far more limited. At the same time, the fact that nearly 30 percent of resolutions adopted by the UN’s Human Rights Commission and its successor organization, the UN Human Rights Council, which addresses human rights abuses overall, have been directed toward Israel does indicate a disproportionate degree of attention to Israel. In addition, the far more significant violations of the Fourth Geneva Convention by Indonesia during its occupation of East Timor (1975–2000) received far less attention from UN bodies than did Israeli violations. Similarly, issues regarding Moroccan settlers in the Western Sahara and other violations of international humanitarian law of that occupied territory have not been subjected to the level of scrutiny or the subject of resolutions that comparable Israeli actions have.

However, on examination of the UN Security Council, the only body that has enforcement capability, charges of anti-Israeli bias appear to have little merit. For example, IRAQ’s 1990 invasion and occupation of KUWAIT was condemned, and the Security Council authorized the use of force to back up its resolutions demanding Iraqi withdrawal. When Morocco invaded the Western Sahara in 1975 and Indonesia invaded East Timor that same year, the United Nations demanded the withdrawal of the occupying armies and underscored the right to self-determination. Similar demands were made of Turkey when it seized the northern third of Cyprus the previous year. Though none of these resolutions were enforced (in part due to the close strategic relationship that veto-wielding Western powers had with the invaders), the Security Council did reiterate basic legal principles against such territorial expansion. By contrast, UN Security Council Resolution 242—passed when Israel conquered the Sinai Peninsula of Egypt, the Golan Heights of Syria, the West Bank (including East Jerusalem), and the Gaza Strip—did not include demands comparable to these other resolutions for the occupying army to withdraw unconditionally and grant the right of self-determination. Instead, Israeli withdrawal was conditional on neighboring states recognizing Israel's right to exist within secure and recognized borders free from acts or threats of force.

Similarly, the International Atomic Energy Agency placed sanctions on IRAN for its failure to abide by UN Security Council resolutions demanding its compliance with special limitations on its nuclear program. Yet, the Security Council has refused to enforce sanctions on Israel for its ongoing refusal to abide by a 1981 resolution (UNSC Resolution 487) that called on Israel to place its nuclear facilities under the trusteeship of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Role of the United States

As a permanent member of the Security Council and the largest single financial contributor to the United Nations, the United States has used its considerable leverage to limit the UN role in the Arab-Palestinian conflict and to protect the perceived interests of its Israeli ally. On several occasions the United States has withdrawn or has threatened to withdraw badly needed financial support from UN agencies that have supported Palestinian rights. For example, the United States threatened to withhold all funding from the United Nations when it upgraded the PLO's status in 1989. That same year, the UN Food and Agricultural Organization faced a deep cut in US financial support because of its assistance to the Palestinians. In addition, the United States threatened to withdraw from the World Health Organization when it considered admitting Palestine as a full member. One of the justifications for the US withdrawal from UNESCO in 1984 was its educational assistance to Palestinian children.

There have also been scores of occasions on which the United States was the only country besides Israel (sometimes joined by one to four small third world states dependent on US aid) to vote against otherwise unanimous resolutions in the UN General Assembly. More critically, since 1972 the United States has used its veto power in the Security Council more than forty times to block resolutions critical of Israeli policies in the Occupied Territories. This is in addition to the scores of times when the threat of a US veto has led to a weakening of a resolution's language or the withdrawal of the proposed resolution prior to the vote.

After the Palestinians renounced ARMED STRUGGLE and unilaterally recognized Israeli control of 78 percent of Palestine in the 1993 OSLO ACCORDS, their strongest remaining tool was a series of UN Security Council resolutions reaffirming principles of international law that applied to their conflict with Israel. The Palestinians assumed that the United States, as guarantor of the DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES framework for future accords, would pressure Israel to make needed compromises based upon UN Security Council resolutions that the United States, as a Security Council member, was obliged to uphold. However, both the BILL CLINTON and the subsequent GEORGE W. BUSH administration claimed that the Oslo Accords superseded the UN resolutions and that the United Nations no longer had any standing in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. As Clinton's ambassador to the United Nations, Madeleine Albright, stated, "Resolution language referring to 'final status' issues . . . should be dropped, since these issues are now under negotiations by the parties themselves. These include refugees, settlements, territorial sovereignty and the status of Jerusalem." However, the international community does not agree with this attempt to negate the authority of the United Nations. Only a vote by the body in question can rescind a UN resolution. Neither the UN secretary-general nor any other member of the Security Council agrees with the US assessment discounting the relevance of the resolutions. Furthermore, no bilateral agreement between two parties can supersede the authority of the UN Security Council. This is especially true when one of the two parties (in this case, the Palestinians) has made it clear that such resolutions are still relevant.

In 1988 the US Congress passed a law banning the PLO from operating its UN mission, an effort later voided by rulings from both the World Court and a US federal court, citing US commitments to the United Nations upon its founding. Undeterred, the United States, which is also required to allow invited guests of the world body access to UN facilities, prevented PLO chairman Yasir Arafat from addressing the Forty-third UN General Assembly, which moved its session to UN facilities in Geneva, Switzerland, in order to hear his speech. In 1997 MARTIN INDYK, President Clinton's ambassador to Israel (who had also served as his assistant secretary of state for the Middle East) publicly encouraged Israel to keep its occupation forces in Lebanon indefinitely, effectively calling on Israel to defy ten UN Security Council resolutions. The following day, Clinton defended Indyk's remarks, while public opinion polls in Israel ironically showed that the vast majority wanted their forces to pull out of Lebanon.

A series of resolutions by the General Assembly and the Security Council, as well as the 2004 World Court ruling, affirm the illegality of Israel's settlement policy and Israel's obligation to stop construction of new settlements and remove its colonists from the existing settlements. In contrast, US policy in recent years has been that the fate of the settlements must instead be determined through negotiations between Israel and the Palestinian National Authority and that the United States would not pressure Israel and would shield it from any other state attempting to apply pressure to abide by these UN decisions.

The United States itself may be in violation of UN Security Council resolutions regarding the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. For example, Article 7 of UN Security Council Resolution 465 forbids all member states from facilitating Israel's colonization drive, yet the United States has assisted in funding the construction of the so-called BYPASS ROADS and other INFRASTRUCTURE reinforcing Israeli settlements in the Occupied Territories. In addition, Article 5 of Resolution 478 calls upon all member states of the United Nations to accept the Security Council's decision that Israel's annexation of greater East Jerusalem is null and void, yet, through a series of executive orders and congressional resolutions over the past decade, the United States has effectively recognized Israeli sovereignty over the illegally annexed Palestinian territory.

Public opinion polls have shown that more than two-thirds of Americans believe that the United Nations should take the lead in resolving the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and a similar percentage believe that the UN Security Council should decide the territorial boundaries between Israel and a Palestinian state. Despite this, a cornerstone of the US-led peace process has been to exclude the United Nations: a 1991 memorandum of understanding between the United States and Israel explicitly stated that the United Nations would not have a meaningful role.

See also FINAL STATUS TALKS; JERUSALEM; LEBANON WAR; REFUGEES AND THE RIGHT OF RETURN; SCANDINAVIAN COUNTRIES; WATER

Bibliography

- All resolutions on the Palestinians may be found online at www.un.org/documents/resga.htm.
- American Friends Service Committee. Israel Palestine at the United Nations. Quaker United Nations Office. n.d. www.quono.org/emergingconflicts/israel-palestine/crisesIsrael-PUN.htm.
- Bennis, Phyllis. The UN in the Israel-Palestine Struggle. Boston: Trans-Arab Research Institute, 2001.
- Council for Arab-British Understanding. UN General Assembly Resolutions—Israel, Palestine. London: CAABU, 2006. www.caabu.org/index.asp?homepage=resources&article=ungar\_IP.
- . UN Security Council Resolutions—Israel, Palestine. London: CAABU, 2006. www.caabu.org/index.asp?homepage=resources&article=unscr\_IP.
- Global Policy Forum. Israel, Palestine and the Occupied Territories. New York: Global Policy Forum, n.d. www.globalpolicy.org/security/issues/isrlindx.htm.
- . UN Involvement in the Israel-Palestine Problem. New York: Global Policy Forum, n.d. www.globalpolicy.org/security/issues/israel-palestine/unindex.htm.
- Presbyterian Church U.S.A. (PCUSA). The United Nations, Israel and Palestine. n.d. www.pcusa.org/worldwide/israelpalestine/resources/6unitednations.pdf.
- Zunes, Stephen. "International Law, the United Nations and Middle Eastern Conflicts." Peace Review 16:3 (September 2004).
- . "Undermining the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty—It Didn't Start with the Bush Administration." Foreign Policy in Focus Special Report. June 2005. <http://www.fpif.org/fpiftxt/471>.
- . "The United States Reaction to the International Court of Justice Ruling on Israel's Separation Barrier." Middle East Policy XII:1 (January 2005).

—Stephen Zunes

United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine

The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine (UNCCP) was established at the third session of the UN General Assembly (UNGA) in 1948. Its mandate resided in UN RESOLUTION 194 (11 December 1948), better known for its call for repatriation of the Palestinian REFUGEES from the 1948 WAR. The UNCCP was established as a three-member body—the UNITED STATES, FRANCE, and TURKEY—"to take steps to assist the Governments and authorities concerned to achieve a final settlement of all questions outstanding between them." In other words, the UNCCP was to broker a comprehensive, permanent peace treaty between Israel and each of the Arab states. The comprehensive settlement was to be based on three principles: (1) the Palestinian refugees who had fled or been expelled from their homes during the 1947–1948 fighting were to be permitted to return to their homes at the earliest possible date; (2) the final boundaries of the state of Israel were to be delineated; and (3) the international regime for JERUSALEM was to be implemented. In addition to creating the UNCCP and forcefully addressing the refugee issue, Resolution 194 restated (based on UN RESOLUTION 181, [1947]) the demand that Jerusalem be an international city under permanent UN trusteeship.

The UNCCP considered its most important objective to be facilitating permanent peace treaties between the Arab states and Israel. Soon after establishing headquarters in Jerusalem in January 1949, the UNCCP undertook a series of official preliminary visits to the governments of EGYPT, SAUDI ARABIA, Transjordan (JORDAN after 1950), IRAQ, SYRIA, LEBANON, and Israel to ascertain their views. Following these initial contacts, the UNCCP invited the Arab states to hold meetings in Beirut (21 March to 15 April 1949) for the purpose of exchanging views on the issue of the Palestine refugees. Similarly, the UNCCP met with Israeli prime minister DAVID BEN-GURION in Tel Aviv on 7 April 1949 to examine in depth the refugee question. At a later stage, the UNCCP invited the parties to the LAUSANNE CONFERENCE in Switzerland, held from 27 April to 15 September 1949. The commission emphasized that these talks were not to be considered peace negotiations but rather exchanges of views that could lead to the ultimate resolution of the outstanding issues and conflict among the parties. Throughout, the commission stressed the interrelationship of all aspects of the conflict, particularly the refugee and territorial questions, urging the parties to expand their dialogue to include all problems covered by Resolution 194. In this regard, the UNCCP requested the parties to sign a protocol that would constitute the basis of its continuing work. The relevant paragraph stated: “to achieve as quickly as possible the objectives of the General Assembly’s resolution of 11 December 1948, regarding refugees, the respect for their rights and the preservation of their property as well as territorial and other questions.” The protocol was accompanied by a map indicating the boundaries defined in UNGA Resolution 181 (II) of 29 November 1947—the Partition Resolution.

The Lausanne meetings were resumed in Geneva in 1950 from January to July, followed by meetings in Paris from September to November 1951. Ultimately, UNCCP efforts at conciliation and mediation proved unsuccessful because of the irreconcilable differences among the parties on fundamental issues and Israel’s refusal to abide by Resolution 181 (II) on boundaries and Jerusalem and to comply with paragraph 11 of Resolution 194 (III) on the Palestine refugees. The UNCCP terminated the Paris Conference, concluding that neither side was fully prepared to implement the resolutions guiding its work. From 1961 to 1962, the UNCCP undertook efforts, by means of a special representative, to explore the views of the parties regarding possible actions that could be taken to implement paragraph 11 of Resolution 194. Then, in 1963, the United States proposed that, as a member of the commission, it would initiate a series of high-level talks with the governments concerned. However, these initiatives did not result in any progress in terms of the UNCCP’s mandate for conciliation or for the Palestinian refugees.

With regard to the part of its mandate pertaining to Jerusalem, the UNCCP established a Committee on Jerusalem and Its Holy Places and authorized it to establish contact with relevant authorities for the purpose of obtaining detailed information on how best to carry out its responsibilities. The committee also conducted interviews with parties directly concerned, including representatives of Arab and Jewish local authorities, and with religious representatives in Jerusalem and around the Middle East, seeking to encourage acceptance of an international regime for Jerusalem. According to UNCCP records, the Arab delegations were generally prepared to accept the concept of an international regime for the Jerusalem area provided that the UNITED NATIONS offered the necessary guarantees for its stability and permanence. Israel, however, rejected the principle outright, accepting only limited international control of Jewish and Muslim HOLY SITES.

In September 1949 the UNCCP submitted a draft proposal to the General Assembly with numerous provisions for how a special status for Jerusalem could be effected, including the establishment of a general council of Arab and Jewish representatives for the city, an international tribunal to ensure respect for the plan, and the protection of and free access to the holy places. At the same time, this special status would allow for normal powers of government by the two adjoining states, namely Israel and Jordan, within the Jewish and Arab parts of Jerusalem, respectively. Although the UNCCP fulfilled that part of its mandate regarding Jerusalem, Israel never accepted it and so the proposal was never implemented.

With regard to the Palestinian refugees, the UNCCP determined that their repatriation or resettlement would be a lengthy process and that, in the meantime, urgent humanitarian intervention was necessary to alleviate their plight. Accordingly, the UNCCP established a Technical Committee in June 1949 to undertake several studies. The UNCCP subsequently dissolved the relatively ineffective Technical Committee and in August 1949 established the Economic Survey Mission. The mission was charged with examining the economic situation in the countries affected by the conflict in order to facilitate the repatriation, resettlement, and economic and social rehabilitation of the refugees as well as the payment of compensation to countries of residence. Following the mission's interim report to the General Assembly, the assembly adopted Resolution 302 (IV) of 8 December 1949, which established the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA).

On 14 December 1950 the General Assembly adopted Resolution 394 (V) mandating that the UNCCP set up a Refugee Office in Jerusalem. After its establishment in May 1951, officials determined that the office's immediate task was to arrive at a comprehensive estimate of the value of abandoned Palestinian refugee property in Israel. It estimated that the expanse of land that came under the control of Israel was approximately 16,324 square kilometers (about 6,300 square miles), of which 4,574 square kilometers (1,750 square miles) were cultivable.

The Refugee Office estimated the total value of this abandoned land at about 100 million Palestine pounds (about $280 million) and concluded that the approximate value of movable property belonging to the refugees before their exodus was 20 million Palestine pounds (about $56 million). These estimates, however, were strongly criticized by the Arab parties and refugee representatives as being too low.

The Refugee Office also prepared an initial plan for individual assessment of refugee properties. This task was later assigned to the UNCCP's Office for the Identification and Valuation of Arab Refugee Properties (Technical Office), whose work spanned the years 1952 to 1966. The Arab countries strongly criticized the Technical Office's work, especially with regard to the noninclusion of the vast majority of the Negev lands. Moreover, from their perspective, the office was by policy not entitled to consider compensation without repatriation. As for Israel, it refused to commit to the Technical Office's assessment and reserved its right to make detailed observations at an appropriate time and on the general question of compensation. During the 1970s, in response to formal requests from interested parties, the commission decided to make available copies of certain land records, with the understanding that the recipients would continue to treat valuation figures on a confidential basis.

The technical work done by the UNCCP is of great importance because it delineates Palestinian property and other losses. In UNGA Resolution 51/129 of 1996, the General Assembly requested the secretary-general to undertake efforts to "preserve and modernize the existing records" of the UNCCP. In response, the UN Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People decided to reallocate part of its financial resources over the period of two years to cover the expenses of the modernization project in cooperation with the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine to the United Nations. A private company under supervision of the UN Division for Palestinian Rights carried out the project.

In an annual resolution regarding the Palestine refugees, the General Assembly, in response to the yearly report of the UNCCP, expresses regret that paragraph 11 of Resolution 194 (III) has not been implemented. It also expresses regret that the UNCCP has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the repatriation or compensation of the refugees and requests the UNCCP to exert continued efforts toward Resolution 194's implementation and to report to the General Assembly on the matter.

See also JOHN F. KENNEDY; PALESTINIAN REFUGEE PROPERTY CLAIMS; REFUGEES AND THE RIGHT OF RETURN; UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 194

Bibliography

Takkenberg, Lex, and Alex Takkenberg. The Status of Palestinian Refugees in International Law. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1998.

United Nations General Assembly. 194 (III). Palestine—Progress Report of the United Nations Mediator. 11 December 1948. Resolution that created the Conciliation Commission (full text). n.d. <http://domino.un.org/UNISPAL.NSF/62c13fb98d54fe240525672700581383/c758572b78d1cd0085256bcf0077e51a!OpenDocument>.

United Nations General Assembly Resolution 181

United Nations General Assembly Resolution 181 is the 1947 resolution that partitioned Palestine into Jewish and Arab states. Following World War II, escalating hostilities between Arabs and Jews over the fate of Palestine and between the Zionist militias and the British army compelled Britain to relinquish its Mandate over Palestine in 1948. The British requested that the recently established UNITED NATIONS determine the future of Palestine. A UN-appointed committee—the UNITED NATIONS SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON PALESTINE (UNSCOP)—of representatives from various countries went to Palestine to investigate the situation. Although members of this committee disagreed on the form that a political resolution should take, there was general agreement that the country would have to be divided to satisfy the needs and demands of both Jews and Palestinian Arabs.

At the end of 1946, 1.3 million Palestinian Arabs and 608,000 Jews resided within the BORDERS of BRITISH MANDATE Palestine. Jews had purchased approximately 7 percent of the total LAND area of Palestine, amounting to about 20 percent of the arable land. When, on 29 November 1947, the UN General Assembly voted to partition Palestine, it divided the country in such a way that each state would have a majority of its own population. Nevertheless, some Jewish SETTLEMENTS would have fallen within the proposed Palestinian state, and many Palestinians would have become part of the proposed Jewish state. Despite the larger Palestinian landownership and population, the territory allotted to the Jewish state was larger than the Palestinian state (56 percent and 43 percent of Palestine, respectively). The resolution stipulated an economic union between the states, and the area of JERUSALEM and BETHLEHEM was to become an international trusteeship under permanent United Nations authority. Highlights of the resolution follow.

Holy Sites

Freedom of “access, visit, and transit shall be guaranteed” to Muslim and Jewish holy places, “in conformity with existing rights, to all residents and citizens of the other state [i.e., Israel and Palestine] and of the City of Jerusalem, as well as to aliens, without distinction as to nationality, subject to requirements of national security, public order and decorum.”

Religious and Minority Rights

“No expropriation of land owned by an Arab in the Jewish State (or by a Jew in the Arab State) shall be allowed except for public purposes. In all cases of expropriation, full compensation as fixed by the Supreme Court shall be paid previous to dispossession.”

Economic Union and Transit

The provisional councils of the government of each state would work together to establish an economic union “utilizing to the greatest possible extent the advice and cooperation of representative organizations and bodies from each of the proposed States.” The objectives of the economic union were to achieve or establish (1) a customs union; (2) a joint currency system with a single foreign exchange rate; (3) operation in the common interest on a nondiscriminatory basis of railways and interstate highways; postal, telephone, and telegraphic services; and ports and airports for international trade and commerce; (4) joint economic development, especially for irrigation, land reclamation, and soil conservation; and (5) access for both states and Jerusalem to WATER and power facilities.

Jerusalem

The city was to be established as a corpus separatum under a special international regime administered by the United Nations, which would hand over its power to a trusteeship council designated to discharge the responsibilities of the Administering Authority on behalf of the United Nations. Jerusalem’s boundaries would include the present municipality plus the surrounding villages and towns, bordered on the east by ABU DIS, on the south by Bethlehem, on the west by ‘Ein Karim (including the built-up area of Motsa), and on the north by Shu’fat.

Publicly, the Zionist leadership accepted the UN partition plan but considered it only a first step to controlling all of Palestine. Zionist leaders were extremely concerned about the large number of Palestinians who would become part of the Jewish state. The Palestinian Arabs and the surrounding © Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs (PASSIA), Jerusalem, reprinted with permission.

Map 42. Borders Stipulated in UN Resolution 181 Compared with Israel’s Borders after 1948 War

Arab states rejected the UN plan and regarded the General Assembly vote as an international betrayal. Although some argued that the UN plan allotted too much territory to the Jews, most Arabs regarded the proposed Jewish state as a settler colony and argued that it was only because the British had permitted extensive Zionist settlement in Palestine, against the wishes of the Arab majority, that the question of Jewish statehood was on the international agenda at all.

Immediately after the United Nations announced the resolution, sporadic demonstrations and some violence occurred among the Palestinians against the Jews, but it waned within a few days. Within weeks, however, in December 1947, the HAGANA and other Jewish underground groups began a campaign to depopulate the Palestinian areas that fell within the boundaries of the Jewish state, an operation that continued unabated through 1948. The Arab states fulminated but took no action, while DAVID BEN-GURION expressed satisfaction with the de-Arabization process: "We are told the army had the ability of destroying a whole village and taking out all its inhabitants, let's do it." And further, "Every attack has to end with occupation, destruction and expulsion." As Israeli historian Ilan Pappé notes, "Ben-Gurion meant that the entire population of a village had to be removed, everything in it leveled to the ground, and its history destroyed. In its place, a new Jewish settlement would emerge." Significantly, the ethnic cleansing began and progressed while the British Mandate authority was still in Palestine—not until 15 May 1948 was the Mandate terminated.

On the day the British officially evacuated Palestine, Zionist leaders proclaimed the state of Israel. Neighboring Arab states (EGYPT, LEBANON, SYRIA, JORDAN, and IRAQ) then invaded that part of Palestine allotted to the Palestinians in an effort to prevent Jewish forces from seizing the area. In 1949 the war between Israel and the Arab states ended with the signing of ARMISTICE AGREEMENTS. Some 750,000 Palestinians had been dispossessed and had become REFUGEES. The country once known as Palestine was now divided into three parts, each under separate political control. The state of Israel encompassed some 78 percent of Mandatory Palestine, including West Jerusalem (up from the 56 percent stipulated in Resolution 181). Jordan occupied East Jerusalem and the hill country of central Palestine (the WEST BANK), and Egypt took control of the coastal plain around the city of Gaza (the GAZA STRIP). Although the Palestinian Arab state envisioned by the UN partition plan was never established, Resolution 181 remains as valid today as when it was adopted and still provides the legal basis for an independent Palestinian state.

See also UNITED NATIONS; WAR, 1948

Bibliography

- Benvenisti, Meron. "The Myth Says We Compromised." Middle East Roundtable. 4:1 (September 2004). www.bitterlemons-international.org.
- Falk, Richard. "A Closer Look at the Israeli/Palestinian Conflict." Middle East Report. Winter 2000.

Khatib, Ghassan. "The First Milestone." Middle East Roundtable. 4:1 (September 2004). www.bitterlemons-international.org.

Pappé, Ilan. The Ethnic Cleansing of Palestine. Oxford, UK: Oneworld Publications, 2006.

Quigley, John. The Case for Palestine: An International Law Perspective. Durham, NC: Duke University Press, 2005.

United Nations General Assembly. Full text of Resolution 181. Yale Law School. www.yale.edu/lawweb/avalon/un/res181.htm.

United Nations General Assembly Resolution 194

Resolution 194 consists of fifteen articles, the most well-known being Article 11, which calls for return or repatriation to Palestine/Israel of the Palestinian REFUGEES and for their compensation. The UNITED NATIONS General Assembly passed Resolution 194 on 11 December 1948, near the end of the 1948 WAR. It expresses appreciation for the efforts of UN envoy COUNT FOLKE BERNADOTTE after his TARGETED ASSASSINATION by militant Zionists. It deals with the situation in Palestine at the time, including the role of the UN CONCILIATION COMMISSION FOR PALESTINE. Other relevant articles are Article 7 (protection and free access to Jewish and Muslim HOLY SITES), Article 8 (demilitarization and UN control over JERUSALEM), and Article 9 (free access to Jerusalem).

Article 11, which continues to be significant and relevant, "resolves that the refugees wishing to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbors, should be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date, and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return, and for loss of or damage to property which, under principles of international law or in equity, should be made good by the Governments or authorities responsible." The article "[i]nstructs the Conciliation Commission to facilitate the repatriation, resettlement and economic and social rehabilitation of the refugees and the payment of compensation, and to maintain close relations with the Director of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees and, through him, with the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations."

Resolution 194 was the international response to the exodus of more than 750,000 Palestinians from Palestine/Israel during the 1948 War. Consistent with existing principles of refugee law and practice, the resolution created a special international body to provide protection and seek durable solutions for Palestinian refugees. Until the establishment of the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) in 1950, the international community largely dealt with refugee flows in an ad hoc fashion and as problems solely involving the directly affected states.

The emphasis on “return” in Resolution 194 was unique only in terms of the focus on returning to Palestine. Until the Palestinian situation, most refugee crises involved third-country resettlement and population exchanges or transfers—such as for European war refugees who did not wish to return to their homes of origin. Moreover, numerous historical precedents for restitution of property already existed by 1948, when Palestinians were displaced from their homeland. Resolution 194 embodied international legal principles that were already binding on states and continue to be binding today.

Resolution 194, paragraph 11, affirms three separate rights—the right of return, the right to restitution, and the right to compensation—and two distinct solutions regarding return—restitution and compensation or resettlement, restitution, and compensation governed by the principle of individual refugee choice. Most analysts consider the primary durable solution for Palestinian refugees as return, restitution, and compensation for loss of or damage to property. Resolution 194 does not resolve that Palestinian refugees should be resettled in other states. The right of Palestinian refugees to return to their homes is mentioned nine times in UN mediator Bernadotte’s September 1948 progress report to the Conciliation Commission. “[N]o settlement can be just and complete if recognition is not accorded to the right of the Arab refugee to return to the homes from which he has been dislodged by the hazards and strategy of the armed conflict between Arabs and Jews in Palestine.” He concludes that “the right of innocent people, uprooted from their homes by the present terror and ravages of war, to return to their homes, should be affirmed and made effective.”

Although no aspect of Resolution 194 has been implemented, which constitutes a serious breach of international law and United Nations legitimacy, it remains the preeminent resolution concerning the majority of Palestinian refugees and any peace agreement that is not consistent with this resolution, in effect or with intent, will likely be questioned or even rejected by the refugees themselves. That Israel wishes to maintain itself as an ethnically “Jewish” state does not negate the fundamental rights of the people originally dispossessed so that a Jewish state could come into being.

See also REFUGEES AND THE RIGHT OF RETURN

Bibliography

- Benn, Aluf. “Resolution 194 May Be the Key to the Problem.” Ha’aretz (Jerusalem). 25 December 2000.
- Mallison, W. Thomas, and Sally V. Mallison. An International Law Analysis of the Major United Nations Resolutions Concerning the Palestine Question. New York: United Nations, 1979.
- Rempel, Terry. UN General Assembly Resolution 194 (III) and the Framework for Durable Solutions for 1948 Palestinian Refugees. Bethlehem: Badil Research Center, 2003.
- United Nations General Assembly. Full text of Resolution 194. <http://daccessdds.un.org/doc/resolution/gen/nro/o43/65/img/nro04365.pdf>.

United Nations General Assembly Resolution 3379

On 10 November 1975 the United Nations General Assembly passed Resolution 3379, which stated that “ZIONISM was a form of Racism and racial discrimination.” The resolution passed by 72 to 35 with 32 abstentions. It was mainly supported by the developing countries, including Arab, African, and Soviet-bloc states.

The resolution was adopted in the context of continued Israeli OCCUPATION and oppression of the Palestinians in the territories it had seized in the 1967 WAR plus its refusal to recognize or negotiate with the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION, as well as to some extent against the background of Israeli economic and military cooperation with the apartheid regime of South Africa.

Although it was the UNITED NATIONS that created and legitimized Israel in its 1947 UN RESOLUTION 181, one of the practical effects of Resolution 3379 was to eliminate permanently any moral influence of the United Nations on the Jewish Israeli public. However, as early as 1949, Israel evidenced disregard for the United Nations and its resolutions. Others suggest that the resolution gave great impetus to the most extreme Zionist politicians, who asserted that Israel was completely surrounded by enemies and could never expect any justice from the international community. Long before 1975, however, such propaganda was prevalent in some circles and not just among the “extremists.” Others argue that the “Zionist is Racism” resolution became the justification for establishment of new SETTLEMENTS in the WEST BANK and stymied attempts to further a negotiated solution. Events on the ground and an analysis of Israeli policymaking do not support such assertions. ARIEL SHARON, for example, did not intensely promote the settlement project and refuse to deal with the Palestinians because of Resolution 3379; rather he had been pushing the settlement program since immediately after the 1967 WAR.

In 1991, when President GEORGE H. W. BUSH and his secretary of state, GEORGE SHULTZ, were attempting to organize the MADRID CONFERENCE, Israel made revocation of Resolution 3379 a condition of its participation in the peace conference. The Bush administration employed a great deal of pressure and political capital in the General Assembly and was successful. Resolution 3379 was revoked on 16 December 1991 by UN General Assembly Resolution 46/86, which passed by a vote of 111 to 25, with 13 abstentions. President Bush personally introduced the motion for revocation of Resolution 3379.

Bibliography

- For a text of the resolution, see <http://domino.un.org/unispal.nsf/b792301807650d6685256cef0073cb80/761c1063530766a7052566a2005b74d1!OpenDocument>.
- Ridenour, Amy. “The United Nations Legacy of Anti-Semitism.” National Center Blog: A Project of the National Center for Public Policy Research. 26 July 2006. <http://www.nationalcenter.org/2006/07/united-nations-legacy-of-anti-semitism.html>.
- Schechla, Joseph. “UN Debate Will Necessitate Re-Examination of Resolution 3379.” Washington Report on the Middle East. November 1991.
- Siddiqui, Habib. “Zionism Is Racism.” Media Monitors Network—Mobile Edition. 23 (April 2009).

United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

See UNITED NATIONS

United Nations Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338

On 22 November 1967, in the aftermath of the 1967 WAR, the UNITED NATIONS Security Council unanimously adopted Resolution 242 (S/RES/242) calling for the “withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from the territories occupied in the recent conflict” in exchange for an end to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The “territories” refer to the WEST BANK, East JERUSALEM, the GAZA STRIP, the Sinai Peninsula, and the Golan Heights, which were conquered by Israel in the 1967 War. The resolution embodies the Security Council’s basic program for resolving the Arab-Israeli conflict, in particular, ending the state of belligerency among EGYPT, JORDAN, SYRIA, and Israel. It insists upon the termination of all states of war in the area; guarantees the sovereignty, territorial integrity, and independence of all Middle Eastern nations; and calls for a “just settlement” of the REFUGEE question.

Owing to vigorous Israeli diplomacy in the person of ABBA EBAN, the resolution contains a built-in ambiguity reflected in the differing French and English versions. The French version, accepted by the entire international community except the UNITED STATES and Israel, calls for “Israeli withdrawal from the territories” (emphasis added), which implies withdrawal from all the territories occupied in 1967, including the West Bank and Gaza. The English version calls for “Israeli withdrawal from territories” (emphasis added), which Israel has used to argue that it is required to withdraw from some territories, which it fulfilled with the return of the Sinai in the Israeli-Egyptian treaty, but not all the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. Besides Israel and the United States, no other country accepts this interpretation of the resolution.

The essence of Resolution 242 is the principle of “land for peace”—Israeli withdrawal from the Occupied Territories in exchange for peace with its Arab neighbors. At the time, this was an important advance, considering that there were no peace treaties between any Arab state and Israel. Yet land for peace only served once as the basis for Israeli-Arab state peace treaties—in the 1979 Israel-Egypt treaty, in which Israel retreated from the Sinai Peninsula (and Egypt withdrew its claims to the Gaza Strip). Jordan and Israel signed a treaty of peace in 1994, but that accord did not involve land for peace because Israel refused to return the West Bank, and Jordan acceded. The Jordan River marks the demarcation line as the border between Israel and Jordan, although the status of the occupied West Bank and East Jerusalem remains unresolved.

On 23 November 1967, the UN secretary-general appointed Gunnar Jarring as special envoy to negotiate the implementation of Resolution 242 with the parties—the so-called Jarring mission. The governments of Israel, Egypt, Jordan, and Lebanon recognized Jarring’s appointment and agreed to participate in his shuttle diplomacy, although they differed on key points of interpretation of the resolution. The government of Syria rejected Jarring's mission on the grounds that total Israeli withdrawal from all Occupied Territories was a prerequisite for further negotiations. Under Jarring's auspices, the talks lasted until 1973 but bore no results. In the meantime, the United States proposed the so-called ROGERS PLAN (1969), which all the parties also rejected. After 1973, bilateral and multilateral peace efforts replaced the Jarring mission.

After the OCTOBER WAR of 1973, the Security Council passed Resolution 338, which was a restatement of Resolution 242.

Later, Tel Aviv showed some interest in peace with Syria by haggling with Damascus over the Golan Heights on such issues as security, access to WATER resources, and whether the border should be the 1949 line or the 1967 boundary. Throughout the 1990s and beyond there were several Israeli-Syrian negotiations regarding a normalization of relations, but a Tel Aviv–Damascus accord has proved elusive—primarily because Israel has no real desire to return the Golan Heights. Under intense Israeli pressure, LEBANON and Israel signed a peace treaty after Israel's 1982 LEBANON WAR. On 17 May 1983, Lebanese president-elect Bashir Gemayel and Israeli prime minister MENAHEM BEGIN initialed the agreement, which involved no exchange of territory. On 14 September Bashir was assassinated, and his brother, Amin Gemayel, became president, whereupon he abrogated the treaty.

In addition to disagreements on interpretation of Resolution 242 (“the” or not), the two sides have also disagreed over its implementation. Israel generally focuses on the latter part of the resolution, which calls for the “termination of all states of belligerency” in the area, and thus views the refusal of the Arab states to formally end the official state of war as a continuing breach of 242. On the other hand, the Arab states have repeatedly offered Israel full peace and recognition in exchange for territory, but Israel has preferred to hold on to the Palestinian territories. The most recent proposal was the 2002 ARAB PEACE INITIATIVE, which all the Arab states signed.

After territorial issues, perhaps the most widely disputed element of 242 is the call for “a just settlement of the refugee problem.” Israel continues to refuse to consider any large-scale repatriation of Palestinian refugees in Israeli territory, claiming that such a move would undermine the Jewish character of the state and lead to its collapse. Moreover, Tel Aviv refuses to compensate Palestinian refugees. Israel's official stand is that refugees must be resettled either where they currently live or in a newly constituted Palestinian state, at such time as it might be established. Recent evidence suggests that a moderate Palestinian leadership would accept a “symbolic right of return” (a few thousand refugees) to Israel in the framework of an overall peace agreement, along with an acknowledgment from Israel of its responsibility for the Palestinian refugee problem. Israel rejects this compromise.

Moreover, although the resolution advocates a “just settlement of the refugee problem,” it does not specifically mention the Palestinians or their political and national rights. This was the main reason that the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) rejected the resolution until 1988, when the PLO's legislative body, the PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL, voted to recognize Israel unilaterally within the pre-1967 lines and to accept Resolution 242. At least symbolically, the resolution served as the basis for the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations that led to the OSLO ACCORDS. Their main premise, the eventual creation of a Palestinian state in some of the Occupied Territories in return for Palestinian recognition of Israel, is the land-for-peace principle. However, Israel is adamant that it will not withdraw its SETTLEMENTS from the West Bank and that Jerusalem will remain a united, sovereign Israeli city instead of having shared sovereignty. In the context of the OSLO PROCESS, Israel, with US backing, took the position that the Oslo Accords superseded Resolution 242 (and other relevant UN resolutions) and that the Occupied Territories are “disputed,” not “occupied.” No other state in the international system accepts this premise, but because the United States does, the land-for-peace formula has been effectively removed from the political agenda. As of 2009, nothing had come of the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations, and it did not appear that anything resembling an independent Palestinian state would emerge.

Bibliography

- Boyle, Francis. World Politics and International Law. Durham, NC: Duke University Press, 1985.
- Quigley, John. Palestine and Israel: A Challenge to Justice. Durham, NC: Duke University Press, 1990.

United Nations Security Council. Text of Resolution 242. <http://daccessdds.un.org/doc/RESOLUTION/GEN/NR0/240/94/IMG/NR024094.pdf?OpenElement>

———. Text of Resolution 338. <http://daccessdds.un.org/doc/RESOLUTION/GEN/NR0/288/65/IMG/NR028865.pdf?OpenElement>.

United States Congress, House Committee on Foreign Affairs, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East. Legislation Calling for a Move of the U.S. Embassy in Israel to Jerusalem. Washington, DC: US Government Printing Office, 1984.

United Nations Special Committee on Palestine

On 15 May 1947 the UNITED NATIONS General Assembly, after deliberating for three weeks in a special session devoted to the deteriorating situation in Palestine, voted to create an eleven-member committee of inquiry. The United Nations Special Committee on Palestine (UNSCOP) was instructed by the General Assembly to investigate “all questions and issues relevant to the problem of Palestine” and report back no later than 1 September 1947 “with such proposals as it may consider appropriate for the solution of the problem of Palestine.”

The General Assembly assumed responsibility for Palestine after a formal request by the British government on 2 April 1947 that the United Nations find a solution for the fate of its Mandate territory. The eleven countries selected to serve on UNSCOP were Australia, Canada, Czechoslovakia, India, Guatemala, IRAN, the Netherlands, Peru, SWEDEN, Uruguay, and Yugoslavia. The representatives, selected by their countries, were a collection of senior diplomats, jurists, and former politicians. The committee chose Emil Sandstrom of Sweden, a former Supreme Court justice, as its chair. Victor Hoo, the UN assistant secretary-general, served as the representative of the UN secretary-general to the committee, aided by Ralph Bunche.

The UNSCOP members arrived in Palestine on 15 June 1947 and set up their operations in JERUSALEM. After receiving a private briefing from the BRITISH MANDATE government, the committee toured Palestine between 18 June and 3 July, visiting all of the major Palestinian, Jewish, and mixed cities; the Galilee; the Negev; and several Jewish agricultural settlements. From 4 to 17 July, UNSCOP held twelve public meetings and received evidence from a number of organizations, primarily those representing the Jewish Yishuv. Zionist leaders DAVID BEN-GURION and CHAIM

WEIZMANN made oral presentations to the committee, supporting the argument for the partition of Palestine into separate Jewish and Arab states.

In contrast, the committee had little exposure to Palestinian organizations. The ARAB HIGHER COMMITTEE, the leading (and fractious) umbrella organization that comprised much of the Palestinian leadership, had decided to boycott UNSCOP, claiming that its conclusions were predetermined and hostile. It would not permit even informal meetings with the committee. To compensate for the missing Palestinian perspective, UNSCOP proceeded to Beirut on 20 July and met with representatives of the ARAB LEAGUE. In these meetings, the committee was told that the neighboring Arab governments were opposed to partition, to further Jewish IMMIGRATION, and to a Jewish state in Palestine. The Arab League representatives advocated a Palestinian state with constitutional guarantees for minority political and religious rights. Some members of the committee also met with King Abdullah of Transjordan (JORDAN after 1950) in Amman.

While the committee was in Palestine and LEBANON, the conflict around it sharpened. In late June the Stern Gang (LOHAMEI HERUT YISRAEL, the militant underground group) killed three British soldiers. The British army hanged three IRGUN TZEVA' I LE'UMI terrorists in late July, and the Irgun retaliated by hanging two British sergeants later the same day. Most dramatically, on 18 July the British navy captured the Exodus near HAIFA, Palestine, with 4,500 Jewish refugees on board and sent it back to Europe. The Exodus had been attempting to breach the British restrictions on Jewish immigration to Palestine, which had been put in place to improve the DEMOGRAPHY equilibrium between Palestinians and Jews. Several committee members, including the chair, witnessed the Exodus incident.

The committee reconvened in Geneva on 6 August and began the process of drafting its report. While in Geneva, UNSCOP created a subcommittee to visit a number of Jewish displaced persons camps in Austria and GERMANY to determine the strength of the sentiment among Jewish refugees for resettlement in Palestine. The subcommittee interviewed a small number of HOLOCAUST refugees and determined that the “overwhelming majority of the persons questioned affirmed that they would not consider resettlement in any country except Palestine.” In its report to the full committee, the subcommittee stated that it was struck by the “squalor, misery and over-crowding” of the camps. This report proved influential, as a majority of the UNSCOP subsequently accepted the principle of linking the Jewish refugees in Europe with the future of Palestine.

As the reconvened committee contemplated the options for the future political structure of Palestine, it drew a list of six possible alternatives: (1) a unitary Jewish state, (2) a unitary Arab state, (3) a binational STATE, (4) a federal state, (5) a cantonization of Palestine, and (6) partition into two separate Jewish and Arab states. The committee accepted that the British Mandate had to end soon, independence of some sort had to be granted, and any form of international trusteeship could only be a short-term solution. Early in its deliberations in Geneva, the committee ruled out both a unitary Arab state and a unitary Jewish state as unfair and unworkable. A majority of the committee also dismissed the viability of BINATIONALISM, which had been advocated by JUDAH MAGNES, the president of Hebrew University. Cantonization offered too weak a political structure to be considered a promising option, and most members had been persuaded during their time in Palestine that sustained cooperation between the two communities was unlikely. This left two options as the only serious alternatives: federation and partition.

Seven members of the committee—Canada, Czechoslovakia, Guatemala, the Netherlands, Peru, Sweden, and Uruguay—adopted the partition option, stating that “the two intense nationalisms” make “partition . . . the most realistic and viable settlement.” Ivan Rand of Canada, while supporting the creation of two separate states, advocated an economic union between the two as well as the internationalization of Jerusalem. These features were accepted by the rest of the majority members. For the majority, a separate Jewish state with control over immigration was the only realistic political structure that could solve the problem of the European Jewish refugees. Three members of the committee—India, Iran, and Yugoslavia—favored a federal structure, which would have a federal legislature but with separate Jewish and Palestinian political institutions, each having control over local affairs. In their view, partition was an artificial solution that “could not possibly provide for two reasonably viable states.” One member, Australia, took no position on the options.

The committee members signed the final report, containing both the majority and minority positions, on the evening of 31 August 1947, within minutes of the expiration of their mandate. The report listed unanimous agreement on eleven general principles, including protection for Jewish and Muslim holy sites and religious interests, the urgent amelioration of the Jewish refugee problem in Europe, the protection of minorities in Palestine, and the continued economic unity of Palestine. In addition, eight members recommended that “it be accepted as incontrovertible that any solution for Palestine cannot be considered as a solution of the Jewish problem in general.”

The majority report recommended the establishment of a Jewish state and an Arab state, with the city of Jerusalem under an international trusteeship (corpus separatum) under the United Nations. The two states would sign a treaty to establish an economic union, and they would share with Jerusalem a common currency and a customs union. The Jewish and Arab states would become independent no later than 1 September 1949, provided that they each enacted a constitution that would provide specified guarantees, including minority religious and political rights. During the transition period, Britain would continue the administration of Palestine under the supervision of the United Nations. In addition, the constitutions would each provide for the creation of a legislative body that would be elected by universal suffrage and secret ballots on the basis of proportional representation. During the transition period, 150,000 Jews were to be admitted into Palestine. The majority report also provided a detailed map with proposed boundaries for the two states and Jerusalem. Under the majority proposal, the Jewish state would comprise approximately 62 percent of the land of Palestine, and exactly half the population would be Palestinian Arab, counting the BEDOUIN.

The minority report proposed a federal state, with Jerusalem as its capital and with a common federal legislature but separate Jewish and Arab local states. Independence for the federal state would occur after a transition period of no more than three years. The federal state would have an executive and two legislative chambers, one based on proportional representation and the other based on equal representation of the two populations. The vote of both chambers would be required to adopt legislation, and a deadlock would be resolved by a designated arbitral body. The constitution of the federal state would include both minority guarantees and civil rights for all and provide for a common citizenship. The two states would have full powers of local self-government, and an international commission would control immigration to the Jewish local state.

The UNSCOP report, in five volumes, was delivered to the General Assembly on 1 September. The majority report formed the basis of UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 181, passed on 29 November 1947. The partition boundaries proposed by the majority report for the two independent states were altered slightly by the General Assembly, with the size of the proposed Jewish state reduced to approximately 55 percent of Mandate Palestine. The majority report's recommendations for Jerusalem and an economic union were largely adopted by Resolution 181.

Bibliography

- Garcia-Granados, Jorge. The Birth of Israel: The Drama as I Saw It. New York: Alfred Knopf, 1949.
- Hamilton, Thomas. "Partition of Palestine." Foreign Policy Reports. 23:286 (1948).
- Horowitz, David. State in the Making. New York: Alfred Knopf, 1953.
- Tauber, Eliezer. Personal Policy Making: Canada's Role in the Adoption of the Palestine Partition Resolution. Westport, CT: Greenwood Press, 2002.
- United Nations General Assembly. United Nations General Assembly Resolution 181, November 29, 1947. The Avalon Project at Yale Law School. n.d. www.yale.edu/lawweb/avalon/un/res181.htm.
- UN Special Committee on Palestine. Recommendations to the General Assembly. The Jerusalem Fund. n.d. www.thejerusalemfund.org/carryover/documents/unspecial.html.

—Michael Lynk

United Nations Truce Supervision Organization

The UNITED NATIONS Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO) was created on 14 May 1948 to assist the special mediator for Palestine (at the time COUNT FOLKE BERNADOTTE) in enforcing the first truce in the 1948 WAR between Israel and its Arab neighbors, which went into effect in May 1948 and lasted ten days. UNTSO also supervised the second, four-week truce in July–August. Most important, with the conclusion of four general ARMISTICE AGREEMENTS between Israel and EGYPT, JORDAN, LEBANON, and SYRIA in 1949, UNTSO's function was extended to assist the parties in supervising the application and observance of those truces. UNTSO became an autonomous operation, officially a subsidiary organ of the United Nations Security Council, with the chief of staff of UNTSO assuming command.

Sixty years later, UNTSO's 152 military observers, supported by UN international and local civilian staff, are still deployed throughout the Middle East region, and their mandate has not changed. They continue to observe and maintain the unconditional cease-fire ordered by the Security Council pending final peace settlements and to assist the parties as necessary in the supervision and observance of the terms of the Armistice Agreements. With headquarters in JERUSALEM and offices in Beirut, Lebanon, and Damascus, Syria, UNTSO operates in the areas of southern Lebanon, the Syrian Heights (later renamed Golan), and the Sinai Peninsula.

Since 1949 the region has experienced a number of wars that changed the territorial cease-fire lines. Following the wars of 1956, 1967, and 1973, UNTSO's functions changed in the light of changing circumstances, but its military observers remained in the area, acting as go-betweens for the hostile parties and as a means by which isolated incidents could be contained and prevented from escalating into major conflicts. Because there is no element of enforcement in their functioning, the military observers operate with the consent of the parties and are dependent on the cooperation of the parties for their effectiveness.

In the Israel-Syria sector, UNTSO military observers are attached to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, which controls eleven observation posts located near the area of separation on the Golan Heights and in the area of the cease-fire lines on both sides. They conduct fortnightly inspections of the areas regarding limitation in armaments and forces as provided for under the Israeli-Syrian disengagement agreement of 1974. In the Lebanon-Israel sector, the observers are assigned to assist the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) in the fulfillment of its tasks. At present, operating from Naqoura (South Lebanon), they maintain five observation posts along the Lebanese side of the Armistice Demarcation Line, conduct patrols, and carry out liaison duties with parties active in and around the UNIFIL area of operation. And in the Egypt-Israel sector, UNTSO observers, based in Ismailia, Egypt, conduct patrols to ensure no cross-border infiltrations along the Suez Canal and throughout the Sinai Peninsula except for an area under the independent (non-UN) Multinational Force and Observers. In addition, UNTSO has maintained the machinery for the supervision of the Armistice Agreements in those sectors not covered by the 1979 Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty.

UNTSO observers cooperated closely with the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF), which was deployed in the Sinai in the aftermath of the 1956 SINAI/SUEZ WAR. After the 1967 WAR UNTSO observers demarcated the cease-fire lines and established two cease-fire observation operations—in the Israel-Syria sector and in the Suez Canal zone. In 1972 a similar operation was set up in southern Lebanon, without the agreement of Israel. The OCTOBER WAR of 1973, through which UNTSO continued to function, resulted in a further arrangement that included the establishment of a new, armed UN force assigned to staff a buffer zone in the Sinai desert.

Until 1967, UNTSO observers continued to conduct patrols along the Armistice Demarcation Line and also supervised a neutral zone in Jerusalem and two demilitarized zones in the Egyptian El Auja area and near Lake Tiberias (the Ein Gev and Dardara sectors). In the 1950s a number of observation posts were established along the Israel-Syria demarcation line. Israel refused to “compromise its sovereignty” by allowing UNEF on its territory, and its resistance to certain aspects of the work of UNTSO made it difficult for the Truce Supervision Organization to protect it. The responsibility for the cease-fire observation operations was entrusted to the UNTSO chief of staff in Palestine and to the UN military observers assigned to that mission. At the same time, UNTSO had continued to maintain the machinery for the supervision of the Armistice Agreements, but as Israel ceased to recognize those agreements, UNTSO was unable to carry out its functions and duties between Syria and Israel.

UNTSO played an important role in several issues involving Israel. When the 1948 War ended, the only parts of the northern sector of BRITISH MANDATE Palestine not occupied by Israel were the areas along the Jordan River controlled by Syria. Although Israel insisted on retaining all the territory it had seized in the war that had been designated for the Palestinian state, it demanded that Syria not be allowed to remain in the areas that it occupied after the war. UN mediator Ralph Bunche convinced Syria to withdraw on the understanding that the sovereignty of the three demilitarized zones (DMZs) (totaling 66.5 square miles) would remain undetermined until a peace settlement.

The smallest DMZ, in the northeast salient of the Israeli-Syrian frontier near Bani Yas Spring, was uninhabited, although Palestinians used the land for farming and grazing. The central DMZ was a narrow strip that stretched from the southern edge of Lake Huleh to the northern tip of Lake Tiberias, straddling the Jordan River with a triangular bulge in the middle. It contained one Jewish settlement, Mishmar HaYarden, and four Palestinian villages: Kirad al-Baqqara, Kirad al-Ghannama, Mansurat al-Kheit, and Yarda. The largest DMZ was the southern sector, which began about halfway along the eastern shore of Lake Tiberias, ran south to the tip of the lake, and then jutted east to meet the Yarmuk River where the borders of Syria, Israel, and Jordan meet. It contained one Jewish settlement, Ein Gev, and three Palestinian villages: al-Hamma, Nuqeib, and al-Samra.

Each DMZ represented two concentric circles: the DMZ (a completely demilitarized inner core) and an outer shell limited to defense forces, and both circles were monitored by UNTSO. UNTSO's responsibilities were linked to the work of the Mixed Armistice Commissions (MACs), which were set up by the Armistice Agreements and chaired by the UNTSO chief of staff. Their main task was the investigation and examination (by UNTSO observers) of the claims or complaints presented by the parties relating to the application and observance of the Armistice Agreements.

Tensions built in the early 1950s as Jews in increasing numbers moved into the Upper Galilee and established settlements and farms on Palestinian property. In 1950 the Israelis established a new KIBBUTZ at Beit Katzir in the southern DMZ. Like most of the kibbutzim in troubled areas, it was fortified with trenches and a double-apron barbed-wire fence from behind which its settlers sallied out to cultivate the surrounding land. They dug a system of irrigation canals to move the WATER from Lake Tiberias, and before long no Arab farmer in the area was allowed into the stretch of land between the kibbutz and the lake.

From here they extended their activities so that the inhabitants of the two neighboring Arab villages, Lower and Upper Tawafiq, observed the kibbutz tractor drivers swerving out at each turn along the eastern boundaries of their fields, thus slowly but surely extending their “previous” cultivation eastward into Palestinian land.

Map 43. Israel-Syria: Demilitarized Zones, 1949

This was part of a premeditated Israeli policy to edge east through the DMZ toward the old Palestine border and to push all the Arabs out of the area. Gradually, beneath the glowering eyes of the Syrians, who held the high ground overlooking the zone, the area had become a network of Israeli canals and irrigation channels edging up against and encroaching on Arab-owned property. Israel then undertook a series of specific moves that enraged Syria and Jordan. On 21 January 1951 the JEWISH NATIONAL FUND and the WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION agreed to help finance a $250 million development project that included drainage of the 15,000-acre Huleh Marshes (an integral part of the Jordan River system) for irrigation of the Negev and the Jerusalem corridor. Almost from the beginning, it was obvious that the drainage channels would impinge on Syrian territory within the central DMZ. On 13 March 1951 Israel began digging a drainage ditch. The Syrian-Israeli MAC examined Syria’s complaint and ruled that the Israeli project “constitutes a flagrant violation” of the armistice. On 24 March 1951 Israel for the first time asserted that it held sovereignty over the zone and thus had a right to proceed; it then resumed digging in the DMZ. Clashes between Syrian and Israeli forces ensued. On 30 March Israel retaliated by expelling 785 Palestinians from the three villages in the central DMZ and bulldozing their homes. On 4 April seven Israeli soldiers on patrol were killed in an ambush by Syrian troops. The next day the Israeli cabinet decided, in secret, that the DMZs should be “cleared of Arabs [Palestinians].” On that same day, Israel bombed the Al-Hamma district in the southern DMZ, killing two Palestinian women and wounding other civilians. Though the UNITED STATES protested that the Israeli actions were “in no way justified,” about 1,200 Palestinians in the central and southern sections were forced out, and Syria’s counterattack was repulsed. On 18 May 1951 UN Security Council Resolution 92 called on Israel to stop draining the marshes of Lake Huleh and allow the return of the Palestinians. Israel prevented all but 350 of them from returning. On 20 June 1951 Israel informed the UNTSO that it would no longer attend meetings of the Syrian-Israeli MAC as long as complaints involving the DMZs were on the agenda. Israel argued that since it alone had sovereignty over the zones, Syria had no rights and therefore no standing to discuss the zones.

UNTSO chief of staff General Burns made the following observation: “The Israelis claimed sovereignty over the territory covered by the DMZ. . . . They then proceeded, as opportunity offered, to encroach on the specific restrictions and so eventually to free themselves, on various pretexts, from all of them. Thus, Israel immobilized the MAC. Further, Israel refused to allow UN observers to demarcate the line of the DMZs and thereby no one was ever sure exactly where the line lay.”

In September 1953, Israel launched a diversion project on a nine-mile channel midway between the Huleh Marshes and Lake Tiberias in the central DMZ. The plan was to divert enough water to help irrigate the coastal Sharon Plain and eventually the entire Negev desert. Syria claimed the plan would dry up 12,000 acres of Syrian land. The UNTSO chief of staff, Major General Vagn Bennike of Denmark, noted that the project was denying water to two Palestinian water mills, was drying up Palestinian farmland, and was a substantial military benefit for Israel against Syria. The United States temporarily cut off aid to Israel, but the Israeli response was to clandestinely increase work. UN Security Council Resolution 100 asked Israel to stop work pending an investigation. Israel finally backed off but only briefly.

On 11 December 1955, under the command of ARIEL SHARON, Israel launched “Operation Kinneret,” attacking Syrian military posts and the village of Kursi outside the DMZ, near the northeast shore of Lake Tiberias. Fifty-six Syrians were killed while Israel lost six soldiers. The United States expressed “shock” at Israel’s “flagrant violation” of the Armistice Agreement. Israel was hoping Damascus would attack, and the purpose of the strike was to provoke Egypt into honoring its mutual defense pact with Syria, thereby igniting the war Israel sought with Egypt. However, Egypt did not take the bait, and Israel had to wait almost a year for the SINAI/SUEZ WAR. Israel also had in mind its long-term policy of establishing exclusive control over Lake Tiberias.

On 30 October 1956 Israel attacked Egypt across the Sinai Peninsula, and drove the remainder of the Palestinians living in the DMZs into Syria. Commenting on this, UNTSO chief of staff Odd Bull of NORWAY observed: “I imagine that a number of those evicted settled somewhere in the Syrian [Golan] Heights and that their children have watched the land that had been in their families for hundreds of years being cultivated by Israeli farmers. From time to time, they opened fire on these farmers. That, of course, was a violation of the armistice agreement, though I could not help thinking that in similar circumstances Norwegian peasants would almost certainly have acted in the same way. In the course of time all Arab villages disappeared.” By late 1956, Israel had quietly resumed work on its water diversion plan called the National Water Carrier, but it avoided the DMZs and thereby US objections. It diverted water directly from Lake Tiberias, sending it to irrigate the northern section of the Negev desert. It did this without consulting Syria and Jordan, riparian states with the right of consultation on usage of joint waters. However, the precedent was set, and the Arab states felt free to develop their own schemes. In August 1956, Jordan began work, without consulting Israel, on the East Ghor canal to siphon water from the Yarmuk River before it joined the Jordan. However, there was a major difference between the Israeli National Water Carrier and the Jordanian plan. The Jordanian plan returned the water within the Jordan River complex. The Israeli plan removed the water to the Negev, thus depriving Syria and Jordan of their share. Israel condemned the Jordanian plan and bombed and destroyed the canal. These were some of the issues that led to the 1967 War.

At present UNTSO continues to play a role in Middle East developments, fulfilling its mandate with professionalism and sometimes the ultimate sacrifice. Since its start, twenty-seven UNTSO staff members have lost their lives in the line of duty.

See also ARMISTICE AGREEMENTS; WATER

Bibliography

- El-Ayouty, Y. “The United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine (UNTSO).” Revue égyptienne de droit international. 30 (1974).
- Bennike, Vagn. Report by Major General Bennike, Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine. New York: United Nations General Assembly, 1955.
- Bint, Jbeil. Water Issues in the Arab-Israeli Conflict. n.d. www.bintjbeil.com/water/david\_paul.html.
- Bull, Odd. War and Peace in the Middle East: The Experiences and Views of a UN Observer. London: Leo Cooper Publishers, 1976.
- Burns, E. L. M. Between Arab and Israeli. Beirut, Lebanon: Institute for Palestine Studies (UNTSO), 1969.

- . Between Arab and Israeli. Toronto, Canada: Clarke, Irwin, and Co., 1962.
- Caplan, Neil. Futile Diplomacy: The United Nations, the Great Powers, and Middle East Peacemaking, 1948–1954, vol. 3. London: Frank Cass, 1997.
- Eveland, Wilbur Crane. Ropes of Sand: America's Failure in the Middle East. New York: W. W. Norton, 1980.
- Hutchison, E. H. Violent Truce: A Military Observer Looks at the Arab-Israeli Conflict, 1951–1955. New York: Devin-Adair, 1958.
- Morris, Benny. Israel's Border Wars, 1949–1956: Arab Infiltration, Israeli Retaliation, and the Countdown to the Suez War. Oxford, UK: Clarendon Press, 1993.
- Public Action, Inc. Welcome to Israeli Special Operations. 2002. www.public-action.com/911/rescue/obq-special-ops-israel.
- Rokach, Livia. Israel's Sacred Terrorism: A Study Based on Moshe Sharett's Personal Diary and Other Documents, 3rd ed. Washington, DC: Association of Arab-American University Graduates, 1985.
- Shlaim, Avi. The Iron Wall: Israel and the Arab World since 1948. New York: W. W. Norton, 1999.
- Stock, Ernest. Israel on the Road to Sinai, 1949–1956. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1967.
- Strugar, Milor. “The UNTSO Story—UN Truce Supervision Organization.” United Nations Chronicle. Fall 1998.
- Toye, P. L., and A. Seay. Israel: Boundary Disputes with Arab Neighbors, 1946–1964, 10 vols. New York: United Nations, 1964.

United States

The close relationship between the United States and Israel has been one of the most salient features in US foreign policy since Israel's founding in 1948 and particularly since the late 1960s. Since the early 1970s, Congress has authorized an average of more than $3 billion annually in military and economic aid to Israel. Supporters of this policy include liberals who normally challenge US aid to governments that engage in human rights violations and conservatives who usually oppose foreign aid in general. Although virtually all Western countries share the United States' strong support for Israel's legitimate right to exist in peace and security, none comes close to giving Israel the level of diplomatic support provided by Washington. Frequently, the United States is the only country supporting Israel at the UNITED NATIONS and other international forums when objections are raised over ongoing Israeli violations of INTERNATIONAL LAW and human rights norms.

By contrast, the US government has traditionally been hostile to Palestinian national aspirations. The United States ended its formal opposition to Palestinian statehood only in 1993 after the signing of the DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES between Israel and the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO). In 2002, Washington finally went on record as supporting the establishment of an independent Palestinian state, although only if the Palestinians met specific conditions—for example, eliminating corruption within the PLO, ending all acts of violence against Israelis, and accepting Israel's definition of its national BORDERS and Israel's restrictions on Palestinian autonomy. Over the years, the United States has provided some financial support for UN relief operations for Palestinian REFUGEES and for various development projects by non-governmental organizations in the WEST BANK and GAZA STRIP, although from the outset, it severely limited direct support for the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA).

History of the US Role in the Conflict

The United States was the first country to recognize Israel, just minutes after its DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE on 14 May 1948. US president HARRY S TRUMAN (1945–1953) had strongly encouraged Great Britain, which held the Mandate to govern Palestine, to support the establishment of an independent Jewish state in Palestine. Truman was also among the first US political leaders to promote the idea that US backing for Israel would be beneficial in advancing US strategic objectives in the region as well as a popular policy domestically. Still, during Israel's first twenty years, the United States was relatively cautious and balanced regarding Israel's conflict with its Arab neighbors, and it provided little direct military or economic aid to Israel. While Great Britain and FRANCE emerged as Israel's chief foreign backers, on a number of occasions the United States directly challenged Israeli policies that it thought could destabilize the region and threaten US interests.

For example, during the 1956 SINAI/SUEZ WAR, when Israel, Great Britain, and France attacked EGYPT, President DWIGHT EISENHOWER's administration (1953–1961) strongly opposed the invasion, both at the United Nations and in harshly worded communications to the invading governments. US officials feared that to do otherwise would leave the Soviet Union as the only major power to object to what most of the international community saw as a blatant act of neocolonialism and imperialism, and that would push much of the Arab and Islamic world to align with MOSCOW.

There was also concern that the tripartite aggression would create a dangerous precedent, in that such an overt violation of the UN Charter could risk a breakdown of the post–World War II international legal system critical to international stability. Eisenhower's threat of US economic sanctions against Britain and France, which were still heavily in debt to the United States from World War II, as well as his threat to end the tax-deductible status of American Jewish charities supporting the Israeli government, forced a withdrawal of foreign forces from Egypt within a relatively short time. (France and Britain withdrew in December, and Israeli forces pulled back in March 1957.) Even though Eisenhower's confrontation with Israel met with strong objections from leading American Zionist groups, and despite it being the eve of a presidential election, he was reelected by a landslide.

Similarly, President JOHN F. KENNEDY (1961–1963) challenged Israel's resistance to the JOHNSTON PLAN regarding Jordan River WATER rights, as well as its periodic armed clashes with SYRIA and its burgeoning NUCLEAR PROGRAM at Dimona. Like Eisenhower, Kennedy also pursued a relatively balanced US policy on the Arab-Israeli conflict, advocating restrictions on arms transfers and repatriation and compensation for Palestinian refugees.

The strong tilt in support for Israel began during the administration of LYNDON JOHNSON (1963–1969), when in 1966 the United States first approved the sale of offensive weapons to Israel. The Johnson administration backed Israel over the Arab states in the 1967 WAR, even to the point of covering up an apparently deliberate Israeli attack on the US spy ship LIBERTY. Together with Great Britain, the United States was the principal sponsor of UN SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 242, which established the land-for-peace formula that formed the basis of all subsequent peace efforts until the OSLO ACCORDS (1993).

It was during RICHARD NIXON's administration (1969–1974), however, under the leadership of National Security Adviser (and later Secretary of State) HENRY KISSINGER, that the United States first became Israel's principal foreign supporter. During this period, Washington commenced large-scale military and economic aid to Israel and began using its veto in the United Nations Security Council to block resolutions critical of Israel. In addition, Nixon and Kissinger readily acquiesced to Israel's nuclear program. In 1969 US Secretary of State WILLIAM ROGERS put forward a peace plan that would have required Israel to return, with some minor alterations, land taken in the 1967 War in return for peace with the Arabs, but Kissinger privately informed the Israelis that the administration would not place pressure on them if they rejected it. When Egyptian president Anwar Sadat made peace overtures toward Israel in 1971, Kissinger advised the Israelis to ignore them, arguing that their military superiority made it possible for them to hold on to occupied Arab lands without fear of negative consequences. As a result, Egypt, along with Syria, attacked Israeli forces in October 1973, advancing into Israeli-occupied territories in the Sinai Peninsula and Syrian (Golan) Heights. A massive US resupply operation enabled Israel to mount a successful counterattack. After the war, the Nixon administration supported disengagement talks under US auspices, rejecting calls for an international peace conference. Kissinger's "shuttle diplomacy" resulted in a partial pullback of Israeli occupation forces in the Egyptian Sinai to allow for the reopening of the Suez Canal, and also in a smaller Israeli pullback in the Syrian Golan Heights.

During the 1970s, with the emergence of Palestinian nationalism and with the PLO and the Arab states beginning to hint at their openness toward peace with Israel in return for Israel's withdrawal from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES, an international consensus began to emerge regarding a TWO-STATE SOLUTION to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, but this was rejected by the United States. A 1976 draft UN Security Council resolution reiterating UN Security Council Resolution 242 with an additional proviso that called for the creation of a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip was struck down by a US veto. The United States also ruled out including the Palestinians in peace negotiations, insisting that JORDAN's King Husayn serve as the Palestinians' representative. The United States had strongly backed the Jordanian monarch in the 1970–1971 civil war (BLACK SEPTEMBER) against the Palestinians and their Jordanian leftist allies.

JIMMY CARTER assumed the presidency in 1977 and, after initial unsuccessful efforts to convene an international peace conference cosponsored with the Soviet Union, took advantage of Anwar Sadat's trip to JERUSALEM to push bilateral Israeli-Egyptian talks under US auspices. Strong US diplomatic pressure on both sides resulted in a peace treaty between Israel and Egypt signed at the Camp David presidential retreat in Maryland, leading to the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Egyptian territory in return for full diplomatic relations and security guarantees. A second accord, not tied to the first, addressed the Palestinians' concerns by calling for a freeze on Jewish SETTLEMENTS and a process for Palestinian self-rule—provisions that Israel failed to carry out and the United States never enforced. In certain respects, the CAMP DAVID ACCORDS were more of a tripartite military pact than a peace agreement in that another annex included provisions for $5 billion in US arms to the two governments, which have been renewed every year since then, as well as increased STRATEGIC COOPERATION between the United States and Israel.

Though strongly committed to Israel and hostile to the PLO, Carter was also willing to challenge Israel on occasion, forcing a partial withdrawal from Lebanese territory after Israel's 1978 incursion and voicing opposition to Israel's settlement policy, both of which the Carter administration saw as violations of international law.

The RONALD REAGAN (1981–1989) administration dramatically increased US support for Israel, then under the leadership of the right-wing LIKUD PARTY government of MENAHEM BEGIN, as part of a broader anticommunist "strategic consensus" of Middle Eastern states that included Arab regimes hostile to Israel but opposed to the Soviet Union and its allied regimes. Though President Reagan successfully overcame vehement opposition from the domestic pro-Israel lobby in pushing through the sale of advanced AWACs airborne radar systems to SAUDI ARABIA, he strongly allied the United States with Israel, seeing it as the United States' most important Cold War asset in the region. In 1983 and 1984 the United States and Israel signed memoranda of understanding on strategic cooperation and military planning and conducted their first joint naval and air military exercises. At the same time, US military and economic aid to Israel continued to increase. Ignoring the Saudi FAHD PLAN, which was based on the principle of land for peace and the establishment of a Palestinian state alongside Israel, in September 1982 Reagan proposed a peace plan in which Israel would withdraw from most of the West Bank and the Palestinian areas would become a self-ruled entity federated with the Kingdom of Jordan. Both sides rejected the plan, however, and it was not pursued. Earlier that summer, the United States was virtually alone in the international community in blocking UN efforts to halt Israel's 1982 LEBANON WAR, which resulted in large-scale civilian casualties, the forced evacuation of most Palestinian fighters and political officials from the country, and the installation of a rightist PHALANGE-led government in Beirut. As Israeli troops pulled back from the Lebanese capital, Reagan sent in US forces, which joined Israel in battling leftist and Muslim militia as well as in bombing Syrian forces; this episode culminated in the 23 October 1983 suicide truck bombing that killed 241 US servicemen.

Israeli-Palestinian Peace Process

In the late 1970s, some sectors in the US government acknowledged that the Palestinians had legitimate concerns that should be addressed, although the US position continued to reject direct negotiations with Palestinians, even after the international community had recognized the Palestine Liberation Organization as the Palestinians' sole legitimate representative. The US position, originating in the early 1970s, was that the PLO could participate in the peace process only if it agreed to three conditions: (1) recognition of Israel's right to exist, (2) recognition of UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338 as the basis of the peace talks, and (3) a renunciation of TERRORISM. There were, however, no similar conditions placed upon the government of Israel, which rejected Palestine's right to exist, which also failed to recognize Resolutions 242 and 338 as the basis for negotiations, and whose armed forces had also targeted civilians.

For more than a decade, the PLO had indicated it would be willing to accept such conditions if Israel made reciprocal commitments. Faced with Washington's refusal to press for such mutual and simultaneous declarations, however, the PLO in 1988 formally accepted the three provisions without any reciprocity from Israel. Despite this, the United States still refused to allow the PLO to participate directly in the peace process and limited official contact with the organization to the US embassy in Tunisia, where the PLO had relocated following its 1982 ouster from Lebanon. Yet even this low-level US-PLO DIALOGUE was broken off within two years when the administration of President GEORGE H. W. BUSH determined that the PLO had not sufficiently criticized an attempted terrorist attack against Israel by a small Palestinian splinter group.

Continuing to reject calls for an international conference under UN auspices but wanting to assuage Arab concerns over the plight of the Palestinians as part of US efforts to enlist Arab state support for the 1991 GULF WAR, President Bush agreed to organize a Middle East peace conference in Madrid in 1991. Although some meetings were to take place on a multilateral basis, the United States made certain that the real negotiations would take place only bilaterally and with a strong US presence. Even when the United States invited most Arab nations to participate, it explicitly excluded the PLO. Bush and his secretary of state, JAMES BAKER, only allowed Palestinian delegates to participate who were part of the Jordanian delegation, lived neither in the PALESTINIAN DIASPORA nor in Israeli-occupied East Jerusalem, and had no affiliation with the PLO. At the same time, Baker and other administration officials were concerned about growing hostility toward the United States in the Arab and Islamic world because of US support for the Israeli OCCUPATION and began to pressure Israel to consider territorial compromise. As a means of exerting some leverage, President Bush initially refused to approve a proposed $10 billion loan guarantee to Israel until the Israeli government agreed to freeze the construction of new settlements in the Occupied Territories. Though the United States ultimately backed down on that condition, the delay was instrumental in the defeat of the rightist Likud prime minister YITZHAK SHAMIR and the election of the more moderate LABOR PARTY alignment leader YITZHAK RABIN in June 1992.

BILL CLINTON defeated Bush in the November 1992 US presidential election, taking more liberal positions on most domestic issues but criticizing the Bush administration from the right regarding its policy on Israel and Palestine, as well as reiterating US policy opposing the inclusion of the PLO in the peace process. Unable to meet with the PLO in the US-sponsored peace talks in Washington, Israelis entered into negotiations with the PLO in NORWAY. Unaware of the secret Israeli-PLO talks, the Clinton administration put forward what it called a "compromise" proposal for Palestinian autonomy during the summer of 1992. However, the proposal put forth by Israeli negotiators at the same time was actually more favorable to the Palestinians than the US version, which Palestinian officials described as being “closer to the Israeli Likud position.” This is one of a number of instances when the United States has taken a harder line toward the Palestinians or other Arab nations than have the Israelis themselves.

Despite not being included in the negotiations that led to the OSLO ACCORDS, the United States became the guarantor of the Israeli-PLO Declaration of Principles, hosting a signing ceremony on the White House lawn in September 1993. Israel insisted that the United States assume this role because of Washington’s traditional support for Israel’s positions in the conflict with the Palestinians, and the PLO agreed on the assumption that the United States was the only power that could pressure Israel to make the necessary compromises for peace. In the fall of 1993, peace talks resumed in Washington within the Oslo framework, yet the Clinton administration initially did little to move the process forward. Israeli negotiators recognized that domestic Israeli politics made it difficult politically for the Israeli government to take the required steps for achieving peace without pressure from the United States, but no such pressure was forthcoming.

Over the next seven years, the Clinton administration brokered a series of Israeli-Palestinian agreements that led to the redeployment of Israeli forces from most of the Gaza Strip and parts of the West Bank, and to limited Palestinian self-rule over much of the Palestinian population. When the Palestinians signed the Declaration of Principles, they did so on the assumption that the United States, as guarantor of the agreement, would ensure that Israel fulfilled the letter and the spirit of the agreement: that the interim period before the final-status issues were resolved would be no more than five years, that residents of the Occupied Territories would enjoy concrete improvements in their lives, and that Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338 would constitute the basis of a permanent settlement. However, the Clinton administration consistently backed Israel’s positions on virtually all of the outstanding issues in the negotiations, even when the right-wing Likud bloc came to power again, while also defending ongoing Israeli violations of international humanitarian law in the Occupied Territories. The result was increased frustration and disillusionment with the peace process in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and the resulting rise of Islamist radicals.

Departure from Previous US Policy

Indeed, the Clinton administration departed from prior US administrations in a number of key areas. For example, the Clinton State Department began referring to the Israeli-occupied territories as “disputed territories” and actively (and largely successfully) encouraged the US MEDIA to do the same. This marked a significant change in the US view of the conflict, because occupied territory is land belonging to another nation that was seized by military force, whereas a disputed territory implies that both sides have a legitimate claim. This distinction is of further significance in that the Fourth Geneva Convention protects persons living under foreign military occupation, which is obligated to uphold certain standards of human rights, whereas those living in disputed territories are not protected. Furthermore, through a series of executive orders and congressional resolutions, the United States also effectively recognized Israel’s annexation of greater East Jerusalem, seized by Israeli forces in June 1967, which the UN Security Council formally recognized as illegitimate because it was seized in war.

Another shift to the right under the Clinton administration came in regard to Israeli settlements. The Oslo Accords refer to the West Bank and Gaza Strip as a “single territorial unit, the integrity and status of which will be preserved during the interim period,” which essentially prohibits either side from taking steps that could prejudice the permanent-status negotiations for a Palestinian state. As a result, the Palestinians assumed that this would prevent the Israelis from building more settlements in the West Bank on land that was slated to be part of the future Palestinian state. However, over the next decade Israel nearly doubled the number of settlers in the Occupied Territories, without apparent US objections. The Clinton administration even went on record as accepting the “natural growth” concept of settlement expansion, even though the UN Security Council had previously declared all settlements illegal and called upon Israel to evacuate them.

Under pressure from peace and human rights groups, Congress had attached a provision to the $2 billion annual installment of the $10 billion loan guarantee to Israel, signed in August 1992, requiring the president to deduct the costs of additional settlement activity, which totaled approximately a half billion dollars annually. Nevertheless, President Clinton promised the Israelis that aid would remain constant regardless of Israeli settlement policies, and the State Department's DENNIS ROSS, serving as coordinator for the peace talks, immediately let the Israeli government know that the Clinton administration would find a way to restore the full funding. Indeed, in each of the five subsequent years, the United States increased aid to Israel by amounts closely approximating the total deducted from the loan guarantees in 1992. The result was that the United States began effectively subsidizing the settlements.

As part of what President Clinton referred to as "implementation funding" of the 1998 WYE RIVER MEMORANDUM, in which Israel agreed to redeploy from an additional 14 percent of the West Bank, the United States offered $1.2 billion in supplementary foreign aid to the Israeli government. Most of the funding was for armaments unrelated to the redeployment, and much of the nonmilitary funding was unofficially earmarked to help build bypass ROADS for Israeli settlers in the Occupied Territories. These highways, which were built to connect the settlements with each other and with Israel proper, are designed to create a series of internal BORDERS and barriers, effectively isolating Palestinian areas into noncontiguous units. US financial support of the INFRASTRUCTURE supporting these illegal settlements placed Washington in violation of Article 7 of UN Security Council Resolution 465, which prohibits member states from assisting Israel in its colonization efforts in the Occupied Territories.

Failure of Final Status Talks

Throughout the Oslo peace process, the Clinton administration largely ignored Palestinian concerns about delaying the FINAL STATUS TALKS on Jerusalem, Israeli settlements, and the boundaries of a future Palestinian state. In so doing, the United States allowed Israel's confiscation and consolidation of large swaths of Palestinian territory to continue unabated. In the summer of 2000, however, the Clinton administration decided to jump ahead to final status negotiations without prior confidence-building measures, such as a freeze on new settlements or the fulfillment of previous Israeli pledges to withdraw from additional segments of the West Bank. Despite strong Palestinian objections that they needed more time to prepare, President Clinton insisted that the two parties come to Camp David in July to try to hammer out a final agreement, telling Arafat, "If it fails, I will not blame you." However, not only did the president put enormous pressure on Arafat to accept the Israeli proposals, but he also blamed Arafat for the collapse of the talks when the Palestinian leader rejected them on the grounds that they fell far short of both Israel's obligations under international law and what the Palestinians needed for a viable independent state. At the news conference at the close of the talks and later on Israeli television, Clinton declared that "Prime Minister EHUD BARAK showed particular courage, vision and an understanding of the historical importance of the moment," while insisting that it was Arafat who had been unwilling to compromise. Clinton thought that he could pressure Arafat to accept Israel's terms, even though negotiations up to that time indicated that the two sides were still far apart on key issues. Even if Clinton had been successful in forcing Arafat to agree to Israeli terms, there would not have been enough support among the Palestinian population to make it a viable agreement.

When the Palestinian uprising (the AL-AQSA INTIFADA) began in late September 2000, the Clinton administration blamed Arafat and the Palestinian National Authority for the violence and defended Israel's disproportionate military response, which was heavily criticized throughout the human rights community.

In December President Clinton unveiled the most comprehensive Israeli-Palestinian peace plan ever put forward by a US president. Based on the US-Israeli proposal from Camp David, it was initially rejected by the Palestinians. However, because the proposal reduced the level of Israeli control of the West Bank and allowed for fewer RESTRICTIONS ON MOVEMENT for Palestinians, it finally appeared that both sides were close to an agreement. Israeli-Palestinian TABA TALKS in Egypt, the following month, without active US participation, led to additional concessions by both sides, and hopes were high that a final settlement could be reached. However, with ARIEL SHARON'S election in Israel and GEORGE W. BUSH'S in the United States, the Oslo Process effectively ended.

The Bush administration, which assumed office in January 2001, did not follow up on Clinton's peace proposal and said the United States would not support the resumption of peace talks until Palestinian violence was halted for an extended period. This effectively gave Palestinian extremists who opposed the peace process an incentive to launch further terrorist attacks and other acts of violence to make sure that the talks would not resume. The possibility for future talks was further hampered by Prime Minister Sharon's insistence that his government was far less willing to make the necessary territorial compromises than its predecessor. During its first year in office, the Bush administration made a number of contradictory statements regarding the conflict. US secretary of state COLIN POWELL criticized certain Israeli policies on several occasions, only to have his statements soft-pedaled by the White House and then openly challenged by both Republican and Democratic congressional leaders. The overall Bush administration position was premised on the idea that the two parties needed to work things out between themselves and that both sides needed to compromise. However, bilateral negotiations between a government representing the strongest economic and military power in the region with a weakened and corrupt leadership of an occupied people placed the Palestinians at a distinct disadvantage. The US policy of ignoring this gross asymmetry in power led to the failure to reach an agreement, resulting in continued Occupation, repression, and colonization from the Israeli side and rioting, guerrilla warfare, and terrorism from the Palestinian side.

In an effort to undercut a recently announced UN mission to the Occupied Territories, President Clinton had appointed a separate commission headed by former senator GEORGE MITCHELL to investigate how to end the violence and move the peace process forward. Although the Mitchell Commission Report, released in April 2001, did not call for Israeli withdrawal from its settlements, it did emphasize that there was no hope to end Palestinian violence unless there was a freeze on settlements. However, the Bush administration—spearheaded by CIA director GEORGE TENET—followed up the Mitchell Commission Report by pushing for a unilateral cease-fire agreement from the Palestinians even while the Sharon government pledged to continue building more settlements. The Bush administration and Congress essentially accepted the Mitchell Commission Report in terms of its recommendations for a cease-fire but dropped the report's insistence on a settlement freeze and other Israeli responsibilities. The US-brokered cease-fire technically went into effect in June 2001 but never fully materialized.

Fight against Terrorism

The Al-Qaida terrorist attacks on the United States in September of that year solidified the Bush administration's support for Sharon's continued

SIERGE in the Occupied Territories. Despite State Department and CIA analysts' noting Sharon's ongoing provocations and overreactions, President Bush continued to focus on Palestinian terrorism as the cause of the crisis, and statements by Bush administration officials and congressional leaders of both parties tried to equate Israeli assaults in the Occupied Territories with the US struggle against Al-Qaida. In a departure from previous administrations, President Bush gave Defense Department officials unprecedented clout in the formulation of US policy toward the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, which had previously been largely under the purview of the State Department. One result was that the hard-line NEOCONSERVATIVE Pentagon officials who viewed the conflict strictly in security terms—Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld, Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz, and Undersecretary of Defense Douglas Feith—came to dominate US policy toward the conflict. Prior to joining the administration, Feith contributed to a 1996 paper that advised Israeli prime minister BENJAMIN NETANYAHU to make “a clean break from the peace process.” Similarly, Feith wrote a widely read 1997 article that called on Israel to reoccupy “the areas under Palestinian Authority control,” even though “the price in blood would be high.” These hawkish voices were reinforced by a coalition of Democrats and right-wing Republicans in Congress, who attacked the State Department's more moderate voices. In the eyes of the Bush administration and both parties in Congress, the Israeli-Palestinian conflict was a key battle in the US-led war on terrorism.

When Israel launched a massive military offensive in April 2002 in response to a series of Palestinian SUICIDE BOMBINGS, the United States was virtually alone in the international community supporting the attacks, which resulted in hundreds of civilian casualties and the partial destruction of the PNA's civilian infrastructure. Washington also blocked UN efforts to halt the fighting and investigate alleged Israeli war crimes, while increasing US military aid to Israel. The Bush administration and Congress largely ignored the March 2002 ARAB PEACE INITIATIVE, drawn up by Saudi crown prince Abdullah and endorsed by the Arab League, including the PNA, which offered Israel security guarantees and full normal relations in return for withdrawal from the Occupied Territories seized in the 1967 War. Though it was largely a reiteration of UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, long considered by previous administrations the basis for Middle East peace, Washington refused to endorse it or to press Israel to consider it. However, in response to international pressure regarding the worsening situation in the Occupied Territories, the Bush administration agreed to cosponsor—along with the EUROPEAN UNION, Russia, and the United Nations—the “Performance-Based Road Map to a Permanent Two-State Solution to the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict.” Reaching consensus among the four parties, which became known as “the QUARTET,” was initially difficult in part because the United States tried to downplay international law and UN Security Council resolutions as major components of the Road Map plan toward a two-state solution and insisted on incorporating much of the Tenet Plan in its first phase. By late 2002 the Quartet had essentially accepted the US positions, though the Bush administration insisted that the plan not be formally released until after the Israeli elections in the spring of 2003, fearing it might hurt Sharon’s reelection chances against the left-leaning Labor Party challenger Amran Mitzna. Though the Palestinians accepted the Road Map, the Israelis did so only conditionally, insisting upon including fourteen “reservations,” a number of which contradicted the plan’s key provisions. Though most observers considered these reservations as essentially a rejection of the plan, the Bush administration argued that Israel was in fact on board and that Phase I, scheduled to go into effect by the end of the year, would move forward. As with the OSLO PROCESS, however, Washington favored Israel’s interpretation of the Road Map’s requirements over that of the other members of the Quartet and the Palestinians. For example, the call for dismantling the “terrorist infrastructure” of militant Palestinian groups was just one of twenty-four mutual and simultaneous steps required by both sides in Phase I, but a series of statements by the Bush administration and several congressional initiatives, supported by an overwhelming bipartisan majority, insisted that it was the first and most important step in the Road Map. Because of this US insistence that Israel was not required to fulfill any of its obligations until this provision was fully satisfied, the Road Map never moved forward.

In December 2003, leading Israeli and Palestinian figures signed an unofficial draft peace agreement (the GENEVA ACCORD) after negotiations that had started from where the two sides had left off when Israel, backed by the United States, suspended negotiations for an accord in February 2001. The draft agreement called for an Israeli withdrawal from virtually all of the Gaza Strip and West Bank (with minor and reciprocal border adjustments); an evacuation of most Jewish settlements in the Occupied Territories; recognition of Jerusalem as the co-capital of both Israel and Palestine; and the establishment of a new demilitarized Palestinian state with strict international guarantees for Israeli security, including the disarming and disbanding of private militias and terrorist groups. Although it was hailed by the international community as an important breakthrough, the Bush administration refused to support it and the Israeli government categorically rejected it.

Facing increasing pressure for territorial compromise within Israel, however, Prime Minister Sharon came to Washington in April 2004 with four separate disengagement plans involving varying degrees of unilateral Israeli withdrawal from occupied Palestinian territory, with the remaining Palestinian lands becoming part of Israel. President Bush ended up endorsing the one that—while including ISRAEL’S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA—allowed Israel to annex the largest amount of Palestinian territory, incorporating virtually all of the settlements in the occupied West Bank into Israel and leaving the Palestinians with a series of noncontiguous and economically nonviable Bantustans. In an apparent attempt to short-circuit the Geneva Accord and the Road Map, President Bush went on record as insisting that “the United States will do its utmost to prevent any attempt by anyone to impose any other plan.” An overwhelming bipartisan majority of Congress went on record as supporting Bush’s endorsement of Sharon’s “CONVERGENCE PLAN,” formally ending nearly four decades of nominal US support for the land-for-peace formula spelled out in Security Council Resolution 242.

The United Nations and the Palestinian Question

Under both Republican and Democratic administrations, the United States has sought to minimize the role of the United Nations in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. US opposition to the Palestinians has run so strong that Washington has withdrawn or has threatened to withdraw financial support from UN agencies such as the World Health Organization, the Food and Agricultural Organization, UNESCO, and others that have supported Palestinian rights. On scores of occasions, the United States was the only country besides Israel (sometimes joined by a few small third world states dependent on US aid) to vote against otherwise unanimous resolutions in the UN General Assembly. In the Security Council, the United States has used its veto power more than forty times since 1980 to block resolutions critical of Israeli policies in the Occupied Territories, more than any other country has exercised its veto power on all other issues combined during this period. In addition, the threat of a US veto has on many occasions led to a weakening of a resolution's language or the withdrawal of the proposed resolution prior to the vote.

In the 1993 Oslo Accords, the PLO renounced ARMED STRUGGLE and unilaterally recognized Israeli control of 78 percent of Palestine; thus the strongest tool left at the Palestinians' disposal to advance their position was a series of UN Security Council resolutions reconfirming principles of international law that applied to their conflict with Israel. These included the illegality of transferring the civilian population of the occupying power into occupied territory, the illegitimacy of expanding a country's territory by force, and respecting the human rights of civilians under occupation. However, both the Clinton and subsequent Bush administrations claimed that the United Nations no longer had any standing in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, arguing that the UN resolutions that addressed the conflict were superseded by the Oslo Accords. This unilateral interpretation contradicted assumptions made by the Palestinians, the UN secretary-general, other Security Council members, the International Court of Justice, and a broad consensus of international legal scholars, which held otherwise.

For nearly twenty years, Washington barred the PLO from participating in the US-sponsored peace process, in part because the PLO refused to accept Resolutions 242 and 338 as the basis of negotiation. However, in a paper to the delegations in the Washington peace talks in June 1993, the United States, at the apparent behest of Israel, for the first time refused to recommit to UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338.

US diplomatic opposition to Palestinian rights has extended to attempts to block debate at the United Nations, where the PLO has had observer status since 1974. In 1988, Congress passed a law banning the PLO from operating its UN Mission in the United States, an effort later voided by rulings from both the International Court of Justice and a US federal court, which cited US commitments to the United Nations at its founding. Undeterred, the United States, which is required by the agreement to allow invited guests of the world body access to UN facilities, prevented PLO chairman Yasir Arafat from addressing the Forty-third UN General Assembly, which caused the assembly to move its session to UN facilities in Geneva to hear his speech.

Despite this history of hostility toward the United Nations, public opinion polls have shown that more than two-thirds of Americans believe that the UN should take the lead in resolving the conflict; a similar percentage believe that the UN Security Council should decide the territorial boundaries between Israel and a Palestinian state.

According to Resolutions 242 and 338, the only caveat for Israel's complete withdrawal from the Occupied Territories is security guarantees from Israel's Arab neighbors. This was widely understood to mean promises of nonaggression by neighboring states, presumably enforced by some combination of arms control, demilitarized zones, early warning systems, and international peace-keeping forces. However, the United States has dramatically expanded this interpretation, now insisting that the PLO must essentially guarantee the physical safety of every Israeli citizen. In effect, the United States argues that Israel is under no obligation to withdraw from the Occupied Territories unless there is a total halt of attacks against Israelis. Because most of these come from terrorist groups that are beyond the effective control of the recognized Palestinian leadership, this effectively means that Israel is not obliged to withdraw.

By contrast, the United States rejected international calls to halt the violence by Israeli occupation forces and settlers against the civilian population. In 2002, Washington vetoed a UN Security Council resolution calling for the deployment of unarmed monitors to report on compliance by all parties to the conflict with international human rights and humanitarian law standards. During this period, both the Bush administration and congressional leaders of both parties went on record as defending Israel's use of TARGETED ASSASSINATIONS against suspected Palestinian militants and rejected findings by human rights groups of Israeli war crimes in the Occupied Territories, stating that Israeli violence was "aimed only at dismantling the terrorist infrastructure.” In addition, both the administration and Congress went on record as condemning the International Court of Justice for its landmark 2004 decision calling on Israel to cease construction of the BARRIER separation wall within the occupied West Bank and to abide by the Fourth Geneva Convention.

With the US government ruling out enforcement of UN Security Council resolutions, virtually the only significant diplomatic weapon left for the Palestinians has been the Arab boycott of Israel. Initiated in 1948 to impede Israeli economic development, the boycott has restricted and/or impeded trade between Israel and most of its Arab neighbors and has pressured some US companies not to invest in Israel. As a result, immediately after the Oslo Accords were signed, the United States greatly escalated its pressure against Arab states and US companies for an end to the boycott. Most Arab governments expressed their willingness to do so, but only after Israel recognized Palestinian self-determination and complied with UN Security Council resolutions and international law. Washington strenuously objected to any such sanctions against its ally Israel. Instead, US officials have repeatedly emphasized the need to end economic pressure against Israel over its occupation and to integrate the region economically under US and Israeli leadership prior to a peace settlement. As far back as 1993, Arab states offered to end the boycott of Israel in return for an Israeli freeze on building new settlements, but the US government has insisted that the boycott be ended unconditionally.

Israeli-Syrian Conflict

Since the 1980s, US policy toward Syria has been geared toward challenging the regime in Damascus with both US and Israeli military power. Washington’s initial conflict with Syria stemmed in large part from its alliance with the Soviet Union. Yet, despite the collapse of Syria’s Soviet patron and the resulting weakening of Syria’s military prowess, US hostility toward Damascus has increased. Although Israel shares US antipathy toward the Syrian government for its alleged role as an exporter of terrorism, some Israeli officials, expressing concern that US efforts to destabilize the Ba’athist government could result in internal chaos and the ascendancy to power of hard-line Islamists, have encouraged the United States to back off.

The United States has refused to insist that Israel end its occupation of Syria’s Quneitra Province (Golan Heights), despite previous US endorsements of the concept of “land for peace” as spelled out in Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338. Washington had long considered Syria unreasonably hard-line for its earlier rejection of these resolutions. In the early 1990s, Syria dramatically moderated its policies and has gone on record as accepting Resolutions 242 and 338 as the basis of negotiations with Israel, although the United States now considers the Syrians too hard-line for their insistence on the resolutions’ strict implementation. In 1991, Washington convened peace talks between Syria and Israel at the MADRID CONFERENCE as part of a broader peace process initiated after the Gulf War, but Israel broke off the talks in 1996 and resumed negotiations in late 1999. The two sides came close to an agreement in early 2000, but talks broke down regarding the exact demarcation of the Israeli-Syrian border. Despite subsequent initiatives by Syrian president Bashar al-Assad to resume negotiations, President George W. Bush rejected such talks, even to the point of blocking tentative Israeli efforts to resume the peace process during the fall of 2006.

Throughout the region, the double standard in US policy toward Syria and Israel has been widely noted: for example, the United States insists that Syria unilaterally disarm its missiles and chemical weapons stockpiles but allows Israel to maintain its stockpile; it demanded enforcement of UN Security Council resolutions regarding Syrian forces in Lebanon while blocking enforcement of resolutions regarding Israeli forces in that country.

Israeli-Lebanese Conflict

In the aftermath of the US-backed Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1982, the United States was unsuccessful in forcing Lebanon to ratify a peace agreement with Israel. Unable to contain a stubborn guerrilla war and despite US air strikes and other military support, Israel withdrew from most of Lebanon within two years, though it remained in control of a strip of Lebanese territory in the south, which it deemed its “security zone,” in violation of a series of UN Security Council resolutions calling for a total withdrawal. The Clinton administration came to Israel’s defense during its July 1993 and April 1996 military offensives in Lebanon, blocking UN efforts to end the fighting and rejecting reports by journalists, UN officials, and human rights groups of widespread Israeli violations of international humanitarian law. By the late 1990s, with increasing casualties among its occupation forces in Lebanon, a majority of Israelis were demanding a unilateral withdrawal. In response, the US ambassador to Israel, Martin Indyk—backed by President Clinton—publicly encouraged Israel to keep its forces in Lebanon. Despite US hopes that Israel's ongoing occupation of southern Lebanon and its military strikes against Lebanon's infrastructure would force the Lebanese government to cut its close ties to Syria, Israel finally withdrew from Lebanese territory in May 2000, over US objections, in the face of ongoing guerrilla warfare from the Lebanese Islamist HIZBULLAH militia.

Despite the coming to power of a pro-Western government in Beirut and the withdrawal of Syrian forces from Lebanon in 2005, Washington backed Israel in its devastating 2006 incursion and massive air strikes against Lebanon's civilian infrastructure in response to Hizbullah provocations. With broad bipartisan support in Congress, the Bush administration, like its predecessors, defended the Israeli attacks, blocked UN efforts to impose a cease-fire for several weeks, and dismissed widespread reports of Israeli war crimes.

Israeli-Jordanian Conflict

Following Jordan's King Husayn's formal renunciation of territorial claims over the West Bank in 1988, the United States dropped its long-standing insistence that Jordan was the legitimate representative of the Palestinians and that any Palestinian entity that emerged from Israeli occupation would need to become part of that pro-Western monarchy. Soon thereafter, Washington began to apply pressure on Jordan to change its policy of refusing to make a separate peace with Israel unless and until the Palestinian issue was resolved. Faced with pressing economic problems in the early 1990s due to a reduction in US aid and strict international sanctions against its neighbor IRAQ, Jordan signed a separate peace treaty with Israel under considerable pressure from the Clinton administration. With the promise from the United States of increased military and economic aid, forgiveness of loans, and other incentives, in October 1994 King Husayn and Israeli prime minister Rabin signed a peace agreement, with President Clinton as witness. Jordan won most of its demands regarding WATER rights, security concerns, and control of several small strips of disputed territory, as well as related agreements regarding telephone and electrical grids, air transport, and joint efforts to combat drug smuggling and other illegal activities. The agreement also gave tourists coming from Jordan "free access" to Israeli-controlled areas through special crossing points where they could avoid the crowded main CHECKPOINTS. However, the Clinton administration's insistence that such a treaty be signed absent a comprehensive peace process was seen by many as a setback to hopes for an end to Israel's conflicts with the Palestinians.

Foreign Aid

US AID TO ISRAEL is unlike any other in the world or, indeed, in history. In sheer volume, it has been the most generous foreign aid program ever between any two countries, totaling more than $100 billion since 1959. Unlike most recipients of US foreign aid, which tend to be poorer developing countries, Israel is an advanced, industrialized, technologically sophisticated country as well as a major arms exporter. Some US aid to Israel began in the early 1950s, but after the 1967 War the United States dramatically expanded military loans, which were replaced exclusively by grants in 1985, and economic loans, which were replaced with grants in 1981. Since then, the annual US subsidy for Israel has remained at more than $3 billion in military and economic aid annually, in addition to assistance from other parts of the US budget or off the budget, which have totaled up to an average additional $500 million annually, as well as two major loan guarantees totaling $19 billion. Most US recipients of economic aid are required to use the bulk of the money for specific projects, such as purchasing certain US agricultural surpluses or finished goods, and are subject to strict oversight of the targeted programs, which are administered directly through nongovernmental organizations or under cosponsorship with a government agency. By contrast, most US nonmilitary aid to Israel went directly into the government's treasury to use at its discretion; Congress would set the funding level and it would become simply a cash transfer to the Israeli government.

In addition, congressional researchers have disclosed that, from 1974 to 1989, $16.4 billion in US military loans was converted to grants, and that this was the understanding between Israel and the United States from the beginning. Indeed, Congress has forgiven all past US loans to Israel. Beginning in 1984, US policy was that economic assistance to Israel must equal or exceed Israel's annual debt repayment to the United States. Furthermore, unlike other countries, which receive US aid in quarterly installments, US aid to Israel is given in a lump sum at the beginning of the fiscal year, leaving the US government to borrow from future revenues. Israel would even lend some of this money back through US treasury bills and collect the additional interest, costing the US government approximately $50 million to $60 million each year.

Most US economic aid to Israel was finally phased out by 2008, though military aid was projected to increase.

In addition to direct US government support, more than $1.5 billion in private US funds goes to Israel annually in the form of $1 billion in private tax-deductible donations and $500 million in Israel Bonds. The ability of Americans to make what amount to tax-deductible contributions to a foreign government, through a number of Jewish charities, does not exist with any other country. These figures do not include short- and long-term commercial loans from US banks, which have run as high as $1 billion annually in recent years.

For a country that consists of just one-tenth of 1 percent of the world's population, total US aid to Israel as a proportion of the foreign aid budget has been quite large, with approximately one out of every four dollars of US foreign aid in recent decades having gone to Israel. Israel's gross national product (GNP) is higher than the combined GNP of its immediate neighbors Egypt, Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, the West Bank, and Gaza Strip. Though this high level of aid to Israel had often been justified by US officials as necessary to support the peace process, US aid to Israel has increased as the peace process has stagnated and then collapsed. Furthermore, repeated public pronouncements by US officials that aid to Israel is unconditional have left Israel with little incentive to make concessions necessary for peace.

There are also questions regarding how helpful this aid has been for Israel. The vast majority of the military aid provided to Israel goes to US arms manufacturers to produce weapons for the Israeli military. The economic aid provided Israel was only slightly more than what Israel paid to private US banks as interest payments on previous loans for US weapons. Furthermore, US arms transfers cost the Israelis two to three times their value in maintenance, spare parts, training, personnel costs, and related expenses. As a result, growing numbers of Israelis are questioning whether US aid to Israel is in their country's best interest, given the strains on their economy and the resulting dependence on a foreign power.

Reason for the US Support for Israel

US support for Israel, like US support for allies elsewhere in the world, is not motivated primarily by the recipient nation's objective security needs or a strong moral commitment to the country but is designed primarily to advance perceived US strategic interests. If Israel's security interests had been paramount in the eyes of US policymakers, US aid to Israel would have been highest in the early years of the Jewish state, when its democratic institutions were strongest and its strategic situation most vulnerable. Instead, the trend has been in the opposite direction: major US military and economic aid did not begin until after the 1967 War. Indeed, 99 percent of US military assistance to Israel since its establishment came only after Israel proved itself to be far stronger than any combination of Arab armies and after Israel became an occupying power.

Even as compared with the 1970s, after the United States became Israel's major foreign backer, US aid to Israel has grown as Israel's objective security needs have lessened. For example, in the 1970s Egypt's massive and well-equipped armed forces threatened war; today, Israel has a long-standing peace treaty with Egypt and a large demilitarized and internationally monitored buffer zone keeping its army at a distance. At that time, Syria's military was expanding rapidly with advanced Soviet weaponry; today, Syria has made clear its willingness to live in peace with Israel in return for the Golan Heights and Syria's military capabilities have declined significantly as the result of the collapse of its former Soviet patron. Also in the 1970s, Jordan still claimed the West Bank and stationed large numbers of troops along its lengthy border and the demarcation line with Israel; today, Jordan has signed a peace treaty and has established fully normalized relations. At that time, Iraq was embarking upon its vast program of militarization; since then, Iraq's ability to launch an offensive war has been completely eliminated as a result of the Gulf War, international sanctions, a UN inspections regime, and the US invasion and occupation.

In the hypothetical circumstance that all US aid to Israel was immediately cut off, it would be many years before Israel would be under a serious military threat greater than it is today. Israel has both a major domestic arms industry and an existing military force far more capable and powerful than any conceivable combination of opposing forces. Though the escalation of terrorist attacks inside Israel following the breakdown of the peace process in 2000 raised widespread concerns about the safety of the Israeli public, the vast majority of US military aid has no correlation to the funding of counterterrorism efforts.

Many argue that strong support for Israeli policies hurts US strategic interests, because in the long run such support encourages anti-Americanism and Islamic extremism in the Middle East and beyond. Yet there remains a broad bipartisan consensus among US policymakers that support for Israel, at least in the short and medium term, advances US strategic interests in the region, for the following reasons:

- Israel assisted in preventing victories by radical nationalist movements in Lebanon and Jordan, as well as in Palestine.
- Israel has waged war against Palestinian and Lebanese radical Islamists.
- Israel has kept Syria, for many years an ally of the Soviet Union, in check.
- Israel's air force is predominant throughout the region.
- Israel's frequent wars have provided battlefield testing for US arms.
- Israel has served as a conduit for US arms to regimes and movements too unpopular in the United States for openly granting direct military assistance, such as apartheid South Africa, the Islamic Republic in IRAN, the military junta in Guatemala, the Nicaraguan Contras, and, more recently, right-wing Colombian paramilitary groups.
- Israeli military advisers have assisted pro-Western governments and pro-Western insurgencies, as well as advised and trained US forces in counterinsurgency operations in Iraq.
- Israel's MOSSAD has cooperated with the US CIA in intelligence gathering and covert operations.
- Israel has missiles capable of reaching well over 1,500 miles and possesses a nuclear arsenal of hundreds of weapons.
- Israel has closely cooperated with the US military-industrial complex with research and development for new weapons systems, including jet fighters and antimissile defense systems.

However, US support for Israel is based on more than strictly strategic objectives. First, many liberals, particularly among the post-World War II generation currently in leadership positions in government and the media, have a strong sentimental attachment to Israel. Many Americans identify with Israel's internal democracy, progressive social institutions (such as the KIBBUTZIM), relatively high level of social equality among its Jewish citizens, and its important role as a sanctuary for a historically oppressed minority group that spent centuries in Diaspora. Added to this is a mixture of guilt regarding Western ANTI-SEMITISM, personal friendships with Jewish Americans who identify strongly with Israel, and fear of inadvertently encouraging anti-Semitism by criticizing Israel.

Second, the US Christian right wing, with tens of millions of followers and a major base of support for the Republican Party, has thrown its immense media and political clout in support of right-wing Israeli leaders. Based in part on a messianic theology that sees the ingathering of Jews to the Holy Land as a precursor to the second coming of Christ, the battle between Israelis and Palestinians is in their eyes simply a continuation of the battle between the Israelites and the Philistines.

A third reason for strong US-Israeli ties is that mainstream and conservative Jewish organizations have mobilized considerable lobbying resources, financial contributions from the Jewish community, and citizen pressure on the news media and other forums of public discourse in support of the Israeli government. The AMERICAN-ISRAEL PUBLIC AFFAIRS COMMITTEE (AIPAC) is one of the most powerful lobbying groups in Washington. Together with its allied political action committees, AIPAC has played an important role in some tight congressional races and in helping to create a climate of intimidation among those who seek to moderate US policy, including growing numbers of progressive Jews who oppose Israel's occupation policies.

Fourth, the arms industry, which has even more influence, through campaign contributions, congressional campaigns, and lobbying efforts, than AIPAC and other pro-Israel groups, has played a considerable role in supporting the massive military support for Israel and in blocking arms control initiatives.

Fifth, the widespread racism in the United States toward Arabs and Muslims, often reinforced by the media, leaves little room for empathy or support for Palestinian interests. This is compounded by the identification many Americans have with ZIONISM as a reflection of their own historic experience as pioneers in North America.

A final reason directly involves the failure of progressive movements in the United States to challenge US policy toward Israel and Palestine in an effective manner. For many years, most mainstream peace and human rights groups avoided the issue. As a result, without any countervailing pressure from their base, liberal members of Congress have caved in to pressure from supporters of the Israeli government.

Though US policy is widely seen as “pro-Israel,” many Israelis argue that US support enables the Israeli government to pursue policies that threaten Israel’s legitimate security needs and makes a peaceful resolution to its conflict with the Palestinians and other Arab nations more difficult. Some on the Israeli left feel that Israel is discouraged from making peace because an Israel in a constant state of war with its neighbors is more likely to cooperate with US strategic designs in the region than an Israel at peace.

See also AMERICAN JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS; BA’ATHISM; CHRISTIANITY; MOSHE DAYAN; GREATER JERUSALEM; MEDIA, US; NEOCONSERVATIVES; NUCLEAR PROGRAM, ISRAEL; STRATEGIC ASSET; STRATEGIC COOPERATION; UNITED NATIONS; US AID TO ISRAEL; individual entries for US presidents and secretaries of state

Bibliography

Abu Saleh. “There Is No PLO-American Dialogue.” MERIP Reports No. 83. Washington, DC: Middle East Report and Information Project, 1979.

Alteras, Isaac. Eisenhower and Israel: U.S.-Israeli Relations, 1953–1960. Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 1993.

Aruri, Naseer. Dishonest Broker: The Role of the United States in Palestine and Israel. New York: South End Press, 2003.

———. The Obstruction of Peace: The United States, Israel and the Palestinians. Monroe, ME: Common Courage Press, 1995.

Bain, Kenneth. March to Zion: United States Foreign Policy and the Founding of Israel. College Station: Texas A&M University Press, 1980.

Ball, George, and Douglas Ball. The Passionate Attachment: America’s Involvement with Israel, 1947 to the Present. New York: W. W. Norton, 1992.

Bass, Warren. Support Any Friend: Kennedy’s Middle East and the Making of the US Israel Alliance. New York: Oxford University Press, 2003.

Bennis, Phyllis, and Noam Chomsky. Before and After: US Foreign Policy and the September 11th Crisis. New York: Olive Branch Press, 2002.

Ben-Zvi, Abraham. John F. Kennedy and the Politics of Arms Sales to Israel. London: Frank Cass, 2005.

———. Lyndon B. Johnson and the Politics of Arms Sales to Israel: In the Shadow of the Hawk. London: Routledge, 2004.

———. The United States and Israel: The Limits of the Special Relationship. New York: Columbia University Press, 1993.

Brown, Michael. The Israeli-American Connection: Its Roots in the Yishuv, 1914–1945. Detroit, MI: Wayne State University Press, 1996.

Carter, Jimmy. Palestine: Peace, Not Apartheid. New York: Simon and Schuster, 2006.

Chomsky, Noam. The Fateful Triangle: The United States, Israel and the Palestinians, updated ed. London: Pluto Press, 2000.

Christison, Bill. “US Foreign Policy Dangerously Slanted toward Israel.” CounterPunch. 16 February 2005.

Christison, Kathleen. Perceptions of Palestine: Their Influence on US Middle East Policy. Los Angeles: University of California Press, 1999.

Christison, Kathleen, and Bill Christison. “US Foreign Policy and Palestine.” CounterPunch. 24 October 2005.

Cockburn, Andrew, and Leslie Cockburn. Dangerous Liaison: The Inside Story of the U.S.-Israeli Covert Relationship. New York: HarperPerennial, 1992.

Cohn-Sherbok, Dan. The Politics of Apocalypse: The History and Influence of Christian Zionism. Oxford, UK: Oneworld Publications, 2006.

Davidson, Lawrence. “Christian Zionism and American Foreign Policy: Paving the Road to Hell in Palestine.” Logos. 4:1 (2005).

Druks, Herbert. The Uncertain Alliance: The U.S. and Israel from Kennedy to the Peace Process. Westport, CT: Greenwood Press, 2001.

Ennes, James M., Jr. Assault on Liberty: The True Story of the Israeli Attack on an American Intelligence Ship. New York: Random House, 1979.

Finkelstein, Norman G. Image and Reality of the Israel-Palestine Conflict, 2nd rev. ed. New York: W. W. Norton, 2003.

Gal, Allon. David Ben-Gurion and the American Alignment for a Jewish State. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1991.

Grose, Peter. Israel in the Mind of America. New York: Schocken Books, 1984.

Hajja, Rammy M. “The Armageddon Lobby: Dispensationalist Christian Zionism and the Shaping of US Policy towards Israel-Palestine.” Holy Land Studies: A Multidisciplinary Journal. 5.1 (2006).

Hersh, Seymour M. The Samson Option: Israel’s Nuclear Arsenal and American Foreign Policy, reprint ed. New York: Vintage Press, 1993.

- Khalidi, Walid. "Regiopolitics: Toward a U.S. Policy on the Palestine Problem." Foreign Affairs. Summer 1981.
- Khoury, Nabeel A. "The Arab Lobby: Problems and Prospects." Middle East Journal. 41:3 (1987).
- Kuniholm, Bruce Robellet. The Palestinian Problem and United States Policy: A Quick Guide to Issues and References. Claremont, CA: Regina Books, 1986.
- Mansour, Camille. Beyond Alliance: Israel and U.S. Foreign Policy. New York: Columbia University Press, 1994.
- Mead, Walter Russel. "God's Country? Evangelicals and U.S. Foreign Policy." Foreign Affairs. September–October 2006.
- Mearsheimer, John, and Stephen Walt. "The Israel Lobby." London Review of Books. 28:6 (23 March 2006).
- Melman, Yossi, and Daniel Raviv. Friends in Deed: Inside the US-Israeli Alliance. New York: Hyperion, 1994.
- Organski, A. F. K. The $36 Billion Bargain. New York: Columbia University Press, 1991.
- Petras, James. The Power of Israel in the United States. Atlanta: Clarity Press, 2006.
- Quandt, William. Decade of Decisions: American Policy toward the Arab-Israeli Conflict, 1967–1976. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1977.
- . Peace Process: American Diplomacy and the Arab-Israeli Conflict since 1967. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1993.
- Rabie, Mohamed. The Politics of Foreign Aid: U.S. Foreign Assistance and Aid to Israel. Westport, CT: Praeger Publishers, 1988.
- . U.S.-PLO Dialogue: Secret Diplomacy and Conflict Resolution. Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 1995.
- Reich, Bernard. Quest for Peace: United States–Israel Relations and the Arab-Israeli Conflict. New Brunswick, NJ: Transaction Publishers, 1977.
- . Securing the Covenant: United States–Israel Relations after the Cold War. Westport, CT: Praeger Publishers, 1995.
- Rosenthal, Steven T. Irreconcilable Differences? The Waning of the American Jewish Love Affair with Israel. Boston: Brandeis University Press, 2001.
- Rubenberg, Cheryl A. "The Bush Administration and the Palestinians: A Reassessment." In U.S. Policy on Palestine from Wilson to Clinton. Edited by Michael W. Suleiman. Boston: Association of Arab-American University Graduates, 1995.
- . Israel and the American National Interest: A Critical Examination, reprint ed. Chicago: University of Illinois Press, 1989.
- . The Palestinians in Search of a Just Peace. Boulder, CO: Lynne Rienner Publishers, 2003.
- . "Reflections on the Continuity of American Foreign Policy." Arab Studies Quarterly. 11:1 (1989).
- . "U.S. Policy toward the Palestinians: A Twenty Year Assessment." Arab Studies Quarterly. 10:1 (1988).
- Safran, Nadav. The United States and Israel. Boston: Harvard University Press, 1963.
- Said, Edward W. The End of the Peace Process: Oslo and After. New York: Pantheon Books, 2000.
- Saunders, Harold. The Other Walls: The Politics of the Arab-Israeli Peace Process. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1991.
- Schoenbaum, David. The United States and the State of Israel. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 2002.
- Shadid, Mohammed Khalil. The United States and the Palestinians. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1981.
- Shalom, Zaki. Israel's Nuclear Option: Behind the Scenes Diplomacy between Dimona and Washington. Brighton, UK: Sussex Academic Press, and Portland, OR: Jaffee Center for Strategic Studies, 2005.
- Spiegel, Steven. The Other Arab-Israeli Conflict: Making America's Middle East Policy, from Truman to Reagan, reprint ed. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1986.
- Stevens, Richard. American Zionism and US Foreign Policy, 1942–1947. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1970.
- Suleiman, Michael, ed. U.S. Policy on Palestine from Wilson to Clinton. Washington, DC: AAUG Press, 1995.
- Thomas, Michael. American Policy toward Israel: The Power and Limits of Beliefs. London: Routledge, 2007.
- Tillman, Seth P. The United States in the Middle East: Interests and Obstacles. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1982.
- Tivnan, Edward. The Lobby: Jewish Political Power and American Foreign Policy. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1987.
- Van Leeuwen, Marianne. Americans and the Palestinian Question: The US Public Debate on Palestinian Nationhood, 1973–1988. Amsterdam: Editions Rodopi, 1993.
- Wagner, Donald E. "Short Fuse to Apocalypse? A Look at the Political Roots of Christian Zionism and Mid East Peace." Sojourners. 32:4 (2003).
- Young, Ronald. Missed Opportunities for Peace: U.S. Middle East Policy 1981–86. Philadelphia: American Friends Service Committee, 1987.
- Zunes, Stephen. "The Evolution of U.S. Policy towards Jerusalem." Middle East Policy III:2 (Fall 1994).
- . "The Influence of the Christian Right on Bush Administration Policy toward Israel and Palestine." Middle East Policy. XII:3 (July 2005).
- . "The Israeli-Jordanian Peace Agreement: Peace or Pax Americana?" Middle East Policy. III:4 (Spring 1995).
- . "Israeli-Syrian Peace: The Long Road Ahead." Middle East Policy. II:3 (Winter 1993–1994).
- . "The Roots of the U.S.-Israeli Relationship." New Political Science. 21–22 (Spring–Summer 1992).
- . "The Strategic Functions of U.S. Aid to Israel." Middle East Policy. 4:4 (October 1996).
- . "The Swing to the Right in U.S. Policy toward Israel and Palestine." Middle East Policy IX:3 (September 2002).
- . Tinderbox: U.S. Middle East Policy and the Roots of Terrorism. Monroe, ME: Common Courage Press, 2003.

- . “U.S.-Israeli Relations and the Dilemma of Middle East Peace Making.” Peace Research. 25:3 (August 1993).
- . “The U.S. Role in the Breakdown of the Israeli-Palestinian Peace Process.” Middle East Policy. VIII 4 (December 2001).
- . “U.S. Support for Israel’s Summer 2006 Offensive.” In The War on Lebanon: A Reader. Edited by Nubar Hovsepian. Northampton, MA: Interlink Publishers, 2007.
- . “Washington’s Hard Line—U.S. Policy toward the Palestinians.” The Progressive. March 1994.

—Stephen Zunes

United States–Palestine Liberation Organization Dialogue

In December 1988 President RONALD REAGAN authorized the US State Department to enter into a low-level dialogue with the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO), reversing previous US policy, dating to commitments made by Secretary of State HENRY KISSINGER, of refusing to talk to the organization. The PLO met three conditions that the UNITED STATES imposed for the dialogue: (1) recognize Israel’s right to exist; (2) accept UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 242, which called for Israel’s withdrawal from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES in exchange for an end to the Arab-Israeli conflict; and (3) renounce the use of TERRORISM. Secretary of State GEORGE SHULTZ essentially dictated to PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT the words he must publicly use to satisfy the US requirements.

In the background, the INTIFADA had created a sense of concern among administrative officials, but the November 1988 PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL’s resolutions and DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE seemed to suggest a more moderate PLO. Yet despite the talks, the United States continued to reject the key Palestinian demands for self-determination and statehood. Israel, however, was upset about the dialogue because it complicated the Jewish state’s desire to marginalize the PLO and develop an alternative leadership. During the few months of the talks, pro-Israel groups in the United States attempted to pressure Congress and the president to terminate the dialogue.

The administration played down the talks as much as possible but still wanted to have some influence over the PLO. It never appointed an official with a specific mandate for the talks, choosing rather to conduct them through Robert Pelletreau, the US ambassador to Tunisia, where the PLO leadership resided. The United States insisted on meeting only with low-level PLO officials (with the exception of one secret and much-criticized encounter between Pelletreau and SALAH KHALAF, second in command in the PLO prior to his assassination on 14 January 1990). Substantively, the United States had two conditions for the dialogue: there must be no international conference, and the PLO must call off the Palestinian uprising (Intifada), which Washington viewed as terrorism against Israel. It did not use the talks to better comprehend the Palestinian situation, consider Palestinian political or national rights, or attempt to broker a compromise between Israel and the Palestinians.

The succeeding GEORGE H. W. BUSH administration terminated the dialogue in June 1990, eighteen months after it began, ostensibly because the PLO failed to condemn an aborted 30 May raid on Israel by the PALESTINE LIBERATION FRONT (PLF), a small faction backed by IRAQ and headed by ABU AL-ABBAS. Because the PLO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE refused to expel al-Abbas, the United States charged that the PLO was again engaged in terrorism. However, even before the talks ended, Washington demonstrated hostility to the PLO. For example, in May 1990 the Security Council invited Arafat to address it, but the Bush administration refused to give the PLO leader a visa. In response, the Council convened a special session in Geneva to enable Arafat to address the body. The United States was the only member state that was absent.

The dialogue concluded with no visible achievements.

Bibliography

- Beinin, Joel. “The Imperial Lament.” Znet. 28 July 2004.
- Chomsky, Noam. “Ideology.” Lies of Our Times. 7 October 1991.
- Hassassian, Manuel. “From Armed Struggle to Negotiation.” Palestine-Israel Journal of Politics, Economics and Culture. 1:1 (1994).
- Pelletreau, Robert H. “Not Every Fundamentalist Is a Terrorist.” Middle East Quarterly. 2:3 (1995).
- Quandt, William B. “The Middle East in 1990.” Foreign Affairs. 1991. www.foreignaffairs.org/19910201faessay6069/william-b-quandt/the-middle-east-in-1990.html.
- . Reflections on American-Palestinian Dialogue. Information Paper no. 20. Jerusalem: Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs, 1989.

- Rabi, Mohamed. U.S.-PLO Dialogue: Secret Diplomacy and Conflict Resolution. Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 1995.
- Rubenberg, Cheryl A. "The U.S.-PLO Dialogue: Continuity or Change in American Policy?" Arab Studies Quarterly. 11:4 (Fall 1989).
- United Nations Information System on the Question of Palestine, Division for Palestinian Rights. Approaches towards the Settlement of the Arab-Israeli Conflict and the Question of Palestine. Issue 2. New York: United Nations, April 1991.

United Torah Judaism

United Torah Judaism (UTJ, or Yahadut HaTorah) is an Israeli coalition of two small HAREDI parties, AGUDAT YISRAEL and DEGEL HATORAH, that submitted a joint slate in the 1992 election and won four Knesset seats. In the 1999 elections UTJ won five seats. In 2004 the UTJ joined ARIEL SHARON'S coalition, then split into its two constituent factions. Before the 2006 elections, Degel HaTorah and Agudat Israel agreed to revive their alliance under the banner of United Torah Judaism to not waste votes and achieve maximum representation in the seventeenth Knesset, in which they won six seats. The two factions again united for the eighteenth Knesset elections in 2009 and won five seats.

Led by Meir Porush, UTJ opposes negotiations with the Palestinians and the formation of a Palestinian state. It also supports increasing SETTLEMENTS throughout ERETZ YISRAEL (Greater Israel) for religious, economic, social, and security reasons. In regard to religious and state issues, UTJ wants to maintain a status quo relationship.

Bibliography

- Ravitzky, Aviezer. Messianism, Zionism, and Jewish Religious Radicalism. Translated by Michael Swirsky and Jonathan Chipman. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1996.
- Reiser, Stewart. The Politics of Leverage: The National Religious Party of Israel and Its Influence on Foreign Policy. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1984.

Unity Government, Palestinian 2007

See MECCA AGREEMENT

Unrecognized Villages

More than 150 Palestinian villages in Israel—45 in the Negev region and the remainder in the Galilee—are not officially recognized by the Israeli government. More than 90,000 Palestinian citizens of Israel live in these villages, which are facing destruction, prevented from being developed, and do not appear on any official map. These villages first became "unrecognized" in 1948 with the establishment of the state of Israel. Even though these Palestinian villages existed tens and hundreds of years ago, consecutive Israeli governments have ignored their existence and have denied their inhabitants their rights as citizens of the country.

In the Negev, the majority of unrecognized villages are inhabited by BEDOUIN. Although the image of the Bedouin is one of nomadic lifestyle, by the turn of the twentieth century most of this population in Palestine was settled and engaging in agriculture. Today virtually all of the Bedouin in Israel are sedentary. When Israel designated the majority of the Negev as STATE LAND, Bedouin habitation on their traditional lands of hundreds of years was classified as illegal and unrecognized, thus preventing the Bedouin from engaging in their general means of subsistence, agriculture and grazing.

Government policy considers the inhabitants of the unrecognized villages as lawbreakers. It prevents them from repairing existing homes or building new ones; withholds basic rights such as drinking WATER, sewage, EDUCATION, and HEALTH CARE clinics; and, in certain cases, even fences off whole villages. These measures coincide with a wider policy of concentrating Palestinian Arabs into enclaves and redeeming their lands for new Jewish mitzpim SETTLEMENTS (i.e., "lookout"—settlements that were established as part of the program to Judaize the Galilee region and change the demographic balance of Palestinian areas). Many of the mitzpim settlements, in both the Galilee and the Negev, are built next to the unrecognized villages, often illegally, yet with complete provision of services.

The 1965 Planning and Construction Law officially delegalized the villages and established a framework of regulations and a national plan for the country's future development. While leaving these villages out of the planning scheme, the law reclassified their lands as agricultural, a designation that doesn't allow for any form of construction or development. Consequently, existing buildings in these villages were unable to get PERMITS, and those that already had them, such as schools, saw them removed. The ownership of the lands was not disputed, but the law created a situation in which whole communities as well as each individual house became instantly illegal. Ninety-five percent of the houses were built before the law was instituted, but, because the villages were unrecognized, the villagers had no local authority to which to appeal for a change in the status of their lands and no representation on regional or national planning committees.

The Planning and Construction Law allows Israeli planning authorities to prosecute homeowners for building without a permit and to demolish their houses when it is determined to be in the public interest. Moreover, the law allows the courts to issue demolition orders retroactively. This is significant because, as noted, 95 percent of the houses in the unrecognized villages were built before this legislation was enacted. The political use of these legal powers was amplified following the report of the Markovitz Committee in 1986 on unlicensed construction in the Arab community, which made three main recommendations:

1. Immediate demolition of 1,000 existing unlicensed houses and the administrative demolition of all new unlicensed construction.
2. Classification of 4,419 houses in the unrecognized villages as “grey” houses slated for demolition at a later date and in the meantime not entitled to any services and unable to be repaired.
3. Extension of power to administrators of regional planning committees to issue demolition orders without going to court and the establishment of a “grey” unit empowered to implement these administrative demolition orders.

In the wake of the Markovitz report, Article 238A of the Planning and Construction Law was amended to allow officials to issue administrative demolition orders on houses in unrecognized villages within a month of their completion. Consequently, planning officials maintain monthly checks of the villages through aerial photographs and visits and have prosecuted villagers for home additions and repairs.

Article 97A allows for retroactive approval for buildings established on agricultural land and was used to retroactively legalize the mitzpim settlements. However, the HOUSE DEMOLITION policy is implemented unevenly: a 1997 Interior Ministry report on house demolitions stated that it focused on unrecognized areas. From 1993 to 1996, 1,440 Palestinian Arab houses were demolished in the unrecognized villages—624 of them outside of any court process. During this period, Palestinian homes accounted for 94 percent of all demolitions in Israel, despite accounting for only 57 percent of all recorded unlicensed building. In court appeals, homeowners have found that all building in the unrecognized villages has been defined as against the public interest. They are usually required to demolish their homes and, if they fail to do so, are fined for contempt of court and can be imprisoned for up to a year. In addition, the authorities can charge the homeowner for the cost of the demolition.

There is a very high population density within the unrecognized villages, with an average of ten people per house. The government has undertaken a clear policy to make the villages uninhabitable by depriving their residents of basic rights and services. For example, a 1993 internal report for the Misgav Regional Council on how to “concentrate” the residents of twenty-two unrecognized villages includes the following methods of pressure: obstructing villagers’ farming, neglecting to provide school transport from the villages, failing to meet the residents’ needs for health services, denying the villages electricity, and withholding drinking water. Article 157A of the Planning and Construction Law prohibits national utility companies from connecting a building to national electricity, water, or telephone networks if the building owners have no building permit. It was designed specifically to dislodge residents from the unrecognized villages.

The ASSOCIATION OF FORTY, a nongovernmental organization in Israel that works for the recognition of unrecognized villages, surveyed 150 unrecognized localities. It found that 130 localities are not connected to the water network, which means that residents must transport water from neighboring villages. The quality and quantity of water available for each resident are far below normal health standards. Following a 1992 International Water Tribunal ruling that Israeli government policy was illegal, one tap has been fitted for each village. In September 2006 the HAIFA district court rejected a petition to connect the unrecognized Bedouin villages in the Negev to clean water sources.

The association also found that health services are available in only four Galilee villages and in only one village in the Negev. None of these villages are connected to a sewage network. Because of polluted water, outbreaks of jaundice and diarrhea among children have frequently occurred. Only one village is connected to the electricity network. Most villages run private generators that provide sufficient electricity for lighting only. None of the villages are connected to the main ROAD network. Some villages have fences placed around them by the government to prevent the villagers from gaining access to their traditional lands.

In three unrecognized villages in the north (Galilee), schools were closed and only one remains. In other villages, students travel 10 to 15 kilometers (6 to 9 miles) to school. Because of distance and the lack of a suitable study environment at home, achievement levels are low and there is a high student dropout rate. For example, in El-Naim (population 400), only one student has ever completed high school.

In the early 1990s, the Israeli government agreed to recognize nine of the unrecognized villages in the north and center and to partially adopt some of the solutions of the Association of Forty plan. Despite this agreement, none of the meaningful parts of the plan have yet been carried out. The budget put aside in 1996 to implement recognition has still not been released by the parliamentary finance committee. In some villages, the area to be recognized has been reduced to 20 percent of the area originally agreed upon, and in others up to 40 percent of the existing houses have been left off the approved plan. In all the villages, demolition orders are still outstanding, and, in some, new ones have continued to be issued.

See also BEDOUIN IN ISRAEL; ISRAEL LANDS ADMINISTRATION; PALESTINIAN CITIZENS OF ISRAEL

Bibliography

- Algazy, Joseph. "Sprayed Fields and Home Demolitions in 2002: A Partial Listing." Ha'aretz (Jerusalem). 21 March 2003.
- Amnesty International. Troubled Waters—Palestinians Denied Fair Access to Water: Water Is a Human Right. London: Amnesty International, 27 October 2009.
- The Arab Association for Human Rights. www.arabhra.org/factsheets/factsheet4.htm.
- Association for Civil Rights in Israel. Israel Must Solve the Problem of Unrecognized Bedouin Villages. Tel Aviv, Israel: ACRI, 2002.
- The Association of Forty. www.assoc40.org/index\_main.html.
- "Court Nixes Petition to Connect Power for Young Cancer Patient." Ha'aretz. 28 November 2005.
- Falah, Ghazi. "Israeli 'Judaization' Policy in Galilee." Journal of Palestine Studies. 20:4 (1991).
- Ghanem, As'ad. The Palestinian-Arab Minority in Israel, 1948–2000: A Political Study. New York: SUNY Press, 2001.
- Ghanem, As'ad, Nadim Rouhana, and Oren Yiftachel. "Questioning 'Ethnic Democracy.'" Israel Studies. 3:2 (1999).
- Hasson, Nir. "Bedouin Served Eviction Notices—with Nowhere to Go." Ha'aretz. 23 June 2004.
- . "An Entire Village in the Balance." Ha'aretz. 20 December 2004.
- Israel Ministry of Environmental Protection. "Planning for Building and Development in the 21st Century: National Outline Plan 35." Israel Environmental Bulletin. Vol. 31. n.d. http://www.environment.gov.il/Environment/Static/Binaries/ModulKvatzim/31\_26-27\_1.pdf.
- Jabarin, Yosef. Tama 35 and Its Implications on the Palestinian Minority in Israel. Nazareth, Israel: The Arab Center for Alternative Planning, 3 March 2002.
- Kedar, Alexandre. "A First Step in a Difficult and Sensitive Road: Preliminary Observations on Qa'adan v. Katzir." Law Watch. March 2000. http://lawwatch.haifa.ac.il/eng/select/march\_00.html.
- Khoury, Jackie. "Activists Protest House Demolition in Arab Village." Ha'aretz. 9 January 2005.
- "The Koenig Report: Top Secret: Memorandum-Proposal: Handling the Arabs of Israel." Full report. Journal of Palestine Studies. 6:1 (1976). Originally published in SWASIA 3:41 (15 October 1976).
- Lansu, Paul. Unrecognized Villages in Israel: The People Who Don't Exist. Ref. ME.135.E.03. Pax Christi International. <http://storage.paxchristi.net/ME135E03.pdf>.
- Meehan, Maureen. "Israel's Palestinian Population Still Struggling for Equal Rights, Recognition of Their Towns and Villages." Washington Report on Middle East Affairs. July–August 1999.
- Norwegian Refugee Council/Global IDP Project. Profile of Internal Displacement: Israel. Compilation of the Information Available in the Global IDP Database of the Norwegian Refugee Council (as of 14 January 2002). Geneva, Switzerland: NRC/ID, 2002. www.idpproject.org.
- Rinat, Zafrir. "Jewish Towns Being Planned to 'Block Bedouin Expansion.'" Ha'aretz. 6 June 2004.
- Schechla, Joseph. "The Invisible People Come to Light: Israel's 'Internally Displaced' and the 'Unrecognized Villages.'" Journal of Palestine Studies. 31:1 (2001).
- Shamir, Ronen. "Suspended in Space: Bedouins under the Law of Israel." Law and Society Review. 30:2 (1996).
- Sharon, Ariel. "Address by PM Ariel Sharon: Government Approved the National Contour Plan 'Tama 35.'" Globes. 2 December 2005.
- Slyomovics, Susan. The Object of Memory: Arab and Jew Narrate the Palestinian Village. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1998.

Stern, Yoav. "Court Rejects Bedouin Villages' Request for Clean Water Connection." Ha'aretz. 25 September 2006.

Yiftachel, Oren. "The Future of Indigenous Peoples: Strategies for Survival and Development." In Bedouin Arabs and the Israeli Settler State: Land Policies and the Indigenous Resistance. Los Angeles: UCLA American Indian Studies Center, 2003.

———. Planning a Mixed Region in Israel: The Political Geography of Arab-Jewish Relations in the Galilee. Aldershot, UK: Avebury Press, 1992.

Yiftachel, O., and A. Ghanem. "Understanding 'Ethnocratic' Regimes: The Politics of Seizing Contested Territories." Political Geography. 23:6 (2004).

US Aid to Israel

By the end of 1987, Israel had received $58.8 billion from the UNITED STATES, as much aid in inflation-adjusted dollars as was provided to rebuild Western Europe under the Marshall Plan at the end of World War II. Aid to Israel has come to be seen by Israel and its supporters as well as by presidents, members of Congress, and the US public as an ongoing commitment. By the end of 2007, the amount of US foreign aid provided to Israel had climbed to over $100 billion, distributed roughly in allocations of $3 billion to $4 billion in military and economic assistance annually. In his last year in office President GEORGE W. BUSH signed an agreement with Israel that would provide it with $30 billion in military aid over a ten-year period. In addition, Congress approved $10 billion in loan guarantees in 1992 and $9 billion in guarantees in 2003, which allowed Israel to borrow from international lenders at a substantially lower interest rate than it would get on its own. Another source of US funding is from the sale of State of Israel Bonds to public and private investors and state and union pension funds for which exact figures are not available but are estimated to be at least $500 million a year. Private, tax-deductible cash transfers from American Jews and Jewish charities are said to be around $1 billion annually. Some of these funds have been used to construct or assist illegal Jewish SETTLEMENTS in the WEST BANK and East JERUSALEM. Total funding from all sources—private and public combined—is estimated to be over $1,000 a year for each Israeli Jew.

Apart from funds appropriated under the foreign assistance program but included in the overall total is nearly $1 billion in research and development grants under the "STRATEGIC COOPERATION" agreement since 1988 for the joint development with Israel of the Arrow antimissile missile, $1.3 billion for developing the Lavi fighter jet before the program was canceled, $200 million to improve Israel's Merkava tank, and $130 million to develop a high-energy laser antimissile system. On seven occasions between 1973 and 1995, attempts by Israel to sell weapons systems to CHINA and other countries that incorporated US technology have been blocked by Washington, but none of these violations of the Arms Export Control Act were prosecuted.

In November 1999 Congress awarded Israel an additional $1.2 billion as part of the WYE RIVER MEMORANDUM that Tel Aviv had signed the previous year with the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY, despite Israel's failure to fulfill all but a small part of its agreed-upon withdrawals from the West Bank. Of that figure, $200 million was to be spent on redeployment of Israeli troops from bases in the West Bank, but half went for weaponry, including Apache helicopters, electronic warfare, light surveillance aircraft, and armored personnel carriers. An additional $200 million for Israel was included as part of the Homeland Security Act passed by Congress in 2002, legislation intended to provide for domestic defense against a future attack.

It was not until 1968, following the 1967 WAR, that the United States moved to adopt Israel economically and militarily. Until that time, Israel's economy had been largely underwritten by reparations from postwar GERMANY. The restitution monies, among other things, helped pay for its arms purchases, including its acquisition of nuclear capability, which was mainly from FRANCE. French president Charles de Gaulle, however, broke off relations with Tel Aviv to show his displeasure with Israel for having initiated the 1967 War against his advice. Even then, US assistance from 1968 through 1970, both in arms and in money, came to only $360 million, almost all of it in loans. In 1971 it began its ascent to the current levels when the US loaned Israel $634 million. This was ostensibly Israel's reward for preventing SYRIA from coming to the aid of the Palestinians in JORDAN in 1970, when King Husayn launched an attack on the Palestinian refugee camps during BLACK SEPTEMBER, even though Israel did not participate in that conflict in any manner, Jordan by itself having repulsed the Syrian tanks.

Israel now routinely receives over one-quarter of the US foreign aid budget, but for the first twenty years of its existence, such aid amounted to only 1.1 percent of that budget. Moreover, from 1949 to 1959 the United States gave no military assistance to Israel, and by 1966 it had only reached a maximum of $90 million, and that was in the form of loans. Compared to the present, the lower figures reflected both a lack of interest in Israel on the part of both Washington and American Jewry and less influence over Congress by the emerging pro-Israel lobby. Prior to the 1967 War, US newspapers reported that more Jews were emigrating from Israel than making ALIYA and that the economy of the Jewish state had stagnated. Israel's swift victory in 1967 over EGYPT, Syria, and Jordan quickly shifted the mood of American Jews to one of pride and triumph that has lasted to the present day and has provided the impetus for a closer US-Israeli relationship and dramatic increases in economic and military assistance.

Over the years, individuals and groups have offered various reasons to justify the ongoing high aid levels. These include Israel being the only democracy in the Middle East, its "shared values" with the United States, and its status as a STRATEGIC ASSET in the region for the United States, although to what degree is subject to dispute. The second GULF WAR provided another argument for Israel's supporters: the use by US forces of technology developed in Israel, including the US Army's Hunter drones, the targeting systems on the Marines' Harrier jets, and improved fuel tanks on its F-15 fighters. More significant, however, Israel positioned itself as an ally in the "war on TERRORISM" engaged in by the United States since the 9/11 attacks, in which Israel's position as a non-Muslim country in the Middle East has linked it to the aims of the United States. Finally, another likely reason, advanced by its critics, is that Congress is influenced by Israel's Washington lobby, the AMERICAN-ISRAEL PUBLIC AFFAIRS COMMITTEE (AIPAC), and routinely approves Israeli aid appropriations without debate.

Twice a year, high-level Israeli officials meet with their US counterparts and present their wish list, and agree upon the appropriation for the following year. The administration then presents this to Congress, which frequently approves additional funding, even if Israel has not requested it. What is significant is that the condition of the US economy, even in times of recession, has had no bearing on the House vote to provide aid to Israel, which, included in the overall foreign assistance legislation, usually passes by a comfortable three-to-one majority.

In addition to Israel being annually awarded the lion's share of US foreign aid, it benefits from perks not available to other recipients. First, since 1982, at Israel's request, grants have been paid in one lump sum at the start of the fiscal year rather than quarterly, as with other aid recipients. This

Table 9 US Aid to Israel (FY1949–FY2007, millions of dollars)

Year	Total	Military Grant	Economic Grant	Immigrant Grant	ASHA <sup>a</sup>	All Other
1949–1996	68,030.9	29,014.9	23,122.4	868.9	121.4	14,903.3
1997	3,132.1	1,800.0	1,200.0	80.0	2.1	50.0
1998	3,080.0	1,800.0	1,200.0	80.0	?	?
1999	3,010.0	1,860.0	1,080.0	70.0	?	?
2000	4,131.8	3,120.0	949.1	60.0	2.75	?
2001	2,878.3	1,975.6	838.2	60.0	2.25	?
2002	2,850.6	2,040.0	720.0	60.0	2.65	28.0
2003	3,744.1	3,086.4	596.1	59.6	3.05	?
2004	2,690.4	2,147.3	477.2	49.7	3.15	9.9
2005	2,612.1	2,202.2	357.0	50.0	2.95	?
2006	2,534.5	2,257.0	237.0	40.0	?	0.5
2007	2,500.2	2,340.0	120.0	40.0	2.95	0.2
2008	2,423.9	2,380.0	0	40.0	3.90	0
2009	2,550.0	2,550.0	0	?	?	0
TOTAL	106,164.7	58,573.4	30,897.0	1,558.2	144.2	14,991.9

Note: a. American Schools and Hospitals.

Sources: Data obtained from Congressional Research Service (5 January 2006) http://digital.library.unt.edu/govdocs/crs/data/2006/upl-meta-crs-8124/RL33222\_2006Jan05.pdf, accessed 10 August 2009, and Jewish Virtual Library http://www.jewishvirtuallibrary.org/jsource/US-Israel/U.S.\_Assistance\_to\_Israel1.html, accessed 10 August 2009.

requires the Treasury Department to borrow the money and pay interest on it—an estimated $50 million to $60 million annually—adding an additional $1.5 billion to the US deficit by the end of the fiscal year. Israel, in turn, invests the money in US Treasury notes to collect interest, which, by the end of 2005, earned Tel Aviv an additional $2 billion. Second, since 1985 all US aid has been given in grants, not in repayable loans. Third, economic aid goes directly to the Israeli government, and Washington does not require an account of how the money is used. The absence of a binding need to report how/where it spends US aid provides Israel with enormous latitude. Although it has been official US policy that US aid may not be used in the West Bank and, before 2005, in the GAZA STRIP, which would give the appearance of endorsing Israel's annexation of Palestinian land, in practice the United States has taken only token steps to penalize Israel for violating this prohibition. That Israel violates US policy has rarely affected direct aid. Israel also violates the prohibition against using weapons purchased or received from the United States against a civilian population, as in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES or in LEBANON. On only one occasion was this prohibition enforced, when President RONALD REAGAN briefly withheld further shipments of cluster bombs from Israel during its 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

A fourth perk for Israel is that, whereas other foreign aid recipients go through the Defense Department for military purchases from US companies, Israel deals directly with the companies. And, whereas other countries must make a minimum purchase of $100,000, Israel has no minimum. The Israeli Purchasing Mission in New York pays the companies and is reimbursed by the US Treasury. Fifth, since there is no oversight, a quarter of US military aid may be used within Israel for research and development, for purchases from its own arms stocks rather than US weaponry—which is required of all other arms recipients—or for nonmilitary purposes.

In 1984, Israel's economy received a boost when California senator Alan Cranston, a recipient of more than $250,000 from pro-Israel political action committees, introduced an amendment to the foreign aid legislation (Section 534, P.L. 98-473) that came to bear his name. It required Congress to provide Israel with no less than the amount Israel owed the United States in annual debt service payments (principal and interest). The amendment was included in subsequent foreign aid legislation through 1997, after which it was no longer needed. Although, technically, the United States has not canceled any of Israel's debts, it has waived repayment of past loans. Following the 1973 OCTOBER WAR and urged on by Congress, President RICHARD NIXON requested an emergency arms appropriation for Israel that included loans for which, by prior agreement, repayment would be waived. Israel reportedly preferred that the aid be listed in the form of loans rather than grants to avoid having a US military unit stationed in Israel to oversee a grant program. Since 1974, some or all of US military aid has been provided in this manner. From fiscal year 1985 through 2003, Israel received more than $45 billion in such grants.

In 1996 Israeli prime minister BENJAMIN NETANYAHU told a joint session of Congress that Israel would reduce its need for US aid by 2000. In 1998, Israel proposed gradually eliminating economic aid, which at the time had been fixed at $1.2 billion annually, while increasing the $1.8 billion military aid appropriation by $60 million a year over a ten-year period, a request that Congress accepted. As a consequence, Israel no longer receives direct economic assistance. The ongoing need by Israel for loan guarantees would indicate, however, that it still requires US help. That Congress has made US taxpayers ultimately responsible for paying off these loans should Israel default makes it likely that it would renew economic aid should Israel have problems meeting its loan payments, regardless of the state of the US economy. A second reason is a provision in the aid legislation providing for cash flow financing. This permits Israel to set aside funding for the current year only, rather than the full cost of multiyear purchases. According to the US Government Accounting Office, this obligates Congress to furnish aid in future years to meet subsequent payments.

Another compelling reason that US economic aid to Israel may at some point be resumed would be to protect public and private institutions that have purchased tens of billions of dollars of State of Israel Bonds since 1951, much of them at below-market rates. The bondholders reportedly include 1,700 labor unions that are estimated to have invested $5 billion of their members' pension funds in the bonds—9,500 pension funds overall, involving at least twenty state governments, over 3,500 banks, 1,800 foundations, and 500 insurance companies. Through these sales, Israel has in effect obligated the bondholders to lobby Congress to make sure that Israel's economy remains healthy so their investments will not be jeopardized.

See also AMERICAN JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS; MOSHE DAYAN; SETTLEMENTS; UNITED STATES

Bibliography

Associated Press. "U.S. Military Employs Israeli Technology in Iraq War." USA Today. 24 March 2003.

Blankfort, Jeffrey. "'Let the Public Be Damned': While the Press Is Silent Congress Okays Loans and Increases Aid to Israel." Middle East Labor Bulletin. 4:1 (Winter 1993).

Donadio, Rachel. "Talking the Talk at Jewish Labor Dinner." Forward. 5 March 2002.

Elam, Shraga. "Holocaust Religion and Holocaust Industry in the Service of Israel." State of Nature. Autumn 2005. (Revised version of an article first published in Between the Lines, Jerusalem, February 2001.)

Gibson, Robert W. "Israel: An Economic Ward of U.S." Los Angeles Times. 20 July 1987.

Government of Israel, Ministry of Finance. How the Government of Israel Raises Capital Abroad: Main Instruments. 30 December 2004. www.mof.gov.il/debt/ext/funding.asp.

Mark, Clyde R. Israel: U.S. Foreign Assistance. Washington, DC: Congressional Research Service, 7 March 2005.

Mearsheimer, John, and Stephen Walt. "The Israeli Lobby." London Review of Books. 28:6 (23 March 2006).

Ne'eman, Yuval. Davar 21 June 1991.

Neff, Donald. "De Gaulle Calls Jews Domineering, Israel an Expansionist State." Washington Report on the Middle East. 18:8 (30 November 1999).

O'Brien, Lee. American Jewish Organizations and Israel. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1986.

Urquhart, Conal. "US Acts over Israeli Arms Sales to China." The Guardian. 13 June 2005. www.guardian.co.uk/israel/Story/0,2763,1505209,00.html.

—Jeffrey Blankfort

US Media

See MEDIA, US

USSR

See MOSCOW

---

V

---

Vance, Cyrus Robert (1917–2002)

Cyrus Vance was US secretary of state under President JIMMY CARTER, holding office from 1977 until he resigned in 1980 over a disagreement with a military plan to rescue US citizens held hostage in IRAN. (The plan was implemented and failed.) A lawyer by profession, Vance had been a longtime official in the Department of Defense and a veteran of the JOHN F. KENNEDY and LYNDON JOHNSON administrations (1960–1968). After leaving Carter's cabinet, Vance returned to law practice, but in the early 1990s he participated in diplomatic missions in Croatia and Bosnia.

Vance approached foreign policy with an emphasis on negotiation over conflict, and he had a special interest in arms reduction. However, he had to contend with Carter's national security adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski, who was a hard-line Cold Warrior and tended to view the Middle East through an anti-Soviet and anticommunist prism. The result of the two men's conflicting approaches was that the president's foreign policy tended to be ambiguous.

Soon after assuming office, Carter put forward several ideas about solving the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, none of which pleased Israel, especially the president's statement that the Jewish SETTLEMENTS in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES were "illegal." In 1977 Vance prepared a working paper ahead of scheduled international meetings in Geneva in which he mentioned the need to find a solution to the "problem of REFUGEES," referring to Palestinian refugees. Israel responded by putting forward a proposal about "Jewish refugees" that did not get off the ground, but Vance's initiative failed, mainly because large segments of Jews in both Israel and the UNITED STATES rejected it.

On 1 October 1977 Vance issued a joint communiqué with Soviet foreign minister Andre Gromyko that declared: "The United States and the Soviet Union believe the only right and effective way for achieving a fundamental solution to all aspects of the Middle East problem in its entirety is negotiations within the framework of the Geneva Peace Conference [1973] specially convened for these purposes with participation in its work of the representatives of all the parties involved in the conflict, including those of the Palestinian people, and legal and contractual formalization of the decisions reached at the conference."

The idea of an international peace conference to resolve the Arab-Israeli-Palestinian conflict was not new. UN SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 338, passed during the 1973 OCTOBER WAR, restated UN RESOLUTION 242 (which called for Israel's withdrawal from the Occupied Territories in exchange for an end to the Arab-Israeli conflict) and insisted on such a conference. Former secretary of state HENRY KISSINGER organized the GENEVA CONFERENCE in 1973, albeit in truncated form and substance. Nevertheless, already enraged about the Carter/Vance position on settlements and refugees, Israel was apoplectic about the possibility of convening another international conference and brought great pressure to bear on the administration. In a 4 October 1977 meeting in New York between the president and Israeli foreign minister MOSHE DAYAN, Dayan was able to dissuade Carter from convening the Geneva Conference. Vance strongly objected to the president accepting Dayan's dictates because it undermined the US position issued less than a week before.

Vance and Carter appear to have made a serious attempt to gain PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) acquiescence to the conditions (acceptance of UN Resolutions 242 and 338 and recognition of Israel's right to exist) demanded by Israel of the PLO prior to any negotiations. Because Kissinger had acceded to this condition in 1975 to gain Israel's agreement to the Sinai II accord, it was US "policy." Their efforts ultimately failed, largely because the PLO felt unable to make these major concessions without any expectation of concessions from Israel. The Palestinians specifically objected to Resolution 242 because it did not address them in national terms, referring only to "the refugee problem."

Nevertheless, for most of his years in office, Vance regularly consulted with EDWARD SAID, who was a Palestinian professor of literature at Columbia University, a confidant of PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT, and a member of the PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL. Throughout the Carter administration, Said served as a back-channel link between the White House and the PLO. Said wrote about one such contact: "To take one example of which I have personal knowledge: in the late Seventies, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance asked me to persuade Arafat to accept Resolution 242 with a reservation (accepted by the US) to be added by the PLO which would insist on the national rights of the Palestinian people as well as Palestinian self determination. Vance said that the US would immediately recognize the PLO and inaugurate negotiations between it and Israel. Arafat . . . turned the offer down, as he did similar offers."

Regardless of these failed initiatives, Vance continued to test options about the possibility of the PLO being part of peace negotiations. On 8 November 1977 Vance met with a group of Arab Americans who argued for inclusion of the PLO in any immediate and future negotiations. William Quandt, then the Middle East specialist on the US National Security Council, argued for the meeting between Carter and the Arab Americans, which took place on 15 December 1977. In between these two meetings, Egyptian president Anwar Sadat made his famous trip to JERUSALEM on 19 November 1977 to address the Israeli Knesset, after which the Carter administration's attention focused almost exclusively on finalizing an Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty.

During the Iran hostage crisis of 1980, Arafat, at the request of Vance and with the approval of President Carter, arranged the release of the first thirteen hostages from Tehran. Later, Arafat obtained the bodies of eight US service members killed in Desert One, the failed mission to rescue the hostages. In a 1988 Playboy interview with Arafat about the release of the Iran hostages, Arafat said, "There was a special and permanent contact between me and President Carter." Vance later confirmed that he communicated with Arafat by phone about the hostages. There were also, however, extensive lower-level contacts, especially security liaisons, between Carter administration figures and PLO leaders in LEBANON, where the PLO was headquartered. US ambassador to Lebanon John Gunther Dean was authorized by Vance to contact the PLO in Beirut, and Dean has stated that he met local Palestinian representatives at least forty times. On several occasions, he requested security assistance from the PLO through KHALIL AL-WAZIR (Abu Jihad), a close adviser of Arafat who was later assassinated by Israel.

Together with Carter, Vance brokered the CAMP DAVID ACCORDS in 1979. It must be assumed that he, as did Carter, supported the autonomy plan for Palestinians in that agreement. As a generalization, it is probably fair to say that his views differed little from Carter's on Israel and the Palestinians. Carter believed that the Palestinian problem of statelessness and homelessness was the "core and crux" of the Arab-Israeli conflict and that "no progress" could be achieved without its solution. However, Vance made several statements that provide some insight into his thinking. On 21 March 1980, speaking on behalf of the Carter administration, Vance declared, "US Policy toward the establishment of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Territories is unequivocal and has long been a matter of public record. We consider it to be contrary to INTERNATIONAL LAW, and an impediment to the successful conclusion of the Middle East peace process. . . . Article 49, paragraph 6, of the Fourth Geneva Convention is, in my judgment, and has been in the judgment of each of the legal advisors of the State Department for many, many years, to be . . . that [settlements] are illegal and that [the Convention] applies to the territories."

That Cyrus Vance and Jimmy Carter were unable to translate any of these principles regarding the Palestinians into policy probably had to do with politics—domestic and international.

Bibliography

- "Allon-Vance Statement." London. Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs. 3:210. 11 May 1977. <http://74.125.47.132/search?q=cache:AX5C1wfbYicJ:www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Foreign%2BRelations/Israels%2BForeign%2BRelations%2Bsince%2B1947/1974-1977/+AllonVance+Statement.+London.+Israeli+Ministry+of+Foreign+Affairs.+210.&cd=3&hl=en&ct=clnk&gl=us>.
- Arafat, Yasir. Interview. Playboy Magazine. September 1988.
- Cullen, Bob. "Two Weeks at Camp David." Smithsonian Magazine. September 2003.
- Dean, John Gunther. John Gunther Dean's Oral History. Jimmy Carter Library and Museum. n.d.

- www.jimmycarterlibrary.org/library/oralhistory/cloh/project/dean.phtml.
- Eilts, Hermann, and Samuel W. Lewis. Looking Back, Looking Forward on the 25th Anniversary of the Camp David Accords: Helping a President Broker Peace: Camp David 25 Years Later. Baltimore: School of International Studies, Johns Hopkins University, 2003.
- Feeney, Mark. "The Palestinian Professor: Passionate Voice for Cause in United States, Edward Said Is Caught in Another Firestorm." Boston Globe. 9 September 1999.
- Hagopian, Elaine C. "Ibrahim and Edward." Arab Studies Quarterly. Fall 2004.
- Ignatius, David. "The Secret History of U.S.-PLO Terror Talks." Washington Post. 4 December 1988.
- Lewis, Samuel W. "The Receding Horizon: The Endless Quest for Arab-Israeli Peace." Foreign Affairs. September–October 2004.
- Said, Edward. "The Morning After." London Review of Books. 15:20 (21 October 1993).
- Vance, Cyrus. Hard Choices: Critical Years in America's Foreign Policy. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1983.
- Vance, Cyrus, Secretary of State. Speech before House Committee on Foreign Affairs. Washington, DC: US Government Printing Office, 21 March 1980.

Vanguards of the Popular Liberation War

Vanguards of the Popular Liberation War (Forces of the Lightning Bolt) was a Palestinian political-military organization established in 1966 and led by Tahir Dablan, who had been purged from the Syrian army. It was created by SYRIA'S BA'ATHIST leadership as a counter to the FATAH Party's growing popularity and was Arab-nationalist in orientation. Soon after its formation, it merged with the Syrian sponsored SA'IQA group. At various stages, it allied with the PALESTINE LIBERATION FRONT (within the PLO), which eventually formed the POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE.

Bibliography

- Sayigh, Yezid. Armed Struggle and the Search for State: The Palestinian National Movement, 1949–1993. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1999.

Vanunu, Mordechai (1954–)

Mordechai Vanunu was a technician at Dimona, Israel's nuclear installation, from 1976 to 1985, during which time he discovered that the plant was secretly producing nuclear weapons. In 1986 he provided the London Sunday Times with facts and photos that revealed Israel's NUCLEAR PROGRAM. His evidence showed that Israel had stockpiled up to 200 nuclear warheads, with no public debate or authorization from the Knesset or its citizens. On 30 September 1986 the MOSSAD, the Israeli intelligence agency, lured Vanunu from London to Rome, where he was kidnapped, drugged, and shipped to Israel. On 24 March 1988, after a secret trial, he was convicted of treason, espionage, and revealing state secrets and sentenced to eighteen years of imprisonment, eleven of which he spent in solitary confinement. Although Israel admitted that Vanunu posed no threat to its security, his many applications for parole were denied because of his refusal to acknowledge any guilt, and because the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT consistently rejected appeals against his conviction and sentence.

Born on 13 October 1954 to a religious Jewish family in Morocco, Vanunu immigrated with his family to Israel in 1963. After completing three years of military service, from 1971 to 1974, he began work as a nuclear technician in 1976 at the Nuclear Reactor Centre at Dimona. During 1980–1985 he pursued graduate and postgraduate studies in philosophy and geography, and in 1986 he was baptized in an Anglican church in Sydney, Australia, giving up his Jewish faith.

After he gave his story to the Sunday Times in 1986, he was debriefed by reporters from the Times and by British scientists. In October the Times published Vanunu's story with photographs of Dimona under the title "Revealed: The Secrets of Israel's Nuclear Arsenal." Andrew Neil, then editor of the Sunday Times, has since said this was the most important story that the paper ever carried while he was editor.

After Vanunu's conviction, a small group of Israelis organized the Committee to Free Vanunu, which shortly had support groups throughout the world. These committees organized demonstrations, information campaigns, and petitions, not only to tell Vanunu's story but also to promote a nuclear-free world. Countless international conferences were held on his behalf, many with speakers from the scientific elite. The European Parliament passed resolutions, celebrities held benefits, and Amnesty International called for his immediate and unconditional release. On Vanunu's fortieth birthday, Harold Pinter cut the cake at a special gathering to mark the occasion. In Barcelona

Vanunu was awarded the prestigious Sean McBride Peace Prize. (Israel forbade Vanunu from receiving the prize personally or even from his jail cell.) Norwegian supporters of Vanunu set up a replica of Vanunu's cell with banners along the route followed by replicas of former Peace Prize winners SHIMON PERES and YITZHAK RABIN. In 1995 a British medical delegation went to Israel to visit Vanunu in prison, but Israel refused the delegation permission to see him, and in the same year Professor Joseph Rotblat, at his Nobel Peace Prize acceptance ceremony in Oslo, supported the release of Vanunu.

In March 1998 Vanunu was released from solitary confinement, and, on 10 April 1998, 600 Israeli academics, in an advertisement in the Ha'aretz newspaper, called on the authorities to release Vanunu from prison. At the same time, Committees to Free Vanunu from around the globe presented to the Israeli Embassy in London a petition with 17,280 signatures calling for his immediate and unconditional release.

Vanunu was released from prison on 21 April 2004. He indicated a desire to completely dissociate himself from Israel, initially refused to speak in Hebrew, and planned to move to Europe or the UNITED STATES as soon as the Israeli government would permit him to do so.

A number of restrictions were placed upon Vanunu by Israeli authorities, who gave their reason as fear that he would spread more state secrets. He must inform the authorities of his place of residence and his movements between cities, and he is not allowed to leave the country. These restrictions were extended in April 2006, and then in April 2007, because of his violations of court orders. Although a court found in 2005 that he should be free to travel to the GAZA STRIP and WEST BANK, the 2006 restrictions forbade him to visit either, reversing the court's initial decision. In addition, Vanunu is not allowed to meet with foreigners or to contact them by phone or e-mail, enter or approach any embassy, visit any port of entry, or come within 500 meters of any international border crossing.

Vanunu says that his knowledge of Israel's nuclear program is now completely outdated and that he has nothing more he could possibly reveal that is not already widely known. Despite the stated restrictions, he has freely given interviews to the foreign press, including a live phone interview to BBC Radio Scotland.

In 2004 Vanunu asked the Norwegian government for asylum in that country for "humanitarian reasons." He sent applications for asylum to other countries, saying that he would accept asylum in any country because he fears for his life. NORWAY, SWEDEN, and Ireland all rejected his applications on the grounds that they could not accept his absentee application. An unclassified document from Norway reveals that members of the government considered that granting Vanunu asylum might be seen as an action against Israel and compromise Norway's traditional role as a friend of Israel and a political player in the Middle East. In 2008 the Norwegian Lawyer's Petition for Vanunu was released, which called on the Norwegian government to urgently implement a plan within the framework of international and Norwegian law to allow Vanunu to travel to and live and work in Norway. In 2006 Microsoft was accused of assisting Israeli police in obtaining documents incriminating Vanunu. Court documents reveal that Israeli police had led Microsoft to hand over all the details of his Hotmail e-mail account by suggesting that he was being investigated for espionage. This was done before a court order had been obtained.

In November 2004 Vanunu was arrested by the International Investigations Unit of the Israeli police. The arrest stemmed from an ongoing probe examining suspicions of leaking national secrets and violating court rulings. Police removed papers and a computer from the room he had been renting since his release, and he was put under house arrest for seven days. In December of that year he was apprehended by Israeli police while attempting to enter the West Bank to attend mass at the Church of the Nativity in a vehicle marked as foreign press. After posting bail, he was released into five days of house arrest.

In January 2005 the BBC reported that its JERUSALEM bureau chief, Simon Wilson, had been banned from Israel after he refused to submit materials from an interview with Vanunu, made in defiance of court orders, to the Israeli censors. Wilson was allowed to return to Israel after submitting an apology letter and acknowledging that he had defied the law. On 18 November 2005 Vanunu was arrested at the al-Ram checkpoint north of Jerusalem as he was returning by bus from the West Bank. The Israeli authorities say Vanunu's travel ban includes visits to the Palestinian territories.

Vanunu continues to live under the restrictions on travel and communication renewed by the Israeli authorities. He continues his stance of open opposition, which has led to further arrests. A six-month jail sentence for speaking to foreigners was reduced to three months and remains under appeal as of this writing.

Vanunu has garnered support for his situation from around the world. He received the Right Livelihood Award in 1987, and was given an honorary doctorate by the University of Tromsø in 2001. He was nominated by Joseph Rotblat for the Nobel Peace Prize every year from 1988 to 2004. In September 2004, artist and musician Yoko Ono gave Vanunu a peace prize in memory of her late husband John Lennon, and he received the Peace Prize of the Norwegian People (Folkets fredpris). In December 2004 he was elected, as a statement of solidarity, by the students of the University of Glasgow to serve as rector for three years, despite his confinement in Israel.

Bibliography

- Black, Ian. Israel's Secret Wars: A History of Israel's Intelligence Services. New York: Grove Press, 1992.
- Cohen, Avner. Israel and the Bomb. New York: Columbia University Press, 1999.
- Cohen, Yoel. The Whistleblower of Dimona: Israel, Dimona and the Bomb. Teaneck, NJ: Holmes and Meier Publishers, 2003.
- Committee to Free Mordechai Vanunu. www.vanunu.freeserve.co.uk/index.htm.
- Gaffney, Mark. Dimona: The Third Temple? The Story behind the Vanunu Revelation. Beltsville, MD: Amana Publications, 1989.
- Gilling, Tom, and John McKnight. Trial and Error—Mordechai Vanunu and Israel's Nuclear Bomb. London: Fount, 1995.
- Hounam, Peter. The Woman from Mossad: The Torment of Mordechai Vanunu. London: Vision Paperbacks, 1999.
- Spiro, Gideon. Vanunu and the Israeli Bomb. Tucson, AZ: U.S. Campaign to Free Mordechai Vanunu, 1998.

Vatican

The most important issue for the Vatican in the context of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is the welfare of Roman Catholic adherents in the Holy Land and the HOLY SITES in JERUSALEM and elsewhere, including NAZARETH and BETHLEHEM. For this reason, the Vatican has taken an intense interest in the conflict since its inception—an interest that continues through the present.

The Vatican and Israel and Jews

On 30 December 1993 the Holy See and Israel signed a historic accord. It was not only a question of establishing diplomatic relations between the Vatican and the state of Israel, but also a change in the long and painful relations between Catholicism and Judaism. Jewish organizations and institutions had been lobbying intensely for years for such a formal accord, arguing that only the Vatican's recognition of Israel could atone for centuries of ANTI-SEMITISM. From Israel's perspective, the absence of diplomatic relations between the Holy See and Israel constituted a serious breach in its quest for international legitimacy and was an obstacle in the dialogue between the Catholic Church and the Jewish people, and in efforts to improve that relationship.

In its preamble, the accord speaks of being "conscious of the special nature of the relations between the Catholic Church and the Jewish people, and of the historic process of reconciliation and development within a framework of mutual understanding and friendship between Catholics and Jews."

The attitude of the Catholic Church toward the Jews, motivated by deeply rooted theological considerations, first began to be modified under the influence of Pope John XXIII, who instilled a new orientation as one of the first acts of his papacy. In 1959, on the first Good Friday after his election to the papacy, he ordered the expression "perfidious Jews" to be deleted from the prayers of that holy day. The Second Vatican Council, also initiated by Pope John and completed under the papacy of Paul VI, approved in the 1965 Nostra Aetate Declaration, which affirmed that "Jews were most dear to God and that a great spiritual patrimony was shared by Christians and Jews." Nostra Aetate delegitimized the deicide accusation and rejected the doctrine that there is a collective indictment against the Jews because of Christ's crucifixion. Hatred toward the Jews was judged to be incompatible with the doctrine of the church. An important milestone in the relationship between the church and the Jewish people, Nostra Aetate paved the way for a constructive dialogue that gradually led to a better mutual understanding and to a change of attitude.

In the meantime, important gestures were made by the Catholic Church, most particularly the visit by Pope John Paul II to the Great Synagogue in Rome in April 1986—the first visit made by a pope to a synagogue. There he declared, "You are our brothers and, in a certain way, our dearly beloved older brothers." It was the first time any pope had made such a gesture of fraternity. The distance separating Vatican City from the Great Synagogue in Rome is a few hundred meters, but many centuries had to pass before it was crossed. There were other gestures, such as the declaration made by Pope John Paul II in 1980 when he stated, "The Jewish people, after the tragic experiences linked to the slaughter of many of its sons and daughters, motivated by a desire for security, established the State of Israel." In 1984 the pope demanded for the Jewish people in Israel "the desired security and tranquility that are the prerogative of every nation, as well as required conditions for the life and progress of every society." In 1987 he declared, "The Jews have a right to nationhood, as do all other peoples, according to INTERNATIONAL LAW."

The definitive turning point in the attitude of the Holy See came about as an outcome of the dramatic changes in the international order resulting from the breakdown of communism, the GULF WAR, and, above all, the MADRID CONFERENCE, which set in motion the peace process between Arabs and Israelis. This process, which brought Arabs and Israelis to the negotiating table, created a climate in which the Vatican was more disposed to relations with Israel. On 29 July 1992, the state of Israel and the Holy See agreed to set up a joint working commission to discuss bilateral topics of mutual interest with a view to normalizing relations. The commission was to deal with matters such as relations between the state of Israel and the church and cooperation in the fight against racism and anti-Semitism. Intensive negotiations continued until 29 December 1993. The following day the Fundamental Agreement was signed in Jerusalem.

Although the agreement contains no specific provisions concerning relations between Christians and Jews, it does not ignore the problematic historical backdrop to these relations, referred to in the preamble as the "nature of the relationship between the Catholic Church and the Jewish people," and the historic process of reconciliation between the two. One of the most important points in this context is Article 2, which refers to cooperation in the fight against anti-Semitism. From the Israeli point of view, in light of the history of Catholic-Jewish relations, the shared aspiration to combat "all forms of anti-Semitism and all kinds of racism and of religious intolerance" is one of the most significant achievements of the agreement.

The Vatican and the Palestinians

Because of the Christian Palestinian minority in Israel and occupied Palestinian territories, the Holy See has tended to be most concerned with the fate of the Palestinians, and not only Roman Catholics but all Palestinian Christians. Indeed, since the creation of the state of Israel, the Vatican has adopted a sympathetic stance toward the Palestinian people, regardless of their faith and including Muslims.

Historically Muslim relations with the Roman Catholic Church have been as troubled as those with Jews. The Crusades, a series of nine religiously sanctioned military campaigns (with the official blessing of the Pope), over a period of nearly 200 years between 1095 and 1291, were waged mainly against Muslims and had the goal of recapturing Jerusalem and the Holy Land from Muslim rule. Not until the 1965 Nostra Aetate Declaration, in which the church sought peace and forgiveness from the Jews, were Muslims ever acknowledged by the church, and even in that Papal Nuncio they were given far less specific apologies than the Jews. Notably, the question of Islam was not on the agenda when Nostra Aetate was first drafted, or even at the opening of the Second Vatican Council; however, pressure from Middle Eastern bishops led to two references to Islam in the final document: (1) "The Church regards with esteem also the Moslems. They adore the one God, living and subsisting in Himself; merciful and all-powerful, the Creator of heaven and earth, who has spoken to men; they take pains to submit wholeheartedly to even His inscrutable decrees, just as Abraham, with whom the faith of Islam takes pleasure in linking itself, submitted to God. . . . In addition, they await the day of judgment when God will render their deserts to all those who have been raised up from the dead. Finally, they value the moral life and worship God especially through prayer, almsgiving and fasting." (2) "Over the centuries many quarrels and dissensions have arisen between Christians and Muslims. The sacred Council now pleads with all to forget the past, and urges that a sincere effort be made to achieve mutual understanding; for the benefit of all men, let them together preserve and promote peace, liberty, social justice and moral values.” Additionally, the second Vatican Council declares that “the plan of salvation also includes Muslims, due to their professed monotheism.” Nevertheless, in anticipation of the possible emergence of a Palestinian state that might have control over the church’s holy sites, the Vatican undertook several initiatives to ensure that its interests would be protected.

In the 1980s, when the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) transformed its objective away from ARMED STRUGGLE to retake all of Palestine into a TWO-STATE SOLUTION, recognized Israel’s right to exist, and sought a peaceful resolution of the conflict, the Vatican openly spoke about Palestinian rights and began to establish contacts with PLO leaders. PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT met with the pope nine times at the Vatican. After the eruption of the First INTIFADA in 1987, Pope John-Paul II took the historic decision of appointing a Palestinian monsignor, Michel Sabbah, as Latin patriarch of Jerusalem. The Vatican’s position on Jerusalem has been consistent since 1948: it views East Jerusalem as part of the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES to which UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION 242 applies and thus considers it inadmissible to acquire territory by force.

The Vatican is the only Christian institution possessing an international legal personality and the right to deal with states as equals. As such, in October 1998 the Vatican undertook a direct intervention in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict at a symposium for representatives of Catholic bishops’ conferences from around the world, held in Jerusalem under the auspices of Patriarch Sabbah. Addressing this gathering, the secretary for the Holy See’s relations with states (in effect the Vatican’s foreign minister), Archbishop Jean-Louis Tauran, reaffirmed that the Vatican adhered “to the position of the majority in the international community, as expressed . . . in the pertinent UN resolutions,” and had “the right and duty” to remind the parties “of the obligation to resolve controversies peacefully, in accordance with the principles of justice and equity within the international legal framework,” that is, a two-state solution and UN Resolution 181 declaring that Jerusalem remain a unified, open city under permanent UN trusteeship. He declared that Israel’s OCCUPATION of Jerusalem is “a case of manifest international injustice . . . brought about and maintained by force. . . . East Jerusalem is illegally occupied.”

In this statement, Tauran is clearly affirming that the Vatican considers Israel’s military occupation an unjustified use of force that is illegal per se, quite apart from any particular crimes committed by the Occupation authorities. This conclusion has far-reaching implications, not least of them being that under Article 53 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, which outlaws agreements that violate fundamental norms of international law, any treaty purporting to legitimize continued Israeli occupation of Palestinian territories or the illegal consequences of such occupation would automatically be void.

In Rome on 15 February 2000, the Vatican signed a historic agreement with the PLO that made clear the Vatican’s position vis-à-vis Jerusalem lest any party exploit the pope’s planned visit the following month to the Holy Land for partisan purposes. The Vatican-PLO accord reiterated the Holy See’s view that “an equitable solution for Jerusalem” must be based on “international legality and UN resolutions,” which are a condition for “a comprehensive and lasting peace in the Middle East.” In the accord, the Vatican considered all “unilateral measures” that alter the status and DEMOGRAPHY of Jerusalem to be “morally and legally unacceptable.” In Vatican discourse, it should be noted that the word morally is more powerful than legally. In essence, the Vatican believes that there are two national aspirations to be satisfied and three religious rights to be respected in Jerusalem.

The Vatican-PLO accord also sought to secure the rights of the Roman Catholic Church in a future Palestinian state, protect Christian freedom of religion, and assert the legal status of Christian churches. By formally lending its moral authority to the Palestinian cause, the church secured commitments for legal rights and religious freedom for Christians in an eventual Palestinian state—guarantees that the Vatican has not succeeded in obtaining from existing Muslim countries. The agreement also recognizes the “inalienable national legitimate rights and aspirations of the Palestinian people.” It also requires Palestinian leaders to recognize the rights and privileges of the church. In itself, the document put in writing what had been church policy since the Vatican established official relations with the PLO in 1994.

Israel responded to the PLO-Vatican accord by summoning the Vatican’s envoy in Israel to a meeting at the Foreign Ministry. A statement from the ministry expressed "great displeasure" with the declaration in Rome, "which includes the issue of Jerusalem and other issues which are the subjects of Israeli-Palestinian negotiations on permanent status." The statement said the agreement was a regrettable intervention in the talks between Israel and the Palestinians. Church experts say that Israel forced the Vatican's hand by making no provisions to safeguard church property and rights in its previous agreements that turned over LAND to Palestinian control. In addition, the Vatican was alarmed by a 1999 Israeli decision to allow Muslim leaders to build a mosque next to the NAZARETH BASILICA OF THE ANNUNCIATION.

See also CHRISTIANITY; THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT

Bibliography

- Breger, Marshall J. The Vatican-Israel Accords: Political, Legal, and Theological Contexts. Notre Dame, IN: University of Notre Dame Press, 2004.
- Holy See and Palestine Liberation Organization. "The PLO-Vatican Agreement (February 15, 2000)." Jewish Virtual Library. n.d. www.jewishvirtuallibrary.org/jsource/Peace/plovatican.html.
- Israel and Holy See. Fundamental Agreement between the Holy See and the State of Israel, December 30, 1993. Israel Ministry of Foreign Affairs. n.d. www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/MFAArchive/1990\_1999/1993/12/Fundamental+Agreement+-+Israel-Holy+See.htm.
- Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs. Jerusalem Letter: Israel's Relations with the Vatican. Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs. No. 401. 1 March 1999.
- Kreutz, Andrej. Vatican Policy on the Palestinian-Israeli Conflict: The Struggle for the Holy Land. Westport, CT: Greenwood Publishing Group, 1990.
- Ott, David. "The Church and the Status of Jerusalem." Middle East International. 26 March 1999.
- Pope Paul VI. Declaration on the Relation of the Church to Non-Christian Religions, Nostra Aetate, Proclaimed by His Holiness Pope Paul VI, on October 28, 1965. Vatican: The Holy See, n.d. www.vatican.va/archive/hist\_councils/ii\_vatican\_council/documents/vat-ii\_decl\_19651028\_nostra-aetate\_en.html.
- Safieh, Afif. "An Interview with Afif Safieh Conducted by Graham Usher." Jerusalem Quarterly File. 16 February 2000.
- Second Vatican Council. Declaration Nostra Aetate (On the Relationship of the Church to Non-Christian Religions). Center for Catholic-Jewish Learning. 1965. http://www.kings.uwo.ca/ccjl/academic\_resources/researchers\_students/official\_catholic/nostra\_aetate/.
- Stanley, Alessandra. "Vatican and P.L.O. Sign Pact Guaranteeing the Church's Rights." New York Times. 16 February 2000.
- Voll, Fritz. A Short Review of a Troubled History. International Council of Christians and Jews. n.d. <http://www.jcrelations.net/en/?is=836>.

Venice Declaration, 1980

The European Community (EC) issued the Venice Declaration in the wake of the US-brokered CAMP DAVID ACCORDS between EGYPT and Israel to signal its intention to play a more active role in the search for a more comprehensive approach to peacemaking in the Middle East. According to the declaration, "the traditional ties and common interests which link Europe to the Middle East oblige [the EC members] to play a special role" in the pursuit of regional peace. The formulation of the declaration was in itself a milestone in the EC's quest for a common foreign policy.

The declaration, however, was condemned by Israel, since it made explicit Europe's sympathy for the Palestinian cause. On the basis of UN SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTIONS 242 AND 338, which called for Israel's withdrawal from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES in exchange for an end to the Arab-Israeli conflict, as well as positions expressed by the EC on several previous occasions, the declaration stated that "the time has come to promote the recognition and implementation of the two principles universally accepted by the international community; the right to existence and to security of all the states in the region, including Israel, and justice for all the peoples, which implies the recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people."

The declaration went on to state that the Palestinian problem was not simply one of REFUGEES, but that the Palestinian people must be able to "exercise fully their right to self-determination" and that the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) would have to be associated with the peace negotiations, from which it had been previously excluded. Further, the EC stressed that it would "not accept any unilateral initiative designed to change the status of JERUSALEM" and that "[Jewish] SETTLEMENTS as well as modifications in population and property in the occupied Arab territories are illegal under INTERNATIONAL LAW."

In the aftermath, the EC made only half-hearted attempts to follow up the declaration with action. In part, efforts were stymied by opposition to the initiative from Israel, Egypt, and the UNITED STATES and their preference for the bilateral Camp David process. Israel's reaction to the Venice

Declaration was particularly negative. Two days after it was issued, the Israeli cabinet issued a statement: “Nothing will remain of the Venice decision but a bitter memory. The decision calls on us and other nations to bring into the peace process that Arab SS which calls itself ‘the Palestine Liberation Organization.’ . . . All men of goodwill in Europe, all men who revere liberty, will see this document as another Munich-like capitulation to totalitarian blackmail and a spur to all those seeking to undermine the Camp David Accords and derail the peace process in the Middle East.”

The EC’s move toward a more forthright endorsement of the Palestinian right to self-determination and of PLO involvement in peace negotiations progressed slowly. Beginning in December 1987, its response to the INTIFADA caused much adverse publicity for Israel in the EC. In November 1988 the EC formally welcomed the PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL’s (PNC) decision to accept UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338 as a basis for an international conference, which implied, for the EC, “the acceptance of the right of existence and of security of all the states of the region, including Israel.” The EC also welcomed the PNC’s renunciation of TERRORISM.

Nevertheless, Israel remained critical of all EC statements in support of Palestinian rights. In January 1989, for example, Israeli prime minister YITZHAK SHAMIR told the chairman of the European Parliament that it was difficult to conceive of the Europeans as participants in the political process in the Middle East because the EC had demonstrated a pro-Palestinian bias.

See also EUROPEAN UNION; FRANCE; GERMANY; SCANDINAVIAN COUNTRIES

Bibliography

- European Union. “Venice Declaration on the Middle East. Venice European Council, 12-13 June 1980.” United Nations Information System on the Question of Palestine. n.d. <http://domino.un.org/unispal.nsf/0/fe015e8b1a1e5a685256d810059d922?OpenDocument>.
- Hollis, Rosemary. Venice Declaration, June 1980: The Union and the Arab-Israeli Conflict: From Venice to Madrid. Ramallah, West Bank: Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs, 1992.

Village Leagues

In 1978 the Israeli government of Prime Minister MENAHEM BEGIN and Defense Minister ARIEL SHARON implemented the Village Leagues, which were composed of local Palestinians—village heads, or mukhtars—who worked as COLLABORATORS with Israel’s new CIVIL ADMINISTRATION. The project was intended to counter and undermine Palestinian nationalism and local support for the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) and to pacify Palestinian opposition to the massive Jewish SETTLEMENT drive undertaken by Begin and Sharon.

Hebrew University professor Menahem Milson established the first Village League in HEBRON, in the WEST BANK, in 1978, headed by MUSTAFA DUDIN, after which additional leagues were created in other West Bank villages during the early 1980s. Milson and the Israeli leadership expected the leagues to foster a local and moderate collaborationist Palestinian leadership that would mediate Israel’s relationship with Palestinian residents. Their objective was to shift the identity and loyalty of Palestinians away from the PLO to a group of community pro-Israel Palestinian leaders. Through a series of military orders issued during the early 1980s, the Village Leagues were authorized by Israel to arrest and detain political activists and establish armed militias, as well as to carry out other tasks, such as issuing (or not issuing) PERMITS. For example, if a Palestinian wanted to obtain a permit to allow family members abroad to visit him or to repair a well or extend a house, he would be more likely to receive it if he cooperated with the Village Leagues and asked for their assistance.

The idea for the Village Leagues came after the 1976 Israeli-sponsored Palestinian municipal elections in the West Bank and GAZA STRIP brought pro-PLO politicians to power. Given its expansive settlement plans, Israel felt the need for a new method of dealing with the Palestinian population under OCCUPATION. It was Milson’s job to somehow undo the results of those elections and radically alter Palestinian political culture. Based on the Egyptian-Israeli CAMP DAVID ACCORDS, the Palestinians were to have “limited autonomy” under a “Civil Administration.” However, although the Civil Administration represented Israeli government offices to the Palestinian population in the territories, the Israeli military continued to operate throughout the territories, monitoring the Palestinians and providing security for Israel and the settlers.

Milson believed that through a series of carrots and sticks he could create a class of collaborators in the territories who would participate in the autonomy program. Indeed, he was convinced that the 70 percent of the population in the West Bank who did not live in the main towns but in the small villages were more parochial, conservative, less politicized, and easier to manipulate. Much to Milson's surprise, however, many of the traditional village notables and the rural intelligentsia refused to join an organization that had the declared aim of extinguishing Palestinian nationalism, and the Palestinian people overwhelmingly supported the PLO. Their refusal to accept Village Leagues ultimately led to the demise of the project. Palestinians viewed the leaders of the Village Leagues as oppressors and collaborators, and the caliber of the people recruited by Israel was often criminal and usually not very bright. A poll conducted by PORI, an Israeli opinion research organization, revealed that 86 percent of Palestinians wanted an independent state run by the PLO (98 percent wanted an independent state) and that local pro-PLO figures were highly popular, whereas Mustafa Dudin and other village leaguers achieved 0.2 percent support.

To counter the influence of the PLO and force the Palestinians to accept autonomy, Sharon attempted to support Milson through other measures. He outlawed the NATIONAL GUIDANCE COMMITTEE (NGC), which was established in 1978 and had led the campaign against the Camp David Accords, the Civil Administration, and the Village Leagues. Sharon also dismissed the elected mayors of al-Bireh, NABLUS, Hebron, JENIN, and Ramallah, who won their positions in the Israeli-run elections of 1976 because they declined to have a meeting with Milson, whom they refused to recognize. To justify the dismissal of democratically elected Palestinian officials, Milson claimed, on 26 March, that the 1976 elections "were not democratic elections, these were elections held under TERRORISM, intimidation, bribery."

None of Sharon's measures, however, helped to weaken support for the PLO in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES or to gain support for the Village Leagues. The Village Leagues were dealt another blow on 9 March 1982 when the Jordanian government announced that all members of the leagues were traitors. Sharon finally concluded that the only way to destroy the will of the West Bank Palestinians was to strike at the heart of the PLO in Beirut, its headquarters in exile. This was one of the major objectives of the LEBANON WAR in 1982. Its objective was to destroy and disperse the PLO in order to create a political vacuum into which, he thought, the Village Leagues could expand. However, even after the PLO's destruction in Beirut, West Bank and Gaza Strip Palestinians still supported it. Milson may or may not have agreed with Sharon's thinking regarding LEBANON, but by 1982 he was convinced that his experiment was a failure, resigned his position, and went back to the university. The INTIFADA that erupted in December 1987 marked the definitive end to the Village Leagues.

Bibliography

- Be'er, Yizhar, and Dr. Saleh 'Abdel-Jawad. Collaborators in the Occupied Territories: Human Rights Abuses and Violations. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 1994.
- Gee, John. We've Been Here Before. London: Council for Advancement of Arab British Understanding Information and Press Library, 2002.
- Gorenberg, Gershom. "A Belief in Force: Ariel Sharon's Plan for Palestine Has Remained Constant—and Unworkable—for Decades." The American Prospect. 8 April 2002.
- "Iron Fist on the West Bank." Views from Abroad. Journal of Palestine Studies. 11:1 (1981).
- Litani, Yehuda. "Village Leagues: What Kind of Carrot?" Journal of Palestine Studies. 11:3 (1982).
- Milson, Menahem. "How Not to Occupy the West Bank." Commentary. 81:4 (1986).
- . "How to Make Peace with the Palestinians." Commentary. May 1981.
- Sakhnini, Nizar. "Village Leagues." Al-Bushra. 28 December 1999. www.al-bushra.org/palestine/nizar.htm.
- Tamari, Salim. "Eyeless in Judea: Israel's Strategy of Collaborators and Forgeries." Middle East Report. 164–165 (1990).
- . "In League with Zion: Israel's Search for a Native Pillar." Journal of Palestine Studies. 12:4 (1983).

Villages, Destruction of (1948–1949)

The Nakba of 1948–1949 consisted not only of the flight of some 750,000 to 800,000 Palestinians but also the wholesale destruction of their LAND, orchards, citrus groves, olive trees, and most importantly their villages. In the words of Israeli scholar Ilan Pappé, "The countryside, the rural heart of Palestine, with its picturesque one thousand villages was ruined. Half of the villages were erased from the face of the earth, run over by Israeli bulldozers at work since August 1948 when the government decided either to turn them into cultivated land or to build new Jewish settlements on their ruins.”

Meron Benvenisti, scholar and former deputy mayor of JERUSALEM, writes, “Early in June 1948 the demolition of villages took on the character of a political mission whose objective was to block the return of the REFUGEES to their homes. . . . The destruction of the Arab villages was the key to preventing this return and was, along with the cultivation of the abandoned land and the establishment of Jewish settlements, supposed to ensure that the ‘miraculous exodus’ would indeed become ‘retroactive TRANSFER.’”

Israel destroyed more than 400 villages through a variety of means: by setting fire to them, blowing them up, planting mines in their debris, and especially bulldozing and razing them. Military attacks on Palestinian villages began as early as December 1947 and continued through 1949 (and after); however, as time went on, numerous other groups became involved in the destruction. Benvenisti points at the TRANSFER COMMITTEE, ISRAEL LANDS ADMINISTRATION, Department of Public Works, and what he terms “Zionist mercenaries,” that is, traditional KIBBUTZ leaders who wanted more land for themselves.

The numbers of villages destroyed by district were (Arabic name followed by Hebrew): Akka (ACRE) District, 26 villages; Bysan District, 29 villages; Beer As Sab (Beersheba) District, 3 villages; Ghazzah (GAZA) District, 45 villages; HAIFA District, 48 villages; Al-Khalil (HEBRON) District, 16 villages; Yaffa (JAFFA) District, 23 villages; Al-Quds (Jerusalem) District, 38 villages; Jinin (JENIN) District, 6 villages; An Naasirah (NAZARETH) District, 4 villages; Al-Ramla (Ramallah) District, 58 villages; SAFED (Safad) District, 67 villages; Tabariyya (TIBERIAS) District, 25 villages; Tulkarim District, 17 villages.

By the end of 1949 approximately 20 percent of new Israeli settlements were built over destroyed villages; by 1952 there were some seventy Jewish settlements in destroyed villages. At the same time Arab village names disappeared and were replaced by Hebrew ones. As much as possible, everything Palestinian was erased—as if it had never existed. MOSHE DAYAN made a famous speech before students at the Israeli Institute of Technology (here repeated by Amos Elon quoting Ha'aretz, 4 April 1969): “Jewish villages were built in the place of Arab villages. You do not even know the names of these Arab villages, and I don’t blame you because geography books no longer exist, not only do the books not exist, the Arab villages are not there either. Nahlal arose in the place of Mahlul, Kibbutz Gvat in the place of Jibta, Kibbutz Sarid in the place of Huneifis, and Kefar Yehush’a in the place of Tal al-Shuman. There is not one single place built in this country that did not have a former Arab population.”

The Committee of Namin renamed the new settlement of Lavi from its Arabic Lubyā. Safuria became Zipori. DAVID BEN-GURION, the first prime minister of Israel, explained that this was done as part of an attempt to prevent future claims to these villages. It was also an act supported by the Israeli archaeologists, who had authorized the names not as a takeover of a title but rather as poetic justice that returned to “ancient Israel” its old map. From the Bible they salvaged geographical names and attached them to the destroyed villages.

See also TRANSFER COMMITTEE; WAR, 1948; YOSEF WEITZ

Bibliography

- Abu-Sitta, Slamon H. Atlas of Palestine, 1948. London: Palestine Land Society, 2004.
- . The Palestinian Nakba 1948: The Register of Depopulated Localities in Palestine. London: Palestinian Return Centre, 2000.
- Benvenisti, Meron. Sacred Landscapes: The Buried History of the Holy Land since 1948. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2002.
- Elon, Amos. “Israelis and Palestinians: What Went Wrong.” New York Review of Books. 49:20 (2002).
- Falah, Ghazi. “The 1948 Israeli Palestinian War and Its Aftermath.” Annals of the Association of American Geographers. 86:2 (1996).
- Gertz, Nurith. Captive of a Dream: National Myths in Israeli Culture. (Hebrew). Tel Aviv: Am Oved Publishers, 1995.
- Kana’aneh, Sharif. “The Eradication of the Arab Character of Palestine and the Process of Judaization That Accompanied It.” (Arabic). In Palestinian Folk Heritage: Roots and Challenges. Edited by A. Abut Hadaba. Taibeh, Israel: Center for the Revival of Arab Heritage, 1991.
- Khalidi, Walid. All That Remains: The Palestinian Villages Occupied and Depopulated by Israel in 1948. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1992.
- Morris, Benny. The Birth of the Palestinian Refugee Problem Revisited, 2nd ed. London: Cambridge University Press, 2004.

Pappé, Ilan. The Ethnic Cleansing of Palestine. Blue Ridge Summit, PA: Oneworld Publications, 2007.

Rubinstine, Danny. The People of Nowhere: The Palestinian Vision of Home. New York: Random House, 1991.

Segev, Tom. 1949: The First Israelis. New York: Owl Books, 1998.

Slyomovics, Susan. The Object of Memory: Arab and Jew Narrate the Palestinian Village. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1998.

Virtual Beis Hamikdash

See THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT

---

W

---

Wadi Juz

Wadi Juz is a Palestinian neighborhood located at the head of the Kidron Valley, just north of the OLD CITY in the heart of East JERUSALEM. With a population of approximately 7,400 in 2006, it is one of the many Palestinian neighborhoods that Israel has targeted for Judaization, that is, forcing out the Palestinian residents and filling the area with Jews. The last Palestinian mayor of Jerusalem, Rawhi Khatib, moved the Industrial Zone from Nablus Road to Wadi Juz; however, the site chosen for the Industrial Zone was located on twelve dunums (three acres) of private waqf land. The redrawing of the city's urban map in 1967 led to a business boom in the Industrial Zone that lasted into the late 1980s. Wadi Juz became a main thoroughfare, and Israelis made up 70 percent of the customers. The costs of setting up a garage in Wadi Juz were significantly lower than elsewhere, which led several Israelis to establish garages there. The construction of new ROAD systems, particularly Highway 1, isolated the Industrial Zone, but it was the First INTIFADA that had the most significant impact on business. Israeli customers stayed away, partly from fear and partly because of the limited services available during the frequent and unpredictable strike days. What had made Wadi Juz a success were its flexible, informal labor practices and the fact that the garages could fix a car for half the price in half the time of the garages in West Jerusalem. Today garage owners and mechanics in the Industrial Zone are struggling to survive and face destruction of the entire zone.

In 1984, Jerusalem's mayor TEDDY KOLLEK (1965 to 1993) thought it would be good public relations for the city to refurbish the neighborhood and told his adviser on Arab affairs: "I want to clean the mess up in Wadi Juz [the Industrial Zone]. You should make getting this done a top priority." The mayor wanted the dozens of small factories and garages moved out of Wadi Juz and the area redeveloped with homes, hotels, and commercial space. Nothing ever came of the mayor's plan because the Israeli government refused funding for it, choosing instead to redevelop Mamilla, a poor Jewish neighborhood in West Jerusalem. When ARIEL SHARON was minister of housing (1990–1992) under the government of Prime Minister YITZHAK SHAMIR, he drew up a plan to evict all the residents from Wadi Juz to make way for Jewish development. Although he ran into legal difficulties that kept his plan from moving forward, in October 1990 Sharon met with Matti Dan, head of the ATERET COHANIM settlement group, and Meir Davidson, who worked closely with Dan, and ordered that Arab homes and lands, including those in Wadi Juz, be placed under the authority of the CUSTODIAN OF ABSENTEE PROPERTY and "sold" to Ateret Cohanim, ELAD, and ATARA L'YOSHNA. The following year, 1991, Sharon institutionalized the East Jerusalem settlement project by establishing a special settlement committee to oversee the acquisition of Arab properties and their transfer to the settler groups. Matti Dan was especially interested in constructing a large Jewish housing project in Wadi Juz. It called for, among other things, the Ma'amuniya Arab girls' school then under construction to be part of the Jewish neighborhood instead.

In 1993 Prime Minister YITZHAK RABIN appointed a committee headed by Haim Klugman to investigate illegal transfers of government money to East Jerusalem settlers. The results were confirmed within the year in the KLUGMAN REPORT, which analysts Cheshin, Hutman, and Melamed recount: "the government worked behind the scenes to support settlers in East Jerusalem. From SILWAN and the Old City to the Mount of Olives and Wadi Juz, millions of dollars of State funds have been used by the settlers to acquire Arab homes. . . . In other cases, the settlement activists, with the support of state officials, took advantage of outdated legislation—the ABSENTEE PROPERTY LAW of 1950—to take over Arab homes and evict their Arab residents." Rabin did not react decisively to the report, and, although the settlers were slowed for a time, they eventually continued with their work unabated.

The process of Judaization began in Wadi Juz in 1995, when the West Jerusalem Municipality

(WJM) outlined plans to move the Wadi Juz industrial zone to Qalandia because an Israeli shareholder company wanted to take over that site. When completed, this relocation of the Industrial Zone will lead to a significant upsurge in unemployment for Palestinians. In March 1995, when the Israeli government first announced that the Housing Ministry planned to build seventy-two housing units in Wadi Juz, Jewish settlers marched through the neighborhood chanting “death to Arabs.” Shortly thereafter, some 1,000 settlers in Wadi Juz demonstrated, vandalized cars, and chanted anti-Arab slogans. On 27 November 1997 Israel demolished Samir Hijazi’s home in Wadi Juz. This was the first complete housing demolition in the neighborhood, although in 1967 the 400-year-old agricultural residence (qasr) of the Khatib family was demolished.

Moving the Wadi Juz Industrial Zone to Qalandia, about eight kilometers (five miles) from the Jerusalem city limits, is fraught with problems. Qalandia is a village and a REFUGEE camp in the WEST BANK that connects Jerusalem with Ramallah. In 2001 the authorities constructed a CHECKPOINT at Qalandia, which by 2005 had been transformed into a massive system of cement walls, gates, and lanes marking the northern entrance to Jerusalem. According to B’Tselem: “Jewish settlers bypass the Qalandia checkpoint altogether, entering the city through alternate roads, but all West Bank Palestinians must transit it and Palestinians from Jerusalem wishing to go to Qalandia or elsewhere in the West Bank must also pass through this checkpoint. In order to pass, all Palestinians must have special PERMITS, few of which are issued. Absurdly, it is also located inside the territory of annexed East Jerusalem, such that Qalandia serves as the transit point for traffic within Jerusalem and traffic within the West Bank.”

In June 2003 Uri Lupolianski was elected mayor of Jerusalem. He had previously served as deputy mayor and chairperson of the Planning and Building Committee, and he remained a member of the National Building and Planning Committee and the Committee for the Development of Holy Places. In March 2004 the Israeli magazine Yerushalaim reported that Israel’s Regional Planning Committee had approved plans for a new Jewish neighborhood of 190 dwellings plus a park in the Wadi Juz area. In September 2004 Mayor Lupolianski announced plans to rezone a section of Wadi Juz, in the eastern part of the neighborhood, to settle Jews in the area.

In a letter sent to the Housing Ministry, Lupolianski wrote, “Zoning the neighborhood for a Jewish population is likely to contribute significantly to the unification of the city because we are dealing with a neighborhood that lies between Mount Scopus and the Old City, in [its] eastern section. . . . The neighborhood is located below Hebrew University, while the homes of the neighborhood are slated to overlook the main road to MA’ALE ADUMIM [SETTLEMENT] on the one side, and the Emek Tzurim national park on the other. In light of this and for security reasons too, I believe that the neighborhood should be zoned for a Jewish population. This will ensure the safety of those traveling on the road to Ma’ale Adumin on the one hand, as well as the safety of the visitors to the national park on the other, thereby helping with the development of the park as part of the national park in the Old City basin.”

In 2007 the Jerusalem Municipality demolished the Center for Autistic and Special Needs Children in Wadi Juz. The demolition was carried out according to the final decision of the district court. The center hosted children for two-week special stays and was an afternoon daycare center. It is important to note that all special education schools in the east of the city are located in the Wadi Juz area. This center was the only service provider in the entire East Jerusalem area providing for the special needs and therapy for autistic, handicapped, or challenged children.

Again in June 2008 the Jerusalem Post reported that the “Jerusalem Municipality plans to build tens of thousands of new apartments in the city [including in Wadi Juz], including a couple thousand flats in various Jewish neighborhoods of east Jerusalem, has received final approval.” It would seem, then, that after twenty years of planning the Jewish neighborhood in Wadi Juz, only now is the project being implemented. Given the success that various settler groups have had over the past fifteen years in implanting Jewish colonies in Palestinian neighborhoods, it is an open question why it took so long at Wadi Juz.

See also HOLY SITES IN PALESTINE; SETTLER GROUPS AND SETTLEMENTS, EAST JERUSALEM

Bibliography

Applied Research Institute–Jerusalem. Expanding Jewish Presence on the Old City of Jerusalem.

- Jerusalem: Applied Research Institute—Jerusalem, 1998.
- . The Status of Jerusalem Reconstructed: Israel's Unilateral Actions Determine the Future of Jerusalem. Jerusalem: Applied Research Institute—Jerusalem, ca. 1998.
- B'Tselem. A Wall in Jerusalem: Obstacles to Human Rights in the Holy City. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, the Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, 2006.
- Cheshin, Amir S., Bill Hutman, and Avi Melamed. Separate and Unequal: The Inside Story of Israeli Rule in East Jerusalem. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1999.
- Habash, Dalia. "Wadi al-Juz: In Focus." Jerusalem Quarterly File. 1:1 (1998).
- Haberman, Clyde. "Israelis Are Rushing to Build a Greater Jerusalem." New York Times. 19 February 1994.
- Houk, Marian. "Atarot and the Fate of the Jerusalem Airport." The Jerusalem Quarterly 35. (Autumn 2008).
- Land Research Center. "Israel Continues to Build Illegal Settlements in Occupied Jerusalem." Applied Research Institute—Jerusalem. 30 October 2004.
- Lefkovits, Etgar. "Plan to Build Apartments for Jews in East Jerusalem Okayed: Units Are Part of Building Plan for Nearly 40,000 Apartments in Capital." Jerusalem Post. 16 June 2008.
- Rouhana, Kate B. The Reality of Jerusalem's Palestinians Today. Jerusalem: Jerusalem Media and Communication Center, 2001.
- Rwaidy, Ahmad. The Israeli Restrictions on Arab Presence and Promotion of Jewish Presence in Jerusalem. Jerusalem: Jerusalem Center for Women, 1997.
- Schwartz, Michael. "Collusion in Jerusalem: How the Government and the Settlers Conspire to Take Over Houses and Land." Challenge: A Jerusalem Magazine on the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict. 50 (July–August 1998).
- Shragai, Nadav. "Lupolianski Wants Arab Wadi Juz Rezoned for Jews." Ha'aretz. 24 September 2004.
- Stein, Yael. The Quiet Deportation: Revocation of Residency and Denial of Social Rights of East Jerusalem Palestinians. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, the Israel Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, and HaMoked, Center for the Defense of the Individual, 1998.

War, 1948

The term "1948 War" is a recent appellation given to the events that shook Palestine between 29 November 1947, the day the UNITED NATIONS passed the Partition Resolution (UN RESOLUTION 181), which called for division of Palestine into Jewish and Arab states, and 1 June 1949, the day the last ARMISTICE AGREEMENT between Israel and the Arab states was concluded. This is a neutral term replacing previous titles favored in Western MEDIA and academic circles, all of which, in one way or another, reflected the Israeli historical narrative: for example, Genesis 1948, as Dan Kurzman's book would have it, or the more common "Israel's War of Independence." Palestinian historiography, far less popular in the West, attempted to challenge these descriptions by promoting the "Palestinian Nakba (catastrophe)" representing the Palestinian collective memory and interpretation of these events.

What both the Israeli and Palestinian narratives had in common was the reference to the events of those years as a "war." This association gave rise, in more recent and professional historiography, to the term "1948 War." Not only did the new historiography opt for a more neutral title, but its overall understanding and analysis of that period also challenged the Zionist narrative and tended to accept many of the Palestinian claims about it. This shift in representation resulted from the emergence of a group of professional historians in Israel who, during the 1980s and 1990s, used newly declassified documents from local and foreign archives, especially those belonging to Israel, Great Britain, and the UNITED STATES, to gather factual information previously unavailable. With the help of the new, raw data, Israeli historians were able to piece together, on an almost daily basis, the events of this period—the picture of which validated the principal chapters in the Palestinian narrative.

The present entry is based on this harvest as well as on an even more recent perspective that challenges the description of the events in 1948 as a war. In reality, there were two different conflicts in Palestine. One was a conventional military confrontation, the "real" war, between the newly formed Jewish state and the Arab armies that entered Palestine on the day the BRITISH MANDATE ended—15 May 1948. The other was an ethnic-cleansing campaign in which Jewish military troops acted within the civil, rural, and urban Palestinian areas, and were faced with little, if any, resistance.

The term "ethnic cleansing" refers to various policies of forcibly removing people of one ethnic group. At one end of the spectrum, it is virtually indistinguishable from forced emigration and population exchange, while at the other it merges with DEPORTATION and genocide. At the most general level, however, ethnic cleansing can be understood as the expulsion of an undesirable population from a given territory as a result of religious or ethnic discrimination; political, demographic, or ideological considerations; or a combination of these. In its most direct usage, ethnic cleansing means simply the displacement or expulsion from a territory of one ethnic group by another, usually by force. There have been numerous examples of ethnic cleansing throughout history, but the practice has been most frequently used during colonization projects. For example, in the colonization of North America, British and American settlers ethnically cleansed millions of Native Americans, forcibly relocating them to remote and often inhospitable reservation land.

This entry will sketch the historical developments in both the war between the Israeli and Arab states and the Zionist ethnic-cleansing campaign against the Palestinians.

British Departure

On 1 February 1947, the British cabinet decided to leave Palestine after thirty years of Mandatory rule. A variety of factors contributed to this decision. An economic crisis caused by the new realities created in postwar Europe by US policy gave rise to a feeling of exhaustion and a desire to withdraw from the responsibilities of the empire, especially in the face of global decolonization movements. More specifically, Palestine was a secondary asset, even at the best of imperial times, and appeared even less vital to the new Labor government in post-1945 Britain. Finally, the 1945 decision by the Jewish underground movements to force out the British also contributed to the withdrawal.

The JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL, the embryo government of the Jewish community in Palestine (the Yishuv), was bitterly disappointed with British policies after World War II. The Yishuv leadership had expected the Labor Party, which was pro-Zionist, to declare unequivocal support for the creation of a Jewish state and leave the country. Contrary to their expectations, the leading figure in the British government, Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin, wanted to divide the country into three cantons: Jewish, Arab, and British, all having autonomy under British trusteeship. The British would thus continue to control Jewish IMMIGRATION and LAND purchases. In response, the underground movements joined forces and attacked British installations and troops, and in 1946 they blew up the KING DAVID HOTEL, the British headquarters in Palestine.

Although the British had used harsh measures to quell the ARAB REVOLT in the 1930s, they did not dare use similar means against the Jewish campaign in the wake of the HOLOCAUST. Apart from the confiscation of arms, a few executions, and imprisonments, the British response to the Jewish uprising was lukewarm. This approach forced the British to field 100,000 troops in Palestine to maintain stability, more than the entire number of soldiers they had in the Indian subcontinent.

Under the leadership of DAVID BEN-GURION, the Jewish Agency prepared itself for the British withdrawal long before it actually occurred. These preparations were summed up in a 1946 master plan, code-named "Plan B," that provided a detailed program for taking over all the institutions of the Mandatory state immediately after the British departed, including hubs of government, central banks, customs services, and military installations. In addition, there were all the institutions of the Yishuv, which itself fully constituted a "state in waiting."

The second form of preparation was amassing military power. Conceptualizing strategy and needs, Ben-Gurion mobilized a military force with all the necessary capabilities for the Zionist takeover of Palestine. To supervise firsthand these preparations, he appointed himself as head of all the committees and outfits within the Jewish Agency that were entrusted with the issues of defense and war. The major developments in the military field were twofold: (1) the introduction of compulsory service, which greatly increased the number of troops; and (2) an intensive weapons purchase campaign. The new military planning included a successful integration of Jewish troops that had served in the British army during World War II with local military structures. The increased troop numbers, the new weapons, and intense training equipped the Jewish community with all the necessary means for the military challenge ahead.

The third area of Jewish preparation was diplomatic. Anglo-Saxon Jews were recruited for the political campaign, which was focused on securing international recognition for a Jewish state in at least 80 percent of Palestine. The Jewish Agency provided the international community with a map that defined the area coveted by the Zionist movement, which more or less reflects contemporary Israel without the WEST BANK and the GAZA STRIP. The early engagement with diplomacy was crucial to the success of the overall Zionist effort. The British government decided not only to leave Palestine, but also to entrust its fate to the United Nations. In 1947, when the Palestine problem was officially given to the United Nations, the international body was still inexperienced and very much under the influence of the United States. Zionist leaders understood that the path to success at the United Nations ran through the United States, and tremendous efforts were expended to win Washington to the cause.

The United Nations did have significant impact on the Palestine question, but its point of departure was ZIONISM, not the Palestinians. The United Nations took for granted that Zionist colonization was a legitimate project, as was the right of the Jews to have a state in Palestine. The special commission it appointed to deal with the Palestine question, the UNITED NATIONS SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON PALESTINE (UNSCOP), reduced the 80 percent of Palestine desired by the Jews to 56 percent, but it nonetheless implied from the outset that it would recognize the Jewish state as compensation from the international community for the Holocaust and in recognition of the historical Jewish connection to the land. The facts on the ground, such as the Palestinians being the indigenous people who constituted two-thirds of the overall population and owned the vast majority of the land, were ignored. Had the United Nations applied the democratic principle of self-determination to a prospective solution, these facts would have suggested only one possible settlement: a Palestinian state in Palestine.

The last and most important form of Jewish preparation for the British departure and Israel's own impending statehood included the policies formulated regarding the Palestinian population. As the Zionist leadership prepared to take over as much of Palestine as possible, it began to carefully plan the fate of the million Palestinians living in areas that would become part of the Jewish state. It was again Ben-Gurion who was the moving force behind these politics. By March 1948 the decision had been made: the only means for fulfilling the Zionist ideal of a Jewish state in Palestine was to ethnically cleanse the country of its Arab population. The term "ethnic cleansing" was not used at the time, but the Hebrew words for "cleansing"—le-tha'her and le-va'er—were frequently mentioned in the master plan for the depopulation of the Palestinians.

Arab Response to the British Departure

News of the British withdrawal caught the Palestinians and the Arab leaders by surprise and unprepared. The Palestinian nationalist elite had been crushed by the British during the 1936 Arab Revolt, and their leader, AL-HAJJ AMIN AL-HUSAYNI, and other Palestinian leaders were barred from returning to Palestine. No less significant was the irreversible damage inflicted by the British army on Palestinian military capabilities, limited as they had been, during the revolt. Most Palestinian paramilitary units that had some fighting capability had been disbanded. The Palestinians were prepared in none of the four areas in which the Jewish side was prepared, and there was no plan for taking over the country. Military and diplomatic matters were left in the hands of the ARAB LEAGUE, the federation of Arab states. And, although some leading Arab notables and intellectuals spoke publicly of the possibility of an impending ethnic cleansing, nothing, or almost nothing, was done.

What remained of the ARAB HIGHER COMMITTEE, which was formed in April 1936 in the context of the Arab Revolt, attempted to revive the 1936 structure of rural and urban defense based on national committees throughout the country. These emergency outfits consisted of notables, well-off members of society, and religious dignitaries within the communities. They were promised money and arms by Arab state elites, none of which ever arrived, but even if they had, the class status of these people suggests that they would not have been first-class fighters. The committee essentially waited for the Arab League's guidance for future policies and actions. The Arab League, in turn, waited for the United Nations to make its final decision on Palestine, although the league's leaders resolved to boycott the international diplomatic process if, as they predicted, it ended with the creation of a Jewish state over most, if not all, of Palestine. But apart from that, the league was passive between February 1947 (the date of the British decision to leave) and November 1947, when UNSCOP submitted its final recommendations for the partitioning of Palestine.

One member state of the Arab League, Transjordan (renamed JORDAN in 1948), pursued its own policy. Its king, Abdullah of the HASHEMITE dynasty, began a series of secret talks with the Jewish Agency in 1946 over the partitioning of post-Mandatory Palestine between the Jews and the Jordanians. The two sides reached a tacit understanding that severely impacted the results of the 1948 War. In 1947 these negotiations intensified and adapted themselves to the developing UN partition plan. Palestine was indeed to be divided, yet not between Jews and Palestinians but rather between Jews and Hashemites.

The British government ordered its forces, officials, and civil servants to focus on one objective only—a safe withdrawal. This meant not being embroiled in any action against Jews or Arabs unless it was required for safeguarding British life or property. More importantly, the British government gave its blessing to the Jewish-Transjordanian negotiations and to the emerging agreement to partition the land between Israel and Jordan, at the expense of the Palestinians. On 29 November 1947, the UN General Assembly voted in favor of partition. The two-thirds majority was obtained through heavy-handed US pressure on reluctant member states. But Resolution 181 was ultimately meaningless, as it was officially rejected by the Arab Higher Committee and the Arab League, on the one hand, and was ignored by the Jewish Agency, on the other. It did, however, demarcate the borders of the Jewish and Arab states. This is important for understanding the policies and conduct of both the Jewish Agency and the Arab states. The Jewish Agency felt that it had carte blanche in the areas allocated to it in the UN partition plan, and what it most wanted was to cleanse those areas of their indigenous population. It also wanted to enlarge, beyond the 56 percent granted by the United Nations, the land area of the Jewish state and planned to do so by force. Both objectives were officially deferred until the British were gone.

First Phase of the Ethnic Cleansing (December 1947–March 1948)

The day after the UN resolution was adopted, Palestinians—leaders and ordinary people alike—were faced with a new reality for which they were not prepared. The dismay and frustration were translated into three days of demonstrations and strikes, including several violent attacks on Jewish businesses and residential areas in urban centers and random sniping at Jewish traffic en route to isolated Jewish settlements. But the energy of the demonstrators dissipated rather quickly, and the Palestinian population tried to return to normalcy, which surprised the Jewish political and military commands. Their expectation had been that a civil war would ensue, which would allow them to implement ethnic-cleansing operations as retaliation against Palestinian villages and neighborhoods. Ben-Gurion, in conjunction with the TRANSFER COMMITTEE, formulated the policy that every shot fired by the Palestinians would be returned with severe collective punishment: the depopulation and destruction of villages and towns. But because the limited nature of Palestinian attacks could not justify such massive retaliation, a new policy was needed to facilitate the de-Arabization of the future Jewish state.

In January 1948 the Jewish military command decided to attack villages even when there was no provocation. At first, in the 1930s, the pretext was assaults by one or another village against Jewish targets, but even that proved to be negligible. Thus the requirement for an “excuse” was abandoned. Initially, British authorities protested against this policy to the Jewish leadership, but eventually they simply stood aside. The turning point came in the middle of February 1948, when, for the first time, whole Palestinian villages were systematically emptied of their inhabitants. The first of these villages were located on the Mediterranean coast near the ancient city of Caesarea. Palestinian villages, unlike the Jewish settlements, were not organized as military outposts and were thus vulnerable to Jewish operations.

When, in mid-February, the news of the operations emerged, the Arab League felt obliged to do more than utter words. The foreign ministers of the Arab states decided to create an army of volunteers—the ARAB LIBERATION ARMY (ALA)—and dispatch it to defend the Palestinians. An Iraqi general, Ismail Safwat, was appointed to head the ALA, and a veteran commander of the 1936 revolt, FAWZI AL-QAWUQJI, was its acting commander. The ALA operated primarily in the north of Palestine, while the south was assisted by Egyptian volunteers from the MUSLIM BROTHERHOOD. These troops were reinforced by small, Palestinian paramilitary groups. But even together they were no match for the main Jewish military, which included several underground organizations plus the regular forces of the HAGANA that began with more than 50,000 well-armed and well-organized troops. The ALA confined its activity to the “Arab” areas, those parts of Palestine allocated to the Palestinians in the UN partition plan, and it had some limited and short-term successes—attacking a few isolated settlements and convoys making their way to those areas.

The month of March 1948 was crucial in regard to Jewish objectives. On 10 March the DALET PLAN, a strategic program for the cleansing of Palestine, was adopted by the Jewish high command. The plan elaborated the tactics for achieving two overarching goals: (1) to take over the hub and networks of statehood from the Mandatory government in every area from which British soldiers and officials would withdraw; and (2) more generally, to cleanse the future Jewish state of its Palestinian inhabitants. As with the earlier program, the Dalet Plan was based on retaliation: Arab villages or urban neighborhoods that fired on Jewish forces would have their populations expelled. In practice, this meant that no Palestinian village or town had a chance of escaping once word of the February evictions spread, because Palestinians would inevitably resist even the appearance of the Jewish military.

After 10 March, the Jewish leadership divided the country into some ten zones, each of which was the responsibility of a brigade (twelve by May 1948). Each brigade commander received a list of the villages and urban centers in his zone with the order to “destroy and cleanse the following places.” The list not only enumerated names of localities but also provided a timetable for the expulsion of their populations and destruction of villages. The plan graphically explained how “to destroy”: encircle a village and occupy it, assemble all the inhabitants and expel them outside the country’s BORDERS, blow up or ignite the houses, and plant mines in the debris to prevent future return. The first significant development of March 1948, then, was the introduction of a master plan for the massive expulsion of the Palestinian population from the soon-to-be Jewish state. The Dalet Plan did not include a map, but it referred to “the territorial span of the future state,” which went significantly beyond the 56 percent of Palestine allotted in the Partition Resolution and annexed part of the territory designated for the Arab state—an area termed “the security zone.” The size of this zone was not specified, but once it was implemented it amounted to an additional 22 percent of Mandatory Palestine.

The second significant development in March 1948 was the realization by the United Nations and the United States that the Partition Resolution did not resolve the conflict over Palestine but instead was leading to a major war. The US State Department wanted to retract partition and instead impose an international trusteeship to allow further negotiations, but strong pressure by the Zionist lobby on President HARRY TRUMAN foiled this shift in policy.

Destruction of Urban Palestine (April–May 1948)

Once it became clear that the international community was not going to alter the partition plan, both the Jewish leadership and Arab politicians in the neighboring states undertook new courses of action. Chronologically, the Jewish action preceded the general Arab and Palestinian reactions. Under Ben-Gurion’s leadership, the Jewish high command decided to accelerate implementation of the Dalet Plan; the main objective—to take over the ethnically mixed towns and cities of Palestine and their rural hinterlands—was largely realized between the second week of April and the second week of May. In most places, the pattern was similar: Jewish forces attacked one or two villages in the vicinity of a town or a city; followed this with heavy bombardment of the urban center, which frequently caused the local elite to flee; and then occupied the area, causing mass expulsion. These huge operations were sporadically accompanied by the massacre or execution of a small number of inhabitants, intended to strike fear and hasten the pace of departure.

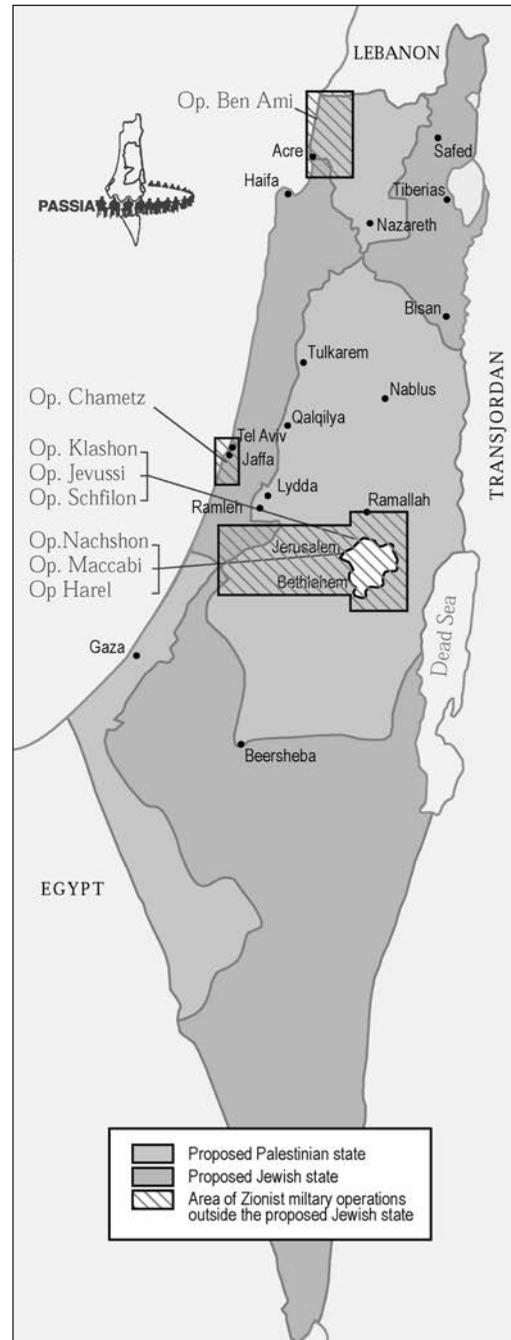

The first city to fall was TIBERIAS, a town on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee. After a massacre in a nearby village of Nasr al-Din, the city was heavily bombarded on 19 April 1948. The British senior commander still remaining in the area contacted the ad hoc leadership of the Palestinians in Tiberias and offered to facilitate the city’s evacuation. The leadership consented after it considered the balance of power: the presence of a few Arab volunteers and armed locals against the organized military might of the Jews. Not one Palestinian was left in the city. Based on this relatively easy success, the Jewish leadership expected similar developments in the other urban centers, but such was not always the case. Ten days earlier, on 9 April 1948, Jewish forces massacred more than 100 people in DEIR YASSIN near JERUSALEM, terrifying many of Jerusalem’s notables, who left the city. But in Jerusalem, as elsewhere in Palestine, those who could not afford to leave stayed behind. Following the massacre, Jewish forces bombarded and shelled Jerusalem for days, but, unable to empty all the city’s neighborhoods, they had to physically occupy and expel the residents. The western part of Jerusalem was completely depopulated, but Transjordan's Arab Legion protected the eastern half.

One of the primary targets of the Dalet Plan was HAIFA, but it was not easily taken. From December 1947 onward, Jewish forces undertook a mixed campaign of terror and intimidation in the Arab sector, which included sniping and detonating barrels of dynamite to destroy buildings and cars. These actions caused the wealthy Palestinians to leave for what they assumed would be a short period. On the last day of 1947, Jewish forces massacred around seventy men, women, and children in the village of Balad al-Shaykh on the eastern flank of Haifa. This was retaliation for the killing of thirty-nine Jewish workers in the Haifa refinery plant, which was itself retribution for a Jewish bombing of Palestinian workers there that killed six and injured forty-two. Within a few weeks, an entire Haifa neighborhood, Hawassa, was evicted by force. After the local elite left, the majority of Haifa's 75,000 Palestinians were still left in the city, exposed to shelling and attacks.

Subsequent to the capture of Haifa's rural hinterland (as part of Operation Cleansing the Leaven, or Biur Hametz, which began in April 1948), direct attacks on Palestinian neighborhoods in the city were resumed. The few notables who were left in Haifa approached the British commander of the northern subdistrict and requested his protection, but he was only willing to mediate between them and the Jewish command for an orderly eviction, which was organized on 21 April 1948. The next day, masses of Palestinians concentrated at the old market, next to the port. Heavy shelling began, and the people ran for their lives to the ships and boats in the harbor—a stampede that left many dead and wounded. The operation that led to the city's final fall was named Operation Misparayim (scissors). On 20–21 April the city was captured by the Carmeli Brigade and the IRGUN TZEVA'I LE'UMI.

Many refugees from Haifa left for ACRE, which was captured at the beginning of May, together with JAFFA, SAFED, and Beisan, and their Palestinian populations were evicted by force and terror. Houses and businesses were looted, and the few who remained were subjected to a chaotic military regime that allowed soldiers to abuse and harass them. Parallel to the usurpation of the towns, ethnic-cleansing operations began in the rural areas and intensified throughout the month of May. On 15 May 1948, the British Mandate ended, but it was not a significant date; events moved forward much as in the preceding period. The only difference was that in the first part of the month the Jewish forces concentrated on the areas allocated to the Jews in the UN plan, and in the second half they moved into the territory designated by the United Nations for the Arab state. What the Jewish forces found hard to achieve was a steady connection with and protection of their isolated settlements, situated at the heart of the Arab area. Convoys to these spots were attacked, and a substantial number of Jews were killed in assaults on buses and trucks.

© Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs (PASSIA), Jerusalem (based on Walid Khalidi, Before their Diaspora, Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies 1984 and Khalidi, ed. From Haven to Conquest, Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1971), reprinted with permission.

Map 44. Zionist Military Operations outside the UN-Proposed Jewish State, April–May 1948

Real War's Early Stages (15 May–10 June 1948)

The Jewish army, now the Israeli army, had more than 50,000 well-trained and well-armed troops at its disposal. It faced an almost equal number of troops coming from neighboring Arab countries. These troops, however, were poorly trained and armed, disorganized, and without a central command structure. The Arab League only decided on the campaign on 30 April 1948, ostensibly to ensure that the area of Palestine allotted to the Palestinians did not fall to Israel. The largest of the contingents came from EGYPT, whose government did not decide to join the war effort until 12 May. Half of these troops were from the Muslim Brotherhood, volunteers with no prior experience, although they acquitted themselves better on the battlefield than most of the regular armies.

The most experienced Arab army was the Jordanian Arab Legion, but it was constrained by the tacit alliance between King Abdullah and Israel. That agreement was finalized in the last days of the Mandate and allowed the Jordanian army to enter and occupy the areas slated for the Palestinian state (today's West Bank), which it did with little military effort. The two sides, however, had failed to reach an agreement on Jerusalem; thus fierce fighting broke out in May 1948 between Jordan and Israel, which resulted in Jordan's capturing East Jerusalem, including the Jewish quarter of the OLD CITY and the Latrun area on the Jerusalem-Jaffa road.

Parallel to the Jordanian military effort, the other Arab armies entered the areas allocated to the Palestinians in the Partition Resolution. Although many leaders in the Arab League suspected Abdullah of colluding with the Jews over Palestine's future, they nonetheless consented to placing him as titular head of the military operation, together with an Iraqi general who was loyal to him. None of the generals were anxious for a head-on confrontation with Israel, since most regarded that as doomed to failure. Thus, Abdullah was responsible for coordinating the Arab effort, and he exploited this position for implementing the agreement he had with Israel.

The Syrian army entered through the northeastern border of Palestine and succeeded in occupying, for a short time, four isolated Jewish settlements. The Egyptian forces, too, had some success in this respect, but again, it was short-lived, not more than a few days. That the Arab armies took any settlements, however briefly, was largely a result of Ben-Gurion's strategic decision not to allocate many troops for the protection of isolated settlements. In any event, it took no more than a week of fighting to sever the Arabs' hold over any settlement. Military confrontations continued until the UN mediator, COUNT FOLKE BERNADOTTE, who arrived on 20 May, succeeded in arranging a truce that went into effect on 10 June. At this point in the real war, Arab armies were scattered throughout the territory of the ephemeral Palestinian state, and most remained in areas adjacent to the countries from which they had come. In addition to the Egyptian, Jordanian, and Syrian troops, LEBANON and IRAQ were involved in the fighting. The Lebanese units stayed close to their border, and the Iraqi contingent was dispatched to the northern part of the country (today's West Bank). Together with the ALA, Iraq's army was a significant factor on the ground, and it fended off successive Israeli attempts to occupy the West Bank and areas near it.

Encouraged by the situation unfolding a week after 15 May, a euphoric Ben-Gurion, now the Israeli prime minister, determined that the time was ripe for the Israeli forces to expand the boundaries of the state beyond what the Partition Resolution had stipulated, and perhaps even beyond Palestine. Israel proceeded to repeatedly attack Wadi 'Ara, a valley that connects the Marj Ibn 'Amir (the Jezreel Valley of today) and the coast near the town of Hadera. Some fifteen villages lay near the road connecting these two areas. The Israeli forces, however, failed to take them because of the resistance of the Iraqi contingent of about 3,000, together with some 1,000 ALA volunteers. An even more ambitious Israeli plan involved seizing SYRIA's Syrian (renamed Golan by Israel after the 1967 WAR) Heights, the Upper Galilee, and southern Lebanon. These plans were postponed shortly after they were articulated: the first was not captured until 1967, and the other two in the fall of 1948. The 10 June truce held for a month; on 8 July fighting resumed for ten days.

Ethnic-Cleansing Front (until the First Truce)

While Israeli troops clashed with the units of Arab regular armies and the ALA, ethnic-cleansing operations continued unabated. With the termination of the British Mandate on 15 May, the Israeli army could now act against the Palestinians without concern about possible British intervention, and it was free to openly send its brigades to depopulate and destroy villages. The pace was astonishing. In a very short time, some fifty villages on the coast were taken, their populations evicted by force, and the houses demolished. Gratuitous brutality was not part of the policy, and when a case did occur, it grew out of circumstances that developed on the ground. Villages suspected by the Israeli forces of being involved in attacks on convoys en route to isolated settlements (operations in which Israel lost 200 people) were penalized by cruel treatment of entire villages. This was the situation with the village of al-Bassa near Acre, which was assaulted in a vicious manner as revenge for a previous ALA attack on a convoy to Kibbutz Yechiam. There were other cases, or pretexts, for atrocities. Villages known for their involvement in the 1936 revolt were also subjected to a more callous takeover than others.

The most brutal acts occurred when the conventional method of village occupation failed for one reason or another. The usual routine was to encircle a village from three flanks, leaving open the fourth for driving out or causing flight. When villages, such as Ayn Zaytun in the north, Tantura on the coast, and al-Dawayima south of HEBRON, were surrounded from all four flanks, the Israeli soldiers were faced with a large, hostile population. Either as a result of something gone amok or coldblooded preplanning, masses of people were massacred. A preplanned operation typically went as follows: After a village was occupied, an army intelligence officer appeared. With the help of a hooded, local COLLABORATOR he would first identify "suspicious" individuals—people on prepared lists or those that the Israeli army defined as "men of military age" (which could range from the ages of ten to fifty). Suspicious men were executed, and those of military age were transferred to prison, where they were held for more than a year.

Most of the ethnic-cleansing operations had code names. Some had "cleansing" in the title, while other names were more innocuous but menacing in their intentions. Such was Operation Nachson (Travelers Book of Prayers), implemented before 15 May, the first maneuver under the Dalet Plan and which included the massacre of Deir Yassin and the cleansing of many villages in the Greater Jerusalem area. One operation was never code-named. Beginning before 15 May and ending in July 1948, it involved a sweeping cleansing of the coastal villages from south of Tel Aviv to north of Haifa. Of the sixty-four villages that were attacked, only two remain. The task was mainly entrusted to Brigade Alexandroni and included the 22 May massacre in Tantura. Another was Operation Cedar, one of the first ethnic-cleansing actions after 15 May, which focused on Marj Ibn 'Amir, the area stretching between Afula and JENIN. Dozen of villages in the marj/plain were taken by surprise, their people expelled, and houses destroyed. Among the more well-known villages that were cleansed in Cedar were Lajun and Zarain. The Iraqi contingent succeeded in foiling the more ambitious part of the plan, the capture of Jenin. This was the first of many attempts to seize not only Jenin but also the Wadi 'Ara area, which was defended by the Iraqi contingent, the ALA, and local people who attempted to protect their homes. Their defense of the Wadi is one of the few chapters of military success in the history of Palestine's ethnic cleansing. Until the end of 1948, the Israeli army tried repeatedly to occupy the Wadi but was always repelled. Ironically, as a result of the armistice agreement signed by Israel and Jordan in April 1949, this area was annexed to Israel.

After 15 May the early operations of ethnic cleansing moved from areas allocated to the Jews in Resolution 181 to those within the designated Arab state. That meant that some of the operations took place at the same time as battles between Israel and the Arab armies. Nevertheless, the militarily superior Israeli forces were capable of engaging in both simultaneously and prevailing in each. In areas away from the borders with Arab states, Israel forces moving against the rural villages were opposed only by Arab volunteer units and local villagers and were able to seize and destroy several villages a day and drive out their populations. In the area of Latrun, the Jordanian Legion successfully prevented the Israeli army from capturing this valley on the slopes of the Jerusalem mountains, but other villages not protected by the Jordanians—Dir Ayyub, Bayt Jiz, Bayt Susin, and others—fell to the Israeli army. Three villages—Imwas, Yalu, and Bayt Nuba—were protected by the Jordanians because they were within areas the Jordanians deemed as their territory, but they were destroyed by Israel after the 1967 War in an act of revenge. In the central plains, while the Israeli army was frustrating the advance of the regular Egyptian forces, the villages of Qubayba and Zangha were the first two of many destroyed in the area that today is Rehovot. Later, the town of Yibneh, one of the large locales in that area and within the UN-designated Arab state, was cleansed by the Israeli forces. South of there, near the Egyptian border, Julis, Yasud, Bitani-Arabi, and Jusayer were cleansed of their residents.

With a similar pace, the army took over the areas on the northern coast of Palestine, south of the Lebanese border, down to Acre. Here, too, its units captured, cleansed, and blew up several villages. By 29 May much of the area known as Western Galilee was in Israeli hands. In the Mandatory period, more than 90 percent of its inhabitants and lands were Palestinian, yet within two weeks very few Palestinians remained. The rest of the Galilee did not give in so easily, and today most of the Palestinian citizens of Israel live in the lower and upper Galilee.

First Truce (10 June–9 July 1948)

When the first truce commenced on 10 June, almost 400 villages had been destroyed and half a million Palestinians had become REFUGEES. The exhausted Arab armies welcomed the truce, and the Israeli command wanted a short lull as well but wanted to complete the ethnic cleansing as soon as possible. Both the Arab armies and Israel used the © Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs (PASSIA), Jerusalem, Jan de Jong cartographer, reprinted with permission.

Map 45. (Left) Land Ownership in Palestine, 1947; (right) Palestinian Villages Depopulated in 1948 and 1967 and Razed by Israel

truce to replenish equipment and arms. While Israel established a fruitful connection with the Eastern Bloc that provided its army with updated and heavy weaponry, the Arab armies were not that fortunate. Their main suppliers were Britain and FRANCE, both of which imposed an arms embargo on Palestine, crippling the already strained and inefficient Arab forces. The issue of weapons resupply exposed a rift in Israeli politics between the extremist Jewish militia, the Irgun Tzeva'i Le'umi or Irgun, and the mainstream Israeli forces. At the beginning of June, Hagana, the main Jewish underground military organization in Palestine, intercepted an Irgun shipment of arms for its fighters, and an exchange of fire occurred. After that event, the Israeli army was a more unified force than it had been, as Irgun was marginalized and lost status as a result of its own movement of arms. Irgun members were sent to control the already occupied Arab areas, especially in the mixed towns, where small communities of Palestinians still lived among Jews. However, their harassment of the Palestinians led, in several cases, to their replacement by regular soldiers. The Irgun also served as guards in the POW camps, where mostly young Palestinians were held for long periods.

During the period of the truce, Bernadotte promoted a settlement of the conflict that deviated from the Partition Resolution. He recommended that Palestine be divided according to the Mandate location of Jewish and Arab communities, demanded the return of all the refugees, and reiterated the demand that Jerusalem be an internationalized city. Because Bernadotte, as the former head of the Swedish Red Cross, had helped to save Jews during World War II, Israel had agreed to his role as mediator. However, when he announced his recommendations, Israeli officials deeply regretted their earlier consent and categorically rejected the proposals. Thus the first truce saw an attempt at peace, its failure, and the beginning of the next stage of ethnic cleansing. This included mainly the demolition of the houses in already occupied villages whose populations had been expelled. It also involved looting, official and unofficial, of Palestinian urban assets, including bank accounts. By the time the fighting resumed, Israel had established a military regime over the areas it had seized.

Ten-Day War (8–18 July 1948)

On 8 July 1948 Bernadotte announced that he had failed to secure agreement to extend the truce.

Israel resumed its military effort, while the Arab armies were digging in to defend the areas they still controlled. A few bold Arab generals suggested counteroffensive operations, but these failed to materialize. In Israel's Operation Cypress, Syria was the first Arab contingent to be defeated and driven out of Palestine. The Iraqi contingent was also targeted during the "ten days' war" that lasted until the second truce, but it held on. However, an area neighboring Wadi 'Ara and northeast of Jenin, the Gilboa Mountains, fell in the Israeli offensive, and the villages in this zone were seized and destroyed and their populations expelled. In the northern part of Palestine, the Iraqi and Syrian fronts were the only two in which some sort of real war continued to be waged. In the rest of the Galilee, ethnic cleansing continued. Operation Palm Tree was the code name for Israel's seizure of NAZARETH and its environs on 16 July 1948, although the local commander decided to leave the city intact, concerned about international repercussions given its significance as a Christian holy site. But the surrounding villages, some of them already overwhelmed by previous waves of refugees, were not so fortunate. Among them, Mujaydal and Saffuriya were the most well-known, and many of their residents relocated to Nazareth, where they reside today in neighborhoods that face their original villages. Under the same operation, villages on the road between Acre and Safed were captured, including Birweh, Kafar Yasif, Amqa, and Quweiqat.

Israeli forces did not empty all the villages in this area, sparing those that had Druze communities. At the end of May, the leaders of the Druze community in Palestine decided to tie their community's fate with that of the new Jewish state. The Druze units that were serving in the ALA became an auxiliary force in the Israeli army, assisting in the cleansing operations in Galilee and forming the nucleus of a special unit that enforced the military regime over the Palestinian areas in its early stages.

Pockets of resistance on the coast were also taken in those ten days, and some of them resisted the cleansing operations. For instance, in the villages of Ijzim and Ayn Ghazal, south of Haifa, the Israeli army needed to continue its operations to complete the expulsion even after a second truce was declared by the United Nations on 19 July. The operation against these villages during the second truce was code-named "Policeman," as the troops were disguised as a policing force to mislead the UN observers.

Elsewhere within the ten days' war, the cleansing operations focused on LYDDA and RAMLA. They were the target of Operation Dani, which involved one of the most brutal acts of mass expulsion. Israeli soldiers committed countless atrocities: families were forcibly driven from their houses; over 250 men were massacred in the mosque; and all the families, consisting of some 70,000 people, were marched to the West Bank in one of Palestine's hottest summers. Although these towns were supposed to be protected by the Jordanian Arab Legion and were within the state allocated to the Arabs in the UN resolution, the legion deserted them, preferring to protect the Latrun area west of the towns and closer to Jerusalem. The legion's repeated success in repelling the overall Israeli attempt to occupy the Latrun area suggests that it could have saved Lydda and Ramla. The Hashemite dynasty blamed the British chief of the Arab Legion, John Glubb Pasha, for the decision to desert the towns. When he was deposed in the 1950s, his conduct in the case of Lydda and Ramla was given as the principal reason. In addition, many villages between Ramla and Lydda that were east of Jaffa on the plain stretching as far as the Jerusalem Mountains were cleansed in the ten days' war, including Isshawa, Kisla, and Zuba. In Jerusalem, Israel used the ten days to occupy the last of the Palestinian villages in the western part of the city; Malha and Ayn Karim were the most well-known of them. On the night before the second truce was to go into effect, Israeli forces tried to capture SHAYKH JARRAH and the Old City of Jerusalem. As in Latrun, they could not defeat the Jordanian Arab Legion.

The real war was still being waged in the south during the ten days. The Israelis put into effect Operation An-Far (Anti-Farouq) to push the Egyptian contingent farther into the south. It succeeded in driving a wedge between the Egyptian units, encircling some in pockets from which they could not escape and thus eventually had to surrender. After the eviction of the Egyptian forces from the northern Naqab (Negev), the last days of the fighting before the second truce commenced were devoted to fresh ethnic-cleansing operations: Tal al-Safi and Masmiyya were the largest of the villages depopulated in the internal plains on the way to the Naqab. Today, where most of these villages once stood, there are Jewish settlements. During the ten days' war, Israel accomplished most of its military and demographic objectives with relative ease, compared to earlier stages, because it had come into possession of a newly built air force with planes purchased from Czechoslovakia.

Second Truce and Resumption of Battle (July–January 1949)

The second truce lasted, with sporadic violations, until 19 October 1948. A kind of war of attrition between Israeli and Egyptian forces continued, but elsewhere, until the beginning of October, the fighting subsided. Israel used the period to flatten the remaining villages and Arab neighborhoods to prevent future repatriation. Most were transformed into Jewish settlements and some into recreational grounds. These actions were undertaken to preempt international pressure on Israel to allow the return of the refugees. And, indeed, Bernadotte's final recommendations to the United Nations, delivered on 16 September 1948, repeated his insistence on the repatriation of the refugees as a precondition for a lasting peace, alongside the partitioning of Palestine and the internationalization of Jerusalem. Although, for a time, the United Nations embraced Bernadotte's proposals and expected Israel to allow an unconditional repatriation, Israel refused and prepared for further ethnic-cleansing operations. A day after his report was handed to the United Nations, Bernadotte was assassinated by the Jewish extremist group LOHAMEI HERUT YISRAEL, or LEHI, although the diplomatic effort continued while Israel unrelentingly established facts on the ground.

At the beginning of October, skirmishes in the south turned into a full-scale confrontation between Israeli and Egyptian forces, including a week of tank battles. On 16 October 1948 the Egyptian government stopped sending reinforcements or new equipment, and the Israeli army began a large-scale offensive, code-named Operation Yoav, that ended in the withdrawal of most Egyptian units from Palestine (apart from a pocket in Faluja in the Negev and the Gaza Strip). The removal of Egyptian forces from areas that fell within the parameters of Yoav (which covered the area parallel to the Gaza Strip of today, to the south as far as Bir Asluj, some fifty miles south of Bir Saba) left several villages and towns defenseless, and they were destroyed. The UN Security Council was concerned that Israeli forces would enter Egyptian territory and drag Britain, which had a defense treaty with Egypt, into the war. Therefore, it ordered Israel to cease fighting on 19 October, but the Israeli army continued its operation another two days and stopped only after the Security Council threatened to impose sanctions if fighting continued. Within these two days, Israeli forces seized the town of Bir-Saba and expelled all its inhabitants, as well as pushing out a large population of BEDOUIN tribes in the Naqab. By 22 October there were no significant Arab forces in the south of Palestine and few inhabitants—peasants, urbanites, or Bedouin.

The last phase of the war began on 28 October. The thrust of Israel's effort was the final takeover of the Galilee region, which was not coincidentally code-named Operation Hiram, after the biblical king of Tyre in southern Lebanon. The military command had ordered the operation for the north of Palestine to include the occupation of not only the Galilee but also of southern Lebanon, where the Litani River was a critical WATER resource. Within sixty hours, both areas fell into Jewish hands, including thirteen villages in southern Lebanon. The small Lebanese army, fragmented and poorly armed, together with ALA volunteers and local men, attempted unsuccessfully to defend the villages. Nevertheless, that dozens of villages remained in the Galilee is due to that resistance. On the other hand, the resistance triggered some of the worst atrocities committed by the Israeli army in its ethnic-cleansing operations. Labun, Safsaf, and Sasa suffered most, but many Palestinians from other villages recall October as the most frightful month of the war, with a night attack on Sasa and massacres in Safsaf and the village of Hula.

The worst case was not in the Galilee, however. While Operation Hiram raged, other Israeli forces were mopping up and cleansing pockets within areas already occupied. One such area was south of Khalil (Hebron), where the village of al-Dawayima was seized at the end of October (as part of Operation Winery). A report submitted to the United Nations described the massacre of more than 400 men, children, and women in a spree of killing.

After a military stalemate throughout November 1948, Israeli forces carried out the final stages of Operation Yoav. The Egyptian forces, though outnumbered and confronted with superior weapons, waged a last battle against Israeli forces. The final confrontation took place in Uja (today Nizana, a kibbutz on the international border with Egypt). The battle peaked on 27 December, and the Israeli forces were so successful that they began moving into the Sinai Peninsula. It took a very firm British ultimatum and a strong condemnation by President Truman to halt the Israeli offensive into Egypt proper. Ben-Gurion had to order the Israeli troops to withdraw. In the beginning of January, the British RAF sent reconnaissance aircraft to make sure Israeli forces had exited areas in the Sinai. The Israeli air force shot down five British planes, and the two countries were close to war, but US mediation averted a direct confrontation. The way was now open to an armistice agreement between Israel and Egypt.

Armistice and Futile Peace Negotiations (January–July 1949)

The last month of the war was marked by intense diplomatic activity at the United Nations with two major objectives: concluding armistice agreements between Israel and each Arab state, and pushing beyond the truces to a comprehensive settlement. The acting mediator who replaced Bernadotte was US diplomat Ralph Bunche, who was put in charge of the armistice talks. A committee, the PALESTINE CONCILIATION COMMISSION, consisting of Turkish, French, and US diplomats, was to pursue the goal of a comprehensive political settlement. At first, Bunche attempted to force Israel back to the October lines but failed. One of the reasons for the UN reluctance to take a tough line on this issue was the decision of Jordan to de facto annex the West Bank (officially in 1950). This part of Palestine was occupied by the Jordanians almost without a shot, as part of their prior agreement with Israel. The other part of the UN-designated Palestinian state remaining in Arab hands was the Gaza Strip. In September the Egyptians had allowed former Palestinian leaders to establish an ALL PALESTINE GOVERNMENT in Gaza City, but it was an empty gesture, evidenced by Cairo's forcible dismantlement a short time later. Under these circumstances, Bunche decided to try to draw armistice lines according to the status quo and not to force Israel to withdraw—apart from its presence in Lebanon.

The first armistice negotiations were with Egypt. The domestic scene in that country pushed the Egyptian government to seek a way out of the Palestine fiasco as rapidly as possible. The major opposition party, the Muslim Brotherhood, still supported the Palestinians, engaged in pitched battles with government forces, and was probably responsible for the assassination of Egyptian prime minister Mahmoud al-Nuqrashi. Bunche decided to hold the talks on the island of Rhodes in Greece, where the Israeli and Egyptian delegations arrived at the beginning of January 1949. On 23 February a permanent cease-fire was concluded with much pomposity and publicity. The road was now open for Israel to occupy the last part of the southern Negev. In March 1949, troops implemented Operation Fait Accompli, expanding Israeli control over the southern Naqab as far as Um Rashrash on the Red Sea's coastline (today the location of Eilat). On the way, the army annexed some areas of Wadi Arava from Transjordan to Israel.

Armistice talks between Israel and Jordan had started in December, commencing with an agreement to divide Jerusalem, and then moved to Rhodes, where the official negotiations began on 1 March. The long history of tacit agreements between the two parties had determined, in many ways, the results of the 1948 War. Jordan's annexation of the West Bank and the decision of its legion not to enter Jewish areas during the war were the two most notable consequences of the collusion. Israel wanted to annex the entire Wadi 'Ara area, a region it had repeatedly tried and failed to seize by force. At the time of the Rhodes negotiations, Wadi 'Ara was under Jordanian control. In March 1949, while the talks were in progress, the Israeli army conducted several intimidating maneuvers, signaling Jordan that it would take Wadi 'Ara by force if the area was not given to them in negotiations. King Abdullah capitulated, and the armistice was signed in April.

Negotiations with Lebanon were conducted in March as well, leading to Israel's withdrawal from southern Lebanon. In Syria a coup d'état brought to power Husni Za'im, and the internal upheavals delayed armistice negotiations. They were concluded in June 1949 with the creation of a problematic no-man's-land between the Golan Heights and Israel, where the UNITED NATIONS TRUCE SUPERVISION ORGANIZATION attempted, but failed, to prevent Israel's water diversion projects. The zone became an arena for continuous military friction, the intensification of which, in the 1960s, contributed to the 1967 War.

While these negotiations were taking place, the Palestine Conciliation Commission was attempting to craft a comprehensive political settlement. It regarded the return of the refugees as the cornerstone of any future settlement, together with the partition of the land into two equal parts and the internationalization of Jerusalem. In April 1949 the Palestine commission called upon the parties to participate in a peace conference in Switzerland, which failed because of Israeli intransigence and US inaction. On 11 December 1948 the UN General Assembly, with an overwhelming majority, had adopted UN RESOLUTION 194 endorsing the above three principles. In many ways the failure of the United Nations to replace its ill-fated partition plan with a different arrangement sealed the fate of the Palestinians: it allowed Israel to force 750,000 Palestinians from their homes, destroy 531 villages and eleven urban neighborhoods, and take over 78 percent of Mandatory Palestine. The war also started a chain of events inside the Arab world that brought down many of the Arab regimes that took part in the war. But the outcome for the Palestinian people was far worse than for the individual Arab politicians who miscalculated the consequences of the fiasco into which they walked after the British left Palestine. The general Arab failure to save the Palestinians produced the Nakba that still fuels the Palestinian conflict today.

See also DALET PLAN; DEMOGRAPHY; REFUGEES AND THE RIGHT OF RETURN; TRANSFER CO; VILLAGES, DESTRUCTION OF (1948–1949)

Bibliography

- Alan Cunningham Private Papers. National Army Museum, London. <http://www.nationalarchives.gov.uk/a2a/records.aspx?cat=063-8303104&cid=0#0>.
- Ben-Gurion Archives. Sdeh Boker Israel: Ben Gurion Diary; Correspondence section 1948; Israel Galili Archive, Beer Sheva, Ben-Gurion University of the Negev. <http://web.bgu.ac.il/Eng/Centers/bgi/Archives>.
- British National Archives, Colonial Office Files. Cabinet Papers (CAB 128-9). <http://www.nationalarchives.gov.uk>.
- . High Commissioner's memos and correspondence (CO 537, 733). <http://www.nationalarchives.gov.uk>.
- . Public Record Office: Foreign Office 371 Section: Internal Correspondence, FO 800 Correspondence with Legations and Embassies. <http://www.nationalarchives.gov.uk>.
- Central Zionist Archives. Political Department S25. Jerusalem. <http://www.zionistarchives.org.il>.
- Clark Clifford Papers. Harry S. Truman Library, Independence, MO.
- Flapan, Simha. The Birth of Israel: Myths and Realities. New York: Pantheon Books, 1987.
- Hagana Archives. General Headquarters Files, Intelligence Files (including interception of telephone conversation of Arab Higher Committee Members). Tel Aviv.

- Al-Hashimi, Taha. War Memories. Collection of papers. Beirut, Lebanon. 1978.
- Ibrahim, Shakib. The 1948 Palestine War: The Egyptian Side. Cairo: Al-Zahra lil-Ilam al-Arabi, 1988.
- Idris, Yusuf. The Memories of Amir Adil Arslan. Beirut, Lebanon, 1983.
- International Committee of the Red Cross Archives. Geneva. <http://www.icrc.org/eng/archives>.
- Israeli Defense Forces Archives. Plan Dalet files, Brigades Files, Military Front Files. Hakiryia. http://www.ica.org/en/member/the\_archive\_of\_the\_israeli\_army.
- Israel State Archives. Prime Minister Office, Foreign Ministry. Jerusalem. http://www.archives.gov.il/ArchiveGov\_eng.
- Khalidi, Walid. All That Remains. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1988.
- . "Plan Dalet: Master Plan for the Conquest of Palestine." Journal of Palestine Studies. 18 (Autumn 1988).
- Masalha, Nur. "Critique on Benny Morris." In The Israel/Palestine Question. Edited by Ilan Pappé. London: Routledge, 1999.
- Morris, Benny. The Birth of the Palestinian Refugee Problem, 1947–1949. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1988.
- Nakba's Oral History Interviews Listing. Palestine Remembered.com. 31 March 2004. www.palestineremembered.com/OralHistory/Interviews-Listing/Story1151.html.
- Palumbo, Michael. The Palestinian Catastrophe: The 1948 Expulsion of a People from Their Homeland. New York: Quartet Books, 1987.
- Pappé, Ilan. The Making of the Arab-Israeli Conflict, 1947–1951. London: I. B. Tauris, 1992.
- Sayd, Ahmad Rifat. The Documents of the 1948 Palestine War: The Secret Files of the Arab Armies. Collection of papers. Cairo. 1988.
- Shlaim, Avi. Collusion across the Jordan. Oxford, UK: Clarendon Press, 1988.
- UN Archives. Geneva and New York. <http://unarchives.un.org/unarms>.
- US National Archives. 867N, 501.BB (Palestine). College Park, MD. <http://www.archives.gov>.

—Ilan Pappé

War, 1967

The 1967 War was fought between Israel and its Arab neighbors EGYPT, JORDAN, and SYRIA. It began on 5 June when Israel launched a preemptive attack against the Egyptian and Syrian air forces, destroying virtually all of Egypt's fleet and most of Syria's. It ended on 10 June, after Israel had completed its final offensive in Syria's Syrian (renamed Golan by Israel) Heights, and a cease-fire was signed the following day. In those six days, Israel soundly defeated the three most developed Arab states, conquering and occupying the GAZA STRIP and the entire Sinai Peninsula from Egypt, the WEST BANK of the Jordan River including East JERUSALEM from Jordan, and Syria's Syrian Heights. Overall, Israel's territory grew by a factor of three and placed some one million Arabs under Israel's direct control in the newly captured territories.

On 5 June, after Israel carried out highly successful air attacks against the major Egyptian and Syrian airfields and planes, the Jordanian, Syrian, and a few Iraqi air forces mounted limited attacks against Israel. Subsequent Israeli attacks against secondary Egyptian airfields as well as Jordanian, Syrian, and Iraqi airfields wiped out almost all those nations' air forces. Israel claimed to have destroyed 416 Arab aircraft in total while losing 26 of its own. Throughout the war, Israeli aircraft continued strafing Arab airfield runways to prevent their return to usability.

Also on 5 June, Israel massed around 70,000 men, organized in three armored divisions, on the Egyptian front. One used two brigades to the north of Um-Katef, the first to break through the defenses at Abu-Ageila to the south, and the second to block the road to El-Arish and encircle Abu-Ageila from the east. The battles continued for three and a half days until Abu-Ageila fell, after which the Egyptian defense minister ordered all units in the Sinai to retreat. This order effectively meant the defeat of Egypt. By 8 June Israel had completed the capture of the Sinai, including the Gaza Strip. Sharm al-Shaykh, at the southernmost tip of the peninsula, had been taken a day earlier by units of the Israeli navy.

On 6 June Israeli units attacked Jordanian forces in the West Bank, and by the afternoon they had destroyed the Royal Jordanian Air Force in its entirety. By the evening of that day, Israeli ground forces had completed the encirclement of Jerusalem, although, fearing damage to holy places and having to fight in built-up areas, Minister of Defense MOSHE DAYAN ordered his troops not to advance into the city itself. But on 7 June heavy fighting led Israel to capture the fortress at Latrun, advance through Beit Horon toward Ramallah, and take the area of northwest Jerusalem that links the Mount Scopus campus of Hebrew University with the city of Jerusalem. By evening the ISRAELI DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) had secured JERICHO and thus reinforced Jerusalem.

Fighting continued for several days within Jerusalem and adjacent areas, but by 9 June Israel completely controlled the OLD CITY as well as Gush Etzion and HEBRON. By the evening of 9 June, Israel had conquered the entire West Bank.

On 9 June Israeli troops marched on the Syrian Heights (after the 5 June air attack, during which it destroyed two-thirds of the Syrian air force), forcing the remaining Syrian air forces to retreat to distant bases, after which it played no further role in the ensuing warfare. A minor Syrian force tried, but failed, to capture the water plant at Tel Dan (the subject of a fierce escalation two years earlier). Several Syrian tanks were reported to have sunk in the Jordan River. In any case, the Syrian command abandoned hopes of a ground attack and began shelling Israeli towns in the Hula Valley instead. The unique terrain of the Syrian Heights (mountainous slopes crossed by parallel streams every several kilometers running east to west) and the general lack of ROADS in the area, plus the advantage of excellent intelligence collected by MOSSAD operative Eli Cohen (who was captured and executed in Syria in 1965) regarding the Syrian battle positions, served Israel very well. By 10 June Syria too was defeated; Israel occupied the Heights and was preparing to move on to Damascus when pressure from the UNITED STATES and the UNITED NATIONS halted its advance.

The Israeli casualties in the war were quite low considering it defeated three major countries. The following figures are as confirmed by Israel: in total, 800 Israeli soldiers were killed and 2,563 Israelis were wounded. Arab casualties were much higher: in total, 21,000 Arab soldiers were killed and 45,000 others were wounded. Of these, 10,000 Egyptian soldiers were killed, with a further 1,500 Egyptian officers plus 20,000 soldiers wounded. Another 6,000 Egyptians were listed as missing. In 1995, Israeli military researcher Aryeh Yitzhaki claimed that Israeli troops massacred some 1,000 Egyptian prisoners of war in several incidents in the Sinai. On 26 February 2007, Israeli Television's Channel One aired a documentary film about the 1967 War titled Unit Shakidan. It was described by its director as a "self-examination" of Israel's use of force during the 1967 War and showed mass graves where 250 Egyptian prisoners of war were buried. The Israeli government denies all such allegations. Jordan lost 700 soldiers with around 2,500 wounded. Syrian losses were 2,500 dead and 5,000 wounded. Altogether, Israel captured 6,000 Arab soldiers and destroyed 416 Arab aircraft.

In his book Righteous Victims, Israeli historian Benny Morris writes that immediately after the war, "in three villages southwest of Jerusalem [Imwas, Yalu, and Beit Nuba in the Latrun area], Israel expelled the residents and destroyed the villages. . . . In the Old City of Jerusalem, Israel depopulated and demolished the Mughrabi (Moroccan) quarter adjacent to the WESTERN WALL to make room for a public square." Israel also depopulated the villages of Beit Marsam, Beit Awa, Jiftlik, and al-Burj as well as half the city of Qalqilya, where, according to Moshe Dayan in his Memoirs, "houses were destroyed not in battle, but as punishment . . . and in order to chase away the inhabitants. . . . In Qalqilya, about a third of the homes were razed and about 12,000 inhabitants were evicted, though many then camped out in the environs." In occupied eastern Jerusalem, Israel immediately disbanded the local municipal council and extended Israeli law and jurisdiction. A military government was installed in the West Bank and Gaza and, together with the municipal orders imposed on eastern Jerusalem, controlled the Palestinian population by policies of separation, isolation, and force.

Many thousands of other Palestinians took to the roads. Perhaps as many as 70,000, mostly from the Jericho area, fled during the fighting; tens of thousands more left over the following months. By September 1967 about one-quarter of the population of the West Bank, some 250,000 to 300,000 Palestinians, were expelled or fled, some for the second time. By December 1968 Israel had expelled or otherwise facilitated the departure of 75,000 Palestinians from the Gaza Strip out of a total population of 400,000. A smaller number of Palestinians were internally displaced during the war, including Palestinians expelled from the Old City of Jerusalem.

There is some evidence of IDF soldiers going around with loudspeakers ordering West Bankers to leave their homes and cross the Jordan. Some left because they had relatives or sources of livelihood on the East Bank and feared being permanently cut off. Israel put thousands of Palestinians on buses that drove them from East Jerusalem to the Allenby bridge. This Israeli-organized transportation, which began on 11 June 1967, went on for about a month. At the bridge Palestinians had to sign a document stating that they were leaving of their own free will. On 2 July the Israeli government announced that it would allow the return of those 1967 refugees who desired to return, but no later than by 10 August, which was later extended to 13 September. Few Palestinians even heard the Israeli offer, and fewer still had the means to make the trek back or overcome the onerous bureaucratic procedures involved. In practice only 14,000 of the 120,000 who did apply were actually allowed by Israel to return to the West Bank. In addition, between 80,000 and 110,000 Syrians fled the Syrian Heights, of which about 20,000 were from the city of Quneitra.

In response to the war, on 22 November 1967 the UN Security Council unanimously adopted UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 242 ostensibly to provide a road map for Arab-Israeli peace. The Palestinians were not included in the resolution except in a phrase calling for a solution to the REFUGEE problem. That resolution has remained the internationally recognized basis for peacemaking among Israel, the Arab states, and the Palestinians through this day, although Israel disputes it. Israel won another “victory” from the war: policymakers in Washington, D.C., were so impressed with Israel’s military performance that they adopted the idea (desired by Tel Aviv) of Israel as a STRATEGIC ASSET—a militarily superior Israel that could dominate the Middle East in the interests of US power, and massive amounts of US arms and dollars began flowing into the Jewish state.

Prior to the start of the war, Israel produced a plan for the soon-to-be OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. Meir Shamgar, a lawyer and jurist who became president of the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT, was the military advocate-general (1961–1968) when he wrote the Manual for the Military Advocate in Military Government. In his manual, Shamgar created the “legal” framework for the Israeli military government in the Occupied Territories. Written months before the beginning of overt hostilities, Shamgar devised the principles of a legal doctrine for Israel’s OCCUPATION of the West Bank and Gaza. In what later became official Israeli policy, he determined that Israel would not be “occupying” these areas, but rather “administering” them, and that therefore the Fourth Geneva Convention was inapplicable. Shamgar further determined that Palestinians would have no inherent legal rights under Israel’s administration and that Israeli SETTLEMENTS in the “administered areas” would be legal.

The Causes of the War

Several factors contributed to the 1967 War, some dating back to the 1956 SINAI/SUEZ WAR and others as far back as the 1948 WAR.

Following the 1956 War, the United Nations mandated that a UN Emergency Force (UNEF) be stationed in Israel and Egypt to prevent future hostilities. Israel refused to accept the UNEF on its territory, and it was thus stationed solely on Egyptian soil. From the end of the Sinai/Suez War until the beginning of the 1967 crisis, the Israeli-Egyptian border was peaceful. This, however, was almost exclusively the result of Egyptian preference rather than a consequence of the presence of UNEF, although the UNEF did supply JAMAL ‘ABD AL-NASIR with a rationale for refraining from permitting Palestinian guerrilla activity from Egyptian territory. However, as tensions escalated in the spring of 1967 and in the context of public Israeli threats against Syria, inter-Arab pressures forced Nasir to ask for a partial withdrawal of UNEF forces and the positioning of Egyptian troops in the Sinai. This led UN Secretary-General U Thant to immediately withdraw all the UNEF forces. Then, under intense pressure from Syria and other Arab states, Nasir closed the Straits of Tiran to Israeli transit. These combined factors gave Israel the excuse to portray Egypt as the aggressor in the 1967 War.

On the other hand, in the post-1956 period, the Israeli-Syrian border was far less calm for several reasons. First and foremost was the fundamental Arab-Israeli conflict, which always seemed at its most intractable between Syria and Israel. But specific issues also contributed to the tensions, including fishing rights in Lake Tiberias (Sea of Galilee), Palestinian guerrilla incursions into Israel from Syrian territory, Israeli encroachments on the demilitarized zone (DMZ) along the Syrian border, and the Israeli development of the Jordan River project (the “National Water Carrier”). This last issue, though part of the overall Arab-Israeli conflict, had a specifically Syrian dimension because it was centered along the Syrian border.

The escalation of all these issues became the trigger for war in 1967, although other regional developments provide an important backdrop. At the first Arab Summit conference that met in Cairo in January 1964, ‘Abd al-Nasir took the position that the Arab states needed to coordinate their military apparatuses to provide for their common defense against another Israeli invasion. To this end they attempted to organize a United Arab Command, but it never materialized. They also established an authority to implement an Arab project for ensuring that the Arab states received their share of the water resources Israel was rapidly draining. This never functioned either. Finally, the summit created the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION to control the small guerrilla groups that were carrying out incursions in Israel, fearing that Israel would attack the states from which they operated.

Thus, by 1965 the outlines of the third Arab-Israeli conflict were beginning to take shape around two sets of issues. The first was composed of inter-Arab competition and conflict, including Nasir's desire to maintain leadership of pan-Arabism in the context of rivalries among Egypt, Syria, Jordan, SAUDI ARABIA, and IRAQ. The second lay within the broad context of animosity between Arabs and Israelis, but it centered on the continuous conflict between Israel and Syria over the demilitarized zone and the National Water Carrier project, as well as FATAH guerrilla activities and the Israeli strategy of massive retaliation.

Two more specific incidents are important: the 13 November 1966 Israeli raid on three Palestinian villages near Hebron (then under Jordanian control) and the 7 April 1967 Israeli attack on Syrian planes over Syrian soil. The villages involved were Es Samu (which gives its name to the raid), Jimba, and Khirbet Kirkay. The Es Samu raid was without provocation from Jordan or from any Palestinian territory it occupied. Israel dispatched 4,000 troops in armored vehicles and tanks supported by several air squadrons in an attack on the villages, killing eighteen Jordanians and Palestinians and wounding fifty-four, including civilians. It also demolished 140 houses and other buildings, including the school, clinic, and mosque. The UN Security Council, by a vote of 14 to 0, censured Israel for the raid. Jordan was outraged, and shortly thereafter Amman signed a mutual defense pact with Egypt at Cairo's importuning.

From January to April 1967 there was a series of clashes between Israel and Syria, aggravated by Israel's announcement that it intended to cultivate all the areas in the DMZ. On the morning of 7 April 1967, Israel sent tractors into the DMZ;

Syria fired mortars at the tractors; Israel struck back with artillery, tanks, and aircraft. Seventy Israeli planes penetrated Syrian airspace and shot down six Syrian aircraft. Then followed five weeks of intense Arab and Israeli inflammatory rhetoric, the partial Egyptian mobilization on 14 May, Israeli mobilization on 15–16 May, the departure of UNEF on 16 May, and Israel's pre-emptive strike on 5 June.

At the end of June 1967, the Knesset passed a law effectively annexing Arab East Jerusalem. The United Nations responded on 3 July 1969 with UN Resolution 267, stipulating that Arab Jerusalem was defined as "occupied territory." The vote was unanimously against Israeli annexation of East Jerusalem; however, the annexation remained.

After successfully conducting the war, Moshe Dayan pacified the West Bank and developed a long-term plan—the DAYAN PLAN—for establishing Israeli control over the area. Within two weeks of the war's end, both he and YIGAL ALLON (the ALLON PLAN) conceptualized and made ready for the Israeli cabinet discussion two perspectives for Israel's long-term control of the territories, providing the guiding framework for the settlement movement in the years to come.

On 8 August 1982 Israeli prime minister MENAHEM BEGIN, addressing the National Defense College in Jerusalem, stated that the 1967 War was not a "war of necessity" but rather a "war of choice . . . Nasser did not attack us. We decided to attack him."

See also FATAH; INFILTRATION (PALESTINIAN) AND RETALIATION (ISRAELI); PROPAGANDA, ARAB; UNITED NATIONS TRUCE SUPERVISION ORGANIZATION

Bibliography

- Ball, George, and Douglas B. Ball. The Passionate Attachment: America's Involvement with Israel, 1947 to the Present. New York: W. W. Norton, 1992.
- BBC. "Egypt Angry over 1967 'Massacre.'" BBC News. 5 March 2007.
- Brecher, Michael. Decisions in Crisis: Israel 1967 and 1973. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1980.
- Dayan, Moshe. Story of My Life: An Autobiography. New York: William Morrow, 1976.
- Evron, Boaz. "The Holocaust: Learning the Wrong Lessons." Journal of Palestine Studies. 10:3 (April 1981).
- Hirst, David. The Gun and the Olive Branch, 3rd rev. ed. London: Faber and Faber, 2003.
- "Israel Reportedly Killed POWs in '67 War: Historians Say Death of Hundreds of Egyptians Was Covered Up." The Washington Post. 17 August 1995.

- Kerr, Malcolm. The Arab Cold War: Gamal 'Abd al-Nasir and His Rivals, 1950–1969, 3rd ed. New York: Oxford University Press, 1971.
- Morris, Benny. A History of the Zionist-Arab Conflict, 1881–2001. New York: Vintage, 2001.
- Morrow, Adam, and Khaled Moussa al-Omrani. "Israeli Documentary Reveals Egyptian POWs Slaughtered after 1967 War." Albion Monitor. Issue 156. Sebastopol, CA: Wayward Press, 2007.
- Neff, Donald. Warriors for Jerusalem: The Six Days That Changed the Middle East. New York: Linden Press/Simon and Schuster, 1984.
- Peres, Shimon. David's Sling. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1970.
- Riad, Mahmoud. The Struggle for Peace in the Middle East. New York: Quartet Books, 1981.
- Sharabi, Hisham. "Prelude to War: The Crisis of June 1967." In The Arab-Israeli Confrontation of June 1967: An Arab Perspective. Edited by Ibrahim Abu-Lughod. Evanston, IL: Northwestern University Press, 1970.
- Zertal, Idith. Israel's Holocaust and the Politics of Nationhood. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 2005.

War, 1967: Consequences for Israel

On 5 June 1967, Israeli forces attacked EGYPT, destroying its entire air force on the ground and launching a war that lasted six days and ultimately extended to JORDAN and SYRIA. It was a war that erupted after weeks of growing tension during which domestic, regional, and international dynamics took on a life of their own.

Although the origins of the war can be located at any number of points in the years preceding the confrontation, the proximate buildup began when Egyptian president JAMAL 'ABD AL-NASIR responded to a miscommunication from the SOVIET UNION regarding the imminence of an Israeli attack on Syria. Nasir mobilized his forces in Sinai, requested the UNITED NATIONS to withdraw the UN Emergency Force (UNEF) from the Egyptian-Israeli border, and closed the Straits of Tiran to Israeli shipping. In 1957, Israel had defined the straits as a casus belli, and thus the likelihood of war increased dramatically. Although Nasir's goals appear to have been largely political, he could not control the growing excitement among the Arab people throughout the region, where rhetoric about undoing the failures of the 1948 WAR, in which Israel defeated Arab forces, contributed to heightened mass expectations and to the decision by Jordan's King Husayn to enter into a defense alliance with Egypt on 30 May. In Israel, the feeling of being encircled by hostile Arab states and years of war gave rise to demands for a national unity government as well as to the appointment of MOSHE DAYAN, a well-respected military leader, as minister of defense.

In Israel, the immediate military success of the war—coupled with few casualties and the rapid conquest of significant territories, including the Sinai and the GAZA STRIP, the WEST BANK, East JERUSALEM, and the Golan Heights—gave rise to relief as well as euphoria. The initial Israeli intent, to return most of the newly won territories in exchange for peace treaties, was quickly replaced by a commitment to the unification of Jerusalem and an adamant refusal to return to the 4 June borders. At the same time, the magnitude of the defeat ensured that Arab states as well as the newly emerging Palestinian movement would seek redress for the humiliation suffered.

The 1967 War is also known as the Six Day War, an appellation coined by Dayan that has biblical symbolism because it refers to God's creation, which took six days. It also highlights the military drama of a conflict that changed the map of the Middle East in less than a week. Although these descriptions imply a rapidly completed confrontation, the 1967 War had profound ramifications for Israelis, who entered the conflict with barely nineteen years of statehood behind them. Its impact must be understood both in the concrete changes the war brought and in the meanings ascribed to it. Moreover, central to any assessment must be an analysis of the ways in which this war complicated efforts to deal with issues left unresolved after the 1948 War and how it reopened basic questions related to the nature of the state. The 1967 War was not limited in its impact to the immediate belligerents: Israel, Egypt, Syria, and Jordan. This conflict made Israel a visibly dominant state in a region already the site of Cold War rivalries, ideological challenges, uncertain political legitimacies, and economic difficulties heightened by disparities of resources as well as by the international interest in oil. Israel's deepening identification with the UNITED STATES in the aftermath of the war must also be taken into account. Simultaneously and perhaps somewhat paradoxically, the recognition Israel gained after the war as the dominant regional power coincided with the emergence of a new movement that embodied, for Israelis, their worst and most deeply repressed fear: the assertion of Palestinian national claims.

The Near East after the 1967 June War

Territories conquered and occupied by Israel
as of 10 June 1967

© Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs (PASSIA), Jerusalem, reprinted with permission.

Map 46. The Near East after the 1967 War

Whereas the outcome of the 1948 War appeared to shift the conflict decisively from that of two different ethnic communities—Palestinian Arabs and Jews struggling over their rights to the same piece of land—to a more typical one of interstate conflict, the 1967 War reunited the territory of Mandate Palestine and, with it, the centrality of Palestinian-Israeli dynamics. Thus, a discussion of the 1967 War and its meaning for Israel must consider the ways in which Israel's military victory contributed to shaping and inhibiting the ongoing process of nation-state formation as well as to the expansion and contraction of its power to define its position in the world.

Domestic Context of War

The state of Israel, which appeared briefly in 1967 to be remarkably powerful and united in its defense against an external threat, was in fact a state that had failed to resolve many of the internal issues on which there was significant disagreement. The policies of its first prime minister, DAVID BEN-GURION, emphasized the consolidation of state institutions dominated by his party (MAPAI) and contributed significantly to a central role by the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) in both foreign and domestic policy. The military, viewed as creator and defender of the nation, emphasized the centrality of Israel's regional threat as formative to the state.

The failure of peace negotiations in 1949 left open a number of issues that remain undecided to this day (the status of Jerusalem, final BORDERS, and solutions for the displaced Palestinian REFUGEES from the wars), and the failure was accompanied by the decision to delay the writing of an Israeli constitution. Ben-Gurion believed that experience would eventually ease the complexity of making decisions about potentially difficult issues, such as relations between the state and religion. In fact, Ben-Gurion came to an agreement with religious parties on maintaining the status quo. The result appeared to facilitate governing coalitions in which Mapai, a secular labor party, dominated Israeli politics but failed to resolve differing perspectives on the meaning of what was now defined as the Jewish state. Similarly, the relationship between Israeli citizenship and the Jewish people remained subject to debate. In all these arenas, the ongoing atmosphere of Israel's isolation in the region enhanced the perception that discussion should be delayed until security had been ensured.

Directly connected to these phenomena were policies that bound internal relations to external relations. Thus, the military administration over the PALESTINIAN CITIZENS OF ISRAEL who remained within the physical boundaries of Israel furthered separatism among Israelis and undermined any efforts at including the Arab population that constituted a distinct minority in the new national entity.

Three additional factors were formative influences in the period prior to 1967. The first can be described as the ramifications of post-HOLOCAUST IMMIGRATION (1947–1950), with its symbolic as well as political and economic effects. The second was the immigration of large numbers of Jews from the Arab world who brought with them cultural and social perspectives distinctively different from those of the European survivors and who were perceived by the dominant Israeli elite as a challenge to integration (1948–1954). Finally, the international context of decolonization and the Cold War established specific parameters and choices for the new state. These issues, unlike the creation of a constitution, for example, required immediate decisions and could not be finessed as the domestic ones had been. The result was that the emphasis on collective survival and security obscured the degree to which pre-state differences were now supplemented by new rifts among competing parties, ideologies, and policies.

By 1966 the Israeli society and economy were experiencing significant challenges. Rapid expansion, fueled in part by reparation payments by GERMANY, added to social inequalities and was followed by a recession, which raised fears about whether the state could maintain its pace of growth. The role of ZIONISM and its ideological mobilization, so important to the creation of the state, were now open to question as a new generation came of age. Increasing outmigration and decreasing immigration were reflected in the potential emergence of a more stable Israeli public, which might allow reconsideration of the relationship between the state and, on one hand, its citizenry and, on the other, the Jewish DIASPORA. At the same time, the termination of the internal military administration over the Palestinians (1966), combined with the slowdown in immigration, created the possibility of defining the concept of "citizen" in far more diverse ways than Zionist ideology had foreseen.

Pulling in another direction, however, were regional and international developments whose interpretation was critical both to decisionmaking by policymakers and to public reactions. Intrastate tensions within the Arab world contributed to the emergence of Syrian support for a newly active Palestinian commando movement, FATAH. An Egyptian arms buildup and Cairo's ties to the Soviet Union highlighted the polarization that accompanied Cold War divisions, intensifying Israel's search for stronger military support from the United States. Thus, in the aftermath of the Eichmann trial (1961), which had strengthened Israeli Jews' identification with the trauma of the Holocaust, hostile Arab rhetoric and regional actions were readily translated into a public search for security through support for military policies. Without recognizing it, Israeli civil society had become highly militarized. Initiatives undertaken by the IDF—a reprisal raid against the Jordanian village of Samu in the fall of 1966 as well as flights over Syria in early 1967—were understood by the Israeli public within the context of self-defense and security. The reality hidden from the public, but later revealed by Moshe Dayan, was that the flights were intentional provocations against Syria. Equally obscured from the Israeli public was the reality of Israeli military superiority.

Events in the weeks leading up to the war affected both Israelis and Jews throughout the world, particularly in the United States. From 16 May 1967, when 'Abd al-Nasir requested removal of UNEF from Sinai, to 1 June, when a national unity government was formed in Israel, the Israeli public mistrusted the capacity of Prime Minister LEVI ESHKOL, not a militaristic-oriented leader, to deal effectively with the threat. The rapidity with which UN Secretary-General U Thant removed UNEF further reinforced the perception of isolation. As Arab capitals became the site of demonstrations supporting confrontation with Israel, and the rhetoric of "throwing Jews into the sea" further raised expectations of revenge, Israelis came to believe that they were facing an existential threat comparable to that of 1948. Well aware of the vulnerability of their borders, Israelis reacted with fear to the growing encirclement of an Arab alliance now seemingly united and determined. At the same time, the realities of a small state in which the military had to mobilize its citizenry and could not readily sustain a long period of mobilization, compared with the resources of Egypt and Syria, which had more leeway in this regard, became more starkly evident.

When it came, the war brought with it cathartic relief and shock at the same time. In the place of a besieged state hemmed in and unrecognized by any of its neighbors, Israelis found themselves with extraordinary power and expansive space. It was a situation for which they were unprepared as much in the practical sense as in the political one. Although many individuals quickly discerned the conundrum of a military victory that had no clear political goals, the political system was poorly positioned to formulate a policy predicated on the new realities. The unity of security readily gave way to a fragmentation of competing visions and interpretations, now vying for support. The euphoric reaction of a public temporarily released from fear did not create an environment hospitable to sober analyses.

Interpreting Victory

It is widely recognized that the 1967 War helped to revive and legitimize religious forms of Zionism that laid claim to historical events to justify their actions. Thus, Israel's capture of the West Bank and Gaza, viewed by some as restoration of the biblical Land of Israel, provided a new site of contestation to define the meaning of the state. What scholar Ian Lustick has called the "fetishization of Jerusalem" was an important piece of this process, in which secular nationalist interests in absorbing all of Jerusalem were accompanied by religious justifications. At the same time, secular leaders without messianic beliefs nevertheless contributed to the success of what became an entirely new movement of settlers developing their own material and spiritual investments in occupying this territory. This conjunction of forces reflected a continuity of failure to confront differences over the place of religion in the state, but it was also reflective of two other factors. On the one hand, the dominance of security and military values and interests led secular leaders to insist on the need for expansive, secure, and defensible borders. On the other hand, the absence of a clearly articulated legal basis for secular democracy, typically defined in a constitution, rendered the traditional LABOR PARTY leadership ambivalent in its efforts at containing messianic forces such as the GUSH EMUNIM settler movement.

In the immediate aftermath of the war, notable voices expressed strong opinions about the need to withdraw from the territories occupied in the war and the dangers to Israeli society of remaining as an occupying power. Ben-Gurion and philosopher YESHAYAHU LEIBOWITZ were among the most prominent of those arguing that Israel could not afford to take responsibility for the Palestinian population now under its control. Despite the fact that an Arab summit in August 1967 agreed on the three no's—to recognition of Israel, to negotiation with Israel, and to peace with Israel—UN RESOLUTION 242, passed in November 1967, created the basis for a negotiated settlement leading to Israeli withdrawal in exchange for peace. From 1967 to 1973, numerous efforts were made by representatives of the UNITED NATIONS and the United States to broker agreements between Israel and Egypt as well as Jordan.

In hindsight, it must be asked why the governments of Israel in that period could not respond positively to these initiatives. This is particularly striking given the fact that already in 1969, the WAR OF ATTRITION between Egypt and Israel showed that there would be a continuing toll from the conflict with Egypt, while the development of the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) and its attacks added a new element of insecurity. The war of 1967, with its promise of security and dominance, ironically led to less rather than more security for the population. This reality, however, was obscured by the mistrust that now belatedly infused popular perceptions of peace plans based on withdrawal. The disparity in regional military forces lent credibility to the Israeli idea that there was no need to act urgently and that withdrawal could be more dangerous than a situation of no war/no peace.

One way of understanding the impact of this war is to separate Israel's victory over the Arab states from its effective loss, given the emerging Palestinian national movement. The war of 1967 was itself partially stimulated by the activism of Palestinian commandos on the borders, but it was only after the war that the PLO emerged as a new voice internationally. The reunification of the territory that had been governed by the BRITISH MANDATE signified in many ways the return of the repressed. For Israelis it meant confrontation with their own earlier history, with the unresolved ending of the Mandate and with the price of the 1948 victory. The reluctance or inability to withdraw from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES when Jordan would have been the logical negotiating partner inevitably meant the reincorporation of a communal conflict that had been suppressed and that many believed could be forgotten and/or denied. Although Dayan famously announced that he was waiting for a phone call from the Arab states, he was also responsible for the open bridges policy allowing Palestinians to travel freely between the Occupied Territories and Jordan and for creating a policy of OCCUPATION that was predicated on the possibility of benign control of the Occupied Territories with sufficient economic integration (coupled with rigorous military control) to preclude revolt. Both policies were part of a broader stance in which the Israeli government once again decided not to decide: avoiding the confrontation required to define what territory Israel would or would not give up, what kind of state would or would not emerge, and who would or would not belong to its citizenry.

The emergence of the PLO on the international stage was a critical outcome of the 1967 War and an important component in determining the impact of the war on Israel. Although the leaders of Arab states such as Egypt, Jordan, IRAQ, and Syria might utilize rhetoric to call Israel a colonial intruder, a threat to Arab unity, and a danger to the entire region, they nevertheless were bound by the constraints of their own interests, which required respect for Israel's growing economic and military power. The PLO, however, was initially determined to establish its own claim to legitimacy in the name of a national liberation movement that sought to replace Israel and to identify it with other colonial powers such as FRANCE in Algeria. In the atmosphere of the late 1960s and early 1970s with the ongoing Vietnam War, PLO activism, including terrorist actions as well as guerrilla attacks, challenged Israel's military success with an appeal to justice and an attack on Israel's legitimacy as a state. This attack, although answered with a counterattack both denying Palestinian history and equating the PLO with TERRORISM, nevertheless spoke to the never-confronted internal differences with regard to the Zionist movement, the grounds on which the Israeli state had established itself. Ironically, moreover, INTERNATIONAL LAW and the United Nations as the basis of Israel's legitimacy lost credibility in a situation colored on the one hand by a United Nations seen increasingly as hostile to Israel, and on the other hand by Israeli unwillingness to adhere to international law with regard to its Occupation and SETTLEMENTS.

Emergence of the Settlement Movement

In these circumstances, the most profound impact that the 1967 War had on Israeli society and polity was the emergence of a settler movement whose perpetual challenge to state laws laid bare the serious contradictions between the state's declared policies and its secret support for those who undermined the law. The illusory freedom of action generated by the outcome of 1967 and the acquiescence of a Palestinian population largely stunned by its new position allowed members of the Israeli government to maintain their public opposition to illegal settlements while simultaneously failing to act decisively against them and even enabling them. In an interview Dayan gave in 1976 (published only in 1997 after his death), he maintained that one of his two most serious mistakes was not to threaten resignation over the entry of settlers into HEBRON, although he recognized the transformative implications of that event. What was at stake was the basis for Israeli-Palestinian relations; the settlers clearly articulated their intention of utilizing state power in the service of their own messianic goals. Another war in 1973, the victory of the LIKUD PARTY in 1977, the rapid growth of settlements, and with them a constituency devoted to permanent expansion of the state, all signaled the weakness of the Labor establishment. Labor had been losing credibility in all areas—national security, economic development, and the capacity to represent citizens who felt historically marginalized (both MIZRAHI Jews and Israeli Palestinians).

The outcome of the 1967 War contained the potential for developments in widely disparate directions. Physically, it broke down barriers that had served to isolate but also to define Israel in the nineteen years of its existence. Lack of integration into the region as well as a prohibition on local travel had only reinforced domestic divisions between a dominant political and cultural elite with ties to Europe and a population of Arab-Jewish immigrants as well as the Palestinian community. For Palestinians living in Israel, the nineteen years of disconnection from surrounding states, coupled with having citizenship in a state that expected disloyalty (and thus imposed direct and indirect controls), now was replaced by a politics in which the advantages of citizenship were insufficient to affect a political arena increasingly ethnonational in its definition. Thus, the new uncertainty of physical borders coincided with increased emphasis on communal differences. Materially, the sudden expansion further intensified the imbalances and stratifications that governed the capacity to make gains in the new environment. By 1977, when the change in government from Labor to Likud also ushered in a decisive ideological shift, the early emphasis on statist centralization was replaced by increasing differentiation, both socially and economically.

The Israel of 1966, in economic recession and disillusionment, gave way after 1967 to an Israel of renewed economic expansion and growing external investment, tourism, and expanding immigration. A critical component at all levels was the beginning of what was to become a singular relationship with and dependence on the United States. The importance of this link—between victory in 1967 and reliance on the United States—can hardly be overemphasized. When, in 1973, the United States came to Israel's aid during an unexpected war with Syria and Egypt, the connection was cemented in ways that helped to determine the direction that Israeli development would take thereafter.

US-Israeli Relationship

The 1967 War was critical in consolidating trends already embryonic before the conflict. In the 1960s, AMERICAN JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS that had worried about the 1961 Eichmann trial's potential to generate ANTI-SEMITISM had gradually moved closer to identification with Israel. At the same time, the replacement of President JOHN KENNEDY by President LYNDON JOHNSON evidenced warmer relations at the official level, including an increase in military aid and a decrease in challenges to Israel's NUCLEAR PROGRAM. Additionally, it was not until after the war of 1967 that international polarization and Israeli military strength began to generate more direct US engagement in efforts to manage the Arab-Israeli conflict. After the war of 1973 (and the concomitant OPEC oil boycott), Israel's dependence on US resupply and on US support in the United Nations became even more striking as its position internationally was characterized by renewed isolation and loss of diplomatic relations with numerous other countries. Although the US-Israeli relationship was sometimes conflicted, its importance was striking when compared to the pre-1967 era. It contributed to maintaining the significance of the military in Israeli society and culture, and, together with its attendant technological and industrial developments, the relationship was critical to Israeli policy as well as to its national identity.

At the same time, the 1967 War had an enormous impact on an American Jewish community that responded to the weeks prior to war with apprehension and mobilization and that viewed the subsequent victory as a source of pride and security. In the period after 1967, American Jews began to immigrate to Israel in greater numbers and, perhaps as importantly, to articulate views of the Arab-Israeli conflict based on this identification. Thus, whereas prior to the war there was decided evidence of differentiation between Israeli nationality and the Jewish community, the war itself shifted emphasis to a conceptualization that insisted on the centrality of a particular Jewish identity to the Israeli state and on the related significance of American Jewish participation in its support.

There was, however, another aspect to the new US-Israeli partnership: Israel perceived that to ensure the support of the US government and the American Jewish establishment, it had to appear strong and dominant, identified with democratic values and institutions, including capitalism, and committed to fighting any manifestation of Soviet power in the region. These constrained the directions the state could take and seriously weakened any forces within Israel that might have challenged them. Additionally, Israeli public opinion had come to identify the ties to the United States as necessary for security and therefore challenged none of the state's policies.

If the war created a new political arena and reopened questions that had been considered closed, it also created extremely powerful pressures to articulate the legitimacy and interests of Israel's "case" on the world stage. The paradox of this situation lay in the fact that the opportunities created by the war—to finally face and resolve that which had been suppressed after 1948—were now largely inhibited by the need to justify rather than reconsider. This situation was reinforced both by the links to US policy and by the challenges posed by a Palestinian movement now in its formative stages. As a result, Israeli policy from 1967 to 1977 was typically characterized by defensive efforts to ward off demands for withdrawal from the Occupied Territories and to emphasize security as well as the status quo while minimizing the impact of Occupation in creating new realities.

Effects of Occupation

The land conquered by Israel in 1967 had been governed by three separate and distinct states—Egypt, Jordan, and Syria. In two cases—Egypt and Syria—the territories that they expected to regain (Sinai and the Golan Heights) were not densely inhabited, although in both cases they entailed the loss of significant resources as well as symbolic importance. In contrast, Israel's control of the Gaza Strip and the West Bank required from the outset the definition of relationship, the creation of an administrative structure, and the development of a framework for daily existence. The Palestinian population now subject to Israeli control carried memories not only of its loss in 1947–1948 but also of the subsequent nineteen years of assimilative efforts under Jordanian annexation and of separatism under Egyptian administration. It was a population characterized by different experiences in the years since 1948 but with a historical framework of leadership and national identity that was distinctly rooted in the Mandate history of 1917–1948 and long before. The reunification of Palestinian territory brought Palestinians face-to-face with the reality of change since 1948 and, with it, the fact that the Israeli state was now governing every aspect of their daily existence.

For many Israelis, however, there were also memories and deep emotions that surfaced in this encounter. MERON BENVENISTI, former deputy mayor of Jerusalem, has written about his reactions to Israeli Occupation of the West Bank. Like others who had lived in Palestine during the Mandate, he had personal memories of it as accessible before it was severed in 1948. These memories were connected to Jerusalem and other locations with religious significance but also with a life in Palestine where both Arabs and Jews constituted communities under British government. Those experiences, the positive and the painful, inevitably came nearer the surface, and with them the visibility of the price paid for the success of the Zionist project. Although Prime Minister GOLDA MEIR might famously have said in 1969 that there were no Palestinians, many Israelis who had lived that history knew full well the meaninglessness of her statement.

Thus, when the Israeli government had to make decisions with regard to administering the West Bank and Gaza, its decisionmaking was governed, on the one hand, by the historical and legal framework of the Mandate and the earlier Israeli military administration of Israel's Arab citizens from 1948 through 1966 and, on the other, by a history of competing with Palestinians for control of land and political legitimacy. Official statements might have insisted on identifying Palestinians with all other Arabs, but policies revealed that the distinctions were well understood. It was in this context that the government assessed options that from the first included suggestions for Palestinian autonomy, as well as for returning the territory and its inhabitants to Jordan and for its annexation to Israel. Instead of adopting any one of these, the government formulated a policy intended to be temporary that would allow Occupation until conditions were favorable for peace on Israel's terms. Israel's leaders understood military victory in a war of self-defense as one that ensured long-term security and political recognition. In the absence of these, their official perception was that they could afford to wait. These decisions were the outcome of euphoria in 1967, but the war of 1973 decisively reawakened fears. First was the success of the PLO—its official recognition at the Arab League's 1974 RABAT SUMMIT meeting as "the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people," its invitation to address the UN General Assembly, and its increasing recognition from European states. These reawakened fears ensured that the Israeli public would accept the view that security, as defined by military control over the Occupied Territories, continued to be critical while they remained largely oblivious to the impact of that control on the Palestinian population.

Public Discourse and Division

In the aftermath of June 1967, the Israeli government and public were faced with the fact that extraordinary military victory did not have the anticipated effect. Although the Israeli government had operated on the expectation that there would be renewed military conflict with the Arab states at some point, it was presumed that proof of Israel's military superiority would eventually lead to settlement of the conflict. Instead, Israel's 1967 victory failed to yield political resolution or reconciliation with the Arab states. Why and how this was the case, who or what was responsible, what was the wisest way to react to this new reality, and what were the choices—all these and other issues inevitably entered into the domain of public discussion. That discussion, which took various forms over the course of time and as the results of 1967 became themselves part of Israeli history, has continued to this day.

From an ideological perspective, 1967 led to new debates about the meaning of Zionism. Some (Greater Land of Israel Movement, Gush Emunim, etc.) interpreted the war as a stimulus to support the continuation of Zionism as an activist movement of immigration and settlement, often appealing to religious legitimization for their claims and seeing victory as justification for an expansion that had earlier been denied. Others ultimately grieved over what they saw as the death of the secular Labor Zionism to which they were attached. Those who believed that Zionism had succeeded when the state was established but that it had to give way to the "normalization" they had sought now felt that Zionism was being hijacked in the service of new goals by new claimants to political influence. Because many of the tools and modes of operation utilized by Labor Zionism in the prestate period were now used to serve messianic competitors, the more profound questions being raised had to do with the degree to which contradictions within Labor Zionism itself could or would be confronted. Once again, however, appeals to national security and immediate needs largely deflected attention until the Labor defeat at the polls in 1977 introduced a new political reality.

It was in connection with the Sadat-Begin negotiations, which followed that election, that an organized peace movement began to consolidate its presence as a visible actor. The importance of this development, as well as of the intensified support by the new government for Jewish settlements in the Occupied Territories, was to make unmistakable the fact that the post-1967 foreign policy challenges were intimately linked to the unsettled nature of the relationships between the Israeli state and society: in the deeply conflicted process of defining the bases of the state as well as its normative and legal frameworks, its historical and legal legitimacies were brought to the surface. As differences in these areas emerged in a society increasingly diverse and deeply divided, the debate on security and peace often involved alternative conceptualizations of the nation and the state. The interpretation of ongoing external threats then often served to make more difficult a process that entailed recognition of historical as well as contemporary challenges to political consensus.

Although there have been two wars and two INTIFADAS, along with periods of terrorism and border conflicts, since 1967, no one event has so thoroughly altered Israeli geography, politics, society, and economy as the war of 1967. At the time, it appeared in some ways as the fulfillment of fantasized wishes, but in retrospect it has at times seemed the origin of ongoing nightmares. Although the state of Israel came into existence in 1948, it was still very much in the process of developing in 1967, and that development was permanently altered and its course formed or, some would say, deformed by its outcome.

In many ways, Israel has flourished since that time. It has become a country with a highly developed economy that includes successful high-tech sectors relevant to both military and civilian arenas. Its population, enhanced by successive waves of immigration as well as natural growth, has expanded to support a far more varied culture and a well-developed civil society. When the LEBANON WAR of 1982 triggered significant opposition inside Israel and the first generation of REFUSENIKS in the military, the emergence of criticism generated confrontations but also open debate. Despite constant political and military challenges, it was not until the outbreak of the First Intifada in 1987 that the price of 1967 was widely recognized. The effects of having achieved significant dominance in the region while simultaneously governing a large Palestinian population under Occupation now became inescapable as a new generation of Israelis educated after 1967 confronted their Palestinian peers. Overall, neither side had been educated with a historical or political framework that would allow them to locate the “other” in a meaningful set of relationships creating context for the immediate enmity and obvious disparity of power.

Despite the clear asymmetry between Palestinians and Israelis, the Intifada made evident their interdependence as well. The 1967 War had changed Israel from a small, predominantly Jewish country with an Arab minority of 10 percent and an orientation toward Europe as its model to a state that incorporated under its government a Palestinian Arab population with growing ties to Palestinian Israeli citizens (20 percent of the Israeli population in 2000) and a Mizrahi community with increasing cultural, political, and religious claims to identity. Even though the Occupied Territories were not formally annexed, there were those who argued, as early as 1986, that economic ties and settlements were creating a reality in which it would be impossible to disentangle one population (Israeli citizens) from the other (Palestinian Arabs in the territories).

As the First Intifada brought the situation to a head, two additional developments served to deflect popular attention from this reality and to support the hopes of those who wished for a TWO-STATE SOLUTION to resolve the conflict. The first was the dissolution of the Soviet Union and, along with it, increasing immigration of SOVIET JEWS to Israel, which once again changed the demographic balance as well as the political arena. The second was the MADRID CONFERENCE (1991), followed by the OSLO PROCESS (1993–2000), predicated in effect on the idea of undoing the 1967 War, on what has been called land for peace—Israel’s withdrawal from the Occupied Territories in exchange for peace with Arab states. This formula worked in the peace treaty between Israel and Egypt and could theoretically govern a resolution between Syria and Israel. However, the formula does not recognize the impossibility of undoing historical processes that have taken on a life of their own: 1948 has been labeled a catastrophe for Palestinians; 1967 has been memorialized as a victory for Israelis. Both wars have been central to creating conditions for national mobilization predicated on difference, and their continuing impact is central to the failures to recognize mutuality.

See also MOSHE DAYAN; DEMOGRAPHY; GREATER LAND OF ISRAEL MOVEMENT; GUSH EMUNIM; HOLOCAUST; ISRAELI MILITARISM; ISRAELI PEACE MOVEMENT; JEWISH FUNDAMENTALISM; MEDIA, ISRAELI; MIZRAHI; OCCUPATION; OUTPOSTS; PALESTINIAN CITIZENS OF ISRAEL; POST-ZIONISM; SEPHARDI; SETTLEMENTS; ZIONISM

Bibliography

- Benvenisti, Meron. Conflicts and Contradictions. New York: Random House/Villard Books, 1986.
- Dayan, Moshe. Dayan Memoirs: Interviews of Moshe Dayan by Rami Tal. Translated by Reuven Kaminer. HaGalil, 1986. <http://www.hagalil.com/GuShalom/maamarim/dayan.htm>.
- Lustick, Ian S. “Yerushalayim, al-Quds and the Wizard of Oz: Facing the Problem of Jerusalem after Camp David II and the al-Aqsa Intifada.” Journal of Israeli History. 23:2 (Autumn 2004).
- Migdal, Joel S. “Changing Boundaries and Social Crisis: Israel and the 1967 War.” In War, Institutions, and Social Change in the Middle East. Edited by Steven

- Heydemann. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press, 2000.
- O'Ballance, Edgar. The Third Arab-Israeli War. Hamden, CT: Archon Books, 1972.
- Oren, Michael. Six Days of War. New York: Oxford University Press, 2002.
- Parker, Richard, ed. The Six-Day War: A Retrospective. Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 1996.
- Shapira, Avraham, et al., eds. The Seventh Day: Soldiers' Talk about the Six-Day War. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1971.

—Ylana Miller

War, 1967: Consequences for the Palestinians

The June 1967 WAR represented a massive defeat for the Palestinians and for the Arab states, revealing their military weaknesses, bringing more LAND under Israeli control, and causing more Palestinians to become REFUGEES. Yet the war also galvanized the Palestinians, politically and militarily, transforming their relations with the Arab states and the international community.

Life in the Occupied Territories

At the end of the war, Israel controlled all of the land that had formerly comprised the BRITISH MANDATE of Palestine. This included the 140-square-mile GAZA STRIP. To the west of it, Israeli forces captured and occupied all of the Sinai Peninsula. Palestinians in Gaza were thus cut off from EGYPT, with which they had a long cultural, economic, and administrative relationship. The Israeli military also conquered the WEST BANK, referred to by Palestinian resistance groups as Central Palestine and constituting 2,270 square miles claimed by JORDAN. With it the Israelis captured East JERUSALEM and its OLD CITY, which contained the Islamic holy area of AL-HARAM ASH-SHARIF (the TEMPLE MOUNT) and the Church of the Holy Sepulcher sacred in CHRISTIANITY as well as the WESTERN WALL venerated by Jews. A demographic transformation accompanied the territorial transformation. As in 1948, a wave of refugees, some of whom the Israeli military expelled, fled the newly conquered areas of Palestine during the war and in the months following. Between 200,000 and 250,000 departed the West Bank, reducing its population to about 600,000 by September 1967. By December 1968 the Israeli government had evicted or facilitated the departure of about 75,000 of the total population of 400,000 in the Gaza Strip, transporting a large proportion of the evictees to Jordan. For the first time, more than half of all Palestinians lived in exile from any part of Palestine.

The Israeli defense minister, MOSHE DAYAN, attempted to create an “invisible OCCUPATION” in the territories and thus advanced the economic integration of the occupied areas into the Israeli economy. Because the war had caused extensive economic dislocation for Palestinians who remained and had left a high proportion of the labor force unemployed, Dayan reversed Israel’s initial policy of banning Palestinians of the territories from working inside Israel. The Israeli government’s policy became one of pursuing full employment and what it deemed to be a “reasonable standard of living” for the Palestinians under military Occupation. Five labor exchanges were opened in the Gaza Strip and seven in the West Bank by the end of 1968. Within the next six months, about 18,000 Palestinian workers found employment in Israel, the majority of them illegally.

Israeli Occupation authorities in Gaza at first attempted to create jobs locally in public works and by supplying small loans to businesses and agricultural enterprises. Palestinians established about 100 new factories, and production in Gaza’s industrial sector expanded by nearly 30 percent per year from 1967 to 1973. Israeli investors established twelve enterprises employing Palestinians in the ERETZ industrial zone, located on the northern edge of the Gaza Strip. Occupation authorities also encouraged local agricultural production that did not compete with Israeli produce. Although Gaza’s citrus producers benefited by the arrangement, Palestinian dairy and poultry producers could neither compete with government-subsidized Israeli producers nor reach an alternative market and thus went out of business. Despite the increase in investment in the territories, 15 percent of the West Bank and Gaza’s total gross national product (GNP) in 1970 derived from wages for work in the Israeli economy. That proportion continued to grow, especially after 1972, when Israel lifted RESTRICTIONS ON MOVEMENT of Palestinians from Gaza into Israel.

The economic life in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES consequently became increasingly dependent upon Israel, and Israeli policies intensified the sense of the permanence of the Occupation for both Palestinians and Israelis. This economic dependence intensified in the Gaza Strip where the Israeli national electrical grid was extended to the main towns. Prior to the war, about 5,000 homes received electricity. The number reached 24,000 by 1970. In the West Bank, however, local companies established prior to the war continued to supply electricity, and Israel pursued an “open bridges” policy with Jordan, allowing commerce and family contacts across the Jordan River. That policy, in addition to maintaining the Jordanian currency in the West Bank, ameliorated the effects of the Occupation on Palestinians. The more important benefit of the open-bridges-to-Israel policy was to create an outlet for goods produced in the territories that threatened to compete with Israeli products. At the same time, Israel’s exports to the Occupied Territories made them its second largest export market after the UNITED STATES.

Israeli regional military commanders, who were responsible for administration of the territories, coordinated their policies with representatives of Israeli civilian ministries. Thus, even under military Occupation, the authority and policies of the Israeli government were extended into the territories. In 1968, the Israeli government officially changed the name of the West Bank to JUDEA and SAMARIA, and the Gaza Strip became the Gaza District, indicating that it was no different from any administrative district inside Israel. These changes further suggested the permanence of Israel’s control over the occupied lands.

One of the clearest indicators of the enduring nature of the Occupation was Israel’s annexation of East Jerusalem and its roughly 66,000 Palestinian inhabitants less than three weeks after the end of the war. Even before the cessation of hostilities, Israeli municipal authorities demolished the homes of 650 Palestinian Arabs in Jerusalem’s Maghrabi quarter, in the vicinity of al-Buraq (the WESTERN WALL). In the area surrounding East Jerusalem, the Israeli government confiscated about 4,000 acres of private Palestinian land by 1970. The government also advanced the political integration of the territories into Israel by immediately establishing SETTLEMENTS in the West Bank. Construction of the first civilian settlement, Kfar Etzion, began in September 1967 on the site of a Jewish settlement destroyed by Jordanian forces during the 1948 WAR. Soon after, the government built a number of military bases—cum—agricultural settlements known as NAHAL units, mostly in the JORDAN RIFT VALLEY, and in 1970, followers of RABBI MOSHE LEVINGER established the settlement of KIRYAT ARBA, adjacent to the city of HEBRON. There were seventeen settlements in the West Bank by 1973, most of them in the Jordan Valley. The government permitted the first civilian settlement in Gaza in 1971, but soon after, the military constructed five Nahal units there. The settlements materially demonstrated to Palestinians the continued incorporation of the Occupied Territories into Israel and laid the foundation for the rapid intensification of the settler movement after 1977. The net effect of Israel’s policies following the 1967 War was to bring about the effective annexation of the territories without extending citizenship or any other rights to Palestinians.

New Guerrilla Strategy

Israel’s rapid and total defeat of three confrontation states—Egypt, SYRIA, and Jordan—during the 1967 War discredited the Arab states individually and collectively in the eyes of Palestinians. Their confidence in the Arab governments continued to erode in the immediate aftermath of the war. The ARAB LEAGUE, convening in Khartoum, Sudan, in August 1967, produced a resolution calling for no peace, no recognition, and no negotiations with Israel. Despite this language of confrontation, the resolution required the Arab governments only to “ensure the withdrawal” of Israeli forces from lands “occupied since the aggression of 5 June,” but not to achieve the liberation of all of Palestine. The Khartoum resolution also implied the continued intention of the Arab states to restrain the Palestinian guerrilla organizations by stating that the task of regaining the lands lost in the war was that of the Arab states. Egypt and Jordan, in particular, envisioned coexistence with Israel after regaining their territory through a diplomatic process. This soon became clear when both governments indicated their acceptance of UN SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 242, which called for the recognition of Israel and its right to exist within secure borders in exchange for the return of land it conquered in the course of the war. The resolution made no reference to Palestinian national rights, calling only for “a just settlement of the refugee problem.”

The failures of the Arab states led to an emphasis on Palestinian identity and self-reliance, exemplified in the rapid strengthening of the Palestinian guerrilla organizations. The guerrilla organization that best exploited the new circumstances was FATAH, which like the other numerous guerrilla groups, was small, clandestine, and poorly funded before the war. Israel's Occupation of Palestinian territories, with their population of more than 900,000 Palestinians, led Fatah strategists to envision launching a popular war of liberation inside Israel and the territories, modeled upon the examples of guerrilla warfare in CHINA, Vietnam, and Algeria. Fatah leaders also intended to coordinate their military operations with a wave of strikes and nonviolent protests that West Bankers had begun in response to the annexation of Jerusalem. By August, the organization had established a clandestine headquarters in the Old City of NABLUS and begun operations.

The Israeli military responded with security sweeps in the West Bank, using captured Jordanian intelligence files to identify suspects and detaining them up to six months without trial under the terms of emergency regulations enacted by the British during the Mandate period. The policy of expulsions and arrests stymied the emergence of a West Bank leadership after the end of Jordanian administration, and the open-bridges policy also sufficiently eased the hardship of the West Bankers that they were not so desperate as to resort in large numbers to armed insurrection. By December 1967 the Israeli military had successfully prevented the attempted insurrection in the West Bank. Although Fatah had inflicted few casualties on the Israeli military or civilians, sixty-five guerrillas had been killed, and between 1,000 and 1,250 Palestinians were in Israeli prisons.

The situation in Gaza was quite different. There, fighters from a Palestinian Ba'athist group, the PALESTINE LIBERATION FRONT, and the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION'S (PLO) PALESTINE LIBERATION ARMY began a campaign of attacks on Israeli targets in conjunction with large protest demonstrations conducted by Palestinian women and children. More than 400 attacks each year in 1969 and 1970 resulted in nearly 250 Israeli casualties. The fighters also assassinated and intimidated Palestinian COLLABORATORS and workers who entered Israel. By 1970, the guerrillas virtually controlled Gaza after dark. The Israeli military suppressed the insurgency by early 1972, but only by resorting to the massive destruction of refugee housing and the killing or DEPORTATION of suspected guerrillas and their supporters. The Israeli government also constructed a security fence around Gaza, thus controlling movement into and out of the area. Despite the resistance in Gaza, from the end of 1967 until the INTIFADA twenty years later, the center of Palestinian activities moved into exile. Those activities concentrated most immediately on Jordan's East Bank, where the largest number of Palestinians resided and which had the longest frontier with Israel.

Competition for Fatah

The war and the Occupation of the remainder of Palestine also affected the more than 300,000 PALESTINIAN CITIZENS OF ISRAEL, forcing them to reconsider their political identities as Israeli Arabs. They were impressed by the political and military activity of Palestinians in the territories, which contrasted with their own situation. Until only a year before the war, they had lived under military government, their freedom of travel and expression severely restricted. Within their community, the Israeli Communist Party was the only political organization allowed some semblance of free political activity. A few Israeli Arabs fled Israel and joined the guerrilla organizations after the war, and from 1967 to 1973, Israeli courts convicted 320 Arab citizens of security offenses. However, the political mobilization of Israeli Arabs progressed much more slowly than that of the Palestinians in the territories or in the DIASPORA.

Although the insurgency inside Israel and the West Bank failed to materialize, Fatah soon reaped the political rewards of ARMED STRUGGLE by attracting the attention of Egyptian president JAMAL 'ABD AL-NASIR, just as the organization's former patron, Syria, reduced its support and restricted Fatah from launching attacks across the Syrian-Israeli cease-fire line. Nasir saw in Fatah a means of maintaining military pressure on Israel until Egypt's military could be rebuilt and it could regain the Sinai through a combination of diplomacy and force. Beginning in 1968, Nasir therefore sent supplies to guerrilla groups in Amman, Jordan, and began training Fatah units in Egypt. Thus strengthened, Fatah's leaders turned their attention to either or gaining control over or dissolving the Palestine Liberation Organization, which had been established in 1964 under the supervision of Arab states as a means of controlling the Palestinian guerrilla organizations. Fatah demanded the resignation of PLO chairman AHMAD SHUQAYRI in December 1967, and with prodding from Nasir, Shuqayri stepped down to be replaced by Yahya Hamuda, a leftist lawyer. The next month, Fatah held a conference in Cairo attended by seven guerrilla groups and formed a new national front intending to assert itself against the traditional PLO.

Fatah's chief rival for leadership of the guerrilla movement was the POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE (PFLP), the core of which was composed of Palestinian members of the MOVEMENT OF ARAB NATIONALISTS. Students at American University in Beirut, including most notably the Palestinian GEORGE HABASH, had formed the MAN around 1951. It was a Pan-Arab nationalist organization that, after the 1956 SINAI/SUEZ WAR, looked to Nasir for leadership in Arab affairs. At the time of the 1967 War, the MAN was fragmented and largely clandestine, especially in Jordan. However, as Fatah entered the territories to start an uprising, the MAN leadership in Beirut felt compelled to match their rival. They thus joined several small guerrilla groups led by a former officer of the Syrian army, AHMAD JIBRIL, and another of the Jordanian army, Ahmad Za'rur, to form the PFLP in September 1967. The MAN announced the Popular Front's existence when it launched its first (unsuccessful) operation against Israel in December 1967. A month later, as Fatah exploited its rising status to challenge the PLO, the PFLP boycotted Fatah's conference of guerrilla organizations in Cairo and emphasized its support for the PLO as the representative organization of the Palestinian movement. The PFLP adopted a new tactic in the war against Israel in July 1968 by hijacking an Israeli airliner en route from Rome to Tel Aviv. The PFLP's hijacking operations and attacks on Israeli airliners from 1968 to 1972 brought the Palestinian movement worldwide attention, and it also served the PFLP in its competition with Fatah.

Transformation of the PLO

Although Fatah did not drop its ambition of launching a people's war of liberation inside Palestinian territories, it focused its efforts on establishing sanctuaries within the confrontation states. By early 1968, there were between 600 and 1,000 fighters on the East Bank, the largest proportion of them affiliated with Fatah. In January and February, guerrillas operating from Jordan made more than forty attacks on Israeli targets. They conducted thirty-six such operations in March. According to an Israeli report to the Security Council, the attacks killed six Israelis and wounded forty-four. The Israeli government, in response, decided to make an incursion to destroy the guerrilla bases in and around the town and refugee camp of AL-KARAMA, in the Jordan Valley. Aware of Israeli preparations for the assault, PFLP commanders Za'rur and Jibril decided to withdraw their thirty fighters from the area, knowing they were no match for the hundreds of Israeli infantry and paratroopers that were massed for the operation with tanks, artillery, and air support. Fatah leaders, in contrast, recognized the political gains to be made from a direct confrontation with the Israeli military. They resolved to face the Israeli forces with 200 Fatah guerrillas and a small number of PLO fighters. Although Jordan's King Husayn had little interest in defending the guerrilla organizations, which challenged the Jordanian government's authority, he feared that Israel might occupy parts of the East Bank as a way of forcing him to sue for peace. He thus sent a division of the Jordanian army with tanks and artillery into the area. The Israeli forces that crossed the Jordan River on the morning of March 21 rapidly occupied al-Karama. By evening, when they withdrew, the Israelis had destroyed much of the town, captured or killed a high proportion of the guerrillas, and inflicted substantial casualties on the Jordanian troops. The cost to the Israelis was also high relative to that of previous such operations: al-Karama's defenders killed twenty-eight Israeli soldiers, wounded more than 100, and destroyed or damaged fifty-two tanks and other vehicles.

What was a minor military success for Israel was a major political victory for the Palestinian guerrilla groups, especially for Fatah. Although the Jordanian army had inflicted most of the casualties on the Israeli troops, the Fatah fighters had made a determined stand in the face of an overwhelming Israeli force, dying in large numbers rather than conceding the field. Consequently the reputation of the Palestinian guerrilla organization reached new heights among both the scattered Palestinians and the citizens of the Arab states. After the battle at al-Karama—coincidentally the Arabic word for "honor"—the Arab public rapidly ceased to associate Palestinians with the image of powerless refugees and began to identify them with heroic fighters who stood up to Israel when the leaders of Arab states would not. The symbolism of armed struggle and martyrdom soon permeated PALESTINIAN MEDIA and cultural production.

Al-Karama also had the effect of transforming the small, clandestine guerrilla organizations into a mass movement with a recognizable leadership. Less than two months after the battle, Fatah named YASIR ARAFAT its leader and official spokesperson, giving the organization a personality that was identifiable among the Arab public. Fatah claimed at the time, with probably some exaggeration, that 20,000 students and army veterans volunteered for service at its offices in Cairo and that 1,500 people a week applied for membership at its Baghdad office. The PFLP likewise received more applicants than it could accommodate. By that time, fighters poured into Jordan, setting up bases along its cease-fire line with Israel and opening offices in Amman. Attacks from Jordan on Israeli military targets and civilians increased sharply in the months after Karama and reached a pace of over 200 a month in 1969 and 1970.

Arab States and the PLO

After al-Karama, Arab governments immediately recognized the challenge to their credibility presented by the Palestinian organizations and attempted to portray themselves as supporters of the guerrillas. Even King Husayn, whose troops had recently destroyed guerrilla bases in Jordan, declared on state television his support for the Palestinian fighters. King Faisal of SAUDI ARABIA invited Fatah leaders to the country and promised them financial support. The events at al-Karama reconfirmed to Nasir the utility of supporting the guerrilla organizations to complement his planned WAR OF ATTRITION against Israel and the diplomacy by which he hoped to regain the land Egypt had lost to Israel. He thus invited top Fatah leaders to Cairo to meet senior Egyptian officials, and by June, his military had begun to increase the number of Fatah guerrillas it trained in Egypt. Fatah also began a relationship with the Egyptian intelligence services, providing the Egyptians with information collected by Palestinian infiltrators into Israel. Egypt became the third largest supplier of arms to the guerrilla organizations after China and Algeria.

The Syrian government likewise recognized the growing popularity of the guerrilla movement even before Karama. Having sharply curtailed Fatah's freedom of action in the country since the June war, the ruling Ba'ath Party created in September 1967 its own guerrilla organization, the Vanguard of the Popular Liberation War, and in the spring of 1968, it merged with a smaller organization to form SA'IQA (the Thunderbolt). After Karama, membership in Sa'iqa grew rapidly. Fatah continued to cultivate good relations with the Syrian government because of vital supply routes running from Syria into Jordan. The organization was also able to establish bases on Syria's Golan Heights, near the cease-fire line with Israel. With other guerrilla groups, Fatah expanded these significantly during the next year.

The MAN, headquartered in Beirut, had attracted the most Palestinians in LEBANON until al-Karama. Since the war, however, Fatah cadres endeavored to build a following in Lebanon, where they focused on recruiting university students. From its modest presence in South Lebanon, Fatah began attacks on Israel. In December 1968, Israeli commandoes launched a raid on the Beirut international airport, destroying thirteen civilian aircraft on the ground in retaliation for an attack by the PFLP on an Israeli airliner. The Lebanese government therefore increased its restrictions on the guerrillas, arresting their supporters in the areas bordering Israel and closing offices of the guerrilla groups in the spring of 1969. By October, Lebanese army units battled guerrilla units in the south of the country.

The Lebanese government's policies toward the Palestinian guerrilla groups exacerbated the debate within the country over its relationship with the larger Arab world. The Lebanese opposition, generally Muslim and broadly favoring pan-Arabism, staged a large demonstration of protest in April against the Christian-dominated government's restrictions on the Palestinian fighters. The government suppressed the demonstrations by force, but in August, Palestinians confronted Lebanese security forces that entered refugee camps, and the residents seized control of most of the camps by October. At the same time, fighting broke out between Palestinian guerrillas and the Lebanese army.

Nasir, who had launched his War of Attrition in the Canal Zone in March 1969, wanted to maintain the Palestinian fighters' ability to operate from Lebanon in another front against Israel. At the invitation of Lebanese president Charles Helou, the Egyptian president thus agreed to mediate between the Palestinian organizations and the Lebanese government. The negotiations at the end of October, between Arafat and Hilu, produced a secret document known as the CAIRO AGREEMENT, under whose terms the Lebanese government conceded control of the refugee camps to the PLO and acknowledged the right of Palestinians in Lebanon to employment, residence, and freedom of movement. The agreement also permitted the guerrilla organizations to attack Israel through designated routes in South Lebanon. Soon after the agreement's signing, the guerrilla organizations opened offices in the refugee camps, and reflecting their rising status since al-Karama, attracted recruits probably numbering in the thousands. The PLO and the guerrilla groups thus achieved formal recognition for their sanctuary in Lebanon, which continued at least until the PLO's expulsion from Beirut in 1982. The guerrillas, however, soon exceeded the limits on their activities imposed by the Cairo Agreement and established new bases near the cease-fire line with Israel.

One of the significant indications of the changed relationship between the Arab states and the Palestinian movement after the 1967 War was the takeover of the PLO by the guerrilla organizations, with Fatah in the paramount position. Following al-Karama, the leaders of Fatah believed that the PLO, under their leadership, could provide the disparate and scattered Palestinian movement with an institutional framework. Fatah leaders recognized also that the PLO constituted an official commitment on the part of the Arab states to the Palestinian movement. In the months after al-Karama, the PLO and Fatah conducted negotiations over the representation of Fatah and its allied guerrilla organizations in the PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL (PNC, the PLO's representative body). As a result, the guerrilla organizations received 88 of the 100 seats, with the largest single bloc going to Fatah.

Fatah's new influence in the PLO became clear at the Fourth PNC of July 1968 in Cairo, where the delegates amended the PALESTINE NATIONAL CHARTER. Most evident was the change of the document's title from "al-Mithaq al-Qawmi," which denoted pan-Arab nationalism, to "al-Mithaq al-Watani," which carried the meaning of discrete territorial nationalism and thus emphasized Palestinian identity. Although the document stated that Arab unity and the liberation of Palestine were "two complementary objectives," it also claimed that Palestinian people were in a stage that required the safeguarding of their identity. This reflected Fatah's long-standing claim that the slogan of Arab unity leading to the liberation of Palestine should be reversed to assert that the liberation of Palestine was the way to Arab unity.

The document further stated that the Palestinians declared the "independence of their national movement" and rejected "all forms of intervention, trusteeship or subordination." The increasing independence of the Palestinian movement from the policies of the Arab states was also indicated by the national covenant's declaration that Palestine could not be divided and that it must be liberated in its entirety. Further, the document stated that armed struggle was the only means of liberation. These positions clearly contradicted those of the Arab states articulated at the Khartoum Conference a year previously.

Fatah was able to assert its dominance at the next PNC, also in Cairo, in February 1969. The organization's rising status gave it the power to demand the largest allocation of seats in the PNC, and, with the support of many independent delegates, Fatah was able to have Yasir Arafat elected chairman of the PLO. After Fatah's capture of the leadership of the PLO, the organization constituted a forum for political discourse that the Palestinians, dispersed among numerous countries, had not previously enjoyed. The PLO rapidly expanded its social services, beginning with its fund for the families of guerrillas who had been killed, wounded, or captured. The organization added a medical services branch for guerrillas and established the Palestine Red Crescent Society to provide free medical care and social services to civilians. The elaboration of the PLO's administrative functions and the influx of Arab financial support also gave Fatah a source of patronage to dispense, thus reinforcing its predominance in the movement.

New Ideological Orientations

The guerrillas' takeover of the PLO achieved a markedly increased unity and an unprecedented degree of autonomy for the Palestinian movement. Nonetheless, the nearly one dozen guerrilla organizations in the PLO, each dependent on backing from one or more Arab states, meant that the PLO remained a fractious organization penetrated by considerable state influence. The PFLP emerged as the chief opponent of Fatah's new position of leadership, and with a few allies among independents in the PLO, the Popular Front boycotted the fourth and fifth PNCs. The PFLP's new estrangement from the PLO was another manifestation of the changed relationships among the guerrilla organizations and the Arab states since the June war, and especially since al-Karama. In August 1968 a leftist tendency within the PFLP asserted itself and issued a statement harshly critical of the “petty bourgeois” Arab regimes that were unwilling to confront Israel, including among them Egypt. Nasir responded by ending support for the organization that had formerly idolized him. At the same time, he increased his support for Fatah, which he had regarded with suspicion before the 1967 War. Fatah was able to exploit the divisions within the PFLP by offering protection to its leftist wing, then facing a campaign of intimidation, kidnappings, and beatings from the PFLP’s Old Guard in Jordan. Under the leadership of the Jordanian NAYIF HAWATIMA, the leftists broke away from the PFLP to form the Democratic Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, known after 1974 as the DEMOCRATIC FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE. Although it remained small, the DFLP was soon rewarded with representation in Fatah-dominated bodies within the PLO.

With the departure of the DFLP, the PFLP, still under the leadership of George Habash, began to compete for the support of the Left by portraying itself as a Marxist-Leninist party. It thus aspired to the revolutionary transformation of the Arab states as a necessary step toward the liberation of Palestine and intended to establish an “Arab Hanoi” as a secure base from which to wage its people’s war. The PFLP shared this position not only with the rival DFLP but also with Ahmad Jibril’s POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE—GENERAL COMMAND (PFLP-GC), which had broken away from the PFLP in October 1968. With the shift toward revolutionary intervention in the affairs of the Arab states, the PFLP’s former parent organization, the pan-Arab nationalist MAN, rapidly ceased to exist as a viable political organization among Palestinians. The development was a further indication of the ascendancy of Palestinian political identity at the expense of pan-Arab nationalism in the period following the June war, although the PFLP received support from the IRAQ’s Ba’athists.

The period of 1967 to 1970 was the high point in relations between the guerrilla organizations and the Arab governments, but the contradictions inherent in the relations between the states and guerrilla movements were evident. Especially in Jordan, the independent activities of the guerrillas and the revolutionary programs of leftist organizations called into question the sovereignty of the state. In the summer of 1970, confrontations between the Jordanian army and the PLO intensified to the level of a civil war, remembered as BLACK SEPTEMBER. By July of the next year, the army had completely eliminated the guerrilla presence in Jordan and reasserted government authority. In the process it killed some 3,000 Palestinians, many of them noncombatants. Black September at first appeared to signal the end of the guerrilla movement, but the PLO had attained a level of institutional durability that permitted it to rebuild itself in its sanctuary in Lebanon over the course of the next three years. During the period of new diplomacy in the year following the 1973 Arab-Israeli War, the Arab states at the RABAT SUMMIT (1974) recognized the PLO as “the sole, legitimate representative of the Palestinian people in any Palestinian territory that is liberated.” The latter phrase, “any Palestinian territory that is liberated,” was formally adopted in June 1974 by the PLO at the Twelfth PNC. This marked a major transformation in PLO objectives that began with liberating Palestine and was altered to the demand for a democratic secular state. The PLO committed itself to an independent Palestinian state alongside Israel—the TWO-STATE SOLUTION, which was to be achieved primarily by diplomatic means eschewing armed struggle. This radical transformation brought the PLO in line with the policies of the Arab states and opened the UNITED NATIONS and subsequently European doors to the PLO.

International Consequences

The new relationship between the Arab states and the guerrilla organizations after al-Karama advanced the status and recognition of the Palestinian movement internationally to a level few could have imagined before June 1967. In July 1968, Nasir took Arafat to MOSCOW as part of an Egyptian delegation. The visit resulted in a commitment of half a million dollars in arms from the Soviet Union to Fatah, although Egypt controlled the flow of weapons to the organization. Arafat led the first PLO delegation to the Soviet Union in February 1970. However, Moscow supported the PLO only to the extent that the Soviets perceived that the aid advanced their relationship with the Arab states. Consequently, the PLO did not obtain a permanent mission in Moscow until 1978.

Contacts with China had begun even before the June war, when Arafat, exploiting an Algerian initiative, visited Beijing in 1964. The next year, Ahmad Shuqayri represented the PLO in Beijing. Chinese support for both the PLO and Fatah shifted toward the latter only a few months after al-Karama. The Chinese press then began referring to Fatah as the leadership of the Palestinians, and the Chinese government supplied many of the weapons for Fatah's rapid expansion in Jordan from 1968 to 1970. Even in Western Europe, the Palestinian movement exerted some attraction for university students of the New Left. Perhaps as many as several hundred young Europeans volunteered at DFLP bases in 1969.

In November 1974, with support from the Arab League, Yasir Arafat addressed the United Nations General Assembly and, at the same time, the UN granted the PLO observer status. Many of the General Assembly's newer member states had gained their independence not infrequently by wars of liberation. The recognition those states conferred upon the Palestinian movement was, in part, the fruit of its intensification of armed struggle after the Six Day War.

See also YASIR ARAFAT; ARMED STRUGGLE; COMMUNISTS IN ISRAEL; DEMOGRAPHY; ECONOMY; FATAH; GAZA STRIP; NATIONAL GUIDANCE COMMITTEE; OCCUPATION; PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION; PROPAGANDA, ARAB; REFUGEES AND THE RIGHT OF RETURN; RESTRICTIONS ON MOVEMENT WAR 1967; WEST BANK

Bibliography

- Brynen, Rex. Sanctuary and Survival: The PLO in Lebanon. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1990.
- Cobban, Helena. The Palestinian Liberation Organization: People, Power, and Politics. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1984.
- Dumper, Michael. The Politics of Jerusalem since 1967. New York: Columbia University Press, 1997.
- Farsoun, Samih K., and Christina E. Zacharia. Palestine and the Palestinians. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1997.
- Gazit, Shlomo. Trapped Fools: Thirty Years of Israeli Policy in the Territories. London: Frank Cass, 2003.
- Golan, Galia. Soviet Policies in the Middle East: From World War II to Gorbachev. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1990.
- Harris, William W. Taking Root: Israeli Settlement in the West Bank, the Golan and Gaza-Sinai, 1967–1980. New York: Research Studies Press, 1980.

Masalha, Nur. A Land without a People: Israel, Transfer, and the Palestinians, 1949–96. London: Faber and Faber, 1997.

Rekheiss, Elie. "Israeli Arabs and the Arabs of the West Bank and Gaza: Political Affinity and National Solidarity." Asian and African Studies. 23:4 (1989).

Roy, Sara. The Gaza Strip: The Political Economy of De-development. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1995.

Sayigh, Yezid. Armed Struggle and the Search for State: The Palestinian National Movement, 1949–1993. New York: Oxford University Press, 1997.

—Weldon C. Matthews

War of Attrition

The War of Attrition was a limited war fought between Israel and EGYPT from June 1967 to 7 August 1970. It was initiated by the Egyptians as a way of forcing the Israelis to negotiate on favorable terms the return of the Sinai, which had been under the control of the Israelis since the 1967 WAR. This objective was not realized, however, and instead the hostilities ended with a cease-fire agreement signed between the countries in September 1970, with frontiers remaining in the same place as when the war began and with no real commitment to serious peace negotiations.

Israel lost 1,424 soldiers and 127 civilians killed and 2,000 soldiers and 700 civilians wounded. It also lost 15 aircraft. Egypt lost approximately 5,000 soldiers and civilians killed, and 101 aircraft.

The Egyptian army, the most powerful in the Arab world, yearned for retaliation for Egypt's humiliating defeat in 1967 when Israel captured the Sinai Peninsula up to the eastern bank of the Suez Canal. Sporadic clashes took place along the cease-fire lines almost from the end of the war. The same year (1967), Egyptian missile boats sank an Israeli destroyer on 21 October. Egypt began shelling Israeli positions along the Bar Lev Line (a chain of fortifications built by Israel along the eastern coast of the Suez Canal after it captured the Sinai), using Soviet heavy artillery, MIG aircraft, and various other forms of assistance from MOSCOW. Israel responded with bombardment and ground raids on Egyptian military positions and aerial raids on strategic facilities deep within Egypt; eventually it bombed the outskirts of Cairo.

The international community considered the possibility that the conflict could seriously escalate. The UNITED NATIONS sent the Jarring Mission to enforce UN RESOLUTION 242 as a means of finding a diplomatic solution, but it failed. Subsequently, US president RICHARD NIXON sent his secretary of state, WILLIAM ROGERS, to secure an end to the conflict. He developed the ROGERS PLAN, but it too failed.

In August 1970, Israel, JORDAN, and Egypt agreed to a cease-fire under the terms proposed by the Rogers Plan. The plan contained restrictions on missile deployment by both sides and required the cessation of raids as a precondition for peace. Shortly thereafter, the Egyptians moved their missiles near the Suez Canal and began constructing an anti-aircraft system. Israel responded with a policy that it called “asymmetrical response,” wherein Israeli retaliation was disproportionately large in comparison to any Egyptian attacks. Egypt’s president JAMAL ‘ABD AL-NASIR died on 28 September 1970. His successor, Anwar al-Sadat, put a unilateral end to the fighting, and both sides declared victory.

Bibliography

- Bar-Simon Tov, Yaacov. The Israeli-Egyptian War of Attrition, 1969–70. New York: Columbia University Press, 1980.
- Heikal, Mohamed Hassanein. The Sphinx and the Commissar: The Rise and Fall of Soviet Influence in the Middle East. New York: Harper and Row, 1978.
- Herzog, Chaim, and Shlomo Gazit. The Arab-Israeli Wars: War and Peace in the Middle East. New York: Vintage Books, 2004.
- Morris, Benny. Righteous Victims: A History of the Zionist-Arab Conflict, 1881–1999. New York: Alfred Knopf, 1999.
- Whetten, Lawrence L. The Canal War: Four-Power Conflict in the Middle East. Cambridge, MA: MIT Press, 1974.

War of the Camps

See CAMPS’ WAR, 1985–1987

Warschawski, Michel (1949–)

Michel (Mikado) Warschawski is a veteran activist in the Israeli ANTI-ZIONISM left. Born in Strasbourg, FRANCE, he was the eldest of seven children of Mireille and Rabbi Max Warschawski, who was the chief rabbi of the city for more than three decades and one of the most respected Jewish spiritual leaders in Europe. Warschawski was educated in both Jewish Orthodoxy and the spirit of the European Enlightenment. In 1966 he left France for JERUSALEM to deepen his theological knowledge at the famous Talmudic school MERCAZ HARAV, from which he graduated.

The 1967 WAR marked a turning point in Warschawski’s life. While volunteering in a KIBBUTZ on the border of the WEST BANK, he witnessed the expulsion of the Arab residents of ‘Imwas, Bayt Nuba, and Yalu. Though he did not fully understand what he was seeing at the time, this event marked a defining moment in his political evolution from theology to more secular leftist thought. It was, however, contact with the reality of OCCUPATION that made the change immutable. These sentiments are well expressed in an excerpt from his partially autobiographical book, On the Border: “Although born after the war, my childhood and adolescence were steeped in memories of the Nazi occupation. The word ‘occupation’ referred to absolute evil, fear, hatred, racism and death. . . . The religious education I had received in my youth was indifferent to ZIONISM and I had only a little knowledge of the creation of the Jewish State and of the Israeli-Arab conflict. It was through the June 1967 War that I discovered Israel, not just the Holy Land, but the State of Israel. One recollection [was] from July 1967 at the Hebron market. . . . At that very moment I saw the submissive and humiliated look of the Arab merchant with whom I was trying to bargain for a lamb’s skin with the arrogance of all the colonizers of the world. As if slapped in the face, I suddenly became aware that, this time, he was the oppressed, and I was on the other side of the border, with the strong, with the ones in power. I immediately and spontaneously refused to be on that side. . . . I was unwilling . . . [to be] an occupier: I felt a natural compassion with the occupied.”

After the 1967 War, Warschawski left the Talmudic schools as well as religious practice and faith. He attended the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, where he graduated in 1971 with degrees in philosophy and political science. During these years, Warschawski came into contact with MATZPEN, a small socialist, anti-Zionist organization, and in 1968 he joined the group, in which he was active until its dissolution in 1998. Parallel to his activities in Matzpen, where he was the editor of its Hebrew-language monthly magazine for more than ten years, Warschawski was involved in several movements against the Occupation, including the Committee in Solidarity with BIRZEIT UNIVERSITY (1981), the Committee Against the War in LEBANON (1982–1985), and Day La-Kibbush (1987–1990). He was one of the founders of the soldier's movement YESH G'VUL (1982), which organized reserve officers and soldiers who refused to serve in LEBANON and later in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. AS a "REFUSENIK" himself, he was sentenced three times to short military prison terms.

In 1984, together with a few Palestinian and Israeli activists, Warschawski founded the ALTERNATIVE INFORMATION CENTER (AIC), the first, and for a long time the only, joint Israeli-Palestinian organization. Its objectives included providing information to both societies in the conflict and promoting Israeli-Palestinian cooperation and partnership. In February 1987 the Israeli Security Services closed the AIC and charged Warschawski, who served as its director, with supporting terrorist organizations. After a three-year trial, the court dropped the main charge but found Warschawski guilty of providing services to illegal organizations. He was sentenced to thirty months in prison, which the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT later reduced to twenty months and suspended twelve of them. In November 1990 Warschawski was released from prison.

In 1999 Warschawski resigned his directorship of the AIC but remained as cochair of its board of trustees. Since then he has focused his activities on the international arena and in particular on the World Social Forum, where he represents Israeli social and political organizations in the International Council. Warschawski defines himself as an uncompromising internationalist, struggling for the integration of the Jewish-Israeli national community into the Arab world and for a strong Palestinian-Israeli partnership. As such, he rejects Zionism as a philosophy of ethnic separation and its manifestations in an ethnic state. Warschawski believes in BINATIONALISM as a solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, although he is not opposed to the formation of an independent Palestinian state in the Occupied Territories. He believes that true reconciliation requires that Israel recognize the Palestinian REFUGEES' right of return, recognize the responsibility of Zionism in the Palestinian tragedy, and be ready to repair the damages caused by the Zionist colonial enterprise.

In addition to hundreds of articles and essays published in Hebrew and Arabic throughout the world, Warschawski is the author of several books that have been translated into different languages and is the recipient of numerous prestigious awards, including the Radio France Internationale Award and Les Amis du Monde Diplomatique Best Book Award.

Bibliography

- Warschawski, Michel. Le Défi bi-national. Paris: Textuel, 2001.
- . The Israeli Peace Movement and Its Limits. Jerusalem: AIC Publishers, 1997.
- . On the Border. Cambridge, MA: South End Press, 2005. Originally published in French as Sur la frontière (Paris: Stock, 2002).
- . Towards an Open Tomb. New York: Monthly Review Press, 2004.
- . Twenty Years of Israeli-Palestinian Partnership—The Alternative Information Center. Jerusalem: AIC Publishers, 2005.
- Warschawski, Michel, et al. Antisémitisme—L'intolérable chantage. Paris: La Découverte, 2003.
- Warschawski, Michel, with Michele Sibony. a contre chœur. Paris: Textuel, 2003.
- Warschawski, Michel, with J. Taut and A. Moscato. Sionismo e Questione Ebraica, reprint ed. Milan: Sapere, 2002.

—Lea Tsemel

Washington Institute for Near East Policy

See AMERICAN JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS; MEDIA, US; US AID TO ISRAEL

Water: Israeli-Syrian Conflict, 1950–1965

See JOHNSTON PLAN; UNITED NATIONS TRUCE SUPERVISION ORGANIZATION

Water Resources and Access

Lack of access to adequate, safe, and clean water has been a long-standing problem for the Palestinian population of the Occupied Palestinian Territories (OPT). Though exacerbated in recent years by the impact of drought-induced water scarcity, the problem arises principally due to Israeli water policies and practices, which discriminate against the Palestinian population of the OPT. This discrimination has resulted in widespread violations of the human right to an adequate standard of living, which includes the rights to water, adequate food and housing, work, and HEALTH CARE. Although the water restrictions were severe in the mid-1980s, they became far more stringent in the ensuing years.

Israel's restrictions on Palestinian access to water have adversely affected agriculture, retarded commercial and industrial development, and exacerbated health and nutrition problems. Water shortages and poor sanitation services throughout the OPT affect all sectors of the Palestinian population, though especially the poorest and most vulnerable communities, that is, those living in isolated rural areas and in overcrowded REFUGEE camps.

Israel controls all the water sources in the OPT and restricts Palestinian access to a level that does not meet their needs or constitute a fair and equitable portion of the shared water resources. Israel uses more than 80 percent of the water from the WEST BANK Mountain Aquifer, the only source of underground water in the West Bank, as well as all of the surface water available from the Jordan River Basin, of which Palestinians are denied any share.

The inequality in access to water between Israelis and Palestinians is striking. The World Health Organization and the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) recommend 100 liters of water per person per day as the minimum quantity for basic consumption. Palestinian consumption in the OPT is approximately 70 liters a day per person. In some rural communities Palestinians survive on far less than even the average 70 liters, in some cases barely 20 liters per day. Israeli daily per capita consumption (both inside the Green Line and in the SETTLEMENTS) stands at more than 300 liters, over four times as much.

Table 10 Comparison of Water Consumption between Israelis and Palestinians

	Palestinians	Israelis
Total Population	3,647,845	6,716,000
Consumption, millions of m <sup>3</sup>
Domestic	140	688
Industrial		122
Agriculture	155	1,021
Total consumption	295	1,831
Consumption per capita, m <sup>3</sup>
Irrigation	43	152.0
Domestic	38	102.4
Total	81	254.4

While the water shortage in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES has resulted primarily from the restrictions Israel placed on Palestinian residents' access, it also arose from Israel's relatively minimal investment in water INFRASTRUCTURE. The neglect in infrastructure is conspicuous in two areas: the lack of construction of infrastructure to connect village residents to a running-water network and the lack of maintenance of existing water networks to prevent loss of water from leakage. In June 2009, after four decades of OCCUPATION, in the West Bank the number of residents not connected to a running-water network amounted to at least 215,000 living in more than 150 villages. Although 74 percent of the total Palestinian communities are connected to the water network, in many cases the water network coverage in these communities is only partial; indeed Amnesty International estimated that 15 percent of the total population living in connected communities is not served by the water network. One problem is water-pipe leakage resulting from improper maintenance, which has led in some instances to a loss of 60 percent of the quantity of water supplied. This predicament affects water networks throughout the West Bank. Moreover, approximately 94 percent of communities, mainly those located in areas served by the Israeli national water company Mekorot that are connected to the water network, experience some degree of main valve closure. This is particularly true of Palestinian communities located close to the Israeli settlements, where the supply of water to Palestinians depends on the needs and requirements of the settlers. At times of high demand, Mekorot increases the amount of water supplied to the settlers, at the expense of supply to Palestinian towns. Reduction of water to Palestinian communities is accomplished by closing the valve of the main water pipelines that direct water to Palestinian towns. As a result of all these factors, communities throughout the West Bank have experienced a major increase in water-related diseases, including skin infections, diarrhea, and amebiasis.

Among those particularly suffering from this water deprivation are residents of villages and refugee camps, but even in towns and villages that are connected to the water network, the taps often run dry. Water rationing is common, especially but not only in the summer months, with residents of different neighborhoods and villages receiving piped water only one day a week or every few weeks. Consequently, many Palestinians have no choice but to purchase additional supplies from mobile water tankers, which deliver water at a much higher price than that of tap water and of often dubious quality. As unemployment and poverty have increased in recent years and disposable income has fallen, Palestinian families in the OPT must spend an increasingly high percentage of their income—as much as a quarter or more in some cases—on water.

Palestinian communities that are not served by water networks depend on rainwater, well water, and water purchased and brought in by tanker from other areas to meet their needs; water consumption in these areas is generally much lower than average, often as little as 20 liters per person per day. When there is good annual rainfall, water is collected on rooftops and stored in underground rain-harvesting cisterns, which can meet families' water consumption needs for up to several months, generally from November to May. In the summer, these residents must collect water from nearby springs (if such exist) in plastic bottles and jerricans, or purchase water from private dealers at high prices.

Rainwater-harvesting cisterns have been used in the region for centuries. Household cisterns are mostly small, with an average capacity of 50 cubic meters. Agricultural cisterns, with a slightly larger capacity, are built in the ancient Nabataean tradition—located at the lowest point of a specially contoured area that is created with slopes and berms to increase rain runoff and collect the rainwater. The cisterns are circular or square, dug into the ground, and lined with stones or concrete to prevent leakages, with an opening at the top that is kept covered to prevent evaporation and contamination. But when the stored rainwater runs out, villagers have to purchase additional water from water tankers and store that water in their cisterns.

The Israeli army frequently destroys Palestinian water facilities, including rainwater-harvesting and storage cisterns (household and agricultural), agricultural pools, and spring canals on the grounds that they were constructed without PERMITS from the army. Such destruction is often accompanied by other measures that aim to restrict or eliminate the presence of Palestinians from specific areas of the West Bank. These are areas where Israel has a particular interest in appropriating LAND, usually for the expansion of settlements and related infrastructure, or with a view to its possible future annexation to Israel. The destruction of cisterns is devastating to families dependent on rainwater collection.

Wells are another source of water for Palestinians, but under the Israeli military regime imposed in 1967, Palestinians can no longer drill new wells or rehabilitate or even repair existing ones, or carry out any water-related projects (from pipes, networks, and reservoirs to wells and springs and even rainwater cisterns), without first obtaining a permit from the Israeli army. In theory, such permits for drilling or rehabilitating wells could be obtained after a lengthy and complicated bureaucratic process; in practice, most applications for such permits have been rejected. Only thirteen permits were granted in the twenty-nine years from 1967 to 1996 (when the Palestinian Water Administration, PWA, was established), but all of these involved projects for domestic use and were not sufficient to make up even for the replacement of wells that had dried up or fallen into disrepair since 1967.

The Israeli army not only has prevented the development of new Palestinian wells and infrastructure, limited the use and upkeep of existing ones, and prevented the rehabilitation of old wells, but has additionally imposed quotas on the quantity of water that Palestinians can extract from their wells, capping the amount at the level that existed when the well was first metered. Meters were installed in the early 1970s to monitor pumping and to ensure Palestinian compliance with the capped allowance. The measures were simply imposed; there was no process of consultation with local Palestinian communities about their needs and how these would be met. Furthermore, the army sealed many existing wells to restrict Palestinians to a very low quota of water. Together all these measures have contributed significantly to the deterioration of agriculture as well as depriving Palestinians of sufficient water for human needs. With regard to agriculture, the World Bank noted, "The cost to the economy of foregone opportunity in irrigated agriculture is significant, with upper bound preliminary estimates that could be as high as 10% of GDP and 110,000 jobs." Palestinian officials say Israel controls some fifty deep West Bank wells, with a total capacity of 50 million cubic meters (MCM) per year, directing it mainly to Jewish settlements, which house more than 479,500 people. Palestinians control about 200 shallow wells in the occupied West Bank, many of them drilled before the 1967 WAR. Those wells produce about 105 MCM per year, but they are meant to supply water to 2.5 million Palestinians. An Israeli official from the Israeli Water Authority stated that permitting Palestinians to drill more wells could "ruin" the existing West Bank aquifers. Mekorot operates thirty-six wells in the northern West Bank that produce 54 MCM per year. A certain portion of this is sold to the Palestinian population, but the overwhelming share is sold to the settlers in the West Bank.

West Bank Palestinians supplement available water by buying up to 45 MCM of water from Israel. Another 5 MCM bought from Israel goes to the GAZA STRIP, supplementing the 50 MCM from the Coastal Aquifer. Mekorot sells water at highly subsidized prices to Israeli settlers in the illegal settlements in the West Bank while nearly 40 percent of water supplied to Palestinians in the West Bank is distributed by Mekorot at much higher, unsubsidized prices. Palestinians in the West Bank are charged, relative to their per capita income, eight times as much per unit of household water as in Israel and twenty times as much as settlers pay. According to B'Tselem, "For running water in their homes (as opposed to water they collected or purchased), Palestinian consumers pay the same price as the Israeli consumer (some NIS 3 per cubic meter). [But] since the average income is much higher in Israel than in the Occupied Territories, the financial burden for a Palestinian family is significantly heavier than for an Israeli family. To illustrate this difference, the per capita GDP for Israelis is twelve times higher than the per capita GDP for Palestinians. In areas unconnected to water networks, Merokot supplies water by mobile tankers at an average of ten cubic meters per family per month at a price of NIS 6.5 per cubic meter. In July 1997, average per capita daily water consumption in such areas totaled only 58 liters. In comparison, average per capital daily consumption in Israel was 288 liters, and even higher in the summer. The water shortage during the summer compels Palestinian residents in the unconnected areas to buy water from private water tankers. The owners of these tankers buy the water from public and private wells, and charge a price fluctuating between NIS 15–30 per cubic meter, depending on the distance from the house to the well and the height of the water storage container. This price is five to ten times higher than that charged by the municipalities for running water. A family can, therefore, spend hundreds of shekels a month for water, which is a heavy financial burden for a family whose average monthly income does not exceed NIS 1500."

While Palestinians throughout the occupied West Bank are being denied access to an equitable portion of the shared water resources and are increasingly affected by the lack of adequate water supplies, Israeli settlers face no such challenges, as indicated by their intensive irrigation farms, lush gardens, and swimming pools. The more than 479,500 Israeli settlers who live in the West Bank and East JERUSALEM in violation of INTERNATIONAL LAW use as much or more water than the Palestinian population of some 2.3 million. Moreover, some of the largest settlements, such as Ariel and Kedumim, are located directly above the Western Basin.

In the face of water shortages and amid deepening poverty in recent years, some Palestinians have resorted to drilling unlicensed wells while others have connected to a water network illegally, and many have stopped paying their water bills. These practices have further compounded the problem by undermining the economic viability and authority of the PWA, which has proven to be unable or unwilling to stop such practices.

Due to Israel's failure to fulfill its obligations as the occupying power, the burden of dealing with these challenges has fallen to international donors and, since its establishment in the mid-1990s, to the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA), the PWA, and other local service providers, all of whom are nearly totally dependent on international donors for funds. The effectiveness of these measures has been markedly decreased by the choices and priorities of individual donors and poor coordination among donors. Adding to this, the PNA and PWA have been beset by internal divisions compounded by weak and fragmented management structures, lack of expertise and political will, and allegations of mismanagement and corruption.

Israel's Goals in Its Water Policies

Israel's goals in controlling West Bank and Gazan water are manifold. The first is to provide water resources for Israel, both for its heavily irrigated agricultural sector and for human consumption. By 1986 approximately one-quarter of the water used by Israel annually inside the Green Line for irrigation and consumption came from the West Bank. Second, Israel uses Palestinian water to supply the illegal settlements in the West Bank, and, until August 2005, the Gaza Strip.

Underlying these objectives, Israel's water policy in the Occupied Territories is and remains limiting the overall amount of water (and land) available to the Palestinian population, while preserving for itself privileged access to most of the water and land in the OPT. Through its water-limitation policies and confiscation of land, Israeli policy aims at retarding Palestinian agriculture, de-developing Palestinian industry, and preventing the emergence of a viable, independent Palestinian state while simultaneously fostering the growth and development of the settlements, with the ultimate goal of annexing most of the West Bank. Israel's objective in limiting the productivity of the Palestinian agricultural sector is also related to its goal of protecting Israel's agricultural sector from competition. Although irrigated areas cover approximately 269,692 dunums (67,000 acres) in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and 2,177,500 dunums (538,000 acres) in Israel, the agricultural sector contributes 8.2 percent of the GDP in Palestine compared to 2.6 percent of the GDP in Israel. Israel's water policy in the Occupied Territories has benefited it in two other ways: preservation of the unequal division of the shared groundwater in the West Bank's Western and Northern Aquifers, and utilization of new water sources to which Israel had no access prior to 1967, such as the Eastern Aquifer (in the West Bank) and the Gaza Coastal Aquifer, primarily to benefit Israeli settlements established in those areas.

To promote this policy, Israel drastically changed the "legal" and institutional system of the water sector in the Occupied Territories that was in effect prior to the Occupation. This change was made in two main stages. In the first stage, which began just after the 1967 War ended, all powers relating to water, which had been under Jordanian and Egyptian authority, were transferred to the Occupation authorities. Military legislation significantly augmented these powers, and Israel imposed a series of military orders that promptly put all water resources in the OPT under Israeli control. Military Order No. 2 (7 June 1967) declared all water resources in the OPT to be "Israeli state property." On 15 August 1967 the Israeli military commander issued Military Order No. 92, which granted complete authority over all water-related issues in the OPT to the Israeli army. This order was followed by numerous others that further enforced basic changes in the water laws and regulations in the West Bank. Under Military Order No. 158 of 1967, which applies to all wells and irrigation installations, it is not permissible for any person to set up, assemble, possess, or operate a water installation unless the area commander grants a permit, and the commander's refusal does not need to be justified.

In the second stage, which began in 1982, a substantial portion of the powers held by the Occupation authorities, among them control of most of the water supplied to the urban centers, was transferred to Mekorot, which operates under the supervision of Israel's Water Commissioner and Ministry of Agriculture. The result of these changes was the total integration of the water resources of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip with those of Israel and their operation by the Israeli bureaucracy as a single, centralized system.

Israel utilized these legal and institutional changes solely to promote its own interests, almost completely ignoring the needs of the Palestinian population, which was left on its own to face a growing water shortage. Other Israeli restrictions, not directly related to its water policy and stemming from other factors (allegedly security or ecology), reduced Palestinian access to water. For example, a strip of land along the lower Jordan River was declared a CLOSED MILITARY ZONE, and Palestinian farmers in the West Bank were unable to utilize it for irrigation as they had done prior to the Occupation. Another example is classification of areas with freshwater springs as "nature reserves," where access is prohibited or entails payment.

Israel's legal and institutional changes involved both the restrictions it placed on Palestinian access to water sources and its minimal investment in water infrastructure, together resulting in Tel Aviv's direct responsibility for the water crisis facing Palestinians. The neglect is evident, as discussed above, in the failure to connect village residents to a running-water network, lack of maintenance to prevent loss of water of the existing networks with the attendant water-pipe leakage, and Mekorot's closure of main valves in order to provide the settlers with additional water.

Despite the lack of figures on the scope of Israeli investment in the water sector in the Occupied Territories, it is reasonable to assume that it was comparable to the general pattern of Israel's economic policy in the Occupied Territories (e.g., infrastructure, health, etc.). Several economic research projects found that the amount of public expenditure in the Occupied Territories (in all fields) was lower than the revenues from taxes that Israel collected from the Palestinian population. The surplus of revenues minus the gap between expenditures and revenues flowed regularly into the Israeli state treasury.

Water Sources, Water Access, Water Restrictions

The West Bank. Natural water sources are normally divided into two kinds, groundwater and surface water. Groundwater includes water that seeps into the ground and collects in an underground aquifer, and water from springs, which flows above ground. Surface water flows and is collected above ground, as from rivers, streams, and lakes. For the sake of this discussion, this division is maintained, although from a hydrologic perspective, the two sources are interdependent and should not be considered independent.

Israelis and Palestinians share two water systems: the groundwater system, called the Mountain Aquifer, traverses the border between the West Bank and Israel. The shared surface-water system is the Jordan Basin, which is also shared by JORDAN, SYRIA, and LEBANON. The drainage basin of the Jordan River stretches over 330 kilometers (205 miles) from the Upper Galilee in the north to the Dead Sea in the south and has an average width of thirty meters. Since its founding, Israel has intensively used the Jordan Basin's water. Its territorial expansion resulting from the 1967 WAR and its control of most of the basin's water sources led to an increase in utilization of the basin's waters: today Israel extracts 630 million cubic meters (MCM) a year from the Jordan Basin, constituting 30 percent of all the water used by Israel. Jordan also diverts the flow of the Jordan River's tributaries within its territory, as do Syria and Lebanon further upstream. As a consequence, compared to 1953, when a UN report estimated the yearly flow of the Jordan River through the West Bank as 1,250 MCM, this flow has now been reduced to a trickle of high-saline water heavily contaminated by untreated sewage. The drying up of the Jordan River has had a disastrous impact on the Dead Sea, which has seen the fastest drop in its water level to unprecedented lows. Since Israel occupied the West Bank in 1967, it has denied its Palestinian inhabitants access to the water resources of the Jordan River, depriving them of a crucial source of water, preventing them from physically accessing the riverbanks, and diverting the river flow upstream into Lake Tiberias (Sea of Galilee), which supplies an additional 700 MCM/year of water to Israel.

Since Israel has denied Palestinians any access to the water of the Jordan River Basin, the Mountain Aquifer is the only remaining source of water for the West Bank. Groundwater flows in three main directions from the Mountain Aquifer and, hence, three main groundwater drainage basins can be identified: the Western Aquifer System, the Northeastern Aquifer System, and the Eastern Aquifer System. But Israel has consistently refused West Bank Palestinians access to more than 20 percent of the Mountain Aquifer's water while it takes 80 percent of the aquifer's water. According to Amnesty International, the total amount of water available to Palestinians from the aquifer has been a maximum of some 170 to 180 MCM per year, which reportedly fell to a mere 135 MCM in 2008. Moreover, as much as a third of this is lost in leakages due to old and inefficient pipeline networks, which cannot be readily repaired or replaced due to Israeli restrictions.

Conversely, the 80 percent of the annual safe yield of the West Bank Aquifer System that Israel is currently exploiting amounts to approximately 30 percent of Israel's total water needs, which include its growing settlements as well as its military infrastructure in the West Bank.

Israel's water consumption stands at some 2,000 to 2,200 MCM per year for a population of seven million (some 1,500 MCM is freshwater, with the remainder composed of desalinated seawater and treated wastewater). Most of Israel's freshwater supplies are drawn from the shared groundwater and common surface water resources—more than 400 MCM per year from the Mountain Aquifer and up to 650 MCM per year from the diverted Jordan River.

According to the Israeli Ministry of Environmental Protection, "This aquifer supplies about 417 MCM/y, a quarter of the total national production, although the average multi-annual natural replenishment rate is estimated at about 360 MCM." The World Bank puts Israel's extraction from the Western Aquifer in 1999 at 591 MCM, which is in excess of the aquifer's yearly sustainable yield by 174 MCM (or 229 MCM according to the OSLO ACCORDS figures). Such sustained overextraction has reduced the aquifer's current yield and future reserves and has caused potentially serious damage to the quality of the water supply for both Israelis and Palestinians. As the Israeli Ministry of Environmental Protection noted, "Over-exploitation may lead to a rapid rate of saline water infiltration from surrounding saline water sources."

According to the World Bank, "Palestinians have access to one fifth of the resources of the Mountain Aquifer. Palestinians extract about 20% of the 'estimated potential' of the aquifers that underlie both the West Bank and Israel. Israel

Map 47. West Bank Water Sources

© Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs (PASSIA), Jerusalem, (based on Water and War in the Middle East, Information Paper no. 5, July 1996, Center for Policy Analysis on Palestine/The Jerusalem Fund, Washington, DC), reprinted with permission.

© Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs (PASSIA), Jerusalem, reprinted with permission of PASSIA.

Map: PASSIA, 2002

Map 48. Surface Water in the West Bank and Surrounding Area

extracts the balance, and in addition overdraws without JWC [Joint Water Committee] approval on the 'estimated potential' by more than 50%, up to 1.8 times its share under Oslo. Over-extraction by deep wells combined with reduced recharge has created risks for the aquifers and a decline in water available to Palestinians through shallower wells."

In 2007, according to the World Bank, overall Palestinian water extraction from the Mountain Aquifer in the West Bank was 113 MCM (down from 138 MCM in 1999), and according to PWA figures, total Palestinian extraction in 2008 was 84 MCM, with the reduction due to operational problems for some wells and a drop in the level of the water table caused by Israeli over-extraction and low annual rainfall. According to the Israeli authorities, Palestinians also extract some 10 MCM per year from unlicensed wells and obtain some 3.5 MCM per year from illegal connections to Israeli water lines in the West Bank. To boost insufficient supplies the Palestinians must buy water from Israel—water that Israel extracts from the Mountain Aquifer and which the Palestinians should be able to extract for themselves if Israel were to allow them a more equitable share of the aquifer. In recent years the quantity of water bought by Palestinians from Israel has increased, to some 50 MCM per year, but this is not enough to match the increase in population in the West Bank, and supplies are often reduced by Israel to the Palestinians (but not to the Israeli settlers in the OPT) during the hot season, when needs are greater.

The Gaza Strip. In the Gaza Strip, the Coastal Aquifer, which traverses the border between Israel and the Gaza Strip, is a groundwater system that is shared by Israel and the Palestinians. It is the only water resource available to Gazan Palestinians, but it is grossly insufficient for the needs of the population. This aquifer has been depleted and contaminated by overextraction, leakage of sewage, and seawater infiltration. Stringent restrictions imposed in recent years by Israel on the entry into Gaza of material and equipment necessary for the development and repair of infrastructure have caused further deterioration of the water and sanitation situation in Gaza, which has reached a crisis point.

With a population of over 1.5 million, of whom over 960,000 are refugees registered with the UN RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY FOR PALESTINE REFUGEES IN THE NEAR EAST, the Gaza Strip faces an especially problematic water situation. Gaza already has one of the highest population densities in the world, estimated at 3,612 persons per square kilometer (9,356 per square mile), and a rapidly growing population that is expected to reach almost 2 million by 2015. In terms of quantity, the average amount of water available to each inhabitant of Gaza slightly exceeds the average amount available in the West Bank, at about 80–100 liters per capita a day; however, the Coastal Aquifer in Gaza is contaminated, and according to Amnesty International, "90–95 percent of Gaza's water is polluted and unfit for human consumption."

Coupled with the long-term consequences of the former Israeli military Occupation and settlements, which ended in principle in September 2005, Gaza has suffered a steady increase in debilitating ecological and hydrological problems. These include desertification, salinization of freshwater, lack of sewage treatment, waterborne disease, soil degradation, and the depletion and contamination of underground water resources. These are due primarily to overpumping, which has resulted in an annual replenishing deficit of 90 MCM, and by pollution resulting from fertilizers and sewage. Untreated sewage continues to seep in and harm the water supply as well as contaminating and damaging the aging water infrastructure of the territory. These problems have crippled agricultural and economic production and damaged the health of Gaza's burgeoning population.

In March 2009 the UN Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) expressed concern that "following OPERATION CAST LEAD, a twenty-two month-long blockade, restricted access to vital agricultural areas and prolonged water stress, the agriculture community in the Gaza Strip remains on the brink of collapse. In one year alone, the number of people employed in agriculture fell by 60 percent. Coupled with an estimated US$180 million in direct damages to agricultural assets, agriculture-dependent families have exhausted options for maintaining their livelihoods. Without urgent action this once vital economic sector will take years rather than months to regain even pre-December 2008 productivity levels. Meanwhile, the blockade continues to restrict the import of agricultural inputs needed for the immediate response, rehabilitation and reconstruction process to begin, thus restricting any real, long term improvement of agricultural livelihoods."

In the Gaza Strip, the poor quality and amount of contamination in the water affect the Palestinians' quality of life and expose them to serious health risks. In the Gaza Strip the southern end of the Coastal Aquifer is the sole source of water for the 1.5 million Palestinian inhabitants of the Strip, but it is only one of several sources of water for Israel. Due to the aquifer's east-west flow, the quantity of water extracted in Gaza does not diminish the available yield in Israel, but extraction by Israel from this aquifer in the area to the east of Gaza affects the supply available to be extracted in Gaza. Most of the water from Wadi Gaza, a stream and surface water source that originates in the HEBRON mountains in the West Bank and then flows southeast through Israel into Gaza, has been diverted into a dam in Israel just before it reaches Gaza. The yearly sustainable yield of the Coastal Aquifer in Gaza, some 55 MCM, falls far short of the population's needs. With no other source of water available to them, Palestinians in Gaza have long resorted to overextraction from the Coastal Aquifer, by as much as 80–100 MCM per year—a rate equivalent to twice the aquifer's yearly sustainable yield. The result has been a marked, progressive deterioration in the quality of the water supply already contaminated by decades of sewage infiltration into the aquifer.

Overextraction from this aquifer began before the Occupation; however, the new deep wells that Israel drilled to supply water for the Israeli settlements that were established in the Gaza Strip led to further ecological damage to the aquifer. This damage resulted from the extraction of water that otherwise would have served the Palestinian population and thus slightly reduced overextraction. Other than drillings for the settlements, Israel's responsibility for the destruction of the Gaza Aquifer stems primarily from omission rather than commission. Until the early 1990s, Israel failed to supply water to the Gaza Strip from its own sources or from West Bank sources. In fact, Israel does not allow the transfer of water from the West Bank to Gaza. Even in the 1990s, when it supplied small quantities of water, it was insufficient to abate the damage to the aquifer.

According to Merokot the approximately 8,000 Israeli settlers in the Gaza Strip prior to 2005 consumed about 8 MCM annually, of which approximately half was pumped from the Coastal Aquifer and half imported from Israel. Settler consumption amounted to in excess of 2,500 liters per person per day for domestic, municipal, industrial, and agricultural (especially extensively irrigated hot houses) usage. This means that the average Israeli settler consumed eight times as much water as his Gazan counterpart each and every day. The 2005 Israeli withdrawal of its settlers from Gaza did not materially improve the water situation for Palestinians in Gaza because the sole local water source is the Coastal Aquifer, from which 96 percent of the water is drawn.

History of Water Conflict

The roots of the current water conflict originated at the end of the nineteenth century when the ZIONISM movement began to implement its plans for creating a Jewish homeland. In 1885 early Zionists proposed that such a homeland should encompass Palestine, the Negev, southern Lebanon, and parts of Jordan, together with their water resources, so that up to fifteen million Jews could eventually be absorbed. In 1922, during the BRITISH MANDATE, the JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL formed a special technical committee to conduct studies on the utilization of water and on the feasibility of irrigating unarable land. In 1926 the British HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR PALESTINE granted the Jewish-owned Palestine Electricity Corporation a seventy-year concession to utilize the water of the Jordan and Yarmuk Rivers to generate electricity.

In 1937, Great Britain assigned a hydrologist to serve as the director of development for the Trans-Jordanian government (Jordan after 1950) and to conduct a study of the water resources and irrigation potentials of the Jordan River Basin. This study served as the main reference in the preparation of the proposed UNITED NATIONS partition plan (UN RESOLUTION 181). In 1955 the United States presented the JOHNSTON PLAN for allocating the Jordan River waters among its riparian countries, as shown in Table 11. The plan also suggested the construction of a West Ghour canal, which would have provided Palestinians with 250 MCM per year.

Table 11 Allocation of the Jordan River Waters According to Johnston's Plan of 1955 (in MCM)

	First Johnston Plan	Revised Johnston Plan	Present Usage
Syria	50	132	153
Lebanon	—	35	5–10
Jordan	829	720	480
Israel	426	375–475	647

However, the plan has never been ratified, and the waters of the Jordan River have been exploited by unilateral projects without any compliance with the water allocations that were identified in the plan. The most significant projects carried out in the Jordan River Basin are the Israeli National Water Carrier, through which Israel diverts the water from Lake Tiberias to the Negev desert, and the Jordanian East Ghor Canal. These projects have reduced the annual water flow of the Jordan River from 1,250 MCM in the early 1950s to less than 200 MCM of highly saline and poor-quality water.

Following the 1967 War, Israel strengthened its control over the water resources in the region through its occupation of the Golan Heights, Gaza Strip, and West Bank. In the OPT, Israel imposed restrictions on water use by Palestinians, declared the lands located alongside the Jordan River as closed military areas, and deprived the Palestinians of their right to utilize the river's waters, which they were partially utilizing until 1967. Furthermore, immediately after the 1967 War, Israel imposed a series of military orders that put all water resources in the OPT under Israeli control. Israel exercises control over Palestinians' utilization of water by placing severe restrictions on wells and employing differential pricing as well as through other means. The Israeli settler population in the West Bank has access to ample water supplies, in some cases up to nine times as much per capita as the average West Bank Palestinian. Water for settlements is supplied by Mekorot, partially from wells within the West Bank, from which over 44 MCM is supplied to settlements, and partially from sources in Israel. It has been estimated that settlers use a total of approximately 160 MCM of West Bank Aquifer water per year.

Table 12 illustrates the West Bank's water sources and their utilization.

Table 12 Selected Sources of Water and Its Utilization (in MCM)

Source	Total Annual Recharge (MCM)	Palestinian Utilization	Israeli Utilization
Renewable Aquifers
Eastern Aquifer	172	71.9	132.9
Northeastern Aquifer	145	36.9	147.1
Western Aquifer	362	29.4	591
Gaza Coastal Aquifer	65	110
Surface Water
Jordan River Basin	1,300	0	685

Water and the Peace Process

Under the 1993 DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES (DOP), referred to as the Oslo I Agreement, between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, Palestinian water rights were not recognized—that is, the PNA did not have the right to assess Palestinian needs and utilize water resources in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. As in the case of land, water remained under Israeli sovereignty, and Palestinian access continued to be dependent on Israeli permission. In the 1994 GAZA-JERICHO AGREEMENT, the PWA was given jurisdiction over the Gaza Coastal Aquifer, though not over any West Bank aquifers or Israeli settlements and military installations in Gaza. The result was that, despite formal PNA dominion over the Coastal Aquifer (as well as required cooperation in its maintenance), Israel had unrestricted access to all Palestinian water sources in the West Bank and Gaza. Moreover, the water needs of the settlers in Gaza and in the West Bank take precedence over the needs of the Palestinians.

In the 1995 INTERIM AGREEMENT between Israel and the PLO, Palestinian water rights were recognized for the first time, but Israel only acknowledged Palestinian needs, not the right of Palestinians to sovereignty over their water resources. Moreover, water rights were deferred to the FINAL STATUS TALKS. To date, no negotiations have been held. The future water needs of Palestinians were estimated to be between 70 and 80 MCM per year, but it was agreed to provide them with 28.6 MCM of water annually to be extracted mostly from the Eastern Basin. However, Israel did not fulfill its obligations and only provided the Palestinians with a water quantity of no more than 15 MCM. It is worth mentioning that there are serious doubts that Palestinians can extract the water quantities specified in the agreement from the Eastern Basin, as there has been an average annual drop of more than 25 meters in the water table level, which is raising alarm about the sustainable yield of this basin. Nowhere in the Oslo Accords was the issue of Palestinian access to the Jordan River addressed.

Moreover, the Joint Water Committee (JWC) established under the terms of Oslo II (the Interim Agreement) proved unable to facilitate equitable water distribution arrangements because Israel retained a virtual veto power on the committee and was unwilling to fulfill agreed-upon obligations.

In accordance with Article 40, any proposed management measures, investments, or infrastructure projects pertaining to the development of the water or sanitation sectors within the OPT are subject to the approval of the JWC. A high proportion of Palestinian projects have been rejected or long delayed in the JWC. Records show that out of the 417 projects presented to the JWC during the period 1996–2008, only 57 percent were approved, 143 water projects are still awaiting JWC approval, and 22 projects were rejected. Regarding the well-drilling projects, out of 202 projects, 65 were approved by the JWC. Of those, only 38 were implemented and then only after receiving the additional approval of the Israeli CIVIL ADMINISTRATION. In contrast, any water projects for the Israeli settlements (which have been illegally constructed on Palestinian land) do not require the approval of the JWC.

In preparatory talks in 1998 about the final status negotiations, Israel refused to discuss Palestinian water rights and rejected Palestinian demands for water rights in the Jordan River. Instead, Israeli negotiators proposed desalination to overcome Palestinian water shortages. However, the high cost of desalination per cubic meter of water is not affordable by Palestinians, whose GNP is about one-tenth that of Israelis.

Effects of the Segregation Barrier and the Eastern Segregation Zone

Israel's construction of the BARRIER wall between Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, starting in 2002, has seriously affected Palestinian access to water. In the northern part of the West Bank, thirty-one artesian wells have been isolated on the western (Israeli) side of the wall that tap the Western Basin with an annual discharge of 4.5 MCM, representing around 20 percent of the Palestinian share of the Western Aquifer.

The wall has also made inaccessible thirty-two springs with annual discharge of 62 MCM used by Palestinians. The Eastern Segregation zone (which includes the JORDAN RIFT VALLEY and the shores of the Dead Sea), representing 27.5 percent of the West Bank, has cut the majority of Palestinians off from their water supply and has imposed more restrictions on them. The area that contains forty Israeli settlements and forty-five Palestinian localities has 156 artesian wells and fifty-three springs used by Palestinians. The annual discharge from these wells and springs reaches around 55

MCM. In 1998 Prime Minister ARIEL SHARON was quoted as saying, "My view of Judea and Samaria [the West Bank] is well known, the absolute necessity of protecting our water in this region is central to our security. It is a non-negotiable item." Most important is the segregation wall and the Eastern Zone severance of Palestinians on both sides of the wall from water and agricultural resources, resulting in a growing threat to economic life and public health.

See also BARRIER; ENVIRONMENTAL DEGRADATION; GAZA STRIP; HEALTH CARE; INFRASTRUCTURE IN THE OCCUPIED TERRITORIES; JOHNSTON PLAN; LAND; OCCUPATION; OSLO ACCORDS; SETTLEMENTS; UNITED NATIONS TRUCE SUPERVISION ORGANIZATION; WEST BANK.

Bibliography

- Amnesty International. Troubled Waters—Palestinians Denied Fair Access to Water, Israel-Occupied Palestinian Territories. London, UK: Amnesty International Publications, 2009. MDE 15/027/2009.
- Bashir, Basema, and Emily Winkelstein. Water for Life: Israeli Assault on Palestinian Water, Sanitation and Hygiene during the Intifada. Ramallah, West Bank: Palestinian Hydrology Group, Water, Sanitation and Hygiene Monitoring Project, 2004.
- Benvenisti, Meron, and Shlomo Khayat. The West Bank and Gaza Atlas. Jerusalem: West Bank Data Base Project, 1988.
- Bitar, Maher. Water and the Palestinian-Israeli Conflict: Competition or Cooperation? Washington, DC: Foundation for Middle East Peace, 22 December 2005.
- Byrne, Aisling. Water: The Red Line. Jerusalem: Jerusalem Media and Communication Center, 1994.
- Davis, Uri, Antonia E. L. Maks, and John Richardson. "Israel's Water Policies." Journal of Palestine Studies. 9:2 (1980).
- Dolatbar, Mostafa, and Tim S. Gray. Water in the Middle East: A Geography of Peace. New York: St. Martin's Press, 2000.
- Editorial. "Water Shortage in the Territories." Ha'aretz. 20 August 1998.
- Elmusa, Sharif S. Water Conflict: Economics, Politics, Law and the Palestinian-Israeli Water Resources. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1997.
- EWASH. The Impact of the Blockade on Water and Sanitation in Gaza. WASH Advocacy Task Force, a subcommittee of the EWASH group, in collaboration with the WASH Cluster in OPT, funded by the European Commission Humanitarian Aid Department (ECHO). 3 September 2009. <http://unispal.un.org/UNISPAL.NSF/0/BBB5C84A39DEBDF785257632004F336E>.
- Executive Action Team. Overview of the Middle East Water Resources. Water Data Banks Project. 2005. <http://exact-me.org/overview/p4144.htm>.

- Feitelson, Eran, and Marwan Haddad, eds. Management of Shared Groundwater Resources: The Israeli-Palestinian Case with an International Perspective. Amsterdam: International Development Research Centre/Kluwer, 2001.
- Hass, Amira. "Dire Water Shortage in West Bank." Ha'aretz. 27 July 1998.
- . "Separate and Unequal on the West Bank." New York Times. 2 September 2001.
- Isaac, Jad. "The Status and Perspective of the Negotiations on the Jordan River Basin." In Cooperation on Transboundary Rivers. Edited by Ismail Al Baz, Volkmar Hartje, and Waltina Scheunmann. Baden: Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft, 2001.
- . "Towards a Sustainable Peace between Israelis and Palestinians." In In the Name of Security: Sociology of Peace and War in Israel in a Changing Era. Haifa, Israel: Haifa University Press, 2003.
- . Water and Palestinian-Israeli Peace Negotiations. Palestine Center Policy Brief 4. 1999. www.palestinecenter.org/framecap.html.
- Isaac, Jad, and Mohammad Ghanayem. Environmental Degradation and the Israeli Palestinian Conflict. Bethlehem: Applied Research Institute–Jerusalem, 1998.
- Isaac, Jad, Khaldoun Rishmawi, and Abeer Safar. Palestinian and Israeli Environmental Narratives. Toronto, Ontario: York University, 2004.
- Isaac, Jad, and Sophia Saad. A Geopolitical Atlas of Palestine: The West Bank and Gaza. Bethlehem: Applied Research Institute–Jerusalem, 2004.
- Isaac, Jad, and Maurice Saade. "Strategic Options for Sustainable Resource Management in Palestine." Paper presented at the Palestine Conference on Agricultural Policy and Strategies MOA, Hebron, West Bank, October 1999.
- Isaac, Jad, and Waleed Sabbah. Water Resources and Irrigated Agriculture in the West Bank. Bethlehem: Applied Research Institute–Jerusalem, 1998.
- Isaac, Jad, and Abeer Safar. "Roots of Water Conflict in the Eastern Mediterranean." Paper presented at the international conference Water: Values and Rights, Palestine, 2005.
- Isaac, Jad, and Nael Salman. Undermining Peace: Israel's Unilateral Segregation Plans in the Palestinian Territories. Applied Research Institute–Jerusalem, 2003. www.arij.org/paleye/Segregation-Wall/index.htm.
- Isaac, Jad, and Jan Selby. "The Palestinian Water Crisis: Status, Projections and Potential for Solution." Natural Resources Forum. 20 (1996).
- Isaac, Jad, et al. An Atlas of Palestine: The West Bank and Gaza. Bethlehem: Applied Research Institute–Jerusalem, 2000.
- . The Impact of Urbanization on Land Use and Local Communities. Bethlehem: Applied Research Institute–Jerusalem, 2005.
- Israel Central Bureau of Statistics. Statistical Abstract of Israel 2004. Jerusalem: ICBS, 2004.
- Jewish Virtual Library. Zionist Organization Statement on Palestine. n.d. www.jewishvirtuallibrary.org/jsource/History/zoparis.html.
- Kahan, David. Agriculture and Water Resources in the West Bank and Gaza (1967–1981). Jerusalem, West Bank Data Project, 1987.
- Lein, Yehezkel. Disputed Waters: Israel's Responsibility for the Water Shortage in the Occupied Territories. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, the Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, 1998.
- . Not Even a Drop: The Water Crisis in Palestinian Villages without a Water Network. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2001.
- . Thirsty for a Solution: The Water Crisis in the Occupied Territories and Its Resolution in a Final Status Agreement. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2000.
- Libiszewski, Stephan. Water Disputes in the Jordan Basin Region and Their Role in the Resolution of the Arab Israeli Conflict. Zurich, Switzerland: Center for Security Studies and Conflict Research, 1995.
- Lonergan, Stephen C., and David B. Brooks. Watershed: the Role of Fresh Water in the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict. Rome, Italy: UN Food and Agriculture Organization. 1995. http://www.idrc.ca/en/ev-9325-201-1-DO_TOPIC.html.
- Lowi, Miriam R. Water and Politics: The Politics of a Scarce Resource in the Jordan River Basin. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1993.
- Maoh, Hanna, and Jad Isaac. "The Status of Transportation in the West Bank." World Transport Policy and Practice. 5:4 (1999).
- OCHA. Five Years after the International Court of Justice Advisory Opinion: A Summary of the Humanitarian Impact of the Barrier. Geneva: United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, July 2009. http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha_opt_barrier_report_july_2009_english_low_res.pdf.
- Palestinian Hydrology Group. www.phg.org.
- Palestinian Hydrology Group Water and Sanitation Hygiene Monitoring Project. www.phg.org/campaign/index.html.
- Qumsieh, Violet. "The Environmental Impact of Jewish Settlements in the West Bank." Palestine-Israel Journal. 5:1 (1998).
- Rouyer, Alwyn. Turning Water into Politics: The Water Issue in the Palestinian-Israeli Conflict. New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2000.
- Roy, Sara. The Gaza Strip: The Political Economy of De-development. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1995.
- Saad, Sophia, and Jad Isaac. "Monitoring Urban Dynamic Change in the Palestinian Territories, 1989–2004." Paper presented at the international workshop Geomatics for Land and Water Management: Achievements and Challenges in the Euromed Context, Ispra, Italy, 2004.
- Said, Edward, and Christopher Hitchens, eds. Blaming the Victims: Spurious Scholarship and the Palestinian Question. London: Verso, 1988.
- Selby, Jan. "The Geopolitics of Water in the Middle East: Fantasies and Realities." Third World Quarterly. 26:2 (2005).

- . Water, Power and Politics in the Middle East. New York: I. B. Tauris, 2003.
- Sherman, Martin. The Politics of Water in the Middle East: An Israeli Perspective on the Hydro-Political Aspects of the Conflict. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1998.
- Soffer, Arnon. "The Relevance of the Johnston Plan to the Reality of 1993 and Beyond." In Israel-Palestine Water. Edited by H. I. Shuval. Amsterdam: Elsevier, 1994.
- Stork, Joe. "Water and Israel's Occupation Strategy." Middle East Report no. 116. Washington, DC: Middle East Report and Information Project, 1983.
- Sussman, Gary. "Ariel Sharon and the Jordan Option." Middle East Report. March 2005. www.merip.org/mero/interventions/sussman\_interv.html.
- UN Food and Agriculture Organization. Food Security Indicators: Occupied Palestinian Territories. Rome, Italy: UN Food and Agriculture Organization, September 2009. http://www.fao.org/fileadmin/templates/ess/documents/food\_security\_statistics/country\_profiles/eng/Palestina\_E.pdf.
- Water for Life. Separation Wall: Large-Scale Confiscation and Destruction of Water Resources and Infrastructure. Ramallah, West Bank: Palestinian Hydrology Group, n.d.
- . While Israel Controls 80% of Palestinian Water, the Mekorot Company Severely Limits Water Supply. Ramallah, West Bank: Palestinian Hydrology Group, n.d.
- "Water Rights at Heart of Arab-Israeli Strife." Boston Globe. 18 October 1998.
- Wolf, Aaron T. Hydropolitics along the Jordan River: Scarce Water and Its Impact on the Arab-Israeli Conflict. New York: United Nations University Press, 1995.
- World Bank. Assessment of Restrictions on Palestinian Water Sector Development. Report No. 47657-GZ. Washington DC: The World Bank, April 2009. <http://siteresources.worldbank.org/INTWESTBANKGAZA/Resources/WaterRestrictionsReport18Apr2009.pdf>.
- . The Economic Effects of Restricted Access to Land in the West Bank. Washington DC: The World Bank, March 2008. <http://go.worldbank.org/GUDZT9RMG0>.

—Jad Isaac

Al-Wazir, Khalil Ibrahim (1935–1988)

Khalil al-Wazir (Abu Jihad) was a founder and one of the top three leaders of FATAH, the dominant faction in the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO). When YASIR ARAFAT became the chairman of the PLO in 1969, he gave al-Wazir effective control of the military department of the PLO, known as the Supreme Military Council (although to placate the Syrian regime, Arafat appointed Zuhayr Muhsin, head of the pro-Syrian SA'IQA group, to the position of chairman of the department). Arafat also assigned al-Wazir control over the Fatah army, although Arafat was the overall commander of AL-'ASIFAH (the military arm of the Fatah movement). Ultimately, al-Wazir became the PLO's chief military strategist.

Born in RAMLA, Palestine, al-Wazir was dispossessed in the 1948 WAR, like most of his countrymen, and fled to the GAZA STRIP. There he settled in the Burayj REFUGEE camp and was educated by the UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY (UNRWA), later going to EGYPT for university education. In Egypt he became close to the MUSLIM BROTHERHOOD and was persecuted because JAMAL 'ABD AL-NASIR's regime did not tolerate activities sponsored by the Brotherhood. The Egyptian government also did not tolerate independent Palestinian activities, especially military, but al-Wazir is believed to have received military training near Cairo. He also attended the University of Alexandria but did not complete his degree. In the late 1950s he settled in KUWAIT, where many Palestinian activists were planning to form an independent Palestinian national organization that would function without the heavy-handed intervention of the Nasirite regime.

In Kuwait, al-Wazir joined Arafat and others in the late 1950s in forming the Fatah liberation movement. The Fatah leadership dispatched him to Algeria, where he established contacts and official relations with the Front de Libération Nationale. Visiting CHINA and Vietnam, al-Wazir studied the international examples of people's liberation wars. It is unclear how much actual military training al-Wazir ever had, but he soon emerged as the overall military strategist for the Fatah movement (and later for the PLO). In 1965 al-Wazir settled in Damascus, SYRIA, benefiting from the rise of the BA'ATHISM party under Salah Jadid, who believed that a war of people's liberation was the best approach to recovering Palestine from the Israelis. The Arab defeat in the 1967 WAR only helped to boost the standing of the Fatah movement and allowed it to wrest control of the PLO from the hands of Arab regimes.

After 1967 al-Wazir joined PLO leaders in their established base in JORDAN and remained there through the BLACK SEPTEMBER (1970) war with Jordan, which killed some 3,000 Palestinians. Thereafter, Arafat put him in charge of military operations in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. Despite his military stature, al-Wazir was a moderate in Palestinian politics, and the leftist faction within Fatah distrusted him. He consistently counseled against confrontation with Arab regimes, and, when the PLO relocated to Beirut in 1970–1971, al-Wazir declined to join the Iraqi- and Libyan-financed leaders whose profligate ways led to massive corruption in the ranks of the Palestinian revolution. He was also opposed to the PLO entering the Lebanese civil war, which the leftist faction within Fatah championed. In LEBANON, al-Wazir tried to insulate himself from the disputes within the Fatah movement and focused instead on building a new conventional military force, but he did not have the independence that such a task required. His relations with Arafat were less contentious than Arafat's relations with other PLO leaders, but the chairman insisted on interfering (as he did in all matters relating to the Palestinian resistance movement) in Wazir's efforts to transform the guerrilla forces into a disciplined conventional military.

During the long years of diplomatic maneuvers with Arab states and others that Arafat pursued, al-Wazir favored the "pragmatic" option and often helped the chairman push for his point of view within the Fatah movement and the PLO. But al-Wazir was careful not to alienate the leftists within Fatah, and he maintained good relations with other Palestinian factions, including those suspicious of Arafat and his ties to conservative Arab regimes. He also maintained good relations with Arab regimes from Syria to SAUDI ARABIA. However, his tenure as the PLO's primary military strategist was not exemplary. He was responsible for changing the military doctrine of the PLO from guerrilla warfare into a conventional army, but the army failed to mount an effective defense against Israeli attacks on PLO strongholds in Lebanon either in 1978 or in 1982. However, al-Wazir does not alone bear responsibility for these failures; contributing factors were Arafat's nepotistic appointments of weak military commanders and the generally corrupt political environment in which al-Wazir had to operate.

After the 1982 Israeli invasion of Lebanon, al-Wazir was one of many PLO leaders and fighters who were forced to relocate outside of Lebanon. He settled in Tunisia, where he became convinced that the solution to the PLO's problem lay not with the Arab states but in careful and methodical organizing work inside the Occupied Territories. That was also the doctrine of his predecessor, KAMAL 'UDWAN, who was assassinated in Beirut by Israeli agents in 1973. Al-Wazir was successful in laying the foundation for the myriad organized social service committees that sprang up during the First INTIFADA in 1987. In 1988 Israeli commandos assassinated al-Wazir in his home in TUNIS. There has been some speculation, though no proof, that elements of the Tunisian police, if not the government itself, conspired with Israeli intelligence and military in the operation. Had al-Wazir survived, he would have been the most likely successor to Arafat. Pictures and posters of al-Wazir appear on the walls of Palestinian refugee camps and cities around the region. Al-Wazir has been remembered as a noncorrupt leader totally dedicated to the Palestinian cause.

Al-Wazir was married to Intisar Al-Wazir (Umm Jihad) (1941–), born in Gaza, who was a longtime figure in Palestinian politics, joining the Fatah party in 1959. In 1965 she helped to found the General Union for Palestinian Women (GUPW) to support Palestinian women socially, economically, and legally. She served as the secretary-general of the GUPW from 1980 to 1985. She was a member of the PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL beginning in 1974 and a member of the FATAH CENTRAL COMMITTEE from 1987 to 2009. In 1983 she served as the deputy secretary-general of the Fatah Revolutionary Council. In 1988 she served on the PLO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE in the wake of her husband's assassination. In 1994 she was elected to the PALESTINIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL, and served as the minister of social affairs in the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY. Umm Jihad's role within the Fatah movement, however, has been reduced, and she was not elected to the Fatah's Central Committee in the 2009 party congress.

Bibliography

- "The Murder of Khalil al-Wazir." Journal of Palestine Studies. 17:4 (1988).
 al-Wazir, Khalil, Abu Jihad, and Ghassan Bishara. "The 17th Palestine National Council." Journal of Palestine Studies. 14:2 (1985).

—As'ad AbuKhalil

Weitz, Yosef (1890–1972)

Yosef Weitz was from 1937 to 1948 head of the Yishuv's TRANSFER COMMITTEE in Palestine, which determined the feasibility of expelling the Palestinian population, and was also director of the JEWISH NATIONAL FUND's (JNF) Settlement Department from 1932 to 1948. Born in Volhynia, Russia, he immigrated to Palestine in 1908. From 1918 to 1932 Weitz was head of the JNF's Plant and Afforestation Department and, much later, director of the Subcommittee for Naming Agricultural Settlements and chairman of the Land Development Council of the JNF (1960–1967). He was chairman of the ISRAEL LANDS ADMINISTRATION, a prolific publicist for emigration of Jews to Israel, and author of books on LAND, colonization, and afforestation. In addition, Weitz was active in the acquisition of the Emek Hefer lands; in bypassing British restrictions on land acquisition after the 1939 MACDONALD WHITE PAPER, which proposed strict regulations on land sales to Jews and a limit on Jewish IMMIGRATION; and in writing the 1940 Land Law. He participated in the establishment of Hanita and Beria, and, as an avid supporter of the “Tower and Stockade” settlements, he had a significant role in creating eleven such settlements in the Negev.

Weitz is remembered for his forceful advocacy of TRANSFER of Palestinians to other states and for his role on the Transfer Committee, especially after 1948. He was assiduous about keeping a diary, contained in five volumes from 1932 until his death, which records his thinking and activities with regard to transfer of the Palestinians from the new state of Israel. Located in the Zionist Archives in JERUSALEM, these volumes provide a wealth of information on his thoughts and activities, especially regarding transfer, and numerous Israeli scholars have studied them carefully. Weitz's opportunity to set in motion his long-nurtured plans for transfer came when the UN General Assembly passed UN PARTITION RESOLUTION 181, which called for the partition of Palestine into Jewish and Arab states, and Jewish leaders began planning for the coming hostilities of the 1948 WAR.

In one diary entry Weitz wrote, “Amongst ourselves, it must be clear that there is no room for both peoples in this country. No ‘development’ will bring us closer to our aim to be an independent people in this small country. After the Arabs are transferred, the country will be wide open for us; with the Arabs staying, the country will remain narrow and restricted. . . . There is no room for compromise on this point . . . land purchasing . . . will not bring about the state. . . . The only way is to transfer the Arabs from here to neighboring countries, all of them, except perhaps BETHLEHEM, NAZARETH, and Old JERUSALEM. Not a single village or a single tribe must be left. And the transfer must be done through their absorption in IRAQ and SYRIA and even in Transjordan [JORDAN after 1950]. For that goal, money will be found—even a lot of money. . . . There is no other solution— And only after this transfer will the country be able to absorb millions of our brothers and the Jewish problem will cease to exist. There is no other solution.”

Weitz repeats these comments numerous times throughout the diaries. Weitz's obsession with transfer began early and continued until it was realized in 1948. On 18 March 1941, while visiting Jewish colonies in the JORDAN RIFT VALLEY, he recorded in his diary, “Once again I come face to face with the land settlement difficulties that emanate from the existence of two people in close proximity. . . . We have clashing interests with the [Palestinian] Arabs everywhere, and these interests will go and clash increasingly . . . and once again the answer from inside me is heard: only population transfer and evacuating this country so it would become exclusively for us [Jews] is the solution. This idea does not leave me in these days and I find comfort in it in the face of enormous difficulties in the way of land-buying and settlement.”

Weitz not only wanted the Palestinians transferred and their villages destroyed, but, like other Zionist leaders, he also wanted more territory for Israel. “The land of Israel is not small at all, if only the Arabs will be removed, and if its frontiers would be enlarged a little; to the north all the way to Litani [River in Lebanon], and to the east including the Golan Heights . . . while the Arabs be transferred to northern SYRIA and IRAQ. . . . From now on we must work out a secret plan based on the removal of the Arabs from here. . . . [T]oday we have no other alternative. . . . We will not live here with Arabs.”

According to Israeli historian Benny Morris, Weitz had considerable influence in the highest Zionist circles: “Through 1948 he had ready access to cabinet ministers . . . and often, he met with [DAVID] BEN-GURION. . . . Weitz's connections also encompassed the Yishuv's military brass. . . . [He] was well-placed to shape and influence decision-making regarding the Arab population on the national level and to oversee the implementation of policy on the local level.” Weitz made a list of the Arab villages that he felt “must be cleared out in order to complete Jewish regions. I also made a summary of the places that have land disputes and must be settled by military means.”

Weitz wrote in his diary in January 1948 about the inhabitants of the Arab village of Daliyat al-Rawha' south of HAIFA. “Isn't now the time to be rid of them? Why continue to keep in our midst these thorns at a time when they pose a danger to us? Our people are weighing up a solution.” He wrote on 20 February about the BEDOUIN crossing the Baysan valley to Transjordan: “It is possible that now is the time to implement our original plan: transfer them there.” He also wrote about the inhabitants of the Arab villages of Qumya and al-Tira in the Baysan valley: “Not taking upon themselves the responsibility of preventing the infiltration of irregulars. . . . They must be forced to leave their villages until peace comes.”

On 10 June 1948 the JNF directorate allocated £10,000 ($2,500) to Weitz to carry out his transfer work. In his diary, Weitz noted that “it became clear that there is agreement among us on the question of the abandoned villages: Destruction, renovation and settlement [by Jews].” On 16 June 1948, while watching the destruction of a Palestinian village (al-Maghar), Weitz wrote in his diary: “Three tractors are completing the destruction. I was surprised nothing moved in me at the sight. . . . No Regret and No Hatred, as this is the way of the world. . . . The dwellers of these mud-houses did not want us to exist here.”

Weitz described in one entry the ways by which commanders of the HAGANA, the Jewish underground military organization, used violence, intimidation, and fear to “encourage” Palestinians into flight. On 24 April 1948, Weitz wrote regarding the ethnic cleansing of several Palestinian villages in the Haifa area: “I was happy to hear from him [a Hagana officer] that this line was being adopted by the commander . . . to frighten the Arabs so long as flight-induced fear was upon them.” In late November 1948, Weitz recorded that two JNF officials complained that “the army continues to destroy villages in the Galilee, which we are interested in [for settling Jewish immigrants].” In that regard, Weitz wondered if it was not a “greater revenge” if the “abandoned” Palestinian properties could be used by the “homeless” Jewish refugees.

While Weitz was instrumental in formulating and implementing the transfer solution, he was also among the few (along with MOSHE SHARETT and Aharon Cizling) to warn that the “Palestinian refugee problem” would not solve itself in due course, contrary to what other Zionist leaders, such as David Ben-Gurion, MENAHEM BEGIN, and GOLDA MEIR, thought.

See also TRANSFER AND DISPLACEMENT; TRANSFER COMMITTEE; WAR, 1948

Bibliography

- Davis, Uri. Apartheid Israel: Possibilities for the Struggle Within. London: Zed Books, 2004.
- Fischbach, Michael R. Records of Dispossession: Palestinian Refugee Property and the Arab-Israeli Conflict. New York: Columbia University Press, 2003.
- Masalha, Nur. Expulsion of the Palestinians: The Concept of “Transfer” in Zionist Political Thought, 1882–1948. Beirut and Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1992.
- . An Israeli Plan to Transfer Galilee’s Christians to South America: Yosef Weitz and “Operation Yohanan,” 1949–53. Durham, UK: Centre for Middle Eastern and Islamic Studies, University of Durham, 1996.
- Morris, Benny. 1948 and After: Israel and the Palestinians. Oxford, UK: Clarendon Press, 1990.
- . The Birth of the Palestinian Refugee Problem, 1947–1949. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1989.
- Myers, David N. Re-inventing the Jewish Past: European Jewish Intellectuals and the Zionist Return to History. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1995.
- Palumbo, Michael. The Palestinian Catastrophe: The 1948 Expulsion of a People from Their Homeland. New York: Olive Branch Press, 1991.
- Rogan, Eugene, and Avi Shlaim, eds. The War for Palestine: Rewriting the History of 1948. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 2001.
- Segev, Tom. 1949: The First Israelis, reprint ed. New York: Owl Books, 1998.
- Sternhell, Zeev. The Founding Myths of Israel. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1999.

Weizman, Ezer (1924–2005)

Ezer Weizman was an Israeli air force general, politician, and seventh president of the state of Israel, serving from 1993 until 2000. He was the nephew of CHAIM WEIZMANN, Israel’s first president. For a long time, his political approach was marked by the belief that Israel’s existence depended on its military strength and its ability to defeat threats from its Arab neighbors. But, during five decades of military and political involvement, he moved from being a full-blooded hawk, who favored Jewish control of the whole of the biblical GREATER LAND OF ISRAEL, to being a left-leaning moderate, envisioning a negotiated settlement with the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION.

Born in Tel Aviv in 1924, Weizman was raised in HAIFA. In 1942 he joined the British army to help the British defeat the Nazis, starting out as a truck driver in the Western Desert campaigns (EGYPT and Libya). In 1943 he joined the British Royal Air Force (RAF), which sent him to Rhodesia for aviation training, and he served as a combat pilot with the RAF in India, returning to Palestine in early 1944. During 1944–1946 he was a member of the underground militant Zionist group IRGUN TZEVA'İ LE'UMI, and from 1946 to 1947 he studied aeronautics in England. During the 1948 WAR he served as a pilot for the HAGANA, the Jewish underground military organization, and is acknowledged as the “father” of the Israeli Air Force (IAF). In May 1948 Weizman went to Czechoslovakia, where he learned to pilot the Avia S-199 airplanes to bolster the fledgling Israeli air corps. On returning to Israel, he flew bombing missions against Egyptian ground forces. In the famous combat between the IAF and British RAF aircraft on 7 January 1949, he was a pilot in a group of four Israeli Spitfire fighters that clashed with fourteen British Spitfire and Tempest aircraft, after an earlier squadron of British Spitfires had infringed on Israel's southern border for reconnaissance. In this engagement, the IAF shot down three RAF planes.

After the establishment of the state of Israel, Weizman joined the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) and served as chief of operations on the General Staff. From 1958 to 1966 he served as the commander of the IAF and later as deputy to the general chief of staff. Weizman earned high credit for his contribution as the chief of operations in Israel's overwhelming victory over Arab forces during the 1967 WAR. He directed the early morning surprise air attacks against the Egyptian air bases, which resulted in Israel's almost total air superiority over the Sinai battlefields.

After his retirement from the army in 1969, Weizman joined the GAHAL PARTY (Gush Herut Liberalism, which later became the LIKUD PARTY) and served as minister of transportation in LEVI ESHKOL's national unity government until Gahal left the coalition in 1970. He led Gahal-Herut up to 1972 and then left the party. In 1976 Weizman returned to HERUT and, in 1977, served as defense minister in MENAHEM BEGIN's government. During this time, Israel launched OPERATION LITANI against Palestinian guerrillas in South LEBANON and initiated the development of the Israeli Aircraft Industries Lavi fighter. Weizman was a strong supporter of the Israel-Egypt Peace Treaty (CAMP DAVID ACCORDS) of 1978.

In 1980 Weizman quit the government and considered establishing a new party with MOSHE DAYAN. As a result, Herut expelled him from the party and plans for the new party floundered. From 1980 to 1984 Weizman turned to business. In 1984 he established a new centrist party called YACHAD, which won three seats in the Eleventh Knesset. Weizman and Yachad joined a national unity government in which SHIMON PERES and YITZHAK SHAMIR served as prime ministers in rotation. In October 1986, Yachad joined the Israeli LABOR PARTY.

In 1993 Weizman was elected Israeli president. Throughout his life, he was well-known for having an outspoken, informal manner, regardless of his rank or position. In face-to-face meetings, this endeared him to almost everyone he encountered. As president, some of his public remarks earned him considerable criticism, but his public support was never significantly damaged. After the TERRORISM attacks by the Islamist groups HIZBULLAH and HAMAS in 1993–1994, Weizman visited all the bereaved families and victims of the attacks. During his presidency, he scrupulously visited all families of soldiers killed on duty, called on hospitals, and cheered the wounded. As the president in a parliamentary system, Weizman had no executive power, and most of his predecessors had chosen to remain above politics, but he frequently flouted this norm and expressed his opinions. In an attempt to encourage the peace process with the Palestinians, he invited PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT for a private visit to his house in 1996. In conflict with official Israeli policy, Weizman vocally supported withdrawal from the Golan Heights in exchange for peace with SYRIA.

At the end of 1999, Israeli newspapers carried stories accusing Weizman of receiving large amounts of money from wealthy businessmen without reporting it to the proper authorities. Although the investigating authorities decided not to prosecute, public criticism following this publicity led Weizman to resign from office in 2000.

Bibliography

Avnery, Uri. Ezer Weizman: The Peacemaker. New York: Church Peace Union, 1979.

Weizman, Ezer. The Battle for Peace. New York: Bantam Books, 1981.

———. Israel: Images and Ideas. Old Chatham, NY: Viewfinder Publications, 1989.

———. On Eagles' Wings: The Personal Story of the Leading Commander of the Israeli Air Forces. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1976.

Weizmann, Chaim Arizel (1874–1952)

Chaim Weizmann was the first president of Israel and longtime leader in the Zionist movement. He was born in the small village of Motol near Pinsk in the Russian Empire (today in Belarus). In high school he became active in the Zionist movement through membership in the HOVEVEI ZION society. In 1892 he began his university studies in Darmstadt, GERMANY, and then transferred to Charlottenburg Polytechnic University in Berlin, where, by his third year, he was working in organic chemistry. As a student he was active in politics, engaging in heated debates with socialist students and favoring Zionist nationalist principles. He left his studies in 1895 to assist his family in moving from Motol to Pinsk, where he helped establish a progressive Jewish school, teaching a modern curriculum and Hebrew, which did not endear him to the traditional rabbis in the region. When he returned to Berlin in 1896, he met AHAD HA'AM, who in turn inducted him into Bnei Moshe, a European circle of Jewish academicians and intellectuals working to encourage modern Jewish education.

In 1899 he graduated from the University of Fribourg in Switzerland with a doctorate in biochemistry. He lectured in chemistry at the University of Geneva from 1901 to 1903 and continued his involvement in the local Hovevei Zion society. By 1902 he was clearly identified as the leader of the progressive faction of the Russian Zionists, opposing political ZIONISM founder THEODOR HERZL's proposal for a Jewish colony in Uganda, an issue that roiled WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION (WZO) meetings until Herzl's death in 1904. Though he was recognized as a strong and effective politician, Weizmann was too young at thirty to be considered as Herzl's replacement. Not happy with the choice of David Wolffsohn as president and equally unhappy with his academic position at Geneva, he accepted a position at the University of Manchester in 1905, moved to England, and became a British subject in 1910, and was elected to the General Zionist Council. Over the next four years, he focused on his teaching and research, as well as learning English.

In 1911 Weizmann began his work on a fermentation process to produce large quantities of acetone, which, when mixed with cordite, produces a relatively cool and smokeless explosion. In 1914, at the beginning of World War I, the process was refined. As it became clear that Britain would need far larger quantities of acetone than it could produce by the older methods, Minister of Munitions Lloyd George hired Weizmann as his chemicals adviser to begin using the new procedure. It proved to be extraordinarily successful, to the relief of ARTHUR BALFOUR, by now serving as first lord of the Admiralty. Patents on the acetone and related derivatives processes made Weizmann independently wealthy.

Weizmann also became active in English politics, thus coming to know Arthur Balfour, then representative to Parliament from East Manchester and fast-rising leader of the Conservative Party, as well as Winston Churchill, elected to Parliament from Manchester in 1906 as a liberal. Weizmann's scientific assistance to the Allied forces in World War I brought him into close contact with British leaders, enabling him to play a key role in the issuing of the BALFOUR DECLARATION in 1917, in which Britain committed itself to the establishment of a Jewish home in Palestine.

Though Weizmann was chosen as a delegate to the first WZO congress in Basel, Switzerland, in 1897, he was unable to attend, but, at the second congress the next year, he was appointed to the twenty-man steering committee. From this point on, he was fully engaged in WZO activities, consistently supporting Ahad Ha'am's push for modern cultural activities, pressing for the establishment of a Jewish university, and distancing himself from his traditional East European roots. One of his strongest opponents in these early years was Rabbi Isaac Reines and his largely Russian-based MIZRAHI Party, which emphasized the centrality of religion in Zionist goals.

In 1907, at the eighth WZO congress, he carefully positioned himself between the "practical" Zionism of Ha'am and the "political" wing of Wolffsohn. In 1911 he used his position as chair of the WZO steering committee to force Wolffsohn's resignation. He was replaced by Otto Warburg, a wealthy German scholar of botany with an established Europe-wide reputation and, like Weizmann, of “practical” bent.

His development of the acetone process, together with his tireless efforts on behalf of the British wartime efforts, gave him the political support necessary to push through what was arguably his greatest contribution to the Zionist cause, the Balfour Declaration of 1917, which promised Zionists a landed home in Palestine. Once the declaration was issued, a reluctant British cabinet had to be persuaded to implement it after the war. To ensure implementation, Weizmann traveled to Palestine three times from 1918 to 1922 as head of a ZIONIST COMMISSION largely of his own making. The BRITISH MANDATE to rule Palestine, ratified in July 1922 by the League of Nations, was in part written by Weizmann.

Weizmann had made his first visit to Palestine in 1907 as an educated upper-class European with the attitudes and prejudices of his day. In his correspondence, he described the Arabs as “savages” and “uncivilized,” although he was equally scornful of the impoverished traditional Jewish community of JERUSALEM. He saw nothing wrong and much good in European empire and colonization of the world beyond Europe. The 1907 visit, ostensibly a business trip to investigate the possibilities for industrial investment, was actually focused on the broader problems and possibilities of the Zionist colonial enterprise. Upon his return to England, in a speech to the Zionist Society of Manchester, he laid out his primary impression of the trip and the policies that followed from it. Arab laborers, who made up 60 to 80 percent of the Jewish settlements’ workforce, must be replaced by Jews and LAND must be bought “between the [Zionist] colonies to form geographically united centers belonging entirely to Jews.”

When Weizmann returned to Palestine in March 1918 as head of the Zionist Commission, little had changed in his attitudes. He met Emir Faysal, then tenuously king of SYRIA, and found in him some hope for Arab tolerance of the Jewish settlements in Palestine; Faysal seemed to care little for the Arabs of Palestine and was primarily interested in blocking French attempts to take over Syria. They signed an accord in January 1919, known as the WEIZMANN-FAYSAL AGREEMENT, but little came of the rapprochement. By 1918 the headquarters of the WZO had moved to London, and in 1920 Weizmann became its president. His policy in the following years was to keep the organization on a course that maintained cooperative relations with the British Mandate government, while he personally pressed through private channels for Zionist advantage. Underlying this approach was his conviction that a slow and steady inflow of Jewish immigrants to Palestine—whether Zionist or not, secular or religious—along with strategic land purchases, would inexorably produce the long-sought Jewish state. It was a policy that reflected Weizmann’s early membership in Hovevei Zion and the views of his political mentor, Ahad Ha’am. It also reflected his involvement in the higher circles of conservative English politics and society; his East European WZO opponents often scathingly referred to Weizmann as “that English gentleman.”

Weizmann was the founder of a strain of Zionism called “Synthetic Zionism” in which he supported both grassroots colonization efforts and high-level diplomatic activity. He was generally associated with the centrist General Zionists and later sided neither with Labor Zionism on the left nor Revisionist Zionism on the right. In 1917, he expressed his view of Zionism in the following words: “We [the Jewish people] have never based the Zionist movement on Jewish sufferings in Russia or in any other land. These sufferings have never been the mainspring of Zionism. The foundation of Zionism was, and continues to be to this day, the yearning of the Jewish people for its homeland, for a national center and a national life.”

Weizmann’s approach to the Zionist project was termed havlagah, or “self-restraint,” and it fit well with WZO goals for Mandate Palestine from 1919 to 1929; however, it was increasingly called into question following 1929. In that year, law and order collapsed following riots between Arabs and Jews during the WESTERN WALL DISTURBANCES in Jerusalem, HEBRON, and SAFED. Britain’s response was to call for limitations on Jewish immigration (in the SHAW COMMISSION Report of March 1930). To counter Shaw’s recommendations, Weizmann argued in London that if resentful Arab farmers displaced by IMMIGRATION were the problem, it could be solved by transferring the farmers to Transjordan (JORDAN after 1950) or IRAQ. The TRANSFER scheme, as it was called, was rejected by the Mandatory government as “politically impractical,” and Weizmann backed down. Weizmann advocated transfer of the Palestinians from 1929 to 1931; however, in late 1931 he spoke publicly against the idea, though privately it would remain a key policy thrust of his and of other Zionist leaders throughout the Mandate period. On the heels of the Shaw Commission and British rejection of the idea of transfer came London's PASSFIELD WHITE PAPER (October 1930), proposing still tighter immigration controls. This triggered vociferous demands from Zionist activist groups led by VLADIMIR JABOTINSKY and his Revisionist Party for an immigration policy that would produce a Jewish majority or, at minimum, a demographic parity of Arabs and Jews in Palestine. When the issue came up at the WZO conference in Basel in June 1931, Weizmann spoke against it, declaring, "I have no sympathy or understanding for the demand for a Jewish majority. A majority does not necessarily guarantee security. . . . A majority is not required for the development of Jewish civilization and culture. The world will construe this demand only in one sense: that we want to acquire a majority in order to drive out the Arabs." Shouted down by the delegates, Weizmann was forced to resign as president. Events were overtaking his havlagah policy.

Shortly after his resignation, Weizmann immigrated with his family to Palestine, where he took up the task of establishing the Daniel Sieff Research Institute (renamed the Weizmann Institute of Science in 1949 in his honor) near Tel Aviv for the study of agriculture and biochemistry. From 1931 to 1935 he traveled extensively, raising money. In 1933 he took charge of the Bureau for Settlement of German Jews, unsuccessfully lobbied FRANCE for permission to establish Jewish settlements in SYRIA and LEBANON, and met with Mussolini, from whom he received support for the use of Italian ports for Jewish immigrants. He kept his distance from the ZIONIST EXECUTIVE, with its differing policies and personal animosities, and avoided attendance at WZO conferences. Weizmann was appalled by the TERRORISM increasingly carried out against the British by Revisionist Party guerrillas and by the assassination of HAIM VICTOR ARLOZOROV, a leading LABOR PARTY official, by members of the Revisionist movement. Jabotinsky, however, withdrew from the WZO in 1935 to form his own WORLD UNION OF ZIONIST REVISIONISTS. With the Revisionists gone, Weizmann returned to the WZO fold.

When he resumed the presidency in 1935, Weizmann continued his policy of cooperation with the British Mandate government, but events in Europe and Palestine made this policy less and less politically tenable within Zionist ranks. By the outbreak of war in 1939, Zionist policy in Palestine was dominated by supporters of active resistance against the British, led by DAVID BEN-GURION and his nemesis, Jabotinsky. And while Weizmann still had influence on policy, his role was reduced to public spokesman, diplomat, and fundraiser. Although Weizmann had spoken of his hope that Jews and Arabs might live together peacefully in an independent state of Palestine, by 1939 he had given up such thoughts. As WZO spokesman, Weizmann first worked against the proposed partition of Palestine into Arab and Jewish states but later supported it as a first step toward independence. Much to his dismay, however, matters were taken out of his hands by the explosion of World War II in Palestine beginning in 1946.

In August of that year, he ordered the HAGANA, the military wing of Ben-Gurion's MAPAI Party, to cease and desist from anti-British activities, but Ben-Gurion countered the order. In December Weizmann was forced out of the presidency by the activists, a final repudiation of his havlagah policies. Still recognized as a spokesman, he lobbied in New York at the new UNITED NATIONS in 1947 for partition and was in Washington lobbying President HARRY TRUMAN and Congress in 1948 for recognition of an independent state of Israel. That recognition came on 15 May, the day after the state was proclaimed. On 16 May, Weizmann received a telegram from Tel Aviv appointing him as president of the new state, a position he held until his death in 1952.

Bibliography

- Litvinoff, Barnet. Weizmann: Last of the Patriarchs. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1976.
- Masalha, Nur. Expulsion of the Palestinians. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1992.
- Reinharz, Jehuda. Chaim Weizmann: The Making of a Statesman, 1914–1922. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1993.
- . Chaim Weizmann: The Making of a Zionist Leader, 1874–1914. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1983.
- Rose, Norman. Chaim Weizmann: A Biography. New York: Viking, 1986.
- Weizmann, Chaim. The Letters and Papers of Chaim Weizmann, November 1902–August 1903. Edited by Barnet Litvinoff. Series A, Vol. 2. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1971.

- . The Letters and Papers of Chaim Weizmann, January 1905–December 1906. Edited by Camillo Dresner and Barnet Litvinoff. Series A, Vol. 4. Jerusalem: Israel Universities Press, 1973.
- . The Letters and Papers of Chaim Weizmann, January 1907–February 1913. Edited by Chaim Hanna Weiner and Barnet Litvinoff Weizmann. Series A, Vol. 5. Jerusalem: Israel Universities Press, 1974.
- . The Letters and Papers of Chaim Weizmann, 1931–1952. Edited by Barnet Litvinoff. Series B, Vol. 2. Brunswick, NJ: Transaction Publishers, 1983.
- . Trial and Error. New York: Schocken Books, 1949.

—Jon Mandaville

Weizmann-Faysal Agreement, 1919

The Weizmann-Faysal Agreement was a short-lived accord for Arab-Jewish cooperation based on the development of a Jewish homeland in Palestine and an Arab nation encompassing a large part of the Middle East. It was signed on 3 January 1919 by Emir Faysal (son of Sharif Husayn of Mecca, of the Hejaz or eastern Arabia, and leader of the Arab nationalist movement at the time) and CHAIM WEIZMANN, head of the ZIONIST COMMISSION (later president of the WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION). The context of the accord was the 1919 Paris Peace Conference, which was attempting to settle disputes stemming from World War I. The League of Nations had carved up the OTTOMAN EMPIRE, giving mandates to the French and British for various areas of the Arab world. The Arabs disapproved intensely, citing British promises made in the 1914–1915 HUSAYN-McMAHON CORRESPONDENCE.

Weizmann first met Faysal in June 1918, during the British advance from the south against the Ottoman Empire. As leader of the impromptu Zionist Commission, Weizmann traveled to southern Transjordan (JORDAN after 1950) to forge an agreement between Faysal and the Zionist movement to support Jewish settlement in Palestine. Palestinian Arabs were not included in the meeting, and, indeed, both men seem to have held the Palestinian Arabs in considerable disdain. Weizmann had called them “treacherous,” “arrogant,” “uneducated,” and “greedy” and reported that Faysal was “contemptuous of the Palestinian Arabs whom he doesn’t even regard as Arabs.”

In preparation for the 1919 meeting, the BRITISH MANDATE authorities urged Faysal to cultivate the Zionist movement as a powerful ally rather than to oppose it. In a secret communication, the British wrote to Faysal, “We know that the Arabs despise, condemn and hate the Jews,” but added that the Jewish race is “universal, all-powerful and cannot be put down.” In their meeting, Weizmann and Faysal established an informal agreement under which Faysal would support Jewish settlement in Palestine while the Zionist movement would assist in the development of the vast Arab nation that Faysal hoped to establish.

Weizmann and Faysal met again later in 1918 in London and soon afterward at the Paris Peace Conference. On 3 January 1919 they signed the written agreement, which is known by their names. The agreement committed both parties to conduct all relations by goodwill and understanding, to work together to encourage large-scale IMMIGRATION of Jews into Palestine while protecting the rights of the Arab peasants and tenant farmers, and to safeguard the practice of religious observances. In addition, the Muslim HOLY SITES were to be under Muslim control. The Zionist movement promised to help the Arab residents of Palestine and the future Arab state to develop their natural resources and establish a growing economy. In return, the Arabs would accept the British BALFOUR DECLARATION of 1917, calling for a Jewish national home in Palestine.

The Weizmann-Faysal Agreement survived only a few months. Faysal had conditioned his acceptance on the fulfillment of British wartime promises to the Arabs contained in the Husayn-McMahon Correspondence, which committed Britain to facilitate a unified, independent Arab state throughout the Arab world. But the outcome of the Paris conference did not provide the unified, independent Arab state that Faysal had been promised, mainly because the British and French had struck their own secret SYKES-PICOT AGREEMENT in 1916, dividing the Middle East between their own spheres of influence. Faysal began to express doubts about cooperation with the Zionist movement, and within a year he was calling on Britain to grant Palestinian Arabs their political rights as part of his Syrian kingdom.

See also HASHEMITE GENEALOGY FROM THE HEJAZ

Bibliography

- Cleveland, William L. A History of the Modern Middle East, 3rd ed. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 2004.
- Cohen, Michael J. The Origins and Evolution of the Arab Zionist Conflict. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1987.

Khalidi, Rashid. Palestinian Identity: The Construction of Modern National Consciousness. New York: Columbia University Press, 1997.

Weizmann, Chaim, and Emir Ibn al-Hussein al Hashemi Feisal. The Weizmann-Feisal Agreement, 3 Jan 1919. Israel Ministry of Foreign Affairs. n.d. www.mfa.gov.il/MFA/Peace+Process/Reference+Documents/The+Weizmann-Feisal+Agreement+3-Jan-1919.htm.

Welfare Association

The Welfare Association (Ta'awoun, or Cooperation) is a private, nonprofit foundation established in 1983 in Geneva, Switzerland, to support sustainable development in Palestinian society. Between its founding and 2000, the Welfare Association contributed over $100 million for development projects. It uses the intellectual and financial resources of Palestinians in the DIASPORA to conceive and implement development projects in the WEST BANK, GAZA, and East JERUSALEM, as well as humanitarian assistance projects for Palestinian REFUGEES in LEBANON. In the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES, the association focuses on three broad areas: culture and identity, human resource development, and capacity building. (www.welfareassociation.org/english/index.htm).

West Bank

The West Bank emerged as a geopolitical entity in the wake of the 1948 WAR and the establishment of the state of Israel on Palestinian lands lying to its west. As a result of the forces of war, military conquest, and regimes of control and governance, it became endowed with distinct social, political, and cultural contours and identities. The designation "West Bank" assumes an "East Bank," and indeed these two terms gained currency after the unification of the eastern and western banks of the Jordan River under the Jordanian state. Before it fell under Israeli Occupation after the 1967 WAR, the West Bank had been ruled since 1948 by JORDAN, which annexed the territory in 1950. From 1920 to 1948 it was under the BRITISH MANDATE, and prior to that it was part of the OTTOMAN EMPIRE.

The 2007 census put the Palestinian population of the West Bank at 2,350,583, with an annual growth rate of 3 percent. REFUGEES constitute 28.1 percent of the West Bank population (in the GAZA STRIP they constitute 67.9 percent), and the population is young, with 41 percent under the age of fifteen. Only seven Palestinian locales in the West Bank have populations over 30,000, and only 25 percent of West Bank households live in cities of more than 30,000. In 2009 approximately one-quarter of the 762,820 Palestinians registered as refugees with the UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY FOR PALESTINE REFUGEES IN THE NEAR EAST (UNRWA) and under Israeli jurisdiction lived in the West Bank camps. The poorest live in nineteen camps scattered throughout the West Bank and are supervised by UNRWA. The camps with the largest numbers of registered refugees are located in the northern West Bank: Balata Camp near NABLUS (23,600), Tulkarm Camp (18,310), and 'Askar Camp near Nablus (15,887). Many tens of thousands of refugees do not live in camps but are scattered in villages and major urban centers. Apart from Gaza City, Ramallah is the Palestinian city with the highest percentage of refugees. Data from the 2007 census reveal that only 42 percent of Ramallah–Al-Bireh residents are nonrefugees, compared to 72.1 percent in Nablus and 78.7 percent in HEBRON.

Jordanian Rule

Jordanian rule over the West Bank lasted less than two decades, although its annexation in 1948 was intended to permanently integrate it within the kingdom, and Palestinians in the West Bank were granted Jordanian citizenship. The Jordanian-Palestinian relationship underwent several phases, the most dramatic of which was the Jordanian decision, in 1988, to formally "disengage" from the West Bank, which was then under Israeli OCCUPATION. Consequently, Amman revoked West Bank Palestinians' citizenship and issued temporary passports enabling Palestinians to travel. However, this declaration, issued at the height of the Palestinians' First INTIFADA, or uprising, did not end Jordan's interest in the West Bank; it follows the situation there with intense interest. At the same time, Israeli leaders continue to speak of the "JORDANIAN OPTION" of pushing the Palestinians into Jordan's East Bank as a possible solution to Palestinian demands for an independent state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

During its rule over the West Bank, Jordan established a hegemonic political presence but did not integrate the West Bank into the Jordanian economy. Development and investment strategies were concentrated in the East Bank, resulting in the marginalization of the West Bank. The migration of thousands of Palestinians—especially professionals and those with financial means—to the East Bank led to the concentration of Palestinian capital and professional resources there, to the detriment of the West Bank. To this day, a large proportion of Jordanian industrialists, businesspeople, and professionals are Palestinians who emigrated or who were expelled from Palestine in the 1948 War.

After 1967, when both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip fell under Israeli military rule, the term “OCCUPIED TERRITORIES” entered the political lexicon and gained currency as a political concept. Under the leadership of the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO), Palestinians proposed a political entity encompassing these two territories. Thus, beginning in the mid-1970s, and into the 1980s and beyond, the political struggle of the Palestinians centered on the realization of a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The OSLO ACCORDS of 1993, between Israel and the PLO, recognized the West Bank and Gaza as “one territorial unit,” a unified political and administrative entity. However, Israel allowed no significant steps to realize this unification. If anything, the two territories have grown further apart, separated as they have become by political, legal, and physical barriers.

Context and Background

The term “Occupied Territories” does not adequately capture the dynamics of the relationship between Israel and the West Bank (and Gaza). According to INTERNATIONAL LAW, territories captured during wartime are considered under the temporary rule of the occupying force. International rules and conventions govern the conduct of the occupying power, including provisions for the preservation of the status quo. In the case of the West Bank, Israel has not only defied international law in its treatment of the Palestinian population, but more importantly it has radically altered the status quo through a consistent policy of LAND CONFISCATION, SETTLEMENT, and more recently the erection of the BARRIER (the Wall). Although Israel has not formally annexed West Bank territory beyond East JERUSALEM, for all intents and purposes it has solidified its control over land and resources in such a way as to prejudice the outcome of any political process. Palestinian legal expert Raja Shehadeh’s observation in 1985 is still largely relevant today: “The policy that Israel has been pursuing in the West Bank is intended to drive out the Palestinians, to take over their land, and eventually to annex the occupied territories.” This analysis is unaltered by the fact that Israel withdrew its armed forces and evacuated its colonies from the Gaza Strip in 2005, or that there has not been a mass expulsion of Palestinians. Most analysts as well as many Israeli officials concur that the cantonization and encirclement of West Bank cities, towns, and communities by the Wall, the PERMIT system, CHECKPOINTS, and other measures will encourage the silent “TRANSFER” of Palestinians out of the area. A historically central concept in the Zionist project in Palestine, transfer is still alive in government, policy, and academic circles in Israel. Demographic politics, according to Palestinian sociologist Elia Zureik, is another central theme in Zionist and Israeli thinking, arising from the desire to ensure a Jewish majority in historic Palestine.

Yet, while “demographic politics” is a staple of Zionist and Israeli thinking, “geographic politics,” embodied in the drive to colonize as much land in historic Palestine as possible while keeping as many Palestinians as feasible outside the purview of the state, has in fact driven Israeli practice for several decades now, and has been intimately connected with “demographic politics.” Former Israeli prime minister ARIEL SHARON was among the most vociferous proponents of the settlement drive for most of his political career. Israeli analyst Yossi Alpher has noted that one of the key consequences of the AL-AQSA INTIFADA has been that Israelis are increasingly opting for DEMOGRAPHY over geography. Instead of advocating occupying West Bank territory through de facto annexation, Sharon promoted the idea of reducing Israeli control over much of the Palestinian population to ensure that Israel remains a predominantly Jewish state and to avoid the South Africa type of fate awaiting Israel if it does not relinquish territory.

Separation and segregation were among the basic cornerstones of the apartheid regime in South Africa, and an Israeli strategy of separation cannot avoid the comparison. Ideas of autonomy and self-rule for Palestinians are consistent with this model as well. Analyst Geoffrey Aronson articulated this idea very succinctly some years ago: “Autonomy and its successors have been conceived as mechanisms for the institutionalization of Palestinian inferiority in the context of permanent Israeli rule.” Today, increasing numbers of scholars and analysts are making the case for the analogy with South Africa’s system of apartheid. They argue that Israel, through its relentless policy of colonization, separation, and encirclement of Palestinian communities, is either in the process of laying the foundations of an apartheid state or has already become one. A 2009 study commissioned by the Human Sciences Research Council of South Africa concluded that Israel's Occupation had become a colonial enterprise that implements a system of apartheid.

Geographer Ghazi Falah has shown that far from being a recent phenomenon, the "enclavisation of space" has been implemented as an instrument of spatial expansion and control since 1967 and is rooted in a long-standing policy of territorial expropriation—to dismember the space of the remaining Palestinian population. Indeed, as Leila Farsakh notes, the permit system, the territorial fragmentation of the occupied Palestinian territory under the Oslo Accords, and the expansion of settlements have all contributed to the creation of disconnected Palestinian population reserves that have the characteristics of BANTUSTANS rather than of cantons, one of the terms used by analysts to describe the enclaves created by the Barrier and its associated regime. More dramatically, sociologist Sari Hanafi has called the Israeli colonial project "spacio-cidal," targeting land so as to render inevitable the "voluntary" transfer of the Palestinian population primarily by targeting the space upon which they live.

Profiles of the West Bank and Gaza have stressed political homogeneity and social heterogeneity between the two regions. United by the Israeli Occupation, Palestinians in both areas have experienced much the same regime of control and surveillance and have suffered alike from the effects of colonization, theft of land and WATER resources, and political repression. Yet social, economic, demographic, and political conditions in the West Bank and Gaza are different, and if the prevailing circumstances of total separation between the two continue, the differences between them are likely to intensify. Successive Israeli governments have settled Jewish Israelis and immigrants in colonies in the West Bank since the late 1960s, and their total number in 2009 was close to 500,000. The majority live in the large settlement blocs around Jerusalem and in settlements in the central and southern West Bank. Most Palestinians in the West Bank do not come into daily contact with settlers, although Palestinian laborers employed in settlements or those who must pass in the vicinity of colonies have a long experience of conflict with the Israelis in their midst. Only one city, Hebron (al-Khalil), has Israeli colonists living in its heart, and bitter conflict with settlers has been a regular feature of life in this divided city.

West Bank Economy

The turbulent history of Palestine, particularly in the period since 1948, provides the context for understanding many features of West Bank society. Although it is true that the West Bank was spared the violent uprooting and trauma of the 1948 War and has maintained much of its social fabric, its present reality is nevertheless a product of this defining moment as well as of the subsequent transformations unleashed by the military Occupation of 1967. Conditions of instability and vulnerability induced by cycles of war, near-war, invasion, flight, migration, imprisonment, and punishment have shaped patterns of sociality, community life, and institutional arrangements as well as political organizing and resistance activities. One of the most striking features of the ECONOMY of the West Bank is its nearly total dependence on the Israeli economy. Israel fostered this relationship through a variety of processes and mechanisms, the most important of which have been the absorption of Palestinian labor in Israel and the creation of a captive market for Israeli goods in the West Bank and Gaza. Patterns of Palestinian employment in Israel have varied over the years. In the first two decades after 1967, through the period just before the outbreak of the first GULF WAR, great numbers of West Bank Palestinians (the vast majority of whom were peasants) were employed in Israel. Israeli construction, agriculture, services, and industry employed nearly half of the Palestinian labor force.

The other major mechanism of economic integration with Israel was the imposition of severe restrictions on the entry of West Bank goods into Israel and on the export of Palestinian agricultural produce to the Arab world and Europe. The combined effects of labor migration to Israel, land confiscation for Israeli colonizing activities, restrictions on the use of water, and competition from Israeli goods led to the marginalization of agriculture, which had traditionally formed the backbone of the economy in the West Bank and had been the main source of livelihood. By the 1980s, wage labor from work in Israel and within the West Bank itself became the main source of household income. Agriculture, once the main economic activity of the West Bank, by 1990 employed only 18.4 percent of the labor force in rural areas, where slightly more than half of the West Bank population lives. The marginalization of agriculture has been a gradual process, motivated primarily by the availability of wage labor in Israel in the first decades of the Occupation and exacerbated in subsequent years by land confiscation for the building of settlements and ROADS, restrictions on water use, difficulty of exporting produce, and competition from Israeli agricultural commodities. By the 1980s, wage labor from work in Israel and within the West Bank itself became the main source of household income.

Because of the predominance of wage labor and the fact that the family farm no longer constitutes the basic unit of production, Palestinians living in West Bank villages cannot be considered peasants and do not live in a peasant economy. However, agriculture still provides a part of family income in most villages. Landholdings are small to medium-sized, with commercial agriculture a viable enterprise only in the northern plains and in the JORDAN RIFT VALLEY. In the hilly regions, rain-fed agriculture predominates, with olives and olive oil the main agricultural products.

After the establishment of the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA) in 1994, investment by both local and expatriate Palestinians stimulated the West Bank economy somewhat, notably in real estate and construction, telecommunications, tourism, and services. However, at the same time, Israel began to limit the entry of Palestinian laborers to Israeli work sites, a policy that was tightened after the outbreak of the al-Aqsa Intifada in late 2000, when a formidable network of military checkpoints, gates, trenches, and other barriers severely restricted the movement of Palestinians. Palestinian farmers have been especially hard hit, with income lost due to the inability of farmers to transport their produce in a timely manner across the many obstructions erected by the Israeli army. However, the impact of the Wall between Israel and the West Bank promises to be more durable and severe. Once it is completed, Palestinian farmers—as well as all other Palestinians—will find themselves imprisoned in discrete cantons: Nablus and JENIN in the north, Ramallah and Salbit in the center, BETHLEHEM and Hebron in the south; and JERICHO in the east. In 2009 a UNITED NATIONS agency reported that the Israeli CLOSURE system, comprising over six hundred physical barriers, remained the primary cause of poverty and the humanitarian crisis in the West Bank (and Gaza)—a system that restricted access to HEALTH CARE and EDUCATION services, employment, markets, and social and religious networks.

Many West Bank villages, particularly in the central area, have witnessed a building boom in recent decades, thanks to increased income from wage labor in Israel and remittances from family members outside the country. Modern architectural styles (multistory apartment buildings and residential villas) have spread to villages. Although traffic between villages and their urban centers continues in the West Bank, the uncertainty of travel and long periods of closure have prompted local entrepreneurs (many with shops and businesses in the nearby city) to set up grocery stores, car repair shops, and other services in villages rather than travel to the cities. Physicians, dentists, hairdressers, and other professionals and service providers have also been part of this “forced” urbanization of villages.

Major Cities and Towns

Palestine’s steady trajectory toward urbanization was aborted because of the loss to Israel of the coastal cities and West Jerusalem in the 1948 War, while subsequent decades witnessed the exponential growth of the Jordanian capital, Amman (mainly through Palestinian immigration), and the gradual stagnation of Jerusalem. The major cities and towns of the West Bank are Nablus (population 126,132), Tulkarm (51,300), Qalqilya (41,739), and Jenin (39,004) in the north; East Jerusalem (225,416), Ramallah–al-Birah (65,662), and Bethlehem (25,266) in the center; and Hebron (158,918) in the south. In 1948 the major Palestinian cities were HAIFA, JAFFA, and the western part of Jerusalem.

The main cities in the West Bank (Nablus, the eastern part of Jerusalem, and Hebron) absorbed succeeding waves of refugees and immigrants since 1948; however, because of the close proximity of villages to urban centers and relatively good communication networks, rural-urban migration has not been considerable in the West Bank. Only after the establishment of the PNA did the West Bank witness significant internal migration. Most of this movement is to the once-peripheral town of Ramallah, largely because, as the de facto seat of the PNA, it has become a center for the government bureaucracy, trade, services, and Palestinian nongovernmental organizations. Recent data on population movement indicate that, of those reporting having changed their place of residence within the West Bank and Gaza, the highest proportion have moved to the Ramallah district, followed by the Hebron and Nablus districts. The highest proportion of respondents who reported having changed their place of residence had bachelor's degrees or more. These data suggest that we may be witnessing a specific rather than general type of population movement involving mainly educated professionals, and to Ramallah more than to the other cities. This points to the emergence of pockets of economic growth and prosperity centered in the Ramallah region, but also to the rise of pockets of destitution in other areas where the less educated are trapped and unable to move out.

East Jerusalem, which during the 1970s and 1980s had become an important political and cultural center, has lost its status as the West Bank's metropolitan center. As a result of a series of administrative, legal, economic, and military measures implemented by Israel, it has been reduced to a fragmented and impoverished city. Moreover, after 1994, Jerusalem fell further behind when Ramallah became the seat of the PNA and witnessed expanded growth at the expense of Jerusalem and other Palestinian towns and cities. The final blow is the Wall. Once completed, it will not only cut off Jerusalem's Palestinians from the rest of the West Bank but also lock the residents of its Palestinian suburbs into discrete pockets without easy access to the heart of the city. The integrity of East Jerusalem as an urban center and as an urban community is thus in the balance.

Other than Jerusalem, the cities of the West Bank historically have not been sites of cosmopolitanism or modern lifestyles. Even during the early part of the twentieth century, when Palestine was being incorporated into the world economy and Jerusalem and its coastal cities were flourishing, the inland cities of Nablus, Hebron, NAZARETH, and Bethlehem were not affected by the wave of urban modernity that was sweeping the region from Beirut to Alexandria. Only a small segment of the commercial and landed elite in these cities partook of modern education for their sons and daughters. Hebron, for example, remained an insular city where skills in trade and manufacturing were acquired within the family; even today it has the lowest education levels among West Bank cities.

After 1967 the Occupation cut off the West Bank as a whole from intellectual, cultural, and political trends and movements in the growing cities of the Arab world. Despite considerable movement of people between the West Bank and the Arab world and other Palestinian DIASPORAS, West Bank cities maintained their small-town, conservative auras. Established social hierarchies were largely maintained, even in the face of the erosion of urban-rural networks of power and patronage due to the spread of wage labor and the marginalization of agriculture, and notwithstanding the growing hegemony of the youthful cadres of PLO-affiliated parties, fronts, associations, and federations. Ramallah has been the one exception. There, the depletion through migration of the ranks of the local elite has led to the formation of new hegemonic groups composed of migrants from other areas within the West Bank and high-ranking PNA officials.

West Bank Society

Although Palestinians have lost their traditional political and cultural center in Jerusalem, forces are also at work to curtail national-level life and introduce localism on a wider scale. The social and political effects of the ever-expanding network of RESTRICTIONS ON MOVEMENT, including the Wall, are diverse. One of these has been the development of commercial and service-related enterprises in villages where regular communication with traditional market centers in nearby cities and towns has become precarious, as noted above. Other developments, whose full implications are yet to unfold, threaten the political, cultural, and social integrity of West Bank society as a whole. Already, and by the beginning of the Second Intifada, the difficulty of movement has resulted in increased fragmentation of cultural, political, and intellectual life. Palestinians' social worlds are contracting, and localisms of a kind not observed anywhere else in the Arab world are threatening to take hold of their lives: a "cosmopolitan" localism in Ramallah, as isolated from the rest of the West Bank as the localisms of insular Hebron or Jenin. Clan-based networks and relationships have lost much of their relevance in the everyday lives of most Palestinians in the West Bank. The hamula (clan) is no longer a central functional socioeconomic unit or a basis for action and solidarity, although it can be evoked and mobilized in times of crisis or political exigency (such as in settling disputes or in mobilizing for municipal or parliamentary election campaigns). The larger (extended) family, however, is still central to social life and survival, even though 83 percent of Palestinians in the West Bank live in nuclear family households. Although the family is traditionally the principal mainstay of Palestinian society in times of adversity, serving as the main agency of survival, social mobility, and sociality, the proverbial role of the family as “shock absorber” is being stretched thin, especially under the difficult conditions of rampant unemployment and poverty ushered in by the Second Intifada. One indicator of the inability of the family to provide for its members is the large number of families receiving assistance. Data show that in 2005 a quarter of West Bank households were receiving social assistance, and over 60 percent indicated that they were in need of such assistance. This has policy implications for the provision of basic services and support by public agencies, because it cannot be assumed that families are always there to function as a social safety net.

In the coastal cities and Jerusalem in the early decades of the twentieth century, non-kin-based forms of association and sociality and a growing public sphere prevailed and found expression in political parties, labor unions, charitable societies, literary clubs, café life, and other associations and forums. At the same time, Palestinian society in the West Bank outside Jerusalem and the coastal cities was largely characterized by more parochial ties and forms of association. Although political parties and societies existed in Nablus, Hebron, and other West Bank cities in the early part of the twentieth century, these were largely restricted to the urban elite. It was only in the 1970s that non-kin-based associations broadened to encompass cities, villages, and refugee camps, driven by the PLO-affiliated political parties, particularly those on the left, and educational institutions, primarily the several new universities and colleges founded by Palestinian educators and funded by grants channeled through the PLO.

Youth at universities, colleges, and secondary schools were politicized within the framework of political parties, student federations, and youth organizations; and branches of women’s associations, labor federations, and voluntary work committees were established in all major cities, towns, and refugee camps. Membership in these associations and organizations, coupled with the education acquired at universities, became the main vehicles for social and political mobility. Whereas national-level politics had been the prerogative of the elite until then, the 1980s witnessed the emergence of a youthful political leadership drawn from villages, refugee camps, and the urban middle and lower classes. This was the generation that led the

First Intifada (1987–1991), and many of the current political leaders received their initiation into national politics in the PLO’s mass organizations and during the Intifada. The experience of PRISONERS, shared by tens of thousands of activists in Israeli jails, was another important source of national-level association and organizing.

Residents of refugee camps, most of which are located in and around major urban centers, are part of the social dynamics of these communities, notwithstanding their unique identity and legal status. Because of the presence of basic services provided by UNRWA, education levels in refugee camps are higher than in most villages, and health conditions are also better, although overcrowding and unemployment rates have been consistently higher. Refugee camps are vibrant communities of people with a strong sense of identity as refugees. All major political parties, factions, and movements organize within the camps, which are also sites of sociality, community work, and organizing. Most camps, particularly the larger ones adjacent or close to urban centers, have community centers, popular committees, youth clubs, sports teams, and other forms of association. During the First and Second Intifadas, committees in camps played an active role in collecting donations, supervising the delivery of services, and organizing resistance activities.

The expansion of the public sphere in the West Bank is linked to these political and social developments and their extensions into the 1990s and beyond. In the opening decade of the twenty-first century, a vibrant and diverse public sphere exists where, despite the forces of fragmentation, there is considerable debate over issues of national importance. National and local television and radio stations, newspapers and magazines, electronic discussion groups and news services, conferences and workshops, and the growing network of NGOs constitute the multiple sites and forums for this debate. One indicator of the expansion of the public sphere is the growing interest in PUBLIC OPINION; no fewer than ten Palestinian organizations conduct regular polls on political and social issues, attracting the interest of the informed public as well as that of politicians and foreign governments. Trans-Arab satellite television is also an important actor in the Palestinian public sphere; interestingly, the two principal Arabic-language television channels, Al-Jazeera and Al-‘Arabiyya, serve as prime vehicles for bringing Palestinians in the Diaspora together in debate and are often the first to bring breaking news about the Occupied Territories to Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza. Overall, and despite the forces of fragmentation and isolation, Palestinians have a window onto the world and a means of national-level debate and discussion. Still, this will provide only a partial remedy at best to the increasing fragmentation taking place on the ground.

See also BANTUSTANS; BARRIER; CIVIL SOCIETY IN THE WEST BANK AND GAZA; ECONOMY; FAMILY REUNIFICATION; GAZA STRIP; JERUSALEM; LAND; OCCUPATION; REFUGEES AND THE RIGHT OF RETURN; SETTLEMENTS; SETTLER VIOLENCE; WATER RESOURCES AND ACCESS

Bibliography

- Abu-Odeh, Adnan. Jordanians, Palestinians, and the Hashemite Kingdom in the Middle East Peace Process. Washington, DC: United States Institute of Peace, 1999.
- Alpher, Yossi. The Future of the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict: Critical Trends Affecting Israel. Special Report 149. United States Institute of Peace. 2005. www.usip.org/pubs/specialreports/sr149.pdf.
- Aronson, Geoffrey. Creating Facts: Israel, Palestinians and the West Bank. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1987.
- . Israel, Palestinians, and the Intifada: Creating Facts on the West Bank. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1990.
- Benvenisti, Meron, with Ziad Abu-Zayed and Danny Rubinstein. The West Bank Handbook: A Political Lexicon. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1986.
- Bisharat, George Emile. Palestinian Lawyers and Israeli Rule: Law and Disorder in the West Bank. Austin: University of Texas Press, 1990.
- Dolphin, Ray. The West Bank Wall: Unmaking Palestine. London: Pluto Press, 2006.
- Efrat, Elisha. The West Bank and Gaza Strip: A Geography of Occupation. London: Routledge, 2006.
- Falah, Ghazi-Walid. "The Geopolitics of Enclavisation and the Demise of the Two-State Solution to the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict." Third World Quarterly. 26:8 (2005).
- Farsakh, Leila. "Independence, Cantons or Bantustans: Whither the Palestinian State?" The Middle East Journal. 59:2 (Spring 2005).
- Hanafi, Sari. "Targeting Space through Bio-Politics: The Israeli Colonial Project." Palestine Report. 10:32 (2004).
- Heiberg, Marianne, and Geir Ovensen. Palestinian Society in Gaza, West Bank and Arab Jerusalem: A Survey of Living Conditions. Oslo, Norway: Fafo, Institute for Applied Social Science, 1993.
- Hilal, Jamil. "The West Bank and Gaza Strip: Social Formation under Jordanian and Egyptian Rule." Review of Middle East Studies. 5 (1992).
- International Monetary Fund. The Economy of the West Bank and Gaza Strip: Recent Experience, Prospects, and Challenges to Private Sector Development. Edited by Steven Barnett. Washington, DC: International Monetary Fund, 1998.
- Kahan, David. Agriculture and Water Resources in the West Bank and Gaza. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1988.
- Lein, Yehezkel. Land Grab: Israel's Settlement Policy in the West Bank. Jerusalem: B'Tselem (Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories), 2002.
- Ma'oz, Moshe. Palestinian Leadership on the West Bank: The Changing Role of the Mayors under Jordan and Israel. Totowa, NJ: Frank Cass, 1984.
- Newman, David, ed. Impact of Gush Emunim: Politics and Settlement in the West Bank. Houndmills, Basingstoke, UK: Palgrave Macmillan, 1985.
- Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics. Impact of the Israeli Measures on the Economic Conditions of Palestinian Households. April–June 2005. http://www.pcbs.gov.ps/Portals/\_pcbs/PressRelease/Measures13\_e.pdf.
- . Population, Housing and Establishment Census 2007: Census Final Results in the West Bank, Summary (Population and Housing). 2008. http://www.pcbs.gov.ps/Portals/\_PCBS/Downloads/book1487.pdf.
- . Population, Housing and Establishment Census 2007: Main Indicators by Locality Type, 2009. http://www.pcbs.gov.ps/Portals/\_pcbs/census2007/ind\_loca\_09.pdf.
- Plascov, Avi. The Palestinian Refugees in Jordan, 1948–1967. London: Frank Cass, 1981.
- Shah, Samira. The By-pass Road Network in the West Bank. Ramallah: Al-Haq, Law in the Service of Man, 1997.
- Shehadeh, Raja. Occupier's Law: Israel and the West Bank. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1985.
- Tamari, Salim. "Jerusalem: Subordination and Governance in a Sacred Geography." In Capital Cities: Ethnographies of Urban Governance in the Middle East. Edited by Seteney Shami. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2001.
- Taraki, Lisa. "The Development of Political Consciousness among Palestinians in the Occupied Territories, 1967–1987." In Intifada: Palestine at the Crossroads. Edited by Roger Heacock and Jamal Nassar. New York: Praeger Publishers, 1990.
- . "Enclave Micropolis: The Paradoxical Case of Ramallah/al-Bireh." Journal of Palestine Studies. 37:4 (Summer 2008).
- Taraki, Lisa, and Rita Giacaman. "Modernity Aborted and Reborn: Ways of Being Urban in Palestine." In Palestine through the Lens of the Family: The Dynamics of Place, Resistance and Survival. Edited by Lisa Taraki. Syracuse, NY: Syracuse University Press, 2006.
- Tilley, Virginia, ed. Occupation, Colonialism, Apartheid? A Re-assessment of Israel's Practices in the Occupied

Palestinian Territories under International Law. Commissioned and coordinated by the Middle East Project (MEP) of the Democracy and Governance Programme, a research programme of the Human Sciences Research Council of South Africa. May 2009. http://www.hsrc.ac.za/Research\_Publication-21366.phtml.

United Nations Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC). Economic and Social Repercussions of the Israeli Occupation on the Living Conditions of the Palestinian People in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Including Jerusalem, and of the Arab Population in the Occupied Syrian Golan. (A/64/77-E/2009/13). May 2009. http://www.reliefweb.int/rw/RWFFiles2009.nsf/FilesByRWDocUnidFilename/SNAA-7UE43X-full\_report.pdf/\$File/full\_report.pdf.

United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs. West Bank Movement and Access Update. November 2009. http://www.ochaopt.org/documents/ocha\_opt\_movement\_access\_2009\_november\_english.pdf.

United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East. West Bank Refugee Camp Profiles. UNRWA, 2009. www.un.org/unrwa/refugees/westbank.html.

Zureik, Elia. "Demography and Transfer: Israel's Road to Nowhere." Third World Quarterly. 24:4 (2003).

—Lisa Taraki

West Jerusalem

See JERUSALEM

Western Wall

The Western Wall in the OLD CITY OF JERUSALEM is a retaining wall that many believe dates from the time of the Second Temple, between 516 BCE and 70 CE. In Hebrew, it is Kotel Ma'aravi, or Kotel, or Wailing Wall, and in Arabic it is al-Buraq or Waqf Abu Madiyan al-Buraq. It is one of the most contentious sites in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, beginning with clashes that erupted there in 1920, 1928, and 1929. The Second Temple was a reconstruction of the First (Solomon's Temple, built in the tenth century BCE and destroyed by the Babylonians in 586 BCE). It was without the Ark of the Covenant and other sacred objects, focusing instead on rituals and sacrifices known as the korbanot. It is the most sacred building in Judaism and the center of Jewish worship.

Around 19 BCE, Herod the Great began a massive renovation and expansion of the Second Temple complex, which was located on Mount Moriah. He destroyed the original temple and built a new one in its place. He also built the vast retaining walls that surrounded the small, quasi-natural plateau on which the First and Second Temples stood and on which the wide-open spaces of the TEMPLE MOUNT/AL-HARAM ASH-SHARIF are today. The resulting structure is sometimes called Herod's Temple, but Jews consider it the Second Temple because the sacrificial rituals continued unabated throughout the Roman construction process. In 70 CE, Roman legions under Titus conquered and destroyed all of Jerusalem, including the Second Temple, and Jews fled Palestine in a second exile. The city remained under Roman and Byzantine rule and fell into ruin until it was conquered by Muslim forces in 638. The wall abutted the neighborhood of the al-Maghariba (Moroccans), and throughout the OTTOMAN EMPIRE until World War I it was part of a Muslim waqf property named after one Abu Madiyan (Sidi Abu Madiyan [1126–1198], who was a Sufi teacher, scholar, writer, and poet, the single most important founder of Sufism in the Maghreb and Andalusia, and known as "the teacher of teachers").

The wall that remains in Jerusalem today is the only remnant of the Second Temple. As such, it was the Western Wall toward which Jews historically focused their prayers. For 2,000 years Jews have prayed at the wall, believing that that spot has greater holiness than any other accessible place on earth and that God is nearby listening to their prayers. The tradition of placing prayers or requests written on a small piece of paper into a crack in the wall goes back hundreds of years.

The Western Wall is also holy to Muslims, who believe that Moses, Abraham, Solomon, and their successors are prophets to be venerated. Additionally, Muslims believe that the Prophet Muhammad made a spiritual journey to Jerusalem on a winged horse, al-Buraq, in 620 CE. While there, he tethered the horse to a wall, which Muslims believe to be the Western Wall. Hence, the Arabic name for the wall is the al-Buraq Wall. Moreover, a passage in the Quran refers to the "furtherest Mosque," which Muslims interpret as Mount Moriah and which led to the construction there, by the second caliph, of the AL-AQSA MOSQUE. Later, Muslims built the DOME OF THE ROCK over the place where Muhammad began his "night journey." Both the dome and the mosque plus the numerous other shrines that sit on the al-Haram ash-Sharif/Temple Mount are considered the third holiest site in Islam.

In 1517 the Islamic Ottoman Empire under Selim I took the land of Palestine from the Egyptian MAMLUKS (1250–1517). The Ottomans had a benevolent attitude toward the Jews, having welcomed thousands of Jewish refugees recently expelled from Spain. The Turkish sultan, Suleiman the Magnificent, was so impressed with the Old City of Jerusalem that he ordered the construction of a magnificent fortress-wall surrounding the entire city, which still stands.

Throughout the Ottoman period, until World War I, the Western Wall remained a Muslim waqf (religious trust), and during those years Jews had to obtain permission from the Muslim authorities to visit the site, although they were not allowed to treat it as a place of pilgrimage and regular worship. In 1840 Ibrahim Pasha of EGYPT, briefly in control of Palestine, issued a firman (edict) forbidding the Jews to pave the passage in front of the wall. It also cautioned them against “raising their voices and displaying their books there.” They were, however, allowed “to pay visits to it as of old.” The edict was reissued by the Ottoman sultan Abdul Hamid II in 1889 and this became known as the “status quo.”

Immediately after the British conquest of Jerusalem in 1919, Zionist leader CHAIM WEIZMANN proposed to the British military governor of Jerusalem, Ronald Storrs, that the Zionists be allowed to purchase the wall. He offered between £75,000 and £100,000 (approximately £5 million, or about $7 million, in modern terms) and also offered to purchase the area at the foot of the wall and rehouse the occupants, the al-Maghariba community that had lived in the area ever since coming to Jerusalem as pilgrims beginning in 1209. (The quarter was established in 1193 by SALADIN’s son, al-Malik al-Afdal, according to the fourteenth-century historian Mujir ud-Din, as a waqf dedicated to Moroccans). Storrs was enthusiastic about the idea but negotiations broke down after strong Muslim opposition.

Under the BRITISH MANDATE, the authorities eased conditions for the Jewish worshipers, while agreeing with both sides to preserve the “status quo” with regard to all the HOLY SITES in Jerusalem. After World War I, however, the Jewish community was the largest in Jerusalem, and the British Mandate government, which tended to be pro-Zionist, enabled the Zionists to increase their presence at the site by small increments. Muslim anger about these changes led to several bloody conflicts.

While Kamil al-Husayni was mufti (1908–1921), the Muslim authorities reacted mildly to Jewish breaches of the status quo at the wall, but once the SUPREME MUSLIM COUNCIL (1922) was launched and Jewish confidence grew, clashes at the site intensified. AL-HAJJ AMIN AL-HUSAYNI (mufti from 1921 to 1948) kept calling the government’s attention to the fact that the Jews were bringing more objects and religious appurtenances, including chairs and benches, into the area in front of the wall. The Palestinians connected this behavior to statements made by Jewish and Zionist figures about the need to build a Third Temple. The council presented the government with retouched photographs that the Zionist community was sending to potential donors overseas, showing the Jewish Third Temple standing on the al-Haram ash-Sharif. Throughout the 1920s, the PLO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE and the Supreme Muslim Council sent delegates and appeals to all parts of the Muslim world, asking for assistance against the threat of a Jewish takeover of the al-Haram ash-Sharif.

In 1922, the Mandatory authority in Palestine, referencing the Ottoman status quo, forbade the placing of benches near the wall, although they soon backed down in the face of Jewish protest. In place of the status quo, a relatively flexible modus vivendi emerged, and screens to segregate men and women were put up from time to time when large numbers of people gathered to pray. In 1925 there was a flare-up over access to the Western Wall, following which the JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL demanded that the British government compel the Muslim religious authorities to sell the wall. The following year the Jewish Agency proposed purchasing 50 meters (about 150 feet) of the al-Haram ash-Sharif, including the wall, and began to negotiate with the government, but the deal fell through.

On 28 September 1928, the Jewish Day of Atonement, British police forcefully removed a screen used to separate men and women at prayer. Women who tried to prevent the screen from being dismantled were beaten by the police, who used pieces of the broken wooden frame as clubs. Chairs were then pulled out from under elderly worshipers. District commissioner of Jerusalem Edward Kittrich described the screen as violating the Ottoman status quo that forbade Jews from making any changes in the Western Wall area. At the end of 1928, Weizmann wanted to offer 61,000 Palestinian pounds ($305,000) for the property but accepted the advice of the HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR PALESTINE, John Chancellor, to wait for a more opportune moment. In 1929, Jewish extremists instigated riots at the wall (WESTERN WALL DISTURBANCES), which spread beyond Jerusalem, killing many Jews and Palestinians. In 1931 the British government issued a document affirming Muslim property rights to the wall and placing strictures on Jewish observance.

Muslims also sought to legitimize and solidify their control of the holy sites. One of the most effective ways for the mufti of Jerusalem, al-Hajj Amin al-Husayni, to enhance local and regional interest in Jerusalem was by restoring the shrines on the al-Haram ash-Sharif. They had already been in need of such work in late Ottoman times, but now the main impetus for the enterprise was political. In 1923–1924 al-Husayni managed to raise substantial contributions from all over the Muslim world and started the renovation, which culminated in the gold plating of the Dome of the Rock.

During the 1948 WAR, Israel and JORDAN divided Jerusalem, contravening UN RESOLUTION 181, and the area near the wall fell under Jordanian control. Though the two countries signed an armistice, Jordan denied Jews access to the wall, in violation of the agreement. During the 1967 WAR Israel brought the wall under complete Jewish control and demolished the Palestinian al-Maghariba neighborhood. In its place, they built a large plaza in front of the wall, where on Jewish holidays thousands of Jews gather, and which has become a favorite year-round tourist attraction. Many foreign heads of state who visit Israel come to the wall to demonstrate respect for its significance to Israel and to Jews worldwide.

Bibliography

- Abu el-Haj, Nadia. Facts on the Ground: Archaeological Practice and Territorial Self-Fashioning in Israeli Society. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2002.
- BiblePlaces.com. Western Wall Plaza. n.d. www.bibleplaces.com/westernwall.htm.
- Cline, Eric H. Jerusalem Besieged: From Ancient Canaan to Modern Israel. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 2005.
- Dumper, Michael. The Politics of Sacred Space: The Old City of Jerusalem in the Middle East Conflict. Boulder, CO: Lynne Rienner Publishers, 2003.
- Lundsten, Mary Ellen. "Wall Politics: Zionist and Palestinian Strategies in Jerusalem, 1928." Journal of Palestine Studies. 8:1 (1978).

Pappé, Ilan. "Haj Amin and the Buraq Revolt." Jerusalem Quarterly. 18 (2003).

Slavik, Diane. Daily Life in Ancient and Modern Jerusalem. Minneapolis, MN: Runestone Press, 2000.

Western Wall Disturbances, 1929

As tensions rose in the 1920s between Jews and Arabs over the expanding Zionist project that increased Jewish IMMIGRATION and LAND purchases in Palestine, Jerusalem's WESTERN WALL took on political and nationalist significance for both sides. In 1929 a dispute between Jews and Arabs over access to the wall spread to other parts of Palestine and resulted in the deaths of 133 Jews and 116 Arabs and in the wounding of 339 Jews and 232 Arabs.

The Western Wall, sometimes referred to as the Wailing Wall, is the remaining supporting wall of the Second Temple that was built by Herod and destroyed by the Romans in 70 CE, and is the holiest site in Judaism. In Arabic, the wall is known as al-Buraq, named for the Prophet Muhammad's horse. According to Islamic tradition, Muhammad tethered his horse at the wall prior to his night journey to heaven, and the wall is sacred to Muslims. During OTTOMAN EMPIRE rule (1517–1918), Jews were allowed a customary right of access, including the right to pray at the wall, and on the high holidays they were sometimes allowed to blow the shofar (ram's horn) and to set up temporary benches and an ark for the Torah scrolls; however, they could not bring the full accoutrements for a religious service. The Western Wall and the adjoining entire TEMPLE MOUNT/AL-HARAM ASH-SHARIF were always considered the property of the Islamic waqf. BRITISH MANDATE authorities attempted to continue this "status quo" after assuming control of Palestine under the League of Nations mandate, but, as part of their growing political power and militancy, Jews sought to expand their right of access to the wall.

Jewish philanthropists and the Zionist movement itself made several attempts to purchase the wall, known in Hebrew as Kotel Ma'aravi. In September 1928, conflict over the Western Wall began when the status quo was challenged during the Jewish high holidays, and the Jews attempted to secure additional rights while Muslim leaders sought to emphasize the waqf's ownership of al-Buraq. On 23 September 1928, on the eve of Yom Kippur (the Jewish Day of Atonement), Jews placed a screen at the wall to separate male and female worshipers. Muslim leaders protested this action, seeing it as a first step by Jews and the Zionist movement to claim permanent possession of the wall. AL-HAJJ AMIN AL-HUSAYNI, who as the British-appointed mufti of JERUSALEM was the highest-ranking Muslim official in Palestine, led the call for action by the Mandatory authorities. The next morning, on Yom Kippur, British police went to the wall, destroyed the screen, and in the ensuing melee roughed up some Jewish worshipers.

Shortly after this incident, VLADIMIR (ZE'EV) JABOTINSKY, leader of the militant Zionist Revisionist Party and the BETAR youth movement, arrived in Palestine to establish permanent residence. Jabotinsky and his followers sought to push Jewish claims to all of Palestine and to challenge the status quo concerning the Western Wall.

Tensions increased on several occasions in 1929 as Muslim worshipers leaving Friday noon prayers at the AL-AQSA MOSQUE threw stones at Jews praying at the wall below. Tensions rose further as the Jewish high holidays approached, and all parties expected trouble. On 14 August 1929, which was the Ninth of Av (a Jewish holy day commemorating the destruction of the First and Second Temples), approximately 6,000 Jews, including many Revisionists and Betarim, gathered at the wall. In addition to traditional prayers, they sang the Zionist anthem "Hatikva," waved Zionist flags, and shouted "The wall is ours." An Arab counter-rally, organized by the SUPREME MUSLIM COUNCIL, was held following the noon prayers on 16 August, the birthday of the Prophet Muhammad. The protest turned violent: Arabs attacked Jews praying at the wall, desecrated Torah scrolls, and burned the prayers placed by Jewish worshipers in the wall's crevices. The following day, Arabs attacked and killed a Jewish youth who was playing soccer. On 21 August thousands of Jews attended the boy's funeral, which turned into a Zionist protest rally. Militant Zionists clashed with British police, and approximately twenty-five Jews were injured.

The volatile situation erupted into major rioting on 23 August. Palestinians from throughout the Jerusalem area came to the al-Haram ash-Sharif to pray and to protest, many armed with knives and clubs. In the late morning, Jews in Jerusalem's OLD CITY were attacked, and, around noon, Jews killed two Arabs in Mea She'rim, a Jewish neighborhood in Jerusalem. In this tense atmosphere, small local incidents of violence on both sides sparked waves of larger and more deadly attacks against Jews in Jerusalem, HEBRON, SAFED, and elsewhere, which continued off and on for about one week. The greatest violence occurred in Hebron, a city holy to both Jews and Muslims as the burial place of the Patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. In 1929 about 20,000 Arabs and fewer than 1,000 Jews, who were ultra-Orthodox and non-Zionist, lived in Hebron. The Jews of Hebron had lived largely in peace among Hebron's Arabs for nearly eight centuries, until the early 1920s, when Palestine's intercommunal tensions reached the city. With false rumors spreading that the Jews were killing Arabs and that they were going to seize the al-Aqsa Mosque, armed Arabs (many from outlying areas) attacked Hebron's Jews. Law enforcement was scarce. The British Mandatory government had fewer than 300 policemen in all of Palestine, and the Hebron police force consisted of only a few poorly armed officers who were easily overwhelmed by the violence.

On 23 and 24 August, Jewish Hebronites were attacked in their synagogues and homes in acts of extreme barbarism that included beatings, stabbings, beheadings, and rapes. Houses, shops, and synagogues were burned and looted. Sixty-seven Jews were killed in the massacre, including approximately a dozen women, seven yeshiva students from North America, and three children under the age of five. Scores of Jews were wounded, and nine Arabs were killed by the police or by Jews. As the frenzy of violence gripped the town, Arab Hebronites from twenty-eight households hid a total of 435 Jews in their homes, sometimes placing their own lives at risk in doing so. After the violence subsided, the British authorities evacuated the remaining Jews from Hebron.

On Thursday, 29 August, in one of the last incidents of the weeklong rioting, Arabs from villages surrounding Safed attacked Safed's largely SEPHARDIC Jewish community, killing and mutilating residents, including children in an orphanage. Eighteen Safed Jews were killed, forty were wounded, and scores of buildings were burned or looted. In the riots of 1929, Arabs killed most of the Jews, while the police or British soldiers killed most of the Arabs. Jews killed a few Arabs, including some women and children, and desecrated at least one mosque. Following the riots, the Mandatory government put on trial approximately 790 Arabs and 160 Jews. Twenty-five Arabs and two Jews were sentenced to death. Most of the death sentences were commuted, but three Arabs were executed. In accordance with the Collective Punishments Ordinance, the British authorities fined two dozen Arab towns and villages whose inhabitants they deemed guilty of participating in attacks against Jews. But the local British authorities held Jabotinsky and the Revisionists largely responsible for provoking the riots. When the Revisionist leader left Palestine for a trip to Europe shortly after the riots, the British permanently barred him from returning. Jabotinsky would never again set foot in Palestine.

In late 1929 a special commission led by Sir Walter Shaw was sent to Palestine to investigate the causes of the violence. The SHAW COMMISSION'S report, issued in March 1930, declared, "The outbreak in Jerusalem on the 23rd of August was from the beginning an attack by Arabs on Jews for which no excuse in the form of earlier murders by Jews has been established." However, the report concluded that the "fundamental cause" of the violence was "the Arab feeling of animosity and hostility towards the Jews," which was based on the Arabs' fear "that by Jewish immigration and land purchases they may be deprived of their livelihood and in time pass under the political domination of the Jews." The Shaw Commission recommended a reduction in both Jewish immigration to Palestine and land sales to Jews. These recommendations were included in the subsequent HOPE-SIMPSON COMMISSION report and the PASSFIELD WHITE PAPER of 1930.

Bibliography

- Aloni, Shulamit. "An Invitation to Hebron." Translated by Sol Salbe. Ynet (Yediot Aharonot). 19 August 2004. www.scoop.co.nz/stories/HL0408/S00188.htm.
 Ben-David, Calev. "To Live and Die in Hebron." Jerusalem Post. 23 July 1999.
 Mattar, Philip. "The Role of the Mufti of Jerusalem in the Political Struggle over the Western Wall, 1928–1929." Middle Eastern Studies. 19:1 (1983).
 Segev, Tom. One Palestine, Complete: Jews and Arabs under the British Mandate. New York: Metropolitan Books, 2000.
 Sheean, Vincent. "Holy Land 1929." In From Haven to Conquest: Readings in Zionism and the Palestine Problem until 1948. Edited by Walid Khalidi. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1987 [1935].
 United Kingdom. Report by His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the Council of the League of Nations on the Administration of Palestine and Trans-Jordan for the Year 1929. London: His Majesty's Stationery Office, December 1929. <http://domino.un.org/UNISPAL.NSF/0/38bed104db074b49052565e70054eb22?OpenDocument>.

———. Report of the Commission Appointed by His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, with the Approval of the Council of the League of Nations, to Determine the Rights and Claims of Moslems and Jews in Connection with the Western or Wailing Wall at Jerusalem. London: His Majesty's Stationery Office, December 1930. <http://domino.un.org/unispal.nsf/181c4bf00c44e5fd85256cef0073c426/59a92104ed00dc468525625b00527fea?OpenDocument>.

—Pierre M. Atlas

White Paper, 1922

See CHURCHILL MEMORANDUM

White Paper, 1939

See MACDONALD WHITE PAPER

White Paper/Passfield, 1930

See HOPE-SIMPSON COMMISSION; PASSFIELD WHITE PAPER; SHAW COMMISSION

Wilson, Woodrow (1856–1924)

Woodrow Wilson was the twenty-eighth president of the UNITED STATES, serving from 1913 to 1921. Born in Staunton, Virginia, his father was a Presbyterian minister, and Wilson grew up within a white southern and religious environment immediately following the Civil War. As a function of this upbringing, he was imbued with a religious conception of Palestine as the "Holy Land" of the Bible as well as a deep-seated racial bias against people of color, whom he considered as less capable and cultured than white people of European extraction. This worldview influenced his attitude toward the people of Palestine and their rights as compared with the claims of Zionists and made it easy for Zionist friends of Wilson, such as Supreme Court justice LOUIS BRANDEIS and Reform rabbi Stephen S. Wise, to turn the president's sympathies into meaningful political support for the founding of a Jewish homeland. Indeed, Wilson was flattered at the prospect of playing a role in re-creating a Jewish Palestine. As he told Wise in 1916, "To think that I, a son of the manse, should be able to help restore the Holy Land to its people.”

That help was most significantly realized in Wilson’s 1917 endorsement of the BALFOUR DECLARATION, in which the British government promised a “national home” to the Jews in Palestine after World War I and thereby sealed an alliance between Great Britain and the WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION. The British made this alliance in the hope of securing the help of world Jewry to, among other ends, encourage the United States to enter the war on the side of Great Britain. Thus, in the minds of the British leaders, the concept of a Jewish national home and an alliance with the United States were tied together. When Wilson endorsed Balfour in the form of a nonpublic diplomatic statement of approval, in essence he linked the United States not only to the Zionist cause but also to a British war aim.

It was ironic, then, that from this point on the Zionists grew increasingly frustrated with Wilson. However well disposed the president was toward the Zionists, they were not the only ones with a strong interest in the Middle East to have Wilson’s ear. Just as Wilson’s Christian religiosity inclined him to the Zionist cause, it also led him to be a long-standing supporter of the American Protestant missionary effort that had brought hundreds of missionaries and millions of dollars of investment into the OTTOMAN EMPIRE. It was Wilson’s opinion that “it would be a real misfortune . . . if the missionary program for the world should be interrupted” by World War I. With the US entrance into World War I imminent, the Ottoman Empire could well become a mortal enemy of the United States and then would certainly intern US missionaries and confiscate their property. In part it was to keep this from happening that Wilson convinced the US Senate to declare war on GERMANY and Austria-Hungary but not on the Ottoman Turks, and decided to avoid any public endorsement of the Zionist claims to Palestine. The American Zionists seemed not to understand the subtleties of the president’s position and spent the rest of the war years complaining about his silence and badgering him for public statements of support. All they could get from him was a public statement, in August 1918, praising the Zionists’ “reconstructive work” in Palestine.

As the war approached its end, political alliances and national interests became more complicated for Wilson. On 8 January 1918 Wilson addressed Congress and outlined his famous fourteen points constituting US war aims. Among them was a promise to support the right of self-determination for the peoples of the German, Austrian, and Ottoman Empires. By 11 November 1918 the war was over, and soon the issue arose of what to do with the collapsed enemy empires. Under Wilson’s leadership, the United States might have fought for the self-determination of the conquered peoples, but its British and French allies not only wanted to preserve their own empires but also had every intention of enlarging them by taking over the non-European imperial territories of the vanquished.

At the Paris Peace Conference in 1919, in the face of British and French demands, Wilson struck a compromise known as the Mandate system. Under this scheme, the European peoples of the German and Austrian Empires were accorded self-determination. However, the non-European peoples were deemed to be at an inferior state of political development and in need of “tutelage” by the European victors. Thus, Wilson agreed that the British and the French could expand their empires into the Middle East and elsewhere under the guise of tutoring the locals in the techniques of good government. To keep up this pretense, their new colonies were called Mandates. Later, the League of Nations (which itself was a creation of the peace conference) put its stamp of approval on the Mandate system.

Wilson went along with this because he had inherently racist opinions about nonwhites and non-Europeans. Palestine became a case in point. The British took for themselves the Mandate for Palestine and soon began importing large numbers of European Jews into the territory in fulfillment of the Balfour Declaration. Already the Zionists were describing the Jews as an oppressed people who deserved self-determination, and, as Wilson saw Jews as Europeans, he had no problem with the Jewish IMMIGRATION. On the other hand, Wilson’s secretary of state, Robert Lansing, and his legal adviser, David Hunter Miller, argued that “the rule of self-determination would prevent the establishment of a Jewish state in Palestine.”

Things became more complicated when a leading American missionary by the name of Howard Bliss (who was president of the Syrian Protestant College, later the American University of Beirut) showed up at the peace conference as part of an Arab delegation. He forcefully argued that the wishes of the people of greater SYRIA (including Palestine) must be determined if the notion of self-determination was to mean anything. It was belatedly starting to dawn on the missionaries that Zionist dominance in Palestine would not be good for their own ambitions in that land. By forcing the issue with Wilson at Paris, Bliss embarrassed the president into creating the KING-CRANE COMMISSION, which was an effort to find out what the leading citizens of greater Syria wanted for their political future. What the US team of investigators discovered, and related in a subsequently suppressed report submitted to the US government in August 1919, was that the Arabs of the region wanted independence and were unanimously opposed to Zionist ambitions in Palestine.

Although Wilson suffered a stroke in October that turned him into an invalid incapable of further influencing world events, there is no reason to believe that he would have acted on the commission's findings, particularly as they applied to Palestine. Wilson essentially agreed with Arthur Balfour's judgment that "ZIONISM, be it right or wrong, good or bad, is rooted in age-long traditions, in present needs, in future hopes, of far profounder import than the desires and prejudices of 700,000 Arabs who now inhabit that ancient land." It is this shared conviction that had led him to tell Wise, as late as March 1919, "Don't worry Dr. Wise, Palestine is yours." For Wilson, as for Balfour, Palestine was a non-negotiable issue. Wilson, who died in 1924, is still remembered by Zionists as the US president whose support was second only to that of HARRY TRUMAN in helping to establish the state of Israel.

Bibliography

- Ambrosius, Lloyd. Woodrow Wilson and His Legacy in American Foreign Affairs. New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2002.
- Auchincloss, Louis. Woodrow Wilson. New York: Viking, 2000.
- Davidson, Lawrence. America's Palestine: Popular and Official Perceptions from Balfour to Israeli Statehood. Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 2001.
- Heckscher, August. Woodrow Wilson: A Biography. New York: Collier Books, 1993.
- Hoover, Herbert, and Mark Hatfield. The Ordeal of Woodrow Wilson. Washington, DC: Woodrow Wilson Center, 1992.
- Knock, Thomas J. To End All Wars: Woodrow Wilson and the Quest for a New World Order. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1992.

—Lawrence Davidson

Withdrawal from Gaza

See ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA

Women in Black

Women in Black is an international peace network that was started in Israel in 1988 by women protesting against Israel's OCCUPATION of the WEST BANK and GAZA. Wearing black as a symbol of sorrow, they stand in silent vigil, often in JERUSALEM and Tel Aviv, to protest war, rape as a tool of war, ethnic cleansing, and human rights abuses. It is a silent protest because they believe "mere words cannot express the tragedy that wars and hatred bring." Women in Black "refuse to add to the cacophony of empty statements that are spoken with the best intentions yet may be erased or go unheard under the sound of a passing ambulance or a bomb exploding nearby."

Their silence is visible. They invite women to stand with them, reflect about themselves and women who have been raped, tortured, or killed; who have disappeared; whose loved ones have disappeared or have been killed; and whose homes have been demolished. They wear black as a symbol of sorrow for all victims of war, for the destruction of people, nature, and the fabric of life.

In June 2001 an event in Jerusalem drew both Palestinian and Israeli women for peace in a mass vigil. Since they first organized in 1988, every Friday at noon the Women in Black hold a vigil at Hagar Square in Jerusalem. It originated with only a few Jewish Israeli women but now includes both Jewish and Palestinian Israelis, internationals, and Palestinians from the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES when it is possible for them to enter Jerusalem. (www.womeninblack.net).

See also COALITION OF WOMEN FOR PEACE, NEW PROFILE; REFUSER SOLIDARITY NETWORK

Women in Green

Women in Green (Women for Israel's Tomorrow) is a pro-SETTLEMENT movement that emerged in 1993 in Israel to oppose the OSLO ACCORDS and advocates for the retention of all the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES under Israeli sovereignty. It has chapters throughout Israel and abroad, including Los Angeles, New York, Chicago, and Toronto.

Women in Green hold weekly street theater and public demonstrations, write articles, commission posters, advertise in newspapers, and lecture to groups. In particular, these women, who are dedicated to the ideology and practice of the GREATER LAND OF ISRAEL MOVEMENT, are active in fighting for a united JERUSALEM and in supporting the Jewish community in HEBRON. They opposed ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA in 2005.

Woodhead Commission, 1938

In 1938 the British established the Woodhead Commission (Palestine Partition Commission) to examine the details of the PEEL COMMISSION plan and make recommendations for its implementation. In 1937 the Peel Commission had recommended the partition of Palestine into Arab and Jewish states, with the Palestinian area absorbed by Transjordan (JORDAN after 1950) and a population TRANSFER. In spite of the rejection by both Jews and Arabs of the Peel partition plan, the British government sent the Woodhead Commission, composed of four members, to Palestine to determine the possibility of partition and to recommend boundaries that would permit the establishment of self-supporting Jewish and Arab states. The boundaries were to include areas with as few Jews as possible in the Arab state and areas with as few Arabs as possible in the Jewish state.

British officials were concerned about the “absorptive capacity” of Palestine; that is, the amount of Jewish IMMIGRATION that Palestine’s limited resources could accommodate. In particular, they worried about the lack of WATER, without which even the most fertile LAND was useless. Partly in response to conflicting reports regarding the limits of this “absorptive capacity,” the Woodhead Commission conducted a hydrological study that contributed to its conclusion that the partition of Palestine was not economically viable. Instead, the commission recommended an economic federation between the two political entities.

The Woodhead Commission’s recommendation against partition, as well as the MACDONALD WHITE PAPER OF 1939, which limited Jewish immigration to 75,000, motivated Zionist attempts to justify massive immigration and to provide proof of the high absorptive capacity of a land they depicted as virtually uninhabited. The most prominent individual in this effort was W. C. Lowdermilk, whose 1939 essay, “Land of Promise,” © Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs, Jerusalem, (based on Palestine Partition Report, Woodhead Report, 1938, London, Her Majesty's Stationary Office), reprinted with permission.

Map 49. Woodhead Partition Plan C, 1938

commissioned by the JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL and later published in book form, was highly influential. Lowdermilk emphasized the abundance of land and water in Palestine, which he maintained was being used by a mere 300,000 Arab inhabitants who through centuries of neglect had destroyed the region's land and water capital. The figure obviously was false, for an estimated 750,000 to 880,000 Palestinian Arabs became REFUGEES during the 1948 WAR alone. Moreover, the last census taken by the British, in 1931, determined that there were 858,708 Palestinian Arabs.

While concluding the impracticability of partition, the Woodhead Commission did submit three boundary plans. However, both Jews and Arabs rejected completely the idea of partition. In a policy statement in November 1938, the United Kingdom accepted the conclusion of the Woodhead Commission that, politically, administratively, and financially, partition would be impossible.

With the publication of the Woodhead report, the British government also announced its intention to hold a general conference in London to include both Zionist and Palestinian leaders as well as representatives of the neighboring Arab countries. However, the British vetoed the participation of the paramount Palestinian leader, AL-HAJJ AMIN AL-HUSAYNI, chairman of the still-outlawed ARAB HIGHER COMMITTEE. The LONDON/ST. JAMES CONFERENCE lasted from 7 February to 27 March 1939 without reaching a settlement satisfactory to the Zionists or the Palestinians.

See also BRITISH MANDATE

Bibliography

- Cohen, Michael Joseph. Palestine, Retreat from the Mandate: A Study of British Policy, 1936–45. Teaneck, NJ: Holmes and Meier Publishers, 1978.
- Gavish, Dov. A Survey of Palestine under the British Mandate, 1920–1948. London: Routledge, 2005.
- Jones, A. Philip. Britain and Palestine, 1914–1948: Archival Sources for the History of the British Mandate. London: Oxford University Press, 1979.
- Lewis, William, and Robert W. Stookey, eds. The End of the Palestine Mandate. Austin: University of Texas Press,
- Lowdermilk, Walter Clay. Palestine Land of Promise. London: Golancz, 1946. Reprinted, New York: Greenwood, 1968.
- Segev, Tom. One Palestine, Complete: Jews and Arabs under the British Mandate. New York: Metropolitan Books, 2000.
- Shepherd, Naomi. Ploughing Sand: British Rule in Palestine, 1917–1948. Piscataway, NJ: Rutgers University Press, 2000.

World Union of Zionist Revisionists

The World Union of Zionist Revisionists (WUZR) was established in 1925 by VLADIMIR (ZE'EV) JABOTINSKY as an alternative to the WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION (WZO) led by CHAIM WEIZMANN. The WUZR institutionalized the ideas of Jabotinsky, who is considered the father of Revisionist ZIONISM, and its ideological tenets became enormously influential within the general Zionist movement. Even moderate political Zionists, led by DAVID BEN-GURION, eventually adopted the principles and practices of the Revisionists, though without giving them credit. During the 1920s and 1930s, the Jewish community in Palestine was divided over the best political approach to achieving independence. The World Zionist Organization supported cooperation with the British and advocated violence only in self-defense. In contrast, the WUZR would accept nothing short of full independence, including all of Transjordan (JORDAN after 1950) as well as Palestine, and advocated aggressive retaliation against the Palestinians for attacks and offensive operations against the BRITISH MANDATE government.

The fundamental ideology of the WUZR involved a major revision of the relationship between the Zionist movement and Great Britain. It actively challenged British policy and openly demanded immediate Jewish statehood. The root cause of the WUZR's dispute with the official Zionist leadership was its conception of the Jewish state. Two principles formed the core of the Revisionist Zionist ideology and its political program. The first was disagreement with the territorial extent of Eretz Yisrael: the Revisionists considered the land of Israel indivisible over both banks of the Jordan River within the original borders of the Palestine Mandate. The WZO thought it impolitic to demand Transjordan as well as Palestine for Israel; the WUZR considered it essential. The second was the WZO's objection to the immediate declaration of the Jewish right to political sovereignty over the whole of this area. The WZO believed the Zionist movement was not yet ready to undertake sovereignty; the WUZR wanted a state directly. Additionally, a pillar of revisionism was the concept of the "iron wall," the belief that the use of Jewish force—invincible force, the iron wall—would be necessary not only to establish a national home in Palestine, but also to sustain it by subjugating the local population. By the 1940s, Labor Zionism adopted this principle as well. A militant parallel group to the WUZR was BETAR.

See also VLADIMIR JABOTINSKY; ZIONISM

Bibliography

- Brenner, Lenni. Zionism in the Age of the Dictators. Westport, CT: Lawrence Hill, 1983.
- Jabotinsky, Vladimir. The Iron Wall: We and the Arabs. South Africa: Jewish Herald, 1923.
- Pinto, Vincenzo. "Revisionist-Zionist Movement's Relationship with Fascist Italy, 1922–1938." Israel Affairs. 10:3 (2004).
- Schectman, Joseph. Fighter and Prophet: The Vladimir Jabotinsky Story. New York: Thomas Yoseloff, 1961.
- Shavit, Yaacov. Jabotinsky and the Revisionist Movement 1925–1948. London: Routledge, 1988.
- Shlaim, Avi. The Iron Wall: Israel and the Arab World since 1948. New York: W. W. Norton, 1999.
- World Union of Zionist-Revisionists, Executive Committee. The Report of the Palestine Enquiry Commission (Commission on the Palestine Disturbances of August, 1929) Examination and Criticism, Vital Omissions and Misstatements. London: Executive Committee of the World Union of Zionist-Revisionists, 1930.

World Zionist Congresses

From 1897 to 1921, twelve Zionist congresses met periodically to discuss the concerns of Zionists from around the world under the auspices of the Zionist Organization (WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION after 1960). The first Zionist congress was convened by THEODOR HERZL in 1897 in Basel, Switzerland, as a symbolic parliament for those in sympathy with the implementation of the Zionist goal: establishing a Jewish homeland in Palestine. A Viennese journalist who is considered the father of modern political ZIONISM, Herzl had planned to hold the gathering in Munich, GERMANY, but because of local Jewish opposition, he transferred the gathering to Basel. Prior to the events of World War II, the vast majority of European Jews were not in favor of Zionism because they were broadly integrated into the national life of the countries wherein they resided. The same was not true for Jews in Russia and Poland, and many of the early Zionists came from those two countries. Although the exact number of participants at the first Zionist congress is disputed, the approximate figure is 200 delegates from seventeen countries, 69 of whom were from various Zionist organizations and the remainder individuals. In attendance also were ten non-Jews, who were expected to abstain from voting, and seventeen women, some of them in their own capacity and others who accompanied representatives; the women were allowed to participate but did not have voting rights.

The main items on the agenda were the presentation of Herzl's plans, the establishment of a Zionist organization, and the declaration of Zionism's goals—the BASEL PROGRAM, which expressed the following objective: "Zionism seeks for the Jewish people a publicly recognized legally secured homeland in Eretz Israel secured under public law." The program contemplated the importance of Jewish IMMIGRATION, LAND acquisition and reclamation, and the need to raise funds. Basel's goals would be attained by the following means:

- Promotion of the settlement in Eretz Yisrael (the biblical land of Israel) of Jewish farmers, artisans, and manufacturers
- Organization and uniting of the whole of world Jewry by means of appropriate local and international institutions, in accordance with the laws of each country
- Strengthening and fostering Jewish national sentiment and national consciousness
- Preparatory steps toward obtaining the consent of governments, where necessary, in order to reach the goals of Zionism

These goals gave clear expression to Herzl's political Zionism, in contrast to the more loosely organized and more practical settlement activities of the HOVEVEI ZION network of Jewish community circles in Russia, Poland, and Romania.

At the first congress, Herzl was elected president of the Zionist Organization (ZO), later renamed the World Zionist Organization (1960), and MAX NORDAU was elected one of three vice presidents. Thereafter, the Zionist congress met every year until 1901, then every second year until 1939, and approximately every four years after World War II.

Second Congress—Basel, 1898

Herzl called on the second congress to "conquer the communities" in the face of more active opposition to Zionism from among various Jewish leaders. In essence, this was a demand that the Zionist movement focus its attention not only on political activity for Palestine but also on work within European and American Jewish communities. At this congress, the foundations were laid for the establishment of the JEWISH COLONIAL TRUST, a financial body aimed at the development of Palestine. It was also at this congress that a group of socialists first appeared, demanding representation within the Zionist leadership, which until that time had been all capitalist.

Third Congress—Basel, 1899

Herzl opened the third congress with a report on his meetings with Germany's Kaiser Wilhelm II in Constantinople and JERUSALEM. Despite the fact that this meeting produced no practical results, that it took place at all was of considerable symbolic value and maintained the viability of the movement. The congress spent a good deal of its time discussing the political dimensions of Zionism, although opposition to this orientation was voiced by those who thought that the more practical efforts of Hovevei Zion settlers should be encouraged. In a debate on the Jewish Colonial Trust, the congress decided that its funds could only be spent in Palestine or SYRIA. Whereas delegates were increasingly concerned with what was called the question of culture—the Zionist attempt at a national/ethnic identity for the Jews—Herzl was preoccupied with the political matters at hand, that is, seeking great power backing and a charter for the movement. Some historians argue that Herzl was not so much disinterested in these cultural matters as he was frightened of their potential to split the infant movement.

Fourth Congress—London, 1900

Held in London primarily to mobilize public opinion for the Zionist idea in that country, the congress met in an atmosphere of growing concern over the situation facing Jews in Romania, where many thousands had been forced to leave and the remainder were subject to persecution. Although this appeared to provide further evidence of the need for a "charter" from some reigning sovereign, Herzl had nothing substantial to offer that might bring succor to these Jews. On the cultural question, the religious Zionists, led by Rabbi Yitzhak Ya'akov Reines, demanded that the Zionist movement restrict itself solely to political matters, viewing Zionism as a profane and illegitimate platform for the pursuit of the coming of the Messiah. The congress also discussed the lack of opportunity for Jewish workers in Palestine and the question of a national Jewish sports movement.

Fifth Congress—Basel, 1901

Herzl reported to the congress about his meeting with Sultan Abdul Hamid II of TURKEY, from whom he had been pursuing a charter for Zionism, and of the progress of the Jewish Colonial Trust. These achievements did not satisfy all the delegates, in particular those associated with the recently formed Democratic Faction. That group, led by Leo Motzkin, MARTIN BUBER, and CHAIM WEIZMANN, called on the Zionist movement to adopt a program of Hebrew culture and a greater degree of democracy within the organization. The more concrete achievement of the congress was the establishment of the JEWISH NATIONAL FUND, which was to raise funds for land purchase in Palestine.

Sixth Congress—Basel, 1903

A resolution was adopted determining that the next congresses would take place every alternate year rather than annually. In his opening speech, Herzl detailed the efforts to secure a charter on behalf of the movement, but these attempts were increasingly desperate as the situation of the Jews, particularly following the anti-Jewish Kishinev pogrom, deteriorated. This gave rise to various temporary solutions, such as the El Arish project (Jewish colonization of the Sinai), which was negotiated with the British statesmen Joseph Chamberlain and Lord Landsdowne. After the collapse of this scheme, the British offered Herzl the possibility of an autonomous Jewish settlement in East Africa (commonly known as the Uganda project). Herzl called on the congress to give serious consideration to the plan even though he believed that it could not replace Palestine as the Jewish homeland. In the debate that followed, Nordau, Herzl's major confidant, argued that Uganda would be a night refuge, an expedient if not preferred solution. Despite considerable opposition and a walkout by the Russian Zionists, the delegates agreed, 295 to 178 (with 98 abstentions), that a committee should be dispatched to examine the possibility of Jewish settlement in East Africa. Also discussed at the congress was a report on the possibility of cooperative settlements in Palestine, which influenced the creation of various settlements a few years later. This was Herzl's last congress, as he died a year later.

Seventh Congress—Basel, 1905

After the congress opened with a eulogy to Herzl by Nordau, debate resumed on the question of Jewish settlement outside Palestine. The commission that had been sent to East Africa had concluded that Uganda was unsuitable for mass Jewish settlement, and the congress proceeded to vote against a national home anywhere except in Palestine and its immediate vicinity. The territorialists, who were willing to accept a broader range of locations for a homeland and who were led by ISRAEL ZANGWILL, left the congress in protest and established the Jewish Territorial Organization. The congress also discussed practical work in Palestine—giving support to agricultural settlements and industrial activity. Although Nordau seemed the natural choice to succeed Herzl as ZO president, he refused, and instead David Wolffsohn assumed this position. The organization's executive moved its offices from Vienna, Austria, to Cologne, Germany.

Eighth Congress—The Hague, Netherlands, 1907

The decision to hold the congress in The Hague was based on the knowledge that the Second International Peace Conference was to be held in that city. At the congress, the major debate concerned the conflicting approaches of the practical and political Zionists. The political Zionists demanded that a charter be secured before practical work began in Palestine, while the practical Zionists argued that without substantial settlement there was little hope of gaining legal sanction from one or more of the world powers. Although the practical faction supported a number of pragmatic efforts and established a Palestine branch of the ZO, to be headed by ARTHUR RUPPIN, several delegates, including Weizmann, called for the adoption of synthetic Zionism—a synthesis of the two positions.

Ninth Congress—Hamburg, Germany, 1909

Wolffsohn and Nordau expressed the hope that, following the Young Turk Revolution against Ottoman rule, Zionist endeavors might enjoy a change in fortune with the change of that government. In the meantime, the congress was once again divided over the question of how to implement the Zionist program. The practical lobby accused Wolffsohn of focusing on political activity and his executive of judging projects by their commercial value. This rival leadership included Menahem Ussishkin, Weizmann, and NAHUM SOKOLOW, who gained support from the representatives of the workers' movement in Palestine.

Tenth Congress—Basel, 1911

Often described as the Peace Congress, the tenth congress finally laid to rest the debate between the practical and political Zionists, with synthetic Zionism becoming the operational mode of the movement. Under this solution, considerable attention was given to the question of practical work in Palestine as well as to the suffusion of Hebrew culture. The question of Zionist relations with the Arabs was raised, and, for the first time, a session of the congress was held in Hebrew. Wolffsohn was succeeded as president by Otto Warburg, a German Jew and distinguished scientist who was identified with the practical Zionist camp. The ZO moved its headquarters from Cologne to Berlin.

Eleventh Congress—Vienna, 1913

The congress spent much of its time discussing settlement activities in Palestine and the work of the organization's office in JAFFA. Nordau, who had objected to the establishment of a center in Palestine as a deviation from Herzl's approach, was conspicuous by his absence. Weizmann and Ussishkin won the support of the congress for the establishment of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, although twelve years were to pass before the facility opened.

Twelfth Congress—Carlsbad (Karlovy Vary), Czech Republic, 1921

This was the first congress to be held after World War I, during which time the Zionist movement had won British support for its endeavors to create a Jewish national home in Palestine (BALFOUR DECLARATION, 1917). The congress welcomed the decision of the principal allied powers to grant the Mandate for Palestine to Britain and encouraged the ratification of the BRITISH MANDATE by the League of Nations. With the end of the war, the defeat of Germany, and the success of the London branch of the Zionist movement, it was clear that the leadership there would be rewarded. Weizmann became president of the ZO and Sokolow president of the executive. The congress discussed the activities and organization of Keren HaYesod (United Israel Appeal, literally "The Foundation Fund"), which had been established a year earlier for the purpose of raising funds for the upbuilding of Palestine from among the Jewish communities of the DIASPORA. A further issue discussed at the congress was the question of Zionism's relations with the Arabs, which had become serious because of Arab demonstrations in Jerusalem (1920) and in Jaffa (1921). The congress passed a resolution declaring that Zionism seeks “to live in relations of harmony and mutual respect with the Arab people” and called on the executive to achieve a “sincere understanding with the Arab people.” The twelfth congress reflected the growing trend of party and territorial divisions within the Zionist movement. The executive now met in London and Jerusalem.

See also OTTOMAN EMPIRE; ZIONISM

Bibliography

- Avineri, Shlomo. The Making of Modern Zionism: The Intellectual Origins of the Jewish State. New York: Basic Books, 1981.
- Avishai, Bernard. The Tragedy of Zionism: Revolution and Democracy in the Land of Israel. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1985.
- Bein, Alex. Theodor Herzl: A Biography. Translated by Maurice Samuel. New York: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1941.
- Beit-Halahmi, Benjamin. Original Sins: Reflections on the History of Zionism and Israel. New York: Olive Branch Press, 1993.
- Benas, Bertram B. Zionism: The Jewish National Movement. Liverpool, UK: D. Marples, 1919.
- Buber, Martin. Israel and Palestine: The History of an Idea. London: East and West Library, 1952.
- . On Zion: The History of an Idea. (Martin Buber Library). Syracuse, NY: Syracuse University Press, 1997.
- Cohen, Michael J. The Origins and Evolution of the Arab-Zionist Conflict. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Cohen, Mitchell. Zion and State: Nation, Class and the Shaping of Modern Israel. New York: Columbia University Press, 1992.
- Dan, Uri. To the Promised Land: The Birth of Israel. New York: Doubleday, 1988.
- Elon, Amos. Israelis: Founders and Sons. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1971.
- Gilbert, Martin. Exile and Return: The Struggle for a Jewish Homeland. Philadelphia: Lippincott, 1978.
- Goldberg, David J. To the Promised Land: A History of Zionist Thought from Its Origins to the Modern State of Israel. London: Penguin, 1997.
- Halpern, Ben. The Idea of a Jewish State. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1976.
- Hertzberg, Arthur. The Zionist Idea. New York: Atheneum, 1959.
- Herzl, Theodor. Complete Diaries. New York: Herzl Press, 1960.
- . The Diaries of Theodor Herzl. New York: Peter Smith Publishers, 1987.
- . The Jewish State. Reprint. Mineola, NY: Dover Publications, 1989.
- Kimmerling, Baruch. Zionism and Territory: The Socioterritorial Dimensions of Zionist Politics. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1983.

Laqueur, Walter. A History of Zionism. New York: Fine Communications, 1997.

Lewison, Ludwig, ed. Theodor Herzl: A Portrait for His Age. Cleveland, OH, and New York: World Publishing Company, 1955.

Mendelsson, David. From the First Zionist Congress (1897) to the Twelfth (1921). Jerusalem: The Pedagogic Center, the Department for Jewish Zionist Education, the Jewish Agency for Israel, 2000.

Patai, Raphael, ed. Encyclopedia of Zionism and Israel. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1971.

Penkower, Monty Noam. The Emergence of Zionist Thought. New York: Peter Lang Publishing, 1991.

Robertson, Ritchie, and Edward Timms, eds. Theodor Herzl and the Origins of Zionism. Edinburgh, Scotland: Edinburgh University Press, 1997.

Shapira, Anita. Land and Power: The Zionist Recourse to Force, 1881–1948. New York: Oxford University Press, 1992.

Vital, David. The Origins of Zionism. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1975.

World Zionist Organization

The Zionist Organization was founded by THEODOR HERZL at the first ZIONIST CONGRESS in Basel, Switzerland, in 1897; it was renamed the World Zionist Organization in 1960. As set forth in the BASEL PROGRAM, it proclaimed that ZIONISM seeks to establish a home for the Jewish people in Palestine, secured under public law. Membership in the Zionist Organization was given to anyone who accepted the Basel Program and paid Zionist shekels (dues). The third congress in 1899 passed the Zionist Organization’s first constitution, although it was amended over the years.

The Zionist Organization served as an umbrella organization for the Zionist movement. Herzl, a Viennese journalist who is considered the father of modern political Zionism, organized the first congress and later wrote, “At Basel I founded the Jewish State. . . . Perhaps in five years, and certainly in fifty, everyone will know it.” Subsequent to its foundation, the Zionist Organization established companies and institutions to carry out its policies; these included Keren HaYesod (international financial arm), the JEWISH NATIONAL FUND, the JEWISH COLONIAL TRUST, and the Jewish Colonial Trust’s subsidiary, the Anglo-Palestine Bank.

When the BRITISH MANDATE for Palestine was issued, it called for the establishment of an agency to represent the Jewish people vis-à-vis the Mandatory government and to cooperate with it in establishing the national home. Although the Zionist Organization initially assumed this role, in 1923 an expanded JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL was established as a partnership between the Zionist Organization and non-Zionist, public Jewish groups. At the founding conference in Zurich, half the delegates were representatives of the Zionist Organization, and half represented the non-Zionist organizations. CHAIM WEIZMANN, president of the Zionist Organization, was elected president of the newly founded Jewish Agency.

In the period before Israel became a state in 1948, the Jewish Agency operated as a quasi-government, working to organize IMMIGRATION, including illegal immigration, and to absorb the immigrants in Palestine. It founded youth ALIYA; maintained labor, settlement, and industry departments; and created enterprises such as the Palestine Electric Company, the Palestine Potash Company, and the Anglo-Palestine Bank. In addition, the agency was a senior partner in the establishment of the Yishuv's defense force (HAGANA) and of the "stockade and watchtower" settlements—quickly erected huts, fortifications, and fences dominated by a watchtower from which to scan for signs of hostility. When the new state came into being, questions arose as to the relationship among the Israeli government, the Zionist Organization, and the Jewish Agency. The Zionist congress adopted a resolution calling on the state of Israel to recognize the Zionist Organization as the representative body of the Jewish people in all matters that involved the organized participation of DIASPORA Jewry in the upbuilding of Israel.

In response, on 24 November 1952 the Knesset passed the Zionist Organization–Jewish Agency for Israel Status Law, and later a covenant was signed between the government of Israel and the Zionist Organization Executive, according to which the organizations' main areas of responsibility remained those related to aliya, immigrant absorption, and settlement. The 1952 Status Law also established the Zionist Organization and the Jewish Agency as organizations with governmental status in fulfilling Zionist objectives: the immigration, LAND reclamation, and settlement of Jews in Palestine.

The background to the Status Law involves the Israeli government, the Zionist Organization, and the Jewish Agency's objective of securing the land of Israel for the sole benefit of the Jewish people. The concept of creating "Israeli lands" meant securing the land not only for Jewish Israelis but also for all Jews across the world to claim at any point in the future, through exercising the 1950

LAW OF RETURN. Conversely, non-Jews, including PALESTINIAN CITIZENS OF ISRAEL, were barred from owning or leasing land. To make these organizations an integral part of the state apparatus, the government enacted a series of laws that gave pre-state Zionist organizations such as the Zionist Organization, Jewish National Fund, and Jewish Agency quasi-governmental powers. The 1953 Land Acquisition Law (Validity of Acts and Compensation) gave international Jewish agencies increased powers in the development of land for Jewish settlement and "security" purposes.

In August 1970 another agreement was signed that modified the structure and functions of the Jewish Agency and the World Zionist Organization. Half the members of the expanded Jewish Agency's assembly were representatives of the World Zionist Organization, 30 percent represented the United Jewish Communities (US), and 20 percent represented organizations affiliated with Keren HaYesod in the rest of the world. Under the agreement, the Jewish Agency would deal with immigration from countries of persecution and the World Zionist Organization with immigrants from affluent countries. In June 1979 the Jewish Agency and the World Zionist Organization signed two new covenants with the government of Israel. The Jewish Agency retained its responsibility for initial absorption of immigrants in Israel, support for educational activities and work with youth, immigrant absorption in rural settlements, immigrant housing, and welfare services. At the same time, the World Zionist Organization would concentrate on work in the Jewish Diaspora: education, youth, and so forth.

Under the 1970 rearrangement, the WZO was separated in terms of its functions, but not its leadership, from the Jewish Agency. This was necessary because of the restrictive provision of the US tax code pertaining to taxes and gifts. Those activities that were "political" or otherwise questionable from a tax-exemption standpoint had to be grouped separately and placed under the WZO. The organization was directed to continue as the organ of the Zionist movement for the fulfillment of Zionist programs and ideals, but its operations were to be confined mainly to the Diaspora. After 1970 the WZO's mission was Jewish education, Zionist organizational work, information and cultural programs, youth work, external relations, rural development, and the activities of the Jewish National Fund. For the most part, these functions were financed by funds funneled through the Jewish Agency, which continued to serve as the main financial arm of the WZO. However, because of US tax-law stipulations, funds allocated for the WZO by the Jewish Agency were required to come from those collected by Keren HaYesod (Israel Foundation Fund). By 2007 the WZO defined its mission as “Aliyah, the Israel Experience, Zionist Education, Hebrew Education, Israel Advocacy, Shaping Israel, and Cultural Nationalism.”

The WZO’s executive is elected at the Zionist congresses, which convene every four to five years. Delegates to the congress are elected on behalf of their organizations in the Diaspora and on behalf of the Zionist political parties, represented in accordance with their relative representation in the Knesset. Most delegates are from Israel and the United States. The Zionist executive operates on behalf of the congress, gathering on a yearly basis. The executive runs four departments: the department for aliyah and immigrant absorption, the department for agricultural settlement, the department for youth aliyah, and the treasury. A board of directors oversees the activities.

The WZO is composed of thirty-two federations. Every federation that accepts the Zionist program and the WZO’s constitution may be a member of the organization. The admission of a Zionist federation as a member is decided, upon proposal by the executive, by the council. The organization builds the connection between the Diaspora communities and Israel through the Zionist federation in a number of ways, including the arrangement of reciprocal visits, promotion of the Hebrew language, and the organization of events celebrating the Israeli culture, such as film festivals and food fairs.

The member federations include Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, Denmark, FRANCE, GERMANY, Greece, Holland, Hungary, Italy, Mexico, New Zealand, Peru, Romania, Russia, South Africa, Spain, SWEDEN, Switzerland, Ukraine, United Kingdom, UNITED STATES, Uruguay, and Venezuela. (www.wzo.org.il).

See also ISRAELI DIASPORA; ISRAELI NATIONAL INSTITUTIONS; JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL; JEWISH NATIONAL FUND

Bibliography

Davis, Uri. Israel: An Apartheid State. London: Zed Books, 1987.

Israeli Foreign Ministry. World Zionist Organization (WZO). Washington, DC: American-Israeli Cooperative Enterprise, 2006.

Klieman, Aaron. From Many, One: The Zionist Organization of America, 3 vols. London: Routledge, 1991.

Levine, Charles. New Dimensions Aliyah to Judeaa, Samaria and Gaza. Jerusalem: Immigration and Absorption Division, World Zionist Organization, 1984.

Wye River Memorandum, 1998

The purpose of the Wye River Summit, convened at Maryland’s Wye River Plantation, was to persuade Israel and the Palestinians to fully implement the interim arrangements of previously signed agreements—including the 1993 DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES, the 1995 INTERIM AGREEMENT, and the 1997 HEBRON PROTOCOL—in order to begin FINAL STATUS TALKS. Its key components included redeployment of Israeli troops previously agreed on but never undertaken and a far more extensive Palestinian commitment to Israel’s security. The agreement was brokered by the UNITED STATES and negotiated between Israel and the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA). It was signed on 23 October 1998 after nine days of difficult talks. JORDAN’s gravely ill monarch, King Husayn, attended the signing in an effort to bolster the peace process. Less than two months after the signing of the accord, on 20 December 1998, Israel suspended all the agreements concluded at Wye.

The genesis for the Wye Summit resided in the fact that Israeli-Palestinian negotiations, suspended by Israel in March 1997, had remained frozen for nineteen months (except for CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY–sponsored security talks). The situation on the ground had deteriorated to such an extent that the United States became concerned and persuaded Israeli prime minister BENJAMIN NETANYAHU to meet with PNA president YASIR ARAFAT in an attempt to break the impasse.

The violence of the time had several dimensions. On 24 September 1996 Netanyahu ordered the opening of the northern exit of the HASMONEAN TUNNEL, an extension of the WESTERN WALL tunnel, which completely changed the status quo in JERUSALEM. This occurred in the context of very public proclamations by several groups that the Third Temple was going to be rebuilt over the AL-AQSA MOSQUE and the DOME OF THE ROCK on the TEMPLE MOUNT/AL-HARAM ASH-SHARIF. Palestinians, fearful for their holy sites, saw this tunnel opening as the potential beginning of the Third Temple project, were enraged, and took to the streets to protest. In four days of fighting, fourteen Israeli soldiers and sixty-nine Palestinians were killed, and hundreds were wounded on both sides.

On 19 February 1997, five years into the peace process, Netanyahu, who publicly opposed the peace process and had voted against the Declaration of Principles, announced the beginning of construction of a new SETTLEMENT, HAR HOMA (in an area called Jebel Abu Ghneim by Palestinians), within the post-1967 GREATER JERUSALEM municipality. The area of the Har Homa settlement project comprises 2,056 dunums (500 acres) of LAND held by “absentee” Palestinians from the BETHLEHEM area. The move was in violation of both an instruction from the Israeli attorney general to stop applying the ABSENTEE PROPERTY LAW in East Jerusalem and explicit promises to the United States not to apply that law in Jerusalem’s eastern quarters. The announcement infuriated Palestinians, who, in addition to objecting to Israel’s confiscation of more Palestinian land, saw it as a unilateral move to solidify Israel’s claim to all of Jerusalem. Once again they took to the streets in protest. Between 6 and 20 March, Israeli troops killed eight Palestinian demonstrators and wounded over 1,000. Two Israeli soldiers were killed.

In the first five years after the signing of the Declaration of Principles, 405 Palestinians were killed by Israelis and 256 Israelis were killed by Palestinians (mainly in seven SUICIDE BOMBINGS), and in 1996–1997, Israel twice imposed a total closure on the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES.

At the same time, the Palestinian standard of living was plummeting while Prime Minister Netanyahu continuously emphasized a policy of “three no(s)”: no withdrawal from the Golan Heights, no discussion of Jerusalem, and no negotiations under any preconditions. Palestinians were infuriated over the Hebron Protocol, which divided the city between Jews and Arabs and placed the AL-IBRAHIMI MOSQUE in the Jewish sector. Moreover, Israel engaged in a rapid expansion of settlements throughout the WEST BANK.

This, then, was the context in which the Wye talks began.

President Clinton pushed hard to get the two sides to make good on their previous promises and move ahead. After a rocky start, the president held a twenty-one-hour marathon session with Arafat, Netanyahu, and their senior negotiators as well as Clinton’s Middle East advisers. As intensive negotiations began at Wye, Netanyahu made a controversial change in his cabinet on 14 October, designating General ARIEL SHARON, also a leading opponent of the OSLO ACCORDS, as his foreign minister, thus strengthening the Israeli front against any territorial compromise. Arafat then put all his hope in the Americans, believing they would deliver a fair compromise, a decision that turned out to be a major miscalculation.

In addition to the major issues of security (a security plan to crack down on violence by terrorists) and redeployment (Israeli troop redeployment from an additional 13.1 percent of West Bank land to take place over a ninety-day period), the Wye agreement allowed for the building of an international AIRPORT in the GAZA STRIP. Israel also agreed to release 750 Palestinian security PRISONERS (ultimately only 250 were released), Arafat agreed to a second revocation of clauses in the PALESTINE NATIONAL CHARTER that Israel considered hostile, and Netanyahu agreed to guarantee two corridors of SAFE PASSAGE between Gaza and the West Bank. The redeployment and security issues are discussed below in depth.

The Redeployment Dimension: Israel’s Commitment

According to the 1995 Interim Agreement/Oslo II on the West Bank and Gaza Strip, the first of three “further redeployments” was scheduled to begin in October 1996. All three redeployments were to have been completed, according to the Oslo II timetable, by October 1997. None were. A final status agreement was to have been completed by October 1999.

At Wye, Israel agreed to implement the first and second “further redeployment” (FRD). This was to consist of the transfer to the Palestinian side of 13 percent from Area C (under full Israeli control) as follows: 1 percent from Area C to Area A (full Palestinian Authority control) and 12 percent from Area C to Area B (Palestinian civil control and Israeli military control). Under intense pressure, the Palestinian side agreed that it would allocate an area or areas amounting to 3 percent from the 12 percent in Area B as “GREEN AREAS and/or Nature Reserves” and that the Israeli side would retain in these areas the overriding security responsibility. Thus, out of a meager allocation of 13 percent of FRD, the Palestinians had to essentially “return” this 3 percent. There were no specifications about the second or third phase of further redeployments, no timetable for redeployment, and no map.

Moreover, although the territory that the Palestinians were to receive, a portion of which lay close to NABLUS, would have increased the territorial continuity of the PNA, remaining portions near Ramallah that Arafat hoped for were vetoed by Israel, which insisted that no land around Ramallah, Jerusalem, or Bethlehem would be returned to the PNA. The desert territory east of the settlement of Nokdim that Arafat agreed to accept at Wye had more symbolic than practical value.

In other words, the Wye River Memorandum of October 1998 divided Oslo II's second "further redeployment"—scheduled for April 1997—into three phases, with no date or specification of the territorial extent of the third redeployment. Additionally, Israeli redeployment was formally linked to Palestinian fulfillment of Israel's security requirements. Netanyahu carried out the first phase of the agreement but refused to implement the second and third, suspending all agreements negotiated at Wye on 20 December 1998.

The Security Dimension: The Palestinians' Commitment

The Palestinian side, in turn, committed to outlawing and combating terrorist organizations and making known its policy of zero tolerance for terror and violence against both sides. A work plan toward this end to be developed by the Palestinian side would be shared with the United States, and implementation would begin immediately to ensure the systematic and effective battle against terrorist organizations and their infrastructure. In addition to the bilateral Israeli-Palestinian security cooperation, a US-Palestinian committee would meet biweekly to review the steps being taken to eliminate terrorist cells and the support structure that plans, finances, supplies, and abets TERRORISM. The Palestinian side would apprehend the specific individuals suspected of perpetrating acts of violence and terror for the purpose of further investigation and would prosecute and punish all persons involved in acts of violence and terror. A US-Palestinian committee would review and evaluate information pertinent to the decisions on prosecution, punishment, or other legal measures regarding individuals suspected of abetting or perpetrating acts of violence and terror.

The Palestinian side would also ensure that an effective legal framework was in place to criminalize, in conformity with the prior agreements, any importation, manufacture, or unlicensed sale, acquisition, or possession of firearms, ammunition, or weapons in areas under Palestinian jurisdiction. In addition, the Palestinian side would establish and vigorously and continuously implement a program for the collection and appropriate handling of all such illegal items in accordance with the prior agreements. The United States agreed to assist in carrying out the program. A US-Palestinian-Israeli committee would be established to assist and enhance cooperation in preventing the smuggling or other unauthorized introduction of weapons or explosive materials into areas under Palestinian jurisdiction.

The Palestinian side would issue a decree prohibiting all forms of incitement to violence or terror and would establish mechanisms for acting systematically against all expressions or threats of violence or terror. A US-Palestinian-Israeli committee would meet on a regular basis to monitor cases of possible incitement to violence or terror and to make recommendations and reports on how to prevent such incitement. The Israeli, Palestinian, and US sides would each appoint a MEDIA specialist, a law enforcement representative, an educational specialist, and a current or former elected official to monitor Palestinian compliance.

Security Cooperation

The two sides agreed that their security cooperation would be based on a spirit of partnership and would include, among other things, full bilateral security cooperation between them that would be continuous, intensive, and comprehensive; forensic cooperation, including an exchange of forensic expertise, training, and other assistance; and trilateral cooperation, including a high-ranking US-Palestinian-Israeli committee that would meet regularly to assess current threats, deal with any impediments to effective security cooperation and coordination, and address the steps being taken to combat terror and terrorist organizations.

The Palestinian side would provide a list of its policemen to the Israeli side in conformity with the prior agreements. Should the Palestinian side request technical assistance, the United States indicated its willingness to help meet those needs in cooperation with other donors. The Monitoring and Steering Committee would, as part of its functions, monitor the implementation of this provision and brief the United States.

To meet Wye's security requirements, the PNA virtually annulled its judicial system, substituting imprisonment without charge, torture under detention, and summary executions. The PNA also eliminated freedom of speech, the press, and political opposition. Not only were suspected supporters of Hamas and ISLAMIC JIHAD jailed, but also secular intellectuals, academics, and politicians were imprisoned for expressing criticism of the Wye accord or any other aspect of the OSLO PROCESS. Additionally, in December 1998 Arafat convened the PLO's PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL (PNC) to expunge the 1964 Charter of all clauses that Israel found objectionable.

Wye, then, drew a series of red lines on Israeli-Palestinian reality, spelling out exactly what behavior was expected and when, a great ambition given that very few of the Oslo deadlines had ever been met. It would be a mistake to infer that there were equal restraints on Israel and the Palestinians. When the Palestinians failed to live up to a commitment, they were faced with the wrath of and punishment by Israel and the United States, whereas Israel could violate any aspect of any agreement with the assurance of US backing. The asymmetries of power were never more apparent.

During the Wye River negotiations, the United States made a number of secret deals supposedly to help secure Israel's and the PNA's agreement to the final memorandum. It agreed to overlook Israeli plans to build at Har Homa if the Israelis did not oppose the ongoing delay in moving the US embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem in violation of the Jerusalem Embassy Relocation Act of 1995. (This bill was passed by the US Congress, demanding that the president move the embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem; the Senate supported the legislation 93 (for) to 5 (against), while the House supported it 374 to 37.)

Israel agreed to restrict building new settlements in the West Bank except as was necessary to meet the needs of "natural growth" in return for a US pledge to force the Palestinians to defer indefinitely their planned declaration of a Palestinian state beyond 4 May 1999 (the date when the Oslo Process was to have been concluded).

The United States agreed to provide funding to both parties: $300 million to the Palestinians for developing the West Bank's antiquated "economic INFRASTRUCTURE" and $1 billion to Israel to cover its costs of redeploying from the West Bank, including funds for new BYPASS ROADS and infrastructure relating to the needs of the settlements. At the start of Wye, twelve new bypass roads were in various stages of planning and construction. This was in addition to the massive settlement expansion Netanyahu had been pursuing since taking office. The financial grant provided by Clinton showed perceptible US acceptance of the settlements, in contrast to administrations preceding Clinton's, which had considered them "illegal" and "obstacles to peace." Additionally, in return for Israel's signature on the agreement, the United States pledged to enhance "Israel's defensive and deterrent capabilities" and upgrade US-Israeli STRATEGIC COOPERATION.

Since it was considered unlikely that there would ever be full agreement between Israel and the Palestinians on all the issues, the Wye Memorandum introduced a third party—the US Central Intelligence Agency (CIA)—to act as a monitor and arbiter on security issues and the anticipated contradictions between Israeli and Palestinian interpretations of compliance.

This very visible interjection of the CIA into the peace process was an important aspect of Wye. Israel's commitment to withdraw from the West Bank by an additional 13 percent was conditioned on the Palestinians' agreement to a detailed "work plan" under which they were to cooperate with the CIA in tracking down and arresting extremists in the Hamas and Islamic Jihad groups. The official interference of the CIA in monitoring the implementation of the "security measures" to be taken by the Palestinian side in "fighting terrorism" was hitherto unprecedented. The previous covert role of the CIA in the Occupied Territories now became official US policy.

On the final day of the negotiations, the agreement almost fell through. Prime Minister Netanyahu had asked President Clinton, in exchange for his attending the Wye Summit, to release Jonathan Pollard, an American naval intelligence officer who is serving a life sentence since 1985 for treason—that is, giving classified information to Israel. A bitter disagreement arose, with Netanyahu claiming that Clinton had promised to release Pollard and Clinton saying he had only promised to "review" the case. Director of the CIA GEORGE TENET threatened to resign if Pollard was released.

In sum, Palestinians viewed fulfillment of this agreement as key to the revival of peace talks and final status negotiations. Israel did not, however. Tel Aviv fulfilled the first stage of the redeployment but matched it with an equal amount of settlement construction and refused to make any other redeployments. On 17 May 1999 Netanyahu was succeeded as prime minister by EHUD BARAK, who was also disinclined to proceed with the implementation of the Wye River Memorandum. Barak promised President Arafat and President Clinton that Israel would fully carry out its obligations, but he did not follow through. Thus arose the need for the Sharm al-Shaykh Summit that opened on 4 September 1999.

Map 50. Wye River Memorandum, 1998

On 14 December 1998 the PNA convened the PNC in Gaza and voted overwhelmingly to amend the Charter. The PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE and the PALESTINE CENTRAL COUNCIL reaffirmed in a letter dated 22 January 1998 from PLO chairman Yasir Arafat to President Clinton the nullification of the Palestine National Charter, which satisfied Clinton, although it did not satisfy the Israelis.

Subsequently, Netanyahu announced that he was suspending the next two redeployments unless the PNA agreed to a set of six additional requirements. Among them, the PNA was required to publicly announce that it was “renouncing the intention to declare a state unilaterally,” to immediately “take measures against those who violate the anti-incitement order,” to immediately jail “at least twenty-two of the thirty Palestinian wanted fugitives,” to “reduce the size of the Palestinian police force to 30,000,” and to give an explicit public announcement reaffirming the PNA’s agreement that “prisoners with blood on their hands would not be released.” The PNA refused the new Israeli demands, and the peace process once again seemed to have reached a dead end.

Another summit followed approximately a year later at Sharm al-Shaykh, Egypt, with the participation of Egyptian president HOSNI MUBARAK and with the same agenda that had given rise to Wye.

See also OSLO ACCORDS; OSLO PROCESS; SHARM AL-SHAYKH MEMORANDUM

Bibliography

- Arafat, Yasir. “Speech at the Palestinian Conference to Affirm Renunciation of the PLO Charter, Gaza, 14 December 1998 (Excerpts).” Journal of Palestine Studies. 28:3 (1999).
- Aruri, Naseer. “The Wye Memorandum: Netanyahu’s Oslo and Unreciprocal Reciprocity.” Journal of Palestine Studies. 28:2 (1999).
- Human Rights Watch. Analysis of the Wye River Memorandum. New York: Human Rights Watch, November 1999. <http://www.hrw.org/press98/nov/israel1102.htm>.
- “Israel and the PLO, Sharm al-Shaykh Memorandum on Implementation of Outstanding Commitments of Agreements Signed and the Resumption of Permanent Status Negotiations, Sharm al-Shaykh, Egypt, 4 September 1999.” Journal of Palestine Studies. 29:2 (2000).

- Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Suicide and Other Bombing Attacks in Israel since the Declaration of Principles (Sept 1993). Jerusalem: Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 2007.
- . The Wye River Memorandum: US Letters of Assurance to Israel 29 Oct 1998. Jerusalem: Israeli Ministry of Foreign Relations, October 1998.
- PBS. “Shattered Dreams of Peace: The Road from Oslo.” Frontline. 27 June 2002. <http://www.pbs.org/wgbh/pages/frontline/shows/oslo>.
- Peretz, Don. “The 1998 Wye River Memorandum: An Update.” Information Brief. Washington, DC: The Palestine Center, 1999.
- “Prime Minister’s Office, List of Palestinian ‘Unfulfilled Commitments’ under Wye Memorandum, Jerusalem, 15 December 1998.” Journal of Palestine Studies. 28:3 (1999).
- Pundak, Ron. From Oslo to Taba: What Went Wrong? Israel: Peres Center for Peace, 2001.
- Rapoport, Meron. “Har Homa Neighborhood Slated for ‘Absentee’ Palestinian Land.” Ha’aretz. 14 August 1996.
- Schiff, Ze’ev. “The Price of Suspending Wye.” Ha’aretz. 8 January 1999.
- Shlaim, Avi. The Iron Wall: Israel and the Arab World. New York: W. W. Norton, 2000.
- Shragai, Nadav. “The Latest Damage to Antiquities on the Temple Mount.” Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs. 7:32 (27 February 2008).
- Sicherman, Harvey. The “Camp Wye” Accords. Philadelphia: Foreign Policy Research Center, n.d. http://www.unc.edu/depts/diplomat/AD\_Issues/amdipl\_10/sicherman\_wye.html.
- “The Wye River Memorandum and Related Documents: Special Document File,” (A) “Israel and the PLO, the Wye River Memorandum, Washington, 23 October 1998.” Journal of Palestine Studies. 28:2 (1999).

---

Y

---

Yachad

Two unrelated Israeli parties have had the name Yachad. The first was a center-rightist party formed by EZER WEIZMAN prior to the 1984 Israeli elections. After the party elected three members to the Knesset, it was invited to join YITZHAK SHAMIR's coalition government, in which Weizman became minister without portfolio. Shortly after the Knesset came into session the party merged with the Alignment, which subsequently became the LABOR PARTY.

The second, and more influential, is Yachad (Social Democratic Party of Israel, or SDI). It was founded by YOSSI BEILIN in December 2003 following elections earlier that year in which the Israeli peace camp made a poor showing. It involved the merger of MERETZ with Yossi Beilin's SHAHAR and Roman Bronfman's Democratic Choice Party (DCP) and was explicitly created to unite and resuscitate the Israeli Zionist peace camp within the dovish wing of the Israeli Labor Party. These efforts, however, were unsuccessful because, except for the original Meretz, Shahar, and the DCP, no other faction joined the new party, which suffered from declining popular interest in left-wing peace movements as a result of the rise in Palestinian violence in the AL-AQSA INTIFADA. In 2004 only 20,000 Israelis registered as members of the Yachad Party and half that number were registered as Meretz members in the 1999 party primaries.

In March 2004, Beilin was elected party leader and started a two-year term as the first chairman of Yachad. In July 2005 the party decided to change its name to Meretz-Yachad, because opinion polls revealed that the name Yachad was not recognizable to the Israeli public and that they preferred the old name, Meretz. However, in the 2006 election campaign the party dropped the Yachad part, running as just Meretz, under the slogan "Meretz on the left, the Human in the centre." Nevertheless, the name change failed to stop the party's decline, as they won just five seats in 2006. In late 2007, Beilin decided to retire from politics after it became clear in the party leadership contest that Haim Oron was leading in the polls. Oron went on to win the internal elections held on 18 March 2008 with 54.5 percent of the vote, and to become Meretz's new chairman.

Because Meretz had failed to attract voters disappointed with the Labor Party despite Labor's falling numbers in the ballot box, or even those who had voted for the Pensioners Party, an initiative was launched to broaden Meretz's representation. Polls showed most such voters preferred TZIPI LIVNI's KADIMA PARTY, which was widely viewed as committed to pursuing peace with the Palestinians. Kadima and Meretz held talks over assembling a government under the leadership of Livni, and an agreement was achieved; Livni even promised Meretz it could count on fielding two ministers. Ironically, many Meretz voters ultimately chose Kadima in the 2009 elections. On 22 December 2008 Meretz finalized another merger for the 2009 elections, with Hatnua HaHadasha ("The New Movement"), but the alliance failed miserably, winning just three seats. The left-wing bloc in general suffered a harsh blow in the Israeli legislative elections in 2009. Kadima, though winning a majority of seats in the Knesset, was unable to form a coalition, and the LIKUD PARTY'S BENJAMIN NETANYAHU formed a new far-right government.

Yachad supported the following principles regarding the Israeli-Palestinian conflict: (1) peace between Israel and the Palestinians based on a TWO-STATE SOLUTION as laid out in the GENEVA ACCORD, (2) the protection of Palestinian human rights in the Israeli OCCUPIED TERRITORIES, and (3) dismantling most of the Israeli SETTLEMENTS in the WEST BANK. Meretz-Yachad's approach toward the conflict has abandoned the "securitist" approach of its predecessor, Meretz, and focused its criticism at the conduct of former prime minister ARIEL SHARON and the government. The party was split over whether to support Sharon's plan for ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA, though in November 2004, it announced that it would abstain in motions of no confidence in the Likud government in order to prevent the government from falling prior to implementation of the plan. With the defection of the SHINUI PARTY from Sharon's government, Meretz-Yachad's decision helped Sharon to carry out his disengagement plan.

Bibliography

- Diskin, Abraham. The Last Days in Israel: Understanding the New Israeli Democracy. London: Routledge, 2003.
- Maor, Moshe. Parties, Elections and Cleavages: Israel in Comparative and Theoretical Perspective. London: Routledge, 2000.

Yadin, Yigal (1917–1984)

Yigal Yadin was a military commander, political leader, and archaeologist. His father, Eliezer Lipa Sukenik, immigrated to Palestine from Bialystok, Poland, in 1912. Born in JERUSALEM, Yadin joined the underground military organization HAGANA in 1933 at age fifteen. He became a key figure in its leadership, as well as in its elite fighting force, the PALMAH, for which he was operations officer and helped devise and implement many of its strategies. In 1946, however, he left the Hagana following an argument with its commander, Yitzhak Sadeh.

Yadin was a university student when, in 1947, shortly before the state of Israel declared its independence, he was called back to active service by Israel founder DAVID BEN-GURION. He served in various positions during the 1948 WAR and was responsible for many of the key decisions made during the course of that conflict. On 9 November 1949, Yadin was appointed chief of staff of the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES and served in that capacity for three years. He resigned on 7 December 1952 over disagreements with then prime minister and defense minister Ben-Gurion about cuts to the military budget. By age thirty-five he had completed his military career.

Upon leaving the military, Yadin devoted himself to research and began his life's work in ARCHAEOLOGY. In 1956 he received the Israel Prize for his doctoral thesis on the translation of the Dead Sea Scrolls. As an archaeologist, he excavated some of the most important sites in the region, including the Qumran Caves, Masada, Hazor, and Tel Megiddo. Employing thousands of volunteers from Israel and abroad, his vast archaeological digs expanded the field tremendously. Yadin's findings have shed light on various periods of biblical ancient Israel, such as the Canaanite, First Temple, and Herodian periods, as well as the Bar Kokhba revolt. Perhaps his most famous contribution was decoding and interpreting several scrolls from the Dead Sea and the Judean Desert area.

Yadin also did much to make archaeology a more accessible and less exclusively esoteric field. His writing appeals to both scholars and a more widespread audience. He strove not only to document his archaeological findings but also to place them in a context whereby they contributed to an understanding of Hebrew cultural history. Yadin was sometimes forced to deal with the theft of important artifacts, occasionally by prominent political and military figures. In one instance, when the thefts were commonly attributed to the famous general MOSHE DAYAN (who was blind in one eye), he remarked: "I know who did it, and I am not going to say who it is, but if I catch him, I'll poke out his other eye, too." The Israeli government used many of Yadin's archaeological discoveries as a means to enhance Israel's national myth about its past.

Yadin never completely abandoned public life, even as an archaeologist. On the eve of the 1967 WAR, he served as a military adviser to Prime Minister LEVI ESHKOL, and, following the OCTOBER WAR of 1973, he was a member of the Agranat Commission, which investigated the government's failures that led to the war. In 1977 Yadin formed a new political party—the rightist Democratic Movement for Change, known by its Hebrew acronym DASH—together with Amnon Rubenstein, Shmuel Tamir, Meir Amit, and other prominent public figures. The party appealed to many Israelis who were displeased with alleged corruption in the LABOR PARTY and to the increasing sense of frustration and despair in the aftermath of the 1973 War and the social and political developments that followed in its wake. Many people regarded Yadin, a warrior and a scholar, as the prototype of the ideal Israeli, untainted by corruption, who could lead the country on a new path.

In the 1977 elections, the new party did remarkably well on its first attempt to enter the Knesset, winning 15 of the 120 seats. As a result, LIKUD PARTY leader MENAHEM BEGIN was able to form a coalition with DASH, thereby excluding the Labor Party for the first time in Israel's history. As the new deputy prime minister, Yadin played a pivotal role in many events, particularly the contacts with EGYPT that eventually led to the signing of the CAMP DAVID ACCORDS and the peace treaty between Israel and its neighbor. Nevertheless, DASH proved unable to sustain its original support, and the party broke into numerous splinter factions. By the elections of 1981, the party no longer existed in its original form, and that same year Yadin retired from politics.

See also ARCHAEOLOGY

Bibliography

Ben-Yehuda, Nachman. Sacrificing Truth: Archaeology and the Myth of Masada. Amherst, NY: Humanity Books, 2002.

Weingrod, Alex. "How Israeli Culture Was Constructed: Memory, History and the Israeli Past." Israel Studies. 2:1 (1997).

Yadin, Yigal. The Art of Warfare in Biblical Lands, vol. 1. Norwich, England: Jarrold and Sons, 1963.

———. Bar-Kokhba. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1971.

Yaffa

See JAFFA; PALESTINIAN SOCIETY, PRE-1948

Yahadut HaTorah

See UNITED TORAH JUDAISM

Yasin, Shaykh Ahmad Ismail (1936–2004)

Shaykh Ahmad Yasin was a founder and spiritual leader of HAMAS (an acronym for the Islamic Resistance Movement meaning "zeal"), which he cofounded with ABD AL-AZIZ RANTISI in 1987, originally calling it the Palestinian Wing of the MUSLIM BROTHERHOOD. Born in the village of Al-Jora near Majdal (renamed Ashkelon), he became a REFUGEE with his family in a GAZA STRIP camp during the 1948 WAR, which saw the destruction of Al-Jora. A childhood sporting accident left Yasin a quadriplegic, confined to a wheelchair, nearly blind, and with poor hearing. Despite his paralysis, he fathered eleven children.

In 1968 Yasin spent a year on a charitable scholarship studying at Ein Shams University in Cairo, where it is believed the Muslim Brotherhood recruited him. In 1970 Yasin organized the al-Mujama al-Islami (Islamic Compound), which opened mosques, hospitals, and libraries and carried out other philanthropic work. After Ein Shams, Yasin returned to Gaza as a preacher and teacher and worked as head of the Islamic Compound in Gaza. During Israel's OCCUPATION, he became the most famous preacher in the Gaza Strip—charismatic, daring, and logical. After the 1979 Islamic revolution in IRAN, Yasin founded the Majd al-Mujahedin (Pride of the Faithful Warriors), a more radical group than Islamic Compound. In 1983, Israel arrested Yasin on charges of weapons possession, formation of a secret organization, and incitement against the existence of the state of Israel. Although he was sentenced by an ISRAELI MILITARY COURT to thirteen years' imprisonment, he was released in 1985 in the context of a PRISONER exchange between Israel and the POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE—GENERAL COMMAND.

In 1987, after his release, Yasin founded Hamas. Initially, Israel encouraged its formation, viewing Hamas as a useful religious counterweight to the surging secular nationalism of the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO), but it soon regretted its mistake. Hamas gained a reputation for ruthlessness against fellow Palestinian Muslims suspected of collaborating with Israel. In 1988 the Occupation authorities raided Yasin's home and threatened to deport him to LEBANON. In 1989, Israel accused Yasin of authorizing the killing of Palestinian COLLABORATORS and of ordering the execution of two captured Israeli soldiers, a crime for which an Israeli military court convicted him and sentenced him to life imprisonment. In 1997, however, Yasin was released from prison as part of an arrangement with JORDAN following a failed assassination attempt against KHALID MESHAL, conducted by the Israeli intelligence agency MOSSAD in Amman. In exchange for two Mossad agents who had been arrested by Jordanian authorities, Yasin was released on condition that he not advocate SUICIDE BOMBINGS against Israel.

Returning to a hero's welcome in Gaza and later going on a tour of Arab and Muslim countries, where he collected $35 million in donations, Yasin soon became a thorn in PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA) president YASIR ARAFAT's side because of his popular appeal and unwillingness to submit to Arafat's agenda. Arafat repeatedly placed Yasin under house arrest. However, each arrest only made the physically ailing shaykh more popular, and, after extended demonstrations by his supporters, he was typically released. Unlike the Arafat administration, with its extravagant spending and corruption, Yasin was revered for never taking money for himself or his family and for leading a simple lifestyle. For all his physical frailty, Yasin was a powerful inspiration for young Palestinians disillusioned with the collapse of hopes for peace. He inspired them to offer up their lives, promising that suicide bombers who were willing to die for the dignity of Palestinians and in the service of a longer-term victory would achieve martyrdom.

Following his 1997 release, Yasin resumed leadership of Hamas. He also renewed his calls for struggle against the Occupation, including the use of suicide bombings against both Israeli military and civilian targets, thus violating the condition of his release. His most famous quote is "We chose this road, and will end with martyrdom or victory." On 13 June 2003, unnamed Israeli officials announced that Yasin was "not immune" to the Israeli policy of TARGETED ASSASSINATIONS. Three months later, on 6 September 2003, an Israeli Air Force F-16 dropped a quarter-ton bomb on a building in Gaza City where Yasin was staying, but he was only lightly wounded and survived. Israeli officials later confirmed that Yasin was the target of the attack. Subsequently, Yasin told reporters, "Days will prove that the assassination policy will not finish the Hamas. Hamas leaders wish to be martyrs and are not scared of death. Jihad will continue and the resistance will continue until we have victory, or we will be martyrs." Yasin further promised that Hamas would teach Israel an "unforgettable lesson" because of the assassination attempt. He made no effort to hide from further assassination attempts or to conceal his location. Journalists who visited his Gaza address found that Yasin maintained a routine daily pattern of activity, including being wheeled every morning to a nearby mosque. Believing that a divided leadership would undermine Palestinian interests, Yasin sought to maintain good relations with the PNA and with other regimes in the Arab world. But he remained uncompromising on the issue of peace. "The so-called peace path is not peace and it is not a substitute for jihad and resistance," Yasin repeatedly said in interviews.

On 22 March 2004, while he was being wheeled out of a mosque where he had made the early morning prayer, an Israeli helicopter gunship fired Hellfire missiles at Yasin and both of his bodyguards. They were killed instantly, along with six other Palestinians, while more than a dozen people were injured, including two of Yasin's sons. Some 200,000 people took to the streets of the Gaza Strip for Yasin's funeral, as Israeli forces declared a national alert. Abd al-Aziz Rantisi replaced Yasin as Hamas leader in the Gaza Strip, but Israel assassinated Rantisi on 17 April 2004. While Prime Minister ARIEL SHARON and other Israeli officials made public statements expressing their delight at Yasin's death, British foreign secretary Jack Straw said, "All of us understand Israel's need to protect itself—and it is fully entitled to do that—against the TERRORISM which affects it, within INTERNATIONAL LAW. But it is not entitled to go in for this kind of unlawful killing and we condemn it. It is unacceptable, it is unjustified and it is very unlikely to achieve its objectives." The UN Security Council offered a draft resolution condemning Yasin's assassination, but the UNITED STATES vetoed it because it did not include an explicit condemnation of Hamas terrorism.

See also HAMAS

Bibliography

- Abu Amr, Ziad. Islamic Fundamentalism in the West Bank and Gaza: Muslim Brotherhood and Islamic Jihad. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1994.
- Budeiri, Musa. "The Nationalist Dimension of Islamic Movements." Journal of Palestine Studies. 24:3 (1995).
- Burgat, Francois. "Ballot Boxes, Militaries, and Islamic Movements." In The Islamism Debate. Edited by Martin Kramer. Tel Aviv, Israel: Tel Aviv University, the Moshe Dayan Center, 1997.
- . Face to Face with Political Islam. London: I. B. Tauris, 2003.
- Crooke, Alastair, and Beverley Milton-Edwards. "Elusive Ingredient: Hamas and the Peace Process." Journal of Palestine Studies. 33:4 (2004).
- Hroub, Khaled. Hamas: Political Thought and Practice. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 2000.
- International Crisis Group. "Dealing with Hamas." Middle East Report. 21 (January 2004).
- . "Enter Hamas: The Challenges of Political Integration." Middle East Report. 49 (January 2006).
- . "Islamic Social Welfare Activism in the Occupied Territories: A Legitimate Target?" Middle East Report. 13 (April 2003).
- Legrain, Jean-Francois. "The Islamic Movement and the Intifada." In Intifada: Palestine at the Crossroads. Edited by Jamal R. Nassar and Roger Heacock. New York: Praeger Publishers, 1990.
- Milton-Edwards, Beverley. Islamic Politics in Palestine. London: I. B. Tauris, 1996.
- Mishal, Shaul, and Avraham Sela. The Palestinian Hamas: Vision, Violence, and Coexistence. New York: Columbia University Press, 2000.

Mitchell, Richard P. The Society of the Muslim Brothers. New York and Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1969.

Nuesse, Andrea. Muslim Palestine: The Ideology of Hamas. Abingdon, Oxon: Routledge Curzon, 1998.

Yehoshua, A. B. (1936–)

A. B. Yehoshua is the pen name of Abraham B. (“Bulli”) Yehoshua, an Israeli novelist, essayist, and playwright. He was born to a fifth-generation JERUSALEM family of SEPHARDI origin on his father’s side, and his mother was an immigrant from Morocco. Yehoshua served as a paratrooper in the Israeli army from 1954 to 1957. After studying literature and philosophy at the Hebrew University of JERUSALEM, he began teaching in Jerusalem. From 1963 to 1967 Yehoshua lived and taught in Paris and served as the general secretary of the World Union of Jewish Students. Since 1972, he has taught comparative and Hebrew literature at HAIFA University, where he holds the rank of full professor. In 1975 he was a writer-in-residence at St. Cross College, Oxford. He has also been a visiting professor at Harvard (1977), the University of Chicago (1988, 1997, 2000), and Princeton (1992).

From the end of his military service, Yehoshua began to publish fiction. His first book of stories, Mot Hazaken (The Death of the Old Man), was published in 1962. He became a notable figure in the “new wave” generation of Israeli writers who differed from earlier writers in their focus on the individual and interpersonal rather than the group. Yehoshua names Franz Kafka, Shmuel Yosef Agnon, and William Faulkner as formative influences. In an article in the New York Times, Harold Bloom compared Yehoshua to Faulkner and also mentions him in his book The Western Canon.

Yehoshua is the author of nine novels, three books of short stories, four plays, and four collections of essays, most recently Ahizat Moledet (Homeland Lesson), a book of reflections on identity and literature. His most acclaimed novel, Mr Mani, is a multigenerational look at Jewish identity and Israel through five conversations over the span of a century. His most recent novel, Friendly Fire, explores the nature of Israeli familial relationships. In a drama that moves back and forth between Israel and Tanzania, Yehoshua explores personal grief and bitterness. His works have been published in translation in twenty-eight countries, and many have been adapted for film, television, theater, and opera.

An activist in the ISRAELI PEACE MOVEMENT, Yehoshua tends toward a centrist position. He attended the signing of the GENEVA ACCORD and freely airs his political views in essays and interviews. He is a long-standing critic of Israeli OCCUPATION but also of the Palestinians. He and some other intellectuals mobilized on behalf of the dovish New Movement shortly before 2009 elections in Israel, but won no seats. Yehoshua said in La Stampa (Italian daily newspaper) that even before the 2008–2009 Israeli offensive in Gaza began, that he had published an appeal to Gaza residents urging them to end the violence. Next he explained “why the Israeli operation was necessary, but also how quickly it needs to end.” Precisely because the Gazans are our neighbors, he said, “we need to be proportionate in this operation. We need to try to reach a cease-fire as quickly as possible.” “We will always be neighbors, so the less blood is shed, the better the future will be,” he added. Yehoshua added that he would be happy for the border crossings to be opened completely, and even for Palestinian workers to come to work in Israel as part of a cease-fire.

His novels published in English include The Lover, 1977; A Late Divorce, 1982; Five Seasons, 1987; Mr. Mani, 1990; Open Heart, 1994; A Journey to the End of the Millennium, 1997; The Liberated Bride, 2001; and A Woman in Jerusalem, 2004.

Yehoshua has been the recipient of numerous awards and honors, including the Brenner Prize, 1983; the Alterman Prize, 1986; the Bialik Prize for literature co-recipient (jointly with Avner Treinin), 1989; and the Israel Prize for Hebrew Literature, 1995, among many others. In Italy, he received the Viareggio Prize for Lifetime Achievement and in 2003 his novel The Liberated Bride won both the Premio Napoli and the Lampedusa Literary Prize. Friendly Fire won the Premio Roma in 2008. Yehoshua has received honorary doctorates from Hebrew Union College (1990), Tel Aviv University (1998), Torino University (1999), and Bar-Ilan University (2000).

See also HEBREW LITERATURE

Yemen

See ARAB STATES: INTER-ARAB POLITICS; LEAGUE OF ARAB STATES

Yesha Council

The Yesha Council is the umbrella organization of the various municipal councils of Jewish communities in Yesha, the Hebrew acronym for Judea, Samaria, and Gaza, which are otherwise referred to as the WEST BANK and GAZA STRIP. It was founded in the 1970s, as the successor to GUSH EMUNIM, to oversee the movement of Jewish settlers to what they consider their homeland in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES. The council consists of twenty-five democratically elected mayors and ten community leaders. Its mandate is to provide security for the settlers; to oversee improvements in INFRASTRUCTURE, such as ROADS, electricity, and WATER supplies; and to act as domestic and international emissaries on behalf of the settlers and the SETTLEMENT movement. The main objectives of the Yesha Council are to retain the Occupied Territories under Israeli sovereignty and to promote additional settlements in the West Bank and JERUSALEM; it opposes any territorial settlement with the Palestinians.

The council serves as a powerful political representative of the settlers and a lobby for their cause in the Knesset and with the government; it is also in charge of public relations campaigns and grassroots protests when needed. In 2005 the Yesha Council led the settlers' campaign against ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA with mass protests and demonstrations, including a human chain of some 130,000 persons, a march at Kfar Maimon, and rallies at the WESTERN WALL and in Tel Aviv.

When in mid-November 2009, under intense pressure from US president Barack Obama, Prime Minister BENJAMIN NETANYAHU announced a ten-month moratorium on settlement construction, the Yesha Council erupted in unprecedented fury. Settler leaders immediately vowed that they would prevent Israeli inspectors from enforcing a moratorium on new construction in West Bank settlements and called on the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) to disobey any orders related to the moratorium. The statement by the Yesha Council came after officials said inspectors, armed with aerial maps and empowered to confiscate construction, had begun enforcing the policy. Gershon Messika, head of the Samaria Regional Council in the northern West Bank, tore up a stop-work order delivered to him by an IDF major. "This is an order to halt construction in the state of Israel. This is a racist, immoral and illegal decision which is therefore invalid," Messika said. Protesters blocked security forces from entering the community to enforce a construction freeze.

A violent confrontation between settlers and CIVIL ADMINISTRATION inspectors broke out in the West Bank settlement of ELON MOREH. Settlers began a march from Elon Moreh toward NABLUS to protest the building moratorium as well as the enforcement of the freeze by the Civil Administration inspectors. Leading the march was head rabbi of Elon Moreh, Elyakim Levanon.

The settler leaders also announced that they would not enforce construction-related violations, saying the government had stripped them of their authority to manage planning and construction in their communities. In KIRYAT ARBA, several dozen settlers, led by local council head Malachi Levinger and right-wing activist Itamar Ben-Gvir, tried to block the inspectors' path. At Kfar Tapuach, the gate was locked and police accompanying the inspectors had to break in. Some one hundred demonstrators crowded the inspectors at the settlement of Revava. Extreme-rightist Baruch Marzel called on his camp to "prepare to topple Netanyahu and toss him into the trash bin of Jewish history, together with the scoundrels (former prime ministers [EHUD] OLMERT and [ARIEL] SHARON) who betrayed their constituents and their path."

Bibliography

- Gorenberg, Gershon. "The New Politics of Conscientious Objection in Israel." The American Prospect. 19 November 2009.
- Levinson, Chaim. "'Okay for New West Bank Homes Isn't Bid to Appease Settlers.'" Ha'aretz. 12 December 2009.
- . "Settlers: 'We'll Prevent Inspectors from Enforcing Construction Freeze.'" Ha'aretz. 1 December 2009.
- Shtasler, Nehemia. "The Danger of Mutiny." Ha'aretz. 24 November 2009.

Yesha Rabbis

The Yesha rabbis are Orthodox and ultra-Orthodox religious leaders in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES who provide Torah and Talmudic sanctions for the actions of radical religious settlers. Their religious interpretations from the Torah provide justification for the settlers taking Palestinian LAND and houses, harassing and using violence against Palestinians, destroying Palestinian olive harvests, and even killing them.

In September 2004 the settler rabbi leaders produced a manifesto calling on the government to toughen its policies in the territories, even at the cost of civilian Palestinians' lives, noting that non-Jewish blood is less sacred than Jewish blood. They also declared that the army should show less regard for the welfare of Palestinian civilians if terrorists are hiding in their midst. The manifesto was initiated by Rabbi Haim Druckman, the head of the Bnei Akiva network, active throughout the world in Orthodox Jewish communities; Eliezer Melamed, head of the Har Bracha yeshiva; and Rabbi Yuval Sharlo, head of a yeshiva in Petah Tikva that combines Torah learning with active ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES (IDF) service. Shortly after the manifesto was sent to Israeli defense minister Shaul Mofaz, the rabbis, heads of WEST BANK yeshivot, and members of the YESHA COUNCIL urged the government not to avoid harming Palestinians if it meant an effective war on TERRORISM. The manifesto argued that the enemy must be fought even when it is known that innocents will be killed in an attack.

In the past, Israeli law enforcement agents treated rabbinical manifestos with leniency, even if they appeared to have broken the law against incitement to violence. In July 1995, for example, the Israeli attorney general decided not to prosecute rabbis for a similar manifesto because of an explicit policy not to prosecute for rhetoric and because freedom of speech outweighs the complaint. Prosecution of rabbis was also avoided because of the desire to avoid disputes in an already polarized (religious/secular) society. However, ISRAEL'S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA marked a turning point. Yesha rabbis called on religious soldiers and officers to disobey orders from their commanders that might lead to evacuating the "holy land." In response, the IDF senior command and the government were unequivocal: soldiers could not obey orders from a source outside the military. As it turned out, disobedience was minimal, despite the calls by rabbis and dire estimates that thousands of soldiers would refuse to participate in the withdrawal. Only sixty-three soldiers refused to obey IDF orders, and most were in the regular army. Only five were professional officers. All were tried by military courts and imprisoned.

By 2009 the phenomenon of religious soldiers refusing IDF orders had grown tremendously. Nehemia Shtrasler wrote in Ha'aretz in November 2009: "It is no accident that the refusal movement began in the Kfir brigade. It operates solely in the West Bank, with a high percentage of soldiers from hesder yeshivas (which combine army service with religious studies) and from settlements. At first, two soldiers in basic training with the brigade's Shimshon battalion held up a protest sign during a swearing-in ceremony at the WESTERN WALL: 'The Shimshon battalion won't evacuate Homesh [outpost].' Two weeks later, 25 reservist soldiers attached to the unit sent a harsh and unprecedented letter to their commanders in which they protested its 'use for the destruction of Homesh in Samaria.' Subsequently six soldiers of the Nachshon battalion held up a sign saying 'Nachshon won't evacuate Jews either.' . . . We should know that in all hesder yeshivas, and not only those of 'extremist rabbis,' the students undergo brainwashing against yielding any piece of holy land in the territories, and they listen to their rabbis before they obey their commanders. There are entire battalions in the army today comprised solely of hesder yeshiva soldiers, who are likely to change sides and fight against the evacuation of settlements. The very fact that they belong to a large, strong and united community, broadly backed by a supportive population, by rabbis and politicians, arouses the suspicion of a mutiny."

Gershom Gorenberg, writing in The American Prospect the same month, noted: "Driving through the West Bank recently, I picked up two hitchhikers. Both wore the long, thick sidelocks and extra-large skullcaps that have become the mark of young men on the religious right, especially among settlers. . . . The hitchhiker in the back seat said he didn't intend to serve. 'The Israel Defense Forces,' he argued, 'hurts Jews'—a point he presumed was obvious from the 'uprooting' of settlements in Gaza four years ago and the occasional dismantling of tiny, illegal settlement outposts in the West Bank more recently. 'Besides that,' he said, the IDF 'doesn't want to kill Arabs because it wants to look nice in the world.' . . . It's increasingly clear that . . . those soldiers believe in a right-wing version of selective conscientious objection: They won't carry out orders that conflict with their pro-settlement principles. In their view, they answer to a higher law, which says Jews have the right to live throughout the Whole Land of Israel, which includes Judea and Samaria, a.k.a. the West Bank. Many have also studied under clerics with a harsh view of combat ethics that doesn't fit the IDF's official stance of seeking to minimize Arab civilian casualties."

See also CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS; JEWISH FUNDAMENTALISM; SETTLER VIOLENCE; THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT

Bibliography

- Aran, Gideon. "From Religious Zionism to Zionist Religion: The Roots of Gush Emunim." Studies in Contemporary Jewishry. 2 (1986).
- . "Jewish Zionist Fundamentalism: The Bloc of the Faithful in Israel." In Fundamentalism Observed. Edited by Martin E. Marty and R. Scott Appleby. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1991.
- . "A Mystic-Messianic Interpretation of Modern Israeli History: The Six Day War as a Key Event in the Development of the Original Religious Culture of Gush Emunim." Studies in Contemporary Judaism. 4 (1988).
- Aronoff, Myron J. "Gush Emunim: The Institutionalization of a Charismatic, Messianic, Religious-Political Revitalization Movement in Israel." In Religion and Politics, Political Anthropology, vol. 3. New Brunswick, NJ: Transaction Press, 1984.
- Aviad, Janet. "The Contemporary Israeli Pursuit of the Millennium." Religion. 14 (1984).
- . "The Messianism of Gush Emunim." Studies in Contemporary Jewishry. 7 (1991).
- Aviner, Shlomo. "Messianic Realism." In Whose Homeland. Edited by Avner Tomaschoff. Jerusalem: World Zionist Organization, 1978.
- Benvenisti, Meron. Intimate Enemies: Jews and Arabs in a Shared Land. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1995.
- Biale, David. "The Messianic Connection: Zionism, Politics, and Settlement in Israel." The Center Magazine. 18:5 (1985).
- Don-Yehiya, Eliezer. "Jewish Messianism, Religious Zionism and Israeli Politics: The Impact and Origins of Gush Emunim." Middle Eastern Studies. 23:2 (1987).
- Gorenberg, Gershom. "The New Politics of Conscientious Objection in Israel." The American Prospect. 19 November 2009.
- Grant, Michael. Jews in the Roman World. New York: Dorset Press, 1973.
- Grossman, David. The Yellow Wind. Translated from the Hebrew by Haim Watzman. New York: Delta, 1988.
- Isaak, R., Israel Divided: Ideological Politics in the Jewish State. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1976.
- IsraelNationalNews.com. "Yesha Rabbis Call for Temple Mount Prayers." Aliyah to Shiloh. 4 January 2008. <http://www.israelnationalnews.com/News/Flash.aspx/139227>.
- Jerusalem Post Staff. "Yesha Rabbis Call for 'Extermination of the Enemy.'" Jerusalem Post. 12 July 2006.
- Klausner, Joseph. The Messianic Idea in Israel: From Its Beginning to the Completion of the Mishnah. New York: Macmillan, 1955.
- Levinson, Chaim. "'Okay for New West Bank Homes Isn't Bid to Appease Settlers.'" Ha'aretz. 12 December 2009.
- . "Settlers: 'We'll Prevent Inspectors from Enforcing Construction Freeze.'" Ha'aretz. 1 December 2009.
- Liebman, Charles, and Eliezer Don-Yehiya. Religion and Politics in Israel. Bloomington: University of Indiana Press, 1984.
- Lustick, Ian. For the Land and the Lord: Jewish Fundamentalism in Israel. New York: Council on Foreign Relations, 1991.
- . Unsettled States, Disputed Lands. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1993.
- Medoff, R. "Gush Emunim and the Question of Jewish Counterterrorism." Middle East Review. 18:4 (1986).
- Morgenstern, Arie. "Messianic Concepts and Settlement in the Land of Israel." In Vision and Conflict in the Holy Land. Edited by Richard I. Cohen. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1985.
- Neusner, Jacob. First Century Judaism in Crisis: Yohanan ben Zakkai and the Renaissance of Torah. Nashville: Abingdon Press, 1975.
- Newman, David, ed. The Impact of Gush Emunim. London: Croom Helm, 1985.
- Ohana, David. "Kfar Etzion: The Community of Memory and the Myth of Return." Israel Studies. 7:2 (2002).
- Ravitzki, Avi. Messianism, Zionism and Jewish Religious Radicalism. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1996.
- Scholem, Gershom. "The Messianic Idea in Judaism." In The Messianic Idea in Judaism and Other Essays on Jewish Spirituality. Edited by Gershom Scholem. New York: Schocken Books, 1971.
- Segal, Haggai. Dear Brothers: The West Bank Jewish Underground. New York: Beit-Shamai Publications, 1988.
- Shafir, Gershon. "Institutional and Spontaneous Settlement Drives: Did Gush Emunim Make a Difference?" In The Impact of Gush Emunim. Edited by David Newman. London: Croom Helm, 1985.
- Shragai, Nadav. "Top Rabbi: Din Rodef on Anyone Ceding Land—Killing for Land Is OK Says Rabbi." Ha'aretz. 30 June 2004.
- . "Top Yesha Rabbi Says Jewish Law Forbids Renting Houses to Arabs." Ha'aretz. 20 March 2008.
- Shtrasler, Nehemia. "The Danger of Mutiny." Ha'aretz. 24 November 2009.
- Sprinzak, Ehud. The Ascendance of Israel's Radical Right. New York: Oxford University Press, 1991.
- . "Gush Emunim: The Iceberg Model of Political Extremism." Jerusalem Quarterly. 21 (1981).
- . Gush Emunim: The Politics of Zionist Fundamentalism in Israel. New York: American Jewish Committee, 1986.
- Weisburd, David. Jewish Settler Violence: Deviance as Social Reaction. University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press, 1989.
- Weiss, Efrat. "Yesha Council on Settlement Freeze: PM Broke Campaign Promise." Israel News. 25 November 2009.

Yadgar, Ya'acov. "Between 'the Arab' and 'the Religious Rightist': 'Significant Others' in the Construction of Jewish-Israeli National Identity." Nationalism and Ethnic Politics. 9:1 (2003).

"Yeshua Rabbis: Crazy Peace Talk Drives Arabs to Kill." israelnationalnews.com. 2 July 2008.

Yiftachel, Oren. "Ethnocracy and Its Discontents: Minorities, Protest and the Israeli Policy." Critical Inquiry. 26 (2000).

Yesh Din

Established in March 2005, Yesh Din is an Israeli group composed of volunteers, who receive guidance from a professional team of lawyers, human rights experts, and media consultants, organized to oppose the continuing violation of Palestinian human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. "We are united by our deep concern over the serious damage the OCCUPATION is inflicting on both Palestinian and Israeli societies." Their mission is to achieve a long-term structural improvement in the human rights situation in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES, although they work for an immediate and meaningful change in the Israeli authorities' practices by documenting and disseminating accurate and up-to-date information about the systematic violation of human rights in the territories, by raising public awareness of such violations, and by applying public and legal pressures on government agencies to end them. (<http://www.yesh-din.org/site/index.php?page=about.us&lang=en>).

Yesh G'vul

Yesh G'vul (There Is a Limit) is an Israeli peace group that supports soldiers who refuse duties of a repressive or aggressive nature. It arose in response to the 1982 Israeli invasion of LEBANON, when 168 servicemen were imprisoned after refusing to serve. The actual number of refusals was far greater, but their rising numbers deterred the army from prosecuting most of the REFUSENIKS. The first Palestinian INTIFADA in 1987 likewise prompted further refusals, with approximately 200 jailed, though the army again backed down from jailing many of the noncompliant soldiers. A notably high ratio of refuseniks are combat officers (ranking from sergeant to major)—that is, soldiers who have served with distinction. Yesh G'vul provides moral support to those refusing and material and financial support to families whose head is in prison for refusing. The organization also lobbies the government for support of its position. During the AL-AQSA INTIFADA, Yesh G'vul stated that the "brutal role of the Israeli army in subjugating the Palestinian population placed numerous servicemen in a grave moral and political dilemma, as they were required to enforce policies they deem illegal, immoral and ultimately harmful to Israeli interests."

From the outset, Yesh G'vul has fostered the refuser movement, which has taken a number of different paths. Defying official intimidation, including surveillance by police and security services, the group counsels soldiers wrestling with the choice between carrying out policies they find abhorrent and defying military discipline. To those who elect to refuse service, Yesh G'vul provides full moral and material backing, ranging from financial support for families of jailed refuseniks to vigils at the military prisons where they are held. Whenever a refusenik is jailed, Yesh G'vul publicizes his imprisonment as a notification for the broader peace movement and for other soldiers in a similar dilemma.

Although Yesh G'vul is a small group with limited human and financial resources, the unique thrust of its campaign has put it in the vanguard of the ISRAELI PEACE MOVEMENT. With members drawn from a range of political views, Yesh G'vul is not bound to any specific peace program. Its overall aim is to terminate the OCCUPATION and to combat the misuse of the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES for offensive actions that result in high numbers of civilian casualties. The group supports the TWO-STATE SOLUTION as the key to peaceful resolution of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and in the interests of both peoples. (www.yeshgvul.org).

See also CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS; COURAGE TO REFUSE; ISRAELI MILITARISM; ISRAELI PEACE MOVEMENT; REFUSER SOLIDARITY NETWORK

Yisrael b'Aliya

Yisrael b'Aliya (Israel on the Rise) was a right-wing, secular, Zionist political party founded in 1995 by NATAN SHARANSKY, a Russian human rights activist and dissident, to articulate the needs of Russian immigrants in Israel. In 1996, Yisrael b'Aliya won seven Knesset seats; in 1999, six seats; and in 2000, four seats. After what was considered a poor showing in the 2003 election in which it won only two seats, Sharansky resigned as party leader. The party subsequently merged with the LIKUD PARTY. The party worked to address unemployment and underemployment, lack of adequate housing, and discrimination, among other trials faced by newly arriving immigrants. It supported continued SETTLEMENT in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES, opposed a Palestinian state, and conditioned any deal with the Palestinians on the democratization of Palestinian society. To this end, the party proposed establishing a coordinating body, headed by the UNITED STATES, to prepare Palestinians for democracy. This body would operate for at least three years and ensure that democratic conditions were right before negotiations with Israel could begin and perhaps move toward a final agreement. The coordinating body would formulate an EDUCATION curriculum that advocates peace and ensures political, speech, and journalistic freedom for Palestinians. During the time in which the body was in operation, Israel would continue to shoulder responsibility for security and RESTRICTIONS ON MOVEMENT of Palestinians. These ideas were a reflection of those promoted by Sharansky in his book The Case for Democracy, said to have had a major influence on President George W. Bush in his approach to Israel and the Palestinians.

See also IMMIGRATION; MOSCOW

Bibliography

- Diskin, Abraham. The Last Days in Israel: Understanding the New Israeli Democracy. London: Routledge, 2003.
- Maor, Moshe. Parties, Elections and Cleavages: Israel in Comparative and Theoretical Perspective. London: Routledge, 2000.
- Sharansky, Natan, with Ron Dermer. The Case for Democracy: The Power of Freedom to Overcome the Tyranny and Terror, 2nd ed. Devon, UK: Balfour Books, 2006.

Yisrael Beitenu

Yisrael Beitenu (Israel Our Home), founded in 1999 by AVIGDOR LIEBERMAN and several other men disaffected with the LIKUD PARTY especially with the 1997 WYE RIVER MEMORANDUM, which they considered a complete negation of fundamental Zionist principles, is a right-wing political party in Israel whose main support comes from immigrants from the former SOVIET UNION. The party describes itself as “a national movement with the clear vision to follow in the brave path of [VLADIMIR] ZE’EV JABOTINSKY, the founder of Revisionist ZIONISM.” Yisrael Beitenu takes a very hard line against the PALESTINIAN CITIZENS OF ISRAEL and Palestinians in the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES, the former characterized by their 2009 election slogan “No loyalty, no citizenship.” It also encourages socioeconomic opportunities for new immigrants in conjunction with efforts to increase Jewish IMMIGRATION generally.

The two key principles held by the Yisrael Beitenu movement are the creation of a favorable socioeconomic environment for new immigrants to Israel and a hard line on the Palestinians and other Arab states. By giving in to PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA) president YASIR ARAFAT’s demands, argued Yisrael Beiteinu, the government would aggravate the threat of Palestinian activism by strengthening the Palestinians’ resolve to demand the right of return of Palestinian REFUGEE families to Israeli territory.

In the 1999 elections the new Yisrael Beitenu won four seats. On 1 February 2000 the party joined an alliance with the NATIONAL UNION PARTY, itself a coalition of right-wing parties led by BENYAMIN ELON. In the 2003 elections the joint list won seven seats, with Yisrael Beiteinu being given four of them. The alliance joined ARIEL SHARON’s government and Lieberman was made minister of transport; however, the party left the government on 6 June 2004, in opposition to the plan for ISRAEL’S UNILATERAL DISENGAGEMENT FROM GAZA. In 2005 the party received much attention when it published the “Lieberman Plan” as an alternative to plans for the Israeli unilateral disengagement from Gaza. Lieberman’s plan would transfer most Israeli Palestinian citizens and some small parcels of pre-1967 land to the WEST BANK in exchange for recognition of Israeli sovereignty in the larger settlements in the Occupied Territories, including Gush Katif (in Gaza). The plan would transfer to the PNA areas that include the “triangle” in central Israel—Taibe, Tira, and Umm el-Fahm. The plan was condemned by most members of the Knesset as racist and also caused a stir among Israeli Arabs, many of whom identify with the Palestinians as compatriots yet call for equal status in Israel as citizens and want to remain there. Yisrael Beitenu calls the Arab Israelis a Trojan horse for Jews in the state of Israel.

On 1 February 2006, shortly before the elections that year, the party split from National Union in order to run alone in the elections. The election results saw the party increase in strength to eleven seats. Although it remained outside EHUD OLMERT's government formed in May 2006, it joined the coalition in October 2006; however, in 2007, when LABOR PARTY leader Amir Peretz nominated a Muslim for the position of minister of science and technology, Lieberman condemned the nomination and called for Peretz's resignation, accusing him of harming Israel's security, while Peretz accused Yisrael Beiteinu of being a racist party. Yisrael Beiteinu's member of the Knesset Esterina Tartman referred to Peretz's decision as a "lethal blow to Zionism," adding that a Muslim's presence in the cabinet would damage "Israel's character as a Jewish state," and that "we need to destroy this affliction from within ourselves. God willing, God will come to our help." Tartman's comments were immediately condemned as racist by other Knesset members.

In January 2008 the party left the government of Ehud Olmert in protest against talks with the Palestinian National Authority, saying certain issues negotiated were not to be tolerated. Lieberman pulled out of the government and left his position as minister of strategic affairs. On 22 December 2008, Lieberman approved the party's list for the 2009 elections. The results of that election saw the party win fifteen seats, making it the third largest after the KADIMA PARTY (28) and Likud (27). In March 2009 Yisrael Beiteinu joined BENJAMIN NETANYAHU's coalition, and party leader Avigdor Lieberman became deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs, while the party received four other ministerial portfolios and one deputy minister post.

Yisrael Beiteinu came to international public attention again in May 2009, when it announced it would propose laws banning Israeli Arabs from marking the anniversary of the Palestinian Nakba, with a jail term of up to three years for violators. Arabs mark Nakba Day on 15 May every year. The New York Times reported that the proposed ban was widely viewed as a violation of Israel's free speech laws. The draft bill was changed by ministers to bar public money being spent in recognition of Nakba Day.

Bibliography

- Avnery, Uri. "Lovable Man." Znet. 9 November 2006. <http://www.zmag.org/znet>.
- Bannoura, Saed. Israeli Knesset Approves Preliminary Proposal to Revoke Citizenship of "Unpatriotic" Israelis. International Middle East Media Center. 10 January 2007. <http://www.imemc.org>.

- Bar'el, Zvi. "It's Not Racism, It's Just Patriotism." Ha'aretz. 29 October 2006.
- Casey, Vincent. "Middle East Profiles: National Union—Yisrael Beiteinu." Daily Telegraph (UK). 20 January 2005.
- Ha'aretz* Editor. "Lieberman Is a Strategic Threat." Ha'aretz. 24 October 2006.
- Jerusalem Post* Staff. "Israel Beiteinu Opposes Policy That Would Cut Settlements." Jerusalem Post. 22 April 2006.
- Levy, Gideon. "Lieberman to Power." Ha'aretz. 15 October 2006.
- McCarthy, Rory. "Outspoken Right-winger to Join Israeli Coalition." The Guardian. 24 October 2006.
- Mualem, Mazal. "PM's Circle: Lieberman Is Desirable Partner." Ha'aretz. 8 October 2006.
- Sandler, Shmuel. Israel at the Polls, 2003. London: Routledge, 2005.

Yom Kippur War

See OCTOBER WAR

Yosef, Rabbi Ovadia (1920–)

Rabbi Ovadia Yosef (Abdullah Youssef) is an Israeli Orthodox rabbi, Talmudic scholar, and recognized authority in Halakha (Jewish religious law). A former SEPHARDIC chief rabbi of the state of Israel, he is the founder and current spiritual leader of the SHAS political party in Israel. A major figure in HAREDI (ultra-Orthodox) Judaism and revered by his followers, he considers voting in elections the key to influencing the government of Israel.

Born in Baghdad, IRAQ, as part of the ancient community of Iraqi Jews, Yosef immigrated to JERUSALEM with his family in 1924. He received semicha (rabbinical ordination) at the age of twenty and served at various times as chief rabbi of EGYPT and of the cities of Tel Aviv and HAIFA. He lives in the Jerusalem neighborhood of Har Nof. Yosef is considered a scholarly genius with an encyclopedic memory, and many religious Jews view him as a grand Halakha arbiter, as well as one of the most important religious authorities for Sephardic and MIZRAHI Jews—that is, Jews of Spanish and Portuguese origin and of Middle Eastern origin, respectively. He has sought to gain equality or even superiority for Sephardic religious interpretations over ASHKENAZI (Jews of European origin) interpretations, which are dominant within Israel.

Rabbi Yosef is also one of the most powerful figures on Israel's political and cultural scene. He has devoted untold energy to politically organizing Sephardic and Mizrahi Jews. In these efforts, he has enjoyed a fair degree of success in changing Israeli society and the perception of much of its population regarding Jewish culture and worship by non-European Jews. As the spiritual leader of Shas, the major Haredi party, Yosef has an agenda much broader than mere politics. His goal is to shift Israeli culture and ideology as well as Jewish religious practices toward conservative Orthodoxy under Sephardic laws and practices.

In the past, Yosef and the Shas party supported the peace process, maintaining that giving land to the Palestinians could be justified because it would increase Israel's security and save Jewish lives. However, in the mid-1990s Yosef took Shas far to the right, and he is famous or infamous for the derogatory comments he has made about Palestinians. As the OSLO PROCESS stalled and relations between Israelis and Palestinians began to deteriorate, especially following the outbreak of the AL-AQSA INTIFADA, Rabbi Yosef and the party pulled "rightward," supporting the LIKUD PARTY. In April 2001, for example, he stated: "How can you make peace with a snake? They [the Palestinians] are all accursed, wicked ones. They are all haters of Israel. It says in the Gemara that the Holy One, Blessed be He, is sorry he created these sons of Ishmael. . . . It is forbidden to be merciful to them. You must give them missiles, with relish—and annihilate them. Evil ones, damnable ones." He has also referred to Arabs as enemies who have tried to hurt the Jewish people from the time of the exodus from Egypt to this day. He generated further controversy in 2000 when he declared that Prime Minister EHUD BARAK had "no sense" because he was trying to make peace with the Palestinians. "Will we make peace with a snake?" he asked.

Despite his overt racism, an article in the Hebrew daily newspaper Ma'ariv identified Yosef as the second most influential rabbi in Israel, second only to Rabbi Yosef Shalom Eliashiv. Mainly because he controls the Knesset members of Shas, he has considerable political strength. In the 1999 Knesset elections, Shas won seventeen seats, putting it in a position to be the pivotal factor in any coalition it chose to join. In 2003 the party dropped to eleven seats, and in 2006 received twelve seats.

Bibliography

- "Arabs Should 'Go to Hell,' Top Israeli Rabbi Says." NewsMax.com. 27 July 2001. <http://newsmax.com>.
 "Israel's Most Influential Rabbis." Ma'ariv. (Hebrew). Tel Aviv. 12 August 2004.
 Isseroff, Ami. "Hurricane Katrina and Ovadia Yosef's Racism—Enough Is Enough." MidEastWeb. 9 August 2005. www.mideastweb.org.
 "Rabbi Calls for Annihilation of Arabs." BBC News. 10 April 2001.

Young Guard

See INTIFADA ELITE

Youth Revenge Group

The Youth Revenge Group (Revenge Youth Organization, Munazzamat Shabab al-Tha'r) was the first Palestinian group associated with the MOVEMENT OF ARAB NATIONALISTS (MAN) to organize for ARMED STRUGGLE. In 1965 MAN leader GEORGE HABASH decided to begin preparations for guerrilla warfare against Israel and the conservative Arab regimes of JORDAN and EGYPT, and he directed part of MAN, the Palestinian Action Command, to rename itself Youth Revenge Group and begin recruitment in the GAZA STRIP. In 1967 MAN and another group affiliated with it—Heroes of the Return (Abtal al-Awda)—joined with the PALESTINE LIBERATION FRONT to form the POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE.

Bibliography

- Sayigh, Yasid. Armed Struggle and the Search for State: The Palestinian National Movement, 1949–1993. Oxford, UK: Clarendon Press, 1997.

---

Z

---

Al-Zabri, Mustafa (1938–2001)

Mustafa al-Zabri (Abu Ali Mustafa) was a Palestinian nationalist, a resistance leader, and an official of the POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE (PFLP). He was born in the WEST BANK village of Arraba, near JENIN, which came under Jordanian occupation in 1948. In 1955 al-Zabri joined the MOVEMENT OF ARAB NATIONALISTS (MAN); two years later JORDAN imprisoned him for five years for his role in guerrilla raids into Israel, which brought massive retaliation by Israel on Jordan. In 1963 he emerged as a militant pro-Palestinian and was an early proponent of MAN in Jordan from 1966 until he was rearrested that same year. Al-Zabri planned and executed numerous fidai'yyun attacks on Israel. In 1965 he received military training in EGYPT and had a key role in reestablishing MAN-PFLP's position in Jordan after the 1967 WAR. In September 1967 he infiltrated the West Bank to lead supporters there, heading the PFLP's operations and barely escaping an Israeli crackdown in January 1968. He became the PFLP's military commander in late 1968, and, after AHMAD JIBRIL split from the PFLP, he held responsibility for military affairs following the first PFLP politburo in February 1969. Al-Zabri was considered a "rightist" within the PFLP, opposing leftist mobilization for action based on communist ideology within the ranks.

In September 1970 al-Zabri played a decisive role in the hijacking of commercial airliners to Jordan's Dawson Field and only escaped from 'Ajlun in July 1971 because Jordan's intelligence chief, Muhammed Rasul al-Kaylani, escorted him to Jordan's SYRIAN border. Subsequently, al-Zabri adopted a clear leadership role, especially after April 1972, when he assumed control over the PFLP in Jordan and the West Bank. In 1981 GEORGE HABASH appointed him deputy secretary-general, and he led the PFLP's delegation to the Aden-Algiers talks in 1984, which attempted to reunify the fractured PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO). Beginning in 1987, al-Zabri was the PFLP's representative to the European Community. He strongly supported IRAQ's invasion of KUWAIT but was taken off the PLO EXECUTIVE COUNCIL in September 1991, allegedly to assume effective control of the PFLP after Habash suffered the first of two strokes. With Israel's permission, al-Zabri returned to the West Bank in 1999, intending to live there. When Habash stepped down in April 2000, he appointed al-Zabri head of the PFLP, and in July 2000 al-Zabri was elected secretary-general of the PFLP.

One year later, on 27 August 2001, Israel assassinated him for allegedly creating an infrastructure of PFLP supporters among the Palestinian residents of East JERUSALEM, though it did not accuse him of perpetrating or inciting violence. The killing caused outrage among Palestinians, tens of thousands of whom took to the streets for an emotional funeral. Many saw it as a sign that Israel was now targeting their political as well as military leaders. On 17 October 2001, two months after Israel assassinated al-Zabri, a small PFLP commando group killed REHAVAM ZE'EV, Israeli minister of tourism, in retaliation for al-Zabri's killing.

See also ADEN-ALGIERS ACCORD; TARGETED ASSASSINATIONS

Bibliography

Sayigh, Yezid. Armed Struggle and the Search for State: The Palestinian National Movement, 1949–1993. New York: Oxford University Press, 1997.

Zangwill, Israel (1864–1926)

Israel Zangwill, an Anglo-Jewish writer and political activist, was probably the best-known Jew in the English-speaking world at the start of the twentieth century. He was born in London to parents who had emigrated from Eastern Europe, and his family eventually settled in London's East End, where Zangwill attended and then taught in the Jews' Free School. He graduated from the University of London in 1884 with honors in English, French, and mental and moral science.

Zangwill began his career as a journalist and humor writer, contributing to Jerome K. Jerome's periodical The Idler as well as to Jewish periodicals.

His novel Children of the Ghetto, first published in 1892, made him a literary celebrity. It was followed by the collections Ghetto Tragedies (1893 and 1899), Dreamers of the Ghetto (1898), and Ghetto Comedies (1907), plus the comic novel The King of Schnorrers (1894), as well as several novels and many stories not specifically on Jewish themes. Additionally, throughout the 1890s, Zangwill was a literary and social critic for British and US magazines.

Zangwill was an early supporter of ZIONISM and an insistent proponent of TRANSFER of Palestinians to other Arab states. He was a leading member of the Order of Ancient Maccabees, a Zionist society already established in 1891, before THEODOR HERZL visited London in 1895. The father of modern political Zionism met with Zangwill, who arranged for Herzl to address the leaders of Anglo Jewry. In April 1897 he was a member of a group of English Jews who went on a pilgrimage to Palestine. In the course of this visit, Zangwill had the opportunity to see the Arab situation firsthand. In one of his meetings with ELIEZER BEN-YEHUDAH, Zangwill raised the question of what to do about the Arabs but was not happy with Ben-Yehudah's answer that they are a people the Israelis could live with in peace. However, it took Zangwill a few years to formulate his own solution to the Arab question.

In the December 1904 issue of the American Jewish newspaper The Maccabean, Zangwill put forward his proposal for the transfer of Arabs from Palestine in an article entitled "Zionism and England's Offer": "There is, however, a difficulty from which the Zionist dares not avert his eyes, though he rarely likes to face it. Palestine proper has already its inhabitants. . . . So we must be prepared either to drive out by the sword the tribes in possession as our forefathers did, or to grapple with the problem of a large alien population, mostly Mohammedan and accustomed for centuries to despise us." He also wrote that the Zionists must extend their "idea of Palestine" at least to the Euphrates and the border of EGYPT.

After the seventh WORLD ZIONIST CONGRESS of 1905 rejected the idea of establishing a Jewish state in Uganda, Zangwill founded the Jewish Territorial Organization (JTO), which was dedicated to the establishment of a Jewish autonomous settlement in any part of the world. Under Zangwill, the JTO considered territories in North and East Africa, Australia, Mexico, Canada, and elsewhere. He thus lost interest in Palestine until the end of World War I, when he returned to the Zionist fold and accordingly returned to his proposal, as summed up in the words of Joseph Nedava: "The Arabs of Palestine must vacate the land designated to be the Jewish State." Following the issuance of the BALFOUR DECLARATION the JTO fell into decline, and in 1925 it was officially dissolved. Zangwill then supported Zionist efforts in Palestine, calling for a radical approach with regard to both the demand for the early establishment of a Jewish state and the solution of the Palestinian question.

In a lecture delivered to the Fabian Society in December 1915, Zangwill broached his plan for the transfer of the Arabs from Palestine. "Unless therefore, the Arabs would trek into Arabia, or could be peacefully expropriated, any Government set up on a constitutional democratic basis would result, not in a Jewish autonomy but in an Arab autonomy." A few years later, he wrote that if the Jewish national home were "to be built up without an Arab trek, it can only be by methods strictly unconstitutional." In the summer of 1916, Zangwill met near London with VLADIMIR JABOTINSKY, the founder of Revisionist Zionism. Over twenty years later, in 1939, Jabotinsky wrote an account of his "Conversation with Zangwill," which mainly dealt with Zangwill's proposals for the Arabs of Palestine. Jabotinsky did not agree with Zangwill about transfer, and he was offended at Zangwill's comment that "to allow such a situation in our Jewish state [allowing the Palestinians to remain] would be like gouging out our eyes with our hands. If we receive Palestine, the Arabs will have to 'trek.'" (The reference to the word trek is related to the "Great Trek" made by the Boers of South Africa: Zangwill evidently had such a mental image of the Palestinians leaving Palestine.)

In an article written a few months before the publication of the Balfour Declaration, in which the British promised Zionists a national home in Palestine, Zangwill again tried to grapple with the Arab problem in Palestine. "The country holds 600,000 Arabs," he wrote, "and unfortunately the soil is occupied by the Arabs." He considered that the "only solution of this difficulty lies in the consideration that Palestine is not so much occupied by the Arabs as over-run by them. . . . We cannot allow the Arabs to block so valuable a piece of historic reconstruction. . . . And therefore we must greatly persuade them to 'trek.' After all, they have all Arabia with its million square miles—not to mention the vast new area freed from the Turks between SYRIA and Mesopotamia—and Israel has not a square inch." Finally, he wrote that the Arabs should be encouraged "to fold their tents" and "silently steal away."

In one of his books, Zangwill stated categorically that his "suggestion of amicable race-redistribution or a voluntary trek" was the only method of creating a Jewish state in Palestine. "If it is as impracticable as is generally alleged, then the whole Zionist project is a chimera." Referring in a letter to historic precedents in the universal migrations of primitive people, Zangwill added that the "Arab semi-nomadic fellah had created nothing in Palestine to attach him to the soil." Hence, there was "no Arab people living in intimate fusion with the country, utilizing its resources and stamping it with a characteristic impress: there is at best an Arab encampment." He recommended again that the Arab carry "his primitive plough to his own new and vast Arabian kingdom." Thus, he argued, the Arabs would be masters in their own house and in a state of peace rather than in perpetual friction with the Jews of Palestine.

In a response to a critic, journalist and diplomat Lucien Wolf, Zangwill wrote that, "if, as you say, the Arabs have been in Palestine 2000 years, then it is high time they trekked, like the Boers from Cape Colony." In reply to Zangwill's letter, Wolf wrote, "If the so-called Arabs were really Arabs—that is, natives of Arabia—and if the Jews were really Palestinians—that is indigenes of Palestine—there might be something to be said for your argument on the crazy basis of Territorial Nationality, which is the root curse of all our policies. But the Arabs are not Arabs. They are only the Moslemized descendants of the indigenous Canaanites, and hence they are in their rightful homeland which, however poor and feckless they may be, is their own. This is so well established an anthropological fact that you will find it referred to as beyond dispute in any good encyclopedic article on Palestine."

Zangwill published numerous additional articles and correspondence in the Jewish Chronicle and elsewhere on the subject. In 1919 he wrote a piece in the Open Forum in which he argued that the Jews' claim to Palestine did not rest "merely on history" but also on the fact that, while they were the only people in the world without a national home, Palestine was at that time a derelict country. He then continued with his oft-repeated statement that the presence of 600,000 Arabs was the "gravest obstacle to the rise of the Jewish State." These Arabs had "created nothing there except trouble for the Jewish colonies, and should be gradually and amicably transplanted to the Arab Kingdom, which is to be re-established next door [in Arabia], and with which the Jewish State would cordially cooperate." Zangwill considered that race redistribution was "in the interests of general world happiness" and that it was one of the functions of the League of Nations.

In October 1923, at the invitation of the AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS, Zangwill delivered a lecture at Carnegie Hall in New York. The audience included nearly 4,000 people at the hall, and the lecture was broadcast by radio throughout the UNITED STATES and to England. In this talk, which the New York Times headlined "Zangwill Calls Political Zionism a Vanished Hope," he declared that the Jews must forego their political hopes in Palestine or start a conflagration. In the course of this lecture, he commented that he would "always remain persuaded that a Jewish State was possible at the moment when the Arab was a defeated enemy, liberated from the Turk and glad enough to take on any political impress [including] . . . a policy of racial redistribution such as is now in operation between the Greeks and the Turks." An editorial in the New York Jewish weekly The New Palestine pointed out that this address made headlines on the following day all over the United States and that there was a "volley of protests and denunciations" against his general theme that Jews must give up their hopes regarding Palestine, but no criticism of his comments about the Arabs.

In the period following the establishment of the BRITISH MANDATE over Palestine, the British expressed strong opposition to the transfer of Arabs from Palestine. Toward the end of 1919, Winston Churchill had said, "There are the Jews, whom we are pledged to introduce into Palestine, and who take it for granted that the local population will be cleared out to suit their convenience," but London was not going to accommodate them. Just over a year or so later, AARON AARONSOHN (one of the founders of the secret NILI organization), who had earlier been a critic of Zangwill's ideas, suggested a transfer proposal for the Arabs. According to William Bullitt, a member of the US delegation to the 1919 Paris Peace Conference, Aaronsohn proposed that, because “Palestine was to be turned into a Jewish state, the Arabs of Palestine should be offered land in IRAQ—more fertile than their holdings in Palestine—in the hope of persuading large numbers of Arabs to emigrate to Iraq.” It took some fifteen years for the majority of the mainstream Zionist leaders to become enthusiastic supporters of transfer. Zangwill had been a decade and a half ahead of his time.

See also TRANSFER AND DISPLACEMENT; TRANSFER COMMITTEE; WAR, 1948; YOSEF WEITZ

Bibliography

- Alsberg, Paul. The Arab Question in the Policy of the Zionist Executive before the First World War. (Hebrew). Jerusalem: Shivat Tzion, 1955–1956.
- Faris, Hani. “Israel Zangwill’s Challenge to Zionism.” Journal of Palestine Studies. 4:3 (1975).
- Flapan, Simha. Zionism and the Palestinians. New York: Barnes and Noble Books, 1979.
- Gorny, Yosef. Zionism and the Arabs, 1882–1948: A Study of Ideology. Oxford, UK: Clarendon Press, 1987.
- Hirst, David. The Gun and the Olive Branch: The Roots of Violence in the Middle East, 2nd rev. ed. New York: Nation Books, 2003.
- Leftwich, Joseph, Israel Zangwill, and T. Yoseloff. Israel Zangwill: Ghetto Tragedies: The Works of Israel Zangwill, 14 vols. London: Classic Books, 1957.
- Masalha, Nur. Expulsion of the Palestinians: The Concept of “Transfer” in Zionist Political Thought, 1882–1948. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestinian Studies, 1992.
- Morris, Benny. “Operation Dani and the Palestinian Exodus from Lydda and Ramle in 1948.” Middle East Journal. 40:1 (1986).
- . Righteous Victims: A History of the Zionist-Arab Conflict, 1881–2001. New York: Vintage, 2001.
- Nedava, Joseph. Trotsky and the Jews. New York: Random House, 1972.
- Simons, Rabbi Chaim. “A Historical Survey of Proposals to Transfer Arabs from Palestine, 1895–1947.” The Collected Writings of Rabbi Dr. Chaim Simons. 2003. www.geocities.com/CapitolHill/Senate/7854.
- Teveth, Shabtai. Ben-Gurion and the Palestinian Arabs: From Peace to War. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1985.
- . The Evolution of “Transfer” in Zionist Thinking. Tel Aviv: Moshe Dayan Center for Middle Eastern and African Studies, Shiloah Institute, Tel Aviv University, 1989.
- Wohlgelemler, Maurice. Israel Zangwill: A Study. New York: Columbia University Press, 1965.
- Zangwill, Israel. Speeches, Articles, and Letters. London: Soncino Press, 1937.
- . Speeches, Articles, and Letters of Israel Zangwill: The Rise of Jewish Nationalism and the Middle East. New York: Hyperion, 1976 [1965].

Zayyad, Tawfiq (1929–1994)

Tawfiq Zayyad was a poet, writer, politician, member of the RAKAH PARTY, member of the Knesset, and mayor of NAZARETH. Born in Nazareth, he remained there after the 1948 WAR and became an Israeli citizen. Zayyad was educated in MOSCOW. In 1975 he was elected mayor of Nazareth and was reelected until his death. In 1976 he was elected to the Knesset on the Communist Party slate of Rakah and was repeatedly reelected until his resignation in 1991. He was also a key figure in the Democratic Front for Peace and Equality.

Zayyad’s poetry has strong rhetorical lyricism and reflects an uncompromising streak of Palestinian Arab nationalism. He published one collection of Palestinian folk poetry and many other poems. His most well-known poems include “Fire of the Magi,” “The Impossible,” “Here We Will Stay,” and “On the Trunk of an Olive Tree.” Typical of his style is the first stanza of “Here We Will Stay”: “As though we were twenty impossibilities / In LYDDA, in RAMLA, in Galilee / We shall remain. / Like a wall upon your chest, / And in your throat / Like a shard of glass, / A cactus thorn. / And in your eyes / A sandstorm.” Israel’s response to this kind of poetry was severe. Zayyad was repeatedly placed under town arrest for incitement.

In his poetry and in every other aspect of his life, Zayyad never let his Arab constituents forget the REFUGEES from the 1948 War. He had a monument constructed in Nazareth to those who were expelled from Palestine or had fled, which he hoped would be a permanent reminder of those Palestinians. When he first ran for mayor of Nazareth in 1975, Israeli government officials tried to stop his election. Part of Israel’s concern stemmed from the fact that Zayyad was in the vanguard of forming a “front” in Israel—the Democratic Front for Peace and Equality—a coalition of Rakah, the Black Panthers (a group of MIZRAHI JEWS), and independent Arab and Jewish figures. The front stood for peace and an end to Israeli OCCUPATION of Palestinian lands captured in 1967; it opposed annexation and confiscation of Palestinian LAND and fought racism in Israel. With these positions, it challenged the other major political parties in Israel.

Israeli officials offered the people of Nazareth the return of some land if Zayyad was not elected and made veiled threats against his life. Moshe Barain, the Israeli minister of the interior, said, "The people of Nazareth must not imagine that the state of Israel would allow the town administration to fall into the hands of an admitted agent of [YASIR] ARAFAT." Zayyad was a supporter of the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO), but not an "agent" of Arafat; the PLO at that point did not recognize the Communist Party. The Israeli government felt so threatened by the prospect of Zayyad becoming mayor that it warned the residents of Nazareth that if they elected him, they would lose all government assistance to their community. At this time, in the mid-1970s, Nazareth had no industries, no public library, and no social services. A majority of its inhabitants, like those of the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES, left their town every day to work in menial jobs in Israeli industry. From their windows many could see land they once farmed. Now, as "non-Jews," they could not live, rent, or even be employed on land that had belonged to their families for generations. They were ready to resist, and so they voted Zayyad into office.

When the government did, in fact, suspend its assistance after Zayyad was elected, he responded by creating a summer work camp in Nazareth that has, to this day, annually brought thousands of young people from around the world to perform community service and implement public works projects for the city. In an effort to bring some prosperity to Nazareth in the context of the third millennium of Christianity in 2000, Zayyad was successful in getting the VATICAN to choose Nazareth as one of three sites for the celebration. Just before his death, Zayyad met with Pope John Paul II to discuss the plan, which included a promise of substantial funds to build hotels, to restore the old Nazareth market, and to rebuild "Mary's Fountain" and other holy sites in Nazareth. He died in an automobile accident when returning to Nazareth from a meeting with PLO chairman Arafat in JERICHO.

See also HIGH FOLLOW-UP COMMITTEE AND THE MADA MANIFESTO; NATZERAT ILLIT AND NAZARETH; NAZARETH; NAZARETH: BASILICA OF THE ANNUNCIATION; PALESTINIAN CITIZENS OF ISRAEL; PALESTINIAN POETRY

Bibliography

Ghanem, A. The Palestinian-Arab Minority in Israel: A Political Study. Albany, NY: SUNY University Press, 2001.

- . "The Palestinian Minority in Israel: The Challenge of the Jewish State and Its Implications." Third World Quarterly. 21:1 (2000).
- . "State and Minority in Israel: The Case of the Ethnic State and the Predicament of Its Minority." Ethnic and Racial Studies. 21:3 (1998).
- Ghanem, A., N. Rouhana, and O. Yiftachel. "Questioning 'Ethnic Democracy.'" Israel Studies. 3:2 (1999).
- Al-Haj, M., and H. Rosenfeld. Arab Local Government in Israel. Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1990.
- Rabinowitz, Dan, and Khawla Abu-Baker. Coffins on Our Shoulders: The Experience of the Palestinian Citizen of Israel. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2005.
- Reitter, I., and R. Aharoni. The Political Life of the Arabs in Israel. (Hebrew). Beit Berl: Center for the Study of Arab Society, 1992.
- Rekheiss, E. The Arab Minority in Israel: Between Communism and Arab Nationalism. (Hebrew). Tel Aviv, Israel: The Dayan Center, Tel Aviv University, 1993.
- Rouhana, N., and A. Ghanem. "The Crisis of Minorities in Ethnic States: The Case of the Palestinian Citizens in Israel." International Journal of Middle East Studies. 30:3 (1998).
- . "The Democratization of a Traditional Minority in an Ethnic Democracy: The Palestinians in Israel." In Democracy, Peace, and the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict. Edited by E. Kaufman, S. Abed, and R. Rothstein. Boulder, CO: Lynne Rienner Publishers, 1993.
- Sultany, N. Israel and the Palestinian Minority. Haifa, Mada al-Carmel, Israel: The Arab Center for Applied Social Research, 2004.
- Yiftachel, O., and A. Ghanem. "Understanding 'Ethno-cratic' Regimes: The Politics of Seizing Contested Territories." Political Geography. 23:6 (2004).

Ze'evi, Rehavam (1926–2001)

Rehavam Ze'evi, known as Gandhi, was an Israeli soldier and a politician. Born in 1926 in JERUSALEM, he started his career as an army officer in the PALMAH, the elite Zionist fighting force founded during the BRITISH MANDATE, and held the rank of major general when he retired in 1974. During the early 1970s, Ze'evi was military governor of the WEST BANK. He was the head of the MOLEDET PARTY and served in the Knesset from 1988 until his death, variously serving on the Foreign Affairs and Defense, Education and Culture, and State Control committees.

Ze'evi was one of the most extremist figures on the Israeli political scene. He vociferously advocated the TRANSFER of Palestinians from the Israeli-occupied West Bank and GAZA STRIP to the Arab nations of the region. This policy, he argued, would “cure [Israel’s] DEMOGRAPHIC ailment”—that the Arab population in Israel would otherwise become larger than the Jewish one. Ze’evi’s fanaticism was evident in numerous public pronouncements, as when he condemned Palestinians working illegally in Israel as “lice” and a “cancer.” He further said, “We should get rid of the ones who are not Israeli citizens the same way you get rid of lice.” On various occasions he called US president GEORGE H. W. BUSH an “anti-Semite and a liar,” PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION chairman YASIR ARAFAT a “viper” and a “war criminal,” and former Israeli prime minister MENAHEM BEGIN “insane” for agreeing to the CAMP DAVID ACCORDS (1979) with EGYPT.

In March 2001 Ze’evi vowed to quell the Palestinians’ Second INTIFADA by finding the Palestinians’ “weak spots and pressing them until they come to us on all fours begging for a ceasefire.” Ze’evi was an ardent supporter of Israel’s strategy of TARGETED ASSASSINATIONS against Palestinians. He told an interviewer, “Each one eliminated is one less terrorist for us to fight.” Ze’evi was a fierce advocate of retaining the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES and extending the Jewish SETTLEMENT project. He saw the settlers as pioneers in the reclamation of biblically ordained “Eretz Yisrael,” although he was not a particularly observant Jew.

In 1988 Ze’evi joined YITZHAK SHAMIR’s government, serving from February 1991 through January 1992, whereupon he resigned in protest over the peace talks at the MADRID CONFERENCE (1991). Moledet won three seats in the Knesset in 1992 and went into opposition. He returned briefly to shore up the beleaguered government of BENJAMIN NETANYAHU in 1998. In 1999 his Moledet movement united with HERUT and TEKUMA into a single faction, the NATIONAL UNION PARTY. Following the election of Prime Minister ARIEL SHARON in February 2001, Ze’evi joined the governing coalition and was made the minister of tourism on 7 March 2001. On 14 October Ze’evi declared that his party would quit the government following the withdrawal of the ISRAEL DEFENSE FORCES from the Abu-Sneina neighborhood in HEBRON, condemning also Sharon’s agreement to a Palestinian state and his alleged “sabotaging” of the Israeli military.

Ze’evi died on 17 October 2001 in an assassination by the POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE, in retaliation for Israel’s assassination of the front’s leader, MUSTAFA AL-ZABRI. Despite his radical views, Ze’evi was squarely within the Israeli political establishment. A year after his death, the Israeli government undertook a campaign to establish Ze’evi’s heritage as a hero among Israeli icons. Respected opinion polls demonstrated that an estimated 20 to 30 percent of Israelis supported his call for transfer or mass expulsion of Palestinians. The government encouraged all schools to commemorate the date of his death by offering lessons about his “heritage.” Not all schools were willing to do so, and something of a national controversy emerged. Those promoting Ze’evi’s legacy controlled the Ministry of Education and other government institutions and identified themselves with a Jewish nationalism of territorial expansion and power. Those rejecting his ascent to hero status identified themselves with territorial compromise with the Palestinians and humanistic values. Whatever the outcome of the debate over Rehavam Ze’evi’s place in Israeli history, it will reveal much about the future direction of Israel.

See also ANTI-SEMITISM; DEMOGRAPHY; TERRORISM

Bibliography

- BBC. “Rehavam Ze’evi.” BBC News. 17 October 2001.
- Beres, Louis Rene. “The Murder of ‘Gandhi’ and the Assassination of Terrorists.” Midstream. 48:1 (January 2002).
- Caspi, Arie. “The Last Days of Democracy.” Ha’aretz. n.d. www.haaretz.com/hasen/pages/ShArt.jhtml?itemNo=255457&contrassID=2&subContrassID=14&sbSubContrassID=0&listSrc=Y.
- Goldenberg, Suzanne. “Far-Right Leader Who Fell Victim to His Own Ideas.” The Guardian (London). 18 October 2001.
- Joffe, Lawrence. “Rehavam Ze’evi.” The Guardian. 18 October 2001.
- Lefkovits, Etgar. “Rehavam Ze’evi Assassinated: PFLP Claims Responsibility for Jerusalem Hotel Shooting.” Jerusalem Post. 18 October 2001.
- Lynfield, Ben. “Israel Mints Ultrationalist Hero.” Christian Science Monitor. 10 October 2002.
- Olmert, Ehud. Address by Prime Minister Olmert in Memory of Rehavam Ze’evi. Prime Minister’s Office. 22 October 2006.
- Steinberg, Jessica. “Slain Rehavam Ze’evi Was Known as an Ultra-Hawk.” Jewish Telegraphic Agency. 19 October 2001.

Zeidan, Muhammad Ahmad Fahd Abbas (1948–2004)

Muhammad Ahmad Fahd Abbas Zeidan (also known as Abu al-Abbas, Muhammad Abbas, and Abul Abbas) was head of the PALESTINE LIBERA-

TION FRONT (PLF), an Iraqi-backed faction within the umbrella of the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION (PLO) that carried out the ACHILLE LAURO hijacking in 1985. Born near HAIFA, Palestine, Zeidan's family was dispossessed in the 1948 WAR and settled in the Yarmuk REFUGEE camp near Damascus, SYRIA. He studied English and Arabic literature at Damascus University.

In 1968 Zeidan joined the POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE, later leaving it to join the POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE—GENERAL COMMAND (PFLP—GC) under AHMAD JIBRIL. In 1977, major disagreements arose among the PFLP—GC, the PLO, and other Palestinian factions based in LEBANON. Zeidan, who opposed Syrian involvement in the Lebanese civil war and the pro-Syrian stance of the PFLP—GC, left Jibril's faction and created the PLF. After Israel's 1982 LEBANON WAR, and against the background of the rift in the PLO and the 1983 pro-Syrian FATAH UPRISING, the PLF split into three factions: pro-Syrian, pro-Iraqi, and pro-PLO. The pro-PLO group was led by Zeidan, joined the Arafat camp, and subsequently came under the patronage of FATAH and PLO chairman YASIR ARAFAT. In 1982 the PLF moved its headquarters to TUNIS, and in 1984 Zeidan was elected to the PLO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, while the PLF held seats in the PALESTINE NATIONAL COUNCIL, the PLO's legislative body. Zeidan and the PLF consistently supported Arafat's peace initiatives, including the TWO-STATE SOLUTION and negotiations with Israel. Nevertheless, the PLF, from its inception and continuing after 1982, was fundamentally a guerrilla organization that carried out raids—mostly failures—against Israel.

The most prominent operation perpetrated after 1982 was the hijacking of the Achille Lauro passenger liner, in which one passenger was killed. Despite intense US pressure, Arafat and the PLO leadership declined to condemn Zeidan for the hijacking, and Washington retaliated by terminating the low-level US-PLO DIALOGUE it had begun in December 1988. IRAQ president Saddam Husayn gave Zeidan asylum, and reportedly, Zeidan's PLF troops were trained in Husayn's hometown in Tikrit at bases belonging to the now-dissolved Republican Guard. In 1993 Zeidan laid down his arms when Arafat signed the OSLO ACCORDS. In an interview with CNN, he said the time of ARMED STRUGGLE was over and that it was time to rebuild Palestine with Arafat. After the 9/11 attacks on Washington and New York, he gave an interview in the New York Times condemning TERRORISM and Osama bin Laden. In 1996 he returned to Palestine to attend the Palestine National Council meeting convened in the GAZA STRIP to amend the PALESTINE NATIONAL CHARTER and was welcomed by Arafat. During his stay in Gaza, as part of his effort to make peace with the past, Zeidan made a public apology for the Achille Lauro hijacking and the murder of passenger Leon Klinghoffer, and he openly supported the peace process and negotiations between Palestinians and Israel. The UNITED STATES government and the Klinghoffer family, however, rejected the apology; the family insisted that he be brought to justice, despite the large financial settlement it had earlier accepted from the PLO.

Zeidan last visited the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES in August 2000, one month before the INTIFADA broke out. Arafat advised him not to return, fearing that the Israelis would either kill him, as they did many members of the resistance, or place him under house arrest (as was the case with Arafat, who was locked in his office in Ramallah beginning in December 2001). On 15 April 2003, US troops arrested Zeidan in Baghdad, Iraq, after defeating Husayn. The US Army accused him of involvement in acts of past terror and pledged to bring him to court, despite strong opposition in the Occupied Territories and the Arab world. Eventually the United States offered to extradite him to Italy, where he could be tried for the 1985 hijacking, but Italy declined to take him. The Italian government feared that detaining Zeidan or bringing him to court in Italy would provoke terrorist attacks against Italian targets. Instead, he was left sitting in a Baghdad jail while the United States decided what to do with him. On 9 March 2004 Zeidan died in US custody of heart problems, according to US officials, although there are numerous doubts and suspicions about this claim.

Bibliography

Sayigh, Yezid. Armed Struggle and the Search for State: The Palestinian National Movement, 1949–1933. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1997.

Zinni Plan, 2002

Anthony Zinni served as a general in the UNITED STATES Marine Corps and as commander of the US Central Command (1997–2000), which oversaw theater operations for US armed forces in the Middle East. At the request of President GEORGE W. BUSH, he produced a plan in 2002 for a truce between Palestinians and Israelis during the Second Intifada. Previously, he had commanded forces in Vietnam and Somalia as well as humanitarian relief operations in Kurdish areas of IRAQ in the aftermath of the 1991 GULF WAR. Following his retirement, he became one of the more outspoken critics among former high-ranking US military officers of the US war in Iraq.

In November 2001, to follow up on the failed cease-fire between Israel and the PALESTINIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY (PNA) arranged by CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY director GEORGE TENET, President Bush dispatched the recently retired Zinni, who had only limited experience in diplomacy, as his special Middle East envoy. His mission was solely to establish a cease-fire between Israelis and Palestinians, not to restart negotiations.

Zinni's plan for a truce, presented on 26 March 2002, strayed from Tenet's proposals in putting the onus of responsibility on the Palestinian side. For example, he proposed that Palestinians "cease" violent activities, while asking the Israelis to "commit to cease." This new US proposal dropped the Tenet Plan's requirement that Israel stop its attacks on "innocent civilian targets" and the plan's restrictions against "proactive" Israeli military operations. Instead, Zinni's proposal permitted Israel to attack PNA buildings, including prisons, "in self-defense to an imminent terrorist attack."

In several other areas regarding the enforcement of a cease-fire, mutual obligations put forward in the Tenet Plan became unilateral Palestinian responsibilities under Zinni's plan. Israeli obligations regarding withdrawal from Palestinian areas reoccupied since September 2000 and ending CLOSURE of Palestinian population centers were reworded so that implementation was conditional upon Israel's interpretation of Palestinian compliance. In addition, PNA obligations regarding the suppression of armed Palestinian groups were strengthened, while Israeli obligations regarding curbing violence by armed settler groups were weakened. The Palestinians rejected such revisions from the Tenet Plan, while the Israeli government accepted the new proposals with reservations. A cease-fire never materialized.

Bibliography

Bennet, James. "US Envoy Meets Arafat as Israel Steps Up Sweep." New York Times. 6 April 2002.

Bitterlemons.com. Second U.S. "Joint Goals" Proposal (the "Zinni Paper"), Presented March 26, 2002. n.d. www.bitterlemons.org/docs/zinni.html.

Brinkley, Joel, with Todd S. Purdum. "Palestinian Goal of Statehood vs. Israeli Aim of Ceasefire." New York Times. 31 March 2002.

Chopra, Jarat. "Third Party Monitoring in the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict." Journal of Humanitarian Assistance (Ramallah, West Bank). 27 March 2002.

Whitaker, Brian. "Truce Plan Let Israel Continue Attacks: Furious Palestinians Leak 'One-Sided' US Envoy Draft." The Guardian (London). 4 April 2002.

—Stephen Zunes

Zionism

From its emergence as a coherent political project at the very end of the nineteenth century, Zionism sought to unify and mobilize Jews around a nationalist program whose chief goal was the creation in Palestine of an independent Jewish state in which most of the world's Jews would eventually settle. Like other nationalist movements, however, Zionism has never been monolithic but has encompassed a range of distinct political and ideological currents and factions that have often disagreed (sometimes bitterly) over how to pursue Zionism's aims; the social, economic, and cultural character of the projected Jewish state; relations with Palestine's indigenous Arab population; and much else.

Palestinians have regarded Zionism (and the state of Israel, which it brought into being) as essentially a colonial-settler enterprise, whose goal or at least inevitable result was to dispossess them of their ancestral homeland and subordinate or even physically displace them; in fact, these have been the chief consequences of the Zionist project for the Palestinians. Zionists, however, have focused not on the actual consequences of their project for the Palestinians but on their own avowedly benign intentions and on the overriding need (as they see it) to save the Jewish people through the creation of a Jewish state in Palestine, to which they deem Jews to have an exclusive, or at least superior, claim. To adequately understand Zionism as a historical phenomenon and to grasp the specificities, contradictions, and ironies of this project, it is therefore necessary to consider both Zionist discourse and Zionist practice, as well as to explore how intentions and ideologies translated, within specific historical conjunctures, into actual outcomes for the Palestinians and other Arabs but also for Jews.

Broadly speaking, Zionism can be seen as one of the many nationalist movements that sprang up in Europe in the course of the nineteenth century. At the same time, the fact that European Jews did not live in a compact mass, on a more or less defined territory within which they constituted the majority population, made Zionism different from other contemporary European nationalisms. It had to be a nationalist movement focused not on securing an independent nation-state for the Jews within Europe, where most of them actually lived—an obvious impossibility—but on organizing migration to and colonization of some territory outside Europe where the Jews could hope to secure a majority and eventually a state of their own. This reality, as well as Jewish immigrants' encounter in Palestine with that land's indigenous Arab population, profoundly shaped the Zionist project (and the state it created) and gave it much of its specificity.

Historical Origins of Zionism

From the perspective of modern Jewish history, Zionism was only one of several contending solutions proposed to address what in the late nineteenth century was often referred to as Europe's "Jewish problem": what many saw as the apparent failure (or even futility) of efforts to eradicate ANTI-SEMITISM and secure acceptance, integration, and equality for the Jews of Europe. In the medieval and early modern periods, Jews in Christian Europe were frequently subjected to segregation, discrimination, and persecution. However, from the French Revolution onward, Jews in much of Western and Central Europe were gradually granted equal legal status and citizenship rights, and social anti-Semitism seemed to be on the decline. The way thus appeared to be open for these Jews to integrate themselves on an equal basis into the societies in which they lived.

This process of "emancipation" did not extend, however, to most of Eastern Europe. In 1880, of the world's eight million Jews, 90 percent lived in Europe, with 75 percent of those in Eastern Europe—the great majority within the tsarist Russian empire. The Jews under tsarist rule (most of them impoverished) were generally compelled to live in certain provinces along Russia's western border, known as the PALE OF SETTLEMENT, forbidden to reside in many cities and towns even within the Pale, and subjected to various forms of official discrimination and harassment. The path of social, cultural, and political integration that emancipation had opened to many Jews in Western and Central Europe was thus not available to any significant number of Russian Jews. However, in the second half of the nineteenth century, Russian Jews (like the Jews of Central and Western Europe earlier) were affected by the cultural movement known as the HASKALAH (the Jewish "enlightenment"). This movement challenged Jewish religious tradition and (along with rapid urbanization, rising levels of education, and the spread of newspapers and book publishing) fostered the emergence of new forms of secular Jewish identity that defined the Jews as an ethnic or national group rather than as a religious community. In particular, the mid-nineteenth century witnessed the flourishing of a new secular culture in Yiddish, the mother tongue of virtually all Jews in the Pale (and most Jews elsewhere in Eastern Europe), and somewhat later (and on a smaller scale) a literary revival in Hebrew, a language that had hitherto been used largely for religious purposes.

The situation of the Jewish masses in Russia was thus characterized by both poverty (exacerbated by rapid demographic growth) and virulent anti-Semitism, both official and popular. Their condition worsened with the outbreak of a wave of pogroms (mob attacks on Jews) in 1871, and then on a much wider scale in 1881–1884 after the assassination of the relatively liberal Tsar Alexander II. The extent and duration of that second wave of violence, and the fact that the Russian authorities tolerated or even encouraged it, extinguished any hope among Jews that the tsarist regime would evolve in a more liberal direction. And although it was the crisis of Eastern European Jewry that seemed most acute, in the last two decades of the nineteenth century new manifestations of anti-Semitism in Western and Central Europe also began to undermine the confidence of many apparently well-integrated and middle-class Jews. They became less able to take for granted that the spread of education and social progress would secure their status as full and equal citizens of their native lands.

Many different analyses of and proposed remedies for the Jewish problem in its late nineteenth-century manifestations were formulated and debated. In the east, a great many Jews simply "voted with their feet" in the hope of escaping poverty and oppression and of finding tolerance and opportunity. Several million Jews from Eastern Europe joined the vast 1880–1924 wave of impoverished European Christian peasants and workers who left their homelands emigrating mainly to the UNITED STATES but also, in smaller numbers, to Western Europe, Latin America, and South Africa. Estimates show that in the first quarter of the twentieth century alone—before the United States and other Western countries sharply curtailed IMMIGRATION from Eastern and Southern Europe—about one-fifth of all European Jews migrated overseas.

Of the majority who remained, a great many, especially in the east, held fast to religious tradition, following the lead of their rabbis who generally rejected and resisted the new secular ideas and modes of life that were undermining the old ways (and their own status as communal leaders). But in the same period many secularized Jews in Russia rebelled against both their own communal elites and the double burden of class and ethnic oppression from which the Jews of tsarist Russia suffered. Substantial numbers joined clandestine parties and movements seeking to overthrow the tsarist autocracy and establish a democratic and socialist Russia purged of anti-Semitism. Of these, some joined all-Russian revolutionary socialist parties, in whose leadership Jews came to play a disproportionately large role. Others were attracted to the Jewish-socialist Bund, founded in 1897 to organize and mobilize Jewish workers as an independent component of the Russian social democratic movement.

Proto-Zionism in Eastern Europe

Others, though initially a small minority, came in this same period to embrace a very different solution to the crisis that seemed to be engulfing the Jews, especially in Eastern Europe. In the nineteenth century, the notion that the nation (usually distinguished by its unique language) was the key unit into which humanity was naturally divided spread widely across Europe and beyond. This notion informed struggles by a growing number of peoples to throw off what now came to be perceived as alien (and therefore illegitimate) rule and secure unified and independent nation-states of their own. Jews could not ignore the struggles for national independence and unification waged in the course of that century by Greeks, Serbs, Poles, Italians, Hungarians, Germans, and other European peoples, especially as the creation of new polities based on nationality often raised the question of whether their indigenous Jewish minorities would be accepted as part of the new “national family.” In this context, and given the spread in this same period of new secular and ethnic forms of Jewish identity, it is entirely unsurprising that some Jews began to reimagine Jewish identity in a new national sense and to argue that the Jewish problem could only be resolved through the creation (or restoration, as they saw it) of a national homeland for the Jews. This, they believed, would enable the Jews to overcome their “abnormal” lack of their own national territory, shed their status as a dispersed and alien minority, achieve national-cultural rebirth, and take their rightful place as an equal member of the family of (European) nations.

Historically, rabbinic Judaism had rejected any engagement in politics or striving for political power. For the rabbis, the exile of the Jews from the land of Israel and their dispersion, subordinate status, and even sufferings were manifestations of God’s will and could be rectified only at the end of days, with the coming of the Messiah, the restoration of the House of David, and the “ingathering of the exiles” in their ancestral homeland. In premodern Judaism, the land of Israel was deemed holy, venerated, and idealized, and prayers invoked and perpetuated the dream of an eventual return to it; but, in fact, one could be a good Jew wherever one lived, as long as one abided by God’s law and fulfilled God’s commandments. Over the centuries a trickle of Jews had migrated to and settled in Palestine, since 1516 part of the OTTOMAN EMPIRE, but they were not motivated by anything remotely resembling a state-building project; they came simply to live and be buried in the Holy Land, acts that were religiously meritorious but lacked any political meaning.

In the mid-nineteenth century, a handful of rabbis and secular Jews broke with this tradition by asserting that Jews could and should initiate their own redemption by returning to the land of Israel, but it was only later that these figures were rescued from their contemporary marginality and acclaimed as forerunners of Zionism. Around the same time, there also emerged the phenomenon of Christian Zionism, a belief among some Protestants that the restoration of the Jews to Palestine was a necessary precondition for the second coming of Christ, which fostered a heightened interest in notions and projects of this kind. Cheap transportation had made pilgrimage and tourism in the Holy Land easier for Europeans, and the land was more widely represented through the new technology of photography; as a result, Palestine came to occupy a new place in the imagination of Europe. Between the late 1860s and the outbreak of World War I in 1914, a German Protestant sect known as the Temple Society (or Templers) went so far as to send a few thousand German Christian settlers to Palestine and established a number of agricultural and urban colonies there, an enterprise that has sometimes been portrayed as a precursor of Zionism.

But it was only in the aftermath of the Russian pogroms of 1881–1884, which sent a shock wave through European (and especially Russian) Jewry, that the idea of resolving the crisis by promoting Jewish immigration to and settlement in Palestine, and the reconstitution there of Jewish national life, began to gain traction among Jews. The adherents of the loose-knit movement that emerged in Russia to promote this project were known as HOVEVEI ZION, or Lovers of Zion. (Zion was originally a synonym for JERUSALEM but came to stand for the entire land of Israel; Zionism as the standard term for Jewish nationalism emerged in the 1890s.) As romantic nationalists, the ideologists and activists of the Hovevei Zion movement saw Jewish migration to Palestine as ontologically different from Jewish migration to any other place. It was not only, or even mainly, a quest for safety, tolerance, and opportunity; it was essentially a return through both space and time to the ancestral homeland. For these proto-Zionists, Palestine was the land in which the Jews had become a nation, and it remained the only place on earth where—through their devotion, their love, and their labor on the LAND—they could tap into the wellsprings of the nation's eternal spirit and achieve both personal and collective regeneration.

Beginnings of Zionist Settlement in Palestine

In Zionist historiography, 1881 is taken as the beginning of the First ALIYA (wave of modern Jewish immigration to Palestine, from the Hebrew term for “going up,” because pilgrimage to Jerusalem and, by extension, migration to the land of Israel were traditionally depicted as an ascent). Although this date is often depicted as a momentous milestone in Jewish history, in reality this was a very modest beginning: by 1891 eight new Jewish agricultural settlements (called moshavot) had been established in Palestine on land purchased with funds raised in Eastern Europe, with a total population of about 2,400, mainly immigrants from Russia but also from Romania, whose government was equally notorious for its anti-Semitism.

But the Hovevei Zion movement lacked the resources to sustain a settlement project even on this modest scale, and within a few years many of the new settlements were on the verge of bankruptcy and collapse. They were rescued by the generosity of BARON EDMOND JAMES DE ROTHSCHILD (1845–1934), an assimilated and very wealthy French Jew who had little interest in Hovevei Zion's romantic nationalism but was aroused by the plight of the Eastern European Jewish masses. Rothschild favored Jewish resettlement—though preferably not in FRANCE, where an influx of poor Yiddish-speaking Jews from the east might fan the flames of anti-Semitism and undermine the tenuous place that the Rothschilds and other assimilated Jews had secured in French society. Rothschild, and later other Jewish philanthropists, assumed control of many of the settlements and provided them with large-scale financial support, along with technical assistance and a large dose of paternalistic supervision.

By 1900 there were twenty-two moshavot in Palestine with a total population of about 5,000. Most of these settlements were organized on the model preferred by Rothschild and his agents, which was similar to that employed in this same period in French-ruled Algeria to settle European immigrants on land confiscated from the indigenous Muslim population: European Jewish farmers employed local Arab peasants to cultivate their vineyards, citrus groves, and fields. Zionist historiography has tended to highlight these farmers as the forerunners of Zionism's settlement and state-building project and as the dynamic new element within the Yishuv (the Hebrew term for the Jewish community in pre-1948 Palestine). Yet the great majority of the Jews in Palestine, including most of those who came during the First Aliya of 1881–1903, preferred to live in towns, and many (including traditionally religious Jews and indigenous Arabic- or Ladino-speaking Jews) belonged to what Zionist historiography denigrates as the “Old Yishuv.” The latter was then still quite distant from, or even opposed to, the vision of Jewish national-cultural rebirth in Palestine put forward by the Hovevei Zion. In any case, the momentum of proto-Zionism in Eastern Europe had largely dissipated by the mid-1890s.

Herzl and the Foundation of the Zionist Organization

It was THEODOR HERZL (1860–1904) who played the key role in reenergizing a diffuse and languishing proto-Zionism and recasting it into a modern, institutionalized, and international mass political movement. Born in Budapest, Hungary, into a well-to-do and assimilated Jewish family, Herzl had only a superficial acquaintance with Jewish tradition and history; he identified strongly with German culture, and as a young man he moved to Vienna, Austria, capital of the multiethnic and polyglot Austro-Hungarian Empire, where he made a name for himself as a playwright and journalist. Though always aware of anti-Semitism, it was during the early 1890s, when Herzl lived in Paris as a correspondent for a Vienna newspaper, that he came to see it as both threatening and ineradicable, and eventually embraced Zionism as the only feasible response to it. The eruption in 1894 of the Dreyfus Affair, in which a French Jewish army officer was falsely convicted of espionage for Germany, demonstrated the extent of both official and popular anti-Semitism even in France, birthplace of the Enlightenment. Herzl's new convictions would be reinforced a year later by the sweeping victory of the openly anti-Semitic Christian Social Party in municipal elections in Vienna, his hometown.

In 1896 Herzl published a pamphlet whose title is usually translated into English as The Jewish State, though The Jews' State would be more accurate; as its subtitle explained, it offered "An Attempt at a Modern Solution of the Jewish Question." He argued that no matter what the Jews did, European Christians would inevitably see them as threatening aliens and subject them to exclusion, discrimination, persecution, or expulsion. Anti-Semitism was on the rise everywhere in Europe, and Herzl insisted that its religious, social, economic, and political causes were ineradicable. The only way out was to launch an organized effort to establish a Jewish state somewhere outside of Europe—Herzl proposed both Argentina and Palestine as possible sites—to which Jews could emigrate and in which they could build a free and independent national life and thereby benefit not only themselves but also all humanity.

Herzl's mention of Argentina in this context may seem strange today, but at the time many Europeans envisioned Argentina as a vast, fertile, but largely empty land suitable for large-scale settlement. Moreover, in the 1890s the JEWISH COLONIZATION ASSOCIATION, founded and financed by the Jewish railroad magnate Baron Maurice de Hirsch, actually resettled several thousand Russian Jews in Argentina as farmers on land Hirsch had purchased, and announced plans to bring many more. Herzl therefore found it possible to imagine that Argentina would be willing to cede some territory for a Jewish colony and eventually a Jewish state, especially as, in the mid-1890s, the colonization association's resettlement efforts in Argentina seemed more successful than those of the Hovevei Zion in Palestine.

In the years that followed the publication of The Jewish State, Herzl devoted himself to transforming an inchoate and fragmented proto-Zionism into a unified, coherent, and effective international political movement. In August 1897, thanks largely to Herzl's efforts, a ZIONIST CONGRESS convened in Basel, Switzerland, for the first time bringing together the Eastern European Hovevei Zion movement with Zionist societies and personalities from elsewhere in Europe. The congress formally established the Zionist Organization (later, WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION), with Herzl as its first president, and adopted a program declaring that Zionism sought "to secure for the Jewish people a publicly recognized, legally secured home in Palestine." Though it was clear that the Zionists ultimately sought a sovereign Jewish state, Zionist leaders chose the vague term home to avoid antagonizing the Ottoman government, whose support for Zionism Herzl hoped to win. At the same time, the words "publicly recognized" and "legally secured" signaled that this "home" was not to be simply a haven granted to Jewish refugees for humanitarian purposes. At a minimum it was to be an autonomous entity of some sort, a stepping-stone toward an eventual state, to be guaranteed by and recognized in INTERNATIONAL LAW, which would of course require the support of one or more of the European powers.

Herzl devoted the remaining seven years of his life to building the fledgling Zionist Organization into an institutionalized and effective mass movement and to obtaining from the Ottoman Empire or from one of the European powers a "charter" that would secure for Jews the right to settle in Palestine and enjoy some degree of autonomy there. Over the years, the Zionist Organization developed a ramified network of institutions, including elected decisionmaking bodies, a financial apparatus (initially called the JEWISH COLONIAL TRUST), and an agency to acquire land in Palestine for Jewish settlement (JEWISH NATIONAL FUND), and it gradually won adherents in Jewish communities across Europe and beyond. But despite unremitting lobbying efforts, before World War I neither Herzl nor his successors were able to secure for Zionism a great-power sponsor, without which it had little prospect of success. In 1903 the British government seemed willing to offer the Zionists land for settlement in what was then called Uganda (situated in today's Kenya). Herzl favored pursuing this option, at least to secure a temporary haven for persecuted Jews, but the proposal almost split the Zionist movement, most of whose mass base bitterly opposed anywhere but Palestine as the site of the future Jewish homeland, and in the end the scheme came to nothing. For its part, the Ottoman government dismissed Herzl's grandiose promises that, in return for Palestine, wealthy Jews would rescue the empire from its desperate financial straits; instead, Istanbul sought to restrict immigration and land purchases in Palestine by foreign Jews, whom it regarded as potentially dangerous interlopers who might ultimately undermine Ottoman control of this part of its beleaguered empire.

Emergence of Labor Zionism and Religious Zionism

By the time Herzl died in 1904, the movement he had founded already encompassed rival factions that questioned his fixation on "political Zionism"—that is, the effort to secure a foothold in Palestine through diplomacy—and challenged the secular, liberal (in the nineteenth-century European sense of the term), and middle-class orientation he and his colleagues in the Zionist leadership embodied. Among them was a "Labor Zionist" or "socialist Zionist" camp, originally known as PO'ALE ZION (Workers of Zion). This group combined Zionism with the socialism popular among the impoverished Jewish masses of Eastern Europe and advocated not big-power diplomacy but gradual immigration and settlement work in Palestine itself ("practical Zionism"), which would lead to the development there of a social democratic Jewish society that would, in turn, form the basis of the future Jewish state.

Adherents of LABOR PARTY Zionism made up a significant proportion of Jewish immigrants to Palestine during the Second Aliya (1904–1914). These self-proclaimed pioneers (halutzim), much mythologized in Zionist historiography, were mainly idealistic single young men from Russia. They routinely used the term "Hebrew" instead of "Jewish" to refer to themselves and their organizations, in order to express their denigration and rejection of DIASPORA Judaism, which they associated with statelessness and hence powerlessness, and to identify themselves with the ancient Hebrews, whom they idealized as a sovereign people firmly implanted in the soil of their homeland. They hoped upon their arrival in Palestine to transform themselves through physical labor into authentic and productive agricultural workers organically rooted in the land, thereby achieving both personal and national redemption and becoming the vanguard of the Zionist settlement project.

This vision, a blend of Tolstoyan agrarianism, utopian socialism, and romantic nationalism, soon ran headlong into realities in Palestine itself. The inability of these settlers to realize their vision raised the prospect that the Zionist project would founder because neither jobs nor sufficient resources for settlement (including both land and capital) were available to maintain them or attract others. Eventually, in the decade preceding World War I and into the 1920s, a process of trial and error resulted in the elaboration of a new strategy for the implementation of practical Zionism. Spearheaded by the Labor Zionist camp, it sought to create a separate, self-sufficient, and relatively high-wage Jewish economic sector in Palestine in which only Jews would be employed, thereby laying the foundation of an economically (and, eventually, politically) autonomous Yishuv. The Zionist leadership came to endorse and underwrite this strategy through subsidies, land purchases, capital investment, and political support, creating the basis for an alliance between the largely bourgeois Zionist leadership and the Labor Zionist movement. This alliance, as well as the latter's ability to organize and mobilize Jewish workers in Palestine into a potent sociopolitical force, would enable Labor Zionism to play the leading role in the Yishuv, the state of Israel, and the international Zionist movement for some four decades, from the 1930s into the 1970s.

Soon after the foundation of the Zionist Organization, a distinct religious Zionist tendency also emerged. Adherents of this tendency rejected the secularism of both the bourgeois liberals at the helm of the early Zionist movement and the socialist Zionists, but they also broke with the great majority of Orthodox rabbis who vociferously denounced Zionism as false messianism and state-worshipping idolatry. Instead, they sought to synthesize Orthodox Judaism and Zionism, arguing that the two were (if properly understood) complementary rather than contradictory. Religious Zionist thinkers like AVRAHAM YITZHAK HACHOEN KOOK (1865–1935), who from 1921 until his death served as the first ASHKENAZI chief rabbi of Palestine, went so far as to construe the doings of even the most antireligious Zionists as furthering God’s plan for the Jews and as harbingers of the imminent coming of the Messiah. In 1902, religious Zionists founded the MIZRAHI movement (an acronym for “spiritual center” that means “eastern”), which collaborated with Zionism’s secular majority despite continuing conflicts over religious and cultural issues. Such conflicts persist in Israel to the present day, for example over demands by religious parties that the state use the criteria established by Orthodox Judaism to determine who is a Jew—an important issue given that being officially recognized as Jewish confers specific rights and privileges in the self-proclaimed Jewish state.

Zionism, Judaism, and the Question of Language

Even though most Zionists were secular and advocated a concept of Jewish identity based not on religion but on common nationhood, the movement freely appropriated symbols, practices, personalities, and episodes from the religious tradition and Jewish history, recast them in a “nationalized” form, and used them for its own purposes. For example, the international Zionist sports movement took its name from the Maccabees, the nickname of the Jewish family that, in 167 BCE, launched an ultimately successful revolt against Seleucid rule and for a time restored Jewish sovereignty in the land of Israel. Similarly, Zionists portrayed Shimon Bar Kokhba, leader of a failed revolt against the Romans in 132–135 CE, as a Jewish national hero even though generations of rabbis had condemned him as a false messiah whose hopeless rebellion had brought disaster upon the Jews. The Zionist movement also mythologized as national heroes the Jewish rebels who, in 73 CE, had reportedly committed suicide in the besieged fortress of Masada rather than surrender to the Romans. After 1948 the Israeli army invoked their example at torch-lit swearing-in ceremonies for new recruits staged at the excavated and reconstructed site. These rebels were exalted even though their revolt had resulted in the destruction of the Second Temple in Jerusalem, after which most rabbis made their peace with Roman rule, renounced the dream of political sovereignty, and forged a new kind of Judaism focused on achieving holiness in daily life by studying and obeying God’s law. More broadly, Zionism’s core vision of accomplishing the “redemption” of the Jews from the bane of “exile” can be seen as a secularized nationalist appropriation of Jewish messianism.

One key cultural issue over which the Zionist movement struggled in its early years and eventually achieved consensus and success was the question of language. As early as the First Aliya period, many of the Hovevei Zion had argued that Jewish national rebirth in Palestine required the revival and propagation of Hebrew. They believed that, because Hebrew was the language of the Bible and of the Jews when they had lived as a sovereign people in their own land, Hebrew must be the language of a modern Jewish state. This idea reveals how deeply Zionism partook of nineteenth-century romantic nationalism, which regarded a nation’s language as a unique and crucial manifestation of and vehicle for its eternal spirit. Still, the victory of Hebrew was not a foregone conclusion. It required the efforts of people like ELIEZER BEN-YEHUDAH (1858–1922), a Hovevei Zion leader who came to Palestine in 1881 and played a key role in transforming Hebrew into a functional living language by (among other things) producing the first modern Hebrew dictionary. Often bitter struggles were waged by the advocates of Hebrew (including many of those who came to Palestine during the Second Aliya) against those who championed other languages, including Russian or German (deemed to be European languages of high culture) or even Yiddish, the mother tongue of the Eastern European Jewish masses. Hebrew eventually won out and flourished as the spoken and written language of the vast majority of the Jews in Palestine and later Israel.

Key Elements of Zionist Discourse

Whatever the differences among them, nearly all Zionists shared a set of core beliefs and a specific narrative of Jewish history. Zionism defined all Jews everywhere, regardless of language, culture, citizenship, or degree of religiosity, as constituting a single nation. That nation had emerged in ancient times in the land of Israel, and it had endured even when the Jews ceased to be a sovereign people in their own homeland and were eventually dispersed from it. Over the ensuing 2,000 years, scattered among other peoples, the Jews in the Diaspora had lived (as Zionism portrayed it) in an abnormal situation of existential exile, because without a nation-state of their own they were rootless, powerless, and alienated from their essential nature, even when (as in modern liberal democratic states) they thought themselves settled, secure, and happy.

For Zionism, the Jews would never be able to assimilate in the lands of their exile: anti-Semitism was inevitable wherever Jews and non-Jews lived together, and neither education nor social change could eradicate it. Ultimately, even Jews in the most apparently tolerant and liberal European countries (and the UNITED STATES, as its Jewish population grew) would face growing anti-Semitism, find their situation intolerable, and be compelled to migrate. For Zionism, the only real and permanent solution to this state of affairs was the territorial concentration of all or most of the world's Jews in Palestine, where Jewish national rebirth and sovereignty would be achieved. In their own state the Jews could finally, after 2,000 years of rootlessness and abnormality, accomplish their "return to history" and again become a normal people, freed of the negative traits that exile had instilled in them. They would thereby secure what they had been denied for so long: acceptance as equals by their fellow Europeans.

Early on, the Zionist movement had included people (like Herzl himself in The Jewish State) who were willing to consider lands other than Palestine as the object of Zionism. But advocates of this approach, who became known as Territorialists, seceded from the Zionist Organization after the failure of the Uganda scheme, and their separate organization soon faded away. For the great majority of Zionists, the land of Israel had played too central a role in Jewish history, especially as the site of ancient Jewish statehood, and still occupied too important a place in the Jewish imagination, however idealized or symbolic, to allow anywhere but Palestine to excite much interest as the land in which the restoration of the Jewish nation was to take place.

But at the outbreak of World War I, Zionism had yet to win the support of the majority of Jews in the Diaspora; indeed, until World War II it remained a minority movement among Jews and the object of a great deal of controversy and criticism. As noted, most Orthodox Jews regarded it as a form of false messianism and a secularizing heresy, and they denounced its glorification of the nation-state rather than of God's law as set forth in the Torah and the Talmud. At the same time, many secular and liberal Jews in Western and Central Europe, and in the United States, rejected what they saw as Zionism's embrace of the key premise of anti-Semitism—that in the long run non-Jews could never accept Jews living among them as equals—because it negated their own hopes of living in their native lands as full and equal citizens.

Jewish socialists in Russia and elsewhere were equally critical of Zionism. Rather than traipsing off to Palestine and pursuing some utopian pipe dream there, they believed that Jews (most of whom were poor) should remain in their native lands, organize themselves, and fight for their rights, which could only be permanently secured in the era of equality and social justice that would ensue after the overthrow of capitalism. Jewish socialists denounced Herzl's efforts to promote Zionism to reactionaries and anti-Semites, in Russia and elsewhere, by claiming that it would weaken Jews' attraction to socialism and reduce their numbers through emigration. They were particularly outraged when, in 1903, Herzl met with top officials of the tsarist government, including Interior Minister V. K. Plehve, who was regarded by Jews as a notorious anti-Semite responsible for a bloody pogrom in Kishinev just a few months earlier. Both Jewish socialists in Eastern Europe and Jewish liberals in Western and Central Europe rejected Zionism's call for all Jews to leave the European lands where they had lived for many centuries. They argued that Zionism was thereby abetting anti-Semitism, to the detriment of the vast majority of European Jews, who had no intention of migrating to Palestine and wanted equality and a better life in what they saw as their homelands, or in places like the United States, which Zionism considered just one more dead end.

Even some Jews who were sympathetic to Zionism criticized Herzl and his fellow political Zionists for what they saw as an unrealistic and counterproductive fixation on a Jewish state that would quickly encompass all or most of the world's Jews. For example, Asher Ginzberg (1856–1927), far better known by his pen name AHAD HA'AM (One of the People), was the preeminent Hebrew essayist of his day and the leading literary light and publicist of the Hovevei Zion movement. As he saw it, Herzl's concept of a Jewish state (more accurately, a state for the Jews) lacked any authentic Jewish content—Herzl seems to have envisioned it as a sort of Switzerland that happened to be inhabited by Jews—while the notion that millions of poor Jews could quickly be settled in Palestine was a fantasy. Ahad Ha'am insisted that what the Jewish people really needed, and what Zionism could actually attain in the foreseeable future, was the creation in Palestine of a relatively small but vibrant community that could serve as a spiritual center, a sort of incubator for the revival of a flourishing Jewish national culture that could sustain and inspire the Jews in the Diaspora as they confronted the challenges of the modern world.

Ahad Ha'am is often regarded as the founder of "Cultural Zionism," a loose-knit current within the broader Zionist movement that emphasized Jewish cultural revival rather than political action and state-building. A number of the Yishuv's leading intellectual and cultural figures—for example, JUDAH LEON MAGNES (1877–1948), one of the founders of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, which opened in 1925—were identified with this current, and he and others (including prominent sympathizers like Albert Einstein) also urged the Zionist movement to seek an accommodation with the Palestinian Arabs. In the long run, although adherents of cultural Zionism made significant contributions to modern Israeli-Hebrew culture, their political impact was negligible.

"A Land without a People"

Zionism could only hope to create a Jewish state through large-scale immigration to, and settlement in, a territory outside of Europe, which meant that it had to be a project of colonization focused on a land whose indigenous population would be entirely or largely non-Jewish. Moreover, as an ideology and a movement, Zionism emerged just as the age of imperialism was reaching its zenith. In that period European states (and the United States as well) were extending their formal and informal empires to encompass almost the entire globe. And they were generally doing so based on the conviction that Western civilization (or, for adherents of the new "biological" or "scientific" racism then emerging, the "Caucasian" race) was superior to all others and entitled its bearers to hegemony over less civilized or less advanced peoples or races. In this historical context, it was inevitable that Zionism's conception of, and attitudes and policies toward, Palestine's indigenous Arab population would not only be profoundly shaped by the need to assert its own superior claim to this land but also be infused by elements of contemporary European colonial discourse and practice. Zionism was similarly influenced by widespread contemporary European representations of "the Orient" and its peoples.

There was undoubtedly a great deal of ignorance and misinformation about Palestine among early Zionists. Some may well have believed that Palestine was an empty land, in the sense of being completely or largely uninhabited. There is a well-known (but perhaps apocryphal) episode, dating to the early years of the Zionist project, in which Herzl's friend and colleague MAX NORDAU one day "discovered" that Palestine already had a substantial settled population and exclaimed to Herzl, "But then we are committing an injustice!" And from Herzl's The Jewish State it would be impossible to learn that Palestine was at the time anything but empty: the Arabs were simply not mentioned, as if they did not exist or their presence was utterly irrelevant to Zionism. But another, ultimately more durable and important way of framing this question emerged almost simultaneously, one that did not so much displace as supplement the representation of Palestine as empty and its inhabitants as invisible. Once it was beyond question that the land in which Zionism sought to establish a Jewish state actually had inhabitants, those inhabitants were represented as essentially, ontologically marginal or even alien to the land and its destiny. Their physical presence in large numbers, settled in hundreds of villages and towns, was perhaps no longer disputable, but the character of their relationship to the country was represented as fundamentally different from and inferior to that of the Jews.

Palestine, which Jews commonly referred to as the Land of Israel, was portrayed in Zionist discourse as essentially and eternally Jewish, regardless of the fact that Jews had for many centuries constituted only a small fraction of that land's actual population. This portrayal buttressed the idea that no other people could have an equally authentic historical or contemporary presence in it, or an equally valid claim or organic link to it. An early Zionist slogan proclaimed that Palestine was "a land without a people for a people without a land." It was not so much that Palestine was perceived as literally empty, entirely devoid of population; rather, for Zionism, the Arabs of Palestine, despite making up the great bulk of the land's population, did not constitute a distinct people or nation with a legitimate claim to the land or deep roots in it. Conversely, the Jews possessed such a claim and had such roots. For Zionists the land thus lacked not people in the sense of inhabitants; rather, it lacked a people, the one nation that was organically and eternally linked to this particular territory. Zionism would remedy this lack, this absence, by returning the Jews to their native land (and thus to their authentic national being) and would thereby also restore the land to its rightful owners.

As a result, Zionist discourse generally depicted Palestine's Arab population as so heterogeneous and internally fragmented as not to constitute a nation with rights to this land, as allegedly newcomers to the land and thus lacking any historical claim to it, as having failed to make it productive (or as productive as it might be with the application of European capital and technology) and therefore not entitled to possess it, or simply as having a much weaker connection (and therefore right) to it than the Jews. The Arabs were, moreover, generally portrayed as uncultured, backward, and ignorant and (as opposition to Zionism grew) as irrational, fanatical, and prone to violence. In the same period, similar assertions were advanced by other European settler-colonial projects about other non-European peoples and lands (for example, in Algeria, South Africa, and Australia, and in the United States by Euro-Americans about Native Americans) and used as a rationale for dominating, dispossessing, or displacing them. Though these other projects lacked Zionism's origin as a response to a very real (and worsening) oppression in Europe itself, Zionism's claims about Palestine and the Palestinians were in this sense not unique, though they were powerfully shaped by its own specific vision and aspirations, and by its fixation on this particular territory.

Moreover, despite some romantic rhetoric early on about the Jews returning to their "Oriental" roots, the new Jewish nation that nearly all Zionists sought to create might not be located in Europe but it would certainly be of Europe. Indeed, the attainment of Jewish sovereignty would for the first time allow the proud "new Jews" that Zionism would create to participate in the great project of Western civilization on an equal footing. Herzl himself asserted in The Jewish State that a Jewish state in Palestine would "form a portion of the rampart of Europe against Asia, an outpost of civilization against barbarism." Similarly, after 1948, Israeli leaders, insistent that the new Jewish state be culturally European, would warn against and seek to combat the threat of "Levantinization" allegedly posed by the massive influx of Jewish immigrants from Arab lands.

Not all early Zionists ignored the Arabs of Palestine or downplayed their significance for the future of the Zionist project; some (like Ahad Ha'am) berated Jewish settlers for mistreating their Arab neighbors and warned of an emerging Arab national sentiment with which Zionism would have to reckon. Unsurprisingly, given Zionism's fixation on the plight of the European Jews and its own mission, these voices were largely ignored. Determined to build a thoroughly European and, if possible, wholly Jewish society and state in Palestine, few Zionists had much interest in the aspirations, history, or culture of the country's indigenous population or any desire to integrate into this predominantly Arab region. Then as now, for example, few even took the trouble to learn Arabic, except for some instrumental purpose (such as business dealings or intelligence work).

It seems unlikely, however, that attending to those who tried to raise what some have called early Zionism's "hidden question" would have made much difference. As would become obvious after World War I, the Zionist project of Jewish immigration, settlement, and statehood in Palestine was irreconcilable with the emerging national aspirations of the country's Palestinian majority, so that there was little if any basis for compromise. But even before World War I, this conflict had already begun to manifest itself on the ground in Palestine in a variety of forms. These included clashes between dispossessed Arab peasants and Jewish settlers, efforts by Jewish workers to exclude Arabs from employment in Jewish enterprises, and growing demands in the Arab press in Palestine and by Arab delegates to the Ottoman parliament that the government take more effective measures to block Jewish immigration and land purchases. Arab opposition was thus already beginning to shape the course and contours of the Zionist project and, as subsequent decades would show, most Zionists would prove ready to do whatever was required to overcome it and realize their goals.

World War I, the Balfour Declaration, and the British Mandate

On the eve of World War I, Zionism's prospects for success did not look particularly promising. For one, it was clear that, over the previous three or four decades, relatively few Jews had actually answered the call of Zion and immigrated to Palestine. Of the approximately 2.4 million Jews who left Eastern Europe between 1881 and the outbreak of World War I, some 85 percent went to the United States and another 12 percent to other countries of the Western Hemisphere (mainly Canada and Argentina), to Western Europe, or to South Africa. Less than 3 percent of this great outpouring headed for Palestine, and for a high proportion of those, Palestine proved only a temporary way station on the road westward.

By 1914 the Jewish population of Palestine had reached somewhere between 60,000 and 85,000. About 12,000 Jews lived in some thirty-odd agricultural settlements, mainly on the coastal plains, but all told, Jews owned only about 2 percent of Palestine's land. The great majority of Jews lived in urban centers, including Jerusalem, which now had a Jewish majority, but also in the still-small but growing town of Tel Aviv (Hill of Spring), founded in 1909 on the outskirts of largely Arab JAFFA and envisioned as the first modern Jewish city in Palestine. Only about half the Jews in Palestine were Zionist immigrants, and altogether Jews still constituted no more than 12 percent of the country's population, which remained overwhelmingly Arab and largely Muslim. The average annual natural increase of the Arab population substantially outpaced average annual Jewish immigration and natural increase combined, indicating that, under current conditions, Zionism's prospects for securing a Jewish majority were rather dim. The Ottoman government remained hostile to Zionism; none of the major European powers had endorsed its agenda; and although Zionism had become an active presence on the European Jewish scene, it had not won the support of anything close to a majority of Jews.

The course and outcome of World War I would dramatically enhance Zionism's prospects, finally enabling it to move ahead decisively with its state-building project under the protection of a major European power. During the war, Zionist leaders vigorously lobbied governments on both sides. The central office of the Zionist Organization was located in Berlin, GERMANY, and there was a great deal of pro-German sentiment among Jews throughout Eastern Europe and in the United States. They regarded tsarist Russia as the land of vicious anti-Semitism and pogroms and hoped for its defeat and downfall at the hands of Germany, where Jews enjoyed legal equality and full citizenship. But, in the end, Britain would be the first European power to embrace Zionism.

Key to this success was CHAIM WEIZMANN (1874–1953), a Jewish chemist of Russian origin who had become a British subject and contributed to the British war effort through his work developing better explosives. Building on his connections with government officials, Weizmann worked tirelessly to convince the British government to endorse Zionism. He won the support of David Lloyd George, a Christian Zionist who would become prime minister in December 1916, but also of other British officials who felt that a Jewish entity in Palestine under British protection could serve as a "Jewish Ulster," comparable to the loyal Protestant enclave in largely Catholic (and often rebellious) Ireland. A Jewish Palestine could thus help safeguard the eastern approaches to the Suez Canal, enhance British control of the eastern Mediterranean, and bolster British influence in the Levant. Some in Whitehall also argued that endorsing Zionism might strengthen Britain's claim to Palestine when the spoils of war were divided among the victorious Allies. Others believed that Britain's endorsement of Zionism might help win Jewish support for the Allied cause in the United States, which entered the war in April 1917, and in Russia, where in February 1917 the tsarist regime had been overthrown and popular pressure was growing on the provisional government to withdraw from the war. Weizmann and his colleagues also argued that, if Britain hesitated, Germany might declare its support for Zionism first, to the detriment of the Allied war effort.

Even as British officials were arguing about whether officially embracing Zionism would serve British imperial interests, they were making secret plans with their allies France and Russia to divide up the predominantly Arab provinces of the Ottoman Empire (including Palestine) after the war (SYKES-PICOT AGREEMENT) and simultaneously making deals with anti-Ottoman elements within the Ottoman Empire. Notable among the latter was Sharif Husayn of Mecca, who agreed that he and his HASHEMITE clan would launch an armed revolt against the Ottomans (equipped with British weapons, money, and advisers) in return for a British promise to support a postwar independent Arab state (HUSYAN-MCMAHON CORRESPONDENCE). Whether or not the British had agreed that Palestine was to be part of that state would be argued for decades to come, though Arab nationalists certainly thought so.

In November 1917, after many months of internal debates, British foreign secretary Lord Balfour issued a letter (which became known as the BALFOUR DECLARATION) addressed to Lord Rothschild, head of the British Zionist movement, conveying the decision of the war cabinet: "His Majesty's government views with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jews, and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine, or the rights or political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country." The Balfour Declaration was full of ambiguities and apparent contradictions. Weizmann would have preferred explicit use of the term "Jewish state" rather than the deliberately ambiguous "national home for the Jews." The final clause seems to have been included to satisfy anti-Zionist Jews who felt that endorsement of Zionism might undermine their right to full and equal citizenship in the liberal democracies. It was also hard to fathom how the establishment of a "national home for the Jews" in Palestine could possibly avoid infringing on the rights of the country's indigenous Arab majority. Nonetheless, the Balfour Declaration was obviously a tremendous victory for Zionism: for the first time a major European power—indeed, the very power whose military forces were even then conquering Palestine from the Ottomans—had explicitly endorsed Zionism's goal of creating a Jewish polity in Palestine.

Despite the wartime promises of independence that the British had made to the Arab nationalist movement, and despite the Allies' avowed commitment to national self-determination for subject peoples, after the war ended, the former Arab provinces of the Ottoman Empire were divided into a number of new states, each of which was placed under the control of either Britain (Palestine, IRAQ, and Transjordan [renamed JORDAN in 1949]) or France (SYRIA and LEBANON). (The new Soviet government that came to power in Russia late in 1917 withdrew from the war, and renounced the secret treaties made by the tsarist regime.) In what was essentially a thinly disguised new form of colonialism, Britain and France had the new League of Nations (which they dominated) grant them a "mandate" to rule these states and prepare them for eventual self-government. Despite vociferous Arab protests, Britain, as the mandatory power for Palestine, committed itself to fulfilling the pledge made in the Balfour Declaration. As Balfour himself put it in 1919, "In Palestine we do not propose even to go through the form of consulting the wishes of the present inhabitants of the country. . . . Zionism, be it right or wrong, good or bad, is rooted in age-old traditions, in present needs, in future hopes, of far greater import than the desires and prejudices of the 700,000 Arabs who now inhabit the ancient land."

Zionism and Palestine during the Mandate Period

With the imposition on Palestine of a British colonial regime committed to fostering the building of the Jewish national home (and suppressing Arab opposition to that enterprise), the Zionist movement was finally able to achieve substantial progress toward realizing its goals. The pace of Jewish immigration accelerated, so that, by the middle of 1926, the country's Jewish population had doubled from prewar levels to nearly 150,000 and by 1931 had grown to 174,000—about 17 percent of the total population. Jewish land purchases and settlement activity accelerated as well under much more favorable conditions than during the Ottoman period. The Yishuv gradually developed a dense and ramified network of political, economic, social, and cultural institutions that came to encompass the great majority of the Jewish population, increasingly composed of immigrants from Europe or their offspring. A semiclandestine military organization, the HAGANA (Defense), was also established that would eventually form the nucleus of the Israeli army.

There were certainly setbacks and crises along the way. A Palestinian Arab nationalist movement emerged to oppose Jewish immigration and land purchases and to demand majority rule and the country's independence as an Arab state. In 1920 and 1921, and then on a wider scale in 1929, Arab anger erupted into violent attacks on Jews. Though these were suppressed by the BRITISH MANDATE authorities, they led some British officials to question official policy and advocate additional limits on Jewish immigration and land purchases, proposals that were generally defeated by vigorous and effective Zionist lobbying in London and Jerusalem. There were also periods of economic slowdown and high unemployment, and in 1927, more Jews actually left Palestine than entered. But overall, during the first decade of British rule, the increasingly Zionist Yishuv continued to grow and to strike ever deeper and more substantial roots in Palestine.

In that process, the Labor Zionist camp came to play an increasingly prominent role, with the HISTADRUT (the General Organization of Hebrew Workers in the Land of Israel) as its central vehicle. With a membership of 4,400 at its founding in 1920, rising to some 25,000 eight years later, the Histadrut not only encompassed most of the organized Jewish workers in Palestine but also, in keeping with Labor Zionism's strategic vision, became a central institution in the Yishuv. It gradually built up an extensive network of industrial, agricultural, construction, housing, commercial, marketing, banking, insurance, and transport enterprises; provided a broad range of social, educational, cultural, and health care services to its members; and led the struggle to exclude Arab workers from employment in Jewish enterprises. By the early 1930s, the Histadrut's growing mass base and social weight helped make the Labor Zionist movement the leading political force in the Yishuv and, increasingly, in the international Zionist movement.

After World War I, Weizmann and his largely middle-of-the-road, middle-class, and secular General Zionist faction led the Zionist Organization. But, from the early 1930s, officials of MAPAI (Workers' Party of the Land of Israel), the dominant Labor Zionist party in Palestine, began to assume key positions in the JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL. This institution was established in 1929 to bring together Zionist and non-Zionist Jews to promote the development of the Jewish national home in Palestine, but it was soon dominated by Zionists and served as the de facto leadership of the Yishuv. By 1935 DAVID BEN-GURION (1886–1973), secretary of the Histadrut and leader of Mapai, had assumed the role of chair of the executive of the Jewish Agency. Although Weizmann served as president of the Zionist Organization for most of the pre-1948 period and remained its most internationally prominent leader and chief diplomat, the General Zionists increasingly came to play the role of junior partner to the Labor Zionists, who became the dominant force in the Yishuv itself. The religious Zionist Mizrahi movement also generally allied itself with Labor Zionism, in Palestine and internationally.

Rise of Revisionist Zionism

In the 1920s a new faction emerged within the Zionist movement that rejected what it saw as the excessively gradualist, compromising, and pro-British policies of both Weizmann and the Labor Zionists. The dominant figure in what was known as Revisionist Zionism was the Russian-born VLADIMIR JABOTINSKY (1880–1940). Insisting that the Jews had a superior right to all of the land of Israel, he opposed the Zionist leadership's acquiescence in Britain's decision in 1922 to exclude Transjordan from the terms of the Balfour Declaration and constitute it as a separate Arab entity. He also demanded that Zionism explicitly proclaim that its goal was a sovereign Jewish state, to be established in the near future, whereas the Zionist leadership preferred to keep its ultimate aim vague, so as not to unduly alienate either the British or the Arabs, and gave priority to long-term immigration and settlement activity. Jabotinsky also became increasingly antisocialist, and in the early 1930s, before Mussolini embraced Hitler's anti-Semitism, Revisionism developed links with fascist Italy. This, along with the Revisionists' ultranationalism, militarism, and glorification of their leader Jabotinsky, led many critics to denounce them as Jewish fascists.

Most of Jabotinsky's fellow Zionists insisted that Palestinian Arab nationalism was inauthentic and explained Arab popular opposition to Zionism as the result of "incitement" of the ignorant masses by their scheming, self-interested, and often anti-Semitic social superiors—still a key element of Israeli discourse today. In contrast, Jabotinsky acknowledged that Palestinian Arab nationalism was natural and inevitable: any people would resist losing their homeland. But he insisted that the Jews had a far superior moral claim to the land and must therefore adopt the strategy he termed the "iron wall": achieve military superiority and use whatever degree of force was necessary to compel the Arabs to accept Jewish control of Palestine (which for Jabotinsky included Transjordan). Mainstream Zionist leaders publicly denounced this way of thinking and continued to insist that their goals were achievable by peaceful means. In practice, however, the Zionist movement (and later Israel) would come to embrace the doctrine of the iron wall, manifested, among other things, in the widely held belief that the only thing that Arabs really understand is force, and therefore that only force could eventually compel them to acquiesce in the establishment of a Jewish state in Palestine.

In 1933, tensions between the Revisionists and the center-left Zionist majority reached the boiling point when HAIM ARLOZOROV, a leader of Mapai and director of the Jewish Agency's Political Department, was murdered in Tel Aviv, a crime that was widely blamed on Revisionist extremists. Two years later Jabotinsky took his followers out of the Zionist Organization and formed his own independent movement, which (with support from the anti-Semitic Polish government) advocated the rapid transfer of a million and a half (mainly Polish) Jews to Palestine, thereby creating a Jewish majority and soon a Jewish state. Meanwhile, his followers in Palestine broke away from the Hagana, which was controlled by the Labor Zionist movement, to form their own clandestine National Military Organization, the IRGUN TZEVA' I LE'UMI, known in Hebrew by its acronym Etzel and in English as the Irgun.

The rise of the Zionist right in the 1930s and of an increasingly aggressive posture on the part of the Zionist mainstream can be understood in the context of developments in both Europe and Palestine. In 1933 the National Socialist (Nazi) party led by Adolf Hitler came to power in Germany and quickly began to implement its viciously anti-Semitic ideology. A campaign for an international economic boycott of Germany was soon launched to protest and combat the Nazi regime's anti-Jewish policies. But the Zionist movement felt that its priority must be not to oppose the Nazis—anti-Semitism was, after all, an inevitable feature of the Diaspora—but to get as many Jews (and as much of their property) as possible out of Germany and into Palestine, because a Jewish homeland was deemed the only real and permanent solution to anti-Semitism. Despite bitter protests by many Jewish leaders, the Jewish Agency sabotaged the boycott movement by reaching the so-called Transfer Agreement with the German government, whereby some of the assets of emigrating German Jews were exported to the Yishuv in the form of German goods.

The Nazi ascent to power in Germany and rising anti-Semitism in Poland, which had the largest Jewish population of any country in Europe, led to a great surge in Jewish immigration to Palestine. By this time, the United States and the other Western democracies had more or less shut their doors to further Jewish immigration. From 1932 to 1935, Palestine's Jewish population more than doubled to reach 375,000, about 27 percent of the total, with most of the new immigrants settling in the large coastal towns, especially Tel Aviv, which, with its suburbs, now came to account for more than a quarter of the Yishuv's population. The surge in Jewish immigration was accompanied by a large influx of capital, which greatly stimulated the Yishuv's economy.

For the Palestinian Arabs these were ominous developments, since for the first time a Jewish majority and state in Palestine seemed within the realm of possibility. In 1936 a countrywide Arab general strike erupted that soon turned into an armed insurrection against British colonial rule and the Zionist project it fostered and protected (ARAB REVOLT). It took the British, supported by Jewish paramilitary forces, three years to fully crush the revolt, inflicting a decisive defeat on the Palestinian Arab nationalist movement. The PEEL COMMISSION, appointed to investigate the causes of the revolt, recommended in 1937 the partition of Palestine into separate Arab and Jewish states. Arab nationalists vehemently rejected partition as a violation of the right of Palestine's Arab majority to self-determination, while the Zionist leadership reluctantly agreed to entertain the proposal in the hope that eventually a much larger Jewish state could be secured. In the end, the British government failed to pursue the proposal.

In 1939, with Palestine pacified and another European war imminent, the British government moved to conciliate the Arabs by restricting Jewish immigration and settlement and promising that in ten years a unitary Palestine with an Arab majority would be granted independence. This new policy signaled the breakdown of the British-Zionist alliance, which for some two decades had given Zionism the big-power sponsor it needed to pursue its goals. By this point, however, the Yishuv was almost strong enough—in demographic, economic, military, and political terms—to stand on its own and, as postwar events would show, to defy its erstwhile protector and launch a successful campaign for a Jewish state.

World War II, the Holocaust, and the Drive for Statehood

Zionism had always assumed that sooner or later most of the Jewish masses of Europe—and especially Eastern Europe—would end up in Palestine, providing the “human material” with which the future Jewish state would be built. In the course of the war, however, the Nazis and their allies systematically murdered some 6 million European Jews (including 90 percent of Poland’s Jews), out of a prewar European Jewish population of about 9.5 million. No Zionist leader or thinker could have foreseen the scope or scale of the catastrophe that befell European Jewry, and in the final analysis, it was the victories of the Allies at Moscow, Stalingrad, El Alamein, and elsewhere that saved the Jews of Palestine from suffering the fate of the Jews in Nazi-occupied Europe. But even as the HOLOCAUST deprived Zionism of its original raison d’être—the salvation of the Eastern European Jewish masses—it also seemed to powerfully confirm Zionism’s analysis of and prescription for the Jewish problem. It thereby secured much broader moral and political sympathy and support, among both Jews and non-Jews, for the creation of a Jewish state in Palestine.

In 1942, radicalized by reports of the mass murder of Jews in Nazi-occupied Europe but powerless to do anything to save them, the Zionist movement for the first time made its key goal much more explicit by demanding that after the war all of Palestine be established as a “Jewish commonwealth,” by which was meant a Jewish state. This new stance opened the way for the Revisionists to rejoin the Zionist Organization in 1946. It can be seen more broadly as signaling a convergence between Revisionism and mainstream Zionism, with the latter implicitly adopting key elements of Jabotinsky’s thinking, including a clearer definition of Zionism’s ultimate goal and a readiness to use force to achieve it, though there remained significant differences over strategy and tactics.

As the war approached its end, the Zionist movement launched what became an all-out political, diplomatic, and military campaign, first to compel the British to open the gates of Palestine to European Jewish survivors of the Holocaust and then to achieve statehood. Weizmann and his colleagues furiously lobbied the Allied governments, while Zionist officials launched an effective public-relations campaign to highlight the plight of the survivors. At the same time, dramatic efforts were made to defy British restrictions on immigration, while Zionist paramilitary groups, especially Irgun and its offshoot, LOHAMEI HERUT YISRAEL (Fighters for the Freedom of Israel, or LEHI, called the Stern Gang by the British), at times joined by the much larger Hagana, attacked British officials, soldiers, and installations to demonstrate that unless the British acceded to Zionist demands, Palestine would be made ungovernable. The Zionist movement took full and effective advantage of the fact that Britain, much weakened by the war, was finding it difficult to maintain control of its colonies. It also benefited from the widespread feeling in Europe and the United States that a Jewish state in Palestine would help compensate the Jewish people for the Holocaust. During and immediately after the war, the focus of the Zionist movement’s efforts increasingly shifted to the United States, where Zionism found new supporters in the large and increasingly established Jewish community. It also won growing support from non-Jews in the United States, just as that country was emerging as the preeminent global political, military, and economic superpower.

In 1947, Britain, unable to suppress the Zionist insurgency in Palestine and lacking support from the United States, referred the Palestine question to the new UNITED NATIONS, which at this time included relatively few states that had until recently been under colonial rule and might therefore have been more sympathetic to the Arab case. In any event, in this forum as well as in the broader struggle for world opinion, the Zionists were much more effective at lobbying and propaganda, and much better connected in world capitals, than were the Arabs. In August 1947 the UN SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON PALESTINE recommended the partition of the country into independent Arab and Jewish states, with the latter apportioned about 55 percent of its territory; Jerusalem was to be under international administration. The Zionist leadership, which had hoped for more (or all) of Palestine, including the predominantly Jewish parts of Jerusalem, accepted the plan with reservations, while the Palestinian Arab nationalist movement and the neighboring Arab states vehemently rejected partition and vowed to prevent it.

The partition plan won the support of both the United States and the Soviet Union, which was ideologically hostile to Zionism but hoped that an independent Jewish state led by avowed socialists might weaken Britain’s grip on the Middle East. In November 1947 the UN General Assembly voted to endorse the partition plan, touching off a rising tide of intercommunal fighting in Palestine. In the months that followed, Jewish military forces largely defeated the poorly organized Palestinian Arab militias, and in May 1948, just as the British Mandate was formally terminated, Zionist leaders in Palestine proclaimed a Jewish state, to be known as Israel. Military forces from several of the neighboring Arab states immediately entered Palestine to help the Palestinians and prevent partition. In the 1948 WAR they were soundly defeated by Israeli forces, and when the fighting ended in 1949, Israel was in control of 77 percent of Mandatory Palestine (including the western half of Jerusalem). The remainder was either annexed by neighboring Transjordan (the WEST BANK, including East Jerusalem) or placed under Egyptian administration (the GAZA STRIP). Less than a fifth of the Palestinians who two years earlier had lived within Israel's new borders remained; the great majority had fled to escape the fighting or been expelled by Israeli forces, and then when the fighting ended were not permitted to return to their homes.

Zionism after the Creation of Israel

After 1948 some Israeli leaders (among them Ben-Gurion, Israel's first prime minister) argued that there was no further need for the Zionist Organization because it had achieved its goal of establishing a Jewish state in Palestine, which could now assume its functions. But although the new state did in fact take over many of the tasks formerly carried out by institutions of the Zionist movement, the World Zionist Organization (as it has officially been called since 1960) has continued to function. It promotes and raises money for Jewish immigration to Israel, carries on Jewish educational and cultural work in the Diaspora, and lobbies on behalf of Israel. Although many of the Jewish Agency's functions were also assumed by the Israeli government after 1948, it too continues to operate, mainly coordinating Israel's relations with Diaspora communities. One reason for the perpetuation of these formally autonomous Zionist institutions, often referred to as ISRAELI NATIONAL INSTITUTIONS and, in practice, arms of the Israeli state, is that they have provided mechanisms whereby Israeli Jews can gain preferential or exclusive access to certain state resources—for example, public lands, which PALESTINIAN CITIZENS OF ISRAEL were prohibited from leasing. (Recent rulings by the ISRAELI SUPREME COURT have challenged aspects of the state's preferential treatment of Jews and discrimination against its Palestinian citizens.)

More broadly, in keeping with Zionist ideology, Israel continues to define itself as a Jewish state, that is, a state not of its citizens (about 18 percent of whom are today Arabs), but of all Jews everywhere who have an automatic right, solely by virtue of being Jewish, of immigrating to Israel and acquiring citizenship. This automatic right to citizenship is denied to Palestinians whose ancestors may have lived in the land for centuries. Because all Jews everywhere are considered as belonging to the Jewish nation, there is in Israeli law no such thing as an Israeli nationality: the state officially categorizes its citizens as Jewish, Arab, and so forth by nationality and as Jewish, Muslim, Christian, and so forth by religion.

Within its pre-1967 borders, Israel is thus a formally democratic state in which one national group (the Jewish majority) enjoys a structurally privileged status and superior rights, while the members of the largest minority group (officially termed Israeli Arabs) are legally citizens with supposedly equal rights but in practice are subordinate and subject to various forms of discrimination and control. Israel's Zionist self-definition and sense of mission have also led it to continue the process of "Judaizing" the country—for example, through the confiscation of Arab-owned land for exclusive Jewish use and official efforts to settle more Jews in Arab-populated districts. And, in addition to its 1.33 million Palestinian citizens, Israel now rules over some 4 million Palestinians who are not citizens: the residents of the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem, which Israel has occupied since 1967 and to which it has extended the Zionist project by implanting half a million Jewish settlers, largely on confiscated Palestinian land. (Israel withdrew its forces and settlements from Gaza in 2005 but continues to control its land borders, airspace and sea access, and to conduct military operations within it.)

Although Israeli Jews are often bitterly divided along ethnic, class, secular/religious, and ideological lines, most continue to see themselves as Zionists. What this means varies a great deal, however. It may mean belief in the right of the Jews to settle and control all of the land of Israel (i.e., pre-1967 Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territories), a feeling that Israel should provide a safe haven for persecuted Jews, or merely a vague sense of connection with Jews worldwide. For many, Zionism overlaps with Israeli patriotism, though the two are analytically distinguishable.

For younger Israeli Jews overexposed to and weary of official discourse, the term “Zionism” has been used as a slang synonym for “bombast.” In recent decades social, cultural, and political changes have somewhat weakened the once nearly monolithic grip of Zionist ideology and opened greater space for non-Zionist and post-Zionist perspectives in certain circles. Nonetheless, when they feel threatened, Israeli Jews (including avowedly leftist and liberal Zionists) have tended to put their doubts and conflicts aside and close ranks. Criticism of Zionism by non-Jews—for example, the 1975 UN General Assembly resolution denouncing Zionism as “a form of racism and racial discrimination,” repealed in 1991—and even criticism of Israeli policies and actions with regard to the Palestinians and the Arab states are widely perceived in Israel as manifestations of anti-Semitism. And Jewish critics are often denounced as “self-hating Jews.” Despite their state’s military strength, many Israeli Jews continue to see themselves as misunderstood and wronged victims, threatened and largely isolated in an essentially hostile world.

In the years since 1948, there have been some noteworthy developments within Zionist ideology. For example, Zionism’s traditional denigration of the Diaspora as not only unsafe but also morally degrading has eased somewhat, fostering a more positive evaluation of Jewish life outside the land of Israel and a practical (if not theoretical) acceptance of the fact that many or most Jews will continue to live elsewhere. In Israeli public life and official discourse, the Holocaust (which received relatively little attention in the state’s early years) has come to be represented as the central event in and key metaphor for all of Jewish history, proving the need for a Jewish state strong enough to prevent its repetition. The widespread sense of eternal victimhood engenders a fear among Israeli Jews that the Palestinians (and the Arabs in general) would exterminate them if they could, which makes them extremely skeptical about any peace agreements. Since 1967 much of the once relatively moderate religious Zionist camp has embraced a more extreme, even messianic, form of religious-nationalist ideology (JEWISH FUNDAMENTALISM) and has become the vanguard of the movement to settle and annex the West Bank (and until 2005, Gaza as well). At the same time, continuing a process that can be traced back to the 1930s, most ultra-Orthodox religious groups in Israel and elsewhere have in practice (if not in principle) mitigated their rejection of Zionism, and though most Israeli Jews define themselves as secular or vaguely “traditional,” Orthodox clericalist influences have grown significantly in recent decades.

Meanwhile, the descendants of immigrants from Arab and Muslim lands (the “Oriental” Jews or MIZRAHIM, who now constitute about half of Israel’s Jewish population) have fought to secure less discriminatory treatment, equal social status, and greater weight in the Zionist historical narrative and Israeli public life. Before 1948, Zionism, whose founders and leaders were exclusively of European origin, displayed little interest in these Jews. But after 1948 the Arab-Israeli conflict and rising Arab nationalism rendered their situation in most of their home countries untenable. Many migrated to Israel, where for decades they found themselves second-class citizens, consigned to the worst jobs and the least desirable neighborhoods and towns, and treated as uncultured. Their alienation and resentment, together with social, economic, and political changes set in motion by Israel’s 1967 conquest of the remainder of Mandatory Palestine, helped undermine the hegemony of (largely Ashkenazi-led) Labor Zionism and set the stage for the ascendancy of the Zionist right (the ideological heirs of Jabotinsky), as well as for a reconfiguration of many aspects of Israeli Jewish society in subsequent decades.

Since the 1967 WAR, support for and identification with Israel have come to be a key component of secular Jewish identity for many Jews in Western Europe and especially the United States, which has the world’s largest Jewish community. But that identification, which might be regarded as a victory for Zionism, is unencumbered by any personal sense of obligation to live in Israel. In fact, few Jews from these countries have chosen to immigrate to Israel, nor does it seem likely that significant numbers will start doing so anytime soon. For most Jews, Zionism has continued to be, as the old joke goes, a matter of “an American Jew donating money to a French Jew to fund a Russian Jew’s immigration to Israel.” Indeed, generally speaking, large numbers of Jews have gone to Palestine (and later to Israel) only when confronted with inequality of rights and opportunities, discrimination, or persecution in their own countries, and only when other options have been foreclosed. Even many SOVIET JEWS emigrating in the 1970s or 1990s showed a preference for the United States or other Western countries, requiring strenuous efforts by the Israeli government and Zionist organizations to channel them to Israel. So although one might say that Zionism has widely permeated Jewish identity in the Diaspora, in that Israel has come to be seen as central to that identity and to Jewish life (outside of traditionally anti-Zionist Orthodox circles), it has done so in a rather diluted form.

Zionism: A Balance Sheet

In one obvious sense, Zionism can be judged a tremendous success: the grandiose, one might even say crackpot, dream of a Viennese journalist was realized five decades later with the creation of a new nation-state. That state now contains about 40 percent of the world's Jews; it has repeatedly proven its strength and durability; and, despite class and ethnic inequalities and divisions, it has a relatively well-educated populace, a highly developed economy, and a lively political and cultural life. Yet things are not quite so simple or clear-cut. For one thing, despite its overwhelming military superiority, Israel has in the six decades of its existence failed to compel the indigenous Arabs of Palestine to abandon their aspirations for an independent nation-state of their own in some or all of their ancestral homeland. Indeed, since 1948 a distinctive sense of Palestinian nationhood has, if anything, grown stronger and more widespread among Palestinians within and outside of Palestine than it was in the British Mandate period.

It is true that, although nearly all Palestinians continue to reject Zionism's moral claims to Palestine, in the past two decades many (including the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION leadership) have declared their willingness to accept the existence of a Jewish state encompassing three-quarters of what was once Palestine. This acceptance, however, is predicated on the Palestinians securing their own independent state in the remaining one-quarter (the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem) and some reasonable resolution of the REFUGEE problem. Widespread (but not universal) Palestinian acquiescence in Israel's existence within its 1967 borders could be reckoned a major victory for Zionism, and liberal and left-wing Zionists have advocated such a deal (endorsed by virtually the entire world community, including most Arab states) as being in Israel's own best long-term interests.

But no Israeli government has actually been willing to accept this Palestinian offer for a compromise resolution of the conflict. The dominant political forces in Israel remain enmeshed in Zionism's narrative of Jewish history, rights, and claims, including the claim to part or all of the Occupied Territories and the Jewish SETTLEMENTS implanted in them since 1967. Seeing themselves as innocent victims of inexplicable and irrational Arab hatred and violence rather than as powerful occupiers, they continue to find it difficult to accept the legitimacy of the rights and aspirations of the Palestinians—and all too often even their humanity. Nor can they grasp the basic fact that Zionism's triumph, the creation of Israel as it unfolded in 1947–1949, was for the Palestinians a catastrophe for which Israel must accept some degree of moral responsibility. Israel is accustomed, moreover, to pursuing policies based on the firmly held axiom (with deep roots in Zionist thought and practice) that Israel can only achieve security and peace by using its overwhelming military superiority to compel the Palestinians to capitulate. Yet despite massive Israeli repression and increasingly brutal and indiscriminate levels of violence, Israel has so far failed to secure this goal.

Israel has also not been able to compel most of the Arab states to accept peace on its terms and without a prior or simultaneous resolution of its conflict with the Palestinians. As a result, the struggle for control of Palestine and Israel's conflicts with most of the Arab and Muslim states in the region grind on, exacting a terrible price from the Palestinians (and sometimes other Arabs) but also requiring Israeli Jews to live in a highly militarized society and endure an apparently permanent state of threat, conflict, and abnormality. This is not what Zionism promised to deliver. Equally ironic (and tragic) is the fact that, although Zionism promised to establish a safe haven for Jews, of all the world's major Jewish communities, it is in Israel that Jews face the gravest threat to their physical safety.

The apparently ineradicable persistence of the Palestinians also suggests that, even if Israel retains its military superiority, the Zionist achievement after 1948 of a Jewish majority in historic Palestine will be impermanent. Barring mass expulsions of Arabs or an unlikely massive surge in Jewish immigration, Arabs (including both the residents of the occupied West Bank and Gaza and the Palestinian minority within Israel's 1967 borders) will within a decade or so again be a majority within Palestine. This looming "demographic threat” has recently impelled Israeli leaders from the broad center of the political spectrum to try to implement the physical separation of Jews living within and beyond Israel’s 1967 borders from West Bank and Gaza Palestinians. One key way to achieve this has been the construction of a massive BARRIER, or wall, designed to maintain Israel’s control of as few Palestinians but as much land and as many Jewish settlements as possible. This effort to separate the two populations while perpetuating one group’s domination of the other (yet another manifestation, this time in concrete and barbed wire, of Jabotinsky’s iron wall, and for Palestinians a logical extension of Zionism’s century-long effort to dispossess them) has evoked comparisons with apartheid South Africa’s BANTUSTANS and is likely only to exacerbate the conflict between them.

It is also worth recalling that the realization of Zionism’s dream of Jewish independence has always required the support of a major power to enable it to overcome local and regional resistance. From 1917 to about 1939, that sponsor was Great Britain. In the years just before 1948, US and Soviet support was crucial in the campaign to secure a Jewish state. In the 1950s and early 1960s, Israel allied itself with France, with which it shared a common interest in combating Arab nationalism. And, from the late 1960s, it developed increasingly close ties with the United States, which remains Israel’s chief sponsor today even as Israel’s policies have left it increasingly isolated on the world scene—in fact, something of a pariah state. It is, in fact, massive US economic and military aid and strong political support—a unique “special relationship”—that has enabled Israel to persist in the policies it has pursued since 1967.

The extraordinary level of US support for Israel is often explained in one of two ways (though they are not mutually exclusive). Some emphasize the effectiveness and power of the “Israel lobby” (AMERICAN JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS) in securing official and popular support for Israel in the United States. Others have stressed Israel’s STRATEGIC COOPERATION with the United States since the late 1960s, when Israel began to act as a US client and proxy in confronting Soviet-backed regimes and radical nationalist forces in the Middle East and beyond. From the 1990s, a key factor has been Israel’s ability to promote its usefulness to the United States in fighting both TERRORISM (the rubric under which Zionism and then Israel have long classified all forms of Palestinian resistance) and the “Islamic threat.” In this period, right-wing evangelical Christians have become some of Israel’s strongest and most hard-line boosters in the United States, mainly because their eschatological vision requires the restoration of Israel in order to pave the way for Christ’s second coming—though the ensuing “end time” is not envisioned as ending happily for the Jews. Given some Zionists’ willingness to work even with anti-Semites to achieve their goals, perhaps this rather unholy alliance between the US Christian right and the Israeli right should not be surprising. But it is nonetheless ironic that Israel’s strength, perhaps even its survival, is still in large measure dependent on the favor of a distant superpower—and, one might add, on the political influence and financial donations of the Jews who from a Zionist perspective languish in exile in that superpower. Again, this is not exactly what the early Zionist visionaries had in mind.

From a historical perspective, one might suggest that Zionism emerged too late. Zionism’s project of creating a Jewish majority and a Jewish state in Palestine got under way just as a national consciousness was beginning to take root among the indigenous inhabitants of that land, making Palestinian Arab resistance to Zionism inevitable. More broadly speaking, though Zionism was originally conceived during the heyday of the colonial era, it achieved its greatest success—the creation of Israel—just as the era of decolonization was beginning. In that era, Israel’s origins as the product of European migration to and settlement in a non-European land, its Zionist character, its post-1967 OCCUPATION and settlement of the remainder of Mandate Palestine, and its treatment of the Palestinians would come to be widely perceived—especially but not exclusively in the Arab and Muslim worlds—as unjust anomalies. Finally, and ironically, Israel was established only after, and to a significant extent as a consequence of, the murder of most of the European Jews whose salvation Zionism had hoped to achieve. Yet Zionism as a full-blown nationalist ideology and political project could not have arisen any earlier, as it was very much the product of a specific late nineteenth-century historical conjuncture within Europe. Nor is it likely that Zionist settlement and state-building in Palestine would have gotten very far had British colonial rule not been imposed on this land after World War I.

A century after the emergence of the Zionist project the struggle for Palestine continues, under very different local, regional, and world-historical conditions, and it seems unlikely to be resolved anytime soon. Though Zionism overcame enormous obstacles and successfully created a strong Jewish state that today dominates all of Palestine and enjoys widespread loyalty among Jews, the long-term prospects of this project nonetheless remain uncertain. For Israeli Jews are unlikely to achieve the security and normality that Zionism promised unless they can somehow come to terms with the Palestinians and with the other peoples of the region in which they live—a prospect whose realization continues to be thwarted by key aspects of Zionist ideology and practice.

See also ANTI-ZIONISM; DEMOGRAPHY; ISRAELI MILITARISM; ISRAEL LANDS ADMINISTRATION; OCCUPATION; PALESTINIAN CITIZENS OF ISRAEL; PALESTINIAN SOCIETY, PRE-1948; TRANSFER AND DISPLACEMENT; TRANSFER COMMITTEE; WAR, 1948; YOSEF WEITZ; ISRAEL ZANGWILL

Bibliography

- Avineri, Shlomo. The Making of Modern Zionism: The Intellectual Origins of the Jewish State. New York: Basic Books, 1981.
- Avishai, Bernard. The Tragedy of Zionism: Revolution and Democracy in the Land of Israel. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1985.
- Benvenisti, Meron. Sacred Landscape: The Buried History of the Holy Land since 1948. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2000.
- Dowty, Alan. The Jewish State: A Century Later. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2001.
- Elmessiri, Abdelwahab M. The Land of Promise: A Critique of Political Zionism. Philadelphia: North American Publishing, 1977.
- Elon, Amos. Herzl. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1975.
- . The Israelis: Founders and Sons. New York: Penguin, 1983 [1972].
- Evron, Boas. Jewish State or Israeli Nation? Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1995.
- Gitelman, Zvi, ed. The Emergence of Modern Jewish Politics: Bundism and Zionism in Eastern Europe. Pittsburgh, PA: University of Pittsburgh Press, 2003.
- Hertzberg, Arthur. The Zionist Idea: A Historical Analysis and Reader. New York: Atheneum, 1959.
- Khalidi, Walid, ed. From Haven to Conquest: Readings in Zionism and the Palestine Problem until 1948. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1971.
- Kimmerling, Baruch. The Invention and Decline of Israeliness: State, Society and the Military. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2001.
- Laqueur, Walter. A History of Zionism. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1972.
- LeVine, Mark. Overthrowing Geography: Jaffa, Tel Aviv, and the Struggle for Palestine, 1880–1948. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2005.
- Lockman, Zachary. Comrades and Enemies: Arab and Jewish Workers in Palestine 1906–1948. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1996.
- Lustick, Ian. Arabs in the Jewish State: Israel's Control of a National Minority. Austin: University of Texas Press, 1980.
- Mandel, Neville J. The Arabs and Zionism before World War I. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1976.
- Masalha, Nur. Expulsion of the Palestinians: The Concept of "Transfer" in Zionist Political Thought, 1882–1948. Washington, DC: Institute for Palestine Studies, 1992.
- Massad, Joseph. The Persistence of the Palestinian Question: Essays on Zionism and the Palestinians. New York: Routledge, 2006.
- Morris, Benny. The Birth of the Palestinian Refugee Problem Revisited, 2nd ed. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 2004.
- Penslar, Derek. Zionism and Technocracy: The Engineering of Jewish Settlement in Palestine, 1870–1918. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1991.
- Ravitzky, Aviezer. Messianism, Zionism, and Jewish Religious Radicalism. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1996.
- Said, Edward W. The Question of Palestine. New York: Times Books, 1979.
- Sand, Shlomo. The Invention of the Jewish People. London: Verso, 2009.
- Segev, Tom. 1949: The First Israelis. New York: The Free Press, 1986.
- Shafir, Gershon. Land, Labor and the Origins of the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict, 1882–1914, 2nd ed. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1996.
- Shalev, Michael. Labour and the Political Economy in Israel. New York: Oxford University Press, 1992.
- Shapira, Anita. Land and Power: The Zionist Recourse to Force, 1881–1948. New York: Oxford University Press, 1992.
- Shlaim, Avi. The Iron Wall: Israel and the Arab World. New York: W. W. Norton, 2001.
- Shohat, Ella. "Sephardim in Israel: Zionism from the Standpoint of Its Jewish Victims." Social Text. 19–20 (Autumn 1988).
- Sternhell, Zeev. The Founding Myths of Israel: Nationalism, Socialism, and the Making of the Jewish State. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1998.
- Swirski, Shlomo. Israel: The Oriental Majority. London: Zed Books, 1989.
- Teveth, Shabtai. Ben Gurion and the Palestinian Arabs: From Peace to War. New York: Oxford University Press, 1985.
- Vital, David. The Origins of Zionism. Oxford, UK: Clarendon Press, 1975.
- . Zionism: The Crucial Phase. New York: Oxford University Press, 1987.

- . Zionism: The Formative Years. New York: Oxford University Press, 1982.
- Zertal, Idith. Israel's Holocaust and the Politics of Nationhood. Translated by Chaya Galai. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 2005.
- Zerubavel, Yael. Recovered Roots: Collective Memory and the Making of Israeli National Tradition. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1994.

—Zachary Lockman

Zionist Commission, 1917

In 1917, after the British government issued the BALFOUR DECLARATION, it appointed the Zionist Commission (Va'ad ha-Tzirim), made of up Zionist leaders, to advise Britain on the implementation of the declaration.

CHAIM WEIZMANN, who had exercised enormous effort and influence to obtain the Balfour Declaration, was appointed head of the Zionist Commission. In 1918 he traveled to Palestine for the purposes of (1) forming a liaison between the British military administration and the Yishuv; (2) coordinating relief work in Palestine and aiding the repatriation to Palestine of Jewish exiles, evacuees, and refugees; (3) assisting in the restoration and development of Jewish settlements and organizing the Jewish population; (4) assisting Jewish organizations and institutions in Palestine in the resumption of state-building activities that had been disrupted by World War I; (5) helping to establish friendly relations with the Arabs and other non-Jewish communities; (6) gathering information and reporting on possibilities of further development of Jewish settlements and of the country in general; and (7) investigating the feasibility of establishing a Hebrew University.

The commission, which arrived in Palestine in April 1918, consisted of five representatives of Jewish communities from Britain and one representative from FRANCE. They were joined later that year by two representatives from Italy and, in 1919, by representatives from the UNITED STATES. The commission spent a week in JERUSALEM with two days out for visiting BETHLEHEM, HEBRON, and Beersheba. In Jerusalem, Weizmann spoke publicly in an effort to allay Palestinian fears that the Jews were coming to take over. In spite of his assurances, many Arabs resented the fact that the Zionist Commission paid salaries to Jewish policemen and clerks and that the Birthday Parade of British king George V was postponed so it would not be on the Jewish Sabbath. Colonel Ronald Storrs, the British military governor, tried to keep the peace between Zionists and Palestinians—at one point, he had to prohibit the display of the Zionist banner. Later, Weizmann offered to purchase the Maghariba (Moroccan) quarter next to the WESTERN WALL for 75,000 pounds (around $375,000), an offer the mufti considered, but negotiations eventually broke down.

Weizmann also ran into conflict with the Orthodox Jews. He proposed that Jewish schools in Palestine teach in Hebrew—he even offered to subsidize schools that taught in Hebrew. But Orthodox leader Rabbi Sonnenfeld would not talk to Weizmann because he was a secular Zionist. Another member of the Zionist Commission, Menahem Ussishkin from RUSSIA, stayed in Jerusalem and established Kiryat Anavim (Vineyard City, or Raisin Town), which was the closest non-Arab source of food for Jews. After leaving Jerusalem, the group made a rapid journey through northern Palestine, visiting Ramallah, NABLUS, JENIN, NAZARETH, HAIFA, and ACRE, meeting with settlers at most of these places. On 4 June 1918 Weizmann met Emir Faysal (later King Faysal) in a desert encampment near Aqaba, where reportedly the emir expressed appreciation of the reconstructive work being done by the Zionists in Palestine.

On 22 July British general Edmund Allenby approved a city plan for modernizing Jerusalem. On 24 July Allenby and Weizmann laid the first twelve stones on Mount Scopus for the future Hebrew University. Meanwhile, in September, Colonel Ronald Storrs established the Pro-Jerusalem Society, which aimed to encourage development of the city. He raised money for this society from within Palestine and from British and US citizens. With this money the Zionists were able to repair and clear away rubble from the Citadel (the Tower of David in the OLD CITY), among other projects.

On 2 November the Zionist Commission organized a parade with singing and dancing to celebrate the anniversary of the Balfour Declaration. But the Arabs were fearful, and on 3 November a delegation, headed by Mayor MUSA KAZIM AL-HUSAYNI, brought a petition to Storrs protesting Zionist policies and making clear that the Palestinians did not want a Jewish state in Palestine. Later that year, Weizmann persuaded some Orthodox rabbis to form the Joint ASHKENAZI-SEPHARDIC Council. These were the first Orthodox Jews to break their resistance to Zionism.

At the end of its tour, the Zionist Commission was unanimous that

- Palestine officially be proclaimed as a “national home” for Jews.
- The land be politically organized as a “Jewish Commonwealth.”
- Immediate authorization be given for the free IMMIGRATION of Jews from any part of the world, for the unrestricted purchase of LAND by Jews, and for recognition of Hebrew as an official language.
- Great Britain be the mandatory power over Palestine, protecting the Jews and furthering the realization of the scheme.
- The scheme be executed, as the great powers of the world have declared in favor of it.

Differences existed along two lines: whether the Jewish commonwealth should be set up in the near future or after a considerable lapse of time, and whether the chief emphasis should be upon a restoration of the ancient mode of life and ritual, and exclusiveness and particularism of the Jews, or upon economic development in a modern fashion, with afforestation, electrification of WATER power, and generally full utilization of resources.

In the autumn of 1919, the Zionist Commission and the JAFFA Palestine Office merged, and all departments, except for the Immigration Department, were moved to Jerusalem. As of mid-1920, this merged group was the sole representative body of the (WORLD) ZIONIST ORGANIZATION in Palestine.

See also WEIZMANN-FAYSAL AGREEMENT

Bibliography

- Friedman, Isaiah. The Zionist Commission in Palestine 1918. London: Garland, 1987.
- Greenfeld, Howard. A Promise Fulfilled: Theodor Herzl, Chaim Weizmann, David Ben-Gurion, and the Creation of the State of Israel. New York: HarperTeen, 2005.
- Halpern, Ben. A Clash of Heroes: Brandeis, Weizmann, and American Zionism. New York: Oxford University Press, 1987.
- Lavsky, Hagit. The Foundations of Zionist Financial Policy: The Zionist Commission, 1918–1921. Jerusalem: Yad Ben-Zvi, 1980.
- Shapira, Anita. Land and Power: The Zionist Resort to Force, 1881–1948. Palo Alto, CA: Stanford University Press, 2000.

Zionist Congresses

See WORLD ZIONIST CONGRESSES

Zionist Executive

The Zionist Executive is the executive organ of the WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION. In 1935 DAVID BEN-GURION was elected chairman of both the World Zionist Organization and the JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL. As head of the Zionist Executive, Ben-Gurion led the struggle to establish the state of Israel. The Zionist Executive continues to be the most powerful body in the World Zionist Organization.

Bibliography

- Zwergbaum, Aaron. “Zionist Executive.” In New Encyclopedia of Zionism and Israel. London: Associated University Presses, 1994.

Zionist General Council

The Zionist General Council (Va’ad Hapoel) is the supreme body of the WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION in periods between WORLD ZIONIST CONGRESSES. It considers and decides upon all matters relating to the organization, in particular inspecting and supervising the activities of the ZIONIST EXECUTIVE. It has all the powers of the congress except for those expressly reserved for the congress. The members of the Zionist General Council are elected at the Zionist Congresses.

The Zionist General Council oversees and, insofar as necessary, decides upon the manner in which the executive will implement the decisions of the congress and of the council. It receives and considers the reports of the executive.

The Zionist General Council includes members of the Elected Assembly (the Va’ad Leumi), the supreme institution of the organized Jewish community in Palestine. The Va’ad Leumi was founded in 1920 and in its early years mainly fought for legal recognition of its activities. Later it became less active in politics and concentrated on the internal affairs of the Yishuv. In the 1930s, the Va’ad Leumi took on more functions—education, health care, and welfare services—and its budget was enlarged. The departments of the Va’ad Leumi included the Political Department, which dealt with relations with the Arabs, ties with the JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL, and negotiations with the British government; the Education Department; the Health Department; the Communities Department; the Rabbinate; and the Social Welfare Department. The Va’ad Leumi was also involved in internal defense and security matters, and organized recruitment to the British forces during World War II.

Bibliography

- DoingZionism.org. The Zionist General Council. World Zionist Organization, Zionist Activities Department. 2004. www.doingzionism.org.il/institutions/vaad\_poel.asp.
- Zwergbaum, Aaron. "Zionist Executive." In New Encyclopedia of Zionism and Israel. Edited by Geoffrey Wigoder. London: Associated University Presses, 1994.

Zionist Organization

See WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION

Zion Mule Corps

VLADIMIR JABOTINSKY, the founder of Revisionist Zionism, proposed that a JEWISH LEGION be formed to join the British in liberating Palestine from the Turks during World War I, but the British resisted the idea of Jewish volunteers fighting on the Palestinian front. Instead, they suggested the Jews serve as a detachment for mule transport at another location along the Turkish front. JOSEPH TRUMPELDOR subsequently formed the 650-strong Zion Mule Corps, of which 562 men were sent to the Gallipoli front.

Bibliography

- Ben-Ari, N., and E. Kanaani, eds. Joseph Trumpeldor: His Times and Tasks, Fifty Years after the Defense of Tel Hai. Tel Aviv: Tarbut Vehinuch Publishers, 1970.
- Feulich, Roman, and Joan Abramson. The Hill of Life: The Story of Joseph Trumpeldor. Lewisburg, PA: Thomas Yoseloff, 1968.

Zo Artzenu

Zo Artzenu (This Is Our Land) was an Israeli political protest movement created in the early 1990s and led by Moshe Feiglin, right-wing politician, and Shmuel Sackett, loyal follower of RABBI MEIR KAHANE, to block Israeli LAND concessions to the Palestinians, especially in the context of the OSLO ACCORDS between Israel and the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION. The movement blocked ROADS and used other forms of civil disobedience to make known their goals. Zo Artzenu has led the fight to keep land in Israel and the OCCUPIED TERRITORIES in Jewish hands and has also organized campaigns throughout the WEST BANK, GAZA STRIP, and East JERUSALEM to make its positions clear to Palestinians.

Feiglin and Sackett established Zo Artzenu after the Knesset banned the KACH party for its violence in pursuit of the expulsion of all Arabs from Israel and the Occupied Territories. They were determined to find a way to continue the goals of Meir Kahane and to foster a more "Jewish" and secure Israel, though by peaceful means. According to Feiglin, Zo Artzenu has initiated dozens of nationwide nonviolent protest activities and believes in employing nonviolent civil disobedience "against any attempt to uproot SETTLEMENTS or to hand over parts of Eretz Israel to the enemy." It does not agree with the more militant approach of Kahane's son, Rabbi BINYAMIN ZE'EV KAHANE, who organized the KAHANE CHAI movement, which was subsequently also officially banned.

See also THIRD TEMPLE MOVEMENT

Bibliography

- Burston, Bradley. "Who's the Fascist? Feiglin? His Foes?" Ha'aretz. 2 January 2005.
- Feiglin, Moshe. "Referendum, Incitement, and the King." Israelinsider. 21 October 2004. <http://israelinsider.ning.com>.
- . "Zo Artzenu and Jewish Leadership: To Create a Jewish State of Israel." This Is Our Land. n.d. www.thisisourland.org/who.html.
- Jewish Magazine* Staff. "Moshe Feiglin: A Different Type of Politician." Jewish Magazine. October 2006. www.jewishmag.com/107mag/feiglin/feiglin.htm.
- Lynfield, Ben. "Potent Bid to Thwart Gaza Pullout: Moshe Feiglin." Christian Science Monitor. 25 June 2004.

Zoning Laws and Regulations

Zoning laws and regulations are one method Israel uses to restrict the living space of Palestinians. Discriminatory zoning is implemented inside the Green Line, in the WEST BANK, and especially in East JERUSALEM.

Green Line

Inside Israel, the state has restricted Palestinians to underdeveloped enclaves, with reduced access to necessary resources, services, and facilities. Israel has no laws to prevent discrimination in issues of LAND ownership, leasing, and residency. Instead, it uses quasi-governmental agencies (e.g., the JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL and the ISRAEL LANDS ADMIN-ISTRATION) and zoning or planning laws to confine Palestinians to particular areas and prevent natural growth. Within “mixed” Israeli cities, Arab communities are often ghettoized as second-class citizens.

Israel creates National Development Areas to disburse larger funds for development and to provide tax incentives for Israeli industry, EDUCATION, and housing benefits. Although development areas are supposed to be determined according to socioeconomic criteria, the zones are drawn to include a disproportionate number of Jewish localities and to exclude nearly all Palestinian ones. In the 1998 classification, out of 429 localities accorded Development Area A, the highest priority status, only four were Palestinian, despite the fact that Palestinian towns and villages are consistently at the bottom of the socioeconomic scale in Israel.

West Bank

The zoning laws applied to Palestinian communities date back to 1942, when the British classified the vast majority of West Bank land as agricultural. The basic concept of this zoning scheme remains in effect to this day, meaning that the Palestinian population of Area C (defined in the 1995 INTERIM AGREEMENT between Israel and the PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION as more than 70 percent of the West Bank and fully controlled by Israel) is confined essentially to urban or village boundaries of fifty years ago, although its present population, including massive influxes of REFUGEES from the 1948 and 1967 WARS, has grown four times as large. The military authorities of the West Bank have granted to Palestinians only a small fraction of the building PERMITS required for housing, business, industrial, and urban development.

Since 1999, housing permits for Palestinians have been frozen in Area C, and the political intent of restricting the natural growth of Palestinian towns and villages has become clear. At the same time, Jewish SETTLEMENTS, including Jerusalem satellite settlements, are rezoned to permit massive construction and expansion. The Israeli settlements are part of a geopolitical and military strategy to make the formation of a viable Palestinian state impossible. Usually located near existing Palestinian towns and villages, and often overlooking them, the settlements often restrict expansion of Arab villages and towns and prevent the development of much-needed new housing through the imposition of zoning and housing regulations. Palestinians thus are prevented from moving outside refugee camps or from the patches of land on which they exist in the West Bank.

In the early 1990s, the CIVIL ADMINISTRATION of the West Bank prepared master plans for about 400 Palestinian villages that drew tight boundaries around the villages and were designed to contain instead of develop them. Most Palestinian towns are found in Area A (the 3 percent of the West Bank that was under Palestinian control until 2002), with pieces of towns and villages in Area B (the 27 percent of the West Bank, according to the Interim Agreement, under joint Israeli-Palestinian control, but since 2002 under sole Israeli control). Because of the restrictive boundaries around existing Palestinian towns and villages, any natural expansion that occurs is liable to extend into Area C, for which building permits are routinely refused, even if the property is isolated from any Israeli settlement or ROAD. To give a legal pretext for its actions, Israel has created a Kafkaesque system in which Palestinians have no voice in planning and no access to the administrative bodies that decide where and when houses will be demolished.

HOUSE DEMOLITIONS are a common practice implemented by Israel against Palestinians. One reason frequently cited by Israeli authorities for such demolitions is that houses have been built without permission. Yet many build illegally because zoning policies have made it extremely difficult for Palestinian owners to obtain permits to build on their own land or to add additional rooms to existing structures. Israel has almost routinely rejected any Palestinian application for a building permit since 2002.

East Jerusalem

In East Jerusalem, a commonly used strategy to achieve Israel’s goal—maximum territory with minimum non-Jewish population—has been the zoning of Palestinian land as GREEN AREAS. These large areas of land in Jerusalem are officially labeled public spaces but, in fact, serve as land reserves for the construction of Jewish settlements, which at the same time effectively freeze any Palestinian construction.

In East Jerusalem, Israel blocks Palestinians’ access to 66 percent of the land area through zoning, planning, and building restrictions. Whereas in the rest of the West Bank the Israeli authorities have cited old plans from 1948 to 1967, which give no opportunity for development, in East Jerusalem they have revoked or delayed development plans. In 1974 the Israeli authorities canceled the (Jordanian) development plan that had been approved in 1966 and that gave extensive opportunity for development. In the late 1970s, work started on an outline plan for some Palestinian neighborhoods. The first such plan was approved in 1984, but, as of 2006, four of the eighteen neighborhoods still have no approved plan. In contrast, the timescale for preparing plans for the Jewish settlements has been a matter of months.

Israel issues separate outline plans for Jewish settlements and for Palestinian neighborhoods. This allows different standards and procedures to be adopted for the parts of Jerusalem to be inhabited by the two ethnic groups. The need to confine the boundaries so as not to exceed Israeli planners' quota on the number of Palestinians living in East Jerusalem is cited in Israeli records as justification for the tight development boundaries. The plans for Palestinian neighborhoods have three main deficiencies: they are geographically restrictive, they have insufficient capacity, and the procedures are unsatisfactory.

Geographically, the plans for Palestinian neighborhoods establish a "blue line" boundary around most existing development within which land is zoned to allow "infill" development (i.e., in empty plots between existing buildings). Israeli authorities have never allowed significant allocation of new development land.

Israel zones land outside the blue line for shetah nof patuah (open landscape area). No development may take place there, which, in practice, often precludes even agriculture. Consequently, only 9 percent of East Jerusalem has been approved for Palestinian housing, and the great majority of this is already developed.

Most of the recent and current land confiscation by Israel is unplanned land or shetah nof patuah. Zoning as shetah nof patuah was frequently used in the past to "sterilize" land until later confiscation for Jewish settlement (as at Reches Shu'fat, Beit Safafa, and the major new settlement at Jabal Abu Ghneim [HAR HOMA]). For example, land at Shu'fat was zoned for Palestinian housing in the 1966 plan; this zoning was canceled in 1974 and the land later zoned as shetah nof patuah and planted with cypress trees; in 1994 it was allocated to the JEWISH NATIONAL FUND for housing, which has since been built.

The opportunities for Palestinian development in the plans are also restricted by the low permitted densities. The average plot ratio (permitted floor space divided by plot area) in Palestinian areas is only 60 percent, whereas the figure in Jewish areas is usually 150 to 200 percent. Building height in Palestinian areas is limited to two stories (in a single case, three), whereas Jewish development of up to eight stories is allowed even in visually sensitive areas.

See also BARRIER; BUILDING PERMITS; CLOSED MILITARY ZONES; DEVELOPMENT AUTHORITY; EMERGENCY ARTICLES FOR THE EXPLOITATION OF UNCULTIVATED AREAS; GREEN AREAS; HOUSE DEMOLITIONS; ISRAEL LANDS ADMINISTRATION; JERUSALEM; JEWISH NATIONAL FUND; LAND; STATE LAND; WATER

Bibliography

- Amnesty International. Demolition and Dispossession: The Destruction of Palestinian Homes. MDE 15/059/1999. London: Amnesty International, 1999.
- . Under the Rubble: House Demolition and Destruction of Land and Property. MDE 15/033/2004. London: Amnesty International, May 2004.
- Anderson, John Ward. "Israelis Act to Encircle East Jerusalem Enclaves in Arab Areas, Illegal Building Projects Seen Intended to Consolidate Control." Washington Post. 7 February 2005.
- B'Tselem. Limitations on Building of Residences on the West Bank. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 1990.
- . Planning and Building. B'Tselem. n.d. www.btselem.org/English/Planning%5Fand%5FBuilding.
- Elmer, Jon. "Sarit Michaeli: New Settlement Puts Pressure on Jerusalem Palestinians." The New Standard. 16 August 2005.
- Felner, Eitan. A Policy of Discrimination: Land Expropriation, Planning and Building in East Jerusalem. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 1995.
- Fenster, Tovi. "Belonging, Memory and the Politics of Planning in Israel." Social and Cultural Geography. 5:3 (2004).
- Ginbar, Yuval. Demolishing Peace: Israel's Policy of Mass Demolition of Palestinian Houses in the West Bank. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 1997.
- Lein, Yehezkel. Land Grab: Israel's Settlement Policy in the West Bank. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2002.
- Lein, Yehezkel, and Alon Cohen-Lifshitz. Under the Guise of Security: Routing the Separation Barrier to Enable the Expansion of Israeli Settlements in the West Bank. Jerusalem: B'Tselem, 2005.
- McGreal, Chris. "Worlds Apart." The Guardian (London). 6 February 2006.
- Rabbis for Human Rights. Home Demolitions in East Jerusalem: Questions That Should Be Frequently Asked. Jerusalem: RHR, n.d. www.rhr-na.org/homedemolitions/questions.html.

---

GLOSSARY

---

Abu Followed by a personal name, means “father of.” Individuals in the Palestinian National Movement were often given the title Abu as a pseudonym or nom de guerre—for example, Abu Jihad for Khalil Wazir.

Allah God (Arabic).

Aquifer Rain-fed underground stores of water that can be utilized through wells and springs.

Arab Legion Transjordan’s (later Jordan’s) regular army, formed in 1921 by the British. In 1939 John Bagot Glubb, known as Glubb Pasha, became the Arab Legion’s commander and transformed it into the best-trained Arab army and the most successful of the Arab armies during the 1948 War.

Armon HaNatziv Promenade The former palace of the British High Commissioner; a ridge that is among the most sensitive spots in Jerusalem outside the Old City walls; it is the Hill of Evil Counsel, holy to Christians; Jewish settlers are planning for massive construction at the site, including a large number of tourism and sports complexes, linking Silwan to East Talpiot.

Back-to-back A cumbersome system by which goods are transferred from trucks approaching from one side of a checkpoint/roadblock to trucks taking the goods onward from the other side. The system is also used to transfer the sick from one ambulance to another.

Bar (Bat) Mitzvah A ceremony usually accompanied by a feast to celebrate the occasion when a Jewish boy (girl) reaches the age of twelve or thirteen, and is then obliged to fulfill all religious commandments and becomes capable of sinning.

Beka’a Valley A fertile and strategically important region in Lebanon that separates the Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon Mountains.

Beraha An underground operation during 1944–1949 to move Jews from Europe to Palestine, largely through means of illegal immigration.

BILU (Beit Ya’akov Lekhu Ve-nelkha/Let the house of Jacob go!) Student organization formed in Russia in 1882 that established several early colonies in Palestine, most of which did not last.

Bin “Son of.”

Bnei Brak Israeli town near Tel Aviv, inhabited almost only by Haredim, mainly Ashkenazi.

Bund Organization of socialist and communist Jews of Eastern Europe who sought to preserve Jewish culture and nationality through socialism and perpetuation of Yiddish language and culture. Mainly anti-Zionist.

Al-Buraq Western Wall (Arabic). Also the name of the winged steed Prophet Muhammad rode on his mystical night journey to heaven from the site of the Dome of the Rock, and which he tethered at the Western Wall.

Bypass roads Roads that are for exclusive use of Jewish settlers in the West Bank, designed to circumvent Palestinian built-up areas.

Caliph Successor to the Prophet Muhammad, head of the Islamic community. There were two Sunni dynastic caliphates: the Umayyads (661–750 CE, ruled from Damascus) and the Abbasids (750–1258 CE, ruled from Baghdad).

Canaanites A Semitic people inhabiting Canaan

(Palestine) from late prehistoric times who were conquered by the Israelites around 1000 BCE.

Christian Zionism Protestant fundamentalists, supporters of Israel whose backing is based on a literal reading of the Book of Revelation, which requires the ingathering of Jews before the second coming of Christ can occur. It views the modern state of Israel as the fulfillment of biblical prophecy, and thus deserving of political, financial, and religious support, all of which it generously gives.

Circassians A term derived from the Turkic Cherkess, not the self-designation of any people. The term is used to designate various peoples of the north Caucasus who are Christian. Today a significant number of Circassians live in diaspora. Circassians began arriving in the Levant in the 1860s and 1870s through resettlement by the Ottoman Empire.

Collective punishment The punishment of a group of people for the crime of a few or even of one. It is contradictory to the modern concept of due process, where each individual receives separate treatment based on individual circumstances — as they relate to the crime in question. It is prohibited in international law.

Corpus Separatum Term used in the 1947 UN Resolution 181 (partition plan) to describe the proposed independent status of Jerusalem (and Bethlehem) that would not be the exclusive property of either the proposed Arab or Jewish state but under a permanent international trusteeship.

Covenants Contracts between God and man (or between men).

Cultural Zionism Belief that successful settlement and repopulation of the land of Israel required revitalization of Jewish culture and the Hebrew language before a state could be established. Jewish immigrants to Palestine were encouraged to establish a cultural and spiritual center for Diaspora Jewry. Based primarily on the ideas of Ahad Ha'am.

Dabkeh A traditional Palestinian folk dance.

Dead Sea An inland, salty sea that lies along the border between Jordan and Israel. The lowest point on earth.

Dinar Unit of Jordanian currency often used in the West Bank.

Dispensationalism A theological system that teaches that biblical history is best understood in light of a number of successive administrations of God's dealings with humankind, which it calls "dispensations." It maintains fundamental distinctions between God's plans for national Israel and for the New Testament Church, and emphasizes prophecy of the end times and a pre-tribulation rapture of the church prior to Christ's second coming.

Druze Members of a schismatic religious sect that broke from Shi'a Islam nearly a thousand years ago. Members live mostly in Lebanon and Syria and in the mountains around Haifa in Israel. Druze serve in the Israeli military, often as border guards.

Dunum Unit for measuring a surface area, especially land; 1 dunum = 0.2471 acre or 1,000 square meters; 1 acre = 4.04 dunums; 10 dunums = 1 hectare.

East Bank The land east of the Jordan River that is the state of Jordan.

Effendi Title given by the Ottomans to important Muslim clerics, lower-level bureaucrats, and educated members of the urban elite.

Effendiya Generally an urban middle class composed of first-generation urbanites from notable rural families who have taken advantage of expanded education and employment opportunities. Sociologically it served to erode the power and influence of traditional sectors.

Eid Muslim feast.

Elect Chosen by God.

Eretz Yisrael/Eretz Israel The Greater Land of Israel, whose borders for some Israelis include parts of Lebanon, Jordan, and Syria as well as the West Bank and Gaza plus present-day Israel.

Eschatology The branch of Christian theology that is concerned with the end of the world or of humankind. A belief or a doctrine concerning the ultimate or final things, such as death, the destiny of humanity, the second coming of Christ, and the Last Judgment.

Fatwa Formal legal opinion issued by an Islamic jurist.

Fellahin (singular, fellah) The rural Palestinian farming communities with communally shared ownership of the land and communally owned means of cultivation.

Fertile Crescent A well-watered and fertile area that arcs across the northern part of the Syrian desert. It is flanked on the west by the Mediterranean and on the east by the Euphrates and Tigris rivers and includes all or parts of the West Bank, Jordan, Lebanon, Syria, Iraq, and Israel.

Fida'i (singular) One who is ready to sacrifice his or her life for a cause.

Fida'iyyun (plural) Palestinian guerrilla fighters wherever they were located outside Palestine/Israel.

Fiqh Understanding, comprehension, or knowledge of Islamic jurisprudence. A jurist is a Faqeeh (pl. Fuqaha) who is an expert in matters of Islamic legal matters. A Faqeeh may pass verdicts within the rules of Islamic law (Shari'a).

Gadna/Gedudei Noar Israeli youth corps run by the Israeli Ministry of Defense for premilitary training of teenagers.

Gahelet A secretive, exclusive fraternity of young men who were followers of Rav Tzvi Yehuda and graduates of the Bnei Akiva yeshiva. Forerunners of Gush Emunim.

Galilee Northernmost, very fertile, mountainous region of Palestine, now Israel. The majority of Israel's Palestinian-Arab citizens live in its cities (e.g., Acre, Nazareth, Safed, and Tiberias) and smaller villages in this area. Israel has undertaken a major effort to Judaize the Galilee.

Gar'inim/Garin A cell of a larger youth movement, such as the Israeli Scouts or youths from a particular kibbutz, usually formed by young men of high school age in order to take part in various public welfare and/or military activities.

Geniza The storeroom or depository in a synagogue, used specifically for worn-out Hebrew-language books and papers on religious topics, although the geniza also contain writings of a secular, historical nature.

Gentile Anyone who is not of the Jewish faith or is of a non-Jewish nation.

Golan Heights/Syrian Heights. Syrian territory that is part of the governate of al-Qunaytirah, captured by Israel in the 1967 War, renamed "Golan Heights," and annexed in 1981. Remains the main issue of contention between Syria and Israel.

Goyim Somewhat pejorative term used by Jews to refer to anyone not Jewish.

Green Line The boundary separating Israel from the West Bank, which came into being as a result of the 1948 War and the 1949 armistice agreement between Jordan and Israel. Following the 1967 War, when Israel captured the West Bank from Jordan, the Green Line has represented the boundary separating Israel proper from the Occupied Territories.

Ha'apalah (or Aliya Bet) Illegal Jewish immigration to Palestine.

Hadith The collection of sayings and teachings of the Prophet Muhammad, part of the Sunna and Shari'a.

Hajj The Muslim pilgrimage to Mecca; also the honorific title given to a man who has made the pilgrimage.

Halakah/Halakhic The entire body of Jewish religious law. This corpus of religious law regulates every aspect of the Orthodox Jew's life, including religious ritual, familial and personal status, civil relations, criminal law, and relations with non-Jews.

Halutz (plural Halutzim) Jewish "pioneer," especially in agriculture in Palestine. In the framework of the Yishuv the halutzim farmed the land, built roads, and established new settlements.

Hamam (Turkish) A public bath.

Hamulah (plural Hamayel) Clan, extended kinship unit.

Hasbara Propaganda, explanation, advocacy.

Hasidism. A Haredi Jewish religious movement that originated in Eastern Europe in the eighteenth century, founded by Rabbi Israel ben Eliezer (1700–1760), also known as the Ba'al Shem Tov. It grew out of discontent with the Orthodox rabbinate and involved gravitation toward Jewish mysticism—the Kabbalah.

Haskalah Jewish Enlightenment. Jewish rationalistic movement in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century Europe.

Hectare A unit of area commonly used for measuring land. One hectare = 10 dunums. One hectare = 10,000 square meters. One hectare = 2.471 acres.

Heder Premodern Jewish school system.

HeHalutz (The Pioneer) An association of Jewish youth in the Diaspora whose aim was to train its members to settle in Palestine, which became an umbrella organization of the pioneering Zionist youth movements.

Herod's Temple The Second Temple. Built by the Jewish Roman king Herod on the site of what was believed to have been the First Jewish Temple. Destroyed by the Romans in 70 CE.

Hesder A yeshiva in which the students combine military service with religious studies. Also the name for religious units in the Israeli army that serve by special arrangement.

Hijab Muslim headscarf worn by observant women.

Hijaz A region of northwest Saudi Arabia on the Gulf of Aqaba and the Red Sea. It includes the holy cities of Mecca and Medina.

Hill Youth Radical younger generation of Orthodox religious Jews who oppose any resolution with the Palestinians and who are in the forefront of the movement of establishing outposts.

Housing Ministry Israeli ministry responsible for construction infrastructure and housing solutions. One of the most politicized ministries in the Israeli government in regard to the financing (legal and illegal) of housing and infrastructure in the Occupied Territories, including East Jerusalem, as well as the issuance of tenders for new housing in the West Bank.

Hudna (Arabic) Truce or cease-fire.

Ibn "Father of."

Intifada Uprising, literally "shaking off."

Jabal (Arabic) Mountain.

Jahalim Bedouin tribe displaced by the expansion of the Ma'ale Adumim settlement.

Jewish National Home Terminology used in the Balfour Declaration, understood by the British to mean a type of "home" for the Jews in Palestine; understood by Zionists to mean an independent "state" of Palestine.

Jezreel Valley A large plain and inland valley in the north of Palestine/Israel; part of the Lower Galilee region in Israel.

Jihad A Muslim concept that means first and foremost a struggle within to bring oneself into total submission to God and his laws. Also, the Muslim religious duty to expand and defend Islamic territory. Used as a synonym for "holy war."

Jilbaab Muslim dress; long, drab, shapeless, worn by observant women.

Jordan River The major river in Palestine. It runs from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea along the West Bank's border with Jordan. It has been the center of the water conflicts in the region.

Judaization The process of transforming a geographical area of mixed ethnicity into an exclusively Jewish area.

Kabbalah Jewish mysticism.

Karaite Jews who maintain that everything Moses commanded was recorded in the written Torah, and that an Oral Law was not given at Mount Sinai; thus Karaite Jews do not accept the Mishnah or the Talmud as binding.

Khilafa Caliph.

Kilometer One kilometer equals the distance 1,000 meters or 0.62 mile.

Kollel An institution for the study of the Talmud by adults who have finished their yeshiva studies.

Kotel (Hebrew) Western Wall.

Kuffiyah An Arab headdress consisting of a square piece of cloth folded into a triangle and fastened over the crown by an agal.

Ladino The language of Sephardic Jews, based primarily on Spanish, with words taken from Hebrew and Arabic, as well as other languages.

Lurianic Kabbalah The most important branch of Kabbalah since the early seventeenth century, dominating all subsequent Jewish mysticism.

Ma'apilim Illegal Jewish immigrants during the British Mandate.

Madrasah A Muslim educational institution specializing in the teaching of the Arabic language and Islamic studies.

Masada A mountain fortress overlooking the shores of the Dead Sea where Jewish Zealot insurgents held out for three years against the Romans after the fall of Jerusalem in 70 CE and then committed mass suicide to avoid capture. Masada has remained a symbol of Jewish heroism.

Maskilim (enlightened ones) Name adopted by the Jews who introduced modern influences into Judaism in the late eighteenth and nineteenth centuries (during the period of the Jewish Enlightenment).

Millet (Turkish) A religious community other than Islam under the sovereignty of the Ottoman state, mainly Christian or Jewish, in which the community had the right of autonomy in religious matters, personal status, community affairs, and all other matters that did not come into conflict with the laws of the sovereign.

Miri lands (Turkish) In the Ottoman system, lands that belonged to a local or distant ruler who had peasants working them. The peasants were allowed to consume and sell the products of their labor, but they had to pay the owners heavy taxes.

Mishnah (repetition) The basic and easier part of the Talmud often studied by itself and accompanied by special commentaries.

Mosque A place for prayer and worship in Islam.

Mount of Olives Hill outside the Old City of Jerusalem, venerated by Christians as the site of the ascension of Jesus Christ. It also contains a Jewish cemetery and is presently the object of Jewish settlers' Judaization.

Mufti A Muslim scholar who interprets Shari'a (Islamic law). One who gives legal opinions (fatwa).

Mukhabarat (Arabic) Police, internal security service.

Mukhtar Village headman, elder, often head of a kinship group (hamula) who is respected by the entire village; engages in the settling of conflicts that arise among members of the community; and intercedes with the government on behalf of the village/clan.

Mulkh lands (Turkish) In the Ottoman system, such lands were privately owned, belonging directly to private people. Both title and usufructuary rights were privately owned. (Contrast with miri.)

Muqata The Ramallah compound that was the headquarters of the Palestinian National Authority, where the Israeli government imprisoned Yasir Arafat from early 2002 until his final days, and where he was buried.

Musha Agricultural land collectively owned by and cultivated within a village.

Muslims People who believe in one God, the God of the Jews and Christians, and believe that the man Muhammad was the final or "seal" of the monotheistic prophets, beginning with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and on through and including Jesus, to receive revelations from God/Allah.

Nakba (Catastrophe) Term used by Palestinians to describe the outcome of the 1948 War.

Nasba Arabic for the magnitude of the defeat in the 1967 War.

Negev Large, oppressively hot, arid desert region of southern Palestine, now Israel.

Neighborhood procedure A practice used by the Israeli military whereby ordinary Palestinian civilians—neighbors—are used as human shields to protect soldiers when, for example, it is deemed necessary to break into a home.

Or Committee Investigative body established by Israel to determine why 13 Israeli Palestinian citizens were killed by Israeli police in the course of demonstrations that erupted in northern Israel in October 2000.

Oriental Jews (Mizrahim) Collective name used for Israeli Jews who are not Ashkenazi.

Orthodox In Israel and elsewhere, a common name for Jews who keep the rules of Halacha, or at least most of them. Orthodoxy refers to the behavior and practices of Orthodox Jews. (Contrary to Christianity, orthodoxy in Judaism refers mostly to practices and not to beliefs.)

Palestinians A nation of Semitic people (Muslim, Christian, and before the establishment of Israel, Jews) who speak Arabic, share common cultural traits, and have lived in the historical territory of Palestine for centuries.

Pan-Arabism A concept or movement for the political union of all Arab nations. Whether expressed through Nasirist or Ba'athist discourse, or in some other organization or ideological trend, it was inexorably linked to Arab political unity. The objective was one unified and sovereign Arab state across the Arab world.

Premillennialism Belief system that teaches that the second coming of Christ will occur before a literal thousand-year reign of Christ from Jerusalem upon the earth. This view is often contrasted with postmillennialism, which sees Christ's return after a golden "millennial age" in which Christ rules spiritually from his throne in heaven, and amillennialism, which sees the millennium as a figurative reference to the current church era. The greatest development and spread of premillennialism since the early church came in the late 1800s through the early 1900s with the rise of US fundamentalism and dispensationalism. Premillennialism has become prominent in the Evangelical faith.

Qadi A Muslim religious judge.

Qatruz (peasant) The qatruz is a farmworker with little or no landownership and without possession of working animals. The qatruz would work for landowners for a share of the harvest. Although the qatruz existed in Palestinian society, they were less numerous than the communal fellahin.

Al Quds (Arabic) Jerusalem.

Qur'an (Arabic, "The Recitation") The sacred scriptures of Islam that were revealed to Muhammad by Allah/God through the archangel Gabriel. He then recited them to his followers.

Rapture The popular term used to describe one aspect of the Lord's return as presented by the Apostle Paul in 1 Thessalonians 4:17. In Christian eschatology, the Rapture is the name given to a future event in which Jesus Christ will descend from heaven, accompanied by the spirits of all the saints of God, and then the bodily remains of these saints will be transported from the earth to meet the Lord and be rejoined with their corresponding spirits in the air. Immediately after this, all Christians alive on the earth will be simultaneously transported to meet the Lord and those who have preceded them. All will be transformed into immortal bodies like that of Jesus, often referred to as the "Resurrection body."

Redemption For Jews redemption means God will redeem them from exile and return them to the "promised land"; for Christians it means that God will redeem them from their sins and allow them to pass into heaven.

Restricted area An area the Israel Defense Forces arbitrarily deem "restricted" for a variety of reasons and which no one can enter except with a permit, which can be denied.

Sabra A native-born Israeli.

Sages The customary English translation of the Hebrew term "our wise men of blessed memory." Used primarily to designate all rabbis mentioned in the Talmud, but also to refer more vaguely to all past Orthodox rabbis.

Samud (Arabic) Steadfast.

Sanhedrin Ancient Jewish legal and religious institution in Jerusalem that appears to have exercised the functions of a court between 63 BCE and 68 CE.

Sanjak (Turkish) An Ottoman subprovince headed by an official called a mutasarrif.

Seam Area/Line The area between the Green Line and the Barrier wall in which many Palestinian villages and lands have been trapped as a result of the construction of the Barrier; constitutes 10 percent of West Bank land.

Security road A road constructed around a Jewish settlement or colony in the Occupied Territories by Israeli military forces or by colonists ostensibly to be used for patrols. However, these roads often end up being precursors for the expansion of the colony.

Semitic Anthropologically, a linguistic group originating in northern or southern Arabia. Both Hebrew and Arabic are Semitic languages. Religiously, a description of Middle East peoples that traces their origin from the biblical Noah and his son Shem; these include Jews and Arabs.

Shabab (Arabic) Pro-Fatah youth movement often associated with the stone-throwing teenagers of the First Intifada.

Shari'a Islamic religious law. Deals with ideology and faith, behavior, manners, and practical daily matters. Derived from the Qur'an (the word of God) and the Sunna (the teachings, sayings, and actions of the Prophet Muhammad).

Sharif (Arabic, "illustrious") An Arab prince or ruler who is typically a descendant of the Prophet Muhammad through his daughter Fatima. The governor or chief magistrate of Mecca during the years of Ottoman Turkish rule.

Shaykh A title of respect given to the venerable leader of a kinship (hamula) unit. Also a title given to a respected leader of an Islamic Sufi brotherhood. Also a title given to an instructor of Islamic religious sciences. Informally, a person very learned in religion and/or respected for piety.

Shekel The basic unit of currency in Israel, also widely used throughout the Occupied Territories.

Shi'a Lineage of Muslims who consider Ali ibn Abi Talib (656–661 CE) the first caliph because he was directly descended by blood from the Prophet Muhammad. Considered the rightful successors to the Prophet. Only about 9 percent of all Muslims are Shi'a, but in the Middle East they are the majority sect in Lebanon, Iraq, and overwhelmingly in Iran. There are no Shi'a in Palestine.

Shuha (Arabic) A form of mediation.

Sunni The word Sunni comes from the word sunna, which refers to the tradition of the Prophet of Islam, Muhammad, and his successors. Approximately 87 percent of the world's Muslims are Sunni. All of Palestine's Muslims are Sunni.

Suq Large, usually open-air, traditional Arab market.

Talmud (study) Although there are two Talmuds, Palestinian and Babylonian, the term without qualification always refers to the Babylonian Talmud, regarded as the most authoritative text by Orthodox Jews. The Palestinian Talmud (much shorter and inferior in its arrangement) enjoys only a supplementary authority. The basic part of both Talmuds is the Mishnah, a collection of terse laws written in Hebrew. The other part, called the Gemarah, consists of a discussion of those laws mixed with many legends.

Talmudei Torah Orthodox elementary schools for boys.

Talmudic period The period from 70 CE when Rabbi Judah the Prince redacted the Mishnah until 640 CE when the Geonim wrote the Gemarah. The Tanach (Hebrew) scriptures were written during this period, and the rabbis were primarily teachers and interpreters of the Torah. They developed the liturgy, calendar, and other aspects of post-Temple Judaism.

Tarbush A brimless, usually red, felt cap with a silk tassel worn by some, usually middle-class, Middle Eastern Muslim men, either by itself or as the base of a turban. Associated with Ottoman rule.

Tawijih Palestinian standard examination taken at the end of the twelfth year of school for "certification."

Tell In archaeology, a hill or a mound; in particular an ancient mound in the Middle East composed of the remains of successive settlements.

Templars Protestants from southern Germany who began moving to Palestine in 1868 to establish their vision of ideal Christian communities. Descended from the Knights Templar, an eleventh-century monastic-military order that played a key role in the Crusades.

Torah (Teaching/Instruction) The God-given written law in Judaism consisting of the first five books of the Hebrew Bible, part of the Tanaka.

Ulama Muslim religious official or scholar who was often appointed to official positions.

Ulpan Class or school for intensive study of the Hebrew language.

Umayyads The first of two Islamic dynasties. The Umayyad caliphs were based in Damascus and ruled the Islamic world from 660 to 750 CE. They were replaced by the Abbasids, who ruled from Baghdad until 1250. Surviving Umayyad monuments are found in Syria and Palestine. These two dynasties are considered legitimate successors to the Prophet Muhammad in Sunni Islam.

United Arab Republic The union between Syria and Egypt forged in 1958. It lasted until Syria's secession in 1961, although Egypt continued to be known as the UAR until 1971. It marked the high point of pan-Arab nationalism.

Va'ad Leumi (National Council) The National Council of the Jewish community in the pre-state

Yishuv; elected governing body/executive branch from 1920 through 1948.

Vilayat (Turkish) An Ottoman administrative subdistrict.

Wadi Dry riverbed that fills with water for a short time during the rainy season in the winter.

Wahhabism A Sunni fundamentalist Islamic movement named after Muhammad ibn ‘abd al-Wahhab (1703–1792), and carried forward by Ibn Saud, the first regent of Saudi Arabia. It is the dominant form of Islam in Saudi Arabia and Qatar.

Waqf A Muslim religious endowment. An endowment or assignment of funds or revenues for religious or charitable purposes in the form of a trust, meaning that the funds may not be shifted to another purpose. Landed property rendered permanently inalienable, the revenues from which finance charitable endeavors. Also, state lands and other property passed to the Muslim community for the public welfare.

Yamit An Israeli settlement of 600 homes and approximately 2,500 inhabitants in the northeastern part of Egypt’s Sinai Peninsula that was established during Israel’s control of the peninsula from the end of the 1967 War. It was returned to Egypt in 1982 as part of the terms of the 1979 Israeli-Egypt Peace Treaty. Yamit was evacuated on 23 April 1982.

Yerushalaim (Hebrew) Jerusalem.

Yesha The Hebrew acronym for Judea, Samaria, and Gaza.

Yeshiva (plural Yeshivot) Institution for higher Talmudic studies. A Jewish rabbinic academy of higher learning.

Yiddish The language historically of Ashkenazi Jews of Central and Eastern Europe, resulting from a fusion of elements derived from medieval German dialects and secondarily from Hebrew and Aramaic, various Slavic languages, and Old French and Old Italian.

Yishuv (Settlement). The body of Jewish residents, settlements, and institutions (e.g., banks, kibbutzim, political parties) in Palestine before the establishment of Israel.

---

CHRONOLOGY OF THE CONFLICT

---

Prehistory–History BCE

Human settlement in Palestine continues through the Bronze Age. Palestine’s location at the center of routes linking three continents makes it the meeting place for religious and cultural influences from Egypt, Syria, Mesopotamia, Asia Minor, and the Arabian Peninsula. It is also the natural battleground for the great powers of the region and subject to domination by adjacent empires, beginning with Egypt.

4500–3000 BCE (Chalcolithic period)

Along the Jericho–Dead Sea–Gaza–Sinai route, a culture originating in Syria, marked by the use of copper and stone tools, brings new migrant groups to the region, contributing to an increasingly urban fabric.

3000–2200 BCE

By the early Bronze Age, independent Canaanite city-states—one of which was Jericho—are situated in plains and coastal regions. Surrounded by mud-brick defensive walls, most of these cities rely on nearby agricultural hamlets for their food needs. They become urbanized and develop an alphabet. The Canaanite city-states hold trade and diplomatic relations with Egypt and Syria. Parts of the Canaanite urban civilization were destroyed around 2300 BCE, though there is no consensus as to why. Incursions by nomads from east of the Jordan River who settled in the hills follow soon thereafter.

2700–2500 BCE

The Sumerian king Gilgamesh rules the city of Ur, which then had a population of more than 50,000. Gilgamesh was the subject of an epic, “Gilgamesh and Enkidu in the Nether World,” (Sumerian), which was redacted and written in a Semitic language spoken by the Babylonians. Thus, though Gilgamesh was Sumerian, his epic is Babylonian. The stories in “The Epic of Gilgamesh” foreshadow the Hebrew bible, in the account of the great flood for example.

2200–1500 BCE

In the Middle Bronze Age, Canaan is influenced by the surrounding civilizations of Egypt, Mesopotamia, Phoenicia, and Syria. Diverse commercial ties and an agriculturally based economy lead to the development of new pottery forms, the cultivation of grapes, and the extensive use of bronze. Burial customs from this time seem to be influenced by a belief in the afterlife.

1900–1800 BCE

Sometime between these dates, according to legend, a Semitic clan of nomads migrates from the city of Ur in Sumer to Canaan and then on to Egypt. They are led by the patriarch Abraham, a caravan trader, who becomes the father of the tribes of Israel as well as of other Semitic groups, including the Arabs.

1790–1750 BCE

The Amorite king Hammurabi (1792–1750) conquers all of Sumer. He writes his Code of Laws containing 282 rules, including the principle of “an eye for an eye.” It is one of the first codes of law in world history.

1600 BCE

Though they preserve most of the Sumerian culture, the Amorites introduce their Semitic language, an early ancestor to Hebrew, into the region.

1400–1200 BCE

Sometime between these dates the Persian prophet Zoroaster (Zarathushtra) founds the religion known as Zoroastrianism, which is the oldest of the revealed creedal, organized monotheistic faiths in the world. It has a profound influence on Judaism and, in turn, on Christianity and Islam, whose leading doctrines they adopt. It is the state religion of the Achaemenians and the Sassanids.

1390–1330 BCE

Political, commercial, and military events during the Late Bronze Age are recorded by ambassadors and Canaanite proxy rulers for Egypt on cuneiform tablets known as the Amarna Letters.

1379–1362 BCE

Egyptian pharaoh Akhenaten bans the worship of all gods except one, Aten. With his wife, Nefertiti, Akhenaten establishes a new capital at Tel El-Amarna dedicated to the worship of Aten, a significant, if short-lived, monotheistic religion.

1200 BCE

The Philistines (after whom Palestine was later named), an Aegean “Sea People” of Indo-European stock, arrive and mingle with the local population, losing their separate identity over several generations.

—Egyptian hegemony and Canaanite autonomy are constantly challenged by such ethnically diverse invaders as the Amorites, Hittites, Hyksos, and Hurrians. These invaders, however, are defeated by the Egyptians and absorbed by the Canaanites, who at that time are thought to have numbered about 200,000.

1200–1000 BCE

Egyptian power begins to weaken; new invaders appear, including the Hebrews, a group of Semitic tribes, and the Philistines (“Sea Peoples”). The Philistines conquer the Levant and engage in conflict with the Israelite tribes. This ongoing conflict provided the occasion for the creation of Hebrew monarchy.

1020 BCE

Saul’s anointing with oil as king of the Israelites.

1004–960 BCE

David, king of the Israelites, finally defeats the Philistines and they eventually assimilate with the Canaanites. The unity of Israel and the feebleness of adjacent empires enabled David to establish a large independent state.

999 BCE

Jerusalem, the mountain stronghold of the Jebusites, falls to the Israelites.

952 BCE

King Solomon, David’s son, builds the First Temple in Jerusalem. Under Solomon, Israel enjoyed peace and prosperity, but at his death the kingdom was divided.

923 BCE

Upon Solomon’s death the united monarchy splits in two: a northern kingdom, Israel, based on ten tribes and having Shechem (the modern village of Balata, Nablus today) as its capital [later, c. 880, Samaria], and a southern kingdom, Judea, based on the remaining two tribes and having Jerusalem as its capital. The two kingdoms were competitive, politically hostile, and engaged in constant uprisings and intrigues—weakening both and paving the way for their subsequent capture.

734–732 BCE

The northern kingdom, Israel, is conquered by Assyria, which devastates the country and deports the people.

724–722 BCE

A new Assyrian ruler completely subjugates Israel.

597–586 BCE

Judea is conquered by Babylonia. The Babylonian leader, Nebuchadnezzar, enters Jerusalem, destroys the Temple, kills many from the elite classes, and, as was the custom of the time, sends the conquered people into captivity in Babylonia. The Jews living in Babylonia would have almost certainly come into contact with Zoroastrianism and, possibly, the Epic of Gilgamesh and the Code of Hammurabi. This is the period when the Torah was first codified.

538–515 BCE

Cyrus the Great founds the Achaemenian Persian Empire, conquers Babylonia, and permits the Jews to return to Judea, a district of Palestine. Under Persian rule the Jews are allowed considerable autonomy.

500 BCE

The beginning of a large influx of Semitic peoples, including Arabs from the Arabian Peninsula, into Palestine.

400 BCE

The Nabataeans make inroads into southern Palestine and build a separate civilization in the Negev that lasts until 160 BCE. Intact remains of this civilization can be seen in Jordan today.

334–200 BCE

Persian domination of Palestine is replaced by Greek rule when Alexander the Great of Macedonia takes the region. Alexander's successors, the Ptolemies of Egypt and the Seleucids of Syria, continue to rule the country. The Seleucids try to impose Hellenistic (Greek) culture and religion on the population—with considerable success among the elites on cultural forms, but not on religion.

165–63 BCE

The Maccabees, Jewish rebels, fight against the rule of Antiochus IV Epiphanes of the Seleucid dynasty. They found the Hasmonean dynasty and establish Jewish independence in the land of Israel for about one hundred years until 63 BCE.

63–37 BCE

First period of Roman rule in Palestine.

44 BCE

Rome crowns Herod the king of Judea. Jerusalem is overrun by Rome, and Herod slaughters the last of the Hasmoneans, then orders a lavish restoration of the Second Temple.

37 BCE–4 CE

During the rule of King Herod, Jesus of Nazareth is born and begins his teaching mission. His attempts to call people back to the pure teachings of Abraham and Moses are judged subversive by the authorities. He is tried and sentenced to death.

32–35 BCE–135 CE

Jewish revolts erupt continuously, numerous Jews are killed, many are sold into slavery, and the rest are not allowed to visit Jerusalem. Judea is renamed Syria Palaestina.

70 CE

Titus of Rome lays siege to Jerusalem. The Temple eventually falls, and with it the whole city. Titus orders the total destruction of the Herodian Temple. A new city named Aelia is built by the Romans on the ruins of Jerusalem, and a temple dedicated to Jupiter is built. Jews are not permitted to live in Jerusalem.

73 CE

Masada, an isolated rock plateau on the eastern edge of the Judean desert overlooking the Dead Sea, becomes famous for the battle (one of the last in the series of Jewish revolts) fought there between a small band of Jewish Zealots and besieging Roman troops. When defeat becomes imminent, almost all the surviving defenders commit mass suicide. The episode holds great psychological significance in contemporary Israeli society.

132–135 CE

Bar Kokhba's revolt against the Roman Empire by the Jews of Judea.

200 CE

During the second century the ancient Jewish oral tradition, explaining what the Torah scriptures mean, how to interpret them, and how to apply the laws—the Talmud—is first compiled and written in a document called the Mishnah.

313 CE

Roman emperor Constantine I legalizes Christianity. His mother, Helena, visits Jerusalem and Palestine, and the "Holy Land" becomes a focus of Christian pilgrimage. A golden age of prosperity, security, and culture follows. Most of the population becomes Hellenized and Christianized.

324 CE

Constantine of Byzantium marches on Aelia. He rebuilds the city walls and commissions the Church of the Holy Sepulcher. Christian pilgrimage accelerates significantly.

614–628 CE

Sassanid Persian occupation of Palestine after Persia defeats the Byzantine Christians.

628 CE

Muslim Arab armies invade Palestine, conquer the Sassanids, and begin to establish themselves.

638 CE

Umar ibn Khattab captures Jerusalem from the Byzantines and renames it Filastin. Arabization and Islamization begin. The Arab conquest in 638 begins 1,300 years of Muslim presence.

661–749 CE

Rule of Umayyad dynasty, seat in Damascus.

688–691 CE

Abd al-Malik builds Dome of the Rock shrine in Jerusalem.

705–715 CE

Al-Walid ibn Abd al-Malik rebuilds al-Masjid al-Aqsa (Al-Aqsa Mosque) in Jerusalem, the third holiest mosque in Islam.

749–1258 CE

Rule of the Abbasids from their seat in Baghdad. The caliphate falls entirely in 1258 to the Mongol hordes, but it is fragmented before that, and several small dynasties govern Palestine, including the Tulunids (877–906), Ikhshidids (935–969), Fatimids (970–1079), Seljuks (1079–1098). In 1098, Palestine falls to the Crusaders and endures the rule of successive Crusader kingdoms until 1187.

1193 CE

Salah al-Din defeats the Crusaders in Jerusalem at the Battle of Hittin and then establishes his own dynasty, the Ayyubids.

1193–1206 CE

Ayyubid rule in Palestine.

1260–1517 CE

Mamluk rule in Palestine.

1516

Ottoman rule begins in Palestine after the Battle of Marj Dabiq.

1517–1917

Ottoman rule in Palestine.

1746–1775

Rule of local leader Zahir al-Umar in northern Palestine.

1775–1804

Rule of local leader Ahmad Pasha al-Jazzar in northern Palestine.

1799

French army under Napoleon Bonaparte captures portions of Palestine.

1830

Egyptian army under Ibrahim Pasha captures Palestine from the Ottomans.

1834

Arab anti-Egyptian revolt in Palestine.

1837

Severe earthquake strikes northern Palestine.

1856

Tanzimat Ottoman reforms, including requirement to register ownership of land in Palestine and pay taxes on it.

1870s

Formation of Hovevei Zion in Russia.

1876

Palestinians representing Jerusalem sit in first Ottoman parliament.

1878

First Zionist settlement, Petah Tikva, established.

1882

Leon Pinsker writes Auto-Emancipation.

1882–1903

Formation of Bilu; first wave of Jewish immigration (Aliya) into Palestine.

1892

Railroad line built from Jaffa to Jerusalem.

November Ottoman government bans sale of certain categories of land to non-Ottoman Jews.

1893–1894

Dreyfus trial, Paris.

1897

First Zionist Congress in Basel, Switzerland.

1900

June Ottoman government dispatches commission to study effects of Zionist immigration and land purchases.

1901

Fifth Zionist Congress establishes Jewish National Fund.

July Rally among Palestinian cultivators in Tiberias area over Zionist land purchases.

1902

Herzl publishes Altneuland.

1904

Beginning of Second Aliya (through 1914).

—Writer Najib Azuri warns of political claims of Zionists in Palestine and of future conflict between Arabs and Jews.

August–September Conflict between Zionist settlers and Palestinian cultivators in Tiberias area.

1905

Seventh Zionist Congress.

1907

August Ottoman governor of Jerusalem circulates report on methods of Zionist land purchases and immigration outside the law.

1908

Young Turks revolt; new parliament; delegates from several Palestinian cities sit in second Ottoman parliament.
—Establishment of Palestinian newspaper Al-Karmel in Haifa.

March 16 Zionist-Palestinian violence breaks out in Jaffa. One Palestinian killed, 13 Jews wounded.

1909

Establishment of first kibbutz—Deganya; foundation of paramilitary group HaShomer.
—Establishment of al-Dusturiyya School, first private secular school in Palestine.

1911

January Establishment of Palestinian newspaper Filastin.

May 16 Ottoman parliament conducts first major debate on Zionism.

1912

Parliamentary elections return delegates from several Palestinian regions.

1914

Outbreak of World War I.

1914–1915

Husayn-McMahon Correspondence.

1916

May 16 Sykes-Picot Agreement.

June Husayn bin Ali declares beginning of Arab revolt against the Ottomans.

1917

November 2 Balfour Declaration.

December 9 British forces occupy Jerusalem.

1918

Establishment of the Arab Club literary association in Palestine.

April Zionist Commission arrives in Palestine.

June Emir Faysal and Chaim Weizmann meet.

September Remainder of Palestine occupied by British forces.

October First Muslim-Christian Association established in Jaffa.

October 30 Mudros Armistice ends Ottoman allied fighting.

1919

Paris Peace Conference begins.
—Beginning of Third Aliya (through 1923)

January 3 Faysal-Weizmann Agreement.

January 27–February 10 First Palestinian National Congress meets in Jerusalem. Sends declarations to Paris Peace Conference calling for independence, rejecting Balfour Declaration.

February National meeting of Muslim-Christian Associations in Palestine.

June–July King-Crane Commission tours Middle East.

August 28 King-Crane Commission issues report to Paris Peace Conference after touring Middle East.

1920

March General Syrian Conference in Damascus declares Greater Syria independent under Husayn bin Ali's son Faysal bin Husayn.

—Al-Nabi Musa demonstrations.

—British dismiss Musa Kazim al-Husayni as mayor of Jerusalem, appoint Raghīb al-Nashashibi.

April 25 San Remo Conference assigns mandates.

June Hagana organized.

July Herbert Samuel appointed High Commissioner for Palestine.

—French army expels Faysal from Damascus.

—British establish civil government in Palestine.

October Third Arab National Congress (Haifa) elects Arab Executive; elects Executive Committee known as the Arab Executive, headed by Musa Kazim al-Husayni.

December Histadrut established.

1921

Twelfth Zionist Congress; Chaim Weizmann elected president.

March First moshav founded.

—British appoint Faysal king of Iraq and Abdallah emir of Transjordan.

April San Remo Conference awards Britain a “mandate” to rule Palestine.

—Britain appoints al-Hajj Amin al-Husayni mufti of Jerusalem.

May May Day clashes among Jews in Tel Aviv lead to Arab clashes with Jews in Jaffa.

—British authorities prevent convening of Second Arab National Congress in Palestine.

October 1 Palin Commission report on al-Nabi Musa disturbances issued, not published.

1922

January Beginning of Fourth Aliya (through 1932).

—Britain establishes the Supreme Muslim Council with al-Hajj Amin al-Husayni as its president.

February Palestinian delegation goes to London.

May 1 Palestinian-Jewish violence in Jaffa kills 47 Jews, 48 Palestinians.

May–June Fourth Arab National Congress in Jerusalem.

June 3 Churchill Memorandum links Jewish immigration to Palestine’s absorptive capacity.

July League of Nations ratifies British Mandate including Balfour Declaration.

October Haycraft Commission links Jaffa disturbances with Palestinian fear of Zionist immigration.

1923

February 21 Second Palestinian delegation to London rejects Balfour Declaration.

May Palestinians reject British-proposed Legislative Council.

August Fifth Arab National Congress (Nablus) calls for economic boycott of Zionists.

September 29 Official onset of British Mandate for Palestine.

October First British census in Palestine issued: 757,182 persons, 78 percent Muslim, 11 percent Jewish, 9.6 percent Christian.

—British propose creation of Arab Agency; rejected by Palestinians.

1925

Palestine Arab Workers Society established.

—Hebrew University officially inaugurated.

—Revisionist Movement founded by Vladimir (Ze’ev) Jabotinsky.

—Brit Shalom founded by Martin Buber, Judah Magnes, and others, advocating a binational state.

October Sixth Arab National Congress meets in Jaffa.

1927

July Earthquake kills 272 persons throughout Palestine.

1928

June Seventh Arab National Congress in Jerusalem.

September 23 Jewish attempts to amend traditional liberties of worship afforded Jews at the Western Wall in Jerusalem, an Islamic waqf property.

November Islamic Conference meeting in Jerusalem calls for protection of Islamic rights to disputed area in Jerusalem.

1929

August 15 Zionist demonstrations at Western Wall.

August 23–29 Hebron Disturbances. Tensions over Western Wall lead to Palestinian attacks against Jews in Jerusalem, Hebron, Safed, and other locales; 133 Jews and 116 Palestinians killed.

October Palestinian conference on Western Wall controversy convenes in Jerusalem.

—Arab Women’s Congress meets.

1930

Establishment of Arab Bank.

January 14 League of Nations forms commission to study Palestinian and Jewish rights to Western Wall.

March British-established Shaw Commission attributes 1929 violence to Palestinian fear of Zionist takeover.
—Palestinian delegation travels to London to respond to Shaw Report.

October 20 Hope-Simpson Commission report on Jewish immigration and land shortages asserts country's inability to absorb large numbers of Zionist immigrants.
—Passfield White Paper proposes to limit Jewish immigration to Palestine.

December League of Nations commission on Western Wall upholds Islamic ownership rights to Wall.

1931

Irgun (Irgun Tzeva'i Le'umi, IZL, or Etzel) formed by Jabotinsky and others.
—Arab National Fund established to help Palestinian cultivators retain their land in face of Zionist land purchasing efforts.

February 14 MacDonald Letter (the "Black Letter") retracts Passfield White Paper.

November Second British census of Palestine: 1,035,154 persons, 73.4 percent Muslim, 16.9 percent Jewish, 8.6 percent Christian.

December French report on Palestine landlessness issued.

December 16 Pan-Islamic Congress in Jerusalem.

1932

Beginning of Fifth Aliya (through 1939).
—National Congress of Arab Youth held in Jaffa.

August 2 Establishment of Istiqlal Party, first major Palestinian political party.

1933

Opening of Port of Haifa.
—Adolf Hitler assumes power in Germany.
—Creation of Arab Agricultural Bank.
—Meetings between Jewish Agency head David

Ben-Gurion and Palestinian figures, including Awni 'Abd al-Hadi, Musa al-Alami, and George Antonius, on future of Palestine.

August Ha'avara (Transfer) Agreement. German-Zionist cooperation involves German economic advantages in exchange for emigration of wealthy German Jews to Palestine.

October Palestinian demonstrations and strikes to protest Jewish immigration and Zionist political objectives; Arab Executive announcement of general strike leads to political unrest.

1934

March Death of Musa Kazim al-Husayni, president of Arab Executive, leads to its demise.

1935

—Nuremberg Laws passed against Jews in Germany.

March 27 Arab Party founded.

June 23 Reform Party founded.

October 5 National Bloc Party established.

November Shaykh 'Izz al-Din al-Qassam and other guerrillas killed by British forces.

1936

April–October The five major Palestinian parties call for a general strike, which is widely observed and lasts until October.
—Arab Higher Committee formed from major Palestinian political parties to guide general strike. Presided over by al-Hajj Amin al-Husayni.

August 25 Lebanese guerrilla leader Fawzi al-Qawuqji and 150 volunteers from surrounding Arab countries enter Palestine to assist insurrection.

October 11 Arab Higher Committee agrees to cease general strike following intervention by Arab monarchs. Violence wanes.

November 11 Royal Commission, also known as the Peel Commission, arrives to investigate causes of the uprising.

1937

July 7 Peel Commission report issued, marking first proposal to partition Palestine between Jews and Palestinians.

July 23 Arab Higher Committee rejects Peel Commission proposal. Rebellion resumes.

September 8 Congress of representatives from Arab countries begins in Bludan, Syria; rejects Peel Commission. Marks increasing involvement of surrounding Arab states in the affairs of Palestine.

October British authorities ban Arab Higher Committee and other Palestinian political organizations. Al-Hajj Amin al-Husayni flees to Lebanon; other leaders arrested and deported to Seychelles Islands.

—Palestinian Arab Revolt resumes.

1938

Palestinian rebels control most of Palestine's major towns (Nablus, Ramallah, Tiberias, Old City of Jerusalem, Beersheba). Reinforced British troops defeat rebels and reoccupy the country.

November 9 The Woodhead Commission reports on its mission that finds partition unworkable.

1939

February 7–March 27 London (St. James) Conference: British, Arab, and Zionist representatives attend. Conference ends inconclusively.

May 17 MacDonald White Paper limits Jewish immigration to Palestine to 75,000 in total, restricts Jewish land purchases (regulations come into effect in 1940), and envisions an Arab Palestinian state.

—Jews found the Mossad l'Aliya Bet to arrange for illegal immigration.

September 3 Britain and France declare war on Germany. In Palestine, soldiers are recruited for the British army. About 26,000 Jews and 6,000 Arabs join and fight with the allies.

1940

LEHI, Lohamei Herut Israel, underground is formed by Avraham Stern.

1941

May Palmah underground established, originally with British help, as part of a force that is to fight a Nazi takeover in Syria.

June Farhoud against Jews takes place in Baghdad.

November 25 The Jewish illegal immigrant ship

Patria, carrying refugees from Europe and detained in Haifa by the British, is blown up by the Hagana to prevent transshipment of the refugees to Mauritius. The explosion is supposed to cause a small leak. Instead, the ship sinks and 252 people die.

1942

Federation of Arab Trade Unions is formed out of dissension within Palestine Arab Workers Society.

May 9 Biltmore Program, in which Zionist leaders, headed by Chaim Weizmann and David Ben-Gurion, set their postwar program involving an end to the British Mandate and demanding Jewish control over immigration to Palestine with the aim of founding a Jewish "Commonwealth."

1943

Warsaw Ghetto uprising.

—Palmah parachutes behind enemy lines in Europe.

1944

Jewish Brigade is formed to fight as part of the British forces in World War II.

October 7 Arab leaders meet in Alexandria to discuss postwar plans for independence and ways to prevent implementation of Jewish control over Palestine.

November 6 Members of the Jewish LEHI underground Eliyahu Hakim and Eliyahu Bet Zuri assassinate Lord Moyne in Cairo. Moyne is minister of state for the Middle East.

1945

Paramilitary youth organization Najjada established in Jaffa.

March 22 League of Arab States (Arab League) formed in Cairo.

May Germany surrenders.

November 22 (Second) Arab Higher Committee reconstituted.

December 2 Arab League organizes boycott of Jewish goods produced in Palestine.

1946

First branch of the Muslim Brotherhood organized in Palestine (Jerusalem).

April Report of Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry published. Recommends admission of 100,000 Jews to Palestine.

May 28–29 Arab League summit in Egypt calls for Palestinian independence.

June Fourth Arab Higher Committee constituted.

June 11–12 Arab League meeting in Bludan, Syria, adopts secret proposal to link shipment of Arab oil to Britain and the United States to their policies regarding Palestine.

July Morrison-Grady Plan is issued for a unified, federal government in Palestine.

July 22 Irgun blows up British headquarters in King David Hotel, Jerusalem, killing 91 persons.

July 31 Anglo-American Conference meets in London, proposes implementation of the Morrison-Grady Plan.

August US president Truman asks Britain to admit 110,000 Jewish refugees to Palestine.

September British limit Jewish immigration into Palestine to 1,500 a month.

—British start deporting illegal Jewish immigrants to detention camps in Cyprus.

—London Conference on Palestinian problem ends without agreement.

1947

January Paramilitary youth organization Futuwwa established.

January 26 London Conference reconvenes but yields no progress.

February 18 In wake of failed London Conference, Britain declares it will turn over future of Palestine to the United Nations.

April 28 Special session of UN General Assembly dealing with Palestine opens.

May 15 United Nations Special Committee on Palestine (UNSCOP) formed to suggest ways of resolving Jewish-Palestinian claims in Palestine.

July 18 Britain rams the illegal Jewish immigrant ship Exodus on the high seas. They tow it to Haifa, where it is the subject of extensive publicity, generating enormous public sympathy for the Zionist cause. The British Royal Navy then seizes the ship and departs all its passengers—all Holocaust survivors—back to Europe.

September 8 UNSCOP report published; recommends partitioning Palestine into Jewish and Palestinian states, with area encompassing Jerusalem and Bethlehem to be an international zone.

September 26 Britain announces its intention to end the Mandate.

October 7–15 Arab League meeting in Alayh, Lebanon, decides to finance military operations to assist Palestinians.

November 17 Emir Abdullah of Transjordan meets Jewish official Golda Meir in Naharayim.

November 29 UN General Assembly Resolution 181 (II) to partition Palestine.

1948

Jewish-Palestinian violence erupts in Palestine.

The period until May is characterized by numerous skirmishes, road ambushes, demonstrations, and clashes, organized by one or the other side, or spontaneous.

—Hagana implements Plan Gimel to capture strategic areas of the country in advance of British evacuation.

—Arab League forms Arab Liberation Army to assist in defense of Palestine; first units cross into Palestine led by Fawzi Al-Qawugji.

April 4 Hagana initiates Dalet Plan to capture areas of Palestine assigned by UN to the proposed Arab state.

April 5 Abd al-Qadir al-Husayni, head of the Palestinian force called the Army of the Holy Struggle, killed at Battle of Qastil.

April 9 Deir Yassin massacre: 100 Palestinians killed by forces from Irgun and LEHI.

April 13 Hadassah Convoy Massacre, in retaliation for Deir Yassin; Arabs kill about 80 Jews on their way to Hadassah hospital.

April 19 Tiberias falls.

April 22 Haifa falls.

—King Abdullah meets Golda Meir in Amman.

1702 Chronology (1948)

May 12 Safed falls.

May 13 UN appoints Count Folke Bernadotte as mediator in Palestine.

—Etzion Bloc falls (to the Jordanian Arab Legion).

May 14 Last British high commissioner leaves Palestine; Israel becomes an independent state.
—Jaffa falls.

—David Ben-Gurion begins his first term as prime minister (Mapai).

May 15 Units from Jordanian, Egyptian, Syrian, Lebanese, Iraqi, and Saudi armies enter Palestine to combat Zionist forces.

May 17 Acre falls.

May 19 Battle for Jerusalem begins between Hagana and Jordanian forces.

June 11 First truce begins and lasts until 8 July.

July 11 Lydda falls.

July 12 Ramla falls.

July 16 Nazareth falls.

July 19 Second truce, lasts until 15 October.

September–October All Palestine Government formed in Egyptian-controlled Gaza. Dissolves quickly.

September 17 UN mediator Count Folke Bernadotte assassinated by LEHI in Jerusalem.

October Israeli offensive breaks Egyptian siege of Israeli settlements in the Negev (Operation Yoav). Beersheva falls. In the north, Operation Hiram defeats the Arab Liberation Army.

October 15 Second truce ends.

November Pro-Jordanian notables at Jericho Conference call for Jordanian annexation of West Bank.

December 11 UN General Assembly Resolution 194 (III) accords refugees right of return and compensation.

—George Habash, Hani al-Hindi, and others form Movement of Arab Nationalists in Beirut.

1949

February Israel and Egypt sign armistice at Rhodes.

March Israel and Transjordan sign armistice at Rhodes.

March 17 General Refugee Congress meets in Ramallah.

April 27 Lausanne peace talks begin, which last through September 15.

July 20 Israel and Syria sign armistice.

July 27 UN mediator Ralph Bunche announces end to the fighting after completion of four Arab-Israeli armistice agreements.

December Jordan annexes that part of Palestine controlled by its forces (known as the West Bank); UN establishes United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA).

1950

January Israel annexes West Jerusalem.

—Israel passes Law of Return.

—Israel imposes military law on its Palestinian citizens.

March 14 Israeli Absentee Property Law leads to Israel's seizure of vast area of land left behind by fleeing Palestinian refugees.

April 24 Jordanian parliament confirms annexation of West Bank and East Jerusalem.

1951

Israel begins draining Huleh Valley swamps.

July 20 Jordan's King Abdullah assassinated by a Palestinian in Al-Aqsa Mosque.

1953

August Husayn (Abdullah's grandson) becomes king of Jordan.

October 14 Unit 101 of the Israeli army, commanded by Ariel Sharon, attacks village of Qibya in West Bank, killing 53 Palestinians.

1954

January 26 Moshe Sharett begins his term as prime minister (Mapai).

July Lavon Affair.

1955

Numerous incidents between Syria and Israel, and Egypt and Israel.

February 28 Israel attacks Gaza.

November 3 David Ben-Gurion returns to the prime ministership (Mapai).

1956

October 29 Beginning of Suez War. Israel invades Gaza and the Sinai Peninsula. France and Britain join the war on Egypt on October 31.

—Israeli border guards massacre 49 Palestinian citizens of Israel in Kafr Qasim.

1957

Formation of Arab nationalist al-Ard movement in Israel.

March 1 Israel withdraws from Gaza and Sinai.

1958

Beginning of Israel's nuclear program at Dimona with French assistance.

—Egypt and Syria form the United Arab Republic.

1959

January Fatah formed by Yasir Arafat and others.

November Israel begins work on National Water Carrier.

1963

Al-Ard banned by Israeli authorities.

June 26 Levi Eshkol assumes the prime ministership (Mapai/12 January Alignment)

1964

Formation of Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) in Cairo at first Arab Summit. Ahmad Shuqayri becomes first chairman. Palestine Liberation Army and Palestine National Fund also established.

May First meeting of the PLO's Palestine National Council (PNC) in East Jerusalem and formal formation of PLO.

September Second Arab Summit. Attempts to formulate a plan to counter Israel's water diversion.

1965

January 1 Fatah announces first raid into Israel from Jordanian territory.

May 31–June 4 Second PNC meeting held in Cairo.

August Arab-Jewish split in Israeli Communist Party leads to formation of Rakah.

1966

November 13 Israeli army attacks Jordanian-controlled West Bank village of as-Sammu.

December 1 Israeli government lifts military law from its Palestinian citizens.

1967

June 5–10 Israel launches preemptive strike against Egypt, Syria, and Jordan, defeating all three countries in six days and capturing the Sinai Peninsula, Gaza Strip, West Bank, Golan Heights, and East Jerusalem. All of Palestine is now under Israeli control.

June 28 Israel extends jurisdiction of West Jerusalem municipality over a greatly enlarged East Jerusalem. Declares unified Jerusalem its eternal capital.

September Arab Summit Conference at Khartoum.

—Israel approves first Jewish settlement in West Bank at Gush Etzion.

November 22 UN Security Council adopts Resolution 242 calling for Israeli withdrawal in return for right of all states to live in peace in the Middle East.

December Formation of Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP) under George Habash.

—Beginning of UN peace mediation efforts by Gunnar Jarring.

December 24 Third PNC meeting in Cairo. Ahmad Shuqayri resigns as PLO chairman.

1968

March 21 Battle of al-Karama.

July 10–17 Fourth PNC meeting in Cairo. PLO leadership organs taken over by guerrilla groups; Palestine National Charter adopted in 1964 is revised.

July 23 Israeli airliner hijacked to Algiers by PFLP; first Palestinian hijacking.

December Israel responds to hijacking by destroying 13 Lebanese civilian airplanes on the ground in Beirut and damaging airport.

1969

February Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine (DFLP) formed by Nayif Hawatimah and others following disputes within PFLP.

February 1–4 Fifth PNC meeting in Cairo elects Yasir Arafat, chairman of Fatah, as chairman of the PLO; proposes democratic secular state in Palestine.

February 26 Yigal Allon (Alignment) assumes the post of prime minister of Israel after Levi Eshkol dies.

March 17 Golda Meir becomes prime minister (Alignment).

August 3 Israeli prime minister Meir announces that Israel will keep the Golan Heights, Gaza Strip, and part of Sinai, as well as East Jerusalem.

September 1–16 Sixth PNC meeting in Cairo.

November 2 Cairo Agreement between PLO and commander of Lebanese army.

December 9 United States announces Rogers Plan for ending War of Attrition between Egypt and Israel.

1970

May 30–June 4 Seventh PNC meeting in Cairo.

July War of Attrition (Israel-Egypt) ends after three years with a cease-fire.

September 6 PFLP hijacks civilian planes to Jordan.

September 16 Beginning of Black September, during which Jordan crushes and expels PLO.

September 28 Jamal 'Abd al-Nasir dies of a heart attack.

1971

January–July Israeli army crushes Palestinian guerrilla uprising in the Gaza Strip.

February 28–March 5 Eighth PNC meeting in Cairo.

July Jordanian army expels remaining Palestinian fighters from northern Jordan.

July 7–13 Ninth PNC meeting in Cairo.

November 28 Black September Organization kills Jordanian prime minister in Cairo.

1972

Bir Zeit College assumes university status; first Palestinian university in Occupied Territories.

March–April Municipal elections in West Bank return mostly nationalist mayors.

April 6–12 Tenth PNC meeting in Cairo.

May PFLP and militant, revolutionary Japanese Red Army kill 27 in an operation at Israel's Lod Airport.

September 5–6 Fatah faction known as Black September kills two Israeli athletes, takes nine others hostage during Olympic Games in Munich. All nine, plus five Palestinians, die during gun battle with West German police. Israel bombs Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon in reprisal, killing hundreds.

1973

January 6–12 Eleventh PNC meeting in Cairo.

April 10 Israeli hit squad kills three senior PLO officials in Beirut.

August Palestine National Front is formed in Occupied Territories.

October 6 October War (also called Ramadan War, Yom Kippur War) begins with Egyptian-Syrian assault on Israeli positions in occupied Sinai, Golan Heights.

October 22 UN Security Council Resolution 338 ends the war. Reaffirms principles contained in Resolution 242.

December 10 Israel deports eight leaders of the Palestine National Front.

December 21 Inconclusive Arab-Israeli peace conference takes place in Geneva.

1974

April 11 PFLP–General Command takes hostage in Kiryat Shemona (Israel) and demands a prisoner exchange. Israel refuses; Israel Defense Forces (IDF) storms building; 18 die.

May 15 DFLP gunmen take over a school in the Israeli town of Ma'alot, demand release of prisoners. Twenty-six schoolchildren die in resulting battle with Israeli forces.

June 1–9 Twelfth PNC meeting; PLO adopts revised strategy from democratic secular solution to one of establishing a “national authority” on any part of Palestine liberated from Israel, representing beginning of Palestinian acceptance of a two-state solution.

June 3 Yitzhak Rabin becomes prime minister (Alignment).

October Iraqi-backed Rejection Front formed by PFLP with other groups, in opposition to new PLO strategy articulated in June.

October 28 Arab Summit at Rabat recognizes the PLO as the sole, legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

November 13 Arafat addresses the UN General Assembly.

November 22 PLO gains observer status at the United Nations.

1975

Emergence of National Committee of Heads of Local Arab Councils in Israel, an important national organization among Palestinians in Israel.

April Lebanese civil war begins.

September US government bows to Israel's demand that it will have no contact with PLO until it accepts UNSC Resolution 242 and renounces terrorism.

November 10 UN General Assembly Resolution 3379 defining Zionism as a form of racism.

November–March 1976 Massive civil disobedience campaign is sustained in West Bank.

1976

January Fatah joins Lebanese civil war on side of Lebanese National Movement.

March 27 Israel deports two Palestinian mayoral candidates.

March 30 Land Day protests against Israeli confiscation of Palestinian land in Israel leads to death of six Palestinians in Galilee.

April 12 Pro-PLO mayors sweep municipal elections in West Bank.

May 31 Syrian forces intervene in Lebanese civil war, soon are engaged in action against PLO–Lebanese National Movement fighters.

July 4 Palestinian hijacking to Entebbe, Uganda; Israeli commandos raid airport, free passengers.

August 13 Lebanese Phalangist forces massacre some 2,000 Palestinians at Tal al Za'tar refugee camp following 53-day siege.

1977

Establishment of Arab Thought Forum in occupied West Bank.

—Establishment of Rakah-led Democratic Front for Peace and Equality in Israel.

—Emergence of Abna al-Balad movement in Israel.

March 12–22 Thirteenth PNC meeting in Cairo calls for an “independent national state” instead of “total liberation.”

March 16 US president Jimmy Carter affirms right of Palestinians to a “homeland,” first US president to do so.

May 17 Likud wins plurality in Knesset elections.

June 20 Menachem Begin becomes prime minister (Likud).

November 20 Egyptian president Anwar Sadat addresses Israeli Knesset.

1978

Israeli military occupation in West Bank and Gaza Strip replaced by “civil administration.”

March 11 Fatah squad hijacks bus near Tel Aviv.

March 14–June 13 First Israeli invasion of Lebanon, Operation Litani.

June 13 Israel withdraws from Lebanon except for six-mile “security zone.”

September 5–17 Camp David summit among US president Jimmy Carter, Egyptian president Anwar Sadat, and Israeli prime minister Menahem Begin. Camp David Accords signed September 17 in Washington, laying foundation for Egyptian-Israeli peace.

November Palestinians form National Guidance Committee in West Bank and Gaza Strip.

1979

Arab Studies Society formed in Jerusalem.

January 15–22 Fourteenth PNC meeting in Damascus.

March 26 Egyptian-Israeli Peace Treaty signed in Washington.

March 31 PLO and Arab League break diplomatic relations with Egypt in wake of treaty.

September 19 Arafat and King Husayn discuss idea of Jordanian-Palestinian confederation.

1980

June 13 European Community adopts Venice Declaration.

July 30 Israeli Knesset resolution states Jerusalem is “eternal capital of Israel.”

September 22 Iraq attacks Iran, beginning eight-year war.

1981

April 11–19 Fifteenth PNC meeting in Damascus.

June 7 Israel destroys Iraq’s Osirak nuclear reactor in bombing raid.

July Severe PLO-Israeli fighting across Lebanese border. Israeli planes bomb Beirut, killing hundreds. PLO artillery fires from Lebanon into northern Israel, killing several Israelis.

July 17 Three hundred civilians die in Israeli bombing of Beirut.

July 24 US mediator Philip Habib arranges PLO-Israeli cease-fire, indirectly given that neither the United States nor Israel recognizes the PLO.

August 8 Saudis announce Fahd Plan.

October 6 Egyptian president Anwar Sadat assassinated.

November 20 United States and Israel sign strategic cooperation memorandum.

December 14 Israel annexes the Golan Heights.

December 18 United States temporarily suspends strategic cooperation with Israel.

1982

March Israel bans National Guidance Committee and fires most elected West Bank mayors.

June 3 Israel’s ambassador in London is wounded by a member of Abu Nidal’s group.

June 6 Second Israeli invasion of Lebanon—Operation Big Pines/Peace for Galilee—to destroy PLO and Palestinian nationalism in Occupied Territories.

August 21–31 PLO withdraws from Beirut.

September 1 Reagan Plan for Arab-Israeli peace.

September 9 Fez Peace Initiative announced by Arab League.

September 16–18 Sabra and Shatila Massacres.

1983

February 14–22 Sixteenth PNC meeting in Algiers.

April 18 Bombing of US embassy in Beirut kills 60. Hizbullah claims responsibility.

May Anti-Arafat uprising begins among certain Fatah units in Lebanon, led by Sa’id Musa Muragha (Abu Musa) and backed by Syria.—Israel and Lebanon conclude an abortive peace treaty; Lebanese president Gemayel assassinated shortly after signing.

September 16 US Navy begins hitting targets in Lebanese Hills.

October 10 Yitzhak Shamir becomes prime minister (Likud).

October 23 Truck bomb kills 241 US marines in Beirut.

December 20 Arafat is forced out of Tripoli, Lebanon, by Fatah dissidents.

December 22 Arafat meets Egyptian president Hosni Mubarak in Cairo.

1984

September 13 Shimon Peres becomes prime minister (Alignment).

November 28 Seventeenth PNC meeting in Amman calls for an independent Palestinian state in confederation with Jordan.

1985

February 13 Husayn-Arafat Agreement announced from Amman.

March Palestine National Salvation Front established in Damascus by Palestinians opposed to Husayn-Arafat Agreement.

May Beginning of the Camps' War fought by Amal, backed by Syria, against the Palestinians in the refugee camps. It lasts until April 1987.

September 15 Three Israelis killed on yacht off the coast of Larnaca by Force 17.

October 1 Israeli air force bombs PLO headquarters in Tunis, killing 68, but fails in attempt to assassinate Arafat.

October 7 Abu al-Abbas's group hijacks the Achille Lauro cruise ship; one passenger is killed.

November 7 Arafat issues the Cairo Declaration renouncing terrorism.

1986

March King Husayn disassociates himself from Husayn-Arafat Agreement.

March 16 Major Palestinian groups sign the Tunis Document laying the foundation for the reuniting of the PLO.

October 20 Yitzhak Shamir becomes prime minister (Likud).

1987

April 25 Eighteenth PNC meeting in Algiers restores unity among Palestinian groups.

December 9 Beginning of First Intifada in the Occupied Territories.

1988

February Establishment of Hamas.

April 16 Israeli commandos assassinate PLO leader Khalil al-Wazir in home near Tunis.

May 13 First communiqué of the United National Command of the Intifada.

July 31 King Husayn cuts administrative ties between Jordan and the West Bank.

November 19 PNC meeting in Algiers declares a Palestinian state in absentia; accepts UNSC Resolution 242; issues declaration of independence.

December 13 Arafat addresses UN General Assembly in Geneva (after US bans his entry to US), announces PLO recognition of UNSC Resolutions 242 and 338, recognizes right of Israel to exist, renounces terrorism.

December 14 Arafat gives press conference using US-designated terminology, after which the United States opens a low-level dialogue with the PLO in Tunis.

1989

October 6 US secretary of state James Baker presents his five-point plan (based on the Shamir proposals).

1990

May 30 Israeli navy captures commando boats of Abu al-Abbas near an Israeli beach.

June 20 United States halts dialogue with PLO.

August 2–February 28, 1991 Iraqi occupation of Kuwait and subsequent Gulf War lead to retaliatory expulsion of some 400,000 Palestinians from Arab Gulf countries in wake of Arafat's support of Iraq.

October 8 Israeli forces kill 18 Palestinian demonstrators at al-Haram ash-Sharif.

1991

January 14 Fatah official Salah Khalaf (Abu Iyad) assassinated in Tunis.

January 16 US-led coalition initiates Gulf War with Iraq.

January 18 Iraq's first use of Scud missiles against Israel.

April Secretary Baker initiates dialogue with Palestinian leaders in Jerusalem.

September Twentieth PNC meeting in Algiers.

October 30 Madrid Conference begins; PLO excluded.

December 10 Bilateral Arab-Israeli negotiations commence in Washington.

December 16 UN General Assembly adopts Resolution 4686 repealing 1975 "Zionism is Racism."

1992

July 13 Yitzhak Rabin begins term as Israeli prime minister.

September National Democratic and Islamic Front (also known as the Damascus Ten) formed in Damascus by Palestinian groups opposed to peace talks.

—Secret talks begin between Israeli and PLO representatives in Norway.

December 17 Israeli government deports 417 Palestinians from Occupied Territories to southern Lebanon.

1993

January 16 Israel repeals law banning contact with PLO.

August 20 Israel-PLO Declaration of Principles (DOP) finalized in Oslo.

September 10 United States resumes dialogue with PLO.

September 13 Israel and PLO sign DOP in Washington, agreeing to mutual recognition. Beginning of Oslo Process.

December 13 Target date passes to begin Israeli withdrawal from Gaza Strip and Jericho.

1994

February 9 Israel and PLO sign Gaza-Jericho Agreement I.

February 24 Israeli settler opens fire in al-Ibrahimi Mosque in Hebron; 29 Palestinians massacred.

April 6 First Hamas suicide bombing in retaliation for Hebron massacre.

May 4 Israel and PLO sign Gaza-Jericho Agreement II, incorporating April 29 Protocol on Economic Relations.

May 12 Entrance of first units of Palestine Liberation Army into Jericho to serve as Palestinian police.

July 1 Yasir Arafat enters Gaza Strip to head Palestinian National Authority (PNA).

August 29 Israel and PLO sign Agreement on Preparatory Transfer of Powers and Responsibilities (Early Empowerment).

September 26 Israel approves more housing construction in the West Bank, contravening the spirit of the DOP.

October 19 Hamas blows up bus in Tel Aviv.

October 26 Peace Treaty between Israel and Jordan.

October 30 First Middle East/North Africa Economic Summit in Casablanca leads to decision by Arab Gulf states to end aspects of the Arab boycott of Israel.

November 18 Clashes between Palestinian police and Islamic militants in Gaza Strip end with accord to end violence, signed on November 21.

December 10 PNA president Yasir Arafat, Israeli prime minister Yitzhak Rabin, and Israeli foreign minister Shimon Peres awarded Nobel Prize in Oslo.

1995

January 19 Rabin and Arafat meet; Rabin agrees to halt new settlements.

January 22 Car bombings at Bet Lid. Israel suspends negotiations with the PLO.

January 25 Israel approves building 2,200 new housing units in West Bank.

July 24 Hamas bus bombing in Ramat Gan.

August 31 Hamas bus bombing in Jerusalem.

September 28 Israel and PLO sign Interim Agreement (Oslo II).

October 26 Israel assassinates Fathi Shiqaqi, leader of Islamic Jihad, in Malta.

October 29–30 Second Middle East/North Africa Economic Summit held in Amman.

November 4 Israeli prime minister Rabin assassinated by Jewish militant in Tel Aviv.
—Shimon Peres becomes acting prime minister in wake of Rabin's death.

1996

January 5 Israel assassinates Hamas bomb maker Yahya Ayyash.

January 20 First elections held for presidency and legislative council of the PNA. Arafat elected president. Fatah dominates in seats in Legislative Council.

February–March Four Hamas suicide bombings in Israel to avenge Ayyash's death kill 58 Israelis.

March 6 Mass arrests of Hamas and Islamic Jihad activists by PNA security forces.

March 13 Sharm al-Shaykh Declaration on terrorism.

March 27 First meeting of Palestinian Legislative Council in Gaza Strip.

April 22–26 Twenty-first PNC held in Gaza Strip (first PNC meeting in Palestine since 1964). PNC votes to delete anti-Israel sections of 1968 Palestinian Charter.

May 3 Acting Israeli prime minister Shimon Peres delays scheduled Israeli troop redeployments.

May 5–6 Israel-PLO Joint Communiqué on Permanent Status Negotiations.

June 18 Benjamin Netanyahu becomes prime minister (Likud).

June 21 Arab Summit in Cairo calls on Israel to live up to commitments.

September 25–26 Battles between Israel and PNA security forces over Israel's opening of the controversial Hasmonean Tunnel under one wall of the al-Aqsa Mosque; 86 Palestinians and 15 Israeli soldiers killed.

November 12 Third Middle East/North Africa Economic Summit opens in Cairo.

December 2 Israel approves construction of new housing units in West Bank.

December 13 Israeli cabinet restores top-level priority to settlement expansion.

1997

January 14 Israeli Army begins forced removal of 400 Jahalin Bedouin from lands near Ma'ale Adumim settlement.

January 15 Israel and PLO sign Hebron Protocol.

February 10 Israel's armed forces present "final status" map to cabinet; 51.8 percent of West Bank would remain under Israel.

March 7 Israeli cabinet approves a troop redeployment on the West Bank that accords the PNA 2 percent more land.

March 18 Israeli prime minister Netanyahu breaks ground for construction of new Jerusalem settlement, Har Homa, on Palestinian land near Jebel Abu Ghneim. Israeli-PLO talks break down.

March 21 Suicide bomb in Tel Aviv café kills three Israeli women and bomber.

March 22 Israel closes off Israel to all residents of West Bank and Gaza Strip, leading to a week of clashes between Israeli soldiers and Palestinians in Bethlehem, Hebron, Nablus, and Ramallah. Disturbances continue throughout the Occupied Territories.

July 30 Two suicide bombers kill 15 Israelis in a market in West Jerusalem. Israel tightens the closure, suspends financial transfers to the PNA, and arrests 200 Palestinians.

September 4 Three suicide bombers kill four Israelis.

September 8 Palestinian police arrest 200 Hamas members in Gaza Strip.

September 25 Israeli agents in Amman, Jordan, bungle the assassination of Hamas leader Khalid Meshal. Israel releases Sheikh Ahmad Yasin (Hamas leader) to compensate King Husayn for the humiliation.

December 17 Israel and PLO sign Memorandum on Security Understanding.

1998

January 7 Israeli government approves construction of 574 more housing units in Efrat, near Bethlehem.

March 10 Clashes in Hebron after three Palestinians are killed.

April 11 PNA security forces arrest dozens of Hamas members.

May 26 Clashes in East Jerusalem as Ateret Cohanim builds more Jewish housing in Muslim quarter of Old City.

June 8 ELAD settlers seize houses in Silwan, East Jerusalem.

July 31 UN Human Rights Commission (Geneva) criticizes Israel's treatment of Palestinians in Israel and Occupied Territories.

August 27 Pipe bomb in Tel Aviv injures 18 people. In retaliation Israel approves construction of 132 Jewish homes in the Palestinian neighborhood of Ras al-Amud.

October 15–23 Negotiations at Wye River for an interim thirteen-percent redeployment in three stages over twelve weeks.

October 23 Israel and PLO sign Wye River Memorandum.

November 11 Israeli cabinet conditionally ratifies Wye agreement.

November 24 First flight from Gaza airport.

December 14 President Bill Clinton becomes first US president to visit Palestinian Authority; he addresses the PNC meeting in Gaza that revises the Palestinian Charter.

December 20 Israeli cabinet votes to suspend Wye agreement until PNA agrees to a new set of conditions.

December 31 Israeli Housing Ministry issues tenders to construct 1,051 housing units in the West Bank.

1999

February 7 King Husayn dies; his eldest son is crowned King Abdullah.

May 4 End of five-year period by which Israel and PLO are to have resolved all final peace arrangements in "final status" agreement.

July 6 Ehud Barak becomes prime minister (One Israel/Labor).

September Israeli Supreme Court bans torture of Palestinian prisoners.

September 4 Israel and PLO sign Sharm al-Shaykh Memorandum on Implementation of Outstanding Commitments.

October 25 "Safe Passage" opens between Gaza and Tarqumiyah in Hebron, but under Israeli control.

November 8 Israeli and Palestinian teams begin final status negotiations.

November 15 Israel postpones second of three land transfers agreed to in Wye II.

2000

May 10 One track of final status negotiations begins in Sweden.

May 24 Israeli army withdraws from southern Lebanon after 22 years of occupation.

June 10 Syrian president Hafez al-Asad dies.

June 13 Another track of final status negotiations begins at Bolling Air Force Base.

July Construction begun on the Gaza seaport, but unilaterally halted by Israel in October.

July 11–25 Barak and Arafat negotiate at Camp David, hosted by Bill Clinton. The two sides fail to reach an agreement.

—B'tselem releases statistics on fatalities from the First Intifada, which it dates as December 1987 to September 2000: 1,376 Palestinians killed by Israeli security forces, of them 281 minors under the age of 16; 113 Palestinians killed by Israeli civilians, of them 23 minors under 16; 91 Israeli security forces killed by Palestinians; 94 Israeli civilians killed by Palestinians, of them 4 minors.

September 28 Ariel Sharon visits al-Haram ash-Sharif with a Likud Party delegation and surrounded by hundreds of Israeli riot police to "show that under a Likud government [the Temple Mount] will remain under Israeli sovereignty.”

September 29 Demonstrations begin at al-Haram ash-Sharif. By the end of the day, 7 Palestinians dead and some 300 wounded. Al-Aqsa Intifada begins.

October Demonstrations erupt across the West Bank and Gaza, violence escalates. In the first five days, at least 47 Palestinians are shot dead and 1,885 are wounded as a result of both live fire and rubber-coated steel bullets used by the Israeli police.

October 1 A general strike and demonstrations across northern Israel begin and continue for several days, known as “October 2000 events.” Thirteen Arab citizens of Israel and a Palestinian from the Gaza Strip are killed by Israeli police.

October 6 Israel hermetically seals the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

October 7 UN Security Council passes Resolution 1322 by 14–0 (US abstaining), which “deplores the provocation carried out at Al-Haram ash-Sharif in Jerusalem on 28 Sept. 2000, and the subsequent violence. . . . and condemns acts of violence, especially the excessive use of force against Palestinians.”

October 8 Israel closes Gaza International Airport, the Gaza seaport, the Safe Passage, and Rafah Crossing, and suspends all fishing rights.

October 12 Two Israeli reservists who enter Ramallah are arrested by the PNA police. Palestinian mob storms the police station, beats the soldiers to death, and throws their mutilated bodies into the street from a second-floor window. In response, Israel launches a series of retaliatory air strikes against the PNA.

October 17 Clinton and Mubarak convene Sharm al-Shaykh summit with Arafat and Barak.

October 22 Tunisia and Oman announce their severing of ties with Israel and closing their trade representations in Tel Aviv.

October 23 Morocco severs ties with Israel, closing the consulate in Tel Aviv and Israel’s inter-est office in Rabat.

—Israel closes King Husayn border passage to Jordan.

November 10 Arafat addresses UN Security Council, pleads for an international force to protect Palestinians.

November 20 The Israel Lands Administration issues a tender for 76 new housing units in the settlement of Elkana near Qalqilya, bringing the total of tendered settlement housing units by the Barak government to 3,575.

December 4 A Peace Now study on the Oslo period shows that housing in settlements grew 52.49 percent since September 1993 and the settler population rose about 70 percent.

December 9 Israeli prime minister Barak announces his resignation.

December 23 US president Clinton presents the Israelis and Palestinians with his proposals for an agreement on the final status (Clinton Parameters).

December 27 Barak accepts the Clinton Parameters as a basis for discussion but wants clarifications.

2001

January 3–8 PLO chairman Arafat meets with US president Clinton and accepts his proposed parameters “with reservations.”

January 15 Israel closes Gaza’s border with Egypt (Rafah) and destroys the runway and control tower of Gaza International Airport. Israel bans all trade through the Karni Crossing and cuts off electricity and water supplies to Khan Yunis. Hundreds of settlers rampage, torching Palestinian greenhouses and destroying trees and irrigation.

January 21–27 Negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians at Taba, Egypt, end in joint statement reporting substantial progress.

January 28 Ehud Barak breaks off peace talks with the Palestinians until after the prime ministerial election on February 6.

February 8 The administration of US president George W. Bush declares Clinton’s December proposals off the table. Barak sends a letter to Bush in which he declares Clinton’s

- proposals at Camp David and after are non-binding.
- February 13* In Gaza Strip, Israeli forces assassinate Force 17 member Masoud Ayyad with missiles from a helicopter.
- February 14* Israel imposes a complete blockade on the West Bank and Gaza Strip after 8 people are killed and 21 injured when a Palestinian bus driver rams his bus into a packed bus stop.
- February 21* Human Rights Watch accuses the Israeli military of using indiscriminate force in response to Palestinian gunfire, causing excessive civilian casualties, and calls on Israel to prosecute or discipline responsible soldiers.
- February 27* Labor leader Shimon Peres persuades party to join Ariel Sharon's right-wing government of National Unity—Peres to be foreign minister.
- March 7* Ariel Sharon becomes prime minister (Likud).
- April 3* Islamic Jihad commander Mohammed Abdel A'ael killed by Israeli helicopters in Gaza.
- April 17* For the first time since the Intifada began, Israeli troops seize land controlled by the PNA in Gaza (Area A) and divide the Strip into three parts.
- May 5* Israeli forces assassinate Islamic Jihad activist Ahmed Ismail.
- May 18* Suicide bomber blows himself up in a shopping mall in Netanya, killing 6 and wounding over 100. In response Israeli F-16 fighter jets bomb Nablus and Ramallah.
- May 20* Mitchell Report released, calling for an immediate cease-fire, a freeze on Jewish settlements, and more determined action against terrorism by the PNA.
- May 22* Ariel Sharon rejects the Mitchell Report's call for a freeze on Jewish settlement expansion, describing the settlements as "a vital national enterprise."
- May 31* Faysal al-Husayni dies in Kuwait.
- June 1* A Palestinian suicide bomber kills 19 young Israelis at the Dolphinarium discotheque in Tel Aviv. Yasir Arafat orders his forces in the Occupied Territories to enforce a cease-fire.
- June 3* Israeli authorities ban all private Palestinian vehicles from traveling on Israeli-controlled roads in the Occupied Territories and set up additional roadblocks around Palestinian villages.
- June 13* A new and fragile cease-fire takes shape after talks chaired by CIA director George Tenet. It calls on Yasir Arafat to clamp down on militants, and on Israel to withdraw from territory seized during the Intifada.
- June 24* Israeli forces assassinate Fatah activist Osama Jawabreh from Nablus.
- June 26* The second meeting in three months between US president George W. Bush and Israeli prime minister Ariel Sharon.
- June 28* Yasir Arafat wins the support of the United States for a monitoring force to oversee a Middle East cease-fire.
- July 2* Two car bombs explode in central Israel, hours after three Palestinian militants are killed by Israeli helicopter gunships. Israeli ministers say they will continue the policy of "targeted assassinations."
- July 19* Israel rejects a call from the G-8 summit in Genoa for international observers to monitor its somewhat theoretical cease-fire with the PNA.
- July 25* Israeli troops assassinate a Hamas militant, Salah Darwaza, with antitank missiles near the West Bank city of Nablus.
- July 30* Six Palestinian activists in Yasir Arafat's Fatah movement are killed in an explosion at a refugee camp near the West Bank city of Nablus. Palestinians blame the Israeli army, but Israeli officials say the deaths are a "work accident."
- August 9* A suicide bomber blows himself up in a crowded pizza restaurant in central Jerusalem, killing 15 people and wounding 90. At least 6 of the dead are children. Responsibility is later claimed by Hamas. Palestinian president Yasir Arafat condemns the bombing and calls on Israel to declare a joint cease-fire.

- August 10* Israeli warplanes level the headquarters of the Palestinian police in the West Bank city of Ramallah in retaliation for the Jerusalem suicide bombing. Special forces seize the offices of the PLO at Orient House in East Jerusalem.
- August 14* Israeli tanks move into the West Bank city of Jenin and destroy a Palestinian police station.
- August 15* Israeli troops kill Palestinian militia leader Emad Abu Sneineh in a roadside ambush.
- August 25* Guerrillas infiltrate an Israeli post in the Gaza Strip, killing three soldiers. The attack is claimed by the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine (DFLP).
- August 26* Israeli F-16 and F-15 warplanes destroy security installations in Gaza and the West Bank.
- August 27* Abu Ali Mustafa, leader of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP), is killed in an Israeli attack on his office, the highest-ranking Palestinian official so far targeted for assassination.
- September 1* Taiseer Khatab, an aide to the Gaza Strip intelligence chief, is killed by a bomb under the seat of his car. Two other people were wounded.
- September 4* A suicide bomber kills himself and injures 20 others in an attack near a school in Jerusalem.
- September 11* Major terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center in New York City and the Pentagon outside Washington, DC, are carried out by al-Qaida.
- September 12* Israeli tanks enter the desert town of Jericho in the second invasion of a Palestinian-ruled town in 48 hours.
- September 15* Israeli forces make a major incursion into the Gaza Strip. Helicopters fire missiles into a Palestinian security compound in Gaza City, hit a security position in the Nusarit refugee camp just outside the city, and fire ground-to-ground missiles into a police station in Rafah.
- September 18* PNA president Arafat reaffirms his commitment to a cease-fire and orders his security forces not to fire on Israeli troops even in self-defense. Israeli army withdraws from areas in the West Bank and Gaza Strip that are supposed to be under full Palestinian control.
- September 26* Israeli and Palestinian negotiators agree to confidence-building measures aimed at ending a year of fighting.
- September 27* Israeli tanks move into a refugee camp in southern Gaza, killing five Palestinians and placing the newborn truce into jeopardy.
- September 28* Thousands of Palestinians mark the first anniversary of their Intifada, or uprising, against Israel with marches, prayers, and three minutes of silence.
- October 2* President George W. Bush announces that he is prepared to back the creation of a Palestinian state.
- October 5* Israeli tanks and troops move into Palestinian-controlled areas of Hebron in the West Bank, killing at least five Palestinians and ending the fragile truce.
- October 11* The Bush administration unveils a new blueprint for Middle East peace, envisaging Jerusalem as a shared capital for an Israeli and a Palestinian state.
- October 14* Israel assassinates Palestinian militant Abed Rahman Hamad.
- October 15* UK prime minister Tony Blair gives his public backing to the creation of a Palestinian state following a meeting at 10 Downing Street with Yasir Arafat.
- October 17* A right-wing Israeli minister, Rehavam Ze'evi, is shot dead in a Jerusalem hotel by a Palestinian gunman. The PFLP claims responsibility.
—Israel demands that Yasir Arafat hand over the killers of Ze'evi and calls on Arafat to outlaw militant groups such as the PFLP.
- October 18* Israeli tanks roll into two West Bank towns as a first retribution for the Ze'evi assassination.
- October 20* Israeli forces enter two more West Bank towns.

October 22 The US criticizes the Israeli military action and subsequent civilian deaths.

—Israel bans activists and leaders of radical groups from state radio and television.

—A top Hamas militant, Ayman Halawe, is blown up in his car in the West Bank city of Nablus in the fourth Israeli assassination in nine days.

October 23 Ariel Sharon flatly rejects a US demand to end occupation of Palestinian lands and threatens the survival of Yasir Arafat.

October 27 Israel agrees to pull out its troops from Bethlehem, as a test case for other withdrawals from the six West Bank towns that it invaded in search of Palestinian militants. Sharon later cancels the withdrawal from Bethlehem, blaming continuing Palestinian violence.

November 23 A US peace mission to the Middle East is thrown into disarray as Israel assassinates a senior Hamas militant, Mahmud Abu Hannud.

November 25 Israeli missiles hit Palestinian security posts and political offices in Gaza ahead of the arrival of two US peace envoys.

December 3 Israel helicopter gunships fire missiles at targets near Yasir Arafat's headquarters in Gaza City.

December 4 Israeli helicopters and jets hit PNA targets in the Gaza Strip and West Bank, in retaliation for the killing of 25 people in three suicide bombings over the weekend.

—Sharon declares Arafat "irrelevant" and orders the Israeli air force to bomb his Gaza beach-front home.

December 7 Israel resumes air strikes against Arafat's PNA, with bombers hitting a Palestinian police compound in Gaza, injuring at least 20 people.

December 9 United States strongly condemns Yasir Arafat's failure to rein in Islamist militants and threatens to abandon its attempts to broker a truce.

December 10 Israeli-Arab parliamentarian Azmi Bishara goes on trial, charged with undermining the state and treason.

December 16 Arafat calls for an end to suicide bombing attacks against Israelis as he seeks to reengage with the Jewish state and the international community from his besieged Ramallah headquarters.

December 17 Israel assassinates Yacoub Aidkadik, a Hamas militant, in the West Bank, and detains Sari Nuseibeh, a leading Palestinian peace activist in Jerusalem.

December 24 Israel bars Arafat from traveling to Bethlehem for his traditional attendance at midnight mass on Christmas Eve.

December 27 Israeli troops arrest at least 17 members of Arafat's police force and his Fatah movement in a predawn raid on the West Bank village of Azun.

2002

January 3 Israel intercepts the Karine A carrying 50 tons of arms allegedly intended for the PNA. Arafat denies that the shipment was ordered by the PNA.

January 10 Israeli bulldozers destroy 32 homes in the Rafah refugee camp, where two militants were shot dead the day before, following an attack on an Israeli army post.

January 12 Israeli battleships raid Rafah port and confiscate Palestinian boats; fishing and maintenance equipment are destroyed. In Rafah refugee camp, 40 more homes are destroyed and many others damaged.

January 14 Israeli forces assassinate Fatah leader Ra'ed Al-Karmi in Tulkarm.

January 17 A gunman belonging to the al-Aqsa Brigades shoots dead 6 people and wounds 30 in the northern Israeli town of Hadera.

January 18 Israeli jets destroy the PNA's main police headquarters in Tulkatem, killing one policeman and injuring 40 more.

January 21 Israeli troops seize Tulkarm, imposing a curfew and conducting house-to-house searches for Palestinian fugitives. It is the first time since the uprising began that the Israelis have occupied an entire town.

January 25 A Palestinian suicide bomber blows himself up in a crowded street in Tel Aviv, wounding at least 25 people. Hours later, Israeli warplanes bomb targets throughout the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

- February 11* Israel attacks Palestinian security headquarters in Gaza City on the second day of reprisals for a round of Qassam rockets fired from Gaza into southern Israel.
- February 18* Operation Journey of Colors begins, first of several major military offensives to re-establish Israeli authority in West Bank.
- February 19–20* Six Israeli soldiers are killed in a raid by Palestinian guerrillas at an Israeli army checkpoint at Ein Ariq, near Ramallah; reprisal strikes leave 16 Palestinians dead.
- February 24* Israel grants Yasir Arafat permission to travel within Ramallah.
- February 28* The Israeli army storms the Balata refugee camp (near Nablus), the biggest in the West Bank, strafing it from the air, a mountain-top, and other strategic positions. A simultaneous invasion of the Jenin refugee camp marks the most concerted effort by Prime Minister Sharon to crush Palestinian militants on their home terrain since the uprising began.
- March 3* Ten Israelis—including seven soldiers—are shot and killed by a lone Palestinian sniper. Another Israeli soldier is killed and four others injured in an attack in the Gaza Strip.
- March 4* Israeli planes bomb Al-Muqata'a compound, where Arafat is under house arrest, and totally destroy the headquarters of Palestinian General Intelligence. Thereafter Arafat is confined to a few rooms.
- March 8* On the deadliest day of fighting since the intifada began 18 months prior, Israeli troops kill 40 Palestinians in an assault on the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Earlier, a Palestinian militant had opened fire on a military academy in the Jewish settlement of Atzmona in the Gaza Strip, killing 5 teenage officer cadets and wounding another 24.
- March 12* Twenty thousand Israeli troops invade refugee camps in the Gaza Strip and reoccupy the West Bank town of Ramallah. At least 31 Palestinians are killed and hundreds more ordered out of their homes. Seven Israelis are killed when a Palestinian gunman opens fire on a kibbutz near the border with Lebanon.
- UN Secretary General Annan condemns Israel's use of heavy weaponry against Palestinians and demands that Israel “stop the bombing of civilian areas, the assassinations, the unnecessary use of lethal force, the demolitions, and the daily humiliation of ordinary Palestinians” as well as “end the illegal occupation.”
- March 14* US Mideast envoy Anthony Zinni arrives in Israel again, meets Sharon, and urges him to leave the PNA areas.
- March 20–21* Two suicide bombings in Israel kill 9 people.
- March 25* George W. Bush asks Israel to release Arafat from his confinement in Ramallah to allow him to attend the Arab League meeting in Beirut.
- March 26* Arafat announces he will not attend the Arab Summit as Ariel Sharon makes new demands, including asking the United States to sanction his permanent exile if there are further terrorist attacks while he is in Beirut.
- March 27* Palestinian suicide bomber kills himself in a hotel in Netanya, north of Tel Aviv, killing 29 Jewish guests who were participating in a Passover Seder. Hamas claims responsibility.
- March 28* The Arab League summit comes to a final agreement: it promises Israel peace, security, and normal relations in return for a full withdrawal from Arab lands occupied since 1967, the establishment of a Palestinian state with East Jerusalem as its capital, and a “fair solution” for the 3.8 million Palestinian refugees.
- March 29* Israel launches second major offensive, Operation Defensive Shield, in the West Bank, reoccupying all the major Palestinian cities. In Ramallah, Israeli troops lay siege to Arafat's presidential compound, to which he is confined thereafter.
- March 31* A suicide bomber kills 16 in Haifa, and 4 more are injured by a suicide bomber in the Efrat settlement; Israeli tanks thunder into Qalqilya; Ariel Sharon declares Arafat an “enemy of Israel.”
- April 1* George W. Bush calls on Arafat to do more to “denounce” terror.
- April 2* Israeli warplanes, armor, and infantry launch a huge attack on Bethlehem as Ariel Sharon pushes ahead with the second phase of his five-day assault on Palestinian targets. Witnesses describe desperate close-quarter fighting in the old part of Bethlehem.

- April 4* President Bush tells Sharon to end West Bank occupation and blames Arafat for failing to halt the current wave of suicide bombings. The IDF pushes on to Nablus, the Bethlehem standoff continues, and Israeli troops enter Hebron.
- April 8* Sharon says he will complete his military operation against Yasir Arafat's "regime of terror," a move that directly defies US calls to pull troops out of the West Bank immediately.
- April 10* Palestinian suicide bomber kills eight Israelis in an attack on a crowded bus, as Israeli forces hunting Palestinian militants move deeper into two West Bank refugee camps.
- April 12* US secretary of state Colin Powell holds talks with Sharon in Jerusalem but fails to secure an immediate withdrawal of Israeli forces from the West Bank.
- April 13* Yasir Arafat condemns terrorism in a statement put out by a Palestinian news agency after meeting Colin Powell.
- April 15* Marwan al-Barghuthi, a popular young Palestinian leader, is seized by Israeli Special Forces from his home in Ramallah. Journalists enter the Jenin refugee camp, describing it as a "silent wasteland."
- April 19* George W. Bush calls for a probe into civilian casualties in the assault on the Jenin refugee camp.
- April 21* Israeli tanks and armor redeploy around the cities of Nablus and Ramallah as Ariel Sharon says the first stage of the offensive has ended.
- April 22* The International Committee of the Red Cross accuses Israel of breaching the Geneva Conventions by recklessly endangering civilian lives and property during its assault.
- April 26* Israeli forces raid Qalqilya, defying fresh calls from President Bush to complete their pullout from reoccupied Palestinian areas.
- April 30* Israel again refuses to cooperate with the UN inquiry into the fighting in the Jenin refugee camp.
- May 1* The PNA hands over six high-profile prisoners to Anglo-American custody.
- May 2* Arafat emerges briefly from confinement.
- May 9* A deal to end the Bethlehem siege is drawn up by EU negotiators that would see 13 militants exiled in several European countries after first flying to Cyprus. Ending the siege is widely seen as a precursor to an Israeli military offensive in Gaza.
- May 12* After hours of debate the prime minister's party (Likud) "rejects forever" the setting up of Palestinian state on land currently occupied by Israel.
- May 16* An adviser to Arafat says the Palestinian leader has agreed to fresh presidential elections in six months.
- May 17* Israel makes a new raid on the Jenin refugee camp.
- May 30* President Arafat signs Basic Law.
- June 5* A Palestinian suicide bomber detonates a car packed with explosives next to an Israeli bus crammed with soldiers and civilians at Megiddo junction, killing 17. Within hours Israeli helicopter gunships attack Jenin and tank columns move to its outlying areas.
- June 6* A six-hour wrecking mission by Israeli tanks flattens Arafat's Ramallah headquarters. No building in the compound remains intact—not even Arafat's bedroom, which sports a large crater in the wall.
- June 10* Israeli tanks and troops make a predawn raid on Ramallah and declare a curfew. In Washington, George Bush backs Israel's demand that the Palestinian leadership be overhauled before meaningful peace talks can begin.
- June 17* The PNA is condemned by US national security adviser Condoleezza Rice as a "corrupt" body that "cavorts with terror."
- June 18* At least 20 people are killed and more than 40 wounded, including several schoolchildren, when a suicide bomber blows himself up on a crowded bus in Jerusalem during the morning rush hour.
- June 19* Tel Aviv launches helicopter gunship

- strikes on Palestinian refugee camps in retaliation. Israel says it will reoccupy Palestinian land on the West Bank and hold it indefinitely in reprisal for the bombing.
- June 20* Yasir Arafat orders his people not to attack Israeli civilians. He says recent suicide bombs “have given the Israeli government the excuse to reoccupy our land.”
- June 22* Operation Determined Path, third major Israeli offensive in West Bank, begins.
- June 23* The Israeli cabinet approves by a vote of 25–1 the construction of a “security fence” (the Barrier) east of the Green Line and around Jerusalem, a 20-kilometer buffer zone west of the Jordan River, and the continued presence of IDF in the West Bank.
- June 24* US president Bush gives major speech at odds with “Road Map,” dismissive of Palestinians, very pro-Israeli.
- June 25* Israeli troops storm the PNA headquarters in Hebron. The invasion brings the total of reoccupied cities to seven, leaving only Jericho, isolated in the Jordan Rift Valley, under effective Palestinian control.
- June 26* A Palestinian cabinet minister, Saeb Erekat, announces elections for Yasir Arafat’s job in January 2003 and details planned reforms in the PNA.
- June 30* Colin Powell “renounces” Arafat.
- July 1* Hamas vows to redouble its suicide bombing attacks after Israel assassinates Muhamed Taher.
- July 2* Arafat sacks two of his most senior security chiefs—Jibril Rajub, effectively head of security in the West Bank, and Ghazi Jibali, the police chief in Gaza.
- July 4* Rajub and Jibali defy Arafat’s dismissal order, creating turmoil in the PNA. They later agree to stand down, but the episode has cast doubt on the Palestinian leader’s ability to deliver reform.
- July 9* Ariel Sharon’s government moves to silence a Palestinian peace activist who endeared himself to Israelis late last year when he suggested Palestinians give up the right of return for refugees as part of peace deal. Dr. Sari Nusseibeh, a philosopher and negotiator at the Madrid Peace Conference, has boxes of files, student and personnel records, and research carted away from al-Quds University in East Jerusalem.
- July 16* Eight Israeli settlers on the West Bank are shot dead as gunmen ambush a bus.
- July 19* The Israeli army rounds up 21 relatives of suspected militants for exile and blows up their homes.
- July 21* CIA director George Tenet’s PNA security reform plan is made public and official.
- July 22* An Israeli jet attack on a residential area of Gaza City kills the Hamas military leader, Salah Shehadeh, and 14 other people, including 9 children.
- July 31* The Hebrew University in East Jerusalem is attacked by a Hamas bomber, killing two Israelis and five US nationals. Investigators believe the bomb was left in a bag in the cafeteria.
- August 1* A UN report on the fighting at the Jenin refugee camp in April disputes Palestinian claims of an Israeli massacre but accuses both sides of endangering civilian lives and criticizes the Israeli army for the widespread destruction of property.
- August 4* The Israeli army bulldozes the homes of families of nine suicide bombers. Hamas stops releasing its bombers’ names to prevent retaliation.
- August 5* Israel announces a total ban on Palestinian travel in much of the West Bank and seals off a chunk of the Gaza Strip with tanks. A car explodes in northern Israel, killing one person and injuring another.
- August 14* The Israeli State Attorney’s Office submits an indictment against Marwan al-Barghuthi, charging him with murder, attempted murder, conspiracy to commit murder, and participation and membership in a terrorist organization.
- August 15* Israeli forces fire rockets into a house in the West Bank, killing a disabled Hamas leader, Nasr Jarra, as well as another Palestinian.
- August 25* An Israeli cabinet minister, Danny

Naveh, admits that plans for a gradual Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank and Gaza had been “frozen.”

September Nuseibeh-Ayalon Agreement issued.

September 3 Israel’s Supreme Court rules in favor of sending relatives of suspected suicide bombers into internal exile—despite protests from human rights groups that the action contravenes international law.

September 9 Yasir Arafat uses his first appearance before the Palestinian parliament in 18 months to condemn “every act of terror against Israeli civilians.”

September 10 Fatah announces a unilateral halt to attacks on Israeli civilians and says it will try to prevent other militant Palestinian groups from carrying out suicide bombings and other such attacks.

September 17 The Quartet—the United States, European Union, Russia, and United Nations—issues final draft of “Road Map” for Israeli-Palestinian resolution by 2005.

September 18 In New York, Israeli negotiators reject a Palestinian proposal to suspend attacks on civilians in Israel as the first stage in a complete cease-fire.

September 19 A suicide bomber detonates his explosives on a bus at lunchtime in a crowded Tel Aviv street, killing seven people, including himself.

September 20 Israeli tanks and bulldozers smash their way through Arafat’s compound in Ramallah, destroying half of the last building still under his control and demanding the handing over of 20 men on its wanted list who are believed to be inside.

September 21 Israeli troops haul down the Palestinian flag from the Palestinian Ramallah headquarters.

September 24 The UN Security Council passes a resolution demanding Israel withdraw from Palestinian towns and end the destruction of Palestinian property.

September 26 Hamas threatens retaliation “everywhere” in Israel for an air strike in Gaza that killed two of its members.

October 1 Israeli troops reoccupy three buildings near Yasir Arafat’s headquarters.

October 2 A UNICEF special representative in the region, Pierre Poupard, issues a statement saying that “a generation of Palestinian children is being denied their right to an education,” as over 226,000 schoolchildren out of one million in the West Bank, and 9,300 teachers are denied access to their schools.

October 7 Israeli troops make an early morning raid on the Gaza Strip. Ten Palestinians die as an Israeli helicopter fires into a crowd.

October 10 A Palestinian suicide bomber blows himself up in Tel Aviv in retaliation for the Gaza Strip air attack, killing one woman and injuring 16 others.

October 14 Israeli security forces use a booby-trapped public telephone outside a hospital to blow up a Palestinian member of the al-Aqsa Martyrs’ Brigades in Bethlehem.

October 25 Hundreds of Israeli troops seize control of Jenin in the biggest military assault since April.

October 30 The Israel coalition government collapses as Benjamin Ben-Eliezer leads his ministers out of Ariel Sharon’s cabinet.

October 31 Sharon begins the task of patching together right-wing support for his fragile Likud administration by appointing a former army chief, Shaul Mofaz, who has led campaigns against Palestinian militants and favors ousting Arafat.

November 5 Sharon accepts that he cannot regain a parliamentary majority after Labor ministers quit his National Unity Government. He calls for elections within 90 days.

November 9 Israeli army kills the head of Islamic Jihad in Jenin, Iyad Sawalhe, who Israel claims was responsible for two of the worst suicide bombings this year.

November 10 A Palestinian gunman opens fire on a kibbutz near the West Bank, killing five Israelis, including a mother and her two young sons.

November 12 The Israeli army raids the West Bank town of Tulkarem and lays siege to Nablus.

November 15 Palestinian gunmen kill 12 Israelis after opening fire on a group of settlers making a weekly pilgrimage to a holy site in Hebron.

November 19 Five Palestinians are killed as Israeli soldiers sweep through the West Bank town of Tulkarem in an apparent attempt to capture Tarek Zaghaf, a leader of the al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades militia.

November 21 A Palestinian suicide bomber kills 11 people—half of them children—on a crowded Jerusalem bus.

November 22 A British UN official and an 11-year-old Palestinian boy die after Israeli soldiers storm a Jenin refugee camp.

November 28 Three Palestinians open fire on Likud headquarters during the party's leadership election. Six Israelis die in the attack.

November 29 Ariel Sharon wins the Likud leadership contest.

December 3 The Knesset begins proceedings to bar three Arab members and their parties from next month's election because of their support for the Palestinian resistance.

December 22 Yasir Arafat's cabinet calls off scheduled January elections for a Palestinian president and legislature because it says the Israeli military occupation of West Bank cities makes a free ballot impossible.

December 26 The Israeli army kills at least seven Palestinians in a series of targeted assassinations in the West Bank.

2003

January 5 A dual suicide bombing in Tel Aviv kills 25 people, ending a six-week lull in attacks on Israel and coming just three weeks before an Israeli general election.

January 6 Palestinian officials are barred by Israel from attending a meeting in London to discuss progress toward an independent state. The travel ban was imposed by the Israeli cabinet in direct response to the previous day's suicide bombings.

January 19 Sharon dismisses European peace efforts as anti-Israeli, saying that only the United States matters in deciding the fate of the Palestinians.

January 26 Two days before the Israeli elections in which Sharon is campaigning on his militarist policies, Israeli forces launch their biggest raid on Gaza since the prime minister came to power. The raid kills 12 Palestinians and critically injures 8.

February 7 The Israeli army arrests two dozen Palestinians in raids across the West Bank. Israeli strikes also kill at least six, including two Palestinian nurses in Gaza.

February 10 Following a secret meeting between Ariel Sharon and Yasir Arafat earlier this week, cease-fire talks between Israel and the Palestinians begin. Israeli officials describe the meetings as the start of a process that will lead to a lasting settlement with the Palestinians.

February 15 Yasir Arafat bows to intense international pressure and agrees to appoint a prime minister—a vital prerequisite for the resumption of formal peace talks with the Israelis.

February 18 Israel lifts its foreign travel ban on Palestinian leaders, allowing them to discuss the peace process in a series of meetings beginning in London. The Israeli move is in acknowledgment of Arafat's pledge to devolve some of his powers to an as-yet-unnamed prime minister.

February 20 The Israeli army kills at least 11 people during six hours of fighting in Gaza.

February 21 Ariel Sharon says that he will not discuss the division of Jerusalem or the return of Palestinian refugees during peace negotiations, a blow to the prospects of a successful Israeli-Palestinian settlement.

March 3 In the latest of a series of raids in Gaza, Israeli soldiers kill eight people.

March 5 At least 15 people are killed after a Palestinian suicide bombing of a bus in the northern Israeli town of Haifa. In response, Israel launches helicopter gunship attacks on Gaza refugee camp in Jabalya.

March 7 Yasir Arafat nominates his deputy in the PLO, Mahmud Abbas, as Palestinian prime minister, as part of reforms aimed at reviving peace talks with Israel.

March 8 Senior Hamas leader Ibrahim al

- Makadme is killed by an Israeli helicopter strike on his car. Hamas vows to avenge the assassination.
- March 16* A US peace activist, Rachel Corrie, 23, is crushed to death as she tries to block an Israeli army bulldozer in the Gaza Strip.
- March 18* Yasir Arafat signs legislation surrendering most of his authority to a new Palestinian prime minister, opening the way for the release of the Road Map peace plan.
- March 19* Mahmud Abbas (also known as Abu Mazen) officially accepts Yasir Arafat's offer of the post of Palestinian prime minister.
- March 30* A suicide bomber blows himself up in the Israeli coastal town of Netanya, injuring 58 people.
- April 2* Israeli forces launch two days of raids on occupied Palestinian territories, killing six Palestinians and detaining more than 1,000 boys and men.
- April 8* President Bush announces that he will publish the internationally brokered Road Map once the recently designated Palestinian prime minister, Mahmud Abbas, names his cabinet. Meanwhile a senior Hamas leader, Sa'ad al-Arabeed, and four other Palestinians are killed in a targeted Israeli air strike.
- April 9* A bomb explodes on a West Bank school playground in a village south of Jenin, injuring 20 Palestinian children.
- April 20* The Israeli military carries out one of the largest raids in Gaza since the start of the Intifada, killing 6 people and wounding 48 in Rafah.
- April 23* Arafat and prime minister-designate Mahmud Abbas finally agree on the composition of the new cabinet. A Palestinian suicide bomber blows himself up at a crowded railway station in central Israel, killing one.
- April 28* Palestinian prime minister-designate Mahmud Abbas says he will not travel abroad to meet foreign politicians until Israel lifts its travel ban on Yasir Arafat. Israel states it will not lift the ban on Arafat.
- April 30* The United States releases its long-awaited Road Map for peace to Israeli and Palestinian leaders hours after Mahmud Abbas and his cabinet are sworn in.
- May 1* Israeli troops raid the home of an alleged Hamas bombmaker in Gaza, killing 14 Palestinians during a fierce gun battle.
- May 10* US secretary of state Colin Powell arrives in Israel for talks with Ariel Sharon and Mahmud Abbas on the US-backed Road Map.
- May 17* Sharon meets his Palestinian counterpart, Abbas, in Jerusalem, for three hours of talks.
- May 18* A suicide bomber blows up an Israeli bus in Jerusalem, killing seven passengers.
- May 19* A suicide bomber kills two people in a shopping center in Afula, Israel.
- May 25* The Israeli cabinet votes to accept the Road Map to an independent Palestinian state within three years. But Sharon's government attaches opt-out clauses and other demands.
- June 4* The summit meeting among Ariel Sharon, Mahmud Abbas, and US president George W. Bush convenes in Aqaba, Jordan.
- June 10* An Israeli army helicopter attempts to assassinate the Hamas political leader in Gaza, drawing criticism from Washington, accusations of terrorism from the Palestinians, and a vow by Hamas to respond in kind.
- June 11* A teenage suicide bomber kills 16 people on a rush-hour bus in the heart of Jerusalem, fulfilling a vow by the militant Islamist movement Hamas to avenge a botched Israeli attempt to assassinate its political leader a day earlier.
- June 13* Israeli helicopters fire three missiles at a car, killing one person and wounding 22, including 7 children.
- June 22* Israel assassinates a Hamas leader, drawing threats of retaliation from the Islamic organization and criticism from US secretary of state Colin Powell.
- June 29* Hamas, Islamic Jihad, and Yasir Arafat's Fatah movement formally announce a three-month cease-fire.
- July 3* Israel's army chief claims victory over the - Palestinian Intifada, saying the cease-fire announced by Hamas and other groups is an admission of defeat.

- July 6* The Israeli cabinet agrees to free several hundred Palestinian prisoners to bolster the US-led Road Map to peace.
- July 25* President Bush hosts Prime Minister Abbas in a visit designed to quicken a sluggish peace process and shore up the authority of Abbas.
—An Israeli soldier shoots and kills a four-year-old Palestinian boy and injures two other children when he fires a tank-mounted machine gun at a northern West Bank roadblock.
- July 29* Ariel Sharon shrugs off President George Bush's request to halt construction on the security barrier through the West Bank, vowing that the work will continue.
- August 4* Palestinians condemn a list of prisoners whom Israel plans to release from its jails, saying that the number is below what had originally been promised and those slated to be released had served their sentences.
- August 5* Israel calls a halt to its gradual military withdrawal from Palestinian cities following the wounding of a Jewish settler and her three children near Bethlehem.
—Bush administration threatens to impose financial sanctions on Israel if it persists in pushing its security wall deep into Palestinian territory.
- August 13* Israeli troops kill a top Islamic Jihad fugitive, prompting threats of revenge by the militant group and placing further strain on an already shaky cease-fire.
- August 17* Efforts to keep the Middle East Road Map peace process (a six-week-old cease-fire) on track hit a snag when Israel reneges on an agreement to transfer control of four West Bank cities to the Palestinian Authority.
- August 19* A Palestinian suicide bomber blows apart a bus in the heart of Jerusalem, killing at least 20 people, including children; wounding more than 100; and inflicting the most serious blow yet to the cease-fire.
- August 21* Israel launches a helicopter strike in Gaza. Three people, including Ismail Abu Shanab, a political leader of Hamas, are killed. Palestinian militant groups call off their cease-fire.
- September 1* Israeli helicopters kill a Hamas activist, wound a second, and injure 25 bystanders in a missile attack on Gaza City.
- September 5* Israeli troops kill a Hamas commander in the West Bank city of Nablus, further undermining the troubled leadership of Mahmud Abbas.
- September 8* Yasir Arafat fires Prime Minister Mahmud Abbas and nominates Ahmad Qurei' for the position.
- September 9* Fifteen die in suicide attacks on troops at a nightspot.
- September 10* Israeli warplanes bomb the home of a senior Hamas leader, Mahmoud Zahar, wounding him and his wife and killing two others, including his son.
- September 14* The Israeli government is considering killing Arafat as one of the means to carry out its threat to "remove" him as an obstacle to peace, Israel's deputy prime minister says.
- September 16* The United States vetoes a UN resolution demanding that Israel neither harm nor expel the Palestinian Authority president Yasir Arafat.
- September 24* A group of Israeli air force pilots declare their refusal to fly missions that could endanger civilians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.
- September 25* Edward Said—scholar, literary critic, and the most eloquent supporter of the Palestinian cause—dies in New York after a long battle with leukemia.
- October 7* The Guardian reports that Yasir Arafat has suffered a mild heart attack but the Palestinian leadership has sought to keep his health problems secret for fear it will create panic.
- October 9* Palestinian leadership is thrown into jeopardy when the new prime minister, Ahmad Qurei', threatens to resign in a dispute with Arafat.
- October 9–12* The Israeli army fights its way into Rafah refugee camp in Gaza in search of weapons-smuggling tunnels under the border with Egypt. At the raid's end, three tunnels have been found, more than 100 homes rocketed or flattened by bulldozers, about 1,500 people left homeless, and two children killed by Israeli helicopter fire.

October 20 Israeli aircraft kill 10 people and injure nearly 100 others in five waves of air strikes in Gaza.

October 21 Hamas launches a barrage of missiles at targets inside and outside Gaza.

October 26 The Israeli military orders thousands of Palestinians living near the steel and concrete separation Barrier through the West Bank to obtain special permits to live in their own homes.

November 12 A new cabinet led by prime minister Ahmad Qurei' is approved by the Palestinian Legislative Council in a move seen as crucial to reviving the US-backed peace plan.

November 18 European Union formally condemns Israel's controversial security fence, or Barrier, in the occupied West Bank.

November 28 UN Secretary General Kofi Annan declares Israel in violation of international law for flouting a UN resolution calling for its "security barrier" to be dismantled.

December 1 Geneva Accord signed; initiated by Yossi Beilin and Yasir Abed Rabbu.

December 18 Ariel Sharon says he is prepared to deliver an ultimatum to the Palestinians to act against terrorists or he will embark on a "unilateral separation" plan within months.

December 23 An Israeli army raid in southern Gaza leaves eight Palestinians dead in the worst outbreak of violence in two months.

December 25 Five Palestinians, including three members of Islamic Jihad, are killed in an Israeli air strike in Gaza. Minutes later four Israelis are killed by a suicide bomber near Tel Aviv.

December 26 Israel closes the West Bank and Gaza Strip following the suicide bomb that killed four people near Tel Aviv, ending nearly three months of relative calm in the region.

2004

January 9 Palestinian prime minister Ahmad Qurei' warns he will seek a single state for both Jews and Arabs if Ariel Sharon annexes parts of the West Bank and imposes borders on Palestine.

—It emerges that the Israeli army has killed 19 people in a futile search for the leader of "the heart of the terror networks" during a three-week occupation of Nablus.

January 13 The Israeli government announces that it expects to begin withdrawing from parts of the Occupied Territories and redefining their borders if there is no progress toward a negotiated peace settlement.

January 28 At least 13 Palestinians are killed in clashes in the Gaza Strip.

January 29 At least 10 people are killed and another 50 wounded in a suicide attack on a bus outside Ariel Sharon's official residence in Jerusalem. The al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades claim responsibility. The attack fails to derail a prisoner swap in which Israel begins freeing 436 of the 9,000 Palestinian detainees it holds in exchange for an abducted Israeli businessman and the bodies of 3 dead soldiers.

February 2 Ariel Sharon declares his intention to withdraw from virtually all Israeli settlements in the Gaza Strip, with or without signing a final peace agreement with the Palestinians.

February 9 Israeli civil and human rights groups launch a legal action against the West Bank "security barrier" in the country's Supreme Court, claiming that it infringes on the human rights of Palestinians affected by its construction.

February 11 Fifteen Palestinians—including Abu Shkail, a Hamas activist—are killed in a gun battle with Israeli troops in the Gaza Strip. Hamas vows revenge for the attack.

February 18 The International Committee of the Red Cross calls on Israel to halt construction of the steel and concrete "security barrier" through the West Bank because it breaches international law and is causing widespread harm to Palestinians.

February 22 A suicide bomber murders eight people on a rush-hour bus in Jerusalem.

February 23 Israeli troops fire tear gas at Palestinians protesting at the barrier being constructed in the West Bank as a court case on its legality opens in The Hague.

- March 7* The biggest Israeli raid into Gaza for months leaves 14 Palestinians dead, amid fears of a sharp upsurge in violence before Israel's planned withdrawal from the Palestinian territory.
- March 14* Ten people are killed when two Palestinians from Gaza blow themselves up in the Israeli port of Ashdod, prompting Prime Minister Sharon to cancel his first summit meeting with his Palestinian counterpart, Ahmad Qurei'.
- March 16* Israeli forces launch a new offensive in the Gaza Strip, killing at least 6 Palestinians and wounding 27 in a series of air strikes.
- March 23* Hamas names Abd al-Aziz Rantisi, doctor turned Islamist fighter, as its new leader in Gaza.
- March 22* Prime minister Ariel Sharon describes Israel's assassination of Ahmed Yassin as an attack on the "first and foremost leader of the Palestinian terrorist murderers."
- March 25* The United States blocks a UN resolution condemning Israel's assassination of the Hamas spiritual leader, Sheikh Ahmed Yassin, on the grounds that the text is "one-sided."
- April 17* Israeli forces assassinate Hamas leader Abd al-Aziz Rantisi in the start of a campaign to destroy the organization before Israel pulls out of Gaza.
- April 23* Sharon issues an ominous warning that Yasir Arafat could be the next Palestinian leader to be in Israel's line of fire. The Israeli prime minister says he told President Bush that he is no longer prepared to exempt Arafat from physical harm.
- April 27* Israel's highest court rules that the government acts illegally in routinely denying press accreditation to Palestinian journalists on the grounds that they pose a threat to security. The High Court of Justice orders the government to lift the ban after news agency Reuters and the Arabic television station al-Jazeera challenge the practice of denying press cards to Palestinian journalists.
- May 5* Israeli government auditor reveals that the Israeli Housing Ministry has spent £3.7 million building illegal settlements and outposts in the West Bank in the past three years.
- May 11* Six Israeli soldiers are killed in fighting with Palestinian militants in Gaza City, the highest Israeli death toll in a single operation in nearly two years. Five Palestinians are also killed and 88 wounded.
- May 12* Palestinian fighters kill five Israeli soldiers by blowing up an armored vehicle in a Gaza refugee camp as troops fight house to house in a Gaza City neighborhood to search for the body parts of the six soldiers killed in a similar attack the previous day.
- May 14–18* Israel launches a massive offensive in Gaza, Operation Rainbow, razing hundreds of homes in Rafah; army kills at least 20 people.
- May 19* At least 10 Palestinians are killed and 35 wounded when Israeli forces fire on a crowd demonstrating against the invasion of a Gaza refugee camp.
- June 19* Yasir Arafat tells an Israeli newspaper that he recognizes Israel's right to remain a Jewish state and accepts the return of only a fraction of the Palestinian refugees.
- July 1* The Israeli High Court of Justice rules that the government's security barrier is violating the human rights of Palestinians.
- July 10* The International Court of Justice brands Israel's vast barrier through the West Bank a de facto land grab and tells Israel to tear it down and compensate the victims.
- July 21* Israel accuses the EU of "encouraging Palestinian terrorism" by supporting a UN General Assembly resolution pressing the Jewish state to tear down the "security barrier."
- August 17* Israel announces plans for 1,000 new housing units in the West Bank, violating the US-brokered Road Map for peace in the region.
- August 23* Israel announces plans to build an additional (to the previously announced 1,000) 530 new homes for settlers in the West Bank, following a US policy shift (in Israel's favor) on settlements.
- August 31* At least 16 people are killed and 80 injured when Palestinian militants carry out suicide bombings on two buses in the southern Israeli city of Beersheba.

September 6 An Israeli attack on Hamas training camp near Gaza City kills at least 13.

September 8 Israel's agriculture minister, Israel Katz, announces plans for further expansion of Jewish settlements in the Jordan Rift Valley by expropriating 8,000 acres of land.

September 30 Israeli forces kill at least 23 Palestinians as the army makes a rare push into the heart of a heavily defended Gaza refugee camp.

October 5 Israeli forces demolish the homes of hundreds of Palestinians, bulldozing huge swaths of agricultural land and destroying infrastructure in their bloodiest assault on the Gaza Strip in years.

October 26 The Israeli government gives Yasir Arafat permission to leave his Ramallah headquarters for the first time in two years to receive medical treatment.

October 29 Arafat is flown to Paris for medical treatment.

November 11 Yasir Arafat dies. His body is flown to Cairo, where his funeral will take place before he is buried in Ramallah.

November 22 US secretary of state Colin Powell visits Israel and the West Bank in an attempt to resuscitate the peace process.

December 18 Ariel Sharon secures a historic deal with his bitter political foe, Labor Party leader Shimon Peres, to guarantee the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Gaza. The deal marks the rehabilitation of Peres after years in the political wilderness.

December 19 Israel agrees to release 170 Palestinian prisoners as a gesture of goodwill to Egypt and the new Palestinian leadership. Approximately 8,500 prisoners remain in Israeli custody.

2005

January 4 The Israeli military kills seven Palestinians and wounds six others in response to Palestinian rocket fire, prompting moderate Palestinian leader Mahmud Abbas to denounce Israel as the "Zionist enemy."

January 8 Israel pulls its troops back from Palestinian towns in the West Bank for 72 hours to allow free movement during the weekend's Palestinian presidential election.

January 10 Mahmud Abbas claims a landslide victory in the Palestinian presidential election and prepares to outline a post-Arafat program encompassing internal reforms, securing a cease fire from militant groups Hamas and Islamic Jihad, and revitalizing peace talks with Israel after a four-year impasse. Abbas says the Palestinians are "ready for peace" and he is eager to resume the negotiations with Israel abandoned four years ago.

January 11 Israeli prime minister Ariel Sharon telephones Mahmud Abbas to congratulate him on winning the Palestinian presidential election.

January 14 Palestinian militants detonate a bomb on the edge of the Gaza Strip, killing at least five Israelis.

—Sharon orders that all contact with the newly elected Palestinian leader, Mahmud Abbas, be severed until he reins in militants.

January 17 The Israeli government orders the army to resume assassinating Palestinian militants in Gaza after three days of violence, which has left six Israelis and eight Palestinians dead.

January 18 Hamas suicide bomber strikes at Israeli troops in the Gaza Strip.

January 20 Israeli cabinet lifts its ban on contacts with the PNA as the new Palestinian leadership appeals for cooperation with its attempts to curb bomb and rocket attacks from the Gaza Strip.

January 21 Hundreds of armed Palestinian police are deployed across the northern Gaza Strip to prevent rocket attacks by militants.

January 27 Israel agrees "in principle" to withdraw forces from West Bank cities and give Palestinians policing rights in these areas.

January 31 President Abbas holds talks with Russian president Vladimir Putin at the Kremlin as he attempts to gain Moscow's support prior to peace talks with Israel.

—An Israeli government report reveals that Israel has quietly seized thousands of acres of Palestinian-owned land in and around East Jerusalem after a secret cabinet decision to use a 55-year-old law against Arabs separated from farms and orchards by the vast “security barrier.”

February 2 Hamas and seven other Palestinian groups threaten to call off a truce and return to “all-out martyrdom attacks”—suicide bombings—unless Israel commits itself to ending army raids and killings in the Occupied Territories.

February 8 Israeli prime minister Ariel Sharon and Palestinian president Mahmud Abbas agree to a cease-fire and pledge to end violence after more than four years of Intifada, which has claimed over 4,500 lives.

February 12 Mahmud Abbas demands that military leaders stop firing mortars and rockets at Israeli settlements and towns.

February 14 Rafik Hariri, Lebanon’s former prime minister, is assassinated in a huge bomb attack that kills at least 9 others, injures more than 100, and threatens to shatter the country’s fragile peace.

February 16 Ariel Sharon declares that Israel will not give up the main Jewish settlements in the West Bank as part of a final peace deal with the Palestinians.

February 20 The Israeli cabinet approves the removal of Jewish settlers from the the Gaza Strip and four small West Bank outposts.

February 23 Palestinian Legislative Council forces Prime Minister Ahmad Qurei’ to make sweeping changes to his cabinet, criticized for being dominated by corrupt and incompetent ministers too closely associated with the late Yasir Arafat.

February 24 Palestinian Legislative Council approves a 24-member cabinet, dominated by professional appointees, in a significant government reform.

February 25 A suicide bomber blows himself up in a crowd of Israelis waiting outside a nightclub near Tel Aviv’s beachfront promenade, killing five people, wounding dozens, and shattering the unofficial truce.

—Israel announces plans to build more than 6,000 new homes in Jewish settlements in the West Bank, in a move that would offset its imminent withdrawal from the Gaza Strip.

February 26 Acting on orders from Palestinian leader Mahmud Abbas, security forces arrest three suspected militants in connection with the previous day’s suicide bombing that killed four Israelis at a Tel Aviv nightclub.

March 8 An official Israeli government report, the Sasson Report, finds Israel guilty of systematic fraud, “institutional lawbreaking,” and theft of private Palestinian land to covertly establish illegal Jewish outposts in the West Bank.

March 16 Israeli troops hand Jericho to Palestinian security control amid signs that an informal truce is starting to pay off.

March 22 Israeli government approves the construction of thousands of homes around one of the largest Jewish settlements in a further move to consolidate its grip over parts of the West Bank ahead of any peace negotiations.

April 12 US president George W. Bush insists he will not permit settlement blocking off a Palestinian East Jerusalem.

April 15 Prime Minister Ariel Sharon brushes off a warning from President Bush not to allow further West Bank settlement growth, indicating that Israel will continue to solidify its hold on areas it considers of strategic importance.

April 23 A leading UK union (Association of University Teachers) votes to boycott two Israeli universities that it accuses of being complicit in the abuse of Palestinians in the Occupied Territories.

May 20 Israel says it will resume attacks on Palestinians who attempt to fire rockets from the Gaza Strip, after dozens of mortars hit Jewish settlements, without causing serious injury.

May 27 President George Bush rebuffs an appeal from Palestinian leader Mahmud Abbas for a swift revival of peace negotiations and the rapid creation of a Palestinian state after Israel pulls out of the Gaza Strip.

June 5 Israel releases 398 Palestinian prisoners. Some 9,000 remain.

June 13 The United States imposes temporary sanctions on Israel after a dispute over Israel’s sale of drones—unmanned aerial vehicles—to China.

- June 22* A rare meeting between Ariel Sharon and Mahmud Abbas ends in deadlock after the Israeli prime minister says there could be no political progress, or even gestures, "so long as terrorism continues."
- July 8* Leaders of the G-8 agree to a $3 billion (£1.7 billion) annual package to help the Palestinians, in particular to rebuild the Gaza Strip after the scheduled withdrawal of Israel this year.
- July 14* Ariel Sharon orders "a relentless attack" on the leadership of Islamic Jihad following a suicide bombing the previous day.
- July 15* Israel launches a wave of air strikes on Gaza targets in response to rocket attacks that killed a woman in her home.
- July 16* The five-month Israeli-Palestinian ceasefire is in tatters as Israeli air strikes kill six Hamas militants.
- July 17* Israel launches fresh missile strikes in Gaza and vows to keep targeting gunmen to prevent rocket attacks ahead of its planned withdrawal from Gaza the following month.
- July 18* Israel masses thousands of troops along the border of the Gaza Strip and warns that it will invade unless the PNA acts to prevent the firing of missiles at Israeli towns.
- August 5* An Orthodox Jewish soldier shoots and kills four Israeli-Arabs on a bus before being beaten to death by an angry crowd.
- August 22* The last of 1,500 Jewish settler families are evacuated from the Gaza Strip.
- September 15* Israel's highest court rules that the country has the right to build its "security fence" on occupied land, reversing an earlier decision.
- September 24* Israel kills 4 Hamas militants and wounds more than 20 civilians in a sustained series of air strikes on the Gaza Strip.
- September 30* Israel kills 3 militants and arrests 420 in a series of raids across the West Bank. Hamas says arrests are designed to undermine it.
- October 17* The Israeli government suspends contacts with the PNA and imposes travel restrictions on the West Bank after gunmen kill three people in two drive-by shootings.
- October 20* Israeli army seals off main West Bank route to Palestinian vehicles.
- October 25* International Middle East envoy James Wolfensohn accuses Israel of behaving as if it has not withdrawn from the Gaza Strip by blocking its borders and failing to fulfill commitments to allow the movement of Palestinians and goods.
- October 26* Five people are killed in a suicide bombing at an open-air market in Israel.
- October 29* Israeli military kills a Palestinian militant in a missile strike on a car in the Gaza Strip as Ariel Sharon presses ahead with his "broad and continuous" offensive.
- October 30* Palestinian officials say that agreement has been reached with Israel to cease hostilities in the Gaza Strip.
- November 1* The Israeli Defense Ministry bars foreign journalists from entering the Gaza Strip.
- November 2* Citing security issue, Israel closes all Gaza border crossings and prevents the flow of all goods into Gaza.
- November 3* UN condemns nightly sonic booms in Gaza as indiscriminate, saying they cause trauma and miscarriages.
- November 11* The new leader of Israel's Labor Party, Amir Peretz, says that he intends to force a general election next spring after pulling his party out of Ariel Sharon's government.
- November 14* Former US president Bill Clinton urges Israel to return to negotiations and not to rely on unilateral measures to try to impose a solution to their conflict.
- November 21* Israeli prime minister Ariel Sharon says that his departure from Likud in order to form a new centrist party came because he did not want to waste time with "political in-fighting."
- November 22* Israel launches air strikes inside Lebanon in what it describes as the largest-scale action against Hizbullah militants since Israeli forces pulled out of the country in 2000.

- November 30* Veteran Israeli politician Shimon Peres announces he is leaving the Labor Party he led until three weeks ago to give his support to Ariel Sharon.
- December 5* At least five people are killed in a suicide bombing at a shopping center in the Israeli city of Netanya.
- December 9* Palestinian families are driven from homes by settlers in “cleansing” of Hebron.
- December 14* At least four Palestinians are killed and four others wounded when their car is hit in an Israeli air strike.
- December 16* Palestinian militant group Hamas wins a landslide victory in local elections in key West Bank cities, dealing a blow to the ruling Fatah party just six weeks before a parliamentary election.
- December 18* Ariel Sharon is rushed to the hospital after suffering a mild stroke, but his condition is not life-threatening, according to his aides.
- December 20* Sharon leaves the Jerusalem hospital where he has received treatment for a mild stroke and says he plans to return to work quickly.
—Two dozen armed members of the Al-Aqsa Martyrs’ Brigades seize Bethlehem’s city hall in Manger Square and appear on the roof, pointing guns at onlookers.
- December 28* Israeli army shells Gaza after missile lands near nursery; no injuries.
- December 29* Suicide bomber kills an Israeli soldier and two Palestinians after he is apprehended at a checkpoint near the West Bank town of Tulkarem.
- 2006
- January 4* Israeli prime minister Ariel Sharon suffers a major stroke and is unconscious in the hospital. Doctors treating Ariel Sharon say he is unlikely to return to work.
- January 7* Ehud Olmert assumes position as acting prime minister in the wake of Sharon’s illness.
- January 10* Under pressure from Washington, Israel says it will allow Arab residents of East Jerusalem to vote in Palestinian parliamentary elections this month.
- January 12* Hamas drops call for destruction of Israel from manifesto. Shift comes in runup to Palestinian election. Commitment to armed struggle remains.
- January 16* Ehud Olmert, acting Israeli prime minister, is formally chosen to lead the Kadima Party into nationwide elections due to take place in March.
—East Jerusalem Palestinians are allowed to vote in Palestinian parliamentary election, but Israel bars Hamas from election. Police arrest activists for campaigning.
- January 19* Palestinian suicide bomber blows himself up in Tel Aviv, injuring at least 15 people and casting a shadow over the Palestinian parliamentary elections scheduled for next week.
- January 25* Hundreds of thousands of voters turn out for a parliamentary election expected to produce a major shake-up of Palestinian politics.
- January 26* Hamas wins a large majority in the elections for the new Palestinian parliament, claiming 76 of the 132 parliamentary seats, giving the party the right to form the next cabinet under the PNA’s president, Mahmud Abbas, the leader of rival Fatah.
—US president George Bush insists Hamas cannot be a partner for peace without first renouncing violence.
- January 27* President Mahmud Abbas says he will ask Hamas to form a government following its victory in the elections.
- January 28* Fatah activists demand the party leadership resign following the crushing election defeat by Hamas.
- January 30* Mahmud Abbas urges the international community not to cut aid to his people following last week’s election victory by Hamas.
- February 5* Israeli forces fire a missile at a car in the northern Gaza Strip, killing two Palestinian militants.
- February 6* Corruption inquiry into Palestinian Authority results in 25 arrests and 10 warrants. “May have lost billions.” Graft concerns helped Hamas to achieve victory at polls.

- February 8 The political leader of Hamas, Ismail Haniyeh, says that he will accept a two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict if Israel withdraws to its pre-1967 borders and accepts the right of return of Palestinian refugees. —Israel unveils plan to encircle Palestinian state. Olmert says he will keep control of Jordan Rift Valley and all settlement blocks.
- February 11 Israel accuses Russia of stabbing it in the back after President Vladimir Putin invites Hamas leaders to visit Moscow as the legitimate representatives of the Palestinian people after the Islamic group's election landslide last month.
- February 14 Israel excludes Palestinians from fertile Jordan Rift Valley. Permit system seen as bid to annex West Bank land.
- February 20 Israel freezes contacts with what it calls the "terrorist" Palestinian Authority and puts a block on the transfer of funds.
- February 28 EU to pay £94.5 million to avert collapse of PNA. Fund to be used for utility bills, wages, health, and schools. No direct payments after Hamas assumes power.
- March 7 Israeli defense minister Shaul Mofaz warns that the incoming Palestinian prime minister, Ismael Haniyeh, could be targeted for assassination if Hamas resumes its campaign of violence.
- March 10 Israel's acting prime minister, Ehud Olmert, says the country will draw its final borders within four years without consulting the Palestinians if Hamas does not recognize the Jewish state. —Israel institutes blockade of Gaza.
- March 13 Efforts by Hamas to form a National Unity Government that will win international acceptance are faltering after the group delivers a statement of principles to the Palestinian president that the administration reserves the right to "reassess" peace accords with Israel.
- March 19 Hamas unveils its new government.
- March 22 Gaza rations food as Israel cuts supplies. Bakeries close and shelves empty as supplies dwindle.
- March 25 President Mahmud Abbas is to approve the appointment of a new Hamas-led government but warns that the administration has no future—and will be acting against the interests of the people—unless it agrees to deal with Israel.
- March 28 Israelis vote in general election that sees a plurality of seats for new Kadima Party, followed by the Labor Party, and a major loss for the Likud Party. Ehud Olmert of Kadima claims a mandate for his plan to impose Israel's final borders.
- March 29 United States bans its diplomats from having any contact with the Hamas-led cabinet as it was sworn in by President Mahmud Abbas. —Hamas warns that if the new Israeli government does not begin peace negotiations and end the confiscation of Palestinian land, it will revert to "armed resistance" to the occupation of the West Bank.
- March 31 Suicide bomber claims three victims in West Bank attack. Attack comes as election victors draft their plans. United States rules out talks with Hamas government.
- April 3 Shells, rockets, and leaflets are ammunition in Gaza battle. Israel uses gunboats to bombard open land. Clashes between Fatah and Hamas underline tensions.
- April 5 Kadima and Labor agree to share power; Peretz backs Olmert to remain as prime minister.
- April 6 Israeli forces arrest a Palestinian cabinet minister as he tries to enter the West Bank from Jerusalem, the first time Israel has directly interfered with the new government.
- April 8 At least six people are killed when an Israeli missile hits a car full of Palestinians in the southern Gaza town of Rafah.
- April 9 Hamas is to abandon its use of suicide bombers in any future confrontations with Israel, its representatives tell The Observer.
- April 10 The EU increases the pressure on the Hamas-led Palestinian Authority to recognize Israel and renounce terrorist violence by suspending all direct aid to the new government.
- April 17 A suicide bomber kills 9 people and wounds at least 49 others in Tel Aviv in an attack described by Hamas as an act of "self-defense."

- April 18* Israeli leaders blame the Hamas-led PNA for the previous day's suicide bombing in Tel Aviv, but decide against a military retaliation.
- April 21* President Mahmud Abbas blocks Hamas's plans to set up a controversial security force, which would consist of militants and be headed by the second on Israel's wanted list.
- April 30* Acting Israeli prime minister Ehud Olmert wins over enough parties to form a majority coalition, clearing the way for his plans to reshape the West Bank and set final borders.
- May 5* Abbas urges Israel's new prime minister, Ehud Olmert, to resume peace talks the day after the new Israeli cabinet is sworn in.
- May 7* Six Palestinians are killed in Israeli attacks in the Gaza Strip over the weekend.
- May 15* The Israeli High Court upholds a law barring many Palestinians from living with their Israeli spouses in Israel.
- May 17* Hamas deploys a security force of about 3,000 armed men on the streets of the Gaza Strip in a challenge to the authority of President Mahmud Abbas.
- May 21* Islamic Jihad commander dies in Israeli missile strike, a targeted assassination.
- May 23* Heavy fighting between Hamas and the Fatah-Palestinian police in Gaza City.
- May 26* Abbas puts Hamas on the spot with ultimatum to revive peace talks. Abbas sets ten-day deadline before calling referendum.
- May 27* Hamas pulls its armed militia off Gaza's streets to defuse tensions that have led to 10 deaths in fighting between Hamas and Fatah-controlled forces.
- June 1* United Nations calls for massive increase in aid to Palestinians. Unprecedented appeal to avert economic collapse is necessary as curbs by EU, US, and Israel starve Hamas government.
- June 9* Palestinian militants promise to avenge the death of the Hamas-led PNA's security chief in an Israeli air strike the previous day.
- June 9–14* Israeli forces attack the Gaza Strip with a series of air strikes and artillery fire, killing at least 36 Palestinians.
- June 19* EU wins backing to send £70 million in aid to the Gaza Strip and West Bank. Quartet agrees to bypass Hamas government with the financing to fund health care and utility supplies.
- June 21* Hamas makes a major political climb-down by agreeing to sections of a document that recognizes Israel's right to exist and a negotiated two-state solution.
—Three young Palestinians in Gaza's largest refugee camp are killed by an overnight Israeli air strike.
- June 22* Prime Minister Ehud Olmert and President Mahmud Abbas meet for the first time since the former took office, both promising to hold further talks in the coming weeks.
- June 25* In a predawn raid Gaza militants attack an Israeli military installation, kill two soldiers, and kidnap Corporal Gilad Shalit. Hamas denies holding Shalit, but Israel vows revenge.
- June 26* The Israeli army masses on Gaza's border poised to invade.
- June 28* The Israeli air force attacks the only electrical power plant operating in the Gaza Strip with missiles, destroying the plant's six transformers.
—The Israeli army, under cover of the air force, enters southern Gaza beginning a major offensive, called Operation Summer Rains, to secure the release of the Israeli soldier taken hostage by Palestinian militants. It marks the beginning of a war that is to last six months.
—Victory for Abbas as Hamas gives in on peace talks. Two-state solution agreed to after referendum threat. Freeze on foreign aid said to have prompted U-turn.
- June 29* Israeli troops arrest dozens of Hamas ministers and parliamentarians.
- July 5* Israel's security cabinet approves the reoccupation of parts of the Gaza Strip.
- July 7* At least 17 Palestinians and one Israeli soldier die in the most serious violence since Israel withdrew its forces from the Gaza Strip last year.
—The European Union condemns Israel's incursions into the Gaza Strip and warns that the military actions are provoking a humanitarian crisis.

July 12 Hizbullah captures two Israeli soldiers; Olmert calls it an "act of war" and invades Lebanon in an all-out ground, air, and sea military conflict that lasts 34 days.

July 18 Israeli forces kill 13 Palestinians in Gaza and the West Bank as the army begins a new push into a refugee camp in central Gaza, clashing with gunmen and bulldozing farmland.

July 25 Palestinian factions, including Hamas and Islamic Jihad, agree to stop firing rockets at Israel and to free the captured Israeli soldier in a deal brokered by Mahmud Abbas, the Palestinian president.

July 27 At least 21 Palestinians are killed when the Israeli army renews its hostilities in the Gaza Strip. About 50 tanks and armored vehicles enter northern Gaza and begin demolishing buildings and trees at dawn.

August 21 Israel has arrested almost one quarter of the members of the Palestinian parliament as part of its campaign to free an Israeli soldier captured in Gaza in June.

August 30 UN Secretary General Kofi Annan calls for Gaza Strip to be reopened.

September 1 Israeli military court puts arrested Hamas officials and parliamentarians up for trial. Fifteen West Bank politicians face up to 10 years in jail. Speaker of Palestinian parliament is shackled.

—Western nations pledge $500 million (£263 million) in aid to the Palestinians as the UN humanitarian chief warns that an economic crisis means the Gaza Strip is a "ticking time bomb."

September 12 Rival Palestinian factions agree to unity government. Hamas hands over negotiating role to PLO. Deal could end blockade and facilitate peace talks.

September 27 Israel's military court orders the release of the Palestinian deputy prime minister after more than a month in jail.

October 10 A Qatari initiative to broker an agreement between the two main Palestinian political groups, possibly paving the way for a restoration of foreign aid to the beleaguered Palestinian government, ends in failure.

October 12 Gaza sliding into civil war. Economic crisis worsens, as do clashes between Hamas and Fatah.

October 15 Hamas accuses the United States of fomenting internal strife among Palestinians as new details emerge of a US campaign to funnel millions of dollars in funds to Fatah and to provide Fatah forces with weapons and military training.

November 1 Israeli strike on Gaza kills eight. Largest operation since reinvasion. Hamas fires rockets into Israel.

November 7 Israeli troops pull out of the Gaza Strip town of Beit Hanoun, ending a weeklong offensive in which almost 50 Palestinians were killed.

November 8 At least 18 civilians, including 8 children, are killed when Israeli tank shells strike a residential neighborhood north of the Gaza Strip town of Beit Hanoun.

November 11 Defiance in Gaza grows as Israeli grip stifles economy. Restricted fishing, closed crossing points, and refusal to hand over tax credits bring territory close to crisis.

November 13 The two main Palestinian political factions have agreed on a prime minister, Ismail Haniyeh, to head a National Unity Government in a move aimed at lifting economic sanctions.

November 21 United Nations condemns massive human rights violations by Israel in Gaza. High commissioner calls on leaders to stop violence.

December 8 United Nations pleas for millions in Palestinian aid amid fears of economic collapse. Half of population is short of food.

December 14 Israel orders the closure of the Rafah Crossing between Egypt and Gaza, apparently to prevent Prime Minister Ismail Haniyeh from returning home with millions of dollars in donated money.

December 15 Violence between rival Palestinian groups edges closer toward civil war as security forces loyal to the ruling Fatah organization fire on Hamas supporters rallying in the West Bank.

December 19 Jordan offers to host talks between warring Palestinian factions after a resumption of major violence around Gaza City kills 4 people and injures almost 20 others, including a group of schoolchildren caught in crossfire.

December 22 Hamas and Fatah militants fight more fierce battles in the West Bank and Gaza as a shaky truce between the rival Palestinian groups threatens to break down completely.

December 29 Israel allows arms deliveries to Abbas's Fatah forces. Egypt sends guns and ammunition to Gaza to help Fatah security force in fight with Hamas.

2007

January 1 Israeli newspaper Ma'ariv reports that the government has allocated special subsidies in the 2007 budget for settler industries and agriculture in the West Bank and Golan Heights expected to suffer financially under new EU tariffs on goods from the Occupied Territories.

January 9 The Israeli Military General declares Force 17 an illegal organization.

January 11 Hamas accepts the existence of the state of Israel but will not officially recognize it until the establishment of a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, according to the radical Hamas leader in Damascus Khalid Meshal.

January 18 Al-Aqsa Institute reveals Israeli excavation work beneath al-Aqsa Mosque walls.

January 21 PNA president Mahmud Abbas meets with Hamas leader Khalid Meshal in Damascus.

January 30 Prince of Qatar calls on Israel to start dialogue with Hamas and affirms that peace with Hamas is possible.

—Israeli presidential candidate Shimon Peres (Kadima) in Qatar states the separation barrier is temporary and will be demolished eventually.

February 1 Israeli renovations near the Mughrabi gate of the al-Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem spark widespread unrest in the Arab world over false charges that Israel is destroying the mosque.

February 3 President Abbas and Prime Minister Haniyeh call separately for a cease-fire under Egyptian sponsorship.

February 6 Israel begins demolishing a hilly area leading to Bab al-Mughrabi Gate in Old City, Jerusalem.

February 8 Under the sponsorship of Saudi king Abdullah Ben Abdul Aziz, Fatah and Hamas sign a historic conciliation accord known as the Mecca Agreement and approve a political program for a National Unity Government.

February 18 An Israeli expert announces that archaeologists have discovered a mosque beneath Bab al-Mughrabi Hill.
—Trilateral Israeli-Palestinian-US summit (Rice, Abbas, and Olmert) ends with no progress.

February 25 The EU announces expansion of scope of its assistance to the Palestinians.
—Israel demolishes road to Bab al-Mughrabi Gate.

February 27–28 Violence significantly increases between the IDF and Palestinian militants following an Israeli air strike that killed five Hamas fighters and Hamas's retaliation launching of 73 rockets from Gaza, which hit Sderot, Ashkelon, and other areas in southern Israel.

February 27–March 4 The IDF stages a large military operation into Gaza named Hot Winter which in addition to hundreds of deaths and injuries, exacerbates the deteriorating humanitarian situation resulting from the near-total blockade of Gaza since June 2006.

March 1 Israeli decree to keep names of those involved in selling lands to Jews confidential.
—United Nations reports that 248 homes and shops in Nablus are damaged during Operation Hot Winter.

March 2 Qatar transfers to the Arab League $22 million to support salaries of striking Palestinian teachers.

March 3 Establishment of the Islamic-Christian Front to defend Jerusalem and the Holy Sites.

March 6 PNA arrests 70 Palestinians, including 18 activists from al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades, after they lay siege to the Intelligence Apparatus Building in Ramallah.

March 7 The IDF raids the PNA Military Intelligence headquarters in Ramallah, arresting 18 wanted al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigade members who are taking refuge there plus 50 other PNA Military Intelligence officers (most of whom are released after interrogation).

—In Israel, the police arrest Shaykh Raed Salah, leader of the Islamic movement in Israel.

March 8 Israel allows the Rafah Crossing to Egypt to open temporarily.

March 11 European Union gives up condition that the Palestinian unity government must recognize the state of Israel.

—Executive Support Force (ESF), a military force linked to Hamas, closes local roads, damages four homes of Fatah members with explosive devices, and sets fire to local PNA National Security Forces and Force 17 offices.

March 12 The IDF revives Operation Hot Winter in Nablus.

—In Gaza City, suspected Fatah gunmen assassinate Izz-al-Din al-Qassam Brigades commander Ala' al-Haddad.

March 16 World Bank states that Israeli restrictions are the major obstacle facing Palestinian trade activities.

March 17 PNA president Mahmud Abbas swears in the first Palestinian National Unity Government, headed by Prime Minister Ismail Haniyeh (Hamas/Change and Reform Party), in keeping with the Mecca Agreement reached by Fatah and Hamas, and aimed at halting intra-Palestinian violence.

March 18 UN Secretary General Annan states that formation of the National Unity Government is a positive development. Nevertheless, Israel and United States decide to boycott it.

March 21–25 Fatah and ESF members exchange fire in Bayt Labia, northern Gaza, and Gaza City.

March 25 President Abbas meets with US secretary of state Rice in Ramallah and talks about regular meetings with Prime Minister Olmert in the future.

March 26 Hamas members fire at and then occupy the Fatah-affiliated Bayt Hanun Sports Club.

March 27 The IDF begins work on a new segment of the separation barrier south of Wadi Rahan near Bethlehem.

March 27–28 Arab Summit renews March 2002 Arab peace offer to Israel and calls on Israel to peacefully resolve the Palestinian situation.

March 28 The IDF shells north Gaza for the first time since the November 26 cease-fire after militants fire nine rockets into Israel.

March 30 Bedouin residents of the unrecognized village of al-Nasara in the Negev report that over the past three weeks, Israel has issued eviction orders to around 250 residents, declaring plans to build an IDF installation on the site of the village.

April 1 Israel seals West Bank and Gaza border crossings for the weeklong Passover holidays.

—IDF issues eviction orders to 70 Palestinian families in Dahiyat al-Salam in East Jerusalem, claiming the land on which they live is owned by a Jewish woman who recently inherited the property and wants them to leave (no documents are provided).

April 3 Israeli defense minister Amir Peretz authorizes the IDF to resume "pinpoint operations against terrorists" in Gaza.

April 4 Fatah official Dahlan announces plan to build professional security apparatus.

—The Israeli Municipality of Jerusalem issues demolition orders for a playground and six houses in the Muslim Quarter of the Old City of Jerusalem on Palestinian land that has been sought by Jewish developers in order to build 30 homes, a synagogue, and a religious school for Jews only.

April 10 US Congress ratifies $60 million in assistance to the Fatah security services.

April 13 The IDF suspends its Nablus commander after the Israeli daily Yedi'ot Aharonot releases video showing soldier using two Palestinian boys as human shields to guard military vehicles.

April 14 Palestinian National Unity Government ratifies the security plan proposed by Dahlan. A dialogue to reactivate the PLO starts in Damascus.

April 15 Abbas and Olmert meet and Israel promises to remove checkpoints in the West

- Bank. (Israel removes 10 unmanned checkpoints/roadblocks, terming it a measure aimed at showing goodwill and easing conditions for Palestinians. Some 440 remain.)
- Abbas issues a presidential decree on formation of the National Security Council headed by Dahlan (to exclude Hamas).
  - Egyptian border police demolish two smugglers' tunnels on the Rafah border.
- April 19* Sweden announces $23 million in assistance to the Palestinian people.
- April 20* An international consensus declares that all assistance to PNA is to be transferred to a PLO account under the supervision of PNA minister of finance Salam Fayyad.
- April 22* Facing deportation on political charges, Azmi Bashara submits his resignation from the Knesset and announces he will not return to Israel at the present time.
- Citing nine killings in two days, Hamas's Izz-al-Din al-Qassam Brigades declares an end to its observance of the November 26, 2006, cease-fire, though Prime Minister Haniyeh says that the PNA still has every intention of making it work.
  - The IDF evicts some 80 Palestinians from Hadidiyya in the north Jordan Rift Valley (the Israeli High Court ruled in January that they posed a security threat to Jewish settlers in nearby Ro'i settlement).
- April 23* UNESCO calls for protection of the Old City of Jerusalem.
- April 27* Israel allows the Rafah Crossing to open briefly for the first time since April 19.
- Gunfire breaks out among the 5,000 Palestinians waiting to enter Egypt; UN monitors overseeing the passage say Israel's closures have left the crossing too crowded to operate.
  - In Israel, hundreds of Palestinian Israeli citizens of Jaffa protest actions by the Israel Lands Administration (ILA) in the past year to evict some 500 Arab families from the al-Ajami and Givat Aliya neighborhoods so as to develop the seafront properties; the ILA calls the Palestinian families "invaders" who built on the sites illegally.
- April 28* PNA president Abbas meets with Hamas leader Khalid Meshal in Cairo; agreement on forming a committee to deal with issues of partnership, calm, and internal security.
- IDF troops on the Gaza border fatally shoot three Hamas members who approach the border fence near Gaza City. The Israeli navy fires on Palestinian fishermen off the Rafah coast, forcing them back to shore.
- May 1* Qatar transfers $22 million to pay salaries of Palestinian teachers. PNA bankrupt.
- May 4* Israel rejects a US plan for providing freedom of movement for the Palestinians.
- IDF troops cross into northern Gaza and arrest three Palestinian farmers working their fields near the border fence at Bayt Lahiya; also send bulldozers and tanks into Gaza near Nahal Oz to level land.
- May 6* Palestinians fire some seven rockets from Gaza into Israel, hitting a gas station in Sederot, lightly injuring two Israelis.
- Jewish settlers from Einav near Tulkarm set fire to 80 dunums of Palestinian olive and almond trees nearby.
- May 9* Abbas and Haniyeh agree on developing and implementing the security plan.
- May 10* Israel declares a plan to build three new settlement quarters in Jerusalem, including the construction of 20,000 new housing units.
- Abbas deploys 3,000 PNA security forces (all Fatah) under his control in Gaza City and northern Gaza as part of a new, high-profile "law and order" campaign meant to undermine Hamas.
- May 11* Fatah security forces clash with local Hamas members in Gaza City and Jabaliya refugee camp in the heaviest Fatah-Hamas fighting in two months, wounding at least 10.
- May 12* Fatah and Hamas agree on withdrawing the security forces and armed men from the streets of Gaza.
- May 13* Renewed clashes between Hamas and Fatah.
- Israel allocates $1.5 billion to increase the number of Jews in Jerusalem and to develop their communities there.
- May 14* PNA interior minister Talab al-Qawasmi resigns in protest of Abbas's deployment of Fatah PNA forces without coordination with his ministry, but blames both Hamas and Fatah for failing to take his security reform efforts seriously; Haniyeh will assume the post until a replacement is chosen.

- May 16* Bloody factional clashes in Gaza continue.
- May 20* Israeli five-day offensive in Gaza kills 23 Palestinians and wounds 86.
— Hamas and Fatah sign a document to end the internal fighting.
- May 21* The Palestinian government calls on Israel for a reciprocal concurrent comprehensive calm in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.
— EU extends its monitoring mission at Rafah Crossing for 12 months.
— Israeli town of Sderot emptied following the first death from a Qassam rocket attack in six months; Israeli government says it will consider assassinating Palestinian prime minister Haniyeh.
— Israel intensifies its attacks on Gaza with an air strike on the home of a Hamas political leader that kills eight of his relatives and neighbors.
- May 22* Israel rejects the calm, rejects truce offer, and decides to continue its raids.
- May 25* The PLO calls on the UN Security Council to stop the Israeli aggression and send international observers.
- May 30* Quartet Committee calls for halting the rocket firing and release of Hamas prisoners.
- June 1* Hamas begins a bloody coup to oust Fatah from Gaza that terminates the National Unity Government.
- June 6* A settler organization announces it is building 100 new housing units near the Dead Sea and in the northern West Bank.
- June 11* New Israeli instructions on permits canceling the role of the Palestinian Liaison Office.
- June 15* Hamas announces “liberation” of Gaza Strip after violent fighting. Fatah ousted. Hamas controls the preventive security headquarters, the general intelligence headquarters, and the presidential guard headquarters.
— President Abbas discharges the government of Ismail Haniyeh who refuses the decree.
— Salam Fayyad is commissioned by the president to form an emergency government. Israel closes all crossings with Gaza Strip.
- June 16* President Abbas suspends several articles in the Basic Law because of the state of emergency.
- June 17* An emergency government is sworn in before President Abbas.
— Haniyeh rejects the emergency government, announces that his government will continue to work, and issues several decisions with regard to the security services.
- June 18* United States and European Union announce official resumption of assistance to the new government headed by Abbas and end of sanctions. Sanctions on Gaza continue.
- June 19* Fatah Central Committee rejects any dialogue or contact with Hamas and commissions Zakaria al-Agha to head Fatah committee in Gaza Strip.
— Egypt moves its embassy from Gaza to Ramallah.
- June 20* Palestine Central Council calls for early presidential and legislative elections.
— Haniyeh calls for unconditional dialogue.
- June 24* President Abbas renews his position rejecting any dialogue with Hamas.
- June 25* Sharm al-Shaykh Summit II, gathering Abbas, Olmert, Mubarak, and Jordan’s King Abdullah II affirm support of Palestinian legitimacy headed by Abbas. Leaders discuss ways to contain Hamas in the Gaza Strip and means to strengthen Abbas’s Fatah party in the West Bank.
— As a “goodwill gesture,” Olmert announces the Israeli government’s intention to release 250 Fatah prisoners who have “no blood on their hands” and who pledge to renounce violence, most of whom were about to be released. Israel still holds approximately 10,000 Palestinian prisoners.
- June 26* Abbas issues a presidential decree banning all armed militias.
— Mubarak affirms Egyptian readiness to mediate between Fatah and Hamas.
- June 30* Hamas launches a strong campaign against Abbas and Fayyad. Izz-al-Din al-Qassam Brigades threaten to target any international troops who enter the Gaza Strip.
- July 9* UNRWA halts all construction projects because of severe shortage of basic construction material in Gaza Strip.
- July 10* President Abbas calls for deployment of an international force in Gaza Strip.

- July 11* The Palestinian Legislative Council fails to convene in the second term because Hamas members (who won a majority in last election) boycott.
- July 13* End of the legal period for the state of emergency; President Abbas says it will not be extended. Fayyad is commissioned to form a new caretaker government.
- July 14* UN Secretary General Annan demands opening all Gaza Strip crossings to avoid collapse of conditions in Gaza Strip.
- July 15* Haniyeh renews offer on long-term truce with Israel.
- July 16* Abbas meets with Olmert and demands launching of final status negotiations.
- July 18* France grants the PNA 15 million euros in aid.
- July 19* The Palestine Central Council supports the call of President Abbas on holding early elections and decides to form a committee to prepare for a PNC meeting in the Occupied Territories.
—Hamas threatens to sabotage any early elections.
- July 20* Israel releases 255 Palestinian prisoners.
- July 23* Jewish extremists break into al-Aqsa Mosque.
—France contributes 22 million euros to support the municipalities and water projects in Jenin.
- July 26* President Abbas accepts the resignation of Dahlan as head of the National Security Council.
- July 30* A report says European assistance to the Palestinian people has reached US $1 billion dollars this year.
- August 2* Fayyad and US secretary of state Rice sign in Ramallah an agreement on a US $80 million grant to reform and develop the Fatah security services.
- August 9* The Israeli air force destroys the tower of Gaza airport.
- August 12* British parliament committee calls on British prime minister Tony Blair to start a dialogue with Hamas moderates.
- August 14* Tawfiq al-Tirawi appointed head of the General Intelligence Apparatus under Abbas.
- August 15* Abbas declares that any future elections must be held in the West Bank and Gaza Strip; the current split between the two sectors is temporary.
- August 17* The Palestinian electric company that supplies most of the Gaza Strip cuts power to the area because Israel has shut a crossing through which fuel supplies are transported.
- August 21* Europe resumes financing fuel supplies to Gaza power station on a temporary basis.
- August 26* Israel opens six roads to serve the settlers in the heart of the West Bank.
- September 4* President Abbas affirms no elections before unity of homeland and people.
- September 7* Israeli minister Ramon presents a plan for the permanent solution with the separation barrier as the border of the Palestinian state.
- September 11* Sixty-nine Israeli soldiers injured in rocket shelling at a base near Ashkelon in southern Israel.
—Israel imposes a total closure on the Palestinian territories until further notice.
- September 13* IDF transforms Jerusalem into a military compound and prevents Muslim worshippers from reaching al-Aqsa Mosque.
- September 19* Israeli declares Gaza Strip a hostile entity and threatens to further reduce supplies of fuel and electricity.
- September 20* European Commission links size of its economic assistance to the Palestinian people with progress in the peace process.
- September 22* US secretary of state Rice supports the Israeli position that there should only be a joint statement at the upcoming Annapolis Conference, but without a timetable for moving to peace.
- September 23* The Quartet Committee promises to finance the Palestinian government and calls on Israel to maintain basic services to the Gaza Strip.

- Israel allows the deployment of 500 additional Palestinian policemen in Nablus.
- September 24* Abbas meets with US president Bush in New York.
- September 25* Haydar ‘Abd al-Shafi dies in Gaza at 88.
- October 1* Israel releases 57 prisoners from West Bank.
- October 2* Israel releases 29 prisoners from Gaza Strip.
- October 3* A meeting between Abbas and Olmert reveals wide gaps.
- October 4* United Nations confirms increase in number of Israeli checkpoints in the West Bank.
- October 14* Israel announces continuation of digging works at al-Mughrabi Gate.
—Olmert appoints Tzipora Livni as head of the Israeli negotiating team and refuses to set a timetable for resolution of conflict.
- October 15* Abbas meets with US secretary of state Rice amid disagreement over the need for a timetable.
- October 17* A plan prepared by British prime minister Blair includes removal of checkpoints and establishment of a city near Ramallah and industrial zones in Jalameh and Tarqoumia.
- October 19* European Union ratifies a German proposal to set up a European action plan on the Middle East.
- October 21* President Abbas requests directing of humanitarian assistance to Gaza Strip.
- October 25* President Abbas confirms that Hamas is in contact with Israel on the issue of calm and normalization of relations.
—Israeli officials propose dramatic cuts—two-thirds—in the supply of electricity and fuel to Gaza in a new effort to halt rocket attacks by Palestinian militants.
- October 26* A meeting between Abbas and Olmert results in commitment to the Road Map with the Quartet Committee as monitoring body.
- October 27* Israel implements fuel reduction to Gaza Strip.
- October 29* Kuwait offers $20 million to the Palestinian Authority treasury.
- November 1* Al-Aqsa Institute warns of new Israeli excavation works south of al-Aqsa Mosque.
- November 2* A new Israeli scheme announced to open a new tunnel in Old City of Jerusalem, 100 meters away from al-Aqsa Mosque.
- November 3* UN report finds there are 561 checkpoints and barriers in the West Bank.
- November 8–9* US intervention to resolve issues ahead of the planned Annapolis Conference reveals deep Israeli-Palestinian disagreements.
—Washington announces offering US $1 million to implement development projects in Nablus.
- November 10* United Nations reveals that Israel informed it that it will not remove any checkpoints in the West Bank.
—PLO demands that Israel open the Jerusalem Palestinian institutions.
- November 12* Palestinian officials announce that negotiations have reached a deadlock. Olmert sets specific conditions and links between implementing any final agreement and security conditions.
- November 14* The Knesset adopts a draft law to obstruct any settlement with the Palestinians over Jerusalem.
—Britain announces offer of $500 million to reconstruct the Palestinian territories if security progress is achieved.
- November 15* Abbas rejects recognition of Israel as a “Jewish state.”
- November 16* Abbas holds discussions with Saudi king and expresses pessimism regarding chances of anything concrete coming out of planned Annapolis Conference.
—The Israeli government agrees to release 500 prisoners but rejects opening Jerusalem institutions.
- November 21* Israeli minister Ramon says that what is being offered to the Palestinians in Annapolis is less than half of what was offered at Camp David.
- November 23* President Abbas justifies canceling the joint document to prevent Israel from achieving gains.

— Hamas organizes marches to reject Annapolis Conference and support the resistance.

November 24 Washington proposes forming a follow-up committee to monitor progress of negotiations and another meeting in Moscow.

— Hamas vows increase of operations against the Israelis after Annapolis Conference.

November 25 A series of meetings are held in Washington before Annapolis Conference in an attempt to bridge the gap between Israel and the Palestinians.

November 26 Failure of intensive contacts to reach a joint document in the last hours before Annapolis Conference.

November 27 Annapolis Conference.

November 28 Bush officially announces the launching of final status negotiations and appoints General James Jones as security coordinator.

— United Nations states that peace process without Hamas cannot be implemented.

November 29 Jewish extremists escalate their attacks against al-Aqsa Mosque in response to Annapolis Conference.

November 30 An Israeli court ratifies reducing fuel supplies to Gaza Strip.

December 2 Gas stations in Gaza Strip close, as there is no more fuel in their reserve tanks.

December 3 Israel releases 429 prisoners, most of whom have nearly completed their sentences.

— Hundreds of hajj pilgrims head to Mecca through Rafah Crossing after coordination between Israel and the Egyptian authorities.

December 4 Israel announces plans to build 307 new settlement units at Jabal Abu Ghneim in East Jerusalem amid angry reactions from the PNA.

December 7 US secretary of state Rice says ongoing Israeli settlement construction jeopardizes peace efforts.

December 10 A negotiating session between the Israelis and Palestinians to launch the final-status negotiations ends in failure.

December 17 Paris Conference gathers $7.4 billion for the PNA.

— French president Nicolas Sarkozy proposes forming an international force to ensure security in the Palestinian state.

— Israel announces it will allow construction inside the existing settlements in the West Bank and resumes excavation works near al-Aqsa Mosque.

December 18 Talks between President Abbas and British prime minister Gordon Brown in London result in announcement to organize an international investors' conference in Bethlehem.

December 19 Israeli Ha'aretz newspaper reveals an Israeli scheme to build a new Jewish quarter north of Jerusalem.

December 22 Israel apologizes for Kafr Qasim Massacre of 1965.

— Haniyeh's adviser says Hamas is ready to reach a truce with Israel.

December 23 Israel announces new settlement projects to be included in 2008 budget—construction of 250 new housing units in Ma'ale Adumim settlement and 500 housing units in Jabal Abu Ghneim.

— Israel refuses truce with Hamas.

December 29 Gaza Strip hajj pilgrims stranded after closure of Rafah Crossing.

December 30 Olmert accuses the PNA of failing to perform its security duties and threatens to refrain from any easing measures.

December 31 President Abbas calls on Hamas for dialogue and poses once again the option of early elections to overcome the internal crisis.

2008

January 1 Israel continues powerful incursion in Gaza and against Hamas, leaving Palestinians in a humanitarian crisis without fuel, power, food, and water.

January 2 Israeli forces kill six Palestinian gunmen in the Gaza Strip.

January 3 Israeli aircraft hit two targets in Gaza City.

January 4 IDF troops kill two Hamas gunmen in Gaza, wounding three others.

January 7 Israel says it was committed to acting “expeditiously” to dismantle unauthorized West Bank settlement outposts and will tell that to President George W. Bush when he arrives for talks. Israel first pledged to remove West Bank outposts in 2003, under the US-backed “Road Map” for peace, which stalled amid recriminations from Israel and the Palestinians that its terms were not being honored.

January 9–11 President George W. Bush visits Israel, occupied West Bank, and a number of Middle East countries, starting in Israel. Bush urges the Palestinian side to dismantle the terrorist infrastructure and calls on Israel to halt settlement construction and remove unauthorized settler outposts.

—Bush calls on Israel to end the Occupation, saying agreement must be reached to establish Palestine as a homeland for the Palestinian people.

January 15 Israeli forces kill the 24-year-old son, Hussam, of a powerful Hamas leader, Mahmoud Zahar, in Gaza in one of the bloodiest days of fighting since the group took control of the Gaza Strip in June.

—Seventeen Palestinians die in clashes, which began when Israeli troops targeted a house east of Gaza City.

January 18 Israel closes the crossings into Gaza and prevents even UN trucks from delivering food aid. UNRWA says the latest closure has left it unable to deliver 15 truckloads of aid and warns of growing despair in Gaza, where 80 percent of the population already relies on UN food.

January 20 Large parts of Gaza are pitched into darkness after its only power plant is shut down following a move by Israel to halt fuel shipments under its new closure of Gaza. Israel says its closure of the Gaza Strip is intended to halt the firing of makeshift rockets by Palestinian militants into southern Israel.

January 22 European commissioner for external relations Benita Ferrero-Waldner says the Israeli policy in Gaza is “collective punishment.” —UNRWA says the increasingly desperate humanitarian crisis in the Gaza Strip has often been ignored in the two years since the Islamist movement Hamas won the Palestinian elections and took full control of Gaza. UNRWA, which provides crucial food aid to 870,000

Gazans, warns that it will have to stop distributing its food support because it cannot import the bags or the fuel to deliver the food.

—John Ging, director of UNRWA’s operations in Gaza, says the rocket fire from Gaza, though illegal, does not justify such punitive measures against the civilian population, and the Israeli civilian population hit by the rockets, notably in Sderot near the boundary with Gaza, also deserves protection.

January 23 After months of preparation, Hamas blasts holes in Gaza/Rafah barrier, allowing hundreds of thousands of Gazans to enter Egypt freely to purchase food, medicines, and other necessities not available in Gaza. Border breach is partly closed by Egyptians by January 28, but is reopened by Hamas and eventually resealed by Egypt. Palestinians pour into Egypt from Gaza.

January 24 Egyptian police attempt to reseat border with Gaza as Palestinians continue to flood through the smashed wall. Tens of thousands take the opportunity to stock up on supplies as Israeli closure of crossings deepens crisis.

January 25 Egyptian soldiers in riot gear use water cannons and rolls of barbed wire in unsuccessful attempt to stop hundreds of Palestinians from rushing into Egypt after a bulldozer tears down another section of the border fence. In the process they turn back thousands of Palestinians who have flooded across.

January 26 George Habash, guerrilla leader who founded the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, dies at the age of 81.

January 28 Dozens of Egyptian policemen in riot gear at Egyptian checkpoints set up in pouring rain just a few miles from the border with Gaza the previous day fail to halt the relentless flow of Palestinians into Egypt five days after the border was breached.

—Hamas helps Egyptian troops restore order and seal the border at the town of Rafah, but Fatah demands that Hamas not have a role in running the border between Gaza and Egypt.

January 30 Supreme Court upholds Israeli government’s move to reduce fuel and electricity supplies to the Gaza Strip.

February 2 Egyptian security forces close the border with the Gaza Strip nearly two weeks after the wall was first breached.

- February 4 Two Palestinian suicide bombers who crossed into Israel from Egypt strike the Israeli city of Dimona, killing one woman and injuring seven others.
- February 5 Hamas signals a return to suicide bombing in Israel for the first time in more than three years when it claims responsibility for the attack in Dimona.
—Israeli strikes and Hamas rocket attacks continue in the aftermath of the suicide bombing in Dimona.
- February 11 Israeli defense minister warns that armed forces are preparing for a broad offensive against Gaza in response to rocket attacks on southern Israeli towns.
- February 12 Some 255 Palestinian prisoners near the end of their sentences are released as an Israeli gesture toward a new round of peace talks.
- February 25 Gazans form human chain along Israel's border in protest of Israel's blockade of the Gaza Strip. Israel sends troops to quell fears of mass exodus, similar to previous month's Gaza-Egypt border breach.
- February 27 More than 100 people have been killed in the past few days in escalating violence between Israeli troops and Palestinian militants. West Bank leaders threaten to suspend peace talks in protest against the Israeli attacks, which came as Gaza militants hit southern Israel with rockets and mortars.
- February 28 Israel launches Operation Hot Winter with sustained air strikes on Gaza, resulting in 112 Palestinians and 3 Israelis killed.
- February 29 A surge in fighting after Israel destroys five Hamas rocket launchers, prompting Hamas to more than double its missile attacks into Israel's neighboring towns. Israeli air and artillery strikes kill at least 60 Palestinians in its most violent assault on the Gaza Strip since the Islamic militant group Hamas seized power last June.
- March 1 Hamas-Fatah violence erupts in Gaza, leaving one Fatah fighter dead and seven people wounded.
—Israel faces widespread international condemnation for its onslaught in Gaza, as the United Nations and European Union demand an end to a “disproportionate” response to Palestinian rocket attacks, which are also denounced. Israel's prime minister, Ehud Olmert, rejects the criticism and vows to press on with the offensive.
—Mahmud Abbas, the Palestinian president, freezes all contact with Israel.
- March 3 It is revealed that the Bush administration embarked on a secret project for the armed overthrow of the Islamist government in Gaza. Vanity Fair reports that President George Bush and Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice signed off on a plan for the Palestinian president, Mahmud Abbas, to remove the Hamas authorities in Gaza. The plan called for Washington's allies in the region to funnel arms and salaries to Fatah fighters who would lead an uprising against Hamas.
- March 5 Israeli incursions and air strikes in Gaza after Hamas fires rockets into Ashkelon. More than 120 Palestinians have been killed in Gaza by Israeli forces in the past week. During the same period, 3 Israelis were killed, 2 of whom were soldiers taking part in the attacks.
—Palestinian president Mahmud Abbas agrees to resume peace talks, reversing a threat to boycott negotiations until Israel reaches a truce with Hamas.
—According to a coalition of eight UK humanitarian and human rights groups, Palestinians in the Gaza Strip are living through their worst humanitarian crisis since the 1967 War. Movement is all but impossible and supplies of food and water, sewage treatment, and basic health care are no longer reliable. The economy has collapsed, unemployment is expected to rise to 50 percent, hospitals are suffering 12-hour power cuts, and schools are failing, all creating a “humanitarian implosion.”
—Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice in Jerusalem said she has received assurances from Israeli and Palestinian leaders that they will resume the peace negotiations.
- March 6 An Israeli soldier is killed and another seriously injured when Palestinian militants blow up an Israeli army jeep on the Gaza border.
—A Palestinian gunman kills eight and injures 20 in incident at Jewish religious school in Jerusalem.
- March 9 Right-wing settler movement declares that last week's massacre in a Jewish religious school targeted them directly, and vows to build a new illegal outpost in the West Bank for every one of the killed students. Prime Minister Ehud Olmert embraces the settler movement, saying he shares their pain in the wake of last week's killings at the religious school, and approves 530 new settler homes in the West Bank.

March 11 Hamas has sharply curtailed its missile attacks on Israel, provoking speculation that a cease-fire has been brokered between the warring parties. The uneasy calm appears to have been brokered with Egypt acting as an intermediary. A spokesman for Egypt's Foreign Ministry, Hossam Zaki, says that his government has spoken to both sides.

March 12 Israel asks for 30-day "trial period" of quiet, after which it will consider accepting Egyptian calls for cease-fire. Hamas publicly calls for a cease-fire with Israel, asking for a "reciprocal, comprehensive and simultaneous" cessation of the conflict in Gaza and the West Bank.

March 13 Hamas and Israel's tacit seven-day cease-fire ends when Islamic Jihad launches 17 rockets into Israel, which responds with an air raid on Gaza.

March 29 Israel makes a modest attempt to ease myriad restrictions on West Bank Palestinians, pledging to remove 50 roadblocks and to upgrade checkpoints to reduce waiting time. The measures win praise from the United States, which has previously criticized Israel for failing to do enough to ease the burden of the 580 roadblocks, dirt mounds, and checkpoints that stop Palestinians from moving within the West Bank.

April 1 Hamas reaffirms that Israeli corporal Shalit, captured near Gaza two years ago, will not be freed until Israel agrees to release several hundred Palestinian prisoners.

April 9 Palestinian gunmen attack the Nahal Oz fuel depot on the Gaza border, killing two Israeli civilian workers and injuring two others as militants fire waves of mortars at the crossing post. Islamic Jihad and a smaller armed faction, the Popular Resistance Committees (PRC), claim responsibility for the raid.

April 10 Israeli forces launch attacks in the Gaza Strip in retaliation for deaths the previous day. They rush forces and tanks across the border into northern Gaza and an air strike hits a car carrying militants near Gaza City. Six people are reportedly killed.

April 16 Three Israeli soldiers and four Hamas gunmen are killed in clashes near Gaza's main fuel terminal. Fifteen Palestinians, including at least four members of Hamas, and three Israeli soldiers are killed in separate clashes in the Gaza Strip. Eight of the dead are killed when Israeli helicopters fire four missiles into central Gaza.

April 17 Twenty Palestinians die in Gaza clashes after a firefight at a fuel crossing. Heavy fighting at Nahal Oz fuel crossing leads to Israeli tank and aircraft strike in several areas of Gaza Strip.

April 18 Israel announces plans for 100 new houses in West Bank settlements. Plans draw swift criticism from Palestinian officials. —Israel seals off the Gaza Strip and West Bank for at least a week to observe the Jewish Passover holiday.

April 21 Six Hamas militants are killed in four Israeli air raids, following an attack by an Islamist group on Gaza's perimeter that wounds 13 soldiers.

—Hamas says it will accept a Palestinian state on land occupied in the 1967 War, but it will not explicitly recognize Israel. Khalid Meshal, the leader of Hamas, says the group will "respect Palestinian national will even if it was against our convictions," an apparent reference to a referendum on a peace deal. His comments come at a news conference in Damascus, Syria, after a rare series of meetings between former US president Jimmy Carter and Hamas Islamists in the West Bank, Cairo, and Damascus.

April 22 Hamas ready to accept Gaza truce. Group says it is prepared to accept a partial truce that will cover only the Gaza Strip, in an apparent softening of its position.

April 24 President Bush receives President Mahmud Abbas at the White House.

—United Nations halts food handouts to up to 800,000 Palestinians because of a severe fuel shortage in Gaza brought on by the Israeli economic blockade. John Ging, the director of operations in Gaza for the UNRWA, says there had been a "totally inadequate" supply of fuel from Israel to Gaza for ten months until it was finally halted two weeks ago. "The devastating humanitarian impact is entirely predictable," he says.

April 25 Israel dismisses a proposal by Hamas for a six-month truce inside the Gaza Strip, saying - that the Palestinian group would use the time to prepare for more fighting rather than peace.

- April 27* Other humanitarian agencies, including Oxfam, say that they too are suspending operations because of the fuel shortages that have brought the Gaza Strip to a standstill. Supplies of fuel to power-generating stations are said to be “on their last drop.”
- April 28* A Palestinian mother and her 4 young children are killed during an Israeli military attack in the Gaza Strip. Two older children from the same family and 10 others who were nearby are also injured.
—Efforts by Egypt to arrange a cease-fire between Israel and the militant groups in Hamas-controlled Gaza fail and violence continues.
- May 2* Middle East Quartet urges all sides to commit to talks amid mounting unease about the deteriorating humanitarian situation in the Gaza Strip. Israel urged to end blockade of Gaza as talks begin in London.
- May 3* Quartet demands freeze on all settlement activity and easing of the humanitarian crisis in Gaza.
—Israeli prime minister Ehud Olmert urged to resign over corruption charge.
- May 10* Scandal threatens peace talks with Hamas as colleagues’ unease grows about fifth inquiry into Olmert since 2006.
—Israel’s sixtieth-anniversary celebrations overshadowed as details of US witness in high-level bribery investigation are revealed.
- May 12* UN official says Israel’s blockade of Gaza is feeding a “growing sense of injustice” among its population.
—Gaza’s fishing industry is drying up as high fuel costs and an Israeli navy blockade make finding profitable catches almost impossible.
—Egyptian mediator to meet Israelis after Hamas agrees to cease-fire plan. Initiative comes two days before George Bush is due to visit the region to discuss flagging Gaza peace talks.
- May 13* Tony Blair, Middle East envoy, hails Israeli agreement to scrap one checkpoint this week and remove or relocate several others. Some 450 remain.
- May 14* Three reported seriously injured as missile fired from Gaza damages Ashkelon mall.
- May 15* President Bush in Israel for country’s sixtieth anniversary, amid little hope for peace talks, condemns Hizbullah and Hamas in Knesset speech and says he looks forward to the day when Muslims “recognize the emptiness of the terrorists’ vision and the injustice of their cause.”
—Palestinians commemorate Nakba.
- May 16* US president George Bush suggests that offers to negotiate with America’s enemies in the Middle East are comparable to appeasement of Hitler.
- May 21* Israel and Syria confirm holding indirect peace talks, with Turkey acting as a mediator. Israel wants Syria to cut ties to Islamist groups while Syria wants return of sovereignty over Golan Heights.
- May 27* US businessman tells court that he gave at least $150,000 over 15 years to the Israeli prime minister, Ehud Olmert. Financier’s testimony is major embarrassment to Israeli leader in fifth corruption investigation brought against him.
- June 1* Israel frees a convicted Hizbullah spy and sends him back to Lebanon, while Hizbullah turns over the remains of what it says are two dead Israeli soldiers.
- June 6* “Unavoidable” attack on Iran looms as that country’s nuclear weapons program may leave no other option, says key member of Olmert’s security cabinet.
- June 11* Captive Israeli soldier begs for life in letter home. Corporal Gilad Shalit, held by Palestinian militants for almost two years, begs his government to win his release.
- June 16* Jerusalem’s city council unveils plan to build 40,000 new apartments over the next ten years. US secretary of state Rice strongly condemns Israel settlement plans.
- June 18* Israel and Hamas agree on a cease-fire as air strikes kill six Palestinian fighters. Hamas agrees to halt all attacks from Gaza in return for Israel halting its military strikes.
- June 19* A six-month cease-fire between Israel and militants in Gaza begins at dawn amid skepticism from both sides.
- June 21* Large-scale Israeli military exercise in Mediterranean a warning to Iran that Israel has the capacity to strike nuclear facilities. Tehran says warning flights over Mediterranean prove Jerusalem is “dangerous.”

June 24 The Egyptian-brokered cease-fire between Israel and Hamas comes under pressure as Palestinian militants in Gaza fire a rocket at the Israeli border town of Sderot.

July 1 Israel closes all Gaza crossings after report of rocket strike at Israel. Hamas accuses Israel of fresh blockade.

July 2 In Jerusalem at least three people killed and dozens injured after man ploughs bulldozer into buses and other vehicles. Driver shot dead. Militant groups compete to claim Jerusalem attack but police believe the construction worker’s rampage was spontaneous.

July 4 Israel’s deputy prime minister calls for some Arab districts of East Jerusalem to be cut off from the city.

July 20 British prime minister Gordon Brown, visiting Israel, says settlement expansion “has made peace harder to achieve.”

July 23 US presidential candidate Barack Obama pledges “unshakeable commitment” to Israel after spending day speaking to Middle East leaders.

July 24 New building plans in Occupied Territory approved by Israeli Defense Ministry despite worldwide calls for a freeze on construction, which is illegal under international law.

July 27 Palestinians under siege as Israel tightens grip on Holy City. The battle for Jerusalem enters a new phase after a series of attacks by settlers ratchets up the tension.

July 30 Ehud Olmert announces his resignation as prime minister under cloud of scandal.

August 5 The Palestinian president resumes discussions with Israel for the first time since peace talks were thrown into jeopardy by Ehud Olmert’s decision to resign as prime minister.

August 14 The Israeli military will not take action against a tank crew that killed a Reuters television cameraman and eight other Palestinian civilians in Gaza. Reuters is “deeply disturbed” that the Israeli military has decided the tank crew will not face legal action.

August 23 Forty-six peace activists on two boats hope to challenge the economic blockade imposed on Gaza to deliver a cargo of 200 hearing aids for a deaf school and other basic essentials. Israel states it will stop mission, which it describes as a “provocation,” but backs off at the last moment and decides not to intercept the two boats at sea, as it has done with previous such humanitarian efforts.

August 26 Israel releases 198 Palestinian prisoners in what it calls a “goodwill gesture” to encourage negotiations; some 10,000 remain in prison.

August 27 Despite continuing negotiations with Palestinians, Israel accelerates (doubles) construction of homes in Jewish settlements.

September 3 Palestinians propose Arab military force for Gaza Strip. Foreign troops will be deployed to keep the peace in Gaza once Fatah and Hamas agree to a coalition government.

September 12 HaMoked and B’Tselem study reveals an alarming increase in forcible transfers of West Bank residents to the Gaza Strip, effectively making refugees of those falling victim to punitive policy.

September 17 Members of Israel’s ruling Kadima Party vote for new leader, with Foreign Minister Tzipora Livni winning favorite.

September 26 Pipe bomb wounds peace advocate and academic Zeev Sternhell in suspected attack by right-wing Jewish extremists.

September 29 Outgoing prime minister Olmert says there will be no peace without withdrawing from “almost all” land captured in 1967 War.

October 11 Israel hires British public image consultants Acanchi to give the nation an image makeover.

October 27 Livni wins the election by one vote and has the opportunity to put together a coalition; however, she is unable to do so.

November 4 Israel breaks the June 19 cease-fire when IDF troops penetrate almost 400 meters into Wadi al-Salqa village, east of Deir al-Balah, backed by air strikes, killing six. Clashes subsequently erupt between IDF troops and members of the Izz-al-Din al-Qassam Brigades (the armed wing of Hamas).

November 5 The Israeli government seals all passages into and out of Gaza.

—Hamas fires rockets after Israel kills six; no injuries result.

November 7 Rival Palestinian factions meet in Egyptian-led effort to end Gaza economic blockade. Also engaged in talks about unity government.

November 11 Israel renews some fuel deliveries, ending weeklong ban that follows rocket attack.

—Israeli police evict Palestinian couple from their Jerusalem home of 52 years. Several foreign governments have tried to intervene but without success.

November 13 Production at Gaza's only power station is suspended and the turbines shut down because it has run out of industrial diesel due to Israel's blockade.

—The UN agency for Palestinian refugees says it will have to suspend food distribution in Gaza after Israel blocks humanitarian supplies from entering the Strip.

November 15 Five-month cease-fire appears to be collapsing fast as Hamas militants fire rockets into southern Israel after Israeli forces kill 10 gunmen. Israel keeps all crossings to the territory closed.

November 20 BBC, CNN, and others "gravely concerned" at Israel's move to keep foreign journalist out of Gaza Strip.

November 26 Journalists launch legal fight to overturn Israel's media ban in Gaza Strip.

December 1 Vessel carrying 3,000 tons of humanitarian aid intended to challenge economic blockade on Gaza Strip is blocked by Israeli navy.

December 6 About 35 Palestinians injured in clashes with settlers in occupied West Bank.

December 15 Palestinian prime minister Salam Fayyad says there is little prospect of a deal with Israel if West Bank settlement activity continues.

December 18 Militants declare six-month truce dead as Israeli-Palestinian violence in Gaza escalates.

December 19 In answer to Israeli air raid, militant Islamists who rule Gaza fire eight rockets and five mortars at Israel's southern towns; no injuries.

—June cease-fire set to end; Hamas officials declare they will not renew it.

December 22 Gaza near collapse as Israel tightens grip. Tit-for-tat attacks across Gaza border intensify following end of truce.

December 27 Support for Israel's ultra-nationalist parties grows as Jewish state and Hamas approach major confrontation.

December 28 Beginning of massive Israeli air, sea, and ground offensive in Gaza—Operation Cast Lead.

2009

January 9 UN Security Council passes resolution calling for immediate cease-fire.

—Amnesty International accuses Israel of war crimes over phosphorus use.

January 17 Israel declares unilateral cease-fire in Gaza Operation Cast Lead. In the 22 days of the operation the Palestinian Center for Human Rights puts the Palestinian death toll at 1,417, of which 926 are civilians, including 313 children and 116 women. Noncombatant police officers constitute 255, and 236 combatants were killed, representing 16.7 percent of the total deaths. The IDF reports 10 fatalities, all combatants, of which 4 were killed by friendly fire, one inside Israel by a Qassam rocket, and 5 in combat with Palestinian forces. Three civilians were reportedly killed.

January 21 Gazans begin reconstructing and repairing tunnels between Gaza and Egypt to bring essential goods to people.

January 22 John Ging, head of UNRWA, reports that phosphorus shells hit Gaza UN school.

January 27 President Barack Obama's special envoy George Mitchell heads to Middle East to initiate dialogue between Israel and Hamas.

—Israeli soldier and Palestinian civilian killed in Gaza during outbreak of violence.

January 28 Obama gives his first foreign interview to an Arab TV station, al-Arabiyya.

January 29 Olmert tells Mitchell that Gaza cross-

- ings will reopen only when Israeli soldier (Gilad Shalit, captured in June 2006) is free.
- Israeli and Hamas attacks undermine Gaza cease-fire. Rocket fire and air strikes come as US envoy Mitchell meets PNA leader in effort to reinforce truce.
- January 30* Dozens believed dead in reprisal attacks as Hamas retakes control from Fatah challenge. The dead are Fatah officials, suspected collaborators, and escaped prisoners.
- February 1* Israel threatens “disproportionate” response to Palestinian rocket fire.
- February 2* Israel pays £1.5 million to cameraman James Miller’s family. Relatives see sum as admission of guilt for death in Gaza while filming documentary.
- February 3* Gaza rocket hits Ashkelon; first Grad rocket to be fired at city since cease-fire. No injuries. Israeli foreign minister says terror must be met with force.
- February 4* Israeli opposition leader Benjamin Netanyahu says no to territorial concessions to Palestinians. Land would just be “grabbed by extremists.”
- PNA president Abbas accuses Israel of war crimes in Gaza, adds to calls for prosecution.
- February 5* Israeli navy intercepts Lebanese boat on its way to Gaza. Reporters say ship carrying aid was fired on and crew beaten.
- February 8* Israeli military forces are intensifying their incursions into the West Bank after their unilateral cease-fire in the Gaza Strip. IDF stages attacks on the various areas of the West Bank almost on a daily basis for the next six months under the excuse of arresting Palestinian fighters. They detain Palestinians and take them to unknown locations.
- February 12* Kadima and Likud claim victory in Israeli elections; extremely tight race gives Tzipora Livni slight lead over Benjamin Netanyahu. Israel may have to wait 42 days before it learns who has won election, based on which of the two is able to put a coalition together.
- February 15* Gaza cease-fire hinges on release of soldier. Egypt has brokered talks on swap of hundreds of Palestinians for Israeli soldier, but deadlock remains. Outgoing Israeli prime minister Ehud Olmert says militants must release Gilad Shalit before truce can be reached or economic blockade lifted.
- February 20* Hamas refuses to free Israeli soldier in return for lifting Gaza blockade. Leaders call for international pressure on Israel to force borders open to relieve humanitarian crisis.
- February 23* Amnesty International calls on United States to suspend arms sales to Israel. Hellfire missiles and white phosphorus artillery shells among US weapons used in “indiscriminate” attacks on civilians, says human rights group.
- March 4* US secretary of state Hillary Clinton condemns Israel’s plans to bulldoze dozens of Palestinian homes in Arab East Jerusalem.
- March 7* EU report attacks Israeli efforts to annex East Jerusalem and accuses Israel of weakening support for peace talks.
- March 9* Israeli military imposes a three-day total closure on the West Bank for the Jewish holiday of Purim.
- March 13* Israeli undercover soldiers in civilian clothes shoot and kill five alleged militants outside a bakery in the southern West Bank city of Bethlehem.
- March 15* IDF fires live rounds at West Bank protesters. Israelis uses war against Hamas to reintroduce banned bullets and a new tear-gas canister.
- March 16* Palestinian attack is suspected after two Israeli policemen are shot dead near Masuah in the West Bank. No Palestinian group claims responsibility.
- March 19* Published soldiers’ testimonies contradict official version of events in Gaza war, saying Israeli troops shot “unarmed Palestinian civilians under orders.”
- March 24* Israeli riot police fight with residents in the Arab-majority town of Umm al-Fahm when trouble flares following a right-wing Israeli march in the town. About 2,500 police in riot gear flank about 100 far-right activists as they march waving Israeli flags. Police use tear gas and water cannons against Arabs and arrest 13.
- March 25* Labor joins coalition being put together by Benjamin Netanyahu.

- March 31* Benjamin Netanyahu becomes Israel's prime minister (Likud). Avigdor Lieberman, founder and leader of the ultra-right Yisrael Beiteinu party, becomes foreign minister and deputy prime minister.
- April 1* Avigdor Lieberman rules out "concessions" to Palestinians. Israel never ratified Annapolis Middle East peace talks, new foreign minister says in debut speech.
- April 3* Israeli exports hit by European boycotts after attacks on Gaza. A fifth of Israeli exporters report drop in demand.
- April 6* At least seven Palestinian civilians are kidnapped by the Israeli military during morning invasions that target Jenin, Hebron, and Bethlehem while troops ransack and search homes.
- April 7* Israeli police shoot motorist during house demolition.
- April 10* Jordan's King Abdullah visits White House.
- April 17* Tear-gas canister shot kills Palestinian demonstrator. Activists say Bassem Abu Rahmeh is eighteenth person to die since 2004 during demonstrations against Barrier.
- April 22* Fatah and Hamas continue clashes in Gaza.
- April 23* Jerusalem's mayor defends demolition of 88 houses in Arab area. Nir Barkat rejects international criticism and says East Jerusalem could never be capital of Palestinian state.
- April 23–28* ReliefWeb reports that Israeli Occupation Forces (IOF) continue systematic attacks against Palestinian civilians and property in the occupied Palestinian territory and continue to impose a total siege on the Gaza Strip.
- April 27* Nonviolent protests against Barrier become increasingly violent as Israel uses tear gas, stun grenades, and sometimes live ammunition against peaceful demonstrators.
- May 1* United Nations tells Israel to end Palestinian house demolitions in Jerusalem.
- May 3* Israel bombs tunnels on Gaza-Egypt border.
- May 4* Lieberman begins European tour in attempt to sway EU policy on Israel.
- May 5* UN accuses Israel of "grave offenses" in Gaza offensive, holding it responsible for deaths, injuries, property destruction, and damage to UN buildings. Israel dismisses UN accusation as biased.
- May 6* Washington's chief nuclear arms negotiator calls on Israel to sign nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, leading to a diplomatic row between the United States and Israel.
—AIPAC urges members of US Congress to sign letter to Barack Obama calling for Israel to set pace of negotiations with Palestinians.
—UN report finds the continuing Israeli military occupation around Bethlehem is severely restricting its growth, undermining its economy, and compromising its future.
- May 7* Israeli troops kill an unarmed Palestinian at the entrance to al-Ibrahimi Mosque in Hebron.
- May 10* Israel "using tourist sites to assert control over East Jerusalem." Peace groups say government's secret plans with settler groups could prevent two-state solution.
- May 11* King Abdullah of Jordan warns of war within 18 months if talks don't progress; says Muslim nations "would recognize Israel" in peace deal.
- May 13* Giving speech in Bethlehem, Pope Benedict XVI expresses solidarity with Palestinians in Gaza Strip, makes strongest call yet for a Palestinian homeland, offers his solidarity to Palestinians of Gaza, and urges removal of Israeli blockade.
- May 18* Israeli prime minister Benjamin Netanyahu visits the White House. President Obama declares there must be a halt to settlement building and Israel must honor commitments, but Netanyahu remains noncommittal on the issue of an independent Palestinian state and says settlement expansion for "natural growth" must continue. Obama restates support for Palestinian state.
- May 19* Iran test-fires missile capable of reaching US bases or Israel.
- May 21* At a ceremony marking the Israeli takeover of East Jerusalem during the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, Netanyahu says the city "has always been—and always will be—ours. It will never again be divided or cut in half.

Jerusalem will remain only under Israel's sovereignty."

May 26 Israeli vice premier Moshe Ya'alon rules out the creation of any "Palestinian entity" at a conference at the Knesset.

May 27 US secretary of state Hillary Clinton urges Israel in unusually blunt terms to completely halt settlements on land that Palestinians claim as part of a future state of their own.

May 28 President Obama receives Palestinian president Mahmud Abbas at White House. Obama administration increases pressure on Israel to stop all building in Jewish settlements in the West Bank.

—Hillary Clinton says stopping settlements is a key part of moving toward a deal establishing a Palestinian state alongside Israel. Israel retorts that construction will continue in East Jerusalem and West Bank.

May 29 Israel again rejects US president's demand for an end to grabbing land in West Bank.

—Amnesty International reports that some 600 Israeli military checkpoints and barriers remain in the West Bank, restricting the movement of Palestinians and hindering their access to workplaces, education and health facilities, and other services.

May 30 Soldiers and civilian police attack and beat peaceful activists assisting farmers working their lands in Safa, West Bank, then arrest them.

May 31 Six die as Fatah and Hamas clash in West Bank.

June 1 Hamas must renounce violence to enter peace talks, Tony Blair says. Quartet will not deal with Islamist movement, but "back-channel" contacts are open, according to envoy.

—UN Human Rights Council investigative panel led by Judge Richard Goldstone enters the Gaza Strip to investigate alleged Israeli war crimes. Israel refuses to cooperate.

June 3 The IDF declares Nablus, its refugee camps, and surrounding villages a closed military zone.

June 4 President Obama gives major speech in Cairo, reaches out to Arab-Muslim world, calls for an end to occupation and settlements, and an independent Palestinian state.

June 6–12 This week the Israeli military conducts at least 24 military invasions into Palestinian communities in the West Bank, hitting Hebron and Bethlehem in the south and Ramallah and Nablus in the north especially hard. During the attacks troops seize and take away 24 civilians, including 6 children.

June 11 Scores of olive trees are damaged when Israeli settlers set them on fire near Hebron City. The owners tell media that the settlers came from the nearby Kharsina settlement. Witnesses say that Palestinian firefighters managed to stop the fire but at least two dozen trees were destroyed.

—Another group of Israeli settlers set fire to farmlands that belong to Palestinians from the villages of Aqraba and Yanoon near Nablus City. The farmers say that settlers, protected by the Israeli military, set fire to their crops. The fire destroys two acres of farmland before the farmers are able to put out the fire.

June 14 Prime Minister Netanyahu gives a major speech in which he says Palestinians must recognize Israel as the state of the Jewish people before any negotiations; he is prepared to see the creation of a limited and demilitarized Palestinian state in the future, as long as the international community can guarantee that it will not have any military capabilities; he declares that an undivided Jerusalem must remain the unified capital of Israel; the government must be allowed to accommodate natural growth in the settlements. He emphasizes that the Jewish people have been linked to the land of Israel for over 3,000 years and rules out the option of granting Palestinian refugees the right to settle within Israeli borders, and he says Israel will not negotiate with terrorists who wish to destroy it and that Palestinians must choose between path of peace and Hamas.

—Member of the Knesset Aryeh Eldad (National Union) accuses Netanyahu of violating his own promises and says the nationalist camp can no longer support his policies. "Today the prime minister lost the leadership of the nationalist camp by not only transgressing his own red lines, but by converting from his own religion."

—Gideon Levy of Ha'aretz says, "Netanyahu adopted the language of the day before yesterday. No Palestinian people, rather a 'Palestinian population' that lives in Judea and Samaria. He invoked the infamous lexicon of Golda Meir, not of occupation, rather 'Israeli pres-

- ence' in the West Bank. There was also the repeated flight from the subject of final borders, the lack of even superficial reference to the road map peace plan, the repetition of 'Jerusalem forever undivided,' the repeated claim that 'they started it,' and the ridiculous, excessive demand that Palestinians recognize the Jewish state by one who has failed."
- Ha'aretz* editorial says, "The prime minister was never a believer [in a two-state solution]. He has had to loosen the American noose on a daily basis, and he made the effort. Anyone who believes a Palestinian state will arise under Netanyahu, even if he lasts out his term, raise your hand now. . . . Why did he wait until yesterday? Why belatedly, onto the lingering two-state wagon? Netanyahu speech was aimed solely for Obama's ears."
  - Palestinian president Mahmud Abbas says that the speech "sabotages" regional peace efforts due to his unwillingness to compromise on the status of Jerusalem.
  - PNA official Nabil Abu Rudeinah says, "Netanyahu's remarks have undermined all initiatives, paralysed all efforts being made and challenges the Palestinian, Arab and American positions."
  - Egyptian president Hosni Mubarak says the speech "scuttles the chances for peace."
  - Former president Jimmy Carter says, "Netanyahu brought up several obstacles to peace in his speech that others before him have not placed."
  - President Obama hails Prime Minister Netanyahu's speech in which he endorsed a limited Palestinian state, calling the speech "an important step forward."

---

THE CONTRIBUTORS

---

As'ad AbuKhalil is professor of political science at California State University, Stanislaus, and visiting professor at the University of California, Berkeley.

Yasmeen Abu-Laban is professor of political science at the University of Alberta.

Ismael Abu-Saad is associate professor of education and founding director of the Center for Bedouin Studies and Development at Ben-Gurion University of the Negev.

Susan M. Akram is clinical professor at the Boston University School of Law.

Meital Alon is lecturer in film, culture and communication at the Open University, Israel.

Ibrahim G. Aoudé is professor of ethnic studies at the University of Hawaii and editor of the Arab Studies Quarterly.

Naseer Aruri is Chancellor Professor Emeritus of Political Science at the University of Massachusetts, Dartmouth.

Pierre M. Atlas is associate professor of political science and director of the Richard G. Lugar Franciscan Center for Global Studies at Marian University.

Ariella Azoulay teaches visual culture and contemporary philosophy at Bar-Ilan University.

Omar Barghouti is an independent Palestinian researcher, commentator, and human rights activist.

Khalil Barhoum is program coordinator for Middle Eastern and African languages and literatures at Stanford University.

Amir Bar-Or teaches in the Department of Political Science at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

Ramzy Baroud is editor in chief of the Palestine Chronicle.

Helga Baumgarten is professor of political science at Birzeit University.

Uri Ben-Eliezer is senior lecturer in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at the University of Haifa.

James A. Bill is professor emeritus of government at the College of William and Mary.

Amahl Bishara is assistant professor of anthropology at Tufts University.

Michael B. Bishku is professor of history at Augusta State University.

Jeffrey Blankfort is a journalist and radio host based in northern California.

Friedemann Büttner is professor emeritus of political science at the Free University of Berlin.

Mark Chmiel is adjunct professor of theological studies at Saint Louis University and adjunct professor of religious studies at Webster University.

Ray L. Cleveland is professor emeritus of history at the University of Regina.

Uri Cohen is professor of Hebrew literature at Columbia University.

John C. Creed is associate professor of political science at the College of Charleston.

Lawrence Davidson is professor of history at West Chester University.

Uri Davis is honorary research fellow at both the Institute of Arab and Islamic Studies at the University of Exeter and the Institute for Middle Eastern and Islamic Studies at the University of Durham.

Bert de Vries is professor of history and archaeology at Calvin College and director of the Umm el-Jimal Project in Jordan.

JoAnn DiGeorgio-Lutz is associate professor of political science at Texas A&M University–Commerce.

Daniel Dor is senior lecturer in the Department of Communication at Tel Aviv University.

Michael Dumper is professor of Middle East politics at the University of Exeter.

Bassem Eid is founder and executive director of the Palestinian Human Rights Monitoring Group.

Richard Falk is the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Palestinian Territories, as well as Albert G. Milbank Professor Emeritus of International Law at Princeton University and Visiting Distinguished Professor in Global and International Studies at the University of California, Santa Barbara.

Hani A. Faris is adjunct professor in the Department of Political Science and research associate in the Institute of Asian Research at the University of British Columbia.

Leila Farsakh is associate professor of political science at the University of Massachusetts, Boston.

The late Samih Farsoun was professor emeritus of sociology at American University.

Michael Feige is senior lecturer in the Ben-Gurion Research Institute at the Ben-Gurion University of the Negev.

Gordon Fellman is professor of sociology at Brandeis University.

Michael R. Fischbach is professor of history at Randolph-Macon.

Betsy Folkins is a librarian in the Frederick Madison Smith Library at Graceland University.

Robert O. Freedman is professor emeritus of political science at Baltimore Hebrew University and visiting professor of political science at Johns Hopkins University.

Philip Gasper is professor emeritus of philosophy and religion at Notre Dame de Namur University and instructor in the Department of Humanities at Madison College.

Ingrid Jaradat Gassner is director of the BADIL Resource Center for Palestinian Residency and Refugee Rights, which she helped to establish in 1998.

The late Deborah J. Gerner was professor of political science at the University of Kansas.

Nurith Gertz is professor of cinema and literature at the Open University of Israel.

As'ad Ghanem is lecturer in the Department of Government and Political Theory at the University of Haifa and also researcher at the Peace Research Institute in Givat Haviva and codirector of Sikui.

Neve Gordon is professor in the Department of Politics and Government at Ben-Gurion University of the Negev.

Lisa Hajjar is associate professor of sociology at the University of California, Santa Barbara.

Maia Carter Hallward is assistant professor in the Department of Political Science and International Affairs at Kennesaw State University and associate editor of the Journal of Peacebuilding and Development.

Jeff Halper, formerly professor of anthropology at Ben-Gurion University of the Negev, is founder and director of the Israeli Committee against House Demolitions.

Sari Hanafi is associate professor of sociology at American University of Beirut and editor of Idafat: The Arab Journal of Sociology.

Adam Hanieh is assistant professor in the Department of Humanities and Social Sciences at Zayed University.

Reuven Y. Hazan is professor of political science at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

Sara Helman is senior lecturer in sociology at the Ben-Gurion University of the Negev.

Adam Horowitz is a writer and activist based in New York City.

Khaled Hroub is director of the Cambridge Arab Media Project, an affiliated project of the Centre of Middle Eastern and Islamic Studies at the University of Cambridge.

Jad Isaac is director general of the Applied Research Institute, Jerusalem.

Islah Jad is director of the Institute of Women's Studies and professor of cultural studies at Birzeit University.

Penny Johnson is associate researcher at the Institute of Women's Studies at Birzeit University.

Henriette Dahan Kalev is director of the Gender Studies Program and lecturer in political science at the Ben-Gurion University of the Negev.

Ghada Karmi is research fellow at the Institute of Arab and Islamic Studies, University of Exeter.

George Khleifi is a prominent Palestinian filmmaker and producer.

Laurie King, a cofounder of the Electronic Intifada, teaches at George Washington University and Georgetown University.

David Kretzmer is professor emeritus of international law at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

Atif Kubursi is professor of economics at McMaster University and president of Econometric Research Limited.

Fred H. Lawson holds the Frederick A. Rice Chair in Government at Mills College.

Mark LeVine is professor of history at the University of California, Irvine.

Zachary Lockman is professor of Middle Eastern studies and history at New York University.

David E. Long, retired from the US Foreign Service, is a consultant on Middle East and Gulf affairs and international terrorism.

Russell E. Lucas is associate professor of political science at Florida International University.

Loren D. Lybarger is assistant professor of classics and world religions at Ohio University.

Michael Lynk is professor in the Faculty of Law at the University of Western Ontario.

Jon Mandaville is professor of history and Middle East studies at Portland State University.

Meir Margalit served for twenty years as a member of the Jerusalem City Council. He is now field coordinator of the Israeli Committee Against House Demolitions.

Khalil M. Marrar is assistant professor of political science at DePaul University.

Philip Mattar is president of the Palestinian American Research Center.

Weldon C. Matthews is associate professor of history at Oakland University.

Daniel A. McGowan is professor emeritus of economics at Hobart and William Smith Colleges and founder and executive director of Deir Yassin Remembered.

John J. McTague is professor of history at Saint Leo University.

Yoram Meital is professor of modern Egyptian history at Ben-Gurion University of the Negev.

Norton Mezvinsky is Connecticut State University professor of history emeritus at Central Connecticut State University and president of the International Council for Middle East Studies in Washington, D.C.

William F. S. Miles is professor of political science at Northeastern University.

Ylana Miller is visiting associate professor of history at Duke University.

Fouad Moughrabi is professor of political science at the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga and director of the Qattan Center for Educational Research and Development, Ramallah.

Shihadeh Mtanes is a doctoral student at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and research fellow at Mada al-Carmel, the Arab Center for Applied Social Research, Haifa.

Yael Munk is lecturer in film and culture at the Open University of Israel.

Muhammad Muslih is professor of political science at Long Island University's C. W. Post Campus.

Arie Nadler is professor of social psychology at Tel Aviv University, where he holds the endowed Argentina Chair for Research in Social Psychology.

Fadle Naqib is professor emeritus of economics at the University of Waterloo.

David Newman is professor of political geography in the Department of Politics and Government at the Ben-Gurion University of the Negev.

Augustus Richard Norton is professor of international relations and anthropology at Boston University.

Pamela Olson served as head writer and editor of the Palestine Monitor, a Ramallah-based news and information source, in 2004–2005.

Adi Ophir is associate professor of philosophy at the Cohn Institute for the History and Philosophy of Science and Ideas at Tel Aviv University.

Ilan Pappé is professor of history at the University of Exeter and codirector of the Exeter Center for Ethno-Political Studies.

Karen Pfeifer is professor of economics at Smith College.

Julia Pitner is advisor for Middle East programs at the Institute of World Affairs.

Gideon Rahat is senior lecturer in the Department of Political Science at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

Haggai Ram is senior lecturer in the Department of Middle East Studies at the Ben-Gurion University of the Negev.

Robert C. Rowland is professor of communication studies at the University of Kansas.

Cheryl A. Rubenberg, formerly associate professor of political science at Florida International University, is an independent scholar and commentator.

Rosemary Radford Ruether is the Carpenter Professor Emeritus of Feminist Theology at the Graduate Theological Union and also a research scholar at the Claremont Graduate University and Claremont School of Theology.

Abeer Safar is research assistant in the Water and Environment Research Department at the Applied Research Institute–Jerusalem.

Rouba Al-Salem, a human rights consultant, is also a Ph.D. student in the Faculty of Law at the University of Montreal.

Shahira Samy is Jarvis Doctorow Junior Research Fellow in International Relations and Conflict Resolution in the Middle East at the University of Oxford.

Isabel Schäfer is assistant professor at the Institute for Social Sciences, Humboldt University Berlin.

Dorothee Schmid is senior researcher at the French Institute of International Relations (Ifri).

Charmaine Seitz is editor of the Jerusalem Quarterly, a scholarly journal on the city's past and present.

Yitzhak Shichor is professor of east Asian studies and political science at the University of Haifa and professor emeritus at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

Snehal Shingavi is assistant professor in the Department of English at the University of Texas, Austin.

Nurit Shnabel is lecturer in psychology at Tel-Aviv University.

Jerome Slater is University Research Scholar at the State University of New York at Buffalo, where he was formerly professor of political science.

Peter Sluglett is professor of Middle Eastern history at the University of Utah.

Ted Swedenburg is professor of anthropology at the University of Arkansas.

Ghada Hashem Talhami is D. K. Pearsons Professor of Politics Emerita at Lake Forest College.

Lisa Taraki is associate professor of sociology at Birzeit University.

Lea Tsemel is a human rights lawyer based in Israel.

Michel Warschawski is founder and former general director of the Alternative Information Center in Jerusalem.

Alison Weir is founder and executive director of If Americans Knew, which produces in-depth studies and illustrative videos on US news coverage of Israel and Palestine.

Oren Yiftachel is professor in the Department of Geography and Environmental Studies at the Ben-Gurion University of the Negev.

Stephen Zunes is professor of politics at the University of San Francisco.

---

INDEX

---

Note: Entries beginning with al- and el- are alphabetized according to the first letter of the accompanying surname or place name.

- Aaronsohn, Aaron, 1, 206, 1655–1656
Aaronsohn, Sara, 1–2, 1171
Abandoned areas, 2, 5, 1469
Abandoned Areas Ordinance (1948), 2, 1119, 1469.
  See also Palestinian refugee property claims
Abbas, Mahmud, 2–3; appointment of as prime minister, 2–3, 67, 233, 660, 1201; Declaration of Principles (DOP), support for, 314; election to presidency of PNA, 3, 368, 1100, 1203, 1213, 1218; and Farouq al-Qaddumi, relations with, 1195–1196; Fatah, leadership of, 127, 395, 1195, 1433; and Hamas, ultimatum to, 1186; Israeli assault on Gaza (2008), reaction to, 1041; Madrid Conference, participation in, 2; negotiations with Israeli General Mattityahu Peled (Principles of Peace), 2, 1179; as “Old Guard,” 127, 1020; Oslo Accords, role in, 2; PLO Executive Committee, responsibility to, 1075; prisoners’ Document, diplomatic course suggested by, 1186; resignation, calls for, 1219; two-state solution, support for, 2, 431, 1179, 1186. See also Beilin–Abu Mazen Accord (1995)
Abbas, Muhammad. See Zeidan, Muhammad Ahmad Fahd Abbas
Abbas, Yasser, 1105
‘Abd al-Baqi, Hilmi, 22
‘Abd al-Hadi, Awni, 182, 481, 718, 892, 1128
‘Abd al-Hadi family. See al-Hadi family
‘Abd al-Nasir, Jamal. See al-Nasir, Jamal ‘Abd, and Nasirism
‘Abd Rabbu, Yasir, 3–4, 177, 220, 318, 319, 430, 506, 778, 1075, 1092, 1203
‘Abd al-Shafi, Haydar. See al-Shafi, Haydar ‘Abd
Abdallah, Khaled, 1117
Abdallah, Tawfiq, 958
Abdallah Initiative (2002). See Arab Peace Initiative (2002)
Abdulfattah, Kamal, 110
Abington, Edward, 1076
Abraham Fund, 327
Abramoff, Jack, 1454
Abrams, Elliott, 301, 328, 490, 984
Abramson, Leonard, 36
Absentee, defined, 298, 1119, 1239, 1469
Absentee landlords, 4, 79, 114, 333, 723, 1054, 1121, 1467
Absentee property: custodian of, 134–135, 297–298, 326, 523, 544, 705, 1119, 1339, 1388, 1389, 1404, 1469, 1555; identified as, 135, 742, 826, 1239, 1339, 1388, 1401; “protected tenancy,” 1375, 1388
Absentee Property Law (1950), 2, 4–5, 172, 247, 297, 298, 326, 677, 705, 712, 826, 950, 1176, 1239, 1388, 1469, 1555, 1636
Absentee tenant, 4
Abu Ala’a. See Qurei’, Ahmad Ali Muhammad
Abu al-Abbas/Abul Abbas. See Zeidan, Muhammad Ahmad Fahd Abbas
Abu al-Hawl. See al-Hamid, Hayil ‘Abd
Abu Ali Hasan. See Salamah, Abu ‘Ali Hasan
Abu Ali Mustafa. See al-Zabri, Mustafa
Abu Ali Mustafa Brigades, 962
Abu al-Lutf. See al-Quaddumi, Farouq
Abu ‘Ammar. See Arafat, Yasir
Abu Bashir. See ‘Abd Rabbu, Yasir
Abu Daoud. See Oudeh, Mohammed
Abu Dis, 5–6, 169, 561, 895, 949, 1317, 1337, 1429
Abu Gharbiyya, Bahjat, 1081
Abu Hajim. See ‘Atallah, Ghazi
Abuhatzira, Aharon, 1432
Abu Hawwash, Sammer, 1117
Abu Iyad. See Khalaf, Salah
Abu Jihad. See al-Wazir, Khalil Ibrahim
Abul-Rahim, Al-Tayeb, 42
Abu-Lughod, Ibrahim, 7–8, 1381
Abu-Lughod, Janet, 589
Abu Mazen. See Abbas, Mahmud
Abu Musa. See Muragha, Sa’id Musa
Abu Nidal. See al-Banna, Sabri Khalil

- Abu Nidal Organization. See Fatah Revolutionary Council (Black June)
- Abu Omar. See Abu Sharif, Bassam Tawfiq
- Abu Sa'id. See al-Hasan, Khalid Muhammad
- Abu Saif, Sawah, 65–66
- Abu Salih. See Salih, Nimr
- Abu Salma. See al-Karmi, 'Abd-al-Karim
- Abu Shakar. See Natshe, Rafiq
- 'Abu-Sharar, Majed, 8
- Abu Sharif, Bassam Tawfiq, 8–9, 201, 1068
- Abu Tor neighborhood, 1317, 1337, 1385
- Abu Tor Seminar Center, 562
- Abu Za'im. See 'Attallah 'Attallah
- Abuznaid, Dr. Nabil, 1076
- Academia, pro-Israeli groups and, 32–34
- Accommodationism, 1136
- Achille Lauro*, 9, 93, 231, 640, 1063, 1069, 1659
- Acre, 9–10, 828, 1177, 1484, 1562
- Action Organization for the Liberation of Palestine (AOLP), 1291
- Adalah, 10, 1091
- Adani, Miriam, 192
- Adas, Shafiq, 637
- Addameer (Prisoners Support and Human Rights Association), 10, 1306
- Aden-Algiers Accord, 11, 971, 1653
- Adenauer, Konrad, 434, 435, 436, 442
- Ad-Hoc Liaison Committee for Assistance to the Palestinians, 382
- Ad Kan (Up to Now), 654
- Administrative detention, 11–13; appeals, 11; child detainees, 12; Committee Against Administrative Detentions (CAAD), 1349; Defense Emergency Regulation 111, 315; defined, 11; emergency decrees for executing, 1008; increases in during the al-Aqsa Intifada, 62, 65, 1035; international law and, 11, 615, 1180; "iron fist" policy and, 642; for journalists, 915–916; judicial review, 11, 700; length of, 11; origins of, 11–12; use of, 12, 664
- "Adopt-a-Settler" program, Jerusalem Prayer Team, 752
- Advisory Council (British Mandate), 13, 211
- Adwan, Sami, 353
- Affirmative action, 35
- Aflaq, Michel, 88, 141, 142
- AFL-CIO, 37
- African-American community, support for Israel in, 35
- Afro-Asian Solidarity Committee, 440
- Agha, Hussein, 281
- Agnon, S. Y., 514, 515
- Agranat Commission, 848, 1642
- Agreements on Restitution and Indemnification (Luxembourg Treaty), 434
- Agricultural Settlements Law (1967), 677
- Agriculture, Palestinian. See Economy, Palestinian, agricultural sector
- Agudat Yisrael (Association of Israel), 13–14, 316, 986, 1370, 1437, 1535
- Ahdut Ha'avodah (Unity of Labor), 14, 179, 181, 546, 841, 904, 1217, 1361, 1430
- Ahdut Ha'avoda-Po'alei Zion (Unity of Workers' Labor), 14, 18, 905
- Ahmadinejad, Mahmoud, 630–631, 633
- Aida Refugee Camp, 192
- Aid to Israel. See U.S. aid to Israel
- AIPAC. See American-Israeli Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC)
- Air pollution, 376
- Airport, Palestinian, 428, 1257, 1636
- al-Akhal, Tamam Aref, 1357
- Akhimeir, Abba, 113
- al-Alami, Musa, 14, 15, 182, 892
- al-Alami family, 14–15
- Albright, Madeline, 15–16, 28, 1362, 1426, 1503
- Alexander, Reverend Dr. Michael Solomon, 255
- ALF. See Arab Liberation Front (ALF)
- Algeria, 1192, 1663
- Algerian National Front, 1167
- Algiers Declaration (1988). See Declaration of Independence, Palestine
- Algiers Summit (1973), 16–17, 432, 639, 784
- al-Ali, Naji al-Azami, 17, 1179
- Ali, Taha Muhammad, 1112
- Aliya*, 17, 51, 319–320, 1165, 1251, 1663, 1665, 1666
- Aliya Bet*, 17, 188, 320
- Alkalai, Yehuda, 43
- Allbright, W. F., 106
- Allbright, William, 257
- Allenby, General Edmund, 1, 207, 1680
- Alliance Israélite Universelle, 17–18, 572, 635–636
- Alliance of World Reformed Churches, 258
- Alliance School, 186
- Allon, Yigal, 18, 139, 309, 650, 686, 790, 822, 1134, 1206, 1280, 1323, 1470, 1573
- Allon Plan, 18–22; analysis of, 20–22; and Dayan Plan compared, 309, 1573; defined, 18; details of, 20; Galili Protocols, incorporation of, 414; Gaza Strip, annexation of, 423; implementation of, 21; Jewish settlements and, 20–21, 309, 460, 714, 1208, 1322, 1323, 1402; Jordan Valley and, 790; opposition to, 1430; origins of, 18–20; preemptive attacks, need for, 20
- All-Palestine Conference of Arab Students, 1129
- All Palestine Government (APG), 22–23, 88, 420, 481, 577, 1095, 1568
- Aloni, Shulamit, 23, 271, 683, 933, 1134, 1154
- Alpher, Yossi, 197, 1615
- Altalena* Affair, 23–25, 642
- Alterman, Nathan, 516–517, 518
- Alternative Information Center (AIC), 25, 684, 906–907, 998, 1592
- Amal, 25, 200, 120, 124, 237, 867, 1188, 1398. See also Camps' War (1985–1987)
- Am Echad (One Nation Party), 25–26

- Amer, Nabil, 977
- American Center of Oriental Research (ACOR), 109
- American Committee for Judaism, 50
- American Council for Judaism, 327
- American Enterprise Institute (AEI), 37
- American Friends of Ateret Cohanim, 328, 949
- American Friends of Israel, 976
- American Friends of Likud, 328
- American Friends of Lubavitch (AFL), 38
- American Friends of Neve Shalom, 327
- American Friends of the College of Judea and Samaria, 1315
- American Friends of Yeshiva High School of Kiryat Arba, 1315
- American-Israel Cooperative Enterprise (AICE), 26, 1400
- American Israel Education Fund, 27
- American-Israeli Memorandum of Understanding (1975), 406
- American-Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), 27–29; achievements, 29; The AIPAC College Guide: Exposing the Anti-Israel Campaign on Campus, 32; campus involvement, 32; conferences hosted by, 27; efforts to impede sale of U.S. weapons to Saudi Arabia, 327, 1229; influence of on U.S. aid to Israel, 327, 1539; James Baker's address to (1989), 221; Near East Report, 27; and neoconservatives, alliance with, 256; political candidates, support for, 27, 29; Political Leadership Development Program, 32; setbacks, 28–29; and U.S. media, influence on, 821; U.S. policies toward Israel, influence on, 27–28, 29, 327, 406, 593, 1531; and U.S. response to September 11 attack, 1449
- American Jewish Committee (AJC), 33, 34–35, 328, 901
- American Jewish Congress, 34, 328, 902, 1655
- American Jewish organizations, 26–40, 327–328, 1579; Abraham Fund, 327; academia, 32–34; American Committee for Judaism, 50; American Council for Judaism, 327; American Friends of Ateret Cohanim, 328, 949; American Friends of Israel, 976; American Friends of Likud, 328; American Friends of Neve Shalom, 327; American Friends of the College of Judea and Samaria, 1315; American Friends of Yeshiva High School of Kiryat Arba, 1315; American-Israel Cooperative Enterprise (AICE), 26, 1400; American-Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), 27–30, 32, 221, 256, 327, 406, 593, 921, 1229, 1449, 1531, 1539; American Jewish Committee (AJC), 33, 34–35, 328, 901; American Jewish Congress, 34, 328, 902, 1655; Americans for a Safe Israel, 30, 328; Americans for Peace Now (APN), 30, 327; Americans for a Progressive Israel, 327; Anti-Defamation League (ADL), 33, 35–36, 221, 756; Association of American-Israel Chambers of Commerce (AAICC), 37; Brit Tzedek v' Shalom (Jewish Alliance for Justice and Peace), 217; business groups, 37–38; CAMERA (Committee for Accuracy in Middle East Reporting in America), 31, 33, 328; CampusWatch, 33; Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish organizations (Presidents Conference), 29–30, 32–33, 240, 328, 406, 447; contributions to, tax-deductible status of, 338, 1520; The David Project (TDP), 33; Hadassah, 33, 38, 338; Hasbara Fellowships, 33; Hebron Fund, 328, 526; Hillel: The Foundation for Jewish Campus Life, 33; HonestReporting.com, 31–32, 921; Interns for Peace, 327; Israel on Campus Coalition (ICC), 32, 33, 66; Israel Policy Forum (IPF), 30; The Israel Project (TIP), 31–32; Jewish Council of Public Affairs (JCPA), 30, 32, 34–35; Jewish Defense League (JDL), 756–757, 763, 803, 804, 1443; Jewish Labor Committee (JLC), 37; Jewish Peace Lobby, 327; Jewish religious bodies, 38; labor unions, 37; media, 30–32; MediaBackspin.com, 31; Middle East Forum (MIF), 33, 921; Middle East Media Research Institute (MEMRI), 31, 256, 921; multifunction organizations, 34–36; National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council, 406; New Israel Fund, 327, 994; New Jewish Agenda, 327; One Voice–Jewish Women for Israel, 38–39; political action committees, 29–30; political groups, 27–30; Professors for a Strong Israel, 470; Project Nishma, 328; Provisional Executive Committee for Zionist Affairs, 206; purpose of, 27; Religious Zionists of America, 328; Scholars for Peace in the Middle East (SPME), 33; small political organizations, 30; Stand With Us (SWU), 33–34; state and local groups, 30; State of Israel Bonds Organization, 37–38, 1530, 1538, 1540–1541; strategies to ensure favorable news coverage, 921; tax-exempt support for Jewish settlement activity, 1313–1315; think tanks, 36–37; United Jewish Appeal, 327, 338; and U.S. support for Israel, influence of, 26, 45; women's groups, 38–39; Zionist Organization of America (ZOA), 30, 327
- American media. See Media, U.S.
- American Reform Movement of Judaism, 327
- American School of Oriental Research (ASOR), 104
- Americans for a Progressive Israel, 327
- Americans for a Safe Israel, 30, 328
- Americans for Better Citizenship, 29
- Americans for Peace Now (APN), 30, 327
- Americans United for Democracy, 29
- American University of Beirut (AUB), Lebanon, 87, 117, 1064
- American University of Kuwait, Kuwait, 391

- American University of Sarjah, United Arab Emirates, 391
- American Zionist Emergency Council (AZEC), 1385
- American Zionist Youth Foundation, 32
- America's Voice, 30
- Ames, Robert, 245
- Amin, Idi, 372
- Amir, Yigal, 40–41, 385, 1050, 1208, 1453
- Amirav, Moshe, 1002
- Amit, Meir, 1642
- al-'Amlah, Abu Khalid, 395
- Amman Agreement (1985). See Husayn-Arafat Agreement
- Amnesty International, reports by, 63, 66, 282, 642, 669, 1030, 1034, 1035, 1180, 1344, 1378, 1383, 1545, 1593, 1597
- Amotz, Dan Ben, 518, 679
- Amuta (non-profit organization), 178, 751, 1334, 1452
- The Amuta for Settling Jerusalem. See Jerusalem Forum (The Amuta for Settling Jerusalem)
- 'Amwas (ancient Emmaus), 107
- Anarchists Against the Wall, 684
- Anderson, Tristan, 451
- Andoni, Ghassan, 620, 621
- Andrews, Lewis, 82, 980
- Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry (1945–1946), 41–42, 213, 945, 1130, 1250, 1478
- Anglo-Hijazi Treaty, 76
- Anglo-Palestine Bank, 1633, 1634. See also Jewish Colonial Trust (JCT)
- an-Najah National University, 1132, 1432
- Annapolis Summit (2007), 227, 380, 500, 793, 1040, 1055, 1319
- Annenberg, Walter, 921
- Annexation Barrier. See Barrier
- Anti-Defamation League (ADL), 33, 35–36, 221, 756
- Anti-Incitement Presidential Decree, 42
- Anti-Semites League, 42
- Anti-Semitism, 42–46; Ahmadinejad's rhetoric of, 630–631, 633; Anti-Defamation League (ADL), 33, 35–36, 221, 756; in the Arab and Islamic world, 44–45; assimilation and, 43–44, 47, 48, 50, 327, 635, 1663, 1667; Christian efforts to eliminate, 257; defined, 42; divestment efforts as, 450; Dreyfus Affair, 43, 334–335, 540, 1000, 1664; in Eastern Europe, 1661; efforts to eradicate, 18; in Europe, resurgence of, 381, 1139; fears about resurgence of, 1579; in France, 408; historical roots of, 48, 49; immigration to Palestine as escape from, 43, 1139; Israeli government policies as, 45; modern, history of, 42–43; in Palestinian textbooks, claims of, 353; pogroms, 43, 44, 1054, 1061, 1087, 1164, 1661, 1667, 1670; in Poland, 47, 1673; Protocols of the Elders of Zion, 486; roots of, 1164; and Zionism, rise of, 42, 44–45, 1661, 1667, 1676
- Anti-Terrorism Act (1987), 1075
- Anti-Terrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996, 30
- Anti-Zionism, 46–55, 1171, 1591; as a cover for anti-Semitism, 45, 46, 257; evolution of, 46–47; from Jews, 46–47; post-Holocaust, 50–52; pre-Holocaust, 47–50; Matzpen party platform, 679, 1481, 1591; from Palestinians, 46, 52–53, 915–916; and a unipolar world, 53–54
- Antonius, George, 55–56, 892
- "Apartheid Wall." See Barrier
- Applied Research Institute–Jerusalem (ARIJ), 56
- Aqaba Summit, 67, 1195
- al-Aqsa Intifada, 2, 56–73, 86, 126–127, 626–629, 1051; administrative detention and, 62, 65; armed resistance, 626–627; Battle of Jenin (2002), 725–729, 1175–1176, 1368; blame, assignment of, 1524; Border Police in (Kafir Qasim massacre), 202, 800–802; checkpoints, 62, 66; Church of the Nativity (Bethlehem), siege of, 61, 193, 701, 1034; civil society in, 627–628; consequences of, 68–70, 128; curfews, 63, 297; deaths and injuries related to, 56, 59, 627, 675, 1343; al-Dura, Muhammad Rami Jamal, murder of, 339–340; economic effects of, 628–629; Field of Thorns Plan, 400–402; fighter jets, use of, 61; and First Intifada compared, 57, 622, 626; house demolitions, reasons for, 62; incursions into Area A, 60–61; international peace efforts during, 66–68; and Israeli military court system, 675; Israeli objectives, 69–70; Israeli response to, 626, 627, 659–661, 701, 1525 (see also Operation Defensive Shield (2002); Operation Determined Path (2002); Operation Journey of Colors (2002)); Joint Israeli-Palestinian Declaration (2001), 778; journalists and, 64–66, 629, 918; leadership and authority, 628; media, role of, 629, 914–915, 918–919, 1077; medical personnel and ambulances, Israeli attacks on, 66, 1037; military weapons and tactics, 59–63; Nablus in, 962–965; National Religious Party (NRP) reaction to, 975; nonviolent resistance, 63–64; and the Oslo Process, effect on, 1145; Palestinian archaeology, impact on, 110–111; Palestinian objectives, 56, 69; physical obstructions, erection of, 62–63; PNA responsibility for, 61–62, 160; primary purpose of, 626; reasons for, 56, 425, 1524; refusal movement and, 1649; roots of, 57–59, 940; settler violence in, 1343; suicide bombings, use of, 59, 73–74, 627; tank fire, 61; targeted assassinations, 60, 660; triggering event, 56–57, 74, 626, 1011; truce, Zinni Plan for, 1660; U.S. diplomatic efforts re., 67–68; women, role of, 628
- al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigade, 73–74, 103, 160–161, 425, 491–492, 616, 627, 962, 1219, 1449
- al-Aqsa Mosque, 74–75, 739; archaeological excavations, objections to, 74–75, 1340–1341; plots to destroy, 804, 1440; significance of to Muslims, 75, 732, 1438
- Arab Agency, 75, 211, 1127

- Arab-American Anti-Discrimination Committee (ADC), 804
- Arab American Association of University Professors, 1282
- Arab-American Cultural Foundation, 1359
- Arab-American University, 1132
- Arab Association for Human Rights (HRA), 76, 1280
- The Arab Awakening*, 55
- The Arab Club. See al-Nadi al Arabi (The Arab Club)
- Arab Congresses, 76, 77
- Arab Co-operation Council, 92
- Arab Defense Council, 938
- Arab Democratic Party (ADP), 76–77, 1090, 1205
- Arab Executive, 76, 77, 114–115, 211, 481, 1126, 1128
- Arab Higher Committee (AHC), 77–78; All Palestine Government (APG), establishment of, 22–23, 481; Arab Revolt, involvement in, 212; boycott of UNSCOP, 1513; and British departure from Palestine, 1559; declared illegal, 577, 1629; formation of, 81, 115, 1127; Holy War Army and, 566; and Jewish Agency, negotiations between, 636; MacDonald White Paper, rejection of, 898; members of, 242, 445, 578, 1232, 1301; Morrison-Grady Plan, opposition to, 892, 945; UN General Assembly Resolution 181, rejection of, 610, 1560
- Arabian American Oil Company (ARAMCO), 1195, 1295
- Arabic language, use of in Israel, 1086
- Arab Jews. See Mizrahi
- Arab Lawyers' Committee (ALC), 673
- Arab League. See League of Arab States (Arab League)
- Arab Liberation Army (ALA), 78, 87, 980, 1065, 1081, 1418, 1560
- Arab Liberation Front (ALF), 9, 78, 92, 100, 638, 639, 1065, 1069, 1168
- Arab Movement for Change (AMC), 78–79
- Arab Movement for Renewal (AMR), 1464
- Arab National Committee for the Defense of the Lands (ANCDL), 850
- Arab Nationalist Club, 219
- Arab nationalist movement, 87, 404, 481, 644, 862, 1065. See also Movement of Arab Nationalists (MAN)
- Arab nationalists' land sales to Zionists, 79, 81, 114, 209–210
- Arab National Party, 303, 1205
- Arab-Palestine Communist Party, 79–80, 100, 290, 445, 478, 974. See also Maki Party; Palestinian People's Party (PPP)
- Arab-Palestinian-Israeli conflict, timeline of events, 80
- Arab Party (Councilists), 77, 80, 575, 1128
- Arab Peace Initiative (2002), 67, 80–81, 86, 361, 633, 857, 868, 1186, 1200, 1298–1299, 1489, 1499, 1512, 1525
- Arab Peace Initiative (2007), 80, 81
- Arab Resurrection Socialist Party, 862
- Arab Revolt (1936–1939), 81–83, 182; anthem of, 1284; Arab Higher Committee, role of, 77, 115; and Arab world view, changes in, 636; British response to, 210, 247, 517, 1126, 1559, 1673; deaths attributed to, 212; defined, 80; Egyptian response to, 1190; and Irgun, militant activities of, 1406, 1444; Jaffa and, 723; MacDonald's "Black Letter," role of in sparking, 898; Peel Commission investigation of, 722, 1152–1153; al-Qassam, Shaykh 'Izz al-Din, involvement of, 1196–1197; al-Qawuqji, Fawzi, involvement of, 1199; root causes of, 50, 1121, 1122, 1125, 1128; Shuqayri, Ahman, involvement of, 1382; and Syrian posture toward Palestine, 1417; volunteers recruited to support, 78; Zionism, impact on, 650, 1468
- Arab Revolutionary Brigades. See Fatah Revolutionary Council (Black June)
- Arab Revolutionary Council. See Fatah Revolutionary Council (Black June)
- Arabs in Israel*, 772
- Arabs in the Jewish State*, 754
- Arab state peace overtures (1949–present): Camp David Accords, 84, 91, 123, 358–359, 639; first period (initial overtures: 1949–1953), 83–84; fourth period (post-Oslo peace initiatives), 86; Israel-Jordan peace agreement (1994), 704, 1208; second period (negotiations with Israel) 1953–1985, 84–85; third period (Madrid and the Oslo Process), 85–86
- Arab states, inter-Arab politics, 87–94, 1069; Ba'athism, rise of, 88; bilateral relations with Western powers, 1189; domestic concerns, 1192; Egypt, resentment toward growing influence of, 88; Fez Peace Initiative (1982), 85, 91, 99, 385, 399–400, 581, 788, 873, 1189, 1232, 1287; inter-Arab rivalry, 87, 88–94; Islamic Conference (1931), 643; nationalism, emergence of, 87–88, 112–113; 1948 War, Arab defeat, 87; 1967 War, impact of, 88, 89, 1573; Palestinian cause, failure to support, 1189, 1191–1192; and Palestine, marginalization of, 1191–1192; PLO, relations with, 89–90, 1069–1071; Rabat Summit (1974), 1205–1206, 1488, 1589; Reagan Plan, interest in, 1232; refugee problem, 87, 89; plan, conflicts over, 89, 1419, 1420, 1518–1519
- Arab Studies Quarterly*, 7
- Arab Studies Society, 94, 578
- Arab Thought Forum (ATF), 95, 1306
- "Arab Trek," 1467, 1654–1655
- Arab Uprising (1929). See Western Wall Disturbances (1929)
- Arab Women's Union, 273

- Arab world, and Palestine. See individual countries: Algeria, Egypt; Iran; Iraq; Jordan; Kuwait; Lebanon; Libya; Morocco; Saudi Arabia; Syria; Yemen
- Araf, Huwaida, 620
- Arafat, Yasir, 2, 89, 95–104, 198, 832, 1544, 1658; address before UN General Assembly (1974), 90, 122, 871, 1067, 1070, 1206, 1300, 1371, 1488, 1588; address before UN General Assembly (1988), 8, 92, 1068–1069, 1489, 1503, 1527; address before UN Security Council (1990), 1069, 1534; advisors/confidants to, 160, 502, 1227–1228, 1272, 1285, 1371, 1464; alleged internal plot to assassinate, 1196; Anti-Incitements Decree, 42; Armed Struggle, advocacy of, 95; Barak's generous offer, refusal of, 102, 683; Camp David Summit (2000), 102, 154, 158–159, 236, 625, 1351, 1524; Clinton Parameters, acceptance of, 283, 1051; consensus building, mastery of, 97; corruption under, 97, 102, 161, 398, 977, 1102; death of, 3, 103, 127, 233, 395, 397, 878, 947, 1100, 1195, 1266; Declaration of Principles (DOP), signing of, 1073, 1447, 1483, 1636; “donor money” to, 1258; European Union, dialogue with, 383; expulsion from Syria, 99; Fatah, formation and leadership of, 95–96, 118, 233, 1587; and Hafez al-Assad, personal animosity between, 91, 96, 99, 395, 875, 1072, 1421; Hamas, refusal to accept, 232; handshake with Yitzhak Rabin, 101, 552; Hebron Massacre, response to, 1441; and Hitler compared, 176, 551; house arrest in Ramallah, 102, 1659; IDF plan to topple, 400; imprisonment in Syria, 1420; “inner circle,” 1100; international pressure to resign, 102; invitation to meet privately with Ezer Weizman, 1609; invitation to visit U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum, 553; Lebanon War and, 98–99; letter to Henry Kissinger (1973), 1067; meeting with Benjamin Netanyahu, 1635; meeting with Hosni Mubarak (1983), 573–574, 874; Nablus headquarters, 96; NGOs, relations with, 131; Nobel Peace Prize, 103, 1155, 1206; Palestinian National Authority, leadership of, 101–103, 1050, 1099–1102, 1201, 1265; peace process, 101, 311–312, 772; PLO, election to chairmanship of, 1064; PLO Executive Committee, chairmanship of, 96–97, 1075; PLO Executive Committee, responsibility to, 1075; polarization of Palestinian politics, 99–100; policy of “stages” (marhaliyya), 97; political activism, history of, 95; Presidential Guard, 1100, 1178–1179, 1213, 1214; Ramallah headquarters, Israeli attack on, 1033, 1035, 1368; request to attend Geneva Conference (1973), 122, 432; return of to Palestine, 1050, 1098, 1483; “Revolution until Victory” strategy, 96, 97, 101; rise to power, 96–97; secret bank accounts, 1104; secret talks with Israel, 1305, 1483, 1522; Sharm al-Shaykh Memorandum (1999), signing of, 1362; strategy, changes in, 97–99, 100–101, 1527; terrorism, renunciation of, 231, 312, 1069, 1109, 1300, 1446, 1482; U.S., relations with, 102, 226, 1175, 1265; visits to China, 253, 1590; visit to Moscow with Egyptian delegation, 1589
- Aran, Gideon, 760
- Arbel, Yaffa, 407
- Archaeology, 104–112; Albright School, 104, 110; antiquities of Palestine, authority over, 107–109, 110; at al-Aqsa Mosque, 74–75, 1340–1341; “archaeological park” at Silwan, 560–561, 1338, 1393–1395; Bar Kokhba correspondence, discovery of (Cave of Letters), 108; under the British Mandate, 106–107; British School of Archaeology in Jerusalem, 106; Dead Sea Scrolls, discovery of, 109, 110, 1642; destroyed villages, 107; early, in Palestine, 105–106; From the Stone Age to Christianity, 106; Hasmonean Tunnel, 126, 388, 497, 505, 559, 740–741, 949, 1023, 1440, 1635–1636; Hazor, 1642; Hebron, 522; Holy Land travelers, 104–105, 106; at Isaac's Tent, 560; inter-cultural efforts, 111; Jericho, excavations in, 729, 730; Jewish Palestine Exploration Society (JPES), 106; Jordan and Egypt, management of antiquities by, 108–109; late Ottoman era (1830–1921), 104–106; local, 106–107; major sites, excavation of, 106, 108–109; at Masada, 108, 1642; Moshe Dayan's private acquisitions, controversy surrounding, 308, 1642; and nationalism, 107–108; Near Eastern Archaeology, 111; Occupation and, 109–111; official map of Israel, creating, 107; Ohel Yitzhak, 559; Oslo Accords and after, 110–111; plundering, 110; Qumran Caves, excavation of, 109, 110, 1642; Second Temple, remains of, 1341; settler groups, involvement of, 1340; sifting sites, Holy Basin, 562; Silwan, excavations in, 364, 560–561, 1386, 1393–1395; Syro-Palestinian, 111; Tel Megiddo, 1642; Temple Mount, 1440–1441; Western Wall, 559–560
- al-Ard (The Land) movement, 112–113, 305, 573, 848, 980, 1154
- Areas A, B, C. See Interim Agreement
- Arendt, Hannah, 51
- Argentina, Jewish emigration to, 1664
- Argov, Shlomo, 484, 1365, 1446
- al-Arian, Sami, 33
- Ariel, Rabbi Yisrael, 1455
- Ariel settlement, 165, 1327
- Ariely-Orloff, L. A., 515
- El Arish project, 1631
- Arlozorov, Haim Victor, 113, 474, 1612, 1673
- Armed Struggle, Palestinian, 114–128; Cairo Agreement, 863, 938, 1587; decision to pursue, 198, 613, 1167; early period (pre-1948), 114–116; end of (1983–1993), 123–125 Fatah and the emergence of, 393, 1585; goals, failure to achieve, 114, 127–128, 130; 1948–1967, 116–119; 1967–1972, 119–121; 1973–1982, 121–123; nonviolence as an alternative to, 997;

- origins of, 1129; Palestinian military units, formation of, 117; Palestinian opposition to, 1065; PLO renunciation of, 1527; portrayal of following September 11 attacks on U.S., 127; post-1993, 125–127; summary, 127–128, 130; Youth Revenge Group, involvement in, 1652
- Armed Struggle and the Search for State: The Palestinian National Movement, 1949–1993*, 114
- Armistice Agreements (1949), 129–131, 1509, 1515; Blue Line, establishment of, 130; borders established by, 1208; demilitarized zones (DMZs), 131, 941, 1177, 1419, 1420, 1494, 1516–1518, 1572, 1573; Egypt, 116, 130, 131, 1209, 1494, 1568–1569; Gaza Strip, creation of, 418, 1209; Green Line, establishment of, 130, 163; international support for, 1302, 1494; Iraq, 131; Jerusalem, division of, 735; Jordan, 130–131, 1494, 1569; Lebanon, 130, 868, 1494; Mixed Armistice Commissions, 131, 941–942, 1419, 1516; and recognition of Israel by Arab states, 87, 88–89; Rhodes Armistice Line, 129; Syria, 131, 1419, 1494, 1569; United Nations Truce Supervision Organization, formation of, 1515; UN Partition Plan (General Assembly Resolution 181), 129; violations of, 1515, 1518–1519
- Arms, acquisition of, 115; Altalena Affair, 23–25, 642; illegal, by Zionists in the U.S. (1947), 1478; by Iran, 631–632, 633, 1230; Israeli Purchasing Mission, U.S. reimbursement of, 1540; and 1948 War, 1558, 1566; by Palestinian guerrillas, from Egypt, 1587; U.S. military aid to Israel, 1519, 1520–1521, 1530–1531, 1538–1540; U.S. sale of to Israel, 733, 1478, 1520, 1521, 1531–1532. See also Weaponry
- Arms Export Control Act (U.S.), Israeli violations of, 1538
- Arnon, Ya'akov, 649
- Aronson, Geoffrey, 1615
- Article 22. See Covenant of the League of Nations, Article 22 (1919)
- Arts and culture, Israeli: Hebrew literature, 513–522. See also Israeli poetry and poets
- Arts and culture, Palestinian: al-Akhal, Tamam Aref, 1357; Shammut, Isma'il Abdul-Qader, 1357–1358. See also Palestinian poetry and poets
- Arvesen, Ane-Karine, 1278
- al-Asadi, Saud, 1117
- al-'Asifa (The Storm), 95–96, 118, 133, 396–397, 160
- al-'Asali, Shakri, 1416
- Ascend the Temple Mount in Purity, 1459
- 'Asfur, Hasan, 131–132, 300, 414
- Ashkenazi, 132; Citizens' Rights Movement (CRM), 271; discrimination against Arab Jews, 51, 1173; domination of Israel by, 176; first chief rabbi of Palestine, 830, 1666; Labor Party and, 841–842; Likud Party and, 888
- Ashkenazi-Sephardic Council, 1680
- Ashrawi, Hanan Mikha'il, 132–133, 368, 377, 778, 877, 901, 1046, 1098, 1348
- Asquith, Herbert Henry, 1289, 1290
- al-Asad, Bashar, 142, 1425
- al-Assad, Hafez: death of, 282, 1425; Geneva Conference (1973), refusal to attend, 432; Golan Heights, plans for recovery of, 86; intervention in Lebanon, 123, 866; Jordanian civil war, Syrian participation in, 90, 121, 199; meeting with Jimmy Carter, 1286; and the Soviet Union, alliances with, 946; and Yasir Arafat, personal animosity between, 91, 96, 99, 395, 875, 1072, 1421
- el-Assal, Riah Abu, 1154
- Assassination(s), 102; by Abu Nidal, 146, 395, 871, 1291; 'Abu-Sharar, Majed, 8; al-Ali, Naji al-Azami, 1179; Andrews, Lewis, 82, 980; in al-Aqsa Intifada, 60, 627; Arlozorov, Haim Victor, 113, 1612, 1673; attempted, Argov, Shlomo, 484, 1365, 1446; attempted, al-Hut, Shafiq, 582, 1082; attempted, Khalaf, Karim, 525, 972, 1443; attempted, MacMichael, Harold, 1354; attempted, Mash'al, Khaled, 488; attempted, Meshal, Khalid, 933, 951–952, 1643; attempted, Shaka'a, Bassam, 525, 852, 972, 1351, 1443; attempted, al-Shawwa, Hajj Rashad, 1372; Ayyash, Yahya (The Engineer), 140, 425, 488, 537, 1362, 1451; al-Banna, Sabri, 1446; Bernadotte, Count Folke, 187, 188, 507, 892, 1302, 1353, 1406, 1445, 1493, 1509, 1567; Boudia, Mohammad, 956; Bull, Gerald, 951, 1435; Gemayel, Bashir, 872, 873, 1229, 1277, 1366, 1512; Hamami, Sa'id, 138, 146, 485, 639, 1154; Ham-shiri, Mohammad, 956; al-Hariri, Rafiq, suspected Syrian involvement in, 1426; Hosseinpour, Ardashir, 1435; Kahane, Rabbi, Meir, 756, 763, 799, 805; Kanafani, Ghassan Fayiz, 201, 806, 1166; Karmi, Raed, 74; Khalaf, Salah, 146, 200, 233, 493, 818, 1064, 1534; Khudr, Maim, 146; King Abdullah I of Jordan, 84, 89, 337, 782; King Faisal of Saudi Arabia, 1297; el-Mashad, Yehia, 1435; by Mossad, 8, 201–202, 951, 955, 1482, 1643; el-Moussawi, Abbas, 1435; Moyne, Lord (Walter Edward Guinness), 641, 891, 954, 1354, 1406, 1445; Mugnyah, Imad, 1426; al-Najjar, Yusuf al-Muhammad, 201, 956, 967; Nasir, Kamal, 201, 956, 967, 970; al-Nuqrashi, Mahmoud, 1569; of Palestinian collaborators, 1585; Qualaq, Izz 'a-Din, 146; Rabin, Yitzhak, 22, 41, 57, 360, 385, 410, 442–443, 462, 470, 552, 608, 657–659, 764, 841, 882, 985, 1050, 1056, 1208, 1447, 1453; Rantisi, Abd al-Aziz, 60, 233, 425, 933, 1222, 1223, 1644; in retaliation for Munich Olympics massacre, 201–202, 951, 955–956; Sa'd, Ma'ruf, 864; al-Sadat, Anwar, 84,

- Assassination(s) (continued)
 359, 954; Salamah, Abu 'Ali Hasan, 951, 956, 1286, 1434; Sartawi, Isam, 138, 146, 1154, 1291; Shehadeh, Salah, 1035; Shenev, Ismail Abu, 233; al-Sheqaqi, Fathi, 643; al-Shikai, Fathi, 951; Stern, Avraham, by British intelligence officers, 1406, 1445; al-Tal, Wasfi, 200, 201, 783, 1285; Tsar Alexander II, 43, 1661; 'Udwan, Kamal, 201, 956, 1491, 1606; al-Wazir, Khalil Ibrahim, 2, 100, 152, 202, 395, 628, 877, 951, 1069, 1435, 1482, 1544, 1606; Yasin, Shaykh Ahmad Ismail, 60, 66, 233, 425, 616, 933, 1222, 1645; Yassin, Ali, 146; al-Zabri, Mustapha, 60, 1169, 1653, 1658; Ze'evi, Rehavam, 886, 944, 1169, 1653, 1658; Zwaiter, Wael 'Adel, 956. See also Targeted assassinations, Israeli policy of
- Assimilation, 43–44, 47, 48, 50, 327, 635, 1663, 1667
- Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI), 133, 527, 707, 709, 1346–1347, 1394, 1404
- Association for the Advancement of Civic Equality in Israel, 1086
- Association of American-Israel Chambers of Commerce (AAICC), 37
- Association of Arab-American University Graduates (AAUG), 7
- Association of Forty, 133–134, 1536
- 'Atallah, Ghazi, 873
- Atara L'Yoshna, 134–135, 136, 178, 751, 763, 770, 1465, 1472, 1555
- Ateek, Naim, 260
- Ateret Cohanim (Crown of the Priests), 135–136; Abu Dis neighborhood, development of, 556; Beit Yehonatan, construction of, 1387, 1389; Development Authority, purchase of property from, 326; Israel Lands Administration, involvement with, 711–712; Jerusalem Is Ours, association with, 751; Jerusalem Quarter Development Company, transfer of property to, 770; and other settler groups, association with, 134, 178, 1465, 1472; primary focus of, 1335, 1338; questionable transfer of Israeli government funds to, 826, 1341; Ras al-Amud neighborhood, development in, 1223; Shaykh Jarrah, development in, 1336; Third Temple Movement and, 1452; Wadi Juz neighborhood, confiscation of land in, 1555
- al-Athamna family, Israeli strike on, 1040
- Athlit Salt Company, 1122
- Atlas of Jewish History*, 1061
- Atlee, Clement, 41
- 'Attallah, 'Attallah, 100, 134
- A Tur neighborhood, 136–137, 561, 895, 1223, 1317
- Austin, Warren, 902
- Australia, Jewish Diaspora in, 328
- "Authoritarian populism," 628
- Autoemancipation*, 43, 1164
- Avery, Brian, 63, 451, 621
- Aviez, Michal, 1459
- Aviner, Rabbi Shlomo, 136
- Avissar, Miriam, 111
- Avnery, Uri, 137–139, 518, 649, 679, 682, 955, 990–991, 1034, 1154, 1291, 1464
- Avodah ivrit* (exclusive employment of Jews by Jews), 182
- Avram Avinu settlement, 139, 523
- Awad, Amar, 64
- Awad, Mubarak, 324, 998, 1083, 1436
- Awais, Nasser, 73, 74
- Awais, Yasir, 74
- al-Awda (The Palestine Right to Return Coalition), 140
- Ayad, Masoud, 405
- Ayalon, Ami, 140, 710, 1003
- al-Ayla, Anas, 1117
- Ayyash, Yahya, 125, 140, 425, 488, 537, 1362, 1451
- Aziz, Tariq, 639
- al-Aziz, Youssef Abd, 1117
- Azoulay, Michael, 322
- Ba'athism, 141–142, 404; basic principles of, 141; organization of, rise of, 88
- Ba'athist Party (Iraq), 78, 88, 117, 141, 142, 635, 638–639, 1065, 1589
- Ba'athist Party (Palestine), 1585
- Ba'athist Party (Syria), 88, 141, 142, 1065, 1191, 1283, 1418, 1420, 1528, 1545, 1587
- Badarneh, Mustafa, 1184
- Badawi, Yasir, 73
- BADIL Resource Center for Palestinian Residency and Refugee Rights, 142, 1306; annual Survey on Palestinian Refugees and Internally Displaced Persons, 1236
- Ba'Gad, Rabbi Joseph, 944
- Baghdad Pact, 336
- Bahá'í faith, 483, 1222
- Bahr, Morton, 37
- Baily Committee, 142
- Baker, Atef Abu, 398
- Baker, James Addison III, 142–143, 220, 221, 578, 639, 899, 900–901, 940, 1315, 1423, 1522
- Baker Plan, 142, 143, 221–222, 223, 1355–1356
- Balad al-Shaykh, massacre at (1947), 1562
- Baladna–Association for Arab Youth, 543
- Balad Party (National Democratic Alliance), 79, 143–144, 196, 478, 1464
- Balfour, Lord Arthur James, 144, 206, 255, 1610, 1671
- Balfour Declaration (1917), 144–145, 1671; Arab view of, 576; Chaim Weizmann's role in, 1610, 1670, 1680; clarification of (Churchill Memorandum), 1127, 1135; France's agreement to, 1275; Herbert Samuel, involvement in, 1288; incorporation of into British Mandate, 208; and the Jewish Territorial Organization, decline of, 1654; legal interpretation of, 1234; Legislative Council, proposal for, 879; negotiations for, key figures in, 1397–1398; Palestinian demonstrations against, 961; promise of a Jewish homeland, 457, 473, 542, 649, 821, 893, 1135, 1233, 1467, 1632;

- purpose of, 1147; reaffirmation of (San Remo Conference), 1291; termination of, 679; Woodrow Wilson's endorsement of, 1626; World Zionist Organization and, 145; Zionist Commission (1917), 1, 719, 821, 1613, 1680–1681
- Ball, George W., 146
- Ballas, Shimon, 520
- Al-Balqa', 296. See also British Mandate in Palestine (1922–1948)
- Bama'avak (Struggle Group), 137
- al-Banna, Hassan, 486, 957
- al-Banna, Sabri Khalil, 146–147, 395, 397, 639, 640, 871, 1066, 1291, 1446
- Bantustans, 146–151, 1351, 1616, 1678; central West Bank, 151; defined, 146; East Jerusalem, 151; Hebron, Old City enclave, 147, 150; Hebron Southern District, 150–151; Jericho enclave, 151; Jordan Valley, 151; Metropolitan Jerusalem Plan and, 936; northern West Bank, 147, 149; restriction of movement between, 248; southern West Bank, 147, 150–151; U.S. support for, 226–227, 1526
- Barain, Moshe, 1657
- Barak, Aharon, 324, 802
- Barak, Ehud, 151–152, 661, 841; attitude toward Palestinians, 153–154; blame for failure of Camp David Summit, 1351; Camp David Summit, initiation of, 154–155; Camp David Summit, interpretation of, 159–160; Clinton Parameters, conditional acceptance of, 283, 1051; compromises made to Palestinians, 153; final status settlement, vision of, 153–154; Interim Agreement, abstention on, 153; Lebanon War, objections to, 152; Maskiyot settlement, approval of, 1319; Operation Cast Lead, defense of, 1031; Oslo Process, opposition to, 1051; promise to freeze settlement expansion in the West Bank, 1225; Sharm al-Shaykh Memorandum (1999), signing of, 1362; and Syria, relations with, 1015, 1425; Taba Talks, rejection of, 1052; withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon (2000), 407, 659, 1398–1399; Wye River Memorandum, failure to implement, 1639
- Barakat, Salim, 1155
- Barak Organization Affair, 1026
- Barak's Generous Offer, 58, 102, 152–160, 1051; Barak's attitude toward the Palestinians, 153–154; Barak's stands during Camp David Summit, 155–156, 157, 158; Israeli conditions, 153, 155, 236; and the Israeli post-Camp David discourse, 156, 159–160; Jerusalem's final status, projection of, 155, 156, 158; Palestinian rejection of, 156; West Bank, permanent status, projection of, 157, 236
- Barcelona Process, 380
- Barghout, Jamal, 111
- al-Barghouti, Mourid, 1117
- Barghuthi, Bashir, 1065
- al-Barghuthi, Marwan Hasib Husayn, 74, 127, 160–161, 368, 877, 1169, 1184, 1218, 1432
- al-Barghuthi, Mustafa Kamil Mustafa, 161–162, 622, 1065, 1109
- Bar Giora (Watchmen), 162, 180, 186, 503, 650
- Barkat, Nir, 556, 1394–1395
- Bar Kokhba, Shimon, 1666
- Bar-Lev, Chaim, 1134
- Bar-On, Mordechai, 271
- Barrier, 151, 163–171, 429–430, 762, 845–846, 1012, 1379; at Abu Dis, 5–6, 169; Aida Refugee Camp, 192; Bethlehem and, 189–191; borders, disruption of, 204–205; calls for dismantlement of, 162, 170, 381; cement used to build, 1105, 1203; checkpoints, increase in number of, 249; construction of, 163, 164, 1210, 1368–1369; displacement by, 1465; economic impact of, 68, 169, 205, 351, 629, 1332, 1383, 1617; effects of on Palestinians, 136, 164, 169, 191, 205, 619; entry/exit points, 422, 424, 429; Gaza Strip, 429–430; grassroots resistance to, 169; Greater Land of Israel Movement and, 462; through Hebron, 528; history and evolution of, 163–164; “internal enclaves,” Palestinian residents in, 165–166; International Court of Justice condemnation of, 54, 170, 205, 449, 614, 618–619, 746, 1176, 1368–1369, 1501–1502, 1528; Israeli justification for, 163, 164; around Jerusalem, 166, 168–169, 738, 743–745; Jordan Valley, 794–795; legality of, 170, 205, 698, 702; map of (February 2005), 166; and olive harvest, effects of, 1021; and Palestinian archaeology, impact of, 110–111; Palestinian National Authority (PNA) response to, 169; passage through, 164; protesters, Israel's response to, 169, 202; purpose of, 169, 1678; at Qalqiliya, 165, 167, 169; route, 164–169; “seam zone” areas, 846; settlement expansion and, 1332; special identity cards and, 587; Ta'ayush campaign against, 1427; U.S. support for construction of, 1175, 1528; waste management and, 375; and water, access to, 1603
- Barth, Arnold, 474
- Basel Program, 43, 47, 171, 540, 589, 1000, 1630
- Basic Law (Palestine), 1075, 1077, 1080, 1101
- Basic Laws (Israel), 51, 171; Citizenship and Entry into Israel (1952), 322, 386, 856, 1086, 1262; defined, 171, 310; discriminatory nature of, 692; Education (1953), 989; Human Dignity and Liberty (1992), 386, 701; Israel Lands (1960), 677, 704, 705, 767, 851, 1471; Jerusalem (1980), 746, 1334; Jerusalem, status of, 171; Knesset (1985), 799; Land Acquisition (1953), 326, 677, 1634; Land Acquisition in Time of Emergency (1948), 1470; Lands Law, 2, 4, 171, 704, 705, 851–852; new rights secured by, 695; Planning and Construction (1965), 1342, 1535–1536; Right of Return (1950), 310, 322, 386, 707, 856, 1084, 1086, 1262, 1634; Transfer of Property (1950), 326, 705

- Basilica of the Annunciation, Nazareth, 971, 981–983
- Baskin, Gershon, 1397
- Baskin-Siniora Peace Plan, 1397
- Bat Shalom (Women with a Vision for a Just Peace), 171, 288, 683, 751
- Bauer, Otto, 48
- Baum, David, 1476
- Bayt Sahur Tax Revolt. See Tax revolt, Bayt Sahur
- Bedouin in Israel, 106, 172–174; distinction from other Palestinians, 172; expulsion of from the Negev, 1470, 1568; general strike, support for, 1129; government plan for, 173–174; Green Patrol, 465–466; health care, 1163; impact of Israeli-Palestinian conflict on, 172; and the Judaization of Israel, 172–173; land confiscated from, 895; land rights, 173, 286, 768; military service by, 647; raising awareness for plight of, 228–229; unemployment among, 173; Unit 101 attack on, 1492; in unrecognized villages, 172, 173, 706, 768, 1535; urbanization program, resistance to, 173
- Be'eri, David, 1386, 1388
- Beged Ivri (Hebrew Clothing), 1456–1457
- Begin, Benjamin “Benny” Ze’ev, 174, 444, 539–540, 976
- Begin, Menahem, 175–177, 240, 460, 1581, 1658; biblical connection to the land of Israel, 176; Camp David Accords, 84, 175, 235, 359, 485; comparison of Arafat to Hitler, 176, 551; and Germany, relations with, 550; Irgun activities, 24–25, 175, 641, 821, 1444; Lebanon, invasion of, 175, 176–177, 1277; Likud Party and, 887; memoir (The Revolt), 1445; Nobel Peace Prize, 551; Officer’s Letter to (1973), 997; peace treaty with Egypt, 175, 176; Reagan Plan, rejection of, 1232; “the revolt” against British control of Palestine, 175; Sabra and Shatila massacre, knowledge of, 177, 802, 1230; Sinai Peninsula, return of to Egypt, 1437; U.S. arms sale to Saudi Arabia, reaction to, 1229; U.S., relations with, 1521; Village Leagues, implementation of, 1551; violent interrogation tactics, order to curtail, 668
- Beilin, Yossi, 3, 154, 177, 319, 430, 431, 488, 778, 1047, 1106, 1350–1351, 1641
- Beilin–Abu Mazen Accord (1995), 2, 177–178, 430, 747, 949
- Beirut Declaration. See Arab Peace Initiative (2002)
- Beirut, siege of (1982). See Lebanon War (1982); Sabra and Shatila Massacre (1982)
- Beit Orot, 178–179, 751, 1223, 1336–1337, 1374, 1472
- Bemuna Company, 710
- Ben Aharon, Yossi, 1046–1047
- Ben Ali, Sharif Husayn, 296
- Ben-Ami, Shlomo, 155, 981
- Ben Ari, Michael, 1088
- Ben Dor, Rachel, 407
- Ben-Eliezer, Benjamin, 179, 1039, 1156, 1293
- Ben-Gurion, David, 179–185, 194, 307, 841; binational state, objections to, 41; and British in Palestine, 181, 184, 1612; comparison of Arabs to Nazis, 549, 551; deportation of, 181, 186; and destruction of Palestinian villages, 1476, 1553; “double formula” policies, 183; as first president of Israel, 184–185; formative years, 180; Gaza Strip, claims to, 420; ideology of, 179–180; “iron wall” doctrine, adoption of, 1467, 1468; and Jabotinsky, relationship between, 721–722; and Jewish Agency for Israel, 1672, 1681; King David Hotel bombing, initial order for, 821; and Lebanon, plan to dismember, 861; and Menahem Begin, relations with, 175; military force, advocacy of, 184; Nahal, establishment of, 966; in Palestine, 180–183; Palestinians, attitude toward, 183, 1469; Peel Commission report, support for, 182–183; “Plan B,” British withdrawal from Palestine, 1558–1559; Po’ale Zion, leadership of, 1165; private negotiations with Germany re: military trade, 435, 442; provocation-and-revenge, accusations of, 184; public and private postures, contradiction between, 183; Qibya massacre, knowledge of, 1492; Rafi party, founding of, 1217; resignation of, 816; retirement of, 184–185; segregated economy, vision of, 182; in the struggle for independence, 183–184; territorial ambitions, 183; testimony before the UN Special Committee on Palestine, 184; ties with Western powers, establishment of, 184–185; in the U.S., 181, 183–184; vision of Zionism, 181–182, 206
- Ben-Gvir, Itamar, 1088, 1646
- Ben Ner, Yizhak, 519
- Bennike, Vagn, 1200, 1491
- Ben Shemesh, Shimon, 768
- Bentwich, Norman, 1413
- Benvenisti, Meron, 106, 185, 417, 683, 767, 1262, 1327, 1410, 1471, 1553, 1580
- Ben-Yehudah, Eliezer, 186, 1654, 1666
- Ben-Zvi, Yitzhak, 162, 181, 186–187, 1165
- Bereaved Families Forum. See Parents’ Circle (Bereaved Families’ Forum)
- Berger, Sandy, 28
- Bergmann, Ernst David, 1001
- Beriha Flight, 829
- Berit Shalom (Covenant of Peace), 474, 1149
- Bernadotte, Count Folke, 187–188; assassination of, 187, 188, 507, 892, 1302, 1353, 1406, 1445, 1493, 1509, 1567; Jordanian option, proposal of, 780, 788, 1478; League of Arab States, discussions with, 242; prisoner rescue mission (Holocaust), 187; right of return, support for, 1242; and United Nations Truce Supervision Organization, creation of, 1515
- Berri, Dan, 364
- Betar, 175, 188–189, 211, 459, 720, 721, 803, 1480, 1624
- Bet Din (House of Judgment), 1455

- Bethlehem, 189–193; Aida Refugee Camp, 192; Barrier, effect of, 189–191; Bilal Mosque, 564; Church of the Nativity, 61, 192, 93, 564–565, 701, 739, 1034, 1037; Freij, Elias, 412; history of, 189; Homat Shmuel settlement, 1337; Presidential Guard headquarters, destruction of, 1179; Rachel's Tomb, 191, 192, 564, 739; tourism industry in, 189, 191
- Bethlehem University, 1132, 1432
- BeTzedek movement, 470
- Bet-Zuri, Eliyahu, 641, 891, 954
- Bevin, Ernest, 780
- Bialik, Hayyim Nachman, 193–194, 1397
- Bilal Mosque, Bethlehem, 564
- Biltmore Program (1942), 194, 588, 779, 902, 1130, 1131, 1150, 1468
- Bilu Group, 186, 195
- Binationalism, 41, 195–196, 322, 1592; Belgian model, 195; calls for, 213, 217, 218, 588, 902; defined, 195; democratic secular form of, 1137; evolution of, 195; Jewish intellectuals' support of, 51, 1148. See also Two-state solution
- Binyamin, R., 515
- The Birth of Israel: Myths and Realities*, 405
- Birthright Israel, 33
- Birzeit University, 106, 110, 160, 196, 1080, 1132; effects of Occupation on, 196, 608; mission, 196; origins of, 196; public opinion polls by, 1165; Solidarity Committee, 680, 681, 998, 1591–1592; Tanzim in, 1432
- Bisdoth Pleshet*, 137
- Bishara, Azmi, 144, 196–197, 683, 942, 1171, 1173, 1464
- Bitar, Salah al Din, 88, 141
- Bitterlemons.org, 197–198
- Black, Conrad, 921
- Black Goat Law (1950), 465
- Black Hand, 1197
- Black June. See Fatah Revolutionary Council (Black June)
- Black Panther Party (U.S.), 35
- Black Panthers (Israel), 1481, 1656
- Black Sabbath, 1134
- Black Saturday (1949), 771
- Black September (1970), 198–200, 1538; Arab popular opinion re., 784; deaths attributable to, 121, 1167; expulsion of Palestinian resistance groups from Jordan following, 97, 394, 477, 506, 864, 938, 1421, 1589; Iran, support for, 632; King Husayn's actions during, 90; triggering events, 1065, 1167; U.S. fear of Soviet involvement, 823, 996
- Black September Organization (BSO), 200–202, 394, 480, 485, 967, 1446; Abu 'Ali Hasan Salamah, leadership of, 956, 1285–1286; attack on U.S. embassy in Khartoum, Sudan, 394; creation of, 817; hijackings by, 1285; Israeli retaliation for acts of, 201–202, 1434–1435; Munich Olympics massacre, responsibility for, 201, 440, 1285; operations carried out by, 201; organization of, 200; origins of, 200; PLO endorsement of, 97
- Blackstone, William, 255
- Blair, Tony, 1266
- Bleich, Kobi, 500
- Bliss, Howard, 1626–1627
- Blitzer, Wolf, 37, 921
- Bloc of the Faithful. See Gush Emunim (Bloc of the Faithful)
- Blood Libel, 42–43
- Bloom, Orly Castel, 521
- Bludan Conference (1937), 202, 1417
- Blue Line, 130
- Blue-Red Movement, 944
- B'Nai B'rith, 35
- Bnai Moshe, 473
- Bolton, John, 220, 984
- Bond, Michael Shaw, 1411
- The Book of Legends*, 194
- Border Police (Mishmar HaGvul/Magav), 202–203, 247, 647, 800–802
- Borders, 1, 203–205, 389; Allon Plan for, 19, 20, 21, 309, 460; Barrier and, 204–205, 1368; under the British Mandate, 1414; contraction/expansion of, 83, 203; crossings, restrictions on, 350; delineation of, Taba Talks, 1427; East Jerusalem, redefinition of, 734–735, 1315–1316; Gaza Strip, determination of, 1209; Green Line, 21, 59, 64, 125, 126, 130, 155, 163, 165, 204, 205, 319, 351, 446, 618, 754, 794, 846, 1027, 1157, 1158, 1368, 1682–1683; international agreements regarding, 203–204; between Israel and Palestine, 204–205; between Israel and Syria, 1528; Jerusalem and, 452, 1008; and 1948 War, 203, 843; and 1967 War, 843–844; partition plan, stipulation of, 843; and the peace process, 204–205; Philadelphi Route, 205, 362, 429, 1038, 1161–1162, 1210; role of kibbutzim in defining, 820; predetermined, assumption of, 458; settlements, and the delineation of, 205, 1009; UN Partition Plan (General Assembly Resolution 181), 203
- Borochoy, Ber, 841
- Boudia, Mohammad, 956
- Bourguiba, Habib, 1188, 1482
- Boycotts: of Arab produce and products by Jews in Palestine, 546; economic, of Germany, 721, 1673; economic, of Israel, 223, 258, 856–857, 1526; of Jewish products by Palestinians, 643; Palestinian Campaign for the Academic and Cultural Boycott of Israel, 450; by pro-Israel groups against specific U.S. media outlets, 921; of selected Israeli universities by British university teachers, 450
- Brandeis, Justice Louis Dembitz, 206–207, 1625
- “Brand Israel” program, 33

- Brandt, Willy, 433, 436, 437, 439, 1068
 Breaking the Silence (Shovrim Shrika), 207, 1030–1031
 Brenner, Yosef Chayim, 514–515
 Brezhnev, Leonid, 946, 1206
 British Association of University Teachers, boycott of selected Israeli universities, 450
 British Mandate in Palestine (1922–1948), 207–216, 609–610, 1467; administration of, 208; Advisory Council, 13, 211; archaeology under, 106–107; Bailey Committee, 142; Balfour Declaration, incorporation of, 208; Al-Balqa' district, 296; borders determined by, 1414; Churchill Memorandum (1922), 194, 210–211, 262–263, 1127, 1135, 1414, 1467; conflicting promises, 209; Defense Emergency Regulations, 247, 315–316, 664, 674, 692, 911, 916, 1177, 1469; emergence of terrorism under, 1444–1445; establishment of, 145, 207; first high commissioner (see Samuel, Sir Herbert Louis); health care, access to, 1123, 1124; immigration policy, 208–209, 1671–1672; Jewish migration, regulation of, 1123; Jewish population, changes in, 207–208, 209, 213; land ownership, changes in, 207–208, 209–210, 213–214; Legislative Council, 13, 211, 365, 879–880, 1128, 1135; MacDonald White Paper (1939), 41, 82, 116, 183, 188, 212–214, 320, 577, 636, 779, 891, 898, 1126, 1129, 1290, 1445, 1478, 1607, 1628; monopolistic concessions to Jewish entrepreneurs under, 1122; official policy statements (white papers) of British rule, 210–214; Palestinian elections under, 365–366; Passfield White Paper (1930), 211–212, 897, 898, 1126, 1127, 1128, 1130, 1135–1136, 1372, 1612, 1625; pillars of British rule in Palestine, 209–210; Press Ordinance, 911, 916; religious and ethnic communities in Palestine, 1250–1254; structure of, 208–209; termination of, 207, 213, 214, 610, 1130, 1509, 1557, 1564, 1675; transformation of Palestinian society under, 1121–1124; two-tier wage structure, 1123, 1124; Zionism under, 298, 1671–1672
 British School of Archaeology, Jerusalem, 106
 British-Zionist alliance, end of, 214. See also MacDonald White Paper (1939)
 Brit Shalom, 216–217, 218, 902, 1276
 Brit Tzedek v' Shalom (Jewish Alliance for Justice and Peace), 217
 Brog, Ehud. See Barak, Ehud
 Bronfman, Charles, 36
 Bronfman, Edgar S. Sr., 36
 Bronfman, Roman, 1641
 Brookings Institution, Saban Center of Middle East Policy, 593
 Brzezinski, Zbigniew, 239, 1543
 B'Tselem, 11, 12, 217, 248, 286, 401, 526, 534, 682, 745, 1037, 1306, 1312, 1378
 Buber, Martin, 195, 217–218, 317, 1148, 1631 al-Budayri, Muhammad Hasan, 575
 al-Budayri family, 218–219
 Building permits, 219, 1158–1159, 1337; denial of to Palestinians, 465, 742, 1473, 1535–1536; outposts, unauthorized, 532; Planning and Construction Law (1965), 1535–1536; in Silwan, difficulty of obtaining, 1341–1342; structures built without, 1387, 1389
 Bull, Gerald, 951, 1435
 Bull, Odd, 1518
 Bullitt, William, 1656
 Bunche, Ralph, 1493, 1568
 al-Buraq Rebellion. See Western Wall disturbances (1929)
 Buraq Wall, 1429, 1623. See also Western Wall
 Burg, Avraham, 430
 Burg, Yosef, 975
 Burge, Gary M., 256
 Burla, Yehuda, 520
 Burns, William, 1196
 Bush, George H. W., 219–224, 327, 1658; Baker Plan, 142, 143, 221–222, 223, 1355; Fez Peace Initiative, support for, 400; Gulf War, 219, 222–223, 1046; Jewish settlements, statements concerning, 222; loss of election to Bill Clinton, 223; Madrid Conference, 219, 223, 899, 1073, 1511; peacemaking efforts, 223, 1423; PLO, opposition to, 220–221; support of Israel, 221–222; U.S.-PLO Dialogue, termination of, 1534
 Bush, George W., 224–228; attempts to reshape the Middle East, 868–869; “Axis of Evil” designation, 634; “coalition of the willing,” 226, 441; and Colin Powell, differences of opinion with, 1175; Convergence Plan, support for, 226–227, 295, 1526; counterterrorism activities, 224, 227; election of, 1524; failure of opposition to challenge on Israeli-Palestinian issues, 228, 1632; foreign policy under (Bush Doctrine), 224–226; global war on terrorism, 1200, 1525; identification of with Israeli right, 66, 224, 226, 227–228; independent Palestinian state, call for, 224; Israeli-Palestinian conflict and peace process, official position, 224, 225–226, 1200–1201, 1306, 1525; Israeli policy, contradictory statements re., 224, 1525; Iraq War, 1200, 1260, 1265–1266; military aid to Israel, 1538; and Palestinian leadership, call for reform in, 1201; Palestinian state, support for, 1489; pro-Israel stance, 116, 1229, 1261, 1473; refusal to meet with Yasir Arafat, 226; Republican Party support of U.S. backing for a Greater Israel, 228; Road Map for Peace, reluctant support of, 226, 1176, 1266; September 11 attacks, response to, 224, 227, 868, 1306; use of Israel to advance American objectives in the Middle East, 227; and Yasir Arafat, contentious relations with, 1265, 1447
 al-Bustan, proposed destruction of, 1386, 1394–1395
 Bustan L' Shalom-Wadi Na'am (Builders without Borders), 228–229

- Butterly, Caoimhe, 63, 621
 Bypass roads. See Road system, West Bank
- Canaanites (modern), 1153
 Cairo I. See Gaza-Jericho Agreement I (Cairo I)
 Cairo II. See Gaza-Jericho Agreement II (Cairo II)
 Cairo Agreement (1969), 89, 120, 863–864, 938, 1587. See also Lebanon
 Cairo Declaration (1985), 91, 93, 231, 1068
 Cairo Declaration (2005), 232–235, 933–934
 Cairo summit (1964), 89, 1572–1573
 CAMERA (Committee for Accuracy in Middle East Reporting in America), 31, 33, 328. See also Media-monitoring organizations
 Campaign for the Right of Entry/Re-entry to the Occupied Palestine Territory, 1306
 Camp David Accords (1979), 235–236, 485; Gaza Strip, 423; Greater Land of Israel Movement and, 462; Iraq, reaction to, 639; Israeli support for, 123, 1609; and Moshe Dayan, influence of, 307; organized opposition to, 1080; PLO opposition to, 91, 98, 359; provisions of, 91, 235; Saudi Arabia, reaction of, 1297; significance of, 358–359, 1521; signing of, 84; U.S. facilitation of, 235, 359, 1521, 1544
 Camp David Summit (2000), 236–237; Barak's agenda, domination of, 155–156; Barak's Generous Offer, 102, 152–160, 236, 280, 683; failure of, 86, 178, 236, 280–281, 293, 361, 1051, 1305, 1351, 1524; Jerusalem, future role of, 748; land, control of, 845; misunderstandings about, 236; negotiations, rules of, 155; participants in, 236, 625; reason for, 236–237; significance of, 1144; U.S. bias toward Israeli position, 281; U.S. mediation of, 58, 155, 280–281
 Camps' War (1985–1987), 92, 100, 120, 237–238, 395, 867, 875, 1188
 Campus Fellows program, 33
 Campus Watch, 33
 Canada, Jewish Diaspora in, 328
 Cantons, 1055. See also Bantustans
 Capitol Jewish Forum, 38
 Caravan for Democracy, 33
al-Carmel, 238–239
 Carmi, Daniella, 521
 Carter, James (Jimmy) Earl, Jr., 239–242, 327, 1408; Camp David Accords, 84, 235, 280, 359; Carter Doctrine, 239; crux of Palestinian problem, identification of, 1544; foreign policy, ambiguous approach to, 1543; international affairs, post-presidential involvement in, 241, 1041, 1055; Iran hostage crisis, 1543, 1544; and Israel, contentious relationship with, 240–241, 1286; Palestine: Peace Not Apartheid, 241–242; regard for Palestinian side in Middle East conflict, 239; secretary of state under, 1543–1544; and Syria, direct relations with, 1422
 Cattan, Henry, 242
 Cave of Machpelah/Cave of the Patriarchs, 242–243, 522, 527, 565, 583
 Censorship/Newspaper Permits, Defense Emergency Regulation 94, 315
 Center for Architectural Conservation. See Centre for Architectural Conservation (RIWAQ)
 Center for Autistic and Special Needs, Wadi Juz, demolition of, 1556
 Center for Policy Analysis on Palestine, 1359
 Center for Security Policy (CSP), 37, 243–244
 Center of Life Policy, 244–245, 390, 465, 738, 1473
 Center Party, 442
 Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), 245–246, 400; agreement between Israeli and Palestinian security services, brokering of, 539; checkpoints, monitoring of, 245; interrogation of suspected militants by, 246; and Mossad, ties with, 245, 246, 1531; office in Tel Aviv, 245; Operation Joshua (1985), participation in, 1230; and PNA's security apparatus, cooperative links with, 299, 414, 1218; protection of agents by Abu 'Ali Hasan Salamah, 1285; secret contact with PLO leaders, 8, 824–825; Tenet Plan, 245, 246, 1365, 1442–1443, 1525, 1526; Wye River Memorandum, involvement of, 245, 1635, 1638. See also Tenet, George
 Centre for Architectural Conservation (RIWAQ), 246
 Chabad-Lubavitch movement, 38
 Chacour, Elias, 260
 Chairman's Guard (PNA), 1100
 Chai Vekayam (Alive and Existing Movement), 1459
 Chamberlain, Joseph, 1631
 Chamberlain, Neville, 892
 Chancellor, John, 1623
 Checkpoints, 62, 125, 247–249, 659, 1157; access, denial of, 147; and ambulances, movement of, 66, 510; CIA monitoring of, 245; effect of on resistance to Barrier, 169; and emergency medical care, 510; and everyday life, effects of, 1012; exit permits, 247–248; “flying,” 147, 151, 1255, 1269; harassment of Palestinians at, 150, 248, 898; between Jerusalem and Bethlehem, 191; Jordan Valley, 792; journalists, harassment of, 65; and land confiscation, connection to, 247; map of, 1263; monitoring of soldiers' behavior at, 248, 898, 997; Palestinian and Israeli compared, 247–248; Palestinian attacks on, 627; purpose of, 247; random closures of, 147, 151; “super-checkpoints,” 249; West Bank, 6, 58, 62, 147. See also Roadblocks
 Cheney, Dick, 256, 984
 Chetrit, Sami Shalom, 1309
 Children of Kfar Etzion, 761
Children of the Ghetto, 1654

- China, 249–254; Cultural Revolution, 251; diplomatic relations with Israel, evolution of, 251, 252–253; Egypt-Israeli peace agreement, support for, 252; five-point proposal to settle Palestinian conflict, 253; and Israeli-Palestinian conflict, official policy, 249–250, 252; Israeli weapons, purchase of, 1538; PLO, recognition of, 251, 1490; United Nations, admission to, 251
- Chirac, Jacques, 410, 1368
- Christian Arabs, 958
- Christian Broadcasting Network, 1461
- Christian Council on Palestine, 257
- Christian evangelicals: critics of Christian Zionism, 256; support for Israel, 38, 135, 256, 1678; Third Temple movement, involvement in, 1287, 1454, 1460–1461
- Christian fundamentalism, 135, 496, 752, 1341
- Christianity, 254–261; Calvinists, 254; Christian community in pre-1948 Palestine, 1251–1252; denominations, 254, 258, 740; economic boycotts of Israel, 258; Emperor Constantine, and legalization of, 189, 731; evangelicals, 38, 135, 256, 1460–1461, 1678; financial support for Palestinian cause, 332; holy sites, 189; mainline churches, differing views of Israel, 257–258; Modern-Day Bible Prophecy movement, 1460; Orthodox churches, 259, 463–464; Palestinian Christians, 259–260, 1277; premillennial dispensationalism, 255, 1460; Presbyterian Church (USA), divestment efforts, 449–450; “promised land,” views of, 254; in Ramla, 1221; “rapture,” 255; Scofield Reference Bible, 255; Second Coming of Christ, beliefs about, 1460, 1662, 1678; tax revolt, Bayt Sahur, 1436–1437; Third Temple Movement, involvement in, 1287, 1454, 1460–1461; the Vatican, 258–259, 1547–1550; Zionism and, 144, 254–256, 1662
- Christian Peacemaker Teams (CPTs), 261, 451, 534, 998
- Christian Right, U.S., 46, 228, 255–256, 1531
- Christian Zionism, 144, 254–256, 751, 1662; evangelical critics of, 256; International Christian Embassy (ICE), 609; Jerusalem Prayer Team (JPT), 752; Third Temple movement, support for, 1454, 1460–1461
- Christopher, Warren Minor, 261–262, 537, 1424
- Churchill, Winston, 183, 891, 954, 1127, 1655
- Churchill Memorandum (1922), 194, 210–211, 262–263, 1127, 1135, 1414, 1467
- Church of the Annunciation. See Basilica of the Annunciation, Nazareth
- Church of the Holy Sepulcher, 263, 564, 731, 739
- Church of the Nativity, Bethlehem, 192, 564–565, 739, 1037; siege of, 61, 193, 701, 1034
- CIA. See Central Intelligence Agency (CIA)
- Cinema, Israeli, 263–267; Avanti Popolo, 265–266; Avoda, 264; Behind the Veil of Exiles, 267; Cup Final, 266–267; Detained, 267; Fictitious Marriage, 266; Hamsin, 265; Hibet Hizah, 265; The Inner Tour, 267; Kedma, 267; Look-Out, 266, 267; Once We Were Dreamers, 265; Palestinian voice, absence of, 267; propaganda films, 263; as representation of the Palestinians and of Israel/Palestine, 263; Settlers, 264; The Smile of the Lamb, 265, 266, 267; They Were Ten, 264, 265; Unit Shakidan, 1571; The Women Next Door, 267
- Cinema, Palestinian, 267–271; Arna's Children, 270; Atash, 270; Canticle of the Stones, 269; Chronicle of a Disappearance, 269, 270; directors, notable, 268–269; Divine Intervention, 269, 270; establishment of the Israeli state, influence on, 267–268; Fertile Memories, 268, 270–271; My Private Map, 269; Paradise Now, 270; patronage, Palestinian organizations, 268; Place, or Out of Eden, 269; Tale of the Three Jewels, 269; Waiting for Salah A-Din, 269; Wedding in Galilee, 269; Zeitunat, 269; Zionist Aggression, 268
- Citizenship and Entry into Israel Law (1952), 322, 386, 856, 1086, 1262
- Citizenship Law (2003), 1087
- Citizens' Rights Movement (CRM), 271
- City of David, 1386. See also Wadi Hilweh
- City of David Foundation, 271, 364
- City of Poros*, attack on, 398
- Civil Administration (CA), 176, 271–272, 343, 349, 423, 1007, 1046, 1372, 1472, 1551, 1683
- Civil militarism, 291, 293, 307
- Civil society, Israel. See Conscientious objectors; Israeli militarism; Israeli peace movement
- Civil society, West Bank and Gaza, 161, 272–277, 1009; charitable societies, 273; conscientious objection and, 294; defined, 272–273; factionalism, 274; grassroots movements, 273, 274; human rights organizations, 274; under Israeli occupation, 273–274; labor unions, 273, 274; nationalist institutions, 273; neighborhood committees, 274; nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), growth of, 272, 275–276, 628, 655, 1101, 1619; professional associations, 274; refugee and Islamist associations, 276–277; roots of associational life, pre-1948, 273; self-government, transition to, 274; voluntary work movement, 273; women's committees, 273, 274; youth movements, 274
- Civil war, Palestinian in Lebanon (1983). See Camps' War
- Cizling, Aharon, 1608
- Clifford, Clark McAdams, 277–278, 773, 1478
- Clinton, William (Bill) Jefferson, 261, 278–283; assignment of blame to Arafat for Camp David Summit failure, 158, 236, 280–281, 1524; Camp David Summit, 280–281, 552, 1051, 1305, 1446; “compromise” proposal for Palestinian autonomy (1992), 1522–1523; “disputed territories,” coining of the phrase, 280, 467, 1016, 1523; framework for permanent Israeli-Palestinian peace, 281–282; international issues, affinity for, 279; Israeli annexation of Greater Jerusalem, recognition of,

- 280; Israeli position in Hebron, support for, 537; and the Israeli-Syrian track, 282; peace plan, 1524; and Syria, negotiations with, 1424; unwavering support for Israeli policies and actions, 279–280, 282
- Clinton Parameters (2000), 156, 283–285, 403, 430, 1051–1052, 1351
- Closed areas/movements of persons, Defense Emergency Regulation 125, 316
- Closed military zones (CMZs), 147, 247, 285–286, 1034, 1159, 1383; acreage consumed by, 374; Area Closures, Defense Emergency Regulation 125, 316, 1469; Firing Area No. 918, Hebron District, southern area, 530; Jordan Valley, 792; local jurisdiction and, 1314; and Nazi camps compared, 551; Palestinian farms as, 372
- Closure(s), 147, 169, 286–287, 425; Area Closures, Defense Emergency Regulation 124, 316; Birzeit University, 196; defined, 286; effect of on Palestinian economy, 248, 350–351, 1617; evolution of Israeli policy re., 286–287; exceptions to (passage of Hajj pilgrims), 1214–1215; of Jerusalem to West Bank and Gaza Strip Palestinians, 737–738; justification for, 846; permanent, 1157; Rafah Crossing, 1210–1211, 1213–1214; random, 147, 151; use of force to enforce, 1384; waste management, deterioration of, 375; of West Bank and Gaza, Israeli-imposed, 102
- Coalition of Women for Peace, 287–288, 684, 998
- Cohen, Ben, 337
- Cohen, Eli, 1571
- Cohen, Evyatar, 1338
- Cohen, Geula, 746, 1437
- Cohen, Haim, 768
- Cohen, Ran, 23, 271
- Cohen, Sam, 474
- Cold War: Non-Aligned Movement (NAM), 997; role of Middle East in, 654, 996; Ronald Reagan's perception of, 1229; Saudi Arabia in, 1295. See also Soviet Union
- Collaborators, Palestinian, 272, 288–290, 1010, 1046, 1378; assassinations of, 1585; defined, 288; and destruction of entire villages/mass punishments, 1948 War, 1564; false property documents supplied by, 825–826; as go-betweens in acquisition of property for Jewish settlements, 1339, 1390; hamula, concept of, 289; interrogation of Palestinian detainees by, 289; murder of by other Palestinians, 289; in Operation Cast Lead, 1029; preferential treatment for, 289; pressure to become, 584, 1182; purpose of, 288; recruitment of, 288–289, 623, 668, 953, 1222; secret evidence obtained from, 672; use of in prisons to elicit confessions, 671; Village Leagues, 871, 876, 1551–1552
- Collateral damage, 60
- Colombo Jr., Joseph, 804
- Columbia Unbecoming, 33
- Columbus Platform of 1937, 48
- Combatants' Letter, 290, 293, 295, 997, 1249
- Command for Palestinian National Action, 867
- Committee Against Administrative Detentions (CAAD), 1349
- Committee Against Civic Service and all Forms of Enlistment, 543
- Committee Against the War in Lebanon, 680, 681, 1592
- Committee for Accuracy in Middle East Reporting in America. See CAMERA Committee for the Defense of Palestine, 636
- Committee for Resistance to Peace with Israel, 117
- Committee for the Designation of Place-Names in the Negev, 1471
- Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), Presbyterian Church, 449
- Committee to Free Vanunu, 1545, 1546
- Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ), 63, 629, 918, 929
- Common Foreign and Security Policy (CFSP), 379, 380, 434, 438
- Communications and information: Alternative Information Center (AIC), 25, 684, 906–907, 998, 1592; media-monitoring organizations, 31–32; propaganda, Arab, 117, 1187–1193; propaganda, Israeli, 1069. See also Media, Israeli; Media, Palestinian; Media, U.S
- Communications Workers of America, 37
- Communists and communism: Arab-Palestine Communist Party, 79–80, 100, 290, 445, 478, 974; Communist Party of Gaza, 975; Hadash (The Democratic Front for Peace and Equality), 79, 144, 291, 478–479, 903, 1090, 1219, 1464; in Israel, 290–291, 299, 478, 679, 944, 1585; Jordanian Communist Party (JCP), 975, 1078, 1109; Maki Party, 79, 290, 478, 903, 1219, 1377; Mapam, 405, 504, 903, 905–906, 933, 1379, 1430, 1470, 1477; National Liberation League (NLL), 971, 974–975, 1079, 1109, 1492, 1493; in the Occupied Territories, 1078–1079; Palestine Communist Party, 290, 975, 1079, 1128, 1349; Palestine National Front, 975, 1078–1080, 1110, 1492; Palestinian Communist Party (PCP), 573, 903, 975, 1065, 1109, 1492; Palestinian People's Party (PPP), 79, 131, 161, 975, 1065, 1109–1111, 1168; PLO, failure to recognize, 1657; protests organized by, 850; Rakah (New Communist List), 290, 291, 305, 478, 828, 850, 903, 1079, 1219–1220, 1656
- Company for the Rehabilitation and Development of the Jewish Quarter, 1335–1336
- Complete Dictionary of Modern and Ancient Hebrew*, 186
- Comte, Auguste, 141

- Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish organizations (Presidents Conference), 29–30, 32–33, 240, 328, 406, 447
- Conflict resolution, 1144–1145
- Conflict settlement, 1144
- “Conquest of Labor.” See Histadrut
- Conscientious objectors, 291–294, 1249; differences in over time, 294; during Lebanon War, 292; Occupied Territories, soldiers’ refusal to serve, 290, 292–293, 295, 1249; Palestinian, 294; peacemaking efforts, effects of, 293; Shministim movement to expand, 1380
- Constantine, legalization of Christianity by, 189
- Convergence Plan, 226–227, 294–295, 714, 1023–1024, 1259, 1526
- Cordesman, Anthony H., 400, 401, 1407
- Corrie, Rachel, 63, 451, 621, 648
- Cotton, Josep, 776
- Councilists. See Arab Party (Councilists)
- Courage to Refuse (Ometz Le’sarev), 290, 293, 294, 295, 684, 997, 1249
- Covenant Between the Government of Israel and the Jewish National Fund (1961), 677, 705
- Covenant Between the Government of Israel and the Zionist Executive (1954), 677, 705
- Covenant of the League of Nations, Article 22 (1919), 208, 295–296, 609, 1235
- Crane, Charles R., 820
- Crusades, 296, 1548; Acre, fall and recapture of, 9; Bethlehem in, 189; Cave of Machpelah in, 243; First, call for, 408; Gaza Strip in, 420; Hospitallers, 567; Jaffa in, 723; Jerusalem, recapture of, 296; Mamluks in, 9, 189, 522, 732, 903
- Cultural imperialism, 104
- Cultural Zionism, 49, 473, 572, 1668
- Curfew(s), 296–297, 1470; adverse effects of, 297, 350, 1383; under the British Mandate, 77; and day-to-day life, negative effects of, 1382; against Fatah guerrillas and sympathizers, 96; during the First and Second Intifadas, 63, 124, 527, 659, 1034; imposition of following Hebron Massacre, 534; procedure for implementing, 296; reasons for imposing, 297; use of force to enforce, 1384; violation of, penalty for, 296
- Currency, 345, 349
- Curriculum Development Center, 7
- Custodian of Absentee Property, 134–135, 297–298, 326, 383, 523, 544, 705, 1119, 1339, 1388, 1389, 1404, 1469, 1555
- Cycle of violence between Israeli and Palestinian factions, 9, 70, 293, 1053, 1136–1137, 1146, 1410, 1411
- Da’am (Organization for Democratic Action), 299
- Dablan, Tahir, 1545
- Dahan, Gabriel, 801
- Dahbour, Ahmad, 1117
- Dahlan, Muhammad Yusuf, 102, 131, 299–302, 395, 414, 489, 491, 492, 1196, 1203, 1218, 1219
- Dai La-Kibbush (Enough with Occupation), 681
- al-Dajani, Hassan Sidqi, 884
- Dajani family, 302–303
- Dakkak, Ibrahim, 161, 1108
- Dalet Plan/Plan Dalet (1948), 116, 303–305, 991, 1235, 1561
- Damascus Agreement, 875
- Damascus Gate, 559
- Dan, Matti, 1555
- Daniel Sieff Research Institute. See Weizmann Institute of Science
- Danin, Ezra, 767, 1475–1476
- Darby, John Nelson, 255
- Darwaza, Izzat, 1128
- Darwish, Mahmud, 305–306, 623, 1111, 1114, 1116
- Davidka Monument, 1280
- The David Project (TDP), 33
- Davidson, Meir, 1555
- Dayan, Moshe, 306–308; and Camp David Accords, influence on, 307; and David Ben-Gurion, association with, 185; as defense minister, 272, 941, 1217, 1574; destruction of villages, speech about, 1553; and expulsion of Palestinians, 1470; Fadwa Tuqan’s poetry, reading of, 1483; as foreign minister, 240, 439; “invisible Occupation,” attempt to create, 1583; Israeli provocation against Syria, revelations of, 1577; Labor Party, leadership of, 686, 841; Lavon Affair and, 855, 1155; military career, 650, 1134; “open bridges” policy, 1578, 1584; Operation Zarzir, oversight of, 1424; political career, 1609; private archaeological acquisitions, controversy re., 308, 1642; and settlement movement in Hebron, origins of, 523, 822; Telem Party, formation of, 1438
- Dayan, Rabbi Yosef, 1455
- Dayan Plan, 309–310, 414, 460, 1573
- Day La-Kibbush, 1592
- Dayr Yasin. See Deir Yassin (Dayr Yasin)
- Dayton, Keith, 490
- Dayton Plan, 490
- Dead Sea: environmental degradation of, 373; restrictions on Palestinian access to, 793; right of safe passage to (Gaza-Jericho Agreement I), 415; salt from, 1122; water level, drop in, 1597
- Dead Sea Scrolls, discovery of, 109, 110, 1642
- Dean, Howard, 241
- Dean, John Gunther, 1544
- “De-Arabization” of Palestine, 172, 1470–1471, 1509
- Declaration of Independence, Israel, 23, 214, 310–311, 386, 611, 705, 753, 856, 1206, 1361, 1478, 1520
- Declaration of Independence, Palestine, 101, 305, 311–312, 360, 877–878, 1002, 1064, 1168, 1170, 1482, 1534
- Declaration of Principles (DOP), 279, 312–315, 1047–1048; chief negotiators, 1047; controversial aspects of, 313–314; described, 1047; effects of on conscientious objection, 293; as an example of

- conflict resolution, 1144; final status talks, issues deferred to, 402, 1048; “Gaza First” option, 423, 424; impact of on Israeli peace movement, 681–682; international law and, 314, 613, 617; Israeli responsibilities resulting from, 616, 1048; “Letters of Mutual Recognition,” 1048; Moscow’s support for, 946; opposition to, 1048; origins of, 617; Palestinian acceptance of, 100; Palestinian draft of, 1371; Palestinian National Authority, establishment of, 312, 388; Palestinian responsibilities resulting from, 1048; purpose of, 312; ratification of, 1047; refugees, treatment of, 101, 1047, 1246; secret negotiations leading to, 53, 101, 1073; self-determination, failure to mention, 314; significance of, 747; signing of, 57, 93, 613, 747, 1073, 1207, 1446, 1523, 1636; and sovereignty over land, water, and settlements, 349, 844–845; Syrian reaction to, 1424; timetable for future negotiations, 1049; two-stage process, construction of, 312, 314; U.S. involvement in, 262, 1523; varying interpretations of, 313; water rights, 1602. See also Oslo Accords
- Declaration of Statehood in Exile, Palestine, 311
- Decolonization, 1678
- De-dichotomization, 1142–1143
- Defense Emergency Regulations, 197, 315–316; Administrative Detention (Regulation 111), 315; Area Closures (Regulation 124), 316; Censorship/Newspaper Permits (Regulation 94), 315, 911, 916; challenges to, 667; Closed Areas–Movements of Persons (Regulation 125), 316, 1469; closed military zones, declaration of, 247, 1469; Deportation (Regulation 112), 316; enforcement of, 664; Forfeiture and Demolition of Property (Regulation 119), 316; leaders of Palestine National Front, 1079; membership in illegal organizations, 664, 674; Movements of Persons (Regulation 124), 316; newspaper licensing, 911, 916; Police Supervision (Regulation 110), 315; present absentees, governance of, 692, 1177; Unlawful Associations (Regulation 84), 315
- Defense for Children International/Palestine Section (DCI/PS), 1306
- Deforestation, 373, 374
- de Gaulle, Charles, 1538
- Degel HaTorah (Torah Flag), 316, 398, 1437, 1535
- Degel Yerushalayim (Banner of Jerusalem), 830
- Deir Yassin (Dayr Yasin), massacre at, 116, 175, 304, 316–317, 641–642, 780, 892, 991, 1235, 1445, 1451, 1561, 1564
- Deir Yassin Remembered, 317
- Demilitarized zones (DMZs), 131, 941, 1419, 1420; destruction of villages within, 1177; between Israel and Syria, Israeli encroachments on, 1494, 1572, 1573; in Rogers Plan (1969), 1274; supervision of, 1516–1518. See also United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO)
- Demirel, Suleyman, 940
- Democracy. See Elections, Israeli; Israeli regime and the question of democracy
- Democracy and Workers’ Rights Center, 317
- Democratic Alliance (1983), 99, 317–318, 970, 1081, 1168
- Democratic Choice Party (DCP), 1641
- Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine (DFLP), 318–319, 1110; Black September, role in, 318; Declaration of Principles, opposition to, 1048; founding of, 3, 99–100, 117, 477, 505, 1065, 1081, 1167, 1589; influence of, 319; and Jordan, relations with, 502, 506; Lebanese civil war, role in, 318; as a Marxist-Leninist organization, 318
- “phased program,” 318; PLO, relations with, 971, 1070–1071; Prisoners’ Document, representation in, 1184; seizure of schoolhouse in Ma’a lot, 897; split within, 1092; two-state solution, support for, 394
- Democratic Front for Peace and Equality, 1656
- Democratic Movement for Change (DASH), 1642
- Demography, 319–323, 1615; Arab flight and Jewish absorption, 320–321; Arab population vs. Jewish population, ratios, 320; Bedouin in Israel, 173, 465; birthrate, among Israeli Arabs and Palestinians, 769; British Mandate, and changes in, 207–208; and end of the Occupation, 322; foreign nationals, 197, 323–324, 1212, 1213; immigration as means to Jewish majority in Israel, 331, 589, 592, 1399–1400; of Jerusalem, Vatican’s stand on alteration of, 1549; Jewish majority, challenge of maintaining, 319–321, 589, 1473, 1658, 1673; Jewish People Policy Planning Institute, 769–770; as a key aspect of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 319; Koenig Memorandum (1976), 827–828, 850; land nationalization policy and, 705; looming threat of Palestinian majority, 1677–1678; parity and disengagement, 321–322; percent of world’s Jews living in Israel, 1677; politics of in Jerusalem, 735–738; population growth, Jewish vs. Palestinian, under the British Mandate, 1124; redrawing of Israel’s borders based on, 322; security implications of, 1084; transfer and displacement as the means to securing a Jewish majority, 1469; transformation, Jewish colonization and, 335–336
- Denmark, 1305–1307; Maastricht Treaty of 1992, rejection of, 1306; Møller, Per Stig, 1306; NGO funding by, 1306; partition plan, support for, 1302; two-state solution, support for, 1306
- Depopulation, 304. See also Transfer and displacement of Palestinians
- Deportation(s), 77, 82, 100, 247, 324–326, 642, 648; Defense Emergency Regulation 112, 316; emergency decrees for executing, 1008; mass

- Deportation(s) (continued) expulsions, legality of, 325, 533, 699; Palestinian resistance to, 324; of Palestinians by Israel, 220, 223, 225, 244, 324, 614–615, 1466; as punishment by Israel for resistance activities, 1348, 1351; and rejection of application for family reunification, 386; relatives of Palestinian attackers, 325
- Dergarabedian, Mildos, 1081
- Der Judenstaat* (The Jewish State), 43, 335, 408, 540, 1397, 1664, 1667, 1668, 1669
- Derrida, Jacques, 1172
- Desert Caucus, 29
- Development Authority, 2, 326, 704, 767, 1119, 1470. See also Israel Lands Administration (ILA)
- Development Authority Law (1950), 677
- Development Bank, 937
- DFLP. See Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine (DFLP)
- Dhimma/dhimmis*, 49, 326, 733
- Diaspora, Jewish: in Australia, 328; in Canada, 328; in France, 327, 328, 637; in Great Britain, 328; hagshama youth movements, 330; Jewish educational programs and, 330; in Latin America, 328; persecution during, 44; from the perspective of Israel, 329–331; from the perspective of the Diaspora, 326–329; population, declines in, 321; as source of immigration to Israel, 331; in South Africa, 328; in the Soviet Union, 328; in the U.S., 326–328; Zionism and, 1666–1667
- Diaspora, Palestinian, 97, 100, 331–333; connections with Palestinian territories, 331–332; financial support from, 332; following the Lebanon War (1982), 878; ideological differences and disagreements, 1065; Palestinian identity and, 331; size of, 331; taxes levied on to support the PLO, 1080
- Dimona. See Nuclear program, Israel
- Dinur, Ben Zion, 988
- Disengagement from Gaza. See Israel's unilateral disengagement from Gaza
- Diskin, Yuval, 1039, 1162
- Displacement of persons, 1465–1485; due to armed conflict and the 1948 War, 1236; living outside of Palestine and denied the right to return by Israel, 1236; from their homes in territories occupied by Israel in the 1967 War, 1236; stages of, 1466–1473
- “Disputed territories,” 280, 313, 467, 920, 1016, 1512, 1523. See also Occupied Territories
- Disturbances (1921), 333
- Divestment: Jewish organizations, support for, 450; Presbyterian Church (USA), 449–450; Protestant churches and, 449; selective, by municipalities, 449; Somerville Divestment Project (SDP), 449
- “Doctrine of double effect,” 1450
- Dome of the Rock, 334, 505, 563, 576, 732, 739, 1287, 1438, 1439, 1460. See also al-Haram ash-Sharif; Temple Mount
- Dreyfus, Captain Alfred, 43, 334–335, 540, 1664
- Drobes Plan, 335–336
- Drori, Amir, 802
- Druckman, Rabbi Haim, 1647
- Dudin, Mustafa, 272, 336, 1551
- Dugard, John, 618–619
- Dukhan, Abdel Fattah, 486
- Dulles, John Foster, 30, 336–339, 362, 1478
- al-Dura, Muhammad Rami Jamal, 339–340, 915
- Dviri, Manuella, 656
- E1 Plan, 341–343, 895–897, 1024, 1025, 1223–1224
- Early Empowerment, 343–344
- Eastern Orthodox Church. See Greek Orthodox Church
- Eastern Segregation Zone, 846
- East Jerusalem, 452, 734; Absentee Property Law, application of, 950; Arab neighborhoods, Palestinian sovereignty over, 1427, 1428; archaeology and the occupation of, 109; Bantustans in, 151; borders, redefinition of, 734–735, 1315–1316; as capital of Palestine state, 747, 1186, 1334; Center of Life Policy, 244–245, 465, 1473; closures, map of, 736; Ein Tzurim (national park), 178, 1336, 1338, 1374, 1556; ELAD, activities of, 178, 363–365, 751, 1314, 1336, 1342, 1374, 1472, 1555; entry permits, 745; family reunification and, 389–390, 738; green areas, 1683; Industrial Zone, Israeli development of, 1555–1556; infrastructure in, 604; and international law, violations of, 1317; Israeli annexation of, 746, 1315, 1322, 1323, 1334, 1523, 1573; Israeli capture of, 1967 War, 734, 1334, 1583; Israeli discrimination against Palestinians in, 604; Israeli expropriation of land in, 1316–1317, 1684; Jewish settlements in (see Settler groups and settlements, East Jerusalem); Judaization of, 178, 363, 370, 949, 1223, 1225–1226, 1317, 1334, 1335, 1472, 1555–1556; Moskowitz, Irving and, 949–950, 1389; as an Occupied Territory, 1016; Palestinian access to land in, 1683–1684; Palestinian enclaves in, 151, 456, 735, 1684; Palestinian residents, quotas on, 1684; “permanent residents,” 1016; population densities, restrictions on, 1684; PFLP supporters in, efforts to unite, 1653; as proposed Palestinian capital, 334; Ras al-Amud neighborhood, 6, 136, 178, 271, 364, 557, 561, 895, 949, 1223–1227, 1317, 1335, 1337, 1427, 1429; right of return to, 1016; Umbrella Municipality Plan (UMP) for the expansion of, 895, 897; unplanned land, 1684; Wadi Juz neighborhood, 1555–1557; zoning laws and regulations, 1683–1684. See also Jerusalem; Old City, Jerusalem
- East Jerusalem Development Company, 1338
- Eban, Aubrey (Abba) Solomon, 344, 841, 1511
- Eckhardt, Roy and Alice, 257
- Economic Conferences, Middle East and North Africa (MENA); first MENA Summit (1994), 93–94, 936–937; fourth MENA Summit (1997),

- 937; second MENA Summit (1995), 937; third MENA Summit (1996), 937
- Economic Co-operation Foundation, 1106
- Economic Protocol. See Gaza-Jericho Agreement II (Cairo II)
- Economy, Israeli: agricultural sector, 347, 948, 1331, 1596; Arab League boycott and, 223, 856–857; cost of living, 346; economies of scale available to, 346; gross domestic product (GDP), 1596; impact of on Palestinian employment, 114, 1616; import duties, 1123; integration of with Palestinian economy, 1106; Intifadas, effects of, 628–629; labor force, 1123; 1967 War and, 1579; Oslo Process and, 1105–1106; and Palestinian economy compared, 344, 345–346; Palestinian labor force, effects of, 828; per capita income, 1124; privatization and, 54, 1106; resource transfer from the Palestinian economy, 348–349; separate, creation of under the British Mandate, 1122–1124; standard of living, 350, 1583; U.S. support for, 127
- Economy, Palestinian, 344–353, 963–964, 1008; agricultural sector, 220, 347–348, 412, 427, 964, 1124–1125, 1384, 1404, 1535, 1583, 1594, 1595–1596, 1600, 1616–1617; Barrier, impact of, 68, 169, 205, 351, 629, 1383; cellular confinement, effects of, 1012; closures, effect of, 248, 350–351; collapse of, in Hebron, 527; cottage industries, 427; de-development, Gaza Strip, 427, 1466; deterioration of, 102; donor money, 351; economic policies and practices, 346–347; Economic Protocol, Gaza-Jericho Agreement II, 416–417, 427–428, 808, 908, 1050, 1104, 1106–1107; Employment Generation Program (EGP), 555; entry/exit policies, 1616–1617; Gaza Strip, 427–428, 716–717, 811–812; geographical proximity to Israel, spread and backwash effects of, 344–345, 346–347; gross domestic product (GDP), 1596; gross national product (GNP), 1583; imbalance of trade between Israel and Palestine, 348, 417, 427, 428, 599, 1106–1107; immediate effects of Occupation on, 346; import duties, 1123; industrial development, 964, 1106, 1125; integration of with Israeli economy, 1106; Intifadas, effects of, 628–629; and Israeli economy, disparities between, 212, 344, 1584; Israeli exports to, 1584; Israeli-Palestinian Agreement on Movement and Access (AMA), 809, 811, 1211–1212, 1214, 1260; Israeli siege in the Occupied Territories, effects of, 1382–1384; jobs, creation of, 1583; labor and capital, barriers to free movement of, 345, 1617; labor market, 345, 351–352, 427, 1126, 1404–1405; limited self-rule, economics of, 347, 349–350; machines and tools, limits on importation of, 348; middle class, growth of, 1125–1126; national currency, absence of, 349, 417; natural resources, restriction on the use of, 347–348, 349; and 1967 War, 1583–1584; olive trees, uprooting of, 374, 649, 1020–1022, 1331, 1347; opportunities for Palestinians to work in Israel, 350–351; Occupation, effects of, 344–353, 1035, 1382–1384; Oslo Process and, 427–428, 1105–1106; Palestine Securities Exchange, 1106; Palestinian Economic Council for Development and Reconstruction (PECDAR), 555, 1093–1094, 1203, 1371; per capita income, 350, 625, 1107, 1124, 1595; permits, effect of, 1157; personal income, average, 350; pharmaceutical industry, 599; PNA monopolies, 1104–1105; post-Intifada crisis, 350–351; poverty, 169, 248, 345, 425, 629, 717, 1084, 1089, 1382, 1383–1384, 1593; privatization and, 1106; public sector expenditures, 348; Qurei', Ahmad Ali Muhammad, 3, 131, 314, 431, 977, 1020, 1047, 1093, 1202–1204, 1371; Rafah Crossing, passage of goods through, 715, 1212–1215; raw materials, imports of through Israel, 348, 599; resource gap, 348–349; restriction on movement, effects of, 147, 1035, 1256–1257, 1583; SAMED, 1068, 1080, 1093, 1202; self-sufficiency, failure of, 428; standard of living, 350, 1383–1384, 1583, 1636; tariffs and trade barriers, 345–346, 348, 417; taxes, 417, 715; two-currency standard, 349; underdevelopment, 345; underemployment, 1384; unemployment, 114, 173, 350, 351, 528, 717, 1382, 1383–1384, 1593; unilateral disengagement from Gaza, economic impact of, 351, 716–718; unions, growth of, 1126; value-added tax (VAT), 348, 417, 697, 715–716, 1104; wages, 345, 346, 1123, 1124, 1384; water, price of, 1593, 1595; West Bank, 1616–1617; work permits, denial of, 682
- Ecumenical Accompaniment Program in Palestine and Israel, 998
- Edict of Milan (313 CE), 189
- Education: access to, restrictions on, 151, 1617; A. M. Qattan Foundation, 1199; Arab schools, classes on Jewish heritage and Zionism in, 1087; Basic Law (Israel), 989; under the British Mandate, Jewish and Palestinian compared, 1123–1124; curfews and closures, effects of, 600; curriculum advocating peace, 1650; Curriculum Watch, Anti-Defamation League, 36; about the Holocaust, 36; identity cards, need for, 586–587; illiteracy, 1124; independent Palestinian curriculum, development of, 7, 1199; lessons in Palestinian history and society, restrictions on, 623, 743, 1124; in the Occupied Territories, 600; Palestinian universities, 1132–1133; al-Sakakini, Khalil, influence of on curriculum and teaching methodology, 1283; school budgets linked to Israeli military service, 1087; textbooks, Israeli and Palestinian compared, 353–355; in the unrecognized villages, 1535, 1537; UNRWA provision of, 1497
- Edwards, Kate, 621

- Egypt, 355–362; alliance with Syria (1973), 433; Arab summit in Cairo (1964), 356, 1572–1573; Armistice Agreement (1949), 116, 130, 131, 1209, 1494, 1568–1569; arms, sale of to Palestinian guerrilla organizations, 1587; Aswan High Dam project, 356, 969; Baker Plan, role of, 143; Bandung Conference, role in, 356; border with Gaza, responsibility for security along, 362; Camp David Accords (1979), 84, 235–236, 358–359; China, recognition of, 356; Czech arms deal, 338, 356, 595, 968–968; death of, 1591; diplomacy after Gulf War, 360–361; East Germany, diplomatic relations with, 435–436; French expedition to under Napoleon, 408; Gaza, legacy in, 421–422, 1469; global and local prestige, fluctuations in, 359–360; Gulf War, participation in, 955; inter-Arab relations and, 88, 91; involvement of in Palestinian domestic affairs, 361; Israel, relations with, 355–356, 357, 359, 1530; in Israeli-Palestinian peace process, pivotal role of, 360–361; Israeli's unilateral disengagement from Gaza, support for, 361–362; Lavon Affair (1954), 116, 138, 854–855, 1217; military coup (1952), 87, 355; 1967 War, effects of, 356–358, 1070, 1570, 1572, 1573, 1591; 141 Battalion, 116; October War (1973), effects of, 357–358, 1017, 1082; “Palestine Entity,” proposal for creation of, 1419, 1420; Palestinian guerrilla operations in, 121; Palestinian nationalism, support for, 422, 1191; Palestinian refugees in, 366; peace treaty with Israel (1979), 52, 91, 123, 176, 235, 360, 886; PLO, relations with, 89, 356, 359, 360, 1064; policy on Palestinian issue, basis for, 358; return of Sinai Peninsula to, 1437, 1590; Saladin's rule over, 1285; security along the Philadelphi Route, 1161–1162; Sinai/Suez War (1956), 84, 356, 338–339, 363, 421–422, 595, 1396; and the Soviet Union, ties to, 1577; Suez Canal, nationalization of, 356, 1396, 1494; two-state solution, support for, 361; United Arab Republic (UAR), formation of, 88, 117, 1419; UN Partition Plan, reaction to, 355; UN peacekeeping missions in, 1496; UN sanctions against Iraq, support for, 955; U.S. military and economic aid to, 955; U.S., relations with, 357–358, 359, 361, 955; War of Attrition, 89, 357, 1590–1591. See also al-Nasir, Jamal 'Abd; and Nasirism; Mubarak, Muhammad Hosni Said
- Egypt-Israeli Agreements on Disengagement (1974 and 1975), 1496
- Eichmann, Adolf: kidnapping of by Mossad, 951; transfer of Jewish youth to England, 829; trial of (1961), 549, 550, 848, 1577, 1579
- Eid, Guy, 201
- Eid, Shaykh Mahmoud, 1222
- Einstein, Albert, 51, 1668
- Ein Tzurim, 178, 1336, 1338, 1374, 1556
- Eisenhower, Dwight D., 30, 239, 336, 338–339, 362–363, 774, 1273, 1520
- Eitan, Effi, 976, 1024, 1087, 1224
- Eitan, Michael, 1464
- Eitan, Rafael, 446, 802, 1134, 1329, 1366, 1489
- ELAD (To the City of David), 363–365; activities of in East Jerusalem, 178, 363–365, 751, 1314, 1336, 1342, 1374, 1472, 1555; City of David Foundation and, 271; Jewish Quarter Development Company, funds from, 770; public space, takeover of, 1391–1393; Silwan neighborhood, settlement of, 1336, 1386, 1388, 1389
- Eldar, Akiva, 683, 1051
- Elections, Israeli, 366; coalition governments, 685–688; direct, prime minister, 444; electoral system, 684–685; Knesset, 444, 827; “pivotal party,” role of, 689–690; proportional representation, Israeli system of, 13, 366, 684–685, 827; settler movement, influence of on outcome, 688–689, 690; and U.S. policies, influence on, 1522, 1526. See also Political parties, Israeli
- Elections, Palestinian, 365–369, 703; Baker Plan and, 221–222; under the British Mandate, 365–366; Cairo Declaration (2005), 232; Declaration of Principles, provision for, 313, 366; first presidential, 366, 424; after 1948, 366–369; Ottoman-era, 365; for Palestinian Legislative Council, 735; right to vote, 367; Shamir plan for, 221, 1355; Shultz plan for, 1381. See also Political parties, Palestinian
- Eliashiv, Rabbi Yosef Shalom, 1652
- Eliav, Arie, 1291
- Elmusa, Sharif S., 1117
- Elon, Amos, 307, 369, 1553
- Elon, Benyamin, 178, 370–371, 470, 752, 944, 959, 976, 1335, 1336, 1373, 1438, 1650
- Elon Moreh settlement, 371–372, 462, 469, 698, 761, 848, 1324, 1329, 1401, 1402–1403, 1646
- Emergency Articles for the Exploitation of Uncultivated Areas, 372
- Emergency Defense Regulations. See Defense Emergency Regulations
- Emergency Regulations for the Cultivation of Fallow Lands (1948), 1470
- Enclaves. See Bantustans
- The Engineer. See Ayyash, Yahya
- Entebbe (1976), 372, 951
- Environmental degradation, 372–377, 1010, 1356; air pollution, 376; biodiversity, deterioration of, 375; human encroachment and, 373; international law, respect for, 379; land degradation, 56, 373–375; native flora and fauna, loss of, 373, 375; olive trees, uprooting of, 374, 649, 1020–1022, 1331, 1347; overgrazing and deforestation, 373, 374; political conflict and, 373; and reclassification of land for settlement, 499–500; waste management, environmentally unsound practices, 374–375; water pollution, 376, 1600; water quality, deterioration of, 375–376
- Environmental protection, absence of, 375
- Eppel, Michael, 636

- Erbakan, Necmettin, 1484
- Erekat, Saeb Muhammad Salih, 300, 377, 414, 901, 917, 1046, 1348, 1533
- Eretz Crossing, 377–378, 422, 429, 537, 586, 808, 1158, 1210, 1212, 1254
- Eretz Yisrael Hatz'ira (Young Palestine Movement), 137
- Eretz Yisrael l'Hashlema, 107, 176, 456, 720, 799, 830, 882, 1071. See also Greater Land of Israel Movement
- Erfat, Yona, 802
- Erhard, Ludwig, 435–436
- Error and Betrayal in Lebanon*, 146
- Eshkol, Levi, 185, 378, 550, 816, 841, 855, 931, 1154, 1577, 1609, 1642
- Eshkolot settlement, 1319–1320
- Ethnic cleansing: accusations of against Israel, 463; Dalet Plan, 304; “de-Arabization,” prior to termination of British Mandate, 1509; defined, 1557–1558; individual operations, code names for, 1564, 1566; Nakba and, 1087, 1095; 1948 war and, 1468–1469, 1557, 1559, 1560–1561, 1562, 1564–1565, 1569; Palestinian displacement as, 116, 1468–1469; silent protests against, 1627. See also Transfer and displacement of Palestinians
- Ethnicity, pre-1948. See Religious and ethnic communities in pre-1948 Palestine
- Ethnonationalism, 655
- Ethridge, Mark F., 853
- Etzel. See Irgun Tzeva'i Le'umi
- Euro-Mediterranean Partnership (EMP), 380
- Europe, 49, 381. See also European Union; individual countries and places: France; Germany; Great Britain; Russian Empire; Scandinavian countries; Turkey
- European Anti-Fraud Office (OLAF), 382
- European Community, European Political Cooperation (EPC), 434, 438
- European Court of Human Rights, 385
- European Investment Bank (EIB), 1093–1094
- European Neighborhood Policy (ENP), 380, 381
- European Political Cooperation (EPC), 379
- European Security and Defense Policy (ESDP), 380
- European Union, 379–383, 1200; Berlin Declaration (1999), 379, 411; and Bitterlemons.org, financial support for, 197–198; Border Assistance Mission (EUBAM), 1212; Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions (BDS) against Israel, demands for, 1307; call for dismantlement of Barrier, 170; Charter for Peace and Stability, 380–381; Common Foreign and Security Policy (CFSP), 379, 380, 434, 438; economic support for Palestinians, 428, 746–744; European Investment Bank (EIB), 1093–1094; frameworks for policy toward Israel-Palestinian conflict, 380–381; growing role of in the Middle East, 379–380; Interim Association Agreement on Trade and Cooperation, 382; and Israel, bilateral relations, 381–382; Israel Association Agreement, 381; Israeli assault on Gaza (2008), condemnation of, 1041; office in East Jerusalem, 746; and the Palestinian National Authority, relations with, 379, 382–383, 1213, 1214; Rafah Crossing, monitoring of, 1212, 1214; recognition of Israel's right to exist, 380; right of self-determination for Palestinians, recognition of, 379, 380, 1068, 1550, 1551; trade with Israel, 381; UN Security Council Resolution 242, declaration supporting, 612–613; and U.S. position on Israeli-Palestinian conflict compared, 383; Venice Declaration (1980), 379, 410–411, 439, 1068, 1550–1551
- Evangelicals for Middle East Understanding, 256
- Evan Rosh Co., 134, 135, 383–384
- Even (Epstein), Dan, 24
- Every Spy a Prince*, 288
- Executive of the Jewish Agency for the Land of Israel (1954), 677
- Exodus*, attempt of to breach British immigration restrictions, 1513
- Expropriation of Palestinian land and water resources. See Land; Water resources and access
- Expulsion. See Transfer and displacement of Palestinians; War, 1948
- Eyal, 384
- Eytan, Walter, 853
- Fahd Plan (1981), 84–85, 91, 98, 385, 399, 1287, 1297–1298
- al-Fahm, Umm, 1088
- al-Fahum, Khalid, 99, 1081
- al-Faisal, Saud, 1260
- Falah, Ghazi, 1616
- Falk, Richard, 1032
- Falwell, Jerry, 256, 752, 1454, 1460
- Family reunification, 322, 385–391, 1138; applications for, rejection of, 386, 1016; armed conflict and, 387; challenges to, 388; deterrents to, 693, 715; international considerations, 385–386; Jerusalem and, 738, 1008; marriage as reason for granting, 386; minor children, 388; “mixed marriages,” 387, 1087; occupied East Jerusalem, 389–390; Palestinian citizens in Israel since 1948, 386–387; Palestinians in the Occupied Territory since 1967, 387–389; quotas and, 388, 585; and terrorist activity, 387
- Farahat, Nidal Fat'hi Rabah, 1198
- Fargues, Phillipe, 321
- Farraj, Ya'qoub, 892, 958
- Farrakhan, Louis, 35
- Farsakh, Leila, 1616
- Farsoun, Samih K., 391–392
- Fatah, 95–96, 366, 392–396; Armed Struggle, emergence of, 393; al-'Asifa (The Storm), 95–96, 118, 133, 396–397, 1605; assassination of key

Fatah (continued)

- players, 395; attack on Israel's National Water Carrier project, 393; "Battle of Gaza," 233; Bayan al-Haraka (The Call of Life—Our Palestine), 118; combat operations, 119–120; control of PLO's political apparatus, 1071; core principle of, 96–97; corruption in, 395, 398, 873; defeat of in Gaza, 490–491, 1028; discipline, lack of, 394; early Arab reactions to, 96; early leadership, influences on, 1066; Egyptian support for, 1585; establishment of, 89, 118, 862; first raid into Israel, 95–96; founders of, 2, 95, 118, 233, 392, 502, 817, 832, 967, 1064, 1195, 1491, 1605; General Congress, 392–393, 395, 396; Gulf War, support for Iraq, 395, 817, 1047, 1305, 1482; growth of, 118, 1166; guerrilla operations, 89, 118–119, 120, 198, 393, 1573; and Hamas, differences of opinion between, 232–233, 299, 490–491, 1040, 1107, 1185; Higher Movement Committee, 396; ideology and organization of, 392–393, 394; internal disintegration following Lebanon War, 873–874; Iraqi relations with, 638; and Islamic Jihad, ties between, 645; in Jordan, 393–394, 1588, 1287; in Lebanese civil war, 122–123, 394–395; Mecca Agreement, 907–910, 1213; mutiny in (Fatah Uprising), 123, 134, 317, 395, 398–399, 573, 957, 970, 1068, 1080, 1195, 1659; objectives, changes in, 1067; origins of, 1064; "Palestine First," calls for, 118; and Palestinian National Authority, relations with, 1099, 1214, 1588; policy of tajyish (turning guerrilla forces into a conventional army), 134; primary goal of, 486–487; Prisoners' Document, representation in, 1184; rebellion against Arafat (1981), 99; recruitment, refugee camps and, 1222; relocation from Lebanon to Tunisia, 395; representation of on PLO National Council, 393; Sa'iqa opposition to, 1283; and Saudi Arabia, connections with, 394, 503; security services, 493; "Soviet Group," 8; split within, 1020, 1063; suicide bombings by, 233; Syrian support for, 89, 1420, 1577; Tanzim, 61, 125–126, 1432–1434; terrorism, renunciation of, 1069; UN Security Council Resolution 242, opposition to, 393; West Bank, control of, 491–492; withdrawal of support for Arafat, 103. See also Arafat, Yasir
- Fatah Central Committee, 2, 301, 392, 396–397, 399, 502, 967, 1195, 1287, 1433, 1491
- Fatah Corrective Movement, 1446. See also al-Banna, Sabri Khalil
- Fatah Dissidents. See Fatah Uprising
- Fatah Hawks, 397
- Fatah Higher Council, 1433
- Fatah Provisional Command. See Fatah Uprising
- Fatah Revolutionary Council (Black June), 146, 160, 392, 394, 396, 397–398, 1285, 1291
- Fatah Uprising (1983), 123, 134, 317, 395, 398–399, 573, 957, 970, 1068, 1080, 1195, 1659
- Fatherland Front. See Hazit Hamoledeth (Fatherland Front)
- Faysal-Weizmann Agreement (1919). See Weizmann-Faysal Agreement
- Fayyad, Salam, 368, 492
- Federation of Arab Trade Unions (FATU), 1126
- Federman, Sam, 475
- Federman, Yekutieli, 475
- Feiglin, Moshe, 1453, 1458, 1682
- Fein, Effie, 655
- Fein, Monroe, 23, 25
- Feinberg, Avshalom, 1
- Feith, Douglas, 225, 1525
- Fellahin* (Arab peasantry), 263, 1251
- Fertile Crescent, 372, 1358
- Fez Peace Initiative (1982), 85, 91, 99, 385, 399–400, 581, 788, 873, 1189, 1232, 1287
- Fichte, Johann Gottlieb, 141
- FIDA. See Palestinian Democratic Union (FIDA)
- Fida'iyyun*, 1653; as early symbol of Palestinian resistance, 667, 1064, 1096; expulsion of from Jordan, 121, 122, 198–200, 1066; formation of by Jamal al'Nasir, 116–117, 184; founding of, 862; in the Gaza Strip, 421; and PLO, relationship with, 1065
- Field of Thorns Plan, 400–402
- Fifth Aliya, 17, 320
- The Fifth Mother, 288, 402
- Final status talks, 58, 608; annexation of West Bank areas, proposal for, 532; Arafat's threats re., 402–403; Barak's "Generous Offer" and, 152, 153; failure of, 1524–1525; framework for (Beilin–Abu Mazen Accord), 2, 177–178; Gaza Strip and, 424; Labor Party platform for, 842; PNA, role of, 3, 1098; promise of, as a means to postpone Palestinian demands, 618; refugee status, deferment to, 1047, 1048; sovereignty over land, water, and settlements, 349; subjects to be addressed in, 236, 402–403, 1362; timetable for, 1362, 1144–1145; water rights, deferment to, 1602. See also Camp David Summit (2000)
- Finkelstein, Israel, 109, 111
- Finkelstein, Norman, 32
- Firer, Ruth, 353
- First Aliya, 17, 319, 514, 1251, 1663, 1666
- First Arab Congress (1913), 403
- First Intifada (1987–early 1990s), 83, 124–125, 622–625, 1010, 1582; as an assertion of self-sufficiency, 623, 1397, 1436; Border Police in, 202; curfews in, 297; deaths, 624; geography of, 624; and global image of Palestinians, transformation of, 625; graffiti, use of, 625; groundwork laid for the next uprising, 625; Hamas in, 232, 423; images of, 623; and Israeli military court system, effects on, 673–674; Israeli response to, 552, 623–624, 642, 653–654, 701; media coverage of, 624–625, 669, 1482; neighborhood committees, formation of, 274; nonviolent nature of, 622; practices of resistance and suppression, 623–624; protest movements, impact of, 681; roots and organizational structure, 623–624; and Second Intifada compared, 57, 622,

- 626; settler violence in, 1343; significance of to Palestinian cause, 85, 100–101, 128, 623, 625; social dimensions, 624; soldiers' refusal to repress, 681, 1649; support for, 622; triggering events, 423, 622, 645; Unified National Command, 975; "victory gardens," 624, 642, 998; women, role of, 624
- First Zionist Congress, 43, 47, 540, 572. See also Basel Program; World Zionist Congresses
- Fi Sabil al-Ba'th* (On the Way of Resurrection), 142
- Fischer, Joschka, 380, 442
- Fishing, Gaza Strip, 403–404
- Fisk, Robert, 919, 929, 1279
- Flag, Israeli. See Israeli flag
- Flag, Palestinian. See Palestinian flag
- Flapan, Simha, 405, 991
- Fleisher, Ari, 1175
- "Flying checkpoints," 147, 151, 1255, 1269
- Force 17, 9, 133, 397, 405, 1100, 1178, 1179, 1285, 1286. See also Presidential Guard
- Ford, Gerald Rudolph, 27, 405–407, 823, 1206
- Forder, Herbert, 474
- Foreign nationals, 197; Israeli entry policy toward, 323–324; restrictions on movement of, 1212, 1213
- Forfeiture and Demolition of Property, Defense Emergency Regulation 119, 316
- Forrestal, James, 1478
- Forum of the Three Commandments, 1455
- Foucault, Michel, 1172
- Foundation for Middle East Peace, 68
- Foundation for the Defense of Democracies (FDD), 36–37
- Four Mothers Movement, 402, 407–408, 659
- Four-Point Plan (1989), 143
- Fourth Aliya, 17, 320
- Fourth Geneva Convention (1949), 314; applicability of to Occupied Territories, 220, 499, 613–614, 652, 666–667, 696, 1180, 1523, 1572, 1615; collective punishment, prohibition of, 615; health-care services, provision of, 508; house demolitions and, 570; Israeli violations of, 280, 508, 612, 1179–1180, 1312, 1498, 1502; Palestinian refugee problem, applicability of, 1241; requirements of, 227; settlements, treatment of, 67, 1312; torture, as a breach of, 849
- France, 408–411, 1291, 1663, 1678; anti-Jewish sentiment in, 43, 330, 408, 411; backing for Israel, 1520; Balfour Declaration, agreement to, 1275; Berlin Declaration (1999), 379, 411; contribution to peace settlement, 410–411; death of Arafat in, 410; Dreyfus Affair, 43, 334–335, 408, 540, 1000, 1664; "Four Power Talks," 1273; French public opinion and the conflict, 411; German occupation of (World War II), 408–409; and Holy Land, attachment to, 408–409; involvement of in Israel's nuclear program, 409, 646, 1001, 1538; and Israel, relations with, 409, 1001; Jewish Diaspora in, 327, 328, 637; Jewish emigration to Israel from, 330, 381, 1368; Muslim population in, 411; in Sinai/Suez War (1956), 1396, 1520; support for Palestinian cause, 409–410, 411; Sykes-Picot Agreement (1916), 208, 457, 576, 580, 1413–1416, 1613, 1670; Syrian revolt against, 1417
- Frangi, 'Abd-Allah, 441
- Frankenthal, Yitzhak, 1134
- Freedom of movement. See Restrictions on movement
- Free Lebanon Army, 479, 1398
- Free Officers Movement, 117
- Freij, Elias, 412, 1079
- Freiman, Morton, 136
- French, Louis, 412
- French Reports (1931–1932), 412
- Friedman, Tom, 86
- From the Stone Age to Christianity*, 106
- Frontier Corps, 202, 247
- Fullbright, Senator J. W., 28
- Fundamentalism, religious. See Religious fundamentalism
- Fund-raising by Islamic groups, U.S. prohibition against, 30
- The Future of the Palestinian Arabs in Israel*, 543
- Futuwwa, 412, 967
- Gachelet, 413, 760
- Gahal Party, 413, 539, 884, 1401, 1609
- Galilee: Israeli final takeover of, 1948 War, 1568; Judaization of, 542, 828, 850, 978, 1087, 1089, 1471, 1535; mitzpm (lookouts), establishment of, 828, 1535, 1536; Natzerat Illit, 977–979, 1089, 1471; Safed, 1279–1281; war to protect (see Lebanon War)
- Galili, Israel Balashnikov, 413
- Galili assault rifle, 413
- Galili Protocols, 413–414
- Gamla movement, 414, 470
- Gang of Five, 131–132, 300, 414
- Gaster, Moses, 1289
- Gaza Bar Association, 673
- Gaza coastal waters. See Fishing, Gaza Strip
- "Gaza First" option, 423, 424
- Gaza-Jericho Agreement I (Cairo I), 2, 414–416, 878, 1049, 1207; commitments made in, 1362–1363; human rights, references to, 1246; Israeli negotiating team, 415; PNA, structure of, 1098; Rafah Crossing, provisions for, 1210, 1212; security and military issues, 415; transfer of authority from Israel to the PNA, 415–416; water rights, 1602; "zones of settlements" clause, 416, 1049
- Gaza-Jericho Agreement II (Cairo II), 343, 414, 416–418, 442, 878, 1049; Economic Protocol, 416–417, 427–428, 808, 908, 1050, 1104, 1106–1107; limited self-rule, exceptions to, 416, 1049; PNA and, 1104, 1106–1107

- Gaza Legislative Council, 422
 Gaza Plan, 421
 Gaza Raid (1955), 184, 421
 Gaza Strip, 418–429; agricultural productivity, decline of, 1027; airport, 428, 1257, 1636; Barrier, 163, 406, 429; borders, determination of, 1209; breach of border by Hamas, 1215; buffer zone, 1027; Cairo Declaration (2005), 234; Camp David Accords, 423; as a closed military zone, declaration of, 1210; Coastal Aquifer, 1600; Communist Party of Gaza, 975; conflicts between Hamas and Fatah over, 233; consequences of al-Aqsa Intifada in, 68; creation of, 418, 1209; “Dahlanistan,” 299; “de-development” of, 427, 1466; economic predicament, 427–428, 716–717, 811, 1027; education in, 600; Egyptian legacy, 421–422, 1469; energy, sources and supply of, 595, 596–597; Eretz Crossing, 377–378; evacuation of settlers from, 425–426; fishing in, 403–404; “Gaza First” option, 423; Geneva Accord (2003), 430–431, 1526; geography of, 418; Gush Katif settlement, removal of, 1328–1329; Hamas, rise of, 68, 418, 426, 466, 485–486, 491, 492, 640, 661; health care in, 599–600; history and evolution of, 420; as a “hostile territory,” 661–662, 1028; humanitarian crisis in, 716, 1027, 1039, 1209, 1214; infrastructure, decline of, 1600; Internet, access to, 601; invasion of (2006), 1024; Israeli blockade of, 426, 596, 599, 1027–1028, 1189, 1214, 1215, 1600; Israeli military incursions into, 716; Israeli occupation of, 423, 1016–1017; Israeli reoccupation of (2002), 1036; Jordanian Option, 423, 1468; media, coverage of, 662, 752; and 1948 war, 420–421, 1568; 1967 war and, 1570; Operation Cast Lead (2008–2009), 56, 61, 66, 68, 127, 299, 427, 492, 661–662, 890, 1027–1033, 1042, 1162, 1281; original inhabitants, 420; Oslo years, 424–425; Palestinian refugees in, 418, 419–420, 714, 1236; Philadelphia Route, 1161–1162, 1210; PLO claim to, 418; population density in, 420, 1600; poverty in, 1027; quality of life, deterioration of, 717, 1028, 1601; road map to disengagement, 425–426; roads, 601, 603–604; seaport, 428, 715, 1257, 1362; security buffer zone, 374; settlement of Returnees in, 1258–1259; sewage disposal in, 597–598, 1600; al-Shawwa, Hajj Rashad, 299, 367, 423, 1372; significance of in Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 418; and the struggle for self-determination, 422–424; telephone service in, 600–601; tunnels to smuggle in supplies, 428, 1030, 1038, 1162, 1214; unemployment in, 1027; unilateral withdrawal from (see Israel’s unilateral disengagement from Gaza); United National Front (UNF) in, 1110, 1488, 1492–1493; water, 596–597, 598–599, 1039, 1600–1601; waste management, 597–598; and West Bank compared, 1616; Zionist claims on, 420
 Gazit, Schlomo, 272
 Gedud ha-Avoda (Jewish Labor Legion), 1430
 Geffen, Aviv, 655
 Gemayel, Amin, 867, 873, 1512
 Gemayel, Bashir, 872, 873, 1229, 1277, 1366, 1512
 Gemayel, Pierre, 1161
 General Assembly Resolutions. See United Nations General Assembly Resolution, by number
 General Intelligence Service, Palestinian National Authority, 1100
 General Security Service (GSS). See Shin Bet
 General strike. See Arab Revolt (1936–1939)
 General Union for Palestinian Women (GUPW), 1606
 General Union of Palestinian Students, 577
 General Union of Palestinian Workers, 275–276
 General Union of Palestinian Writers and Journalists, 8, 305
 Geneva Accord (2003), 67–68, 226, 430–432, 1526; holy sites, international supervision of, 431; and Nuseibeh-Ayalon Agreement (2002) compared, 1004; signing of, 1645
 Geneva Conference (1973), 122, 240, 432–433, 825, 1079, 1421, 1543
 Geneva Initiative (2003), 748, 1247
 Genocide: Nazis against European Jews, 44, 549; Turks against Armenians. See also Ethnic cleansing; Holocaust
 Genscher, Hans-Dietrich, 439, 441
 Genud, Yehudit, 1057–1058
 Georges-Picot, 1414
 Gerlitz, Ron, 1085
 Germany, 433–443; Agreements on Restitution and Indemnification (Luxembourg Treaty), 434; Berlin Wall, removal of, 441; chosen (Aryan) race, 47; East Germany, and the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 439–441; economic boycott of, 1673; even-handedness, policy of, 433–434, 437–439; Federal Republic of Germany, the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 433–439; growing sympathy for Palestinian cause, 437; Hallstein Doctrine, 435–436, 440; humiliation of following World War I, 1139; Iraq War, participation in, 441; and Israel, relations with, 378; “Kulturturnation” concept, 141; military cooperation with Israel, 435–436; Munich Olympics (1972), massacre at, 152, 201–202, 433, 440, 951, 955–956, 1285; Nazi legacy, 433; 1967 War, emotional identification with Israel, 436–437; Palestinian fund-raising in, 96; and the PNA, relations with, 433; reparations to Israel, 184, 434–435, 447, 550, 1538, 1576; romantic nationalism in, 47; Soviet Jews, settlement of, 330; Temple Society, settlements in Palestine, 1663; Transfer Agreement (Ha’avara) with (1933), 49, 113, 474–475, 721, 891, 1673; unified, and the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 441–442; Zionism in, 1670
 Gesher (Bridge) Party, 443–445, 882, 1026, 1490
 Ghanaiem, Mohammad H., 1117
 Ghanaim, Mahmood, 1085

- Ghandi, Mahatma, 49
 al-Ghoul, Adnan, 1198
 al-Ghuri, Emile, 445–446, 1434
 Ghusayn, Jawad, 1080
 Ghusha, Ibrahim, 232
 al-Ghussein, Ya'cob, 892
 Ghawsha, Samir, 1065
 Gilad, Rabbi Yehuda, 930
 Gilbert, Martin, 1061
 Gilo settlement, additions to, 1320
 Gil Party, 446
 Ginzberg, Asher Tzevi. See Ha'am, Ahad
 Gisha (Legal Center for Freedom of Movement), 1306
 Givat Yael settlement, 1320
 Giv'at Ze'ev settlement, 446–447, 895, 1208, 1427, 1472
 Glock, Albert, 109–110, 111
 Glubb, John Bagot, 780, 894
 Glueck, Nelson, 106
 Golan, Neta, 620
 Golan Heights, 1512; expulsion of Syrian citizens from, 1014; Hafez al-Assad's goal to recover, 86; Israeli annexation of (1981), 1229; Israeli occupation of after 1967 War, 843, 1007, 1369, 1494, 1528, 1570, 1571, 1579; Israeli-Syrian negotiations re., 1423–1424, 1530; Jewish settlements in, 1322, 1425; Rabin's secret offer to withdraw from, 1424; reoccupation by Syria, 1973 War, 1014–1015, 1017, 1421. See also Syria
 Goldberg, Arthur, 773
 Goldberg, David, 589
 Goldberg, Eliezer, 1026
 Goldberg, Jeffrey, 921
 Goldfoot, Stanley, 1460
 Goldmann, Nahum, 194, 447–448
 Goldstein, Baruch Kappel, 125, 140, 243, 297, 425, 448, 470, 523, 535, 616, 756, 763, 799, 803, 805, 822, 1103, 1209, 1331, 1345, 1411, 1441, 1451, 1453
 Goldstein, Shaul, 1293
 Gorbachev, Mikhail, 945, 946
 Gordon, A. D., 495, 904, 1148
 Goren, Schlomo, 496
 Goren, Yizhak Gormezanu, 520
 Government of Free Lebanon, 1398
 Grabowski, Avi, 1278
 Grady, Henry, 945
 Graffiti, 625
 Grassroots international activism, 448–452; boycotts, 450; Christian Peacemaker Teams (CPTs), 261, 451, 534, 998; divestment, 449–450; increases in, 448–449; International Solidarity Movement (ISM), 63–64, 169, 451, 620–621, 998; international witness, 450–451; by Presbyterian Church (USA), 449–450. See also Nonviolence in Israel/Palestine
 Grassroots International Protection for the Palestinian People (GIPP), 161, 451
 Grassroots movements, Palestinian, 273
 Grazing: Black Goat Law (1950), 465; overgrazing, 373, 374
 Great Britain: backing for Israel, 1520; British-Zionist alliance, breakdown of, 1673; departure from Palestine, Arab response to, 1559–1560; Jewish Diaspora in, 328; Palestine Mandate (see British Mandate in Palestine (1922–1948)); in Sinai/Suez War (1956), 1520; Sykes-Picot Agreement (1916), 208, 457, 576, 580, 1413–1416; Zionism, first European power to embrace, 1670
 Greater Jerusalem, 452–456, 1024, 1208; Arab East Jerusalem within, 456; creation of, 735; Jewish settlements in, 452–453, 1636; Palestinian inhabitants, “quiet transfer” of, 1009, 1466, 1473. See also Jerusalem
 Greater Land of Israel Movement, 20, 456–463, 1608; and Arabs, Jewish distrust of, 458–459; Ariel Sharon, support for, 1365; biblical promise and, 458; birth of, 460;
 Camp David Accords (1979) and, 462; changes and setbacks, 461–462; debates re., 457 decline of, 462–463; founding, 1430; ideological communities based on, 1325–1327, 1330; as justification for Jewish settlements in the Occupied Territories, 38, 459–460, 1322, 1325, 1332; Likud Party, support for, 21, 85, 460, 1579; 1967 War, effects of, 459–460; origins of, 942; and the Oslo Process, 462–463; Palestinian presence and, 461; rationales for, 457–459; religious ideology and, 460–461, 759; secular supporters of, 459; security issues as justification for, 459; Tekuma Party, support for, 1437; Women in Green, support for, 1628
 Greater Syrian nation-state, 575, 1358
 Greek Orthodox Church, 463–464, 1251; holy sites, maintenance of, 189; in Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 259; land holdings in Israel and Occupied Territories, 463–464, 1339–1340; movement to reform, 1283; in Nazareth, 980; patriarch of Jerusalem, headquarters of, 263; structure of, 463; tax revolt, Bayt Sahur, 1435–1437
 Green areas, 464–465, 499, 741–742, 1684
 Greenberg, Uri Zvi, 515, 516
 Green Hand Gang, 115
 Green Line: Barrier and, 21, 64, 125, 126, 130, 155, 163, 165, 204, 205, 319, 351, 446, 618, 754, 794, 846, 1027, 1157, 1158, 1368, 1682–1683; infiltration by terrorists, 125; suicide bombings inside, 59; zoning laws and regulations re., 1682–1683
 Green Patrol, 173, 465–466
 Greenzweig, Emil, 470
 Grimm Brothers, 141

- Grossman, David, 265, 466, 521, 778
- Groundwater contamination, 375–376
- Gruen, David-Josef. See Ben-Gurion, David
- Guerrilla operations, Palestinian: during al-Aqsa Intifada, 59; British response to, 1484; Fatah and, 89, 118–119, 120, 198, 393, 1573; fiḍa'iyyun, 116–117, 121, 122, 184, 198–200, 421, 667, 862, 1064, 1065, 1066, 1096, 1653; Green Hand Gang, 115; in Lebanon, (Milkart Protocols), 91, 937–938, 1070; as momentum for Palestine Nationalist Movement, 1066; new strategies following 1967 War, 1584–1585, 1586; origins of, 82; success of, 120–121; tajyish (turning guerrilla forces into a conventional army), 134; Youth Revenge Group, 1652
- Guide for the Perplexed*, 902
- Gur, Mordechai, 1134
- Gur'inim*, 966
- Gulf War (1991), 125, 142, 222–223, 466–468; American Jewish support for, 28; Arab support, U.S. attempts to enlist, 1522; division of Arab states over, 900; effect of on First Intifada, 1169; and Palestinian agriculture, effects of, 348; PLO support for Iraq, 92–93, 101, 360, 466–467, 468, 640, 817, 878, 900, 1047, 1305, 1482; and U.S. clout in the Middle East following, 85, 654, 1046, 1304–1305; and U.S.-Israeli relations, 222–223, 1046, 1072, 1356. See also Iraq; Kuwait
- Gush Emunim (Bloc of the Faithful), 468–472, 680, 740, 1577; and Ateret Cohanim, relationship with, 135; Drobls Plan, adoption of, 335; founding and history of, 139, 461, 468; Greater Land of Israel Movement, support for, 458, 460; and al-Haram al-Sharif, destruction of, 496, 497; in Hebron, 523; and Israel's disengagement from Gaza, 471; Jewish “chosenness,” concept, 523; Kiryat Arba settlement, 461, 525, 526, 822, 863, 881, 1315, 1323, 1331, 1443, 1584, 1646; media coverage of, 1324; objectives, religious justification for, 469–470; origins of, 942; political activity, 469–470, 761–762; settlement activity, 470–471, 760–761, 1322, 1323–1325, 1329, 1401; Sharon's support for, 1365
- Gush Etzion, 1338, 1345, 1571
- Gush Katif settlement, 1328–1329
- Gush Shalom (the Peace Bloc), 137, 139, 472, 682, 683, 684, 928, 998, 1155
- Gutkin, Steve, 64
- Ha'am, Ahad, 49, 193, 217, 218, 319, 473–474, 514, 572, 1275, 1610, 1611, 1667–1668, 1669
- Haas, Jacob de, 206
- Ha'avara (Transfer) agreement (1933), 49, 113, 474–475, 721, 891, 1673
- Habash, George, 475–478, 480, 1653; and Fatah, leadership in, 233; guerrilla warfare against Israel, call for, 1652; imprisonment of, 772; Movement of Arab Nationalists (MAN), founding of, 87, 117, 318, 479, 486, 506, 1064, 1167, 1586; Oslo Process, opposition to, 1169; Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP), founding and leadership of, 97, 198, 1166, 1421, 1589. See also Movement of Arab Nationalists (MAN); Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP)
- Habayit Hayehudi (the Jewish Home), 470
- Habib, Philip, 484, 1067, 1229, 1277, 1366
- Habibi, Emile, 478, 521, 980
- Habibi, Haim, 983
- Hadar, Leon, 1407
- Hadash (The Democratic Front for Peace and Equality), 79, 144, 291, 478–479, 903, 1090, 1219, 1464
- Hadassah, 33, 38, 338
- Hadassah Medical Organization, 1123
- Hadawi, Sami, 479
- Haddad, Saad, 91, 479, 866, 873, 1038, 1277, 1278, 1366, 1398–1399
- Haddad, Wadi', 117, 233, 372, 476, 479–480, 953, 1064, 1168
- al-Hadi, Awni Abd, 481
- al-Hadi family, 481
- Haetzni, Elykim, 1437
- Hagana, 481–482; Acre, conquest of, 10; attacks on British officials, soldiers, and installations, 1674; Ben-Gurion, David, direction of, 482, 1612; British cooperation with, 482; Dalet Plan/Plan Dalet, 303–305, 1235, 1561; Deir Yassin massacre, knowledge of, 316; development of, 184, 378, 482; factions split from, 721; forerunners of, 503; founding of, 307, 481–482, 753, 841, 904, 1634, 1671; functions of, 646, 650; growth and increasing sophistication of, 1130, 1131; Hebrew map, use of, 1471; in the Jewish Resistance Movement (JRM), 641, 771; leadership of, 413, 1153, 1642; methods used by to “encourage” Palestinian flight, 1608; representation of in Washington, 829; size of, 1948 War, 1560; Transfer Committee (1948) and, 1475. See also Palmah
- Hagee, John, 1461
- Hagshama* youth movements, 330
- Hague Convention Respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, 499, 614, 696; applicability of to Palestinian refugee problem, 1241, 1242; Regulation 43, applicability of to the Occupied Territories, 697; settlements, establishment of on State Land, 1313, 1401
- Haifa, 482–484, 1406; Arab Revolt in, 483; Bahá'í faith in, 483; commercial rise of, as a threat to Beirut, 1417; economic importance of, 483; history of, 482–483; Jewish immigration to, 483; modern era, beginning of, 482; 1948 War in, 483–484, 1562; population, 484; railroad, bombing of, 891
- Haig, Alexander Meigs, Jr., 484–485, 1228, 1229–1230, 1365, 1381
- Hai v'Kayam (Enduring; David, King of Israel, Lives and Endures), 1457
- Ha'Ivri, David, 1458

- el-Haj, Nadia Abu, 107
 Hakim, Eliyahu, 641, 891, 954
Halakha (Jewish religious law), 41, 758, 831, 1370, 1379, 1452, 1465, 1651
 Halper, Jeff, 621
 Halutz, Dan, 661
Halutzim, 1665
 Hamad, Ibrahim, 65
 Hamagshimim Israel Fellowships, 33
 Hamami, Sa'id, 97, 138, 146, 485, 639, 1154
 Hamas (The Movement of Islamic Resistance), 103, 124, 128, 485–493, 640; acceptance of Israel, 426–427; “Battle of Gaza,” 233, 491; breach of Gaza-Egypt border by, 1215; Cairo Declaration and, 233–234, 933–934; categorization of as a terrorist group by Israel and the U.S., 1028; cease-fire, offers of, 300, 301, 488, 489; Chinese-made weapons, use of, 253; collaborators recruited from, 289; Declaration of Principles, opposition to, 1048; entry of into politics, 489–490; and Fatah, differences of opinion between, 232–233, 299, 490–491, 1040, 1107, 1185; fighting in the Gaza Strip (2006–2007), 491, 1024; in First Intifada, 232, 423; founders of, 486, 1221, 1643; goal of, 486–487; Hebron massacre, response to, 487–488, 536, 1010, 1103, 1411; historical and ideological roots, 486–487; and IDF, truce with, 1028, 1032, 1042; integration of into Palestinian political system, 232; internal recognition of, 948; Islamic Covenant, 232; and Islamic Jihad compared, 644; Israeli attempts to crush in Gaza, 492, 1028; and Israeli Occupation, struggle against, 487–489; Izz-al-Din al-Qassam Brigades, 83, 115, 645, 718, 962, 1197–1198; jihad, call for, 487; kidnapping of Israeli soldier (2006), 1024; leaders, Israeli deportation of, 488; Madrid Conference, opposition to, 487; Mecca Agreement, 907–910, 1213; Meshal, Khalid, 933–934, 951–952, 1041; and Movement of Arab Nationalists (MAN) compared, 486; National Reconciliation Document, signing of, 934; origins of, 233, 423; Oslo Process, rejection of, 125, 657; Palestinian Legislative Council elections (2006), decisive victory in, 127, 227, 232, 233, 234, 301, 368, 382, 426, 489–490, 621, 908, 1027–1028, 1039, 1052, 1100, 1107, 1185, 1189, 1213, 1260; Palestinian state, support for creation of in the Occupied Territories, 934; Prisoners’ Document, representation in, 1184; refusal to recognize PLO as sole representative of the Palestinian people, 232; retention of power in, 492; rise to power in Gaza, 68, 418, 426, 466, 485–486, 491, 492, 640, 661; suicide bombings, 103, 125, 140, 233, 300, 425, 488, 616, 657, 726, 1033, 1103, 1197, 1362, 1411; in Syria, 1424, 1425; as a terrorist organization by U.S. definition, 1449; U.S.-Israeli-led international campaign to isolate government led by, 1189; in the West Bank, 491–492; women, position toward, 487; Yasin, Shaykh Ahmad Ismail, 601, 66, 233, 425, 486, 487, 494, 616, 933, 1222, 1643–1645
- Hamdan, Fayiz, 1081
 Hamerman, Ilana, 521
 al-Hamid, Hayil ‘Abd, 493
 Hammerskjöld, Dag, 1302
 Hammouda, Yahya, 1064
 HaMoked (Center for the Defense of the Individual), 493, 682
 Ham-shiri, Mohammad, 956
 Hamuda, Yahya, 1585
Hamula, 289, 386, 1089, 1129, 1618
 Hanafi, Sari, 1616
 Handel, Zvi, 1437
 Hanegbi, Haim, 906
 Hanegbi, Tzachi, 1391
 Haniyeh, Ismail, 227, 301, 491, 493–495, 634, 909, 1039, 1186, 1213
 Hankin, Joshua, 495, 1062
 Hanum, Hilmi, 1079
Haolam Hazeq, 137–138, 139
 HaPoel HaMizrachi, 495, 942, 975
 HaPoel HaTzair (the Young Worker), 113, 495–496, 546, 904 al-Haq (Law in the Service of Man), 496, 668, 1181, 1306
 Hara’ayon Hayehudi (The Jewish Idea), 1458 al-Haram ash-Sharif, 108–109, 334, 496–498, 563–564, 732; administration of, 557; admission to, 557; Ariel Sharon’s visit to (2000), 56–57, 74, 126, 152, 293, 497, 616, 626, 845, 940, 1011, 1051, 1367, 1440; attempts to destroy, 525, 1341; Barak’s “Generous Offer,” 156; destruction of to build Jewish temple, 256, 1287; Hasmonean Tunnel, 126, 388, 497, 505, 559, 740–741, 949, 1023, 1440, 1635–1636; importance of to the Islamic world, 643; location of, 496; Muslim Supreme Council renovation of, 1413; provocative actions against, 496–497; sovereignty over (Taba Talks), 1429
 HaRav, Mercaz, 758, 763
 Haredi, 498, 986, 1369, 1535, 1651
 Harel, Amos, 1031
 Har HaBayit. See Temple Mount; Third Temple Movement
 El Har Hamor, 1457, 1459
 Har Homa settlement, 374, 474, 499–501, 537, 1023, 1040, 1337, 1338, 1636 al-Hariri, Rafiq, 1426
 Harkabi, Yehoshafat, 1139
 Harrison, Benjamin, 255
 al-Hasan, Bilal, 501–502, 503, 977 al-Hasan, Hani, 96, 393, 394, 502, 977, 1020, 1064 al-Hasan, Khalid Muhammad, 394, 502–503, 832, 1064
 Hasbara Fellowships, 33
 Hashemite genealogy from the Hejaz, 503

- Hashomer, 162, 180, 181, 186, 503, 650, 841, 904, 905, 1165, 1430, 1467
- Hashomer Hatzair youth movement, 23, 503–504, 1353
- Haskalah (Jewish Enlightenment), 186, 504–505, 989, 1174, 1661
- Hasmonean Tunnel, 126, 388, 497, 505, 559, 740–741, 949, 1023, 1440, 1635–1636
- Hass, Amira, 553, 683, 914, 922, 1160, 1254, 1410
- Hate crimes, 35–36
- HaTenu'ah LeChinum HaMikdash, 1459
- Hatnua HaHadash (The New Movement), 1641
- Havana Declaration of 1979, 997
- al-Hawari, Muhammad Nimr, 966
- Hawatimah, Nayif, 3, 99, 121, 318, 477, 505–506, 1064, 1166–1167, 1588
- Haycraft Commission (1921), 210, 211, 333, 506–507, 1126
- Hazbun, George, 1079
- Hazit Hamoledeth (Fatherland Front), 507
- Health care, Israeli: administration of, National Insurance Institute (NII), 738, 972–974; under the British Mandate, 1123
- Health care, Palestinian, 507–513; access to, restrictions on, 66, 151, 348, 510, 1209, 1617; Bedouin in Israel, 1163; under the British Mandate, 1124; children, 508, 599–600; delays in obtaining medical attention, 727–728; financing of by donor agencies, 512; in the Gaza Strip, 600; and health care in Israel compared, 507, 508; hospitals, availability of, 6, 507–508, 510; immunization program, 507, 508; Israeli obstacles to, 509–510; malnutrition, 508; model for, 161; National Insurance Institute, benefits available to, 973; and the Occupation, 220–221, 507–508, 511, 599–600; and Oslo Accords, 508–509; Palestinian Ministry of Health (PMH), 510–511; PNA responsibility for, 508, 510–512; restrictions on movement and, 600, 1209; “safe passage” of patients to and from West Bank and Gaza Strip, 508; water-related diseases, increases in, 1593, 1600, 1601; in the West Bank, 599–600
- Health, Development, Information and Policy Institute (HDIP), 161, 1108
- “Hebrew humanism,” 1148
- Hebrew language, 186, 354; as the Israeli medium of instruction, 989, 1680; Modern Hebrew, development of, 722, 1666; recognition of as an official language under the British Mandate, 1123; Zionism and the revival of, 1251, 1666
- Hebrew literature, 513–522; Arab Jews and, 520–521; First Aliya, 514; “generation of the land” writers, 517; Haskalah (Jewish Enlightenment), 513–514; Hebrew culture, coalescing of, 516–517; Intifada, effects of, 521; after Israel statehood, 518–520; military generation of writers, 517–518; modern, origins of, 513; Palestinians, view of, 514; Second Aliya, 514–515; Third Aliya, 515–516; Zangwill, Israel, 1653–1656; Zionist immigration, influence of, 514–515
- Hebrew University, 588, 901, 1276, 1290, 1556, 1632, 1680
- Hebron, 522–529; al-Aqsa Intifada, and security measures in, 526–527; archaeology at, 52; Avram Avinu Settlement, 139, 523; Barrier, construction of, 528; Cave of Machpelah/Cave of Patriarchs, 242–243, 522, 527; Christian Peacemaker Teams (CPTs) in, 451; divided city following Hebron Protocol, map of, 538; downtown, map of Jewish settlements in, 524; enforced division of, 528; history of, 522; al-Ibrahimi Mosque, massacre at (1994), 125, 140, 242–243, 425, 448, 522, 535, 565, 583, 1441; Islamic rule in, 522; Israeli control of, 1967 War, 1571; Jewish reentry into, 522–523; Jewish settlements in, 68, 523–529, 1315; Kiryat Arba settlement, 461, 525, 526, 822, 863, 881, 1315, 1323, 1331, 1443, 1646; Old City, 147, 150, 526, 528; separation walls, 527–528; settlements in, 1311, 1323, 1579; settler and government plans for, 526–527, 1008; settler violence in, 523, 525, 1344; spread of Western Wall Disturbances to (1929), 1624; Temporary International Presence in (TIPH), 536, 537, 1441–1442; Terror Against Terror (TNT) activities in, 1443–1444, 1453; victimization of Palestinians in, 525; worsening of Palestinian situation in, 526; “Worshiper’s Way,” 527
- Hebron District, southern area, 529–535; areas of expulsion, map of, 531; Bantustans, 150–151; cave area and its residents described, 530–532, 1427; Eshkolot settlement, 1319–1320; expulsion of Palestinians, 532–534; Israeli settlements in, 533, 1319; Makhamara hamula, resistance to land confiscation, 1404; Palestinian enclave in, 150–151; Sansana settlement, 1319–1320; settler violence, 534
- Hebron Disturbances (1929). See Western Wall Disturbances (1929)
- Hebron Fund, 328, 526
- Hebron Massacre (1994), 523, 535–536, 1453; described, 448; Hamas retaliation for, 125, 425, 487–488, 1103, 1411, 1450; Israeli attacks on Hamas, 425, 814, 1010; JDL defense of, 756; Jewish fundamentalism and, 763; Kach, support for, 799, 803; Kahane Chai, support of, 705; Rabin’s response to, 1209, 1331; and Shamgar Commission, establishment of, 1344, 1345, 1352–1353; and Temporary International Presence in Hebron (TIPH), 1441–1442
- Hebron Protocol (1997), 499, 525, 536–539, 1274, 1362, 1442, 1636; Christopher letter to Netanyahu, attachment to, 262, 537; conditions placed on Israel, 536; conditions placed on Palestine, 536–537; division of Hebron, 525; Israeli implementation of, 279; land, control of, 845; and Palestinian living conditions, decline of, 537–537; purpose of, 505, 536; significance of for Palestinians, 537
- Hebron University, 1132
- Hecht, Rabbi Abraham, 41

- He-Halutz, 181, 186
 Heiberg, Marianne, 555
 Helms, Richard, 824, 885
 Helou, Charles, 1587
 Hendel, Zvi, 976
 Herder, Johann Gottfried, 141
 Herodian aqueduct, 562
 Herod's Gate, 559, 826, 1018, 1338
 Heroes of the Return (Abtal al-Awda), 119, 539, 862, 1166, 1652
 Hershkovits, Efraim, 799
 Hershkovitz, Daniel, 976
 Hertzberg, Rabbi Arthur, 327, 642
 Herut Party, 175, 413, 444, 459, 539–540, 884, 976, 1353, 1401, 1438, 1658
 Herzl, Theodor Binyamin Ze'ev, 180, 540–541, 1397, 1654; criticisms of, 473, 1173; "Dreyfus Affair," 43, 334–335, 408, 540, 1000, 1664; First Zionist Congress, organization of, 43, 171, 540, 572, 1233, 1630, 1633, 1664; and the foundation of Zionist organization, 1663–1665; Der Judenstaat (The Jewish State), 43, 335, 408, 540, 1397, 1664, 1667, 1668, 1669; meeting with Kaiser Wilhelm II of Germany, 1631; meeting with Sultan Abdul Hamid II of Turkey, 1631; political Zionism, interpretation of, 218, 649, 831, 1275, 1466, 1632; Uganda plan, 1000, 1610, 1631, 1654, 1665, 1667; World Zionist Organization, founding of, 999, 1633, 1664; Zionism, primary premises of, 47
 Herzog, Chaim, 1, 541
 Hibbat Tziyon. See Hovevei Zion (Lovers of Zion)
 High Commissioner for Human Rights, 1270–1272. See also Robinson, Mary High Commissioner for Palestine, 75, 115, 208, 541–542, 879, 1623
 High Court of Justice, Israel. See Israeli Supreme Court
 Higher education, Palestine. See Palestinian universities
 High Follow-Up Committee and the Mada Manifesto, 542–544, 1090, 1091
 Hijackings: Achille Lauro, 9, 93, 231, 640, 1063, 1069, 1659; by Black September Organization, 1285; Entebbe (1976), 372, 951; Khalid, Layla, participation in, 818; by the Palestine Popular Struggle Front, 1081; by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP), 90, 121, 128, 199, 201, 372, 477, 479–480, 818, 1167, 1586, 1653; as a way to combat image of Palestinian passivity, 480; and worldwide attention for Palestinian cause, 1586. See also Haddad, Wadi' Hijazi, Fuad, 1484
 al-Hijazi, Suleiman, 1375
 al-Hijazi, Sumir, 1556
 Hillel, Shlomo, 850
 Hillel: The Foundation for Jewish Campus Life, 33
 "Hilltop youth," 1056, 1292
 Hill Youth, 1073, 1326
 Himmler, Heinrich, identification of, 541 al-Hindi, Hani, 87, 117, 953, 1166
 al-Hinnawi, Sami, 1419
 Hirsch, Baron de (Moritz von Hirsch auf Gereuth), 540, 755, 1664
 Hirsch, Rabbi Moshe, 987
 Hirschfeld, Yair, 1047, 1106, 1272
 Histadrut, 544–548, 905; decline of, 547; exclusion of Arab workers from employment in Jewish enterprises, 1671; founding of, 113, 545, 841, 904; health-care organization, 546; influence of, 181, 546–547, 1217; leadership of, 179, 186, 504, 931; membership, 546, 547–548; organization and purpose, 546, 547, 1251; religious Jews, representation of, 942; strikes, 850
 Hitler, Adolf, 176, 551, 1673
 Hitti, Philip, 1095
 Hizbullah (Party of God), 126, 548–549, 644, 1020, 1230, 1425, 1495; Chinese-made weapons, use of, 253; Israeli assaults against, U.S. defense of, 282; kidnapping of two Israeli soldiers (2006), 1260; Mugnyiah, Imad, assassination of, 1426; origins of, 237, 548; rise of, in Lebanon, 868–869, 1027; terrorist label, 410, 1449; war with Israel (2006), 549, 1011, 1024
 Hobeika, Elie, 1278
 Hoenlein, Malcolm, 30
 Hoeven, Jan Willem van der, 1460
 Holocaust, 260, 379, 549–554, 610, 1614; anti-Zionism following, 50–52; anti-Zionism prior to, 47–50; Auschwitz, 549, 553; Bernadotte's prisoner rescue missions, 187; and birth of Israel, 549–550, 553, 610; as the central event in Jewish history, 1676; defined, 549; denial and deniers of, 35, 633; education programs, 36; Eichmann, Adolf, trial of, 549, 550, 848, 1577, 1579; Gentile victims of, 549; German reparations to Israel, 184, 434–435, 447, 550, 1538, 1576; as justification for Israel and Zionism, 69, 549, 552, 988, 1071, 1130, 1137, 1513, 1559; likening of to departure of Israeli settlers from Gaza, 553; memorial to (Yad Vassem), 550; and plight of Palestinian refugees compared, 1480, 1481; Presidents Commission on Remembering the Holocaust (U.S.), 551; references criticizing Israeli power, 552, 553–554; refugees, admission of to Israel, 41, 1512–1513; remembrance of (Yom HaShoah), 550; second, potential for, 1137; U.S. culture industry built around, 551; Western guilt for failing to prevent, 50
 Holst, Johan Juergen, 554–555, 1272, 1305
 Holst Fund, 555
 Holy Basin, 69, 155, 555–563, 748, 1373, 1386, 1429; Abu Tor Seminar Center, 562; A-Tur (Mount of Olives), 561; Damascus Gate, 559; Hasmonean Tunnel, 126, 388, 497, 505, 559,

- Holy Basin (continued)
 740–741, 949, 1023, 1440, 1635–1636;
 Herodian aqueduct, 562; Herod's Gate, 559,
 826, 1018, 1338; Isaac's Tent, excavations of,
 560; Israeli sovereignty over, 1429; Jaffa Gate, 560; "Jerusalem Envelope," 555–556; Jewish enclaves in, Sharon's plan to implant,
 1225–1226; Jewish settlements in, 1317–1318,
 1373; Kidmat Tziyon/Abu Dis, 561, 1337;
 Makhkame Complex, 559–560; map of, 558;
 The Mufti's Grove, 561; Mughrabi Gate, 557,
 559; national parks, 560, 1336, 1338–1339; Nof
 Tziyon/Jabel Mukkaber, 562; Ohel Yitzhak, 559;
 Old City, preservation of, 560; Ras al-Amud neighborhood, 6, 136, 178, 271, 364, 557, 561, 895, 949, 1223–1227, 1317, 1335, 1337, 1427,
 1429; settlements in, 556, 562, 1317–1318,
 1373, 1386, 1429; settlers' private security guards, 562; sifting sites, 562; Silwan
 "archaeological park," 560–561, 1338, 1386, 1393–1396; Silwan/al-Bustan demolitions, 561;
 sites of conflict in, 557, 559–562; Western Wall Tunnel, 559, 1336, 1341, 1440–1441; zoning laws, application of, 741
- Holy Land, nineteenth-century travelers to, 104–105
- Holy Land Trust, 998
- Holy sites, in Palestine, 563–566; access to, disputes over, 734; under the British Mandate, 1622, 1623;
 Cave of Machpelah/Cave of Patriarchs, Hebron,
 565, 1208; Church of the Holy Sepulcher,
 Jerusalem, 263, 564, 731, 739; Church of the Nativity, Bethlehem, 192, 564–565, 739, 1034, 1037; conduct of ritual and maintenance, ("Status Quo"), 733, 739; al-Haram ash-Sharif (Temple
 Mount), 108–109, 334, 496–498, 563–564, 732,
 1429; al-Ibrahimi Mosque, Hebron, 125, 140,
 242–243, 425, 448, 522, 535, 565, 583, 1441;
 Israeli closures, effects of on pilgrimages,
 564–565; Israeli control over, 1208, 1440; Jacob's
 Well, Nablus, 565–566; Joseph's Tomb, Nablus, 565, 961, 964, 1208; political control, justification for, 563; Rachel's Tomb and Bilal Mosque, Bethlehem, 191, 192, 564, 739; sovereignty over (Taba Talks), 1429
- Holy War Army (Jaysh al-Jihad al-Muqaddas), 78, 566, 575
- Homeland Security Act (U.S.), and U.S. aid to Israel, 1538
- Homot Shalem Association, 566–567, 959, 1373
- Honecker, Erich, 440
- HonestReporting.com, 31–32, 921. See also Media-monitoring organizations
- Hook, Sidney, 51
- The Hope, 1461
- Hope-Simpson Commission (1930), 211, 567, 897, 1126, 1127, 1135, 1372, 1625. See also Passfield
 White Paper (1930)
- Hospitals, 507–508, 510
- Hospitallers, 567
- Hosseinpour, Ardashir, 1435
- House demolitions, 136, 568–570, 1087, 1566;
 during al-Aqsa Intifada, 57; Bedouins and, 173;
 British response to Arab Revolt, 82; as deterrence to terrorism, 568; discriminatory nature of, 569, 1473; East Jerusalem, 1584; emergency decrees for executing, 1008; emotional and financial effects of, 569–570; Forfeiture and Demolition of Property, Defense Emergency Regulation 119, 316; houses belonging to suicide bombers, 659;
 international condemnation of, 615; Israel
 Defense Forces, role of, 648; Israeli Committee
 Against House Demolitions (ICAH), 621, 649,
 684, 998, 1306; Jordan Valley, 794; to make room for green areas, 465; Markovitz Committee (1986), recommendations re., 1536; mass, 571; nonviolent protests against, 998; orders for, haphazard distribution of, 569; punitive, legality of, 699–700, 701; randomization of, 569; reasons for, 62, 219, 568, 648, 1339; retroactive orders, 1536; in Silwan, threat of, 1387; stages of, 568;
 unrecognized villages, 569, 1536; West Bank, 1683
- House of Harrari, 1456
- Housing restrictions for Palestinians, 570–571
- Hovevei Zion (Lovers of Zion), 43, 473, 571–573, 1164, 1275, 1610, 1611, 1663, 1666
- Howard, John, 328
- Howe, Irving, 327, 642
- Hrawi, Ilyas, 868
- Hudson Institute, 37
- Human rights: abuses, documentation of, 526;
 African Charter on Human and People's Rights,
 1242; American Convention on Human Rights, 1242; closed military zones (CMZs) as obstruction to, 286; Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD),
 386, 1242; European Convention on Human Rights, 1242; free movement, international protections for, 1254; International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), 385, 1241, 1254; International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 1254; Israeli violations of, 45, 286; Soviet activists for, 1359;
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR),
 140, 311, 314, 385, 1241, 1254
- Human rights organizations, 274; Adalah, 10, 1091; Addameer (Prisoners Support and Human Rights Association), 10, 1306; Arab Association for Human Rights (HRA), 76, 1280; Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI), 133, 527, 707, 709,
 1346–1347, 1394, 1404; B'Tselem, 11, 12, 217,
 248, 286, 401, 526, 534, 682, 745, 1037, 1306,
 1312, 1318; Human Rights Watch (HRW), 526,
 716, 727, 1162; Israeli Center for Information on Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, 1306;
 Israeli League for Human and Civil Rights, 1349;
 Palestinian Center for Human Rights (PCHR),
 1083, 1306; Palestinian Human Rights
 Information Center, 1345; Palestinian Human Rights Monitoring Group, 1095; Palestinian

- Independent Commission for Citizens' Rights (PICCR), 1098, 1108; Physicians for Human Rights–Israel (PHR–Israel), 508, 727, 1163–1164, 1306; Public Committee Against Torture in Israel (PCATI), 616, 671, 1193; Rabbis for Human Rights (RHR), 681, 998, 1206; Yesh Din, 1346, 1649
- Human Rights Watch (HRW), 526, 716, 727, 1162
- Humphrey, Hubert, 339
- Hunters in a Narrow Street*, 722
- Hurdall, Thomas, 63, 451, 62
- Hurva synagogue, rebuilding of, 770
- al-Husayn, Fauzi Darwish, 1150
- al-Husayn, Mohammed Abdel Rahman Abdel Raouf Arafat al-Qudwa al-Husayn. See Arafat, Yasir
- Husayn, Rashid, 573, 1112, 1113
- Husayn, Saddam, 92, 93, 142, 360, 395, 439, 466, 467, 635, 639, 640, 838, 878, 1046, 1169, 1569
- Husayn, Sharif, 404, 1094
- Husayn-Arafat Agreement (1985), 91–92, 99, 199, 231, 573–574, 785, 1068, 1081, 1230, 1232
- al-Husayni, Abd al-Qadir, 78, 116, 412, 566, 574–575, 577, 1434
- al-Husayni, al-Hajj Amin Mohammad, 80, 445, 575–577, 1127, 1128; alliance with Hitler, 50; All Palestine Government (APG), participation in, 22, 88, 420, 1559; Arab Higher Committee, leadership of, 77, 81, 1129; family ties, 579; incitement of crowd during al-Nabi Musa Demonstrations, 961; Islamic Conference (1931), hosting of, 643; and Jewish attempts to claim permanent possession of the Western Wall, 1622, 1623, 1624; London/St. James Conference, exclusions from, 892, 1629; MacDonald White Paper, rejection of, 898; mufti of Jerusalem, appointment as, 114, 182, 1150, 1196, 1290; partition plan, reaction to, 1131; plot to assassinate, 641; Supreme Muslim Council, leadership of, 1413
- al-Husayni, Faysal, 94, 577–578, 877, 1002, 1046, 1360
- Husayni, Dr. Hatem I., 1076
- al-Husayni, Jamal Tahir, 80, 412, 578, 892
- al-Husayni, Kamil, 1622
- al-Husayni, Musa Kazim, 76, 77, 578–579, 958, 961, 967, 1680
- al-Husayni family, 80, 95, 412, 579, 718, 884, 966, 1126, 1150
- Husayn-McMahon Correspondence, 208, 503, 579–581, 893, 961, 1054, 1133, 1233, 1414, 1467, 1613, 1671
- Husayn-Peres Agreement (1987), 85, 581–582, 785, 789, 1156, 1168
- Hussar, Bruno, 987
- Hussein el-Ghoul family, 1224
- el-Husseini, Hussein, 25
- al-Hut, Shafiq, 582, 1082
- al-Ibrahimi Mosque, 125, 140, 242–243, 425, 448, 522, 535, 565, 583, 1441
- Ichud Leumi. See National Union Party
- Identity. See Palestinian identity
- Identity card(s), 583–588, 1157; and the Barrier, special identity cards for, 587; color, 248, 584; confiscation of, 586; details contained on, 583; ethnicity, identification of, 583, 584; farmers, proof of land ownership, 587; Jerusalem and, 585–586, 738; “late registration,” 586; magnetic, 584; marriage and, 587; and movement between the Occupied Territories, 388, 585; obtaining, process for, 584–585; “permanent residence,” proof of, 587; PNA-issued, 585; purpose, 584; at Rafah Crossing, need for, 1212; “security prevention notation,” 584; unregistered persons, 586–587
- Identity Card Carrying and Displaying Act of 1982, 583
- IDF. See Israel Defense Forces (IDF)
- Ihud (Union Association of Palestine), 217, 588, 902, 1149
- Ikhwan al-Qassam (Qassam Brotherhood), 115, 1129
- Immigration, 589–593, 1671; “absorptive capacity” and, 1124, 1128, 1628; from affluent countries, organization responsible for, 1634; agricultural settlements, placement of immigrants in, 1062; of American Jews to Israel, 330; Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry (1945–1946), 41–42, 213, 1418; and anti-Semitism, escape from, 43, 1139, 1662; of Arab Jews to Israel, implications of, 1576; Article 6, British Mandate, 208–209; Beriha Flight, 829; British limits on, 41, 116, 212–213, 891, 897, 898 (see also MacDonald White Paper); under British Mandate, 1671–1672; from countries of persecution, organization responsible for, 1634; and demography, changes in, 589, 592; early Zionist colonies in Palestine, maps of, 590–591; Ethiopian Jews (Operation Joshua), 951, 1230, 1367; ethnic discrimination and, 1084; Exodus, attempt of to breach British restrictions on, 1513; facilitation of by Irgun Tzeva'i Le'umi, 641; family reunification, right to, 385; illegal (aliya bet), 17, 641; initial absorption of, organization responsible for, 1634; Jewish Colonization Association (ICA), 495, 755–756, 1062, 1121, 1275, 1664; Jewish underground movement in Europe, 829; justification for, 182; al-Nabi Musa demonstrations against (1920), 961, 1467; objectives of, 589; Palestinian resistance to, 212, 589, 1126–1128; of Polish Jews to Palestine, 1673; potential immigrants, dwindling supply of, 321; quotas, 209, 211; recommendations for

- Immigration (continued) reduction in (see Hope-Simpson Commission (1930); Passfield White Paper; Shaw Commission (1930)); Soviet Jews, 28, 34, 53, 143, 221, 222, 378; Truman's support for, 1478; unrestricted, Weizmann's argument for, 1289; Weizmann-Faysal Agreement (1919), 1613; Zionist arguments for, 589; zoning laws and regulations as a way to induce, 1472–1473
- Immigration Ordinance (1920), 209
- Imperial Hotel, 560
- Imperialism, 104, 145
- Inbar, Efraim, 1406–1407
- Independent Free Lebanon, 479
- Independent Palestine list, 162
- Industry, Palestinian. See Economy, Palestinian
- Indyk, Martin S., 16, 28, 36, 279, 282, 593–594, 939, 1425, 1503–1504, 1529
- Infiltration (Palestinian) and retaliation (Israeli), 594–595; as contributing factor to 1967 War, 1573; cross-border from West Bank, 1199; fire-at-will policy, 594; Israeli raids, 594–595; massive retaliation, Ben-Gurion's policy of, 184; Qibya massacre, 594, 1363–1364, 1492. See also Suicide bombings; Targeted assassinations, Israeli policy of
- Infrastructure in the Occupied Territories, 595–606; Barrier as effort to undermine, 169; East Jerusalem, 604; education, 600; energy, sources and supply of, 696–697; Gaza Strip, passage of materials through Rafah Crossing, 1212; health care, 599–600; Hebron District, southern area, 530, 532; Internet, access to, 601; poor conditions of, 348–349, 425, 595; responsibility for provision of, 595; roads, 601–604; solid waste and sewage, 597–598; telephone service, 60–601; U.S. financial support for, 1504, 1524; water, 598–599, 1593, 1600
- Inquisition, Spanish, 44
- Institute for Jerusalem Studies, 607, 752
- Institute for Palestine Studies, 607, 752
- Institute for Talmudic Commentaries, 1457
- Institute for the Study of Oriental Jewish Communities in the Middle East (Ben-Zvi Institute), 186
- Inter-Arab politics. See Arab states, inter-Arab politics
- Interim Agreement, 153, 177, 279, 537, 607–609, 1036, 1049, 1098; Area A, 60–61, 196, 248, 607, 204, 374, 424, 537, 607, 608, 845, 1050, 1099, 1255, 1683; Area B, 204, 374, 537, 607, 845, 1050, 1099, 1683; Area C, 204, 219, 374, 530, 534, 537, 607, 794, 845, 1010, 1050, 1099, 1683; facilitation of, U.S. involvement in, 1274; fuel prices, stipulation of, 595; Gaza Strip, 424, 607; human rights, references to, 1246; Joint Water Committee (JWC), establishment of, 1602–1603; Moscow's support for, 946; Palestinian elections, provision for, 607; Presidential Guard, authorization of, 1178; redeployment of Israel Defense Forces, 607–608, 1442; signing of, 1050; water rights, 1602; West Bank, division of, 607, 1050
- International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), 948, 1426, 1499, 1503
- International Center for Peace in the Middle East, 23
- International Christian Embassy (ICE), 609, 1460–1461
- International Christian Zionist Center (ICZC), 1460
- International Commission of Jurists, 496, 1083
- International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), 670, 728, 1180, 1182, 1183, 1379
- International Court of Justice (ICJ), 1367, 1501–1502; Advisory Opinion of 9 July 2004 re: Barrier, 54, 170, 205, 449, 614, 618–619, 746, 1176, 1368–1369, 1501–1502, 1528; and reparation for Israeli damage to Palestinian agricultural property, 1021
- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), 385, 1241, 1254
- International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 1254
- International Human Rights March of Women, 288
- International law and UN authority, 609–620; administrative detention, 11–12, 615; Barrier as a breach of, 170, 614, 617, 618–619; compensation for lost or damaged property, 1119; Declaration of Principles (DOP) and, 314, 613, 617; and efforts to make Jerusalem the capital of Israel, 556; Fourth Geneva Convention, Israeli violations of, 280, 508, 612, 1179–1180, 1312, 1498, 1502; Israeli annexation of Jerusalem, UN Resolutions challenging, 612; Israeli occupation of Palestinian territories, 613–615; Israeli settlement policy and practices, 614–615; Israeli statehood, legality of, 611; Israeli violations of, 16, 45, 53–54, 59, 79, 280, 386, 499, 508, 612, 615, 682, 1041, 1269, 1499; Occupation, legality of, 716, 1007–1008; Palestinian right of resistance, 615–616; peace in accordance with, 1140; peace process and, 617–618; restrictions on, as violation of, 891; refugees, protection of, 1236, 1238, 1239–1240; settlements, use of State land for the establishment and expansion of, 1401; suicide bombings, international condemnation of, 616–617; UN Resolutions (see United Nations General Assembly Resolutions and United Nations Security Council Resolutions, by number); U.S. use of Security Council vetoes to protect Israel from censure for violations of, 824, 1488, 1495, 1500–1501, 1521, 1527
- International Press Institute (IPI), 64
- International Protection for the Palestinian People program, 1108
- International Solidarity Movement (ISM), 63–64, 169, 451, 620–621, 998
- International Task Force on Palestinian Reform, 382
- International Water Tribunal, 1536–1537
- International Women's Peace Service, 451
- Internet, Palestinian access to, 601

- Interns for Peace, 327
- Interrogation practices, 522, 668, 670–671, 1193, 1378; CIA, of suspected militants, 246; legality of, 700–701; Shin Bet, 1378; torture, Israeli Supreme Court prohibition against, 1193
- Intifada Elite, 160, 621
- Intifada(s): First and Second compared, 57, 126–127, 621–630; and Israeli military court system, effects of, 673–674, 675; primary purpose, 622; word defined, 622. See also al-Aqsa Intifada; First Intifada (1987–early 1990s)
- Ir Amim (City of Nations/City of Peoples), 630, 1224, 1374, 1386, 1389
- Iran, 630–634, 1358; Ahmadinejad, Mahmoud, anti-Semitic rhetoric of, 630–631, 633; “Axis of Evil” designation, 634; breaking of ties with Israel, 632–633; involvement of in Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 1948–1979, 631–632; as an Islamist state, 632–634; Karine-A affair, 633–634; nuclear program, 34, 633, 947–948, 1503; Pahlavi monarchy, collapse of, 631, 632; pro-Palestinian policies, 634; purchase of arms from Israel, 631–632, 633; SAVAK, 631; secret alignments with Israel, 632, 633; terrorism and terrorist organizations, support for, 633, 634; UN sanctions for failure to comply with limitations on nuclear program, 1503; U.S. hostages held by, 1543, 1544; U.S., relations with, 631–632; U.S. sale of weapons to (Iran-Contra affair), 635, 1230; “White Revolution,” 631
- Iran-Iraq War, 439, 633, 635, 1191
- Iraq, 635–640, 1358; anti-Jewish violence in, 636–638; anti-Semitism in, 51, 637; Armistice Agreement (1949), 131; Ba’athist Party in, 78, 88, 117, 141, 142, 635, 638–639; border with Syria, 1414; and Britain, relations with, 636; “Eastern Command,” dissolution of, 638; and Egypt, relations with, 638, 639; expulsion of Palestinians from, 1244; Fatah Revolutionary Council (Black June) in, 398; Hashemite genealogy, 503; immigration of Jews to Israel from, 631; influence of on Palestinian politics, 78; internal crises and Black September, 638; invasion of Kuwait, 93, 101, 125, 222, 253, 466, 638–640, 1072, 1169, 1305, 1502, 1653 (see also Gulf War (1991)); involvement of in Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 636; Israel, relations with, 1530; Jewish exodus from, 637–638; Jewish population in, 635; 1948 War, participation in, 637, 1563; nuclear weapons program, 639; Osirac nuclear reactor, Israeli bombing of (1981), 951, 1229; The Palestine Conflict in the History of Modern Iraq, 1928–1948, 636; and pan-Arab nationalism, rise of, 636; and PLO, 92–93, 101, 466–467, 468, 640, 878, 1305; proposal for transfer of Palestinians to, 1656; and Soviet Union, alliances with, 638; UN Partition Plan, reaction to, 637; war with Iran (see Iran-Iraq War)
- Iraq War, U.S. (2003), 1200; American Jewish support for, 28; Arab support for, attempts to garner, 1260–1261; “coalition of the willing,” 226, 441; separation of Europe’s Middle East policy from U.S. policy, 383
- Ir David. See Silwan
- Irgun Tzeva’i Le’umi, 137, 184, 482, 640–642, 1130, 1444–1445, 1609; Acre citadel prison, storming of, 10, 641; Altalena Affair, 23–25, 642; anthem (“Hayalim Almonim”), 1406; British classification of as a terrorist organization, 641; Deir Yassin, assault on, 175, 316–317, 641–642, 1235, 1445, 1451; dissolution of, 642; emergence of under British Mandate, 1444; evolution and organization of, 641, 1673; facilitation of European immigration to Israel, 641; Haifa, capture of, 1948 War, 1562; ideology of, 641; Jaffa, assault on, 642; Jewish Resistance Movement, participation in, 641, 753, 771; King David Hotel (1946), bombing of, 175, 641, 753, 771, 821–822, 891, 945, 1444; Menahem Begin in, 24–25, 175, 641, 821, 1444; purpose of, 650, 721; recruitment for, 1131
- “Iron Fist” Policy, 100, 615, 642–643, 1207
- “Iron wall,” 175, 179, 183, 459, 517, 720–721, 1465, 1467, 1468, 1629, 1672–1673, 1678. See also Arab State Peace Overtures (1949–Present); Jabotinsky, Vladimir (Ze’ev) Yevgenievitch
- Ir Shalem, 826
- Irving I. Moskowitz Foundation, 949
- Isaac’s Tent, excavations at, 560
- Islamic Conference (1931), 643
- Islamic Conference Organization (ICO), 747
- Islamic Covenant, 232
- Islamic Fundamentalism, 30, 1218. See also Hamas (The Movement of Islamic Resistance); Islamic Jihad Movement; Muslim Brotherhood
- Islamic Jihad Movement, 124, 125, 128, 643–646, 951, 1010, 1184, 1218, 1230, 1411, 1424, 1425
- Islamic law, 643, 1295
- Islamic Resistance Movement. See Hamas (The Movement of Islamic Resistance)
- Islamic Unification Movement, 399
- Islamic University of Gaza (IUG), 1132
- Islamist associations, 276–277
- Israel: Arab-Jewish relations within, deterioration of, 1085; Baker Plan, response to, 143; as a colonist society, 310; containment strategy, 69; cost of living in, 346; Declaration of Independence, 23, 214, 310–311, 386, 611, 705, 753, 856, 1206, 1361, 1478, 1520; disengagement agreement with Syria (1974), 1070; domestic arms industry in, 1531; electoral system, 366, 684–685; establishment of, 50–52; ethnic discrimination in, 677–678, 1084–1087; as an ethnocracy, 693, 1084–1089; founding fathers of, 650; Four-Point Plan (1989), 143; Hebrew map of, 1471; ideology

Israel (continued)

- and national consensus, 679, 680–681; institutionalized exclusionary system (Jew vs. non-Jew distinction), 677, 678; land for peace, refusal to accept, 85, 86, 574, 1489; land nationalization, process of, 705; legal justification for founding of (see Balfour Declaration (1917)); mandatory military service, 646; military policy, Moshe Dayan as architect of, 306; National Master Plan (TAMA 35), 1177; “no partner” trope, 160; official map, creation of, 107; political cohesion, maintaining, 69; post-Oslo narrative, role of Camp David Summit in, 159–160; recognition of by Arab regimes, 16, 84; replacement of Arab place-names by Jewish ones, 106, 1471, 1553; return of Jews to as divine redemption, 831, 1322, 1341; right to exist, recognition of, 46, 85, 101, 380; self-defense, right to, 70; summary of official policy toward the Palestinians (three no’s), 1071, 1578, 1636; urbanization program, 173; wine industry, founding of, 1275, 1663
- Israel Airports Authority (IAA), 1210, 1211
- Israel Antiquities Authority (IAA), 1386, 1391
- Israel Campus Beat*, 32–33
- Israel Defense Forces (IDF), 646–648, 1642; Alexandroni Brigade, 24, 1363, 1564; Altalena Affair, 23–25, 642; Battle of Jenin, (2002), 725–729, 1175, 1368; Border Guard service, 647; chief of operations, 1609; City of David National Park, visits to, 1392; Corporal Gilad Shalit, capture of, 426, 716, 1039, 1041, 1186, 1213, 1214; counterterrorism tactics, 648; destruction of Palestinian villages/neighborhoods by, 1476, 1480; Entebbe rescue operation, 372, 951; Field of Thorns Plan, 400–402; “focused foiling” strategy, 648; founding of, 646; General Staff, 647; general strike in Nazareth, suppression of, 850; Golani Brigade, 41, 1363, 1476; heavy-handed tactics, international condemnation of, 1368; house demolitions by, 648; international law, violations of, 648; Jericho, capture of in 1967 War, 1570; medical personnel, targeting of, 728, 1037; military officers “parachuting” into politics, 652; military training accidents, 653–654; Nahal, 21, 795, 820, 966, 1323; in the Occupied Territories, 647–648; peace movements, emergence of, 654; rampage, Bayt Sahur, 1435; redeployment of (1999), 153; regular service, 646–647; removal of Jewish settlers from the Sinai, 176, 1437; Sabra and Shatila Massacre, role of, 1278; soldiers’ refusal to serve in the Occupied Territories, 290, 292–293, 295, 1249, 1592; taking of land, legal authorization for, 1402–1403; targeted assassinations, 648; truce with Hamas, deliberate breaking of, 1028, 1032, 1042; Tzanhanim Company, 1492; Unit 101, 1199, 1363, 1491–1492; wars, participation in, 647; weapons, 647
- Israel-Egypt Peace Treaty (1978). See Camp David Accords
- Israeli Air Force (IAF), 1164, 1570
- Israeli and Palestinian Physicians for Human Rights, 681, 727
- Israeli Antiquities Authority, 110, 364
- Israeli Arabs. See Palestinian citizens of Israel
- Israeli Atomic Energy Commission, 1001. See also Nuclear program, Israel
- Israeli Black Panther Movement, 959
- Israeli Center for Information on Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, 1306
- Israeli citizenship: automatic right to for Jewish immigrants, 330, 1239; “citizen,” defined, 1576; denial of to Palestinians living in the Occupied Territories, 387, 1008; eligibility of Palestinian Arabs for, 1239; loyalty oath, as a requirement for, 1087; permanent resident status vs., 1016; resident aliens, 1016
- Israeli Committee Against House Demolitions (ICHAD), 621, 649, 684, 998, 1306
- Israeli Committee Against Torture, 681
- Israeli Council on Israeli-Palestinian Peace (ICIPP), 138, 649, 772, 1153, 1291
- Israeli democracy. See Israeli regime and the question of democracy
- Israeli Department of Antiquities, 740
- Israel Exploration Society, 108
- Israeli flag, 1085
- Israeli Government Press Office, 629
- Israeli Independence Day, 1087
- Israeli League Against Religious Coercion, 1349
- Israeli League for Human and Civil Rights, 1349
- Israeli Legal Center for Freedom of Movement, 1213
- Israeli militarism, 649–663; arms, procurement of, 1558, 1566; al-Aqsa Intifada, 659–661; civil society and the militaristic-religious society, 655–657, 662–663; civil war, fears of, 657; compulsory military service, 646, 651, 1558; defined, 650–651; draft, evasion of, 994; enlistment, declines in, 656; external factors influencing, 654; First Intifada, 653–654; Gaza War, 661–663; history and evolution of, 649–651; IDF, changes in, 654–655; Israel as a nation-in-arms, 651–652; main military organizations, prestate period, 650; mobilization, 1948 War, 1558; opposition to (New Profile), 288, 293, 294, 994–995, 1249; party-parliamentary crisis and, 654; and praetorianism compared, 652–653; preemptive attacks, need for, 20, 611–612; prestate period, 649–651; Rabin, assassination of, 657–659, 764; rituals of mourning and bereavement, 655–656; second Lebanon War, 661; security issues, influence of IDF opinion on, 652; “us vs. them” mentality, 658; weakening of, 653. See also Israel Defense Force (IDF)
- Israeli military court system in the Occupied Territories, 663–677; activities punishable by, 663–664; administrative detention, use of, 11, 664; age of “criminal responsibility,” 670; appeals, 665; al-Aqsa Intifada, effects of, 675;

- arrests and interrogation, 669–670; confession as primary evidence, 665–666, 672; conviction on the basis of a third-party confession, 668; courts established in 1967, 667–668; defined, 663; extension-of-detention hearings, 670; First Intifada, effects of, 673–673; history and evolution of, 666–667; international attention to, 668–669; interrogation methods, 668, 670–671, 700–701; Israel’s unilateral disengagement from Gaza, effects of, 675; Landau Commission’s investigation of, 669, 700, 848–850; laws enforced through, 664; lawyers for Palestinians, 673–674, 675; legal process, 671–672; maximum sentences, 665, 670; Oslo Accords, effects of, 674–675; participants, categories of, 664–665; plea bargaining, 672; presumption of guilt, 664, 672; prosecutions by, 664; secret evidence, 672; women and girls, arrests of, 671
- Israeli Military Orders (MOs), 664
- Israeli Ministry of Religious Affairs, 740
- Israeli national anthem: official, (“Hatikva”), 1085, 1624; unofficial (“Yerushalayim shel Zahav”), 1377
- Israeli national institutions, 677–678, 753–754, 851, 1089, 1402, 1471, 1675
- Israeli Nationality Law (1952), 1176
- Israeli Occupation Authorities, 219
- Israeli-Palestinian Agreement on Movement and Access (AMA), 809, 811, 1211–1212, 1214, 1260
- Israeli-Palestinian Center for Research and Information (IPCRI), 679, 1397
- Israeli-Palestinian Peace Coalition, development of, 3–4. See also Geneva Accord (2003)
- Israeli-Palestinians. See Palestinian citizens of Israel
- Israeli peace movement, 655, 679–684, 1046, 1645; anti-Occupation movement as, 683–684; and Barak’s “Generous Offer,” Palestinian rejection of, 683; Brit Shalom, 216–217, 218; Coalition of Women for Peace, 287–288, 684, 998; conscientious objectors, 291–294; Courage to Refuse (Ometz Le’sarev), 290, 293, 294, 295, 684, 997; Declaration of Principles (DOP), impact of, 681–682; Gush Shalom (the Peace Bloc), 137, 139, 472, 682, 683, 684, 928, 998, 1155; Israeli repression, warnings about, 683; Lebanon War, and transformation of, 680–681, 1649; modus operandi, 680–681; origins of, 679; pacifism, Israeli definition of, 680; Palestinian and Israeli activists compared, 682–684; Parents’ Circle (Bereaved Families’ Forum), 1134–1135; Peace Now, 68–69, 292, 293, 470, 520, 680, 681, 682, 683, 790, 826, 844, 1025, 1151–1152, 1268; protest groups, impact of, 681–682; Shahar, 1350–1351; Ta’ayush, 534, 684, 998, 1427; Talk Peace Make Peace, 1432; U.S. media coverage, lack of, 928; Women in Black, 288, 654, 683, 684, 928, 997, 1627; Women in Green, 470, 1627–1628; Yesh G’vul (There Is a Limit), 64, 292, 654, 680, 681, 683, 997, 1649, 1592
- Israeli poetry and poets: Bialik, Hayyim Nachman, 193–194, 1397; Stern, Avraham “Yair,” 1405–1406
- Israeli political parties and settlements, 684–691; coalition governments and settlements from 1967–2006, 685–688; Israeli electoral system, 684–685; “pivotal party,” role of, 689–690; settler movement, influence of on election outcomes, 688–689, 690. See also Political parties, Israeli
- Israeli regime and the question of democracy, 691–696; democracy, defined, 691–692; ethnicity as the basis for sovereignty and self-determination, 693–694; individual personal rights vs. collective social rights, 691–692; Judaization and colonialism as obstacles, 691, 692–693; liberalization, movement toward, 695; religious freedom, absence of, 694–695
- Israeli Regional District Coordination Offices (DCOs), 388–389
- Israeli Supreme Court and the Occupation, 696–703; administrative detention, legality of, 700; Barrier, legality of, 205, 698, 702; Beit Sourik ruling, 702; challenges to preferential treatment of Jews, 1675; challenges to seizure of private land near Nablus, 1009; Court’s function, general assessment of, 703; deportations, legality of, 699; and the disengagement from Gaza, 703; house demolitions, legality of, 699–700, 701; international law, application of, 696–697; interrogation practices, 700–701, 1193; intervention of into Barrier route, 164–165, 170; Israeli settlements in Occupied Territories, legality of, 698; Jewish prayers at al-Haram ash-Sharif, 497; lease restrictions, legality of, 709–710; land laws, petitions re., 708; land seizures, sanctioning of, 1313; “light killing,” 526; local law, respect for, 697; mass expulsions, legality of, 533; military operations, legality of, 696, 701–702; obligation of soldiers to disobey manifestly illegal orders, 202; overview, 696–697; PCATI v. State of Israel, 671; Qa’adam v. Israel Land Administration, 708–709; security measures, 698–700; State Land method of acquiring property, sanctioning of, 1401; torture, prohibition against, 1193; “Who is a Jew?” matter, 848
- Israeli Water Authority, 1594
- Israel-Jordan peace agreement (1994), 704, 786, 1208, 1529, 1530
- Israel Lands Administration (ILA), 134, 704–713, 1470, 1553; background, 705; confiscation of Palestinian property, creation and purpose of, 704–705, 767, 1470; documents “legalizing,” 706; in East Jerusalem, reclamation of Jewish lands in, 1373, 1386; Jaffa and, case study of,

- Israel Lands Administration (ILA) (continued)
 710; Jerusalem and, 711–712; Klugman Report (1993), 825–827, 1339, 1388, 1389, 1555; Knesset intervention, 710; land policy, legal basis for, 705, 1224; land swap, 709–710; legal challenge to (Qa'adam v. the Israel Lands Administration), 708–709; operation of, 705–707; privatization and, 707–708, 1386; and West Bank settlements, incentives related to, 711, 1314. See also Custodian of Absentee Property
- Israel Lands Administration Law (1960), 677, 705–706
- Israel Lands Council, 706
- Israel Lands Law (1960), 677, 704, 705, 767, 851, 1471
- Israel lobby. See American Jewish organizations
- Israel Museum, founding of, 829
- Israel Nature and Parks Authority (INPA), 1391, 1393
- Israel on Campus: A Source-book for Activists*, 32
- Israel on Campus Coalition (ICC), 32, 33, 36
- Israel Policy Forum (IPF), 30
- The Israel Project (TIP), 31–32
- Israel's Border Wars*, 421, 1491
- Israel's search for water, 1950–1965m 1419, 1420, 1518–1519. See also UN Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO)
- Israel's unilateral disengagement from Gaza (2005), 226, 321–322, 418, 713–718, 1011, 1202, 1027; borders, Israeli control over, 715; economic impact of, 351, 427–428; effects of on Israeli military court system, 675; Eretz Crossing, closure of, 377–378; Gaza Strip after, 426–427; Gaza Strip prior to, 419, 425–426; Greater Land of Israel Movement and, 462; influence of on Hamas, 234; international opinion re., 411; Israeli-Gaza border, security and, 205, 361; and Israeli responsibility for Palestinians within Gaza, 716; Israel Supreme Court rulings related to, 703; land issues, 846–847; opposition to, 1360, 1438, 1628, 1650; portrayal of as a major step toward peace, 714; protests against, 805; settlements and, 471, 1328–1329, 1332–1333; U.S. endorsement of, 425–426, 714; and the West Bank, Israel's desire to maintain hold on, 714–715
- Israel's War of Independence. See War, 1948
- Israel-Syria water disputes (1950–1965), 1419, 1420, 1518–1520. See also Syria; United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO)
- Israel without Zionism*, 138
- Issa, Abdel Rahman, 398
- Istiqial Party, 77, 718, 971, 1128, 1197
- Itzkovits, Yaniv, 290
- Izz-al-Din al-Qassam Brigades, 83, 115, 645, 718, 962, 1197–1198
- Ja'abari, Muhammad Ali, 525
- Jabel Mukkaber, 562
- Jabotinsky, Vladimir (Ze'ev) Yevgenievitch, 719–722, 803, 985; Aliya Bet, forming of, 188; Betar, founding of, 188, 720; challenges to status quo re: Western Wall, 1624; "Conversation with Zangwill," 1654; "iron wall," 163, 175, 179, 183, 459, 517, 720–721, 1465, 1467, 1468, 1629, 1672–1673, 1678; Jewish claims to statehood, ethical basis for, 722; Jewish enlistment in British Army, support for, 890; Jewish Legion, proposal for, 1682; Jewish majority, support for, 1612; New Zionist Organization, 641, 721–722, 995; Revisionist ideology, 413, 459, 539, 720, 887, 1444, 1467, 1629, 1650, 1672–1673; Stern Gang, involvement in, 1406; World Union of Zionist Revisionists (WUZR), 719–720, 1612, 1629–1630
- Jabra, Jabra Ibrahim, 722–723, 1112
- Jackson-Vanick Amendment, 28, 406, 1399
- Jacobson, Eddie, 1477, 1478
- Jacob's Well, Nablus, 565–566
- Jadid, Salah, 1420
- Jaffa, 723–725; Christian significance of, 723; Disturbances (1921), 333; fall of (1948), 724–725, 1562; history and evolution of, 723–724; and the Israel Lands Administration (ILA), case study, 710; location of, 723; Palestinian unrest in (1921), 114, 115, 333, 506–507, 1126 (see also Haycraft Commission (1921)); in UN General Assembly Resolution 181, 724; WZO office in, 1632
- Jaffee Center for Strategic Studies, 1473
- Jaffa Gate, 560
- Jagland, Thorbjorn, 940
- Jankelowitz, Michael, 330
- Jarring, Gunnar, 198, 1273, 1511
- Jarring mission, 1511–1512, 1590–1591
- Jaysh al-Inqadh (Arab Rescue Army), 1131. See also Arab Liberation Army (ALA)
- JDL. See Jewish Defense League (JDL)
- Jenin: Battle of (2002), 725–729, 1175–1176, 1368; capture of, 1948 War, 1564
- Jericho, 729–731; archaeological excavations of, 729, 730; history and evolution of, 729–730; landfill, 374; location, 729; Oasis Casino, 730; Palestinian enclave in, 151, 730; restricted access to, 151, 792; tomb of Nabi Musa (Moses), 730
- Jerusalem, 731–750; Abu Dis, 5–6, 169, 561, 895, 949, 1317, 1337, 1429; acquisition and transfer of Palestinian property to Jews in, 711–712; as administrative capital during British Mandate, 737; Barak's Generous Offer, 155, 156, 158; Barrier and, 166, 168–169, 738, 743–745; borders, changes to, 452, 1008; Bukharan Community Committee, 1224; as capital of Israel, 171, 452, 556, 746; Center of Life Policy (Israel), 244–245, 390, 465, 738, 1473; Christian Quarter, 738, 740; Church of the Holy Sepulcher, 263, 564, 731, 739; city elections, residency status and right to vote in, 367; City of David Foundation, 271, 364; Clinton Parameters, 284; closures, 736, 737–738; as co-capital of Israel and Palestine, 1526; as corpus separatum (separate body), 452,

- 453, 734, 744, 843, 1507, 1514; cutting off of from rest of the West Bank, 1009; Dayan Plan for, 309; demography, politics of, 735–738; division of, 431, 452, 735, 1386; family reunification and, 738, 1008; final status, Israeli proposal for, 158; foreign embassies in, 746; green areas in, 741–742; history and evolution of, 731–733; Holy Basin, 555–563, 1373, 1386; holy sites in, 739, 1429; housing restrictions, 742; identity cards, 585–586; as an ideological symbol for Jews worldwide, 452; infrastructure, discrepancies between Jews and Palestinians, 604; and the international community, 745–747; internationalization of, 438, 452, 1235, 1493, 1507, 1567, 1569; Israeli annexation of, UN Resolutions challenging, 612; Israeli capture of, 1967 War, 734–735; Israeli efforts to limit Palestinian population of, 390; Israeli government development plan for, 556–557; Israeli military control, 731; Jewish Quarter, 738, 740–741, 770–771; Judaization of, 232, 555, 711, 751, 829, 949, 1472; Kollek, Teddy (Theodor), 185, 828–830, 1023, 1217, 1377, 1555; maps illustrating transformation of since 1948, 453–455, 456; mismanagement of, 829–830; modern developments, 733–738; under the Morrison-Grady Plan, 945; movement of U.S. embassy to, 1638; municipal boundaries, 455; municipal services, discrimination in, 742–743; Muslim Quarter, 560, 738, 739–740, 826, 1465; Musrara neighborhood, 958–960, 1337; Nuseibeh family, 1004–1005; Olmert, Ehud, 738, 1022, 1023; original location, excavations to uncover, 364; Palestinian Christians in, 737; Palestinian neighborhoods in, 6, 69, 136–137, 452, 465, 737; partitioning of, 22, 454; and the peace process, 747–749; period of construction, 732–733; “permanent resident” status, obtaining, 586; permits, 742; physical changes, 741–743; population, changes in, 737; Reagan Plan and, 1230; religious communities in, 738, 739–741; residents, according to population groups, 738; restriction of Palestinian access to, 390; rule by Islam, 732; secret Israeli plan to thwart the division of, 556; settlement policies, 737–738; significance of to Muslims, 732–733, 747; sovereignty over, 155, 156; stability of, Ir Amim’s activities to promote, 630; status of, negotiations concerning, 125; as symbolic core of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 731; Taba Talks (2001), 1427, 1429; tourist economy in, 741; UNTSO headquarters in, 1515; U.S. policy toward, 746; zoning and housing policies, 741–742, 829, 1473. See also East Jerusalem; Greater Jerusalem; Metropolitan Jerusalem Plan (1995); Old City, Jerusalem; West Jerusalem
- Jerusalem Brigades, 645
- Jerusalem Burial Society, land ownership claims by, 1225
- Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs, 30
- Jerusalem Center for Social and Economic Rights (JC SER), 750–751
- Jerusalem Center for Women, 751
- Jerusalem Development Authority (JDA), 556–557
- Jerusalem Embassy Relocation Act of 1995 (U.S.), 1638
- “Jerusalem Envelope,” 555–556
- Jerusalem Forum (Jerusalemites), 751
- Jerusalem Forum (The Amuta for Settling Jerusalem), 178, 751, 1459–1460
- Jerusalem Fund for Education and Community Development, 1359
- Jerusalem Is Ours (Yerushalayim Shelanu), 751
- Jerusalem Link, 751
- Jerusalem Media and Communication Center (JMCC), 752, 1165
- Jerusalem Municipality (JM), 1386
- Jerusalem Prayer Team (JPT), 752
- Jerusalem Quarterly File*, 752
- Jerusalem Reclamation Project, 135–136, 753, 949. See also Ateret Cohanim (Crown of the Priests)
- Jerusalem Teachers’ College, 1284
- Jerusalem Temple Foundation, 1460
- Jesus Is Coming*, 255
- Jewish Agency for Israel, 753–755, 1088, 1149; American Jewish support for, 40; Arab Affairs Department, 1475; archaeology program, 106; and British withdrawal from Palestine, preparations for, 1558–1559; campaign of violence against British rule, 213; Chaim Weizmann, involvement in, 1634; and comparable Arab Agency, 75, 211; delegation to Iraq (1937), 636; establishment of, 208, 753, 1672; Executive, 179, 182, 1672; and formation of Israel’s provisional legislature, 753; founding of, 1633–1634; functions of, 753, 754, 1634; Hagana, establishment of, 753; immigration of Soviet Jews to Israel, assistance with, 1399; and Israel Lands Administration, collaboration with, 704, 172–173, 336; “Jerusalem program,” 329; and the Jewish National Fund, collaboration with, 1119; land turned over to, 1177; Lowdermilk essay, “Land of Promise,” 1628–1629; Morrison-Grady Plan, opposition to, 892, 945; as the nucleus for a burgeoning Jewish society, 1124; Political Department, 1361, 1673; status as a “national institution,” 677, 678, 753–754; United Resistance Movement, 753; UN General Assembly Resolution 181, initial acceptance of, 610; U.S. section, 1385; water utilization, studies on, 1601; and withholding of services from non-Jewish citizens, 754
- Jewish Auxiliary Police, 482
- Jewish Colonial Trust (JCT), 43, 755, 1631, 1633, 1664

- Jewish Colonization Association (ICA), 495, 755–756, 1062, 1121, 1275, 1664
- Jewish community, pre-1948 Palestine, 1251
- Jewish Council of Public Affairs (JCPA), 30, 32, 34–35
- Jewish Defense League (JDL), 756–757, 763, 803, 804, 1443
- Jewish Enlightenment (Haskalah), 48
- Jewish Fundamentalism, 40–41, 135, 469, 550–551, 650, 757–765, 1440, 1676; attitudes toward Palestinians, 762–763; deeply-held beliefs, 758–760; emergence of, 760–761; Evan Rosh Co., 383–384; history and evolution of, pre-Israel state, 757–758; history of in Israel, 761–762; ideology and theology in contemporary Israel, 758–760; 1967 War and growth of, 761; opposition to Camp David Accords and Israel's unilateral disengagement from Gaza, 759; origins of, 942; radicalization and increased militancy of, 256, 763–764; setbacks, 764. See also ELAD (To the City of David); Greater Land of Israel Movement; Gush Emunim (Bloc of the Faithful); Third Temple Movement
- The Jewish Home, 986, 1438
- Jewish Institute for National Security Affairs, 37, 243
- Jewish Israeli Communist Party. See Maki Party
- Jewish Labor Bund, 44, 48–49, 1662
- Jewish Labor Committee (JLC), 37
- Jewish Legion, 186, 719, 765–766, 1682
- Jewish lobby. See American Jewish organizations
- Jewish majority: challenge of maintaining, 319–321, 589, 1473, 1658, 1673; immigration as means to, 331, 589, 592, 1399–1400; need for, 319; quest for, 319–321; strategies to secure, 322; transfer and displacement as means to, 1469
- Jewish National Fund (JNF), 43, 677–678, 766–769; abandoned property, purchase of, 1110; absentee lands, purchase of, 297, 767; and American Jewish organizations, support for, 33; “Blueprint Negev,” 769; Caravan for Democracy, 33; Development Authority, 326; establishment of, 43, 766, 1233, 1631, 1633, 1664; fund-raising tools, 766; Himnuta subsidiary, 768, 826, 1388; illegal transfer of properties by (Klugman Report), 825–827, 1339, 1388, 1389, 1555; land acquisition in Galilee and the Negev, 768–769, 850, 1471; land belonging to, 209, 704, 766–767, 1470; land privatization and, 708, 754; land purchased by, 79, 1118; 1948 War, and land turned over to, 1177; parks, funding for, 1338; property acquisition in Silwan, 1388; purpose of, 766; purchase of land by, 420, 766–767, 1233; regional planning commissions, representation on, 1089; role of in the Occupied Territories, 768; Settlement Department, 1607; State Land owned by, 1340; Tel Aviv, establishment of, 766; Transfer Committee (1948) and, 1475; transfer of Baron de Rothschild's land to, 1062
- Jewish National Fund Law (2007), 710
- Jewish nationalism, 1149; archaeology and, 107–108, 109; Jewish Defense League (JDL), 756–757, 803; origins of, 43, 50; Zionism as expression of, 50, 179, 1465, 1661, 1662
- Jewish Palestine Exploration Society (JPES), 106
- Jewish Peace Lobby, 327
- “Jewish people,” legal concept of, 1234
- Jewish People Policy Planning Institute, 769–770
- “Jewish problem,” 48
- Jewish Quarter Development Company (JQDC), 135, 770–771
- Jewish Quarter Renovation Company, 1341
- Jewish Resistance Movement (JRM), 184, 482, 641, 771, 891
- Jewish Self-Defense Association, 901
- Jewish Settlement Police, 482
- Jewish theocracy, calls for, 799, 803
- Jewish Territorial Organization (JTO), 1632, 1654
- Jewish Underground (1980s), 763, 881. See also Terror Against Terror
- Jewish Voice for Peace, 450
- Jews Against the Occupation, 450
- Jews for Jesus, 1461
- Jibril, Ahmad, 771–772, 1167, 1170, 1586, 1589, 1653
- Jihad*, 486, 644
- al-Jihad al-Muqaddes (the Holy Struggle) volunteer force, 1131
- Jiryis, Sabri, 772–773
- Jisr al-Basha, 98
- Johnson, Lyndon Baines, 339, 773–774, 1543; Johnson Plan, rejection of, 773; openly pro-Israel stance, 773, 1579; sale of arms to Israel, 773; strategic asset idea, advocacy for, 773, 1406
- Johnson, Joseph, 815
- Johnson Plan, 773, 815, 816
- Johnston, Eric, 774
- Johnston Plan (1956), 337, 774–778, 1520, 1601–1602
- Joint Distribution Committee (JDC), 30
- Joint Israeli-Palestinian Declaration (2001), 778
- Joint Political-Military Group (JPMG), 1408
- Joint Security Assistance Planning Group (JSAP), 1408
- Joint Water Committee (JWC), 1602–1603
- Jordan, 778–788, 1358; alliance with Egypt (1967), 1574; Armistice Agreement (1949), 130–131, 1494, 1569; border with Israel, 1024; civil war in, 121, 198, 477, 632, 864, 1167 (see also Black September); claim to West Bank, relinquishment of, 90, 789; defeat of, 1967 War, 1070; East Ghor Canal, construction of, 1519, 1602 (see also National Water Carrier project); and Egypt, isolation of following Camp David Accords, 784–785; Enemy Property Law, 1374; escalation of tensions with Palestinians, 783–784; expulsion of PLO from, 97, 121, 128, 394, 864, 876, 1067; Fatah in, 393–394, 1287, 1588; First Intifada and, 574; Gulf War and, 785–787; Hashemite genealogy, 503; Hashemite Kingdom,

- establishment of, 88; Husayn-Arafat Agreement (1985), 91–92, 99, 100, 573–574, 785, 789, 1068, 1081, 1230, 1232; Husayn-Peres Agreement (1987), 85, 581–582, 785, 789, 1156; Israel-Jordan peace agreement (1994), 704, 786, 1208, 1529, 1530; Jerusalem holy sites, protection of, 86, 108–109, 747, 789; al-Karama, battle at, 96, 198, 393, 807, 1586–1587; King Abdullah I, 88–89, 317, 337, 778–780, 788, 1131, 1418, 1559, 1563; King Abdullah II, 787, 1362; King Husayn, 89–90, 100, 121, 128, 198, 199, 506, 573, 581, 782–785, 1065, 1205, 1208, 1529, 1587, 1635; land sales to Jews, criminality of, 135; 1948 War, role in, 780–781, 1563, 1565; 1967 War, consequences of, 782–783, 1570; and Palestinian acceptance of UN General Assembly Resolution 181, encouragement of, 1188; Palestinian cause as issue of national concern, 1191, 1487; Palestinian guerrilla operations in, 120, 198–200, 393, 1167, 1653; Palestinian-Jordan confederation, 788, 789, 1418; Palestinian refugees in, 366, 787, 1236, 1244; partition plan, secret negotiations with Jewish Agency re., 1559–1560; peace treaty with Israel (1994), 93, 1529; PLO in, 89–90, 96, 782–783, 788–789, 863, 875, 1066–1067; Qalqilya police station, Israeli attack on (1956), 1364, 1492; realignment after Camp David Accords, 784–785; and right to speak for Palestinian people, 16; Rogers Plan (1969), acceptance of, 1274; Shawwa passports, 1372; Syrian intervention in, 199; al-Tal, Wasfi, assassination of, 200, 201, 783, 1285; territorial ambitions thwarted, 779–780; tourists coming from into Israel, special considerations for, 1529; UN Security Council Resolution 242, acceptance of, 783; U.S. support for, 199, 1521, 1529; water rights, dispute with Israel over, 1529; West Bank, annexation of, 781–782, 1469, 1529, 1568, 1569, 1614–1615
- Jordanian Arab Legion, 1563
- Jordanian Communist Party (JCP), 975, 1078, 1109
- Jordanian Custodian of Enemy Properties (CEP), 1224
- Jordanian Lawyers' Union (JLU), 673
- Jordanian option, 85, 423, 788–790, 1468
- Jordanian-Palestinian Agreement (1985). See Husayn-Arafat Agreement
- Jordan Rift Valley, 21, 147, 154, 790–797, 1208; Barrier, effects of, 794–795; defined, 790, 791; emergency locations in, Israeli demand for (Taba Talks), 1429; house demolitions, 793–794; Israeli policies re., 792–793; Jewish settlements in, 790, 795–796, 1008, 1319, 1322; Maskiyot settlement, 795–796, 1319; outposts, 790, 795; Palestinian enclaves in, 151, 792; proposed Israeli annexation of, 309; restriction of movement within, 792, 793, 794; Sharon's plan to annex, 1369; state land, designation of, 793
- Jordan River: East Ghor Canal, construction of, 1519, 1602; environmental degradation of, 373; as Israel's eastern border, 21; Israel's secret water diversion project, 337–338, 776–777, 1520; Johnston Plan (1956), 337, 774–778, 1520, 1601–1602; as water supply for West Bank, 1597
- Joseph's Tomb, Nablus, 565, 961, 964
- Josephthal, George, 474
- Journalists: administrative detention for, 916–917; Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ), 63, 629, 918, 929; coverage of the al-Aqsa Intifada, 64–66, 629, 918; deaths of, 918, 1035; identification of with Israel, 921; living in the Occupied Territories, lack of, 921–922; press credentials, denial of, 629, 918; Siniora, Hanna, 1396–1397, 1436; U.S., living in Israel, 921
- Judah L. Magnes Museum, 902
- Judaization, 457, 461, 1466, 1675; Bedouin and, 172–173; East Jerusalem, 178, 363, 370, 1223, 1225–1226, 1335, 1472, 1555–1556, 1573; Galilee, 542, 828, 850, 978, 1087, 1089, 1471, 1535; Jerusalem, 232, 555, 711, 751, 829, 949, 1472; Jewish settlement movement and, 1330; as an obstacle to democracy, 691, 692–693; of Palestine in general, 172–173, 310; transfer and displacement policies to encourage, 1471. See also Greater Land of Israel Movement
- Judea, 797, 1288, 1322, 1584. See also West Bank
- Judenhass (Jew-hatred), 42
- Judeo-centrism, 49
- “Judeo-Nazis,” coining of the term, 880
- Jumjum, Muhammad, 1484
- June War. See War, 1967
- Justice: absolute vs. relative, 1140; peace in accordance with, 1140
- “Just war,” theory of, 1450
- Juul, Mona, 555
- Kabbalah, 1280
- Kach (Only Thus), 461, 497, 530, 756, 763, 799–800, 803, 805, 822, 1088, 1353, 1443, 1453, 1454, 1682
- Kadima Party, 295, 446, 660, 685, 689, 800, 885, 1026, 1369, 1379, 1641, 1651
- Kafir Qasim massacre, 202, 800–802
- Kahalani, Avigdor, 950
- Kahan, Yitzhak, 802, 1279, 1366
- Kahan Commission Report (1983), 802–803, 1278, 1366, 1368
- Kahane, Binyamin Ze'ev, 756, 763, 799, 803, 805, 1453, 1682
- Kahane, Rabbi Meir David, 448, 461, 497, 525, 756, 763, 799, 803–805, 1088, 1443, 1453, 1682. See also Kach (Only Thus)
- Kahane, Rabbi Nahman, 1458
- Kahane Chai (Kahane Lives), 756, 763, 799, 803, 805–806, 1353, 1449, 1453, 1482

- Kahanof, Jacqueline, 520
 Kalwariski-Margolis, Hayim, 1149–1150
 Kanafani, Ghassan Fayiz, 201, 806, 1166
 Kaplan, Eliezer, 1476
 Karadi, Moshe, 1224
 al-Karama, 96, 198, 393, 807, 1586–1587
Karine-A affair, 633–634
Al-Karmel Journal, 807–808 al-Karmi, ‘Abd-al-Karim, 808, 1112, 1484
 Karmi, Raed, 74
al-Karmil, 970
 Karni Crossing, 422, 429, 715, 808–813; acts of corruption related to, 811; “back-to-back” method of moving goods through, 810; closures of, 808, 809, 812; daily operations, 809–810, 812; management of, 808; Olmert’s offer of improvements in, 1264; passage of goods through, 808, 809–810, 811, 908, 1214; security checks, problems created by, 810–811; smuggling of arms through, allegations of, 812
 Karp, Yehudit, 1344
 Karp Commission (1981), 762, 813–814, 1343, 1344–1345
 Karsh, Efraim, 992
 Kashua, Said, 521
 Kata’ib al-Fida’ al-‘Arabi (Battalions of Arab Sacrifice), 117, 475
 Katsav, Moshe, 855, 888
 Kattowice Conference, 572
 Katz, Shmuel, 722
 Katz, Tedd, 993
 Kautsky, Karl, 48
 al-Kaylani, Muhammed Rasul, 1653
 Kedmat Zion settlement, 6
 Keinan, Amos, 679
 Kennedy, John F., 814–817, 1543, 1579; assassination of, 773, 814; Israel as a strategic asset, concept of, 1406; Israel’s nuclear program, concerns about, 815–816, 824; Johnson Plan (Palestine Refugee Initiative), 815, 816; Limited Nuclear Test Ban Treaty (1963), 816; Palestinian refugee issue, efforts to address, 815
 Kenyon, Kathleen, 109
 Kerem Shalom Crossing, 1212, 1213
 Keren HaYesod (United Israel Appeal), 1632, 1633, 1634, 1635
 Keren Kayemeth LeIsrael (Jewish National Fund) Law (1953), 677
 Keret, Etgar, 521
 Kever Rahel Fund, 192
 Kfar Darom settlement, 1328
 Kfar Etzion settlement, 1233, 1328
 Kfar Shiloah, 1387
 Khaddam, ‘Abd al-Halim, 1424
 Khalaf, Karim, 525, 972, 1079, 1443
 Khalaf, Salah, 97, 146, 200, 233, 393, 440, 493, 640, 817–818, 832, 1064, 1534
 Khalid, Layla, 818
 al-Khalidi, Husayn, 892, 1232
 Khalidi, Walid, 990
 al-Khalidi family, 579, 818–819
 Khalil, Samiha, 367
 Khalil Sakakini Cultural Centre Foundation, 1284
 Khalilzad, Zalmay, 984
 Khartoum Summit, 119, 232, 1584
 Khatami, Muhammad, 633
 Khatib, Ghassan, 197
 Khatib, Rawhi, 1555
 Khatib, Shawki, 544
 Khazendar, Walid, 1117
 Khodr, George, 259
 Khrushchev, Nikita, 946
 Khudr, Maim, 146
 Khurgin, Yacov, 520
 al-Khuri, Bishara, 861
 Kibbutz movement, 51, 503, 707, 819–820, 1134, 1324, 1430
 Kidmat Zion neighborhood, 562
 Kiesinger, Kurt, 436
 Kimmerring, Baruch, 989, 990, 992, 1171, 1409
 King, Arie, 950, 1225, 1335, 1340
 King, Henry C., 820
 King Abdallah, 1298. See also Saudi Arabia
 King Abdullah I (Abdullah Ibn al-Husayn), 778–780; ambitions for a Semite kingdom encompassing Palestine and Transjordan, 778–780, 1131; assassination of, 84, 89, 337, 782; and “Jordanization” of the West Bank, 781–782, 788. See also Arab states, inter-Arab politics; Jordan
 King Abdullah II, 787, 1362. See also Jordan
 King-Crane Commission (1919), 820–821, 1416, 1627
 King David Hotel (1946), bombing of, 175, 641, 753, 771, 821–822, 891, 945
 King Fahd, 1297–1298. See also Saudi Arabia
 King Faisal, 1295–1297, 1587. See also Saudi Arabia
 King Faisal bin al-Husayn, 1416–1417. See also Syria
 King Husayn: assumption of power, 782; campaign to topple, 121, 128, 786, 1065; Husayn-Arafat Agreement (1985), 91–92, 99, 199, 231, 573–574, 785, 789, 1068, 1081, 1230, 1232; Husayn-Peres Agreement (1987), 85, 581–582, 785, 789, 1156; Israel-Jordan peace agreement (1994), 704, 1208, 1529; martial law, implementation of, 199; Palestinian-Jordan confederation, 788; Rabat declaration, opposition to, 1205–1206; secret diplomacy with Israel, 784; tensions between Jordan and the PLO, 782–783; United Arab Kingdom, plans for, 784; U.S., friendship with, 824; Wye River Memorandum, signing of, 1635. See also Arab states, inter-Arab Politics; Jordan
 King Khalid, 1297. See also Saudi Arabia
 Kinkel, Klaus, 441
 Kirkland, Lane, 37
 Kirkpatrick Jeanne, 1229
 Kiryat Anavim, 1680
 Kiryat Arba settlement, 461, 525, 526, 822, 863, 881, 1315, 1323, 1331, 1443, 1646

- Kiryat Shmona, 822–823, 1446
- Kissinger, Henry Alfred, 823–825, 995–996, 1274, 1286, 1543; bipolar world view, 823; concept of Israel as a strategic asset, 823, 1273; Geneva Conference, convening of, 122, 432, 485, 825, 1421; Jewish fundamentalist protests against, 761; memorandum of understanding to Israel re: PLO, 1067; probe of Israel's nuclear program, 823–824; “regional surrogates,” development of, 823; secret informal contacts with PLO, 824–825, 1067, 1286, 1534; “shuttle diplomacy,” 28, 405–406, 825, 996, 1521; support for Israel, 925, 1520–1521; and Syria, negotiations with, 1421
- Kitrutch, Edward, 1622
- Kleiner, Michael, 444, 976, 1464
- Klinghoffer, Leon, 9, 1659
- Klugman, Haim, 1555
- Klugman Report (1993), 825–827, 1339, 1388, 1389, 1555
- Knesset, 827
- Koenig, Israel, 827
- Koenig Memorandum (1976), 827–828, 850, 1177
- Kohn, Hans, 1149
- Kollek, Teddy (Theodor), 185, 828–830, 1023, 1217, 1377, 1555
- Kook, Rabbi Avraham Yitzhak HaCohen, 461, 471, 501, 723, 758, 830–831, 881, 932, 942, 975, 1666
- Kook, Rabbi Zvi Yehuda HaCohen, 461, 471, 758, 760, 761, 762, 932
- Kovel, Joel, 32
- Kozyrev, Andrei, 946
- Kreisky, Bruno, 439, 1068
- Kristol, Irving, 328
- Krugel, Earl, 756
- “Kulturmutation” concept, 141
- al-Kurd, Fawzia and Mohammed, 1575
- Kurtzer, Daniel, 142
- Kuttab, Daoud, 918
- Kuttab, Jonathan, 668
- Kuwait, 831–840, 1358; commitment to Arab solidarity and the Palestinian cause, 832; economic discrimination in, 836; emerging contradictions, 837–838; expulsion of Palestinians from, 838–839, 878, 1244; financial aid to Palestinians, 833; and Gulf War, aftermath of, 838–839; international relations, 832–833; Iran-Iraq War, threats to, 837; Iraqi invasion of, 93, 101, 125, 222, 253, 466, 638–640, 838, 1046, 1072, 1169, 1305, 1502, 1653 (see also Gulf War); Islamic militancy and, 837; and Jordan, relations with, 833, 838; kafalah system, 834; Kuwaitization policies, 833, 835, 837; labor force, 833–834, 837–838; modern transformation of, 831–832; Palestinian communal life in, 835; Palestinian migration to, 834–835; Palestinian nation building in, 835; and Palestinians, relations with, 831; PLO/PNA apology to, 839; population, 833; public schools in, 834, 836; regional strategies and politics, 832–833; social conditions for Palestinians in, 835–837; and U.S., relations with, 833, 838; young professional Palestinians living in, 832
- Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development (KFAED), 832, 833
- Kuwait University, admission quotas, 836
- Kuwayk, Samith Abu, 873
- Labor, Palestinian: barriers to free movement of, 345; effects of on Israeli economy, 828; in Kuwait, 833–834, 837–838; market, 345, 351–352, 427; unemployment, 114, 173, 350, 351, 528, 717. See also Economy, Palestinian
- Labor Alignment, 841, 1155
- Labor Party, 14, 113, 179, 685, 686, 687–688, 841–842, 931, 986, 1207, 1217, 1577, 1642
- Labor unions, 37
- Labor Zionism, 49, 113, 175, 495, 721, 841, 1165, 1581, 1611, 1665, 1672
- Lahad, Antoine, 479
- Laird, Melvin, 823
- Lake Tiberias, 89, 843, 1518–1519, 1572. See also National Water Carrier project
- Lamdan, Yitzchak, 515
- Lancry, Yehuda, 444
- Land, 843–847; abandoned property, 1401; acquisition of under the British Mandate, 1121–1122; Arab nationalists' land sales to Zionists, 79, 81, 114, 209; Bedouin rights to, 172–173, 465, 768; British limits on Jewish acquisition of, 897, 898; collective ownership of, 1402; compensation for, 1470; confiscation of, 136, 170, 172–173, 247, 341, 374, 542, 706–707, 828, 850, 895, 1239, 1313; confiscation process, four stages, 1469–1470; as crux of the Israel-Palestinian conflict, 843; distribution, ethnocratic policies of, 1084; in East Jerusalem, acquisition of, 1339–1340; Emergency Articles for the Exploitation of Uncultivated Areas, 372; Emergency Regulations for the Cultivation of Fallow Lands (1948), 1470; environmental degradation of, 56, 373–375; expropriation of for public needs, 1269, 1401; geopolitical actions designed to reinforce Jewish presence on, 844; green areas, 464–465, 499, 741–742; “Israeli lands,” concept of creating, 1634; Israeli nationalization of, 544; and Israel's unilateral disengagement from Gaza, 846–847; Jerusalem Burial Society, ownership claims by, 1225; Jewish claims to, justification for, 182, 256, 1313; legal foundations for the seizure of, 1401–1402; Military Order Regarding Government Property, 1402; “nationalization” of, 1470–1471; ordinances enacted during British Mandate, 209–210; overgrazing and deforestation, 373, 374; ownership, four types defined by the

Land (continued)

- Ottoman Land Law of 1858, 1401–1402; ownership, under the British Mandate, 207–208, 209–210, 213–214; Palestinian access, efforts to block, 846; Palestinian tenants, rights of, 210, 1375; partition plan for (see United Nations General Assembly Resolution 181); percentage of accessible to Palestinians, 465; privatization of, 707–708, 754, 1009, 1386; reclassification of for settlement purposes, 499, 1313; reform, under the Ottoman Empire, 4, 209, 1054, 1224, 1250, 1401–1402; Regulations on Closed Areas, 1470; replacement of Arab place-names by Jewish ones, 106, 1471, 1553; resisting confiscation of, military appeals committee, 1403–1405; Ronen Committee, recommendations for, 707–708; Security Areas Regulations, 1470; Segregation Zones, Eastern and Western, 846; seizure of, for military purposes, 1401; seizure of, for security reasons, 1009, 1313; speculation, British Mandate and, 1054; “Special Security Area” (SSA) plan, 846; squatters, 173, 210; taking, process of, 1402–1403; uncultivated, confiscation of, 372, 895, 1403, 1404, 1470; use, improper planning, 373–374; yellow areas, 464. See also State Land
- Land Acquisition (Validations of Acts and Compensation) Law (1953), 326, 677, 1634
- Landau, Karl, 474
- Landau, Menahem, 288
- Landau, Moshe, 669, 700, 848
- Landau Commission (1987), 669, 700, 848–850, 1378–1379
- Land Day, 542, 828, 850, 1219
- “Land for peace”: advocates of, 1154; as betrayal of divine gift to the Jews, 256; Husayn-Arafat Agreement (1985), 574, 785, 789, 1068, 1230, 1232; Israel’s refusal to accept, 85, 86; Madrid Conference and, 844; opposition to, 655, 1489; Palestinian support for, 90, 92; PNC resolution for (1984), 1068; UN Security Council Resolution 242 and, 437, 1494, 1511, 1512, 1520; U.S., abandonment of, 226
- Land laws, 4, 171, 851–852; Abandoned Areas Ordinance (1948), 2, 1119, 1469; absentee landlords, 4; Absentee Property Law (1950), 2, 4–5, 172, 247, 297, 298, 326, 677, 705, 712, 826, 950, 1176, 1239, 1388, 1469, 1470, 1555, 1636; discriminatory nature of, 710; Israel Lands (1960), 677, 704, 705, 767, 851, 1471; Land Acquisition (1953), 326, 677, 1634; Land Acquisition in Time of Emergency (1948), 1470; as legitimization for Israeli usurpation of Palestinian land, 851; Ottoman (1858) 4, 209, 1054, 1224, 1250, 1313, 1401–1402
- Land of Israel Faithful Movement, 1287
- “Land without a people for a people without a land,” 49, 144, 172, 852, 1323, 1467, 1668–1669
- Langer, Felicia, 673, 852–853
- Lapid Commission, 542
- Latin America, Jewish Diaspora in, 328
- Lausanne Conference (1949), 853–854
- Lavon, Pinhas, 855, 1199
- Lavon Affair (1954), 84, 116, 138, 185, 854–855, 1155, 1217
- Law Enforcement Agency Resource Network (LEARN), Anti-Defamation League, 36
- Law in the Service of Man. See al-Haq (Law in the Service of Man)
- Law of Abandoned Areas. See Abandoned Areas Ordinance (1948)
- Law of Land Acquisition in Time of Emergency (1948), 1470
- Law of Return (1950). See Right of Return law (1950)
- Law of the Acquisition of Absentee Property. See Absentee Property Law (1950)
- League of Arab-Jewish Rapprochement and Cooperation, 504, 1149
- League of Arab States (Arab League), 856–857, 1559; Arab Liberation Army (ALA), formation of, 87, 116; Arab Peace Initiative (2002), 67, 80–81, 86, 361, 633, 857, 868, 1186, 1200, 1298–1299, 1489, 1499, 1512, 1525; and Camp David Accords, response to, 84; Casablanca Protocol (1965), 1244; designation of PLO as sole, legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, 16, 85, 366, 1047, 1067, 1205, 1300, 1372, 1488, 1522, 1581; economic boycott of Israel, 223, 258, 856–857, 1526; Egypt’s role in, 52, 84, 857; Euro-Arab Dialogue, 379; Fahd Plan (1981), acceptance of, 1298; Fatah participation in, 832; Fez Peace Initiative, adoption of, 385, 399–400, 1189; Khartoum Summit, 119, 232, 1584; member nations, 856; 1948 War, support for Palestinian cause, 1563; objections to German payment of reparations to Israel, 434–435; Palestine Information Office, 485; Palestine Liberation Army (PLA), formation of, 1063, 1585; Palestinian refugees, treatment of, 1244; and PLO, creation of, 422; purpose of, 856; regional Chamber of Commerce, creation of, 93; role of in Middle East politics, 856–857; summit (1987), 124; summit (2000), 361; Syrian involvement in, 1418; UN General Assembly Resolution 181, rejection of, 1560
- League of National Action, 1417
- League of Nations, 145, 1290, 1613, 1671; British Mandate, ratification of, 208, 1414, 1632; Covenant of, Article 22 (1919), 208, 295–296, 903, 1235; MacDonald White Paper, rejection of, 898; rights of Palestinians, recognition of, 1235; system of mandates, 903, 1234
- Lebanese National Movement (LNM), 90–91, 122
- Lebanon, 857–871, 1358; Amal Party, 25, 100, 120, 124; Armistice Agreement (1949), 130, 868, 1494; Beirut International Airport, Israeli raid on, 89, 863, 1587; Ben-Gurion’s plan to dismember, 861; Cairo Agreement (1969), 89, 120, 863–864, 938, 1587; Camps’ War (1985–1987), 92, 100, 120, 237–238, 395, 867, 875, 1188; Christian

- Lebanese Front, 1431; Christians in, 858, 861, 1431; civil war in, 90–91, 98, 122–123, 394, 484, 861, 864–867, 938, 1398; cross-border attacks, 1082; early encounters with Zionism, 858–859; expulsion of Palestinian guerillas from, 865, 1188, 1277, 1482, 1588; Fatah in, 394–395; and France, alliance with, 858, 859; Free Lebanon Army, 479, 1398; Government of Free Lebanon, 1399; Hizbullah, rise of, 868–869, 1027; ideological splits within, 858–859, 865; as an independent state, relations with Israel and Palestine, 859–861; Israeli invasion of (1978), Operation Litani, 823, 871, 1038, 1398, 1495, 1609; Israeli invasion of (1982), 866–867, 871–872, 1038, 1495 (see also Lebanon War); Israeli invasion of (2006), 1982; Israeli occupation of (2002), 402, 407; Israeli-sponsored surrogate force in, 479; Israeli withdrawal from (2000), 152, 407, 659, 1398–1399; Khiam detention center, reports of torture at, 1398; Lebanese National Movement vs. Lebanese Front, 865; Maronite elite, domination of, 858, 859, 861, 906, 1026; Milkart Protocols (1973), 937–938; Mutasarrifiyya (Little Lebanon), 858, 960; 1948 War, participation in, 1563, 1569; official state policy toward Palestinians, 862; Operation Grapes of Wrath (1996), 1036; Palestinian guerrilla operations in, 120, 937–938, 1588; Palestinian refugees in, 130, 236, 860, 861–862, 868, 1236, 1431, 1587–1588; Palestinian resistance movement in, 863–864; Palestinians in, 861–868; peace agreement, 867, 1512; Phalange, 680, 802, 864, 871, 1026, 1161, 1366; PLO, expulsion of, 128, 1010; political map of, 860; religious coexistence, support for, 861; “security zone” in, declaration of by Israel, 1528; Shebaa Farms, dispute over, 86, 1495; Shi’ia Amal militia, 237, 867; South Lebanon Army (SLA), 479, 1038, 1278, 1398–1399, 1496; Syrian intervention in, 98, 123, 238, 865, 866, 1027, 1283, 1529; Syrian withdrawal from, 1529; Ta al Za’tar refugee camp, 1431; Ta’if Accord (Document of National Understanding), 867–868; UN Interim Force in (UNIFIL), 1038, 1067, 1495, 1496, 1515–1516; UN peacekeeping missions in, 1496–1497; UN response to Israeli military actions against, 1494–1495; UN Security Council Resolution 425, 241, 868; and U.S., relations with, 860; U.S. withdrawal from (1984), 1230
- Lebanon War (1982), 123, 138, 146, 245, 866–867, 871–879; Beirut, siege of, 866, 867, 872, 1365, 1495; code name for, 871; Committee Against the War in Lebanon, 680, 681, 1592; conscientious objection during, 292; Damascus Agreement, 875; deaths, 866, 1026, 1365; failure of Arab states to aid Palestinian cause, 1189; and Holocaust compared, 552; internal opposition to, 1582; international condemnation of, 1495; Israeli withdrawal, 867, 1528–1529; Israel’s justification for, 70, 176, 871; “Kosovo Doctrine,” application of, 661; lessons drawn from, 661; Nahal in, 966; objections to by Israeli soldiers, 152, 292; objectives of, 1026; Occupied Territories, effect on, 876–877; Operation Big Pines (1982), 871, 1026–1027; Palestine Research Center archive, Israeli confiscation of, 1082; and Palestinian nationalism, resurgence of, 872; and PLO, internal disintegration of, 91, 99–100, 237, 873–874, 1068–1069; refuseniks, origins of, 1164, 1582; results of, 177; Sabra and Shatila Massacre (1982), 91, 123, 146, 177, 480, 519, 653, 802–803, 867, 872–873, 1068, 1230, 1277–1279, 1366–1368; Sharon’s involvement in, 1364–1367; soldiers’ refusal to serve in, 1592; Syria in, 1422; and transformation of Israeli peace movement, 680–681, 1649; unforeseen consequences of, 871, 872; UN response to, 1495; U.S. marine barracks, terrorist attack on (1983), 1230, 1522; U.S. response to, 1229, 1522, 1528; as a “war of choice,” 653, 680; world reaction to, 871
- Lechatchila (At the Beginning), 1458
- Legislative Council (British Mandate), 13, 211, 365, 879–880, 1128, 1135
- LEHI. See Lohamei Herut Yisrael (LEHI)
- LEHI ribbon, 892
- Leibowitz, Yeshayahu, 551, 880, 1578
- Leon, Abram, 48
- Lerner, Michael, 327
- Levanon, Rabbi Elyakim, 1646
- Levin, Marcus, 552
- Levinger, Rabbi Moshe, 129, 461, 497, 522–523, 525, 761, 822, 881–882, 1323, 1584
- Levy, David, 222, 443–445, 882–884, 1026
- Levy, Gideon, 683, 962, 1208–1209, 1410, 1412
- Levy, Maxim, 444, 445
- Levy, Mickey, 1088
- Liberal Party (Israel), 539, 843, 884
- Liberal Party (Palestinian), 884
- Liberty* (USS Liberty), deliberate Israeli attack on, 774, 884–885, 1520
- Libraries: Arab Studies Society, 94, 578; al-Budayri, 218; Israeli censorship and, 36; Khalidi Library, 818; Orient House, Jerusalem, 1044; Palestine Research Center, 1080, 1082, 1301; Palestinian national, 7
- Libya, 1192, 1244
- Lieberman, Avigdor, 322, 470, 885–887, 976, 978, 1087, 1438, 1650, 1651
- Lieberman Plan, 886, 1650
- Lifta Cell, 497
- Likud Party, 370, 685, 887–889, 905, 1490, 1652; Ashkenazi in, 888; Begin, Menahem, 887; creation of, 413; Greater Land of Israel Movement, support for, 21, 85, 460, 687, 1579;

- Likud Party (continued)
 Netanyahu, leadership of, 443, 883, 888, 986, 1641; settlements in the Occupied Territories, support for, 1322; Sharon, leadership of, 689, 363, 1364–1365, 1367, 1438
- Lipkin-Shahak, Amnon, 415
- Lipsky, Louis, 206–207
- Lishkat HaGazit (School of Government), 1455
- Littell, Paul, 257
- Little Lebanon. See Mutasarrifiyya (Little Lebanon)
- Livni, Tzipora (Tzipi) Malka, 427, 500, 662, 800, 889–890, 1641
- Livni, Yorem, 1443–1444
- Lloyd George, David, 144, 207, 255, 1289, 1290, 1610, 1670
- Lobby, pro-Israel. See American Jewish organizations
- Lohamei Herut Yisrael (LEHI), 890–892; Deir Yassin massacre, involvement in, 316–317, 1235; formation of, 188, 641, 1405–1406, 1445; Folke Bernadotte, assassination of, 188, 507, 1567; and Haifa, battle for, 483; in Jewish Resistance Movement (JRM), 482, 753, 771; Lord Moyne, assassination of, 954; terrorist activities, pre-1948, 1130, 1131, 1445, 1513, 1674
- London Agreement (1987). See Husayn-Peres Agreement (1987)
- London Conference (1946–1947), 213, 892
- London/St. James Conference (1939), 892–893, 898, 1629
- Lovett, Robert A., 853, 1478
- Lowdermilk, W. C., 1628–1629
- Lubenchik, Naftali, 891
- Lupolianski, Uri, 1556
- Lustick, Ian, 754, 1467, 1577
- Lutheran World Federation, 258, 259
- Luxemburg, Rosa, 48
- Luxembourg Treaty. See Agreements on Restitution and Indemnification (Luxembourg Treaty)
- Lydda (Lod), 893–894, 1206
- Maagen Michael kibbutz, 820
- Ma'ale Adumin settlement, 6, 895–897, 1208, 1556; annexation of into Metropolitan Jerusalem, 1472; Barrier around, 165, 232, 500; confiscation of land to create, 110, 895; E1 Plan and, 341, 343, 1024, 1223; exclusion of from Taba Talks, 1427; geographic importance of, 895; size and population projections, 895, 896, 1311
- Ma'aleh Ha'Zeitim, 136
- Ma'alot, (1974), 897, 1446
- Ma'arat HaMachpela. See Cave of Machpelah/Cave of the Patriarchs
- Maastricht Treaties (1993), 441
- MacDonald, James G., 1478
- MacDonald, Ramsay, 897, 898, 1128, 1135
- MacDonald "Black Letter" (1931), 212, 897–898, 1128, 1135
- MacDonald White Paper (1939), 212–214, 636, 898, 1126, 1478; and Aliya Bet, founding of, 188, 320; Arab response to, 1129; five-year plan for immigration, 41; Irgun campaign to facilitate illegal immigration, 641; land acquisition, restrictions on, 1607; and need for Arab support in World War II, 116; opposition to Jewish statehood, 82, 577, 791, 1445; unified Palestine, proposal for, 779; Zionist reaction to, 183, 1290, 1628
- Machon HaMikdash. See Temple Institute (Machon HaMikdash)
- Machover, Moshe, 906
- MachsomWatch (Women for Human Rights), 248, 288, 898, 997
- MacMichael, Harold, 1354
- Mada Manifesto. See High Follow-up Committee and the Mada Manifesto
- Madrid Conference (1991), 554, 898–901; Arab states, reaction to, 85; context for the convening of, 899–900; exclusion of PLO from, 878, 900–901, 1169, 1356, 1482, 1522; follow-up forums, 899; global and regional changes influencing, 899–900; goal of, 899; Hamas, opposition to, 487; impact of on PLO, 93, 101, 125, 1072–1073; Jordanian-Palestinian delegation, 223, 360; Israeli opposition to, 1490; issues deferred from, 901; "land for peace," end to, 1582; negotiations between Jordan and Israel, 786; participants in, 899, 901, 1046, 1072; preliminaries to, 900–901; revocation of UN General Assembly Resolution 3379 as condition of Israel's participation in, 1511; sponsors, 898–899; U.S. stake in, 142–143, 219–220, 640, 900
- Mafdal. See National Religious Party (NRP)
- Magaleh Orot, 770
- Magen, David, 442, 444
- Maraga, Muhammad, 1390
- Magnes, Judah Leon, 195, 217, 218, 588, 901, 1147–1148, 1668
- Mahmud, Abd al-Rahin, 1112, 1484
- Maimonides (Rabbi Moshe ben Maimon [Rambam]), 902
- Majd al-Mujahedin (Pride of the Faithful Warriors), 1643
- Al-Majlisiyyun (Councilists). See Arab Party (Council lists)
- Makhmara hamula, appeal re: confiscated land, 1404
- Makhkame Complex, 559–560
- Maki Party, 79, 290, 478, 903, 1219, 1377
- Makkah Accords (2007), 1298–1299
- Malchut Israel (Kingship for Israel/Kingdom of Israel), 1455
- Malcolm X, 35
- Malek, Charles, 861
- Malenkov, Georgi, 945
- Malinki, Schmu'el, 801
- Malley, Robert, 236, 281, 1051
- Malouh, Rahim, 1184
- Mamluks, 9, 189, 522, 732, 903

- al-Manasrah, Izzidin, 1117
- Mandate, 903. See also British Mandate in Palestine
- Mandela Institute for Palestinian Prisoners, 903–904
- Mansour, Camille, 1052
- Mansour, Khairi, 1117
- Manual for the Military Advocate in Military Government*, 666, 1352, 1572
- Mao Zedong, 250
- Mapai (Israel Workers' Party), 113, 179, 182, 185, 186, 685, 686, 841, 904–905, 931, 1155, 1217, 1361, 1430, 1612, 1672
- Mapam, 405, 504, 903, 905–906, 933, 1379, 1430, 1470, 1477
- Marad, Mansour, 1081
- Marcus, Bernard, 36
- Markovitz Commission (1986), 828, 1536
- Maronites, 858, 859, 861, 906, 1026
- Marr, Wilhelm, 42
- Marwani Mosque, 1441
- Marshall, George, 278, 337, 1478
- Marx, Karl, 48
- Marzel, Baruch, 756, 799, 1088, 1646
- Marzuq, Musa Abu, 488
- Masada, 108, 1642, 1666
- Masafer Yatta. See Hebron District, southern area
- Masalha, Salman, 1117
- el-Mashad, Yehia, 1435
- Mash'al, Khaled, 488
- Maskiyot settlement, Jordan Rift Valley, 795–796, 1319
- Massad, Joseph, 32
- Massah, Adisu, 1026
- Massive retaliation. See Infiltration (Palestinian) and retaliation (Israeli)
- Matalon, Ronit, 521
- Matzpen, 679, 906–907, 1349, 1481, 1591
- Mazalha, Nawaf, 444
- Mazuz, Menahem, 709
- McAteer, Ed, 256
- McClintock, Robert, 1478
- McGovern, George Stanley, 907
- Mecca Agreement and the Palestinian Unity Government, 81, 233, 301, 426, 491, 494, 907–910, 1213
- Media, general: al-Aqsa Intifada, coverage of, 64–66, 629, 914–915; and curfews, suspension of, 297; First Intifada, coverage of, 669, 1482; monitoring organizations, 31–32; 1967 War, pro-Israel stance in Germany, 436; press credentials, 918; press freedom, violations of, 64; shifting sympathies, 629; terrorism as a way to capture attention of, 121
- Media, Israeli, 910–915; blackout, Kafr Qasim massacre, 801; broadcast, 912; Censorship/Newspaper Permits, Defense Emergency Regulation 94, 315, 911; criticism of, 915; English translation of, 1349–1350; Gush Emunim, coverage of, 1324; history and evolution of, 910–911; influence of on Jewish public opinion, 915; Israeli repression, warnings about, 683; legal foundations for, 911–912; military perspective, dominance of, 913–915; privatization and coverage of the conflict, 912–913; Qibya massacre, censorship and, 1200; roadblocks, announcement of, 1345; self-censorship, voluntary, 912; self-defense, obsession with, 913, 914
- Media, Palestinian, 915–919; al-Aqsa Intifada and, 629, 918–919; al-Carmel, 238–239; broadcast, 629, 916; daily newspapers, major, 917; Defense Emergency Regulations and, 916; destruction of by Israel, 918, 919; history and evolution of, 915–916; First Intifada, 624–625, 669; in formation of Palestinian identity, 915; freedom of the press, restrictions on, 917, 919; graffiti as, 625; Islamist publications, 918; Israeli censorship of, 624, 916–917; Jerusalem Media and Communication Center (JMCC), 752, 1165; journalists, attacks on, 629; local media, 917, 918–919; nationalist movement and Israeli Occupation in the development of, 916–917; opposition to Zionism in, 239; Palestinian Press Law (1995), 917; Palestine Press Service, 624; permits, need for, 916; satellite television, 917; self-censorship, 917; Siniora, Hanna, 1396–1397, 1436; Suriyya al-Janubiyya (first newspaper in Palestine), 219; transformation of during the Oslo period, 917–918; underground, 624–625;
- Media, U.S., 910–930; ABC network, 922–923; alternative/progressive media, coverage by, 927; anti-Israel bias, monitoring of, 31, 33; Associated Press, 922, 926–927; CBS network, 922–923; CNN network, 925–926; deaths reporting of, Israeli vs. Palestinian, 920, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926–927; “disputed territories,” use of the phrase, 1523; influence of U.S. government and Israel lobby on, 920–922; “Intellicopter Tours,” 31; Israeli peace movement, lack of coverage, 928; Jewish control, myth of, 327; language, de-contextualization of, 919–920; and limits of “respectable discourse,” 919; mainstream media, coverage by, 919, 922–927; National Public Radio, 921, 925; NBC network, 922–923; New York Times, 923, 925; portrayal of Israel and Palestinians as “equal” partners, 58–59; professional journals, coverage by, 927; pro-Israel bias, 30–32, 919, 920–922, 928; regional news media, 926; reporting by omission, 927–929; statistical studies of, 922, 923, 925–929; transparency and, 922; U.S. correspondents living in Israel, 921; Washington Post, 928
- MediaBackspin.com, 31
- Media-monitoring organizations: CAMERA (Committee for Accuracy in Middle East Reporting in America), 31, 33, 328;

- Media-monitoring organizations (continued)
 HonestReporting.com, 31–32, 921; The Israel Project (TIP), 31–32; MediaBackspin.com, 31; Middle East Media Research Institute (MEMRI), 31, 256, 921; Palestine Media Watch, 925, 927; Palestine Monitor, 1077; Project Censored, 927
- Megged, Aharon, 518, 992
- Mehuver, Moshe, 906
- Meimad party, 930–931, 1026
- Meir, Golda, 84, 185, 420, 438, 816, 824, 841, 931–932, 955, 1156, 1207, 1274, 1580
- Melamed, Eliezer, 1647
- Melman, Yossi, 288
- Meltzer, Nahum, 770
- Mendelssohn, Moses, 504
- Mengele, Josef, 552
- Mercaz HaRav Kook Yeshiva, 461, 758, 831, 886, 932–933, 1087, 1088
- Meretz Party, 445, 681, 905, 933, 1332, 1379, 1641
- Meretz-Yahad Party. See Yachad Party (of Yossi Beilin)
- Meridot, Dan, 444
- Meshal, Khalid, 933–934, 951–952, 1643
- Metropolitan Jerusalem Plan (1995), 341, 452, 455, 735, 934–936, 1472, 1473. See also Greater Jerusalem
- Mezvinsky, Norton, 1350
- Mi'ari, Muhammad, 1154, 1187
- Michael, Sami, 520
- Middle East and North Africa Development Bank, 93
- Middle East and North Africa (MENA) Economic Conferences, 936–937; first MENA Summit (1994), 93–94, 936–937; fourth MENA Summit (1997), 937; second MENA Summit (1995), 937; third MENA Summit (1996), 937
- Middle Eastern Center for Arab Studies, 344
- Middle Eastern Council of Churches, 258
- Middle East Forum (MIF), 33, 921
- Middle East Media Research Institute (MEMRI), 31, 256, 921. See also Media-monitoring organizations
- Middle East Media Watch. See HonestReporting.com
- Middle East Nonviolence and Democracy, 998
- Millennialist ideology, 496
- Militarism, Israel. See Israeli militarism
- Militarism and Armed Struggle, Palestinian. See Armed Struggle, Palestinian
- Military courts. See Israeli military court system in the Occupied Territories
- Milkart Protocols (1973), 937–938
- Miller, Aaron David, 142, 938–939
- Milson, Menachem, 271, 336, 1551–1552
- Mishani, Mordechai, 445
- Mishmarot HaKohanim (The Kohanim's Preserves), 1457
- Mishmarot hamikdash (Temple Work Shifts), 1457
- Mishneh Torah*, 902
- Mist'aravim (Jewish soldiers disguised as Arabs), 1434
- Mitchell, George John, 939–941, 1442, 1525. See also Sharm al-Shaykh Fact-Finding Committee
- Mitchell Commission. See Sharm al-Shaykh Fact-Finding Committee
- Mitpeh Yericho, 1456
- Mitterand, François, 409
- Mitzna, Amram, 226, 430, 1156, 1526
- Mitzpim* (lookouts), 828, 1535, 1536
- Mitzvah*, 217
- Mixed Armistice Commissions, 131, 941–942, 1419, 1516
- “Mixed” Israeli cities, 1683
- Mizrachi, 495, 942
- Mizraha, Kedma, 1149
- Mizrahi, 882, 942–944, 1676; anti-Arab views, 942; Black Panthers, 1481, 1656; cultural “self-hatred,” and 51, 94; discrimination against, 942, 943, 1173; immigration to Israel, 51, 942; literary contributions of, 520–521; Musrara neighborhood, settlement of, 958; in pre-1948 Palestine, 1251
- Mizrahi movement, 1666, 1672
- Mizrahi Party, 1610
- Mizyed, Wafa Abu, 64
- Modern-Day Bible Prophecy movement, 1460
- Mofaz, Shaul, 341, 714, 890, 1161, 1196, 1647
- Mohammed, Elijah, 35
- Moked, 903, 944, 1377
- Moledet Party, 370, 566, 944, 950, 976, 1340, 1438, 1490, 1657
- Møller, Per Stig, 1306
- Montefiore, Sir Moses, 43
- Moody, Dwight, 355
- Moore, J. Curtis, 201
- Moratinos, Miguel, 380, 1427
- Mordechai, Yitzhak, 444
- Mordor Moria Co., 383
- Mordot Moria, 134, 135
- Moreshet Avot, 944
- Morocco, support for Palestinian cause, 1192
- Morris, Benny, 421, 683, 956, 987–988, 989, 991, 992–993, 1171, 1469, 1476, 1491, 1571, 1607
- Morrison, Herbert, 945
- Morrison-Grady Commission, establishment of, 41
- Morrison-Grady Plan (1946), 892, 945
- Morse, Wayne, 339
- Moscow, 945–948, 1200; Arafat, visit to, 946; Beslan school disaster, 947; Chechen Republic, rebellion in, 946, 947; Declaration of Principles (DOP), endorsement of, 946; diplomatic support for the PLO, 1072; Fatah alliance with, calls for, 8; Hamas, recognition of, 948; Interim Agreement, endorsement of, 946; Israel, shifting relations with, 945, 946, 947–948, 1072; Middle East policy, post-Soviet era, 946–948; multilateral negotiations in following Madrid Conference, 1046; nuclear program in Iran, support for, 947–948; PLO office in, 946; Soviet period, 945–946; and UN condemnation of Israeli actions, 947; Zionism, antipathy

- toward, 945. See also Russian Empire; Soviet Union
- Moshav, 707, 948, 1324, 1663
- Moskowitz, Irving, 6, 136, 178, 364, 711, 949–951, 1223, 1225, 1340, 1341, 1389, 1454
- Mossad, 889, 951–953; actions in Lebanon, 938; assassinations by, 8, 201–202, 951, 955, 1482, 1643; attempt to assassinate Khalid Meshal, failure of, 951–952; and CIA, relations with, 245, 246, 1531; collaborators, recruitment of, 953; killing of Moroccan waiter in Lillehammer by mistake, 951, 952, 1285, 1446; most notable operations, list of, 951–952; 1967 War, operations during, 1571; in the Occupied Territories, 952–953; passports, theft of, 951, 952; and SAVAK, building and administration of, 631
- Mossawa (Advocacy Center for Arabs in Israel), 1306
- Mosse, George, 656
- el-Moussawi, Abbas, 1435
- Movement for the National Liberation of Palestine. See Fatah
- The Movement for the Establishment of the Temple, 1457–1458
- Movement of Arab Nationalists (MAN), 953–954, 1586, 1587, 1653; activists in, 501, 505, 577, 806; alliance with Jamal ‘Abd al-Nasir, 1166; decentralization of, 318; emergence of, 87, 862, 953, 1652; factions within, 506; founders of, 87, 117, 475, 476, 479, 953, 1166, 1652; and Hamas compared, 486; recruitment among refugees, 953; resistance groups spawned by, 1064; role of in Palestinian Armed Struggle, 117–119. See also Habash, George
- Movement of Democratic Women for Israel (TANDI), 288, 954
- Movements of Persons, Defense Emergency Regulation 124, 316
- Mowassa (The Advocacy Center for Arab Citizens in Israel), 1091
- Moyal, Eli, 888
- Moyne, Lord (Walter Edward Guinness), 641, 891, 954, 1353, 1406, 1445
- al-Mu‘arada. See National Defense Party
- al-Mubadara. See Palestinian National Initiative (2002)
- Mubarak, Muhammad Hosni Said, 92, 93, 99, 360, 361, 393, 573, 886, 954–955, 1049, 1161, 1215, 1362, 1639
- Mughrabi Gate, 557, 559
- Mugnyiah, Imad, 1426
- Muhsin, Zuhayr, 1605
- Multilateral Refugee Working Group (RWG), 388
- Munich Olympics (1972), massacre at, 201–202, 433, 440, 955–956, 1285; Israeli retaliation for, 152, 201–202, 951, 1446; Operation Wrath of God (1972), 889, 955–956, 1446. See also Black September Organization (BSO)
- Municipal Jerusalem. See Greater Jerusalem
- Municipal services, Jerusalem, 742–743
- al-Muqaddes, Jaysh al-Jihad, 116
- Muragha, Sa‘id Musa, 123, 395, 398, 873, 957
- Murphy, Richard, 1230
- Museum of the Palestinian Memory, 7
- Muslim Brotherhood, 118, 233, 423, 486, 487, 643–645, 933, 954, 957–958, 1222, 1560, 1643. See also Islamic Jihad Movement
- Muslim-Christian Associations (MCAs), 76, 303, 578, 723, 958, 1126, 1251
- Musrara neighborhood, 958–960, 1337
- Mustapha, Abu Ali, 60
- Mutasarrifiyya (Little Lebanon), 858, 960
- Mutual Security Act, U.S., 338
- Muwatin, 960
- My Friend, My Enemy*, 138
- al-Nabi Musa demonstrations (1920), 210, 578, 961, 1133, 1467. See also Palin Commission (1920)
- Nablus, 96, 916–966; and the al-Aqsa Intifada, 962–965; economy, decline of, 963–964; Fatah headquarters in, 1585; history and evolution of, 962; Operation Determined Path, 1035; PNA control of, 961; refugees in, 961; religious significance of, 961, 964–965; Samaritans in, 1288; settler violence in, 961–962, 964; suicide bombers in, 962
- al-Nadi al Arabi (The Arab Club), 575, 1416
- Nahal, 21, 795, 820, 966, 1323
- Nahalat Shimon International, 1373
- Nahmias, Ronit, 407
- Najjada, 966–967
- al-Najjar, Yusif al-Muhammad, 201, 832, 956, 967
- Nakba* (Catastrophe), 980, 1130; as beginning of Palestine’s modern history, 1120; defined, 116, 857; demographic balance, alteration of, 320; depiction of in Israeli textbooks, 1089; ethnic cleansing and, 1468, 1557; failure of Arab Revolt as chief cause, 82; and Holocaust compared, 260; as inspiration for Palestinian poets, 1483; and need for fundamental reforms, 861; 1948 War, outcome of and, 1569; observances, banning of by Israel, 886, 1087, 1651; Palestinian identity and, 1095–1096; Palestinian resistance groups spawned by, 1166; post-Zionist portrayal of, 1173; refugees resulting from, 1064; villages, destruction of, 1552–1553. See also War, 1948
- Naphtals, Fritz, 474
- al-Nashashibi, Fahri, 967
- al-Nashashibi, Ragib, 967–968, 971, 1127
- Nashashibi family, 80, 302, 718, 884, 892, 968, 1126
- Nashe, Mustapha, 261
- al-Nashshar, Isa, 486
- Nasir, Hanna, 1080

- al-Nasir, Jamal 'Abd and Nasirism, 968–970; Aswan High Dam, construction of, 356, 969; Czech arms deal, 968–969; death of, 357, 969; fiḍa'iyyun, formation of, 116–117, 184; and Germany, negotiations with, 435–436; ideology of, 1222; inter-Arab rivalry and, 88, 89; Lavon Affair (1954), response to, 116; League of Arab States, leadership of, 857; legacy of, 969; nationalist ideology of, 112, 476, 968; negotiations with Israel, 84; Non-Aligned Movement (NAM), organization of, 969; Palestinian refugees, dealings with, 421; PLO, founding of, 969, 1064; popularity of throughout the Arab world, 969; seizure of private land near, challenges to, 1009; Straits of Tiran, closure of to Israeli shipping, 1420, 1572, 1574; Suez Canal, nationalization of, 356, 969, 1396, 1494; support of PLO, 52, 95, 96; suppression of Muslim Brotherhood, 118
- Nasir, Kamal Butros, 201, 956, 967, 970
- Nasirism. See al-Nasir, Jamal 'Abd, and Nasirism
- Nasir, Nabiha, 196
- Nasrallah, Hassan, 661
- Nassar, Najib, 970
- Nasser, Gamal Abdel. See al-Nasir, Jamal 'Abd and Nasirism
- Natan-Zada, Eden, 799
- National Alliance (1983), 99, 317, 399, 573, 574, 970–971, 1080–1081, 1287
- National Bloc Party, 77, 971, 1128
- “National Camp List,” 1490
- National Coalition for Transparency and Accountability, 1098
- National Committee of Arab High-School Pupils, 196
- National Committee of the Arab Local Municipal Councils, 850
- National Council for Young Israel (NCYI), 38
- National Defense Party, 77, 303, 967, 968, 971, 1128
- National Democratic Alliance. See Balad Party (National Democratic Alliance)
- National Development Areas, creation of, 1683
- “National Farms,” 1062
- National Guidance Committee (NGC), 972, 1080, 1110, 1351, 1552
- National institutions. See Israeli national institutions
- National Insurance Institute (NII), 738, 972–974
- National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council, 406
- National Jewish Movement. See Herut Party
- National Liberation League, 971, 974–975, 1079, 1109, 1492, 1493
- National Palestinian Fund. See Palestine National Fund (PNF)
- National parks: City of David National Park, 560, 1391–1393; Ein Tzurim, 178, 1336, 1338, 1374, 1556; in and around the Old City, Jerusalem, 560, 1336, 1338–1339; Walls of Jerusalem National Park, 1391
- National Political Action Committee (NATPAC), 29
- National Reconciliation Document. See Prisoners' Document (2006)
- National Religious Party (NRP), 445, 470, 495, 572, 685, 689, 740, 760, 827, 930, 942, 975, 1224, 1370, 1437, 1438, 1464
- National Union Party, 370, 887, 959, 976–977, 1024, 1088, 1438, 1464, 1650, 1658
- National Union–Yisrael Beiteinu, 959
- National unity government. See Mecca Agreement and the Palestinian unity government
- National Unity Party (Ichud leumi), 470
- National Water Carrier project, 89, 777, 843, 1420, 1518–1519; as contributing factor to 1967 War, 1572, 1573; Fatah attack on, 393. See also Johnston Plan (1956); United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO)
- Nation of Islam (NOI), 35
- al-Natshe, Shaykh Abdel Khaliq, 1184
- Natshe, Rafiq, 977
- Natshe Document (2004), 502, 977
- Natzerat Illit (Jewish Upper Nazareth), 977–979, 1089, 1471
- Navon, Benjamin, 330
- Navon, Yitzhak, 1309
- Nazareth, 979–981; Ayn Mahil, access to, 979; Basilica of the Annunciation, 971, 981–983; under the British Mandate, 980; economic significance of, 980; general strike in to protest Israeli land acquisition policies, 850; holy sites in, 1675; infrastructure, inadequacies of, 978; Islamist extremists in, 982; Israeli seizure of, 1948 War, 1566; Jewish settlement in, 828; mayoral election, threats based on outcome of, 1656–1657; monument to Palestinian refugees in, 1656; mosque in, controversy over construction of, 981–983, 1550; and Natzerat Illit, discrimination between, 978–979, 981; in 1948 War, 980; Palestinian population of, 979; secular history of, 979–980; and third millennium of Christianity, celebration of, 1657; “undesirables,” expulsion of, 980; Zayyad, Tawfiq, election of, 1656–1657
- Nazis: comparison of to Arabs, 549, 551; Eichmann, Adolf, kidnapping and trial of, 549, 550, 848, 951, 1577, 1579; genocide against European Jews, 44, 549, 610; Himmler, Heinrich, identification of, 541; LEHI-proposed alliance with, 891, 1406, 1445; rise of, and surge in immigration to Israel, 1673. See also Holocaust
- Ne'eman, Yuval, 1437
- Ne'emany Har HaBayit. See Temple Mount Faithful (Ne'emany Har HaBayit)
- Negev Nuclear Research Center (Dimona). See Nuclear program, Israel
- Nehru, Jawaharlal, 997
- NELED (Women for Coexistence), 288, 983
- Neoconservatives, U.S., 37, 46, 53, 225, 227, 255, 256, 328, 983–984, 1175, 1525
- Neo-Nazi groups, 35
- Nesher Cement Company, 1123, 1125

- Netanyahu, Benjamin, 710, 985–986, 1473; address to joint session of U.S. Congress (1996), 1540; and attempted assassination of Khalid Meshal, 933; corruption under, 985; election of, 402, 659; financial support, sources of, 950; governing coalition, parties comprising, 986; Hasmonean Tunnel, opening of, 505, 1440, 1635; and Hebron settlements, 536; as Israel's foreign minister, 985; Likud Party, leadership of, 443, 883, 888, 1641; meeting with Yasir Arafat, 1635; opposition to Oslo Accords, 57–58, 86, 300, 462, 608–609, 985, 1050; outposts established under, 1293; “peace with security,” 1425; and Syria, relations with, 1424–1425; terrorism, tough stance on, 985, 1451; Third Temple Movement, support for, 1453; U.S. neoconservative support for, 225, 965; West Bank settlements, expansion of, 341, 1320; Wye River Memorandum (1998), signing of, 1050
- Neturei Karta, 51, 986–987
- Neve Dekalim settlement, 1328
- Neve Shalom/Wahat al-Salam, 987
- New Force Movement, 138
- New Hebrew Nation, 1153
- New historians, 405, 683, 987–994; coining of the term, 987–988; emergence of the new history, 989–990; individuals and contributions from, 990–992; traditional historians vs., 990, 992–993; Zionist mega-narrative as basis for Jewish Israeli history, 988–989
- New Israel Fund, 327, 994
- New Jewish Agenda, 327
- New Kach Movement, 799
- New Profile (The Movement for the Civilization of Israeli Society), 288, 293, 294, 994–995, 1249
- New Zionist Organization (NZO), 641, 721–722, 995
- Niebuhr, Reinhold, 257
- Niles, David K., 1478
- Nili (Netzah Yisrael Lo Yeshaker), 1, 995, 1171, 1654
- Nimr, Walid, 1287
- Nisanov, Rabbi David, 1224
- Nishul*, 1466, 1469, 1471, 1473–1474
- Nixon, Richard Milhous, 28, 357, 405, 823, 995–996, 1296, 1540, 1591
- Nixon Doctrine, 631, 823
- Noel, Cleo, 201
- Nof Tziyon, 562
- Noga*, 288, 996
- Non-Aligned Movement (NAM), 52, 446, 997
- Nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), 274, 275–276, 628, 655, 1101, 1619; advocacy and lobbying by, 275; Danish support for, 1306–1307; donor support for, 276; growth of, 275; health care services, provision of, 276; and the Palestinian National Authority, relations with, 275–276, 1101; Palestinian Network for Non-Governmental Organizations, 451; professionalization of, 275; resistance against the Occupation, 876–877; and self-government, new issues and organizations, 276; transition from nationalist to professional work, 275. See also Civil society, West Bank and Gaza
- Nongovernmental Organizations Forum, 54
- Nonviolence in Israel/Palestine, 127, 997–999; during al-Aqsa Intifada, 63–64, 1436; checkpoints, monitoring of (MachsomWatch), 248, 288, 898, 997; Christian Peacemaker Teams (CPTs), 261, 451, 534, 998; First Intifada as, 57; grassroots resistance to Barrier, 169; international efforts, 998; International Nonviolence Conferences (2005, 2006), 998; Israeli context, 997; joint Israeli-Palestinian efforts, 998; Palestinian Center for the Study of Non-Violence, 998, 1083, 1436; Palestinian context, 997–998; punishment for involvement in, 1435–1437; refusal movement, 291–294, 880, 997, 1592; Sabeel, 256, 260, 1277; tax revolt, Bayt Sahur, 1436–1437. See also Grassroots international activism; Israeli peace movement; Refuseniks/refusal movement
- Nonviolence International, 1083
- Non-Zionists, 48, 902, 1171
- Nordau, Max Simon, 999–1000, 1630, 1631–1632, 1668
- Northern Californians for Good Government, 29
- Norway, 940, 1304–1305; asylum for Mordechai Vanunu, rejection of, 1546; Boycott Israel campaign, 1307; coordination of Temporary International Presence in Hebron (TIPH), 1442; Holst, Johann Juergen, 554–555, 1272; mediation, as component of foreign policy, 1304; Mossad killing of Moroccan waiter in Lillehammer by mistake, 951, 952, 1285, 1446; in negotiations between Israel and the PLO, 554–555; partition plan, support for, 1302; Roed-Larsen, Terje, 555, 1272, 1305; Stoltenberg, Thorvald, 1304, 1305; and U.S., relations with, 1304. See also Oslo Accords
- Norwegian Trade Union Centre for Social Science and Research (FAFO), 555
- Nosair, El Sayyid, 805
- Not in My Name, 450
- Novomeysky, Moses, 1122
- Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, 824
- Nuclear program, Israel, 184, 951, 1000–1002, 1520, 1579; as a deterrent, 1002; Dimona (Negev Nuclear Research Center), 815, 824, 1000, 1001–1002, 1545; France, involvement of, 409, 646, 1001, 1538; Kissinger's probe of, 823–824, 1521; Mordechai Vanunu's revelation of, 951, 1545–1547; non-introduction pledge, 824; and South Africa, cooperation with, 1002; subterfuge surrounding, 1001; UN oversight of, 1499, 1503; U.S. discussions re., 815–816, 824; U.S.-Israeli nuclear understanding, 824; weapons production, 1001–1002

- al-Nuqrashi, Mahmoud, 1569
 Nuseibeh-Ayalon Agreement (2002), 140, 1003–1004
 Nuseibeh family, 1004–1005
 Nuseibeh, Sari Anwar, 140, 778, 1002–1003
 Nutting, Jim, 756
- Obama, Barack, 869, 939, 941, 1299, 1307, 1319, 1320, 1334
- Obstructions, physical, 62–63
- Occupation, 1007–1016; “benign,” 1045; Breaking the Silence (Shovrim Shrika) photo exhibit, 207; building permits and, 219, 465, 1387, 1389; calls for end to, 288, 379; closed military zones (CMZs), 147, 247, 285–286; critics of, 185; demographic concerns, 322; effects of, 207; emergency decrees, use of, 1008; final solution, Israeli reluctance to accept, 1012–1013; force, 1031–1014; Gaza, resistance to, 422; Greater Land of Israel Movement as justification for, 459–460, 1322, 1325, 1332; Hamas struggle against, 487–489; international law and, 716, 1008, 1016; Israeli security and, 293; legal case for, 1007–1008; long-term closure of, 1012; as a new kind of governance, 1011–1012; nonviolent resistance against, 876–877; Oslo Accords and, 1010–1011; Ottoman Law of 1858, Israel’s use of, 1054, 1224, 1250, 1313, 1401–1402; Palestinian economy, effects of, 344–353, 1035; Palestinian health care and, 507–508; Palestinian resistance against (jihād), 486, 644; Palestinian rights and, 1007; Palestinians born under, 1007; Palestinians with Western citizenship, entry of, 323; Palestinian territories, 1007–1014; rationale for, 1011; settlements, use of, 1008–1010; Shministim protest against, 1380; silent protests against, 1627; space, fragmentation of, 1012; suspended vs. spectacular violence, 1014; suspension of rules, uncertainty and, 1012; Syrian territory, 1007, 1014–1015; temporariness as a ruling strategy in, 1012; time, 1012–1013; Venice Declaration (1980), 379, 410–411, 439, 1068, 1550–1551
- Occupied Territories, 1016–1017; bypass roads, 844, 936, 1010; Communists in, 1078–1079; day-to-day life in, international witness accounts of, 450–451; decision-making for governance of, 1580–1581; East Jerusalem, 1016; education in, 600; energy, sources and supply of, 595–597; exit permits, 247; farmers, PLO assistance to, 220; Galili Protocols, 413–414; Gaza Strip, 1007, 1016–1017; Hamas, rise of, 640; health care in, 220–221, 511, 599; human rights abuses in, monitoring of, 1095, 1649 (see also B’Tselem); infrastructure in, 595–606; international law, applicability of, 1615; Internet, access to, 601; Israel Defense Forces, control of, 647–648; Israeli annexation of, 762, 1323; and Israeli policies following UN denunciation of Zionism, 52; Israeli rule over defined by military presence, 1472; Israeli siege of, 1382–1384; Jewish National Fund, role of, 768; Jewish settlements in (see Settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip); law enforcement in, failure of, 1353 (see also Shamgar Commission); and Lebanon War, effects of, 876–877; life expectancy in, 507; limited self-rule, economics of, 347, 349–350; military camps, location of, 844; military orders governing, 1472; olive trees in, 1021, 1331; Palestinian autonomy in, Reagan Plan’s proposal for, 1231–1232; Palestinian residents of, 386, 387–389, 1322, 1323; PLO expulsion from, 876; poverty rate in, 169, 248, 425; public expenditures in, 348; public opinion polls re., 752; Quartet call for withdrawal from, 1200; ratio of Israeli power to Palestinian power in, 963; roads, 601–602; settlement of refugees from Lebanon, 876–877; Shin Bet operatives in, 1378, 1379; soldiers’ refusal to serve in, 290, 292–293, 295, 1249, 1592; State Land, declarations of, 1329; in Syria, 1007, 1014–1015; telephone service, 600–601; Temple Mount as, 1438; term, as a political concept, 1615; territorial link between (safe passage), 1223, 1257, 1362, 1427, 1636; UN debate concerning (1976), 406; waste management in, 374–375, 597–598; water resources and access, 598–599, 1010, 1016, 1593, 1602; West Bank, 1007, 1016; Yesha rabbis, 1646–1649. See also Gaza Strip; West Bank
- October War (1973), 357–358, 1017, 1421
- Odeh, Alex, 804
- ‘Odeh, Fahed Bachar, 1345
- Ofra settlement, 1324, 1329
- Oil: and Fatah, growth of, 395; political influence and, 435; sale of to Israel by Iran, 632; and shaping of U.S. foreign policy in the Middle East, 357, 362, 385, 1478; use of as a political instrument by Saudi Arabia, 1296–1297; U.S.-sponsored Syrian pipeline, acts of sabotage against, 1418
- Oil embargo (1973), 16, 385, 639, 825, 832, 996, 1017, 1189, 1296, 1579
- Old City, Jerusalem, 1017–1020; Armenian Quarter, 1018–1019, 1429; A-Tur (Mount of Olives), 561; Christian Quarter, 738, 740, 1018; Church of the Holy Sepulcher, 263, 564, 731, 739; Company for the Rehabilitation and Development of the Jewish Quarter, 1335–1336; Damascus Gate, 559, 1018; defined, 1017; Dung Gate, 1017; forceful removal of Palestinians from, 135; Hasmonean Tunnel, 126, 388, 497, 505, 559, 740–741, 1023, 1440, 1635–1636; Herod’s Gate, 559, 826, 1018, 1338; Holy Basin, 69, 155, 555–563, 748, 1373, 1386, 1429; holy sites, proliferation of, 1018; human cordon around, Israeli efforts to build, 1226; Isaac’s Tent, excavations of, 560; Israeli attempt to capture, 1948 War, 1567; Israeli control of, 1967 War, 1571, 1583; Israeli plan to control territories surrounding, 1386; Jaffa Gate, 560, 1018; “Jerusalem Envelope,” 555–556; Jewish

- claim to, 452; Jewish population in, 737; Jewish Quarter, 738, 740–741, 770–771, 1018, 1429; Jewish Quarter Development Company (JQDC), 135, 770–771; Jewish Quarter Renovation Company, 1341; Lion's Gate, 1018; map of, 1019; modern history of, 1018; The Mufti's Grove, 561; Mughrabi Gate, 557, 559; Muslim Quarter, 560, 738, 739–740, 826, 1018, 1465; national park area around, 560, 1336; New Gate, 1018; occupation of through history, 1017; Ohel Yitzhak excavation, 559; population density, 1018; poverty in, 1018; preservation of, 560; shared sovereignty of, 748; sifting sites, 562; Temple Mount, 1438–1441; Torat Cohanim, 1465; walls enclosing, 741, 1017–1018; Western Wall Tunnel, 559, 1336, 1341, 1440–1441; Zion Gate, 1018
- Old Guard, 102, 127, 301, 424, 621, 1020, 1099, 1218, 1432, 1589. See also Returnees
- Olim*, 17
- Olive trees, uprooting of, 374, 649, 1020–1022, 1331, 1347
- Olmert, Ehud, 408, 500, 556, 660, 889, 950, 1022–1026, 1473; Convergence Plan, 226–227, 294–295, 714, 1023–1024, 1526; corruption, charges of, 890, 1025; disengagement policy, 1011; Gadish Committee (land reform), establishment of, 709; Israel's unilateral disengagement from Gaza, support for, 1022; Kadima Party, leadership of, 800, 1022; as mayor of Jerusalem, 738, 1022, 1023; pledge to freeze settlement activity, 1055, 1319; prime ministership, 1023–1025; roadblocks, offer to remove, 1264; Road Map for Peace, support of, 1025; Third Temple Movement, support for, 1453; war in Gaza, 1023, 1024; war in Lebanon, 227, 1023, 1024–1025
- Olympic Games, Munich (1972). See Munich Olympics (1972), massacre at
- Omer, Mohammed, 65
- One Israel Party, 444, 985, 1026
- One Nation Party, 445, 1026
- One-state solution, 1141–1142
- One Voice–Jewish Women for Israel, 38–39
- On One Foot: A Middle East Guide for the Perplexed or How to Respond on Your Way to Class, When Your Best Friend Joins an Anti-Israel Protest*, 26
- Open spaces. See Green areas
- Operation An-Far (1948), 1567
- Operation Autumn Clouds (2006), 68, 716, 1024, 1027, 1039, 1040–1042
- Operation Big Pines (1982), 871, 1026–1027, 1365
- Operation Black Arrow. See Gaza Raid (1955)
- Operation Cast Lead (2008–2009), 61, 68, 661–662, 1027–1033, 1162; and agricultural sector, impact on, 1600; air strikes, 1029; collaborators, use of, 1029; conditions and events leading up to, 299, 427, 1027–1028, 1032, 1042; consequences of, 1030–1032; deaths, 56, 427, 492, 716, 127, 890, 1028, 1032; defined, 1027; electrical outages during, 597; excessive force, accusations of, 1031; health care, effects on, 600; homes, destruction of, 1030–1031; humanitarian catastrophe created by, 1027; Karni crossing, closure of, 812; medical personnel, death and injury of, 66; official inquiry into, 1031; one-sidedness of, 1032; operation described, 1028–1030; Palestinian tactics used against, 1028–1029; published testimonies by soldiers who fought in, 1031; purpose of, 1027; Rafah Crossing, closure of, 1215; reasons for, 1011; as self-defense, 1032; unconventional weapons, use of, 1029–1030, 1032
- Operation Cedar (1948), 1564
- Operation Cleansing the Leaven (1948), 1562
- Operation Cypress (1948), 1566
- Operation Dani (1948), 1221, 1567
- Operation Days of Penitence (2004), 61, 1027
- Operation Defensive Shield (2002), 61, 1014, 1033–1034, 1035, 1036, 1218, 1271, 1368; and Barrier, decision to build, 163; Battle of Jenin, 725–729, 1175–1176, 1368; Church of the Nativity, siege of, 61, 193, 701, 1034; consequences of, 63, 1034; curfew during, 297; deaths, 1034; objective of, 1033; operation described, 1033–1034; opposition to, 179, 381; reasons for, 1033, 1034; stated goals, 1033; U.S. support of, 225, 1175
- Operation Dekel (1948), 980
- Operation Determined Path (2002), 61, 63, 225, 297, 1034–1035, 1036, 1175
- Operation Desert Storm (U.S.). See Gulf War
- Operation Dove, 998
- Operation Fait Accompli (1949), 1569
- Operation Grapes of Wrath (1996), 410, 1036
- Operation Hiram (1948), 991, 1568
- Operation Hot Winter (2007), 61, 68, 963, 1041
- Operation Joshua (1985), 1230
- Operation Journey of Colors (2002), 61, 225, 1033, 1034–1035, 1036–1038, 1175, 1271
- Operation Kinneret (1955), 1518
- Operation Litani (1978), 823, 871, 1038, 1609
- Operation Misparayim (1948), 1562
- Operation Nachson (1948), 1564
- Operation Orchard (2007), 1426
- Operation Palm Tree (1948), 1566
- Operation Peace for Galilee. See Operation Big Pines (1982)
- Operation Policeman (1948), 1566–1567
- Operation Protective Wall (2002), 61
- Operation Rainbow (2004), 61, 1027, 1038–1039, 1040–1042, 1162
- Operation Scroll (1993), 110
- Operation Springtime of Youth (1973), 956

- Operation Summer Rains (2006), 68, 232, 426, 603, 716, 1024, 1027, 1039–1040, 1162, 1186, 1260
- Operation Susannah (1954), 854–855
- Operation Warm Winter (2008), 61
- Operation Winery (1948), 1568
- Operation Wrath of God (1972), 889, 955–956, 1446
- Operation Yiftah (1948), 1280
- Operation Yoav (1948), 1470, 1567, 1568
- Operation Zarzir (1947), 1434
- Order of Ancient Maccabees, 1654
- Oren, Mordechai, 905
- Organization of African Unity, 52
- Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC), 1296
- Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), 1192, 1448
- Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), 385, 825, 1303, 1579
- Oriental Jews. See Mizrahi
- Orient House, 61, 94, 1044
- Orr, Akiva, 906
- Orthodox Institute for Public Affairs (IPA), 38
- Orthodox Judaism: Haredi, 498, 986, 1369, 1535, 1651; among Mizrahi, 942; National Religious Party (NRP), 445, 470, 495, 572, 685, 689, 740, 760, 827, 930, 942, 975, 1224, 1370, 1437, 1438, 1464; Neturei Karta, 51, 986–987; Shas party, 366, 398, 445, 933, 986, 1088, 1173, 1369–1371, 1437; Torah and Shabbat Judaism, 1465; Yesha rabbis, 1646–1649; Zionism, opposition to, 986, 1662, 1667, 1680
- Orthodox Youth Movement, 259
- Oslo Accords, 85–86, 125, 279, 1044–1045; and administration of antiquities, 110; Arafat's participation in, 101; conflicting opinions about, 1052–1053; documents, list of, 1044–1045; effects of on the Israeli military court system, 674–675; expansion of Jewish settlements following, 462, 1473; Holst, Johan Juergen, role of, 554–555, 1272, 1305; Israeli chief negotiator, 1301; Israeli demands for changes to the Palestine National Charter, 1078, 1638, 1639; Nobel Peace Prize, 103; Occupied Territories, division and control of, 1010; organized opposition to, 1065, 1627–1628; Palestinian health care and, 508–509; Palestinian National Authority, establishment of, 1098; PLO signing of, 1075; provisions of, 57, 110, 1527; Roed-Larsen, Terje, role of, 555, 1272, 1305; Saudi support for, 1298; and UN resolutions, relation to, 1503, 1527
- Oslo Process, 86, 93, 102, 153, 262, 402, 657, 1045–1053, 1582; and al-Aqsa Intifada, effect on, 1145; Camp David Accords, 1051–1052; continuation of nishul under, 1473; cycle of violence following, 1053; Early Empowerment, 343–344; evaluation of, 1052–1053; failure to end Israeli Occupation, 428; Gaza-Jericho Agreement I, 414–416, 1049; Gaza-Jericho Agreement II, 416–418, 1049; and Hebron Massacre, effects of, 535–536, 1010; human rights, references to, 1246; and Israeli security concerns, 314; “Letters of Mutual Recognition,” 1048; motivations for, 1045–1047; Orient House, role of, 1044; Palestinian economy and, 427–428, 1105–1106; Palestinian perceptions of, 625; Rabin's participation in, 1207–1208; Taba Talks, 1045, 1051, 1427–1430; Temple Mount, status of, 1440; withdrawal of Israel from Gaza and Jericho, 1048–1050; world reaction to, 1045. See also Declaration of Principles (DOP); Interim Agreement
- Oslo I. See Declaration of Principles (DOP)
- Oslo II. See Interim Agreement
- Osterman, Helmut. See Avnery, Uri
- The Other Israel*, 1053
- The Other Side of the Coin*, 137
- Other Zionism, 1147–1151
- Otte, Marc, 380
- Ottoman Empire, 1054; Acre, control of, 10; archaeology in Palestine under, 104–106; division of following World War I, 207, 296, 457, 541–542, 609, 1234, 1290–1291, 1613, 1671; Hashemite revolt against, 1670–1671; Jerusalem in, 733; Jewish immigration, response to, 50; Jews in, treatment of, 49; Land Law of 1858, 209, 1054, 1224, 1250, 1313, 1401–1402; Tanzimat, 365, 1434; Young Turk Revolution against, 1632
- Oudeh, Mohammed, 956
- Outposts, 762, 1010, 1055–1059, 1311; Bruchin, 1056; defined, 1055, 1292; dismantling of, Road Map requirements for, 1055, 1265; around East Jerusalem, Israeli plan for, 1226; Emunah, 1293; evacuation of, 1056, 1379; expansion of, 1056; in the Jordan Valley, 790, 795; map of, 1057; Migron, 1056–1058, 1293; Nahal units, defense of, 21, 795, 1323; Nof Harim, 1292–1293; Pisgat Yaakov, 1293; in Ras al-Amud neighborhood, 1225; reasons for establishing, 1055–1056, 1471; Sasson Report (2005), 1055, 1056, 1291–1294; settler violence and, 1058; unauthorized, removal of, 67, 1026; in the West Bank, 1055, 1322, 1326, 1330; Yitzhar, 1058
- Overgrazing, 373, 374
- Oz, Amos, 518, 519, 551, 683, 778, 1051, 1059
- Oz Veshalom-Netivot Shalom, 1059
- Packard, David, 824
- Pale of Settlement, 180, 1061, 1661
- Palestine: administrative capital of, 1220 (see also Ramla); British control in (see British Mandate in Palestine); climatic variation, 372–373; Declaration of Independence, 101, 305, 311–312, 360, 877–878, 1002, 1064, 1168, 1170, 1482, 1534; Declaration of Statehood in Exile, 311; Judaization of, 172–173, 310; national currency, absence of, 349; national movements, rise of, 273; portrayal of as “a land without a people,” 49, 144, 172, 852, 1323, 1467, 1668–1669; pre-1948, religious and ethnic communities in, 1250–1254

- Palestine Anti-Zionism Society, 1095
 Palestine Arab Workers Society (PAWS), 1126
 Palestine Archaeological Museum (The Rockefeller Museum), 109
 Palestine Border Guards, 116, 117
 Palestine Central Council (PCC), 1061–1062, 1065
 Palestine Communist Party, 290, 975, 1079, 1128, 1349. See also Arab-Palestine Communist Party
 Palestine Conciliation Commission. See United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine (UNCCP)
 Palestine Economic Policy Research Institute, 1062
 Palestine Electric Company, 1634
 Palestine Electricity Corporation, 1601
 Palestine Executive Committee. See Palestine Liberation Organization Executive Committee Palestine Foundation Fund, 209
 Palestine Jewish Colonization Association (PICA), 755, 1062, 1121, 1275
 Palestine Land Development Corporation (PLDC), 495, 1062–1063, 1121, 1276
 Palestine Liberation Army (PLA), 118, 397, 399, 1063, 1064, 1585
 Palestine Liberation Front (PLF), 1063–1064, 1081, 1166, 1449, 1585, 1659; Achille Lauro hijacking, 9, 93, 231, 640, 1063, 1069, 1659; Armed Struggle, role of in, 119, 1063; attempted raid on Israel, 222; in the Democratic Alliance (1983), 318, 573, 1063, 1168; establishment of, 99, 771, 1063, 1065, 1167; foiled attack on Nizanim beach (1990), 92–93; support for UN recognition of PLO, 122
 Palestine Liberation Front–Path of Return (PLA–PA), 582
 Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), 1064–1075; Aden–Algiers Accord, 11, 971, 1653; and Arab states, relationship with, 89–90, 93, 101, 176, 1069–1071, 1082; Basic Law, 1075, 1077; Cairo Agreement (1969), 89, 863–864, 938, 1587; Camp David Accords, opposition to, 91, 98, 123; Camps’ War, 237–238, 395, 875, 1188; changing objectives of, 1066–1068; Communist Party, failure to recognize, 1657; corruption in, 97, 102, 161, 1020; decline of, 878–879, 1072–1073; defeat in Lebanon, 128, 237; Democratic Alliance, challenge to, 1168; designation of as sole, legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, 16, 85, 90, 97, 122, 366, 1047, 1065, 1067, 1205, 1300, 1372, 1488, 1522, 1581; disintegration of, 873–874; European powers, support of, 1071–1072; evacuation of from Beirut (1982), 98, 399; Executive Committee (see Palestine Liberation Organization Executive Committee); in exile after 1982, 875–876; expulsion of from Jordan, 97, 121, 128, 200; factions within, 88; Force 17, 9, 133, 397, 405, 1100, 1178, 1179, 1285, 1286 (see also Presidential Guard); founding of, 52, 118, 366, 862, 969, 1064, 1077, 1573; funding for operations of (Palestine National Fund), 1080; groups split from, 970; history and evolution of, 117, 1064–1065, 1578; Husayn-Arafat Agreement (1985), 91–92, 99, 100, 199, 573–574, 785, 789, 1068, 1230, 1232; Information Office (U.S.), 1075–1076; international recognition of, 97, 1067, 1110, 1206, 1678; and Iraq, support for in Gulf War, 92–93, 101, 360, 466–467, 468, 640, 817, 838, 878, 1072, 1305, 1482; and Islamic Jihad, relations with, 645; and Israel, relations with, 101, 360, 424, 871, 1071–1072, 1483, 1522; Israeli Palestinians, disregard for, 1089; Israel’s right to exist, recognition of, 52, 57, 92, 101, 124, 424, 877–878, 1300; and Jordan, relations with, 91–92, 99; land sales to Jews, criminality of, 135; Lebanon War, effects of, 873–874, 1067, 1068–1069; Madrid Conference, exclusion from, 878, 900–901, 1169, 1356, 1482, 1522; Madrid Conference, impact on, 93, 101, 125, 1072–1073; media label as terrorist organization, 1446; military wing. (see Palestine Liberation Army); Milkart Protocols (1973), 937–938; National Council (see Palestine Liberation Organization National Council); nonalignment policy, 640; National Covenant, 232; observer-member status, United Nations, 90, 97, 122, 1067, 1300, 1489, 1498, 1527; Occupied Homeland Bureau, 1491; Old Guard, 102, 127, 301, 424, 621, 1020, 1099, 1218, 1432, 1589; Oslo Accords, opposition to, 1065; Oslo Accords, signing of, 1075; Palestinian National Authority as replacement for, 1073; Palestine Research Center, 1080, 1082, 1301; parliament-in-exile (see Palestine Liberation Organization National Council); peace initiatives, Israeli propaganda to discredit, 1069; PFLP’s distrust of, 1168; policy, framework for establishing, 1066; political headquarters in Jerusalem (Orient House), 61, 94, 1044; recognition of by Christian organizations, 258; recognition of by Progressive List for Peace (PLP), 1187; refusal to expel Abu al-Abbas, 1534; return of to Palestinian soil, 878, 1098, 1483; reunification of, 1653; rise of, impact on inter-Arab relations, 89–90, 176; secret CIA contact with, 8, 824–825; secret talks with Israel, 101, 279, 360, 424, 1305, 1483, 1522; secular orientation of, 643, 645, 1072; social institutions established by, 237, 1080; Sons of Martyrs, 1398; Soviet Union, relations with, 945, 946, 1072, 1589–1590; structure of, 1065–1066; Syria, relations with, 98–99, 938, 1420, 1422, 1431; terrorism, justification for, 201; terrorism, renunciation of, 91, 101, 125, 231, 312, 1048, 1069, 1300, 1446, 1482; transformation of following 1967 War, 1586–1587; truce with Israel brokered by U.S. (1981), 871; two-state solution,

---

Volume 1: pages 1–582

Volume 2: 583–1204

Volume 3: 1205–1684

- Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) (continued) support for, 52, 90, 100, 138, 311, 423, 477, 1069, 1077–1078, 1167, 1446, 1488, 1589; Tunis headquarters, 9, 98, 100, 123, 622, 875, 1010, 1258, 1305; Tunisian interlude, 1482–1483; UN mission, U.S. ban on operation of, 1503, 1527; United States–Palestine Liberation Organization Dialogue, 3, 92, 222, 312, 423, 640, 878, 1069, 1304, 1534–1535; and U.S., relations with, 6, 124–125, 220–221, 293, 1076; willingness to accept existence of Jewish state, 1677. See also Arafat, Yasir; Shuqayri, Ahmad
- Palestine Liberation Organization Central Council, 160
- Palestine Liberation Organization Executive Committee, 2, 96, 222, 440, 1065, 1075, 1195, 1301, 1534, 1659
- Palestine Liberation Organization National Council (PNC), 2, 92, 99, 100, 122, 1068–1069, 1076–1077, 1081, 1482, 1491, 1588; calls for an independent Palestinian state, 90, 231; convening of, 22; creation of, 1065; Declaration of Independence, adoption of, 311, 877–878; defined, 1076; election of PLO Executive Committee members, 96, 1075; Fatah representation in, 393; and Israel, recognition of, 639, 1512; land for peace resolution (1984), 1068; Occupied Territories, representatives from, 1076; Palestine Central Council, election of, 1062, 1076; Palestine National Charter, adoption of, 613, 1076; Palestine National Charter, amendments to, 1077, 1078, 1636, 1638, 1639, 1659; Palestine National Fund (PNF), establishment of, 835, 1080; Palestinian Democratic Union (FIDA), 3, 319, 1092–1093, 1110; peace process, participation in, 1076; purpose of, 1076; Supreme Military Council, 1605; Syrian participation in, 1420; “Ten Point Program,” adoption of, 1081; UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, acceptance of, 877
- Palestine Martyrs Works Society (SAMED). See SAMED
- Palestine Media Watch, 925, 977
- Palestine Monitor*, 1077
- Palestine National Charter, 613, 1064, 1075, 1076, 1077–1078, 1588, 1636, 1638, 1639, 1659
- Palestine National Council. See Palestine Liberation Organization National Council (PNC)
- Palestine National Front (PNF), 975, 1078–1080, 1110, 1492. See also United National Front (UNF)
- Palestine National Fund (PNF), 835, 1080
- Palestine Nationalist Movement, 1065, 1066, 1070
- Palestine National Liberation Front (PNLF), 1063
- Palestine National Liberation Movement. See Fatah
- Palestine National Salvation Front (PNSF), 92, 99, 237, 574, 867, 874, 971, 1080–1081, 1168, 1170
- Palestine National Union (PNU), 422
- Palestine Open University, 7
- Palestine Partition Commission. See Woodhead Commission (1938)
- Palestine: Peace Not Apartheid*, 241–242
- Palestine Popular Struggle Front (PPSF), 100, 639, 971, 1065, 1081, 1168
- Palestine Potash Company, 1122, 1125, 1634
- Palestine Press Service, 624
- Palestine question, settling of. See Jordanian option
- Palestine Rejection Front, 97–98, 477, 639, 1081–1082, 1168
- Palestine Research Center, 1080, 1082, 1301
- Palestine Royal Commission. See Peel Commission (1937)
- Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs (PASSIA), 1083
- Palestinian Arab Front (PAF), 1065
- Palestinian Armed Struggle. See Armed Struggle, Palestinian
- Palestinian Army, 117
- Palestinian Campaign for the Academic and Cultural Boycott of Israel, 450
- Palestinian Center for Democracy and Conflict Resolution, 998
- Palestinian Center for Human Rights (PCHR), 1083, 1306
- Palestinian Center for Policy and Survey Research (PSR), 1165
- Palestinian Center for the Study of Non-Violence, 998, 1083, 1436
- Palestinian Centre for Rapprochement between People (PCR), 63, 451, 998
- Palestinian Christian Liberation Theology Center. See Sabeel
- Palestinian Christians, 259–260, 1376–1377
- Palestinian cinema. See Cinema, Palestinian
- Palestinian citizens of Israel, 1083–1092; Al-Ard movement, 112–113, 573, 772, 980, 1154; Arabic language, inferior status of, 1086; Citizenship and Entry into Israel Law (1952), 322, 386; classification of as present absentees, 247, 297, 372, 543, 569, 767, 1176–1178, 1239, 1469–1470; conflicting loyalties of, 1579, 1585; Defense Emergency Regulations and, 1177; defined, 1083; democratic values, lack of, 1090; discrimination against, 1084–1085, 1086–1087, 1140–1141, 1675; ethnic cleansing, threats of, 1087; everyday life in a Jewish state, 1085–1086; exclusion of from Israeli institutions, 1086; family reunification, 386–389; forced expulsion of, calls for, 803; High Follow-Up Committee, 542; internal crisis faced by, 1089–1091; as internal refugees, 1176–1178, 1239, 1471; Israel as an ethnocracy, 693, 1084–1089; Koenig Memorandum (1976), 827–828, 850, 1177; land leases, prohibition against, 1675; land ownership, 706–707, 1088–1089, 1634; leadership, inadequacy of, 1090–1091; life expectancy, 1084; martial law, and property claims, 1177; military administration over, difficulties of, 1576; modernity, adapting to, 1089–1090; National

- Insurance Institute benefits available to, 973–974; national service, Israeli encouragement of, 542; since 1948, overview of, 386–387; percent of total population, 386; and Palestinian culture, exclusion from, 1090, 1091; and Palestinian residents of the Occupied Territories compared, 386, 387–389; partial identity, 1089; percent of total population, 386, 1084; policy implementation, inequities in, 1086–1087; political activity of, 1085, 1585; population growth, 1084; poverty among, 1084, 1089; prohibition from military service, 647; residency rights, deterioration of, 390; rights and freedoms of, 218, 1084–1085; spouses, securing citizenship for, 322; violence directed toward, 1087–1088; women, status of, 1089–1090
- Palestinian Communist Party (PCP), 573, 903, 975, 1065, 1109, 1492. See also Palestinian People's Party (PPP)
- Palestinian Company for Commercial Services (PCCS), 1105
- Palestinian Conflict Resolution Center, 998, 1092
- Palestinian Democratic Union (FIDA), 3, 319, 1092–1093, 1110
- Palestinian Department of Antiquities and Cultural Heritage, 110
- Palestinian Diaspora. See Diaspora, Palestinian
- Palestinian Economic Council for Development and Reconstruction (PECDAR), 555, 1093–1094, 1203, 1371
- Palestinian elections. See Elections, Palestinian
- Palestinian flag, 22, 404–405, 1046, 1094–1095
- Palestinian foreign nationals, 197, 323–324, 1212, 1213
- Palestinian Human Rights Information Center, 1345
- Palestinian Human Rights Monitoring Group, 1095
- Palestinian identity, 1095–1098, 1300; and discriminatory treatment in Arab countries, 1096; maintaining of, in Kuwait, 835; Nakba, role of, 1095–1096; in the Occupied Territories, returnees vs. local population, 1096–1097; Palestine as a symbol for Diaspora Palestinians, 1097; partial, among Palestinian citizens of Israel, 1089; protection of, 246; “refugee identity,” 1096; role of Palestinian media in formation of, 915; shahid (martyr), emergence of, 1096; significant events impacting, 1096; Western culture, intrusion of, 1090
- Palestinian Independent Commission for Citizens' Rights (PICCR), 1098, 1108
- Palestinian Initiative (al-Mubadara Al Wataniyya Al Filistiniyya), 161–162
- Palestinian Initiative for the Promotion of Global Dialogue and Democracy (MIPTAH), 1098
- Palestinian Institute of Archaeology, founding of, 110
- Palestinian Legislative Council (PLC), 2, 131, 160, 162, 512, 1095; constitution, writing of, 1101; described, 1100–1101; elections, Hamas victory in (2006), 127, 227, 232, 233, 284, 301, 368, 382, 426, 489–490, 621, 908, 1027–1028, 1039, 1052, 1100, 1107, 1185, 1189, 1213, 1260; eligibility to vote in, 735; first elections, 367; functioning of, 1101; media coverage of, 918; members currently imprisoned, 1180; reforms of specified in The Road Map to Peace, 1265
- Palestinian media. See Media, Palestinian
- Palestinian Ministry of Health (PMH), 510–511
- Palestinian Ministry of Higher Education, 1133
- Palestinian Ministry of Information, 917
- Palestinian National Authority (PNA), 101–103, 1098–1108; Abbas, Mahmud, 2–3, 233, 395; al-Aqsa Intifada, responsibility for, 61–62, 160; Chairman's Guard, 1100; checkpoints, 247–248; corruption in, 300, 301, 616, 625, 977, 1102, 1104, 1108, 1352; creation of, 57, 125, 1098, 1617; Declaration of Principles (DOP), establishment of, 312, 388, 613, 617; divisions within, 1184; educational system, transformation of, 353; establishment of, 1098–1099; European Union, relations with, 379, 382–383, 1213, 1214; failure of, forces contributing to, 1102–1107; and Fatah, relations with, 1099, 1213–1214; financial assistance to (Holst Fund), 555; financial embargo against, 908; functions of, 1106, 1145; Gang of Five, 131–132, 300, 414; Gaza-Jericho Agreement II, 1104, 1106–1107; General Intelligence Service, 1100; Hamas, relations with, 233, 1213, 1218; hamula, reliance on, 1102; Haniyeh, Ismail, 1213; health care, responsibility for, 508, 510–512; history and structure of, 1098, 1099–1102; international boycott of (2006), 1260; Israeli view of, 1099; and Israel's unilateral disengagement from Gaza, response to, 714, 715; judiciary, 1101–1102; land, water, and settlements, disconnect between Arafat's words and reality, 1103; legislative branch (see Palestinian Legislative Council); limited self-rule, 347, 349–350; Ministry of Social Welfare, 1384; monopolies controlled by, 1104–1105; nepotism, 1105; Oslo Accords, opposition to, 1102–1103; Palestinian Department of Antiquities and Cultural Heritage, 110; Palestinian Police Force, 1100; political patronage, 512, 1099, 1109, 1588; Presidential Guard, 1100, 1178–1179, 1213, 1214; Preventive Security Service (PSS), 299, 1100, 1218; security concessions, under Wye River Memorandum (1998), 1637–1638; Soviet Union, diplomatic relations with, 1281; Special Security Force/Military Intelligence, 1100; State Security Court, establishment of, 1102; transfer of responsibilities to (Early Empowerment), 343; violence, inability to prevent, 1103; and U.S., relations with, 1281; U.S. aid to, freezing of, 1213

- Palestinian National Initiative (2002), 161, 1108–1109
- Palestinian nationalism, 1065; Arab support for as a means of restoring national honor, 1190; Arafat as the symbol of, 103; archaeology and, 109; failure to destroy, 867; increased momentum, guerrilla operations and, 1066; Israeli efforts to weaken, 12, 872, 1026; Israeli occupation of Gaza (1956) and, 422; Lebanon War, effects of, 872, 876; National Guidance Committee (NGC), as expression of, 972; Palestinian flag, 22, 404–405, 1046, 1094–1095; rise of, 46, 52, 87, 1064; U.S. reaction to emergence of, 1521
- Palestinian National Security Council, 302
- Palestinian national unity government (2007). See Mecca Agreement and the Palestinian unity government
- Palestinian Network for Non-Governmental Organizations, 451
- “Palestinian Peace Document.” 1372
- Palestinian people: Armed Struggle, history of, 114–128, 130, 198, 613; autonomy, opposition to concept of, 1110, 1489; birthrate, efforts to increase, 321; disenfranchisement, struggle against, 1126–1131; displacement of to make room for Jewish immigrants, 49, 50, 107, 319; education, value placed on, 836; Golda Meir’s denial of, 1071; housing restrictions placed on, 570–571, 742; impact of Jewish settlements on, 1330–1332; inalienable rights of, 46; as Israeli citizens, 51, 1008; Israeli disdain for, 1262, 1264, 1615; Israeli land laws, harmful effects of, 708; Kuwait citizenship among, 836; “legalized discrimination” against, 46; migration of following 1948 War, 1064; municipal services, discrimination in, 742–743; national aspirations, Britain’s disregard for, 208, 213, 214; national identity, absence of, 127; permanent resident status, 1016; political rights, U.S. recognition of, 1299, 1300; population worldwide, 592; resident alien status, 1016; self-determination, right to, 49–50, 54, 57, 92, 101, 114, 122, 145, 208, 210, 258, 311, 314, 358, 379, 380, 422–424, 439–440, 487, 512, 610, 693, 1068, 1294, 1312–1313, 1468; self-reliance, efforts to increase, 56. See also Bedouin in Israel
- Palestinian People’s Party (PPP), 79, 131, 161, 318, 975, 1065, 1109–1111, 1168
- Palestinian poetry and poets, 1111–1118; Abdallah, Khaled, 1117; Abu Hawwash, Sammer, 1117; Ali, Taha Muhammad, 1112; el-Asadi, Saud, 1117; al-Ayla, Anas, 1117; al-Aziz, Youssef Abd, 1117; al-Barghouti, Mourid, 1117; Dahbour, Ahmad, 1117; Darwish, Mahmud, 305–306, 623, 1111, 1114, 1116; Elmusa, Sharif S., 1117; Ghanaïem, Mohammad H., 1117; Husayn, Rashid, 573, 1112, 1113; importance of as cultural expression, 305, 1111; Jabra, Jabra Ibrahim, 722–723, 1112; Al-Karmel journal, 807–808; al-Karmi, ‘Abd-al-Karim (Abu Salma), 808, 1112, 1484; Khazendar, Walid, 1117; Mahmud, Abd al-Rahin, 1112, 1484; al-Manasrah, Izzidin, 1117; Mansour, Khairi, 1117; Masalha, Salman, 1117; Nasir, Kamal Butros, 201, 956, 967, 970; nationalistic expression in, 1656; Qabbani, Nizar Tawiq, 623, 1115–1116; al-Qasim, Samih, 1112, 1114; recurring themes, 1111–1112; “resistance” poetry, origins of, 1112; al-Theeba, Ghazi, 1117; translation of into English, 1483; Tuqan, Fadwa, 1112, 1114–1115, 1483–1484; Tuqan, Ibrahim, 808, 1112, 1483, 1484; Wattad, Nizar, 1117; Zaqtan, Ghassan, 1117; Zayyad, Tarwîq, 980–981, 1113–1114, 1656–1657
- Palestinian Police Force, 1100
- Palestinian Political Prisoners Day, 1183
- Palestinian Population Registry, Israeli control over, 1016–1017, 1212
- Palestinian Press Law (1995), 917
- Palestinian Prisoners Society, 1182
- Palestinian Red Crescent Society, 66, 237, 728, 835, 1068, 1080, 1108, 1271, 1291, 1348, 1588
- Palestinian refugee property claims, 1118–1120
- Palestinian Resistance Movement, 1168
- Palestinian society: during the British Mandate (1920–1948), 1121–1124; dispossession, struggle against, 1126–1131; economic transformation (1920–1939), 1124–1125; economic transformation (1939–1945), 1125–1126; European interventionism, 1120–1121; family as the mainstay of, 1618–1619; hamula, concept of, 289, 386, 1089, 1129, 1618; non-kin-based forms of association, 1619; religious fundamentalism, rising influence of, 1218; 1930s and the Great Revolt, 1128–1129; middle class, growth of, 1125–1126; political and military collapse (1940–1948), 1129–1130; pre-1948, 1120–1132; UN partition plan and descent into war, 1130–1131; in the West Bank, 1618–1619
- Palestinian Society for the Protection of Human Rights and the Environment, 616
- Palestinian Students Union (PSU), 95
- Palestinian Unity Government, 162
- Palestinian universities, 1132–1133; access to, Israeli restrictions on, 1132; an-Najah National University, 1132, 1432; Arab-American University, 1132, 1432; Birzeit University, 106, 110, 160, 196, 608, 680, 681, 998, 1080, 1132, 1165, 1432, 1592; development of, 1132; faculty, exodus of, 1133; financial crisis facing, 1132–1133; Hebron University, 1132; human losses suffered by, 1132; Islamic University of Gaza (IUG), 1132; politicization of youth at, 1619; al-Quds University, 1132
- Palestinian Water Authority (PWA), 1594
- Palin, Major-General P. C., 1133
- Palin Commission (1920), 210, 333, 961, 1133. See also al-Nabi Musa Demonstrations (1920)
- Palmah, 413 1134, 1153; formation and evolution of, 482, 517, 646, 650; in Jewish Resistance

- Movement (JRM), 771; Operation Zarzir (1947), 1434; Rabin's service in, 1134, 1206; Safed, siege of (1948), 1280, 1418
- Pan-Islamic Congress. See Islamic Conference (1931)
- Pappé, Ilan, 989, 991–992, 1171, 1330, 1469
- Parents Against Silence, 654
- Parents' Circle (Bereaved Families' Forum), 1134–1135
- Paris Peace Conference (1919), 1, 76, 295–296, 820, 958, 1398, 1613, 1626, 1655
- Partition Resolution. See United Nations General Assembly Resolution 181
- Partnership for Peace Program, 382
- Party for Advancing the Zionist Idea, 1437
- Passfield, Lord (Sidney Webb), 1135
- Passfield White Paper (1930), 211–212, 576, 897, 898, 1126, 1127, 1128, 1130, 1135–1136, 1372, 1612, 1625
- The Passionate Attachment*, 146
- Peace: from the American point of view, 1136–1139; conflict resolution, 1144–1145; conflict settlement, 1144; “Current Options for Resolving the Conflict,” 1136–1139; ethical de-dichotomization, 1142–1143; from the Israeli point of view, 1139–1146; and justice, connection between, 1140; one-state solution, 1141–1142; organizations devoted to (see Israeli peace movement); “The Other Zionism: Reconciliation Attempts between Arabs and Jews in Palestine Prior to 1948,” 1147–1151; overtures by Arab states (1949–present), 83–86; from the Palestinian points of view, 1139–1143; “Peace and Justice,” 1139–1143; post-World War II conception of, 1140; reconciliation attempts prior to 1948 (“the Other Zionism”), 147–1151; “Settlement, Resolution, and Reconciliation,” 1143–1147; socio-emotional reconciliation, 1145–1146; three essays on, 1136–1147; two-state solution, 1141, 1144
- “Peace bands,” 82
- Peace Bloc. See Gush Shalom (the Peace Bloc)
- Peace movement. See Israeli peace movement
- Peace Now, 520, 1151–1152, 1293; conscientious objector movement and, 292, 293; demonstration, murder of Emil Greenzweig at, 470; emergence of, 680, 681; and peace process, failure of, 682, 693; roads, survey of, 1268; settlements, statistics re., 68–69, 790, 826, 844, 1025, 1311–1312; Settlement Watch Team, 1055, 1152
- Peace process: Egyptian-Israeli, 1422–1423; exclusion of PLO from, 1527; failure of, and the escalation of terrorism, 682–683; international support for, 617–618, 1485; Jerusalem, role of, 747–749; Palestinian National Initiative (2002), 161, 1108–1109. See also Madrid Conference (1991); Oslo Process
- Peel Commission (1937), 1152–1153, 1385, 1417, 1468; Arab Higher Committee, rejection of, 77; Arab Revolt and, 1126; Bludan Conference (1937) to discuss, 202; Churchill's appearance before, 263; Iraq, rejection of, 636; Jabotinsky, input of, 721–722; Jordanian option and, 788; Palestinian response to, 1129; partition plan, map of, 1152; partition plan, recommendations for, 82, 115, 182–183, 650, 779, 898, 1144, 1673; Woodhead Commission's examination of, 1628–1629
- Peled, General Mattityahu, 2, 649, 1134, 1153–1155, 1179, 1187, 1291, 1464, 1490
- Pelletreau, Robert, 1069, 1534
- People of the Book, 326. See also Dhimma/dhimmi
- The People's Voice. See Nuseibeh-Ayalon Agreement (2002)
- Peres, Shimon, 262, 1155–1157; assumption of prime ministership following Rabin's assassination, 57, 658, 1156; and Ben-Gurion, support for, 185; Husayn-Peres Agreement (1987), 85, 581–582, 785, 789, 1156, 1168; Israel's unilateral disengagement from Gaza, support for, 1156; Labor Party, leadership of, 841, 1155; Lavon Affair, 855, 1155; national reconciliation, call for, 1050; The New Middle East, 1106; Nobel Peace Prize, 103, 1155, 1206; Ofra settlement, approval of, 1324; Oslo Accords, association with, 1155, 1156, 1305; Palestinian National Authority, support for, 1156; “Peres's boys,” 1047, 1052; permission to assassinate Yahya Ayyash, 1362, 1451; and Syria, relations with, 1424
- Peretz, Amir, 25, 408, 445, 661, 1024, 1025, 1026, 1651
- Perle, Richard, 256, 328
- Permanent resident status, 1016
- Permits, 1157–1161, 1466, 1616; and al-Aqsa Intifada, 1159; Barrier and, 1159–1160; for building, 219, 465, 532, 742, 1158–1159, 1337, 1341–1342, 1387, 1389, 1473, 1535–1536; control of (Civil Administration), 271–272, 1158; denial of, 1160, 1535; for driving, 1159, 1269; for entry into East Jerusalem, 1157; Eretz Crossing, 377, 1158; exit, 247–248; family reunification and, 1158; for farming along the “seam line,” 1255; Gaza Strip, entry/exit, 424–425, 1210; general exit permit, revocation of, 1157–1158; for goods, 1159; history and mechanics of, 1157–1158; housing, Area C, 1683; individual, requirements for, 286–288, 1157; internal, for travel inside the West Bank, 147, 1010, 1157–1158; lack of, and house demolition, 528; for medical treatment, 1255; need for as obstacle to health care, 510, 1157; newspaper Permits, Defense Emergency Regulation 94, 315; and Palestinian economy, effects of, 1157; for Palestinians in Lebanon, 862; for permanent residence, 388; required for travel, 1255; security as justification for, 1160; Shawwa passports, 1372; temporary visitors', 487; time wasted because of, 1160; for travel between West Bank and Gaza, 1257; for wells, drilling of, 1594; for work, 58, 429, 682, 1159, 1255. See also Closure(s); Identity card(s)

Permits (continued)

Perrin, Francis, 1001

PFLP. See Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP)

Phalange, 680, 802, 864, 871, 1026, 1161, 1366

Philadelphian Route, 205, 362, 429, 1038, 1161–1163, 1210

Physicians for Human Rights–Israel (PHR–I), 508, 727, 1163–1164, 1306

Pikuach nefesh, Hebrew concept of, 930

Pilots' Letter (2003), 1164, 1249

Pinsker, Leon, 43, 572, 1164–1165

Pipes, Daniel, 33, 143

Pisgat Ze'ev settlement, 1320

Pittsburgh Platform of 1885, 48

Plan Dalet. See Dalet Plan/Plan Dalet

Planning and Construction Law (1965), 1535–1536

Plehve, V. K., 1667

PLO. See Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO)

PNA. See Palestinian National Authority (PNA)

PNC. See Palestine Liberation Organization National Council (PNC)

PNF. See Palestine National Front (PNF)

PNLF. See Palestine National Liberation Front (PNLF)

PNSF. See Palestine National Salvation Front (PNSF)

Po'ale Zion, 180, 186, 546, 841, 904, 931, 1165, 1361, 1430, 1665

Podhoretz, Norman, 328

Poets, Israeli. See Israeli poetry and poets

Poets, Palestinian. See Palestinian poetry and poets

Pogroms, 43, 44, 1054, 1061, 1087, 1164, 1661, 1667, 1670

Police brutality, Israeli Border Police, 203

Police Supervision, Defense Emergency Regulation 110, 315

Political action committees (PACs), pro-Israel, 27, 29–30

Political cartoons, 17

Political parties, Israeli: Agudat Yisrael (Association of Israel), 13–14, 316, 986, 1370, 1437, 1535; Ahdut Ha'avodah (Unity of Labor), 14, 179, 181, 546, 841, 904, 1217, 1361, 1430; Ahdut Ha'avoda-Po'alei Zion (Unity of Workers' Labor), 14, 18, 905; Am Ehad (One Nation Party), 25–26; Arab Democratic Party (ADP), 76–77, 1090, 1205; Balad Party (National Democratic Alliance), 79, 143–144, 196, 478, 1464; Center Party, 442; Degel HaTorah (Torah Flag), 316, 398, 1437, 1535; Gahal Party, 413, 539, 884, 1401, 1609; Gesher (Bridge) Party, 443–445, 882, 1026, 1490; Gil Party, 446; Herut

Party, 175, 413, 444, 459, 539–540, 884, 976, 1353, 1401, 1438, 1658; Ihud (Union Association of Palestine), 217, 588, 902, 1149; The Jewish Home, 986, 1438; Kach (Only Thus), 461, 497, 530, 756, 763, 799–800, 803, 805, 822, 1088, 1353, 1443, 1453, 1454, 1682; Kadima Party, 295, 446, 660, 685, 689, 800, 885, 1026, 1369, 1379, 1641, 1651; Labor Party, 14, 113, 179, 685, 686, 687–688, 841–842, 931, 986, 1207, 1217, 1577, 1642; Liberal Party, 413, 539, 884; Likud Party, 370, 413, 443, 460, 539, 685, 687, 689, 887–889, 905, 986, 1322, 1363, 1364–1365, 1367, 1438, 1490, 1579, 1641, 1652; Mapai (Israel Workers' Party), 113, 179, 182, 185, 186, 685, 686, 841, 904–905, 931, 1155, 1217, 1361, 1430, 1612, 1672; Mapam, 405, 504, 903, 905–906, 933, 1379, 1430, 1470, 1477; Meimad party, 930–931, 1026; Meretz Party, 445, 681, 905, 933, 1332, 1379, 1641; Moked, 903, 944, 1377; Moledet Party, 370, 566, 944, 950, 976, 1340, 1438, 1490, 1657; Moreshet Avot, 944; National Religious Party (NRP), 445, 470, 495, 572, 685, 689, 740, 760, 827, 930, 942, 975, 1224, 1370, 1437, 1438, 1464; National Union Party, 370, 887, 959, 976–977, 1024, 1088, 1438, 1464, 1650, 1658; National Unity Party (Ihud leumi), 470; One Israel Party, 444, 985, 1026; One Nation Party, 445, 1026; Party for Advancing the Zionist Idea, 1437; "pivotal party," role of, 689–690; Po'ale Zion, 180, 186, 546, 841, 904, 931, 1165, 1361, 1430, 1665; Progressive List for Peace (PLP), 138–139, 1154, 1187; Rafi (Israeli Workers Party), 185, 307, 841, 904, 1155, 1217; Ratz (Movement for Civil Rights and Peace), 23, 903, 905, 933, 1228, 1377, 1379; religious, 685; Renewed Religious Zionist Party (Ahi), 976; and settlements, 684–691; Shas, 366, 398, 445, 933, 986, 1088, 1173, 1369–1371, 1437; Shelli Party, 138, 903, 1154, 1377; Shinui Party, 905, 933, 1379, 1438; Social Democratic Party, 177; Tami (Movement for the Heritage of Israel), 1432, 1437; Tehiya Party, 462, 1391, 1437, 1489; Tekuma, 976, 1437–1438, 1658; Telem Party, 308, 1437, 1438; Tzomet party, 444, 1367, 1391, 1437, 1489–1490; United Torah Judaism, 13, 445, 986, 1535; Yachad Party (of Ezer Weizman), 179, 1609, 1641; Yachad Party (of Yossi Beilin), 1351, 1641–1642; Yisrael B'Aliya, 445, 888, 1360, 1438, 1649–1650; Yisrael Beitenu (Israel Is Our Home) party, 470, 885, 959, 976, 986, 1438, 1650–1651

Political parties, Palestine: Arab Movement for Change (AMC), 78–79; Arab Party (Councilists), 77, 80, 575, 1128; Da'am (Organization for Democratic Action), 299; Istiqlal Party, 77, 718, 971, 1128, 1197; Liberal Party, 884; National Bloc Party, 77, 971, 1128; National Defense Party, 77, 303, 967, 968, 971, 1128; Ra'am, 76, 1205–1206, 1464; Reform Party, 77, 1128, 1232–1233; Ta'al, 1205, 1464; Youth Congress, 77

- Political Zionism, 217, 572, 588, 1275, 1632
- Pollard, Jonathan, 446, 1002, 1442, 1638
- Polls and Palestinian public opinion. See Public opinion
- Pollution, air and water, 376, 1600. See also Environmental degradation
- Popper, Ami, 297
- Popular Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine. See Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine
- Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP), 368, 771, 944, 1081, 1110, 1166–1170, 1449, 1588, 1659; assassination of Mustapha al-Zabri and subsequent retaliation for, 60, 1169, 1653, 1658; August Program, 1166; Declaration of Principles, opposition to, 1048, 1169; and DFLP, split from, 318, 1166–1167; founding of, 8, 88, 117, 118, 475, 477, 479, 505, 506, 971, 1081, 1166, 1586; Habash, George, leadership of, 1166, 1167, 1168, 1169; al-Hadaf, 806; hijackings by, 90, 121, 128, 199, 201, 372, 477, 479–480, 818, 1167, 1586, 1653; infighting (1967–1969), 1166–1167; Iraqi support for, 638, 639; in Jordan, 97, 198, 1167; leadership inside the Occupied Territories, 1168–1169; Lebanon War (1982) and, 99–100, 1168; from Lebanon War (1982) to the First Intifada, 1168–1169; origins of, 1064, 1166; Oslo Process and, 1169–1170; Palestine Rejection Front, 1081; Palestinian resistance in Lebanon (1971–1982), 1167–1168; PLO, opposition to, 122, 1170; primary objective, 1166; Prisoners' Document, representation in, 1184; recruitment, refugee camps and, 1222; and Sa'iqa, emergence of, 1421 two-state solution, adamant opposition to, 1168
- Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine–General Command, 100, 399, 573, 639, 771, 822, 971, 1081, 1449, 1589, 1659; founding of, 1167, 1170; and Palestine Rejection Front, establishment of, 1168; PLO, opposition to, 1170; primary focus of, 1170; support for Syria's attacks on the PLO in Lebanon (1976), 1063; in Syria, 1424
- Popular Liberation War Pioneers. See Sa'iqa
- Popular Resistance, 117
- Populated-Area Exchange Plan. See Lieberman Plan
- Population. See Demography
- Porat, Hanan, 976, 1437
- Porush, Meir, 1535
- Positivism, 141
- Post-Zionism, 54, 1171–1174; defined, 117; history and evolution of, 1171–1172; Nakba, portrayal of, 1173; and Zionism, conflicts between, 1172–1173
- Poverty: in the Gaza Strip, 1027; in the Old City, Jerusalem, 1018; rate of in the Occupied Territories, 169, 248, 425, 1382, 1383–1384; among Palestinian Citizens of Israel, 1084, 1089; Palestinians in general, 69, 248, 345, 425, 629, 717, 1084, 1089; and suicide bombings, contributing factor to, 1410; and water, price of, 1593. See also Economy, Palestinian
- Powell, Colin Luther, 67, 102, 224, 380, 1174–1176, 1525
- Powell Doctrine, 1175
- Practical Zionism, 1632, 1665
- Premillennial dispensationalism, 255, 1460
- Presbyterian Church (USA), divestment efforts, 449–450; Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), 449; progressive engagement process, 450
- Prescription Law (1958), 677
- Present absentees, 247, 297, 372, 543, 569, 767, 1176–1178, 1239, 1469–1470
- Presidential Guard, 133, 397, 1100, 1178–1179, 1213, 1214. See also Force 17
- President's Commission on Remembering the Holocaust, U.S., 551
- Presidents Conference. See Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations (Presidents Conference)
- Prevention of Terrorism Ordinance (1948), 197
- Preventive Security Service (PNA), 299, 1100, 1218
- Primakov, Yevgeny, 946
- Principles of Peace, 2, 1179
- Prisoners and prison conditions, 1179–1184; administrative detention, 11–13, 1180, 1182; criminals vs. political prisoners, conditions compared, 1180; detention centers, number, location, and characteristics of, 1179; detention facilities, conditions inside, 1180–118; disparity in conditions between Israeli and Palestinian prisoners, 1180; exchanges, 1218; family committees, 1183; family visits, lack of, 1182, 1183; hunger strikes by prisoners, 1181, 1182–1183; identity cards, difficulty of obtaining, 585; during the Intifada, 1181–1182; International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), involvement of, 670, 1180, 1182, 1183; interrogation methods, 552, 668, 670–671, 1193, 1378; Ketziof Military Detention Center, 1181; Mandela Institute for Palestinian Prisoners, 903–904; mass arrests/detentions, 1180, 1182; medical treatment, lack of, 1182; military camps, 1179; Oslo Accords, and drop in the rate of arrests, 1181–1182; overcrowding, 1180–1181; Palestinians detained in Israeli prisons, 126, 232, 1180, political prisoners, 669, 903, 1180, 1362; prisoner leaders, isolation and/or transfer of, 1183; prisoner resistance, 1182–1183; protection of rights by Addameer, 10; release of in exchange for hostages, 372; sanitary conditions, 1182; security violations and, 1180; Sharon's promise of amnesty for Palestinian prisoners, 885; solidarity among prisoners, attempts to weaken, 1183; study circles and organized political discussions in, 1183; summary execution of, 669;

- Prisoners and prison conditions (continued) torture, reports of, 668, 669, 670–671, 928, 1180, 1182, 1379; transfer of prisoners outside the Occupied Territories, 1179–1180; U.S. media coverage, lack of, 928–929; women and children, 12, 1180
- Prisoners' Document (2006), 934, 1184–1187
- Privatization, land, 707–708, 754, 1009, 1386
- Professors for a Strong Israel, 470
- Progressive List for Peace (PLP), 138–139, 1154, 1187
- Pro-Israel lobby. See American Jewish organizations
- Project Censored, 927
- Project for a New American Century (PNAC), 37, 243
- Project Nishman, 328
- Pro-Jerusalem Society, 1680
- Propaganda, Arab, 117, 1187–1193; history and evolution of, 1190–1192; myths re: Arab campaign to destroy Israel, 1187–1188; rhetoric and reality, dichotomy between, 1188–1190, 1192
- Propaganda, Israeli: to discredit PLO peace initiatives, 1069; films as, 263
- Proportional representation, Israeli system of, 13, 366, 684–685, 827
- “Protected tenancy,” 1375, 1388
- Protocols of the Elders of Zion*, 486
- Provisional Executive Committee for Zionist Affairs, 206
- Public Committee Against Torture in Israel (PCATI), 616, 671, 1193
- Public opinion: French, re: Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 411; Israeli, re: Yitzhak Rabin, 526; Jerusalem Media and Communication Center (JMCC), 752, 1165; Jewish, influence of media on, 915; re: Occupied Territories, 752; Palestinian Center for Policy and Survey Research (PSR), 1165; polls, growing interest in among Palestinians, 1619–1620; U.S., re: role of United Nations in Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 1504, 1527
- Pundak, Ron, 1047
- Putin, Vladimir, 947, 948
- Qa'adam v. the Israel Lands Administration*, 708–709
- Qabbani, Nizar Tawiq, 623, 1115–1116
- al-Qaddumi, Farouq, 95, 394, 395, 0164, 1195–1196
- al-Qaida, 1447, 1448, 1525
- Qalandia, 1556
- Qalqilya police station, Israeli attack on (1956), 1364, 1492
- Qana, Israeli attack on (1996), 282, 1495
- al-Qaradawi, Yusuf, 1450–1451
- Qasim, 'Abd al-Karim, 638
- al-Qasim, Samih, 1112, 1114
- al-Qassam, Shaykh 'Izz al-Din, 81, 83, 115, 483, 645, 718, 1128–1129, 1196–1197
- al-Qassam Brigades. See Izz-al-Din al-Qassam Brigades
- Qassam Brotherhood. See Ikhwan al-Qassam (Qassam Brotherhood)
- Qassam rockets, 83, 127, 426, 661, 1198–1199; deaths from, 1198, 1409; development of, 1198; first use of, 60, 1198; firing of from Gaza into Israel, 377, 1028, 1039, 1040, 1041, 1162, 1186; precision, lack of, 1198; targeted assassinations to stop, 1198
- Qattan, A. M., Foundation, 1199
- Qawasmah, Fahd, 1079
- al-Qawuqji, Fawzi, 78, 81, 116, 980, 1131, 1199, 1417, 1418, 1560
- Qibya, massacre at, 138, 338, 1199–1200, 1363–1364, 1491
- Qualaq, Izz a'Din, 146
- Quandt, William, 1544
- Quartet, 301, 383, 442, 847, 1200–1202, 1526; joint communiqué re: Israeli-Palestinian conflict (2002), 1200; members, 947, 1200; Road Map for Peace, development of, 67, 226, 380, 1176, 1200, 1306, 1447, 1496, 1526
- Quayle, Dan, 221
- al-Quds, proposed capital of Palestine, 1429
- al-Quds Cement, 1105, 1203
- al-Quds Committee, 747, 1192
- al-Quds University, 1132
- “Quiet Deportation,” 244, 1473
- “Quiet transfer,” 1466
- Quotas: Anti-Defamation League opposition to, 35; family reunification and, 388, 585; immigration, 209, 211; Jewish education in Russia, 1061; on number of Palestinians living in East Jerusalem, 1684; for permits, 388, 1159; on quantity of water Palestinians can extract from their wells, 1594
- Quran, 334
- Qurei', Ahmad Ali Muhammad, 3, 131, 314, 431, 977, 1020, 1047, 1093, 1101, 1105, 1202–1204, 1272, 1371, 1433
- al-Quwatli, Shukri, 87
- Ra'am, 76, 1205–1206, 1464
- Ra'anana, Shlomoh, 297
- Rabat Summit (1974), 90, 97, 122, 358, 366, 784, 1067, 1070, 1205–1206, 1300, 1488, 1581, 1489
- Rabbis for Human Rights (RHR), 681, 998, 1206
- Rabin, Yitzhak, 1206–1209, 1365; assassination of, 22, 41, 57, 360, 385, 410, 442–443, 462, 470, 552, 608, 657–659, 764, 841, 882, 985, 1050, 1056, 1208, 1447, 1453; “broken bones,” policy of, 642, 653, 1207, 1208–1209; contradictory policies of, 1207–1208; Declaration of Principles (DOP), signing of, 1207; election of as prime minister, 143, 223, 878, 1047, 1522; and expulsion of Palestinians from Lydda, 1948 War, 894, 1206; Gaza Strip barrier, 163, 406, 429; handshake with Yasir Arafat, 101, 552; “Iron Fist” Policy, 100, 615, 642–643, 1207; as Israeli ambassador to the U.S., 773, 823–824, 1207; Israeli-Jordan peace treaty, signing of, 1207, 1529; Kadum compromise, 1324, 1329; Klugman Report, response to, 1389; Labor Party, leadership of, 1207; military experience, 650, 652, 653,

- 1206–1207; Nobel Peace Prize, 1155, 1206, 1207; Oslo Process, participation in, 1207–1208; Palmah, service in, 1134, 1206; Phalange, sale of weapons to, 1161; PLO, recognition of, 101, 552, 1209; public opinion re., 526; and Ramla, expulsion of Palestinians from, 1221; secret offer to withdraw from Golan Heights, 1424; secret talks with PLO, 101, 279, 360, 424, 1305, 1483, 1522; settlements, approval of, 1324; settler violence, policies re., 1343; vision of peace, 881, 1207–1208
- Rachel's Tomb, 191, 192, 564
- Rafah Crossing, 422, 808, 1016, 1209–1217; Agreement on Movement and Access (AMA) for, 1211–1212, 1214, 1260; from al-Aqsa Intifada until Israeli disengagement, 1210–1211; attacks on, 397, 1041; breach of Gaza-Egypt border by Hamas, 1215; buffer zone, 429, 1162; closures, 1210–1211, 1213–1214, 1215; control room, 1212; Hajj pilgrims, passage of, 1214–1215; historic background, overview, 1209–1210; location of, 1209; monitoring of, 1212; passage of goods through, 715, 1212–1215
- Rafi (Israeli Workers Party), 185, 307, 841, 904, 1155, 1217
- Rafiqat al-Qassam (the Comrades of Qassam), 1197
- Rafsanjani, Hashemi, 633
- Raheb, Mitri, 260
- Rahman, Hasan Abdul, 1076
- Rajub, Jibril, 414, 1218–1219
- Rakah Party (New Communist List), 290, 291, 305, 478, 828, 850, 903, 1079, 1219–1220, 1656
- Ralia family, retaliation for death of, 1186
- Ramadan War. See October War (1973)
- Ramla, 1206, 1220–1221
- Ranaan, Rabbi Shlomo, 523
- Rantisi, Abd al-Aziz, 60, 233, 425, 486, 933, 1221–1223, 1644
- Ras al-Amud neighborhood, 6, 136, 178, 271, 364, 557, 561, 895, 949, 1223–1227, 1317, 1335, 1337, 1427, 1429
- Rashid, Muhammad, 131, 399, 414, 1093, 1104, 1105, 1227–1228
- Ratz (Movement for Civil Rights and Peace), 23, 903, 905, 933, 1228, 1377, 1379
- Raviv, Avishai, 41, 385
- Raviv, Dan, 288
- Raziel, David, 641, 1406
- Reagan, Ronald Wilson, 142, 327, 484, 635, 1228–1231, 1381, 1482; and Ariel Sharon, opinion of, 1365; designation of Israel as a major non-NATO ally, 1230; Israeli invasion of Lebanon (1982), opposition to, 1229; meeting between U.S. and joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation, cancellation of, 1230–1231; Memorandum of Understanding (1981) re: Israel as a strategic asset, 1229, 1354, 1406, 1508, 1521; Middle East peace initiative (see Reagan Plan); pro-Israel stance, 1229; sale of weapons to Iran (Iran-Contra affair), 635, 1230; Soviet Union, perceptions of (“evil empire”), 1228–1229; U.S. aid to Israel, 1540; U.S.-PLO Dialogue, authorization of, 1534; world view, 1228–1229
- Reagan Plan (1982), 85, 91, 245, 385, 399, 581, 785, 873, 899, 1229–1230, 1231–1232, 1287, 1521
- The Red Heifer, 1456
- Reed, Ralph, 1454, 1458
- Re'em, David, 444, 976
- Reform Judaism: Columbus Platform of 1937, 48; Pittsburgh Platform of 1885, 48; Zionism, rejection of, 48, 50
- Reform Party, 77, 1128, 1232–1233
- Refugees, Palestinian: in Arab states, treatment of, 116, 1244; BADIL Resource Center for Palestinian Residency and Refugee Rights, 142, 1236, 1306; Camps' War (1985–1987), 92, 100, 120, 237–238, 395, 867, 875, 1188; Casablanca Protocol (1965), 1244; Convention on the Status of Refugees (1951), 1239, 1240–1241, 1245; Convention on the Status of Stateless Persons (1954), 1239, 1240–1241, 1245; Declaration of Principles (DOP), treatment of, 101, 1047, 1246; definition of as a legal matter, 1240, 1241; displaced persons, three primary groups of, 1236; expulsion of from Arab states, 1244; forced expulsion, Zionist policy of, 1235; general statistics re., 1236–1238; house keys and property titles, carrying of, 1096, 1177; internal refugees, Palestinian citizens of Israel as, 1176–1178, 1239, 1471; international instruments for the protection of, 1236, 1238, 1239–1240; Israeli “shoot-to-kill” policies, 1245; 1948 War, creation of, 853, 1565–1566; numbers and locations of, 1236; “Palestinian refugee,” defined, 1236, 1238; property claims, 1118–1120; “protection gap,” consequences of, 1239, 1243–1245; refugee “problem,” origins and historical evolution of, 1233–1234; “registered refugees,” 1236; right of return (see Refugees, and the right of return); Right of Return law (1950), exclusion from, 1262; rights of under international law, 1238–1243, 1245; Rogers Plan (1969) for, 1274; Shaml (Palestinian Diaspora and Refugee Center), 1357; Survey on Palestinian Refugees and Internally Displaced Persons, 1236; Tal al Za'tar refugee camp, 143; universally adopted definition of, 1238; UN Conciliation Commission for Palestine (UNCCP), 1236, 1238, 1239, 1231, 1494, 1504–1507, 1509; UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), 1239, 1241, 1510; UNRWA areas of operations, 1237, 1238; U.S. failure to consider plight of, 1479; Western countries, non-recognition of, 1245 Refugees, and the right of return, 1140, 1233–1249, 1592; under the Allon Plan, 20; al-Awda (The Palestinian

- Refugees, Palestinian (continued)
 Right to Return Coalition), 140, 142; Chorzow Factory (Indemnity) case (1928), 1243; Clinton Parameters, 284; committees devoted to, 276; compensation for lost or damaged property, 1119–1120, 1243, 1429, 1509, 1510; Dayton Accords, applicability of, 1245–1246; destruction of villages to prevent return of, 1552–1553; durable solutions, lack of in Israeli-Palestinian agreements, 1245–1247; economic development as solution to, 337; failure of Israel to recognize, 46, 58, 218, 487; Gaza Plan, 421; Geneva Accord (2003), 430, 431; Geneva Initiative (2003), 1247; humanitarian law and, 1241; human rights provisions underlying refugee rights, 1241–1242; incorporation of into peace treaties, 1242; international protection, denial of, 1239, 1241, 1245; Israeli measures to prevent return, (“Retroactive Transfer: A Scheme for the Solution of the Arab Question in the State of Israel”), 1239f; Lausanne Conference (1949), 853–854; Law of Return (1950), 856, 1084, 1086, 1634; law of state succession and, 1252; Lebanon’s policy on, 860–861; legal issues and the definition of “refugee,” 1241; marriage and, 322, 1087; Nationality Law (1952), passage of, 1239; nondiscrimination, principle of, 1242; Nuseibeh-Ayalon Agreement (2002), 140, 1003–1004; Oslo Process, human rights agreements under, 1246; Palestinian population centers, deliberate destruction of, 1239; refugee camps, population and location of, 1236; repatriation vs. resettlement, 1242, 1429, 1477, 1510; requirements for re-entry, 1262; restitution of properties, 1243; return as an absolute obligation, 1243; right of Israel to block return, 1241; Road Map and, 1246, 1247; Taba Talks (2001), 1246–1247, 1429; tied to “land for peace” negotiations, 1247; Transfer Committee (1948); recommendations, 1476–1477; two-state solution and, 1138; UN Refugee Office in Jerusalem, 1506; UN responsibility for (General Assembly Resolution 194), 50, 53, 187, 280, 611, 1140, 1239, 1240, 1242–1243, 1245, 1429, 1504; U.S. opposition to, 227
- Refuseniks/refusal movement, 880, 997, 1592; in al-Aqsa Intifada, 1649; Breaking the Silence (Shovrim Shrika) photo exhibit, 207; Combatants’ Letter, 290, 293, 295, 997, 1249; conscientious objectors, 291–294, 1249, 1380; Courage to Refuse (Ometz Le’sarev), 290, 293, 294, 295, 684, 997, 1249; New Profile, 288, 293, 294, 994–995, 1249; origins of, 1582, 1647; Pilots’ Letter, 1164, 1249; Refuser Solidarity Network, 1249–1250; Shministim, 294, 1249, 1379–1380; Yesh G’vul (There Is a Limit), 64, 292, 654, 680, 681, 683, 997, 1249, 1592, 1649. See also Israeli militarism; Israeli peace movement
- Refusenik Watch, 1249
- Refuser Solidarity Network (RSN), 1249–1250
- Regulations on Closed Areas, 1470
- Reines, Rabbi Yitzhak, 572, 1610, 1631
- Re-Islamization, 643
- Rejection Front. See Palestine Rejection Front
- Rejectionism, 1136, 1137, 1138
- Religious Action Center of Reform Judaism (RAC), 38
- Religious and ethnic communities in pre-1948 Palestine, 1250–1254; Bahá’í, 1252; census data re., 1250; Christians, 1251–1252; Circassians, 1252; Druze, 1252, 1566; Jews, 1251; Mutawali, 1252; Samaritans, 366, 1252, 1288; Sunni Muslims, 1250–1251
- Religious fundamentalism: Christian, 135, 496, 1341; Islamic, 30, 1218 (see also Hamas; Islamic Jihad Movement; Muslim Brotherhood); Jewish, 40–41, 135, 256, 363–365, 383–384, 460–461, 469, 550–551, 650, 881, 1440 (see also ELAD; Greater Land of Israel Movement; Gush Emunim; Third Temple Movement); rising influence of in Palestinian society, 1218
- Religious Zionism, 48, 830, 942, 975, 1059, 1173, 1631, 1665–1666. See also Kook, Rabbi Avraham Yitzhak HaCohen
- Religious Zionists of America, 328
- Renan, Ernest, 141
- Renewed Religious Zionist Party (Ahi), 976
- Rennert, Ira, 1341
- Restrictions on movement, 1254–1258; al-Aqsa Intifada and, 126, 660; Barrier, 1255; checkpoints, 1012, 1255; Defense Emergency Regulation 124 (Movements of Persons), 316; economic effects of, 147, 1035, 1256–1257, 1583; everyday life, effects on, 1012, 1583–1584; First Intifada and, 286, 297; foreign nationals, 323–324, 1212, 1213; Gaza airport, 1257, 1636; Gaza seaport, 1257, 1362; health care, effects on, 600, 1209; in Hebron, 527, 530, 537; impact of, 1383; inequality in, 1254; Israeli peace movement, reaction to, 862; in the Jordan Rift Valley, 792, 793, 794; main roads closed to Palestinians, 1255–1256, 1268; and 1967 War, Israeli takeover of borders, 1256; Palestinians in Lebanon, 862; permits for travel between West Bank and Gaza, 1257; prohibitions, ongoing, 1254–1255; prohibitions, periodic, 1255; reasons for, 1254; roadblocks, 248, 526, 1255, 1262–1264, 1345, 1682; right of free movement, international protections for, 1254; safe passage, 1223, 1257–1258, 1362, 1427, 1636; social and political effects of, 1618; and suicide bombings, as a contributing factor to, 1410; summary of, 1254–1256; travel permits, required, 1255; travel time, before 2000 vs. today, 1256. See also Checkpoints; Closure(s); Siege, Occupied Territories
- Restrictions on Use of Agricultural Land and Water Law (1967), 677
- “Retroactive transfer,” 1238–1239, 1476

- Returnees, 1258–1259; charges of corruption against, 1258–1249; defined, 1258; numbers of, 1258
- Reuveni, Aharon, 515
- Revava (Masses), 1458–1459
- Revisionist Zionism, 23, 49, 113, 175, 227, 457, 459, 539, 641, 887, 985, 1149, 1467, 1611, 1629, 1650, 1654, 1672–1673, 1674
- Revolutionary Organization of Socialist Muslims. See Fatah Revolutionary Council (Black June)
- Rhodes Armistice Line, map of, 129
- Rice, Condoleezza, 301, 490, 500, 795, 1040, 1076, 1211, 1257, 1259–1262
- Richardson, Elliott, 824
- Richter, Yossef, 1340
- Rida, Rashid, 575
- al-Rifa', Zayd, 201
- Rifai, Abd al Munim, 198
- Righteous Victims*, 1571
- Right of return. See Refugees, and the right of return
- Right of Return Law (1950), 310, 322, 386, 707, 856, 1084, 1086, 1262, 1634
- Rishmawi, George N., 620
- RIWAQ, Centre for Architectural Conservation, 110
- Roadblocks, 248, 526, 1255, 1262–1264, 1345, 1682
- Road Map for Peace (2003), 102, 660, 847, 1176, 1264–1266, 1306, 1447, 1489, 1526; Annapolis Summit (2007), 227, 500, 1040, 1319, 1496; Christian opposition to, 752; drafting of, participants in, 380, 1264; 14 “reservations,” Israel’s response to, 1526; independent Palestinian state, creation of, 1265; Israeli rejection of, 1266; and Israel’s unilateral disengagement from Gaza, 714, 1266; outposts, requirement for dismantling of, 1055; Palestinian support for, 1266; provisions of, 67; reform and stabilization of Palestinian institutions, 1265; refugees, omission of references to, 1246, 1247; road construction and, 1268; Syria, exclusion of, 1425; as symbol of renewed U.S. engagement in the Israeli-Palestinian peace process, 1265; timeline for completion of, 1265, 1266; violence, call for cessation of, 1265, 1266; UN Security Council resolutions, exclusion of, 1496; U.S. support of, 226, 1259, 1264. See also Quartet
- Road system, West Bank, 601–603, 1266–1270, 1383; al-Aqsa Intifada and construction of, 1268; bypass roads, 192, 844, 936, 962, 1266–1267, 1268, 1269, 1332; construction of in tandem with peace process, 1268; “Continuous Movement Plan,” 602; Drobles Plan, 336; E1 Plan and, 341, 896, 897; east-west movement, obstacles to, 147; “forbidden” roads, 1270; inadequacy of, 601–604; map of, 1267; north-south movement, obstacles to, 147; olive groves along, 1021, 1269; Palestinian access to, 1255–1256, 1268, 1269–1270; Palestinian social and economic conditions, influence on, 1269; purpose of, 1266, 1268; road conditions, 1269; road development, Israel’s policy on, 602–603; Road Plan 50, 603; roads closed to Palestinians, 1255–1256; and Settlement Master Plan for 1883–1986, 1267–1268; settler involvement in planning and illegal construction of, 1268–1269; signage, 1269; U.S. funding for construction of, 1504, 1524, 1638; Wadi-Nar Road, 147; “Worshiper’s Way,” Hebron, 527
- Robertson, Pat, 256, 752, 1287, 1454, 1460, 1461
- Robinson, Mary, 1055, 1270–1272
- Roch, Alfred, 892
- The Rockefeller Museum. See Palestine Archaeological Museum (The Rockefeller Museum)
- Rodman, Peter W., 984
- Roed-Larsen, Terje, 555, 1272, 1305
- Rogers, William Pierce, 308, 823, 995–996, 1272–1273, 1521, 1591
- Rogers Plan (1969), 90, 97, 393, 406, 480, 823, 1273–1274, 1512, 1521, 1591
- Roman Catholics, population of in pre-1948 Palestine, 1251. See also Vatican
- Romano, Joseph, 955
- Ronen Committee, 707–708
- Roosevelt, Eleanor, 337
- Roosevelt, Franklin, promise to Saudi Arabia re: U.S. policy on Palestine, 1294
- Rosen, Steve, 28
- Rosenblatt, Tzvi, 113
- Rosovsky, Henry, 642
- Ross, Dennis, 28, 142, 155, 245, 769, 794, 939, 1274–1275, 1524
- Rothschild, Baron Edmond James de, 1, 540, 755, 1062, 1275–1276, 1387, 1663
- Rover Scouting, 967
- Roy, Sara, 553, 682
- Royal Commission. See Peel Commission
- Rubenstein, Amnon, 1642
- Rubin, Irv, 756
- Rudman, Warren, 940
- The Rule of Law in the Territories Administered by Israel*, 668
- Rumsfeld, Donald, 225, 256, 984, 1175, 1449, 1525
- Ruppin, Arthur, 589, 1062, 1149, 1276, 1467, 1632
- Russian Empire: anti-Jewish sentiment in, 43, 945, 1661, 1662, 1670; Bilu Group, founding of, 195; Bolshevik Revolution (1917), 48–49, 1061, 1414; Hovevei Zion in, 571–573, 1164, 1663, 1666; May Laws, 1061; Pale of Settlement, 180, 1061, 1661; pogroms, 43, 1054, 1061, 1164, 1661, 1667, 1670; shetls, everyday life in, 1061; Sykes-Picot Agreement and, 1414; Tsar Alexander II, assassination of, 43, 1661. See also Moscow; Russian Federation; Soviet Union

- Russian Federation, 947, 1200. See also Moscow; Soviet Union
- al-Saadi, Shaykh Bassam, 1184
- Saba, Fu'ad, 892
- Saban, Haim, 921
- Saban Center for Middle East Policy, Brookings Institution, 593
- Sabeel, 256, 260, 1277
- Sabra and Shatila Massacre (1982), 872–873, 1277–1279; Begin, Menahem, role of, 177, 802, 1230; documentary film about, 1279; effect of on Palestinian cause, 91, 1968; independent observers, reports of, 1278; influence of on Israeli public opinion, 519, 653, 867; international condemnation of, 146; Kahan Commission Report (1983), 802–803, 1278, 1279, 1366, 1368; Lebanese Army, involvement of, 479; Phalange, role of, 123, 1161, 1277–1278, 1366; Sharon, Ariel, role in, 627, 802, 872, 1277–1278, 1365–1367; survivors, lawyers representing, 1481; UN condemnation of, 1278; victims, exact number of, 1278–1279
- Sacher, Harry, 1289
- Sackett, Shmuel, 1682
- Sacks, Jonathan, 328
- Sacred Landscape*, 1471
- Sa'd, Ma'ruf, 864
- Sa'dat, Ahmad, 1169
- al-Sadat, Anwar, 433, 680, 899; assassination of, 84, 359, 954; and Menahem Begin, relations with, 176, 1581; Camp David Accords, 84, 91, 241, 325, 358–359, 484, 639, 1297; initial peace overtures toward Israel, 357, 1521; Knesset address, 84, 91, 358, 747, 1544; Nobel Peace Prize, 551; separate peace with Israel, 90, 99, 358, 439, 441, 886, 1297, 1422, 1521; visit to Israel (1977), 241, 292, 639, 1521; War of Attrition, end to, 1591
- Sadeh, Yitzhak, 1134
- Sadeq, Mu'in, 110
- al-Sa'id, Nuri, 636
- al-Sadr, Imam Musa, 25
- Safa B'rura (Clear Tongue), 186
- Safed, 115, 1279–1280, 1484, 1562, 1624–1625
- Safe passage, 1223, 1257–1258, 1362, 1427, 1636. See also Restrictions on movement
- Safieh, Afif, 260
- Safiyya, Afif, 1076, 1281
- Safwat, Ismail, 1560
- Saguy, Yehoshua, 802, 1051
- Sahlheine, Siegfried, 474
- Said, Edward W., 7, 125, 161, 260, 1108, 1109, 1172, 1281–1283, 1381, 1544
- Sa'iqa (Thunderbolt), 78, 90, 100, 120, 399, 573, 971, 1065, 1070, 1283, 1421, 1545, 1585, 1605
- al-Sakakini, Khalil, 1283–1285
- Sakharov, Andrei, 1359
- Saladin/Salah al-Din, 522, 723, 1285; Acre, recapture of, 9; Battle of Hattin, 1285; Bethlehem, preservation of, 189; Jericho, recapture of, 730; Jerusalem, capture/recapture of, 296, 732; Ramla, capture of, 1221; Saddam Husayn as the new, 838
- Salama, Hasan, 566
- Salamah, Abu 'Ali Hasan, 201–202, 245, 394, 817, 951, 956, 1179, 1285–1286, 1434
- Salameh, Hasan, 1434
- Saleh, Abdul al-Latif, 971
- Salem, Hamed, 111
- Salih, Nimr, 99, 395, 873, 1286–1287
- Salomon, Gershon, 496, 497, 1287, 1458, 1460
- Samaria, 1287–1288, 1322, 1584. See also West Bank
- Samaritans, 366, 1252, 1288
- SAMED, 1068, 1080, 1093, 1202
- "Samson's Foxes," 137
- Samuel, Sir Herbert Louis, 13, 144, 208, 211, 255, 507, 542, 576, 879, 1149, 1284, 1288–1290, 1413
- Sanhedrin (Council of Elders), 1454–1455
- San Remo Conference (1920), 207, 210, 541, 1290–1291, 1414. See also British Mandate in Palestine (1922–1948)
- Sansana settlement, 1319–1320
- Sarid, Yossi, 23, 271, 933
- Sarkis, Elias, 865, 868
- Sarraj, Eyad, 1412
- Sartawi, Isam, 97, 138, 146, 772, 1154, 1291
- Sasson, Eliyahu, 1475–1476
- Sasson, Talia, 1056, 1291
- Sasson Report (2005), 1055, 1056, 1291–1294
- Satmar sect, 51
- Saudi Arabia, 1294–1299; Arab Peace Initiative (2002), 67, 80–81, 86, 361, 633, 857, 868, 1186, 1200, 1298–1299, 1489, 1499, 1512, 1525; Arab Peace Initiative (2007), 80, 81; AWACs, U.S. sale to (1981), 327, 1229; diplomatic relations with China, establishment of, 253; Fahd Plan (1981), 84–85, 91, 98, 385, 399, 1287, 1297–1298; Fatah, connections with, 394, 503; foreign policy, Islamic values and, 1294–1295; Islamic law in, 1295; Israeli-Egypt peace treaty, reaction to, 1297; Israeli-Palestinian conflict, policies toward, 1294; King Abdallah, 1298; King Fahd, 1297–1298; King Faisal, 1295–1297, 1587; King Khalid, 1297; Makkah Accord, 1298–1299; Mecca Agreement, 233, 301, 907–910; oil as a political instrument, 1295–1296; Oslo Accords, support for, 1298; and outcome of 1967 War, 1296; Palestinian cause as Islamic issue, 1191; Palestinians living in, 1079; partition of Palestine, opposition to, 1294, 1295; and PLO, rift between, 1287; Roosevelt's promise to re: U.S. policy toward Palestine, 1294; sale of U.S. arms and military equipment to, 327, 1229, 1521; security threats, perception of, 1296; U.S. breaches of promise to, 1294, 1296; and U.S., relations with, 16, 1260, 1295; Wahhabism in, 1295; Weizmann-Faysal Agreement (1919), 1611, 1613–1614
- Saudi Peace Initiative. See Fahd Plan (1981); Saudi Arabia

- Saudi Peace Plan. See Arab Peace Initiative (2002); Arab Peace Initiative (2007); Saudi Arabia
- Saunders, Harold H., 1299–1300
- Saunders Plan (1975), 1299–1300
- Savir, Uri, 1047, 1300–1301
- al-Sayigh, Anis, 201, 1301
- al-Sayigh, Fayez ‘Abd Allah, 1301
- Sayigh, Yezid, 114, 123, 127, 480, 1483
- al-Sayigh, Yusif, 1301–1302
- Scandinavian countries, 1302–1307; Bernadotte, Count Folke, 187–188, 242, 507, 780, 788, 892, 1242, 1302, 1406, 1445, 1478, 1493, 1509, 1515, 1563, 1566, 1567; Denmark, 1302, 1305–1307; international aid to Palestinians, 555; 1967 War, as a turning point in Middle East policy, 1303; “Nordic model,” 1302; Norway, 554–555, 940, 951, 1272, 1285, 1304–1305, 1546; regional/international dimensions affecting peacemaking efforts in, 1303; Sweden, 433, 1302, 1303–1304, 1546; Temporary International Presence in Hebron (TIIPH), oversight of, 1442; unique role of in resolving Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 1302–1303
- Scham, Sandra, 111
- Schmelzman, Dr. Shlomo, 551
- Schmidt, Helmut, 438, 439
- Schnechtman, Joseph, 722
- Scholars for Peace in the Middle East (SPME), 33
- Scholem, Gershom, 1149
- Schusterman, Charles, 36
- Schusterman, Lynne, 36
- Scofield Reference Bible, 255
- Sea of Galilee. See Lake Tiberias
- Seaport, Palestinian, 428, 715, 1257, 1362
- Second Aliya, 17, 319, 514, 1251, 1665, 1666
- Second International Peace Conference, 1632
- Second Intifada. See al-Aqsa Intifada
- Security Areas Regulations, 1470
- Security Council Resolutions. See United Nations Security Council Resolution, by number
- Security Fence/Security Wall. See Barrier
- Security, Israeli, 1138, arms limitation, 1429; Barrier as, 163; Border Police, 202–203, 247, 647; civil aviation, control of, 1429–1430; Clinton Parameters, 283–284; defined, 1180; early warning stations on Palestinian territory, 1429; and Greater Land of Israel Movement, 459; imprisonment for violations of, 1180; Israel and the Palestinian Authority Memorandum on Security Understanding (1997), 539; Israel Defense Forces (IDF), 646–648; as justification for military operations, 69; olive groves, declaration of as security zones, 1021; along the Philadelphi Route, 1161–1162; PLO guarantee of physical safety of every Israeli citizen, U.S. insistence on, 1527; prosecution for violations of, 664 (see also Israeli military court system in the Occupied Territories); Taba Talks (2001) and, 1429; without U.S. aid, hypothetical projection, 1531; Wye River Memorandum, Palestinians’ commitment to provide, 1637
- Security settlements, 21
- Seeds of Peace, 939
- Segal, Rafi, 1326
- Seidemann, Daniel, 1389
- Self-determination, Palestinian right to, 311; and Armed Struggle, failure to achieve, 114; British Mandate as obstacle to, 208, 610; Declaration of Principles (DOP), failure to mention, 314; Egypt, support for, 358; European Union, recognition of, 379, 380, 1068, 1550, 1551; in Gaza, struggle for, 422–424, 487; German support for, 439, 440; health care system and, 512; Oslo Accords and, 101; Saudi support for, 1294; settlements as a violation of, 1312, 1313; territorial vs. ethnic basis for, 693; UN support for, 122; U.S., failure to support, 92; World Council of Churches, support for, 258; Zionist ideals, conflict with, 49–50, 54, 210, 1468
- Self-government, right to, 13, 91, 274, 366
- Semite, defined, 42
- Semitic Confederation, call for, 1150
- Separation Wall. See Barrier
- Sephardi, 635, 882, 942, 1307–1310; Black Panthers, 1481, 1656; defined, 1307–1308; discrimination against by the Ashkenazi, 1309; history and evolution of, 1308–1309; immigration to Israel after 1948, 1309; and Mizrahim compared, 1308; and Palestinians, feelings about, 1309–1310; in pre-1948 Palestine, 1251, 1309
- Service Employees International Union, 37
- Settlements, 1141, 1310–1321; acreage consumed by, 373–374; “Adopt-a-Settler” program, 752; advocates for (Women in Green), 470, 1627–1628; Allon Plan and, 20–21, 309, 460, 714, 1208, 1322, 1323, 1402; amuta (non-profit organization), 178, 751, 1334, 1452; archaeology and, 1340; and borders, delineation of, 205, 1009; building starts, 1311; built over destroyed Palestinian villages, 107, 1553; Camp David Accords, call for freeze on, 1521; criticism of, 473; Dayan Plan, 309–310, 414, 460; Drobles Plan, 335–336; establishment of as a violation of international law, 59; European Union criticism of, 381; evacuation of, demands for, 1312; evacuation of, Palestinian support for, 478–479; evidence of illegal funding to (Klugman Report), 825–827, 1339, 1341, 1555; expansion of, 68–69, 1311, 1471–1472, 1523; to facilitate formation of blocs, 844; financing of, 1314–1315, 1330, 1339, 1341; forceful evacuation of, 169; freeze on, Road Map requirements for, 1265; as fulfillment of divine redemption, 1322, 1341; future of, 1319–1320; Galili Protocols, 413–414; in the Golan Heights, 1322; “good faith” argument for new construction in, 1405; government incentives

Settlements (continued)

- to encourage Israeli migration to, 1314; Gush Emunim, 135, 139, 335, 458, 460–461, 468–472, 496–497, 523, 525–526, 680, 740, 760–762, 822, 863, 881, 942, 1315, 1322–1325, 1329, 1331, 1365, 1401, 1443, 1577, 1584, 1646; Holy Basin, 556, 562, 1317–1318, 1373, 1386, 1429; Hebron, southern district, 1319–1320; illegality of, UN affirmation of, 1504; and international law, violations of, 1312–1313; Israeli government, position of, 1329–1330; Israeli political parties and, 684–691; Israeli vs. Palestinian rights in, 1312; in Jerusalem, society for renewal of, 134–135; Jordan Rift Valley, 790, 795–796, 1008, 1319, 1322, 1323; law enforcement, double standard of, 1315, 1330, 1343, 1344–1347; local government in, 1313–1314; Mishbi Tzion, 959; number and location of, 1310–1311; open space, transformation of, 1338–1339; policy and practices, legality of, 614–615; political significance of, 222; private financing of from U.S., 1314–1315, 1341, 1538; private security guards for, 562; property acquisition, methods of, 1339–1340; protection of (Bar Giora), 162; Quartet call for end to, 1201; Rabin's promise to halt, 143; reclassification of land to accommodate, 499; religious and historical basis for, 1325, 1331, 1340–1341; in the Sinai Peninsula, 176, 1322, 1438; 313, 1329, 1340; Tel Hai, defense of, 1479, 1480; tenders, issuance of, 1311; UN condemnation of, 241, 499, 940 U.S. policy on, 1315, 1523, 1544; violence in (see Settler violence); West Bank, seizure of land in, 1313; Yesha Council, 470, 762, 1293, 1324, 1453, 1646
- Settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, 58, 102, 844, 1322–1334; agricultural settlements, 1322, 1328; Ariel, 165, 1327; Barak's promise to freeze expansion of, 1225; Barrier, and settlement expansion, 1332; criticism of, 369; design and location of, 1326–1327; E1 Plan, 341–343, 895–897, 1024, 1025, 1223–1224, 1335; Elon Moreh, 371–372, 462, 469, 698, 761, 848, 1324, 1329, 1401, 1402–1403, 1646; evacuation of settlers from Gaza (2005), 425–426, 4711 expansion of, 68–69, 350, 1472, 1522; future of, 1332–1333; geostrategic positioning of, 1326–1327; Gilo, 1320, 1337; Giv'at Ze'ev, 446–447, 895, 1208, 1427, 1472; as glaring symbols of Israeli occupation, 1322; Greater Land of Israel Movement as justification for, 459–460, 1322, 1325, 1332, 1628; Gush Emunim and, 471, 760–761, 822, 1322, 1323–1325, 1365, 1401, 1438, 1577; Gush Etzion, 1338, 1345, 1571; Gush Katif settlement, removal of, 1328–1329; Har Homa, 374, 474, 499–501, 537, 1023, 1040, 1337, 1338, 1636; Hebron District, southern area, 532, 1008; history and evolution of, 1322–1323; housing permits, Area C, 1683; ideological communities, 1325–1327, 1330; impact of on the Palestinians, 350, 1322, 1330–1332; international pressure to limit expansion of, 1324, 1329; Israeli government, position of, 1329–1330; Israel Lands Administration and, 711; and Israel's unilateral disengagement from Gaza, 471, 1328–1329, 1332–1333, 1645; Jordan Rift Valley, 790, 795–796, 1008, 1319, 1322, 1323; Kadum compromise, 1324, 1329; Kfar Darom, 1328; Kfar Etzion, 1233, 1328; Kiryat Arba, 461, 525, 526, 863, 822, 881, 1315, 1323, 1331, 1443, 1584, 1646; legality of, 698, 1322, 1329; Ma'ale Adumin, 6, 110, 165, 232, 341, 343, 500, 895–897, 1024, 1223, 1311, 1427, 1472, 1556; moratorium on construction of (2009), 1646; Nahal units, 1323; as national priority areas, 1314; Neve Dekalim, 1328; new neighborhoods on the fringes of established settlements, 1332; number of Jews residing in, 1322, 1332; Ofra, 1324, 1329; organization of, 1322; outposts, 1322, 1326, 1330; quality-of-life settlements, 1322, 1327–1328; rezoning of to permit massive construction and expansion, 1683; roads to, 1325, 1332 (see also Road system, West Bank); withdrawal of, resistance to, 1333; Yesh Plan, 1324
- Settler groups and settlements, East Jerusalem, 178, 1315–1319, 1322, 1323, 1334–1343, 1472; Abu Dis, 5–6, 169, 561, 895, 949, 1317, 1337, 1429; Abu Tor neighborhood, 1317, 1337, 1385; Atara L'Yoshna, 134–135, 136, 178, 751, 763, 770, 1465, 1472, 1555; Ateret Cohanim, 134, 135–136, 178, 326, 556, 711–712, 751, 770, 826, 1223, 1335, 1336, 1338, 1341, 1387, 1389, 1452, 1465, 1472, 1555; A Tur neighborhood, 136–137, 895, 1223, 1317; Beit Orot, 178–179, 751, 1223, 1336–1337, 1374, 1472; Burj Il-Laqlaq, 1338; Company for Rehabilitation and Development of the Jewish Quarter, 1335–1336; East Jerusalem Development Company, 1338–1339; ELAD, 178, 363–365, 751, 1314, 1336, 1342, 1374, 1472, 1555; expansion of, 1472; fear of a divided city as the impetus for, 1334–1335; funding sources, 1341; Givat Yael, 1320, 1337–1338; Giv'at Ze'ev, 1472; government sources, 1337–1338; “green” settlements, 1338–1339; Greek Orthodox Church, sale of property by, 1339–1340; Israeli land appropriations, 1316–1317; Jabel Mukaber neighborhood, 1337, 1386; Jerusalem Forum (The Amuta for Settling Jerusalem), 178, 751, 1335; Jewish Quarter Renovation Company, 1341; land purchases, types of, 1335–1338; Ma'ale Adumim, 1335, 1427, 1472, 1556; Moskowitz, Irving and 949–950, 1336–1337, 1340, 1341, 1389; Musrara neighborhood, 958–960, 1337; Nahalat Shimon International, 1373; Nof Zion, 1337; around the Old City, 1318, 1334; Pisgat Ze'ev settlement, 1320; private developers, 1337; property acquisition, methods of, 1339–1340; Ramot Eshkol settlement, 1316;

- Ras al-Amud neighborhood, 6, 136, 178, 271, 364, 557, 561, 895, 949, 1223–1227, 1317, 1335, 1337, 1427, 1429; religious and political motivations for, 1340–1341; security issues, 1335; settler-controlled areas, 1335–1337; settler ideology, 1340–1341; Shaykh Jarrah neighborhood, 1336, 1372–1376, 1429, 1472, 1567; Shimon Ha'Tzadik Association, 178, 751, 1336, 1378, 1472; Silwan, 1314, 1317, 1335, 1336, 1338, 1341–1342, 1373, 1385–1396, 1429, 1472; Wadi Juz neighborhood, 1555–1557
- Settler violence, 762, 763, 881, 1315, 1343–1348; al-Aqsa Intifada, 1343; armed patrols, establishment of, 1344; Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI), reports of, 1346–1347; attacks on children, 534; in A Tur, 136–137; dating to early days of settlement project, 1343–1344; First Intifada, 1343; in Hebron, 523, 525, 1344 (see also Hebron Massacre); Hebron District, southern area, 534; IDF response to, 1058; law enforcement response, Israeli attacks on Palestinians vs. Palestinian attacks on Israelis, 1315, 1332, 1343, 1343, 1344–1347; Karp Commission investigation of, 762, 813–814, 1343, 1344–1345; in Nablus, 961–962, 964; outposts and, 1058; Palestinian deaths attributable to, 1345–1346; against Palestinian farmers, 1021; “Price Tag” policy, 1058; roadblocks, 1345; Shamgar Commission investigation of, 762, 814, 1343, 1345, 1352–1353; specific settler actions, types of, 1344; Temporary International Presence in Hebron (TIPH) and, 1442; Terror Against Terror (TNT), 1443–1444, 1453; Yesh Din report of (A Semblance of Law), 1346
- Sha’ban, Sa’id, 399
- Shach, Eliezer Menahem Mann, 316
- Shacham, Nathan, 518
- Shachat, Orit, 322
- Shadmi, Issachar, 800, 801
- “Shadow war,” 201
- al-Shafi, Haydar ‘Abd, 161, 377, 424, 877, 901, 1046, 1108, 1348–1349
- Shafir, Gershon, 1330
- Shahak, Israel, 47, 1349–1350
- Shahar, 1350–1351, 1641
- Shaka’a, Bassam, 525, 852, 972, 1079, 1351–1352, 1443
- Shalah, Abdallah, 643
- Shalah, Ramadan, 1450
- Shalim, Avi, 989
- Shalit, Gilad, kidnapping and imprisonment of, 426, 716, 1039, 1041, 1186, 1213, 1214
- Shalom Achshav* (Peace Now), 30
- Sham’ah, Muhammad, 486
- Shamas, Anton, 521
- Shamgar, Meir, 666, 1352, 1388, 1572
- Shamgar Commission (1994), 762, 813, 1345, 1352–1353, 1572
- Shami, Yitzhak, 520
- Shamir, Moshe, 518, 1353–1354, 1437
- Shamir, Yitzhak, 101, 142, 143, 188, 639, 1046, 1354–1357, 1367, 1551, 1658; “barrier of fear,” 642; election of to Israeli prime ministership, 1355, 1522; Fez Peace Initiative, rejection of, 400; Herut Party, leadership of, 539, 1353; Husayn-Peres Agreement (1987), rejection of, 789; LEHI, leadership in, 1354, 1406, 1445; Madrid Conference, opposition to, 900, 1356–1357; Memorandum of Understanding (1981) re: Israel as a strategic asset, 1229, 1354, 1521; Mossad, membership in, 1434; peace plan, 143, 221, 223, 900, 1355; Sabra and Shatila massacre, failure to act on knowledge of, 802; Shultz peace plan, rejection of, 1381, 1423; Stern Group, leadership in, 641; targeted assassination of al-Wazir, Khalil, authorization of, 1482; Yachad Party, 1641
- Shamir Plan. See Shamir, Yitzhak, peace plan
- Shaml (Palestinian Diaspora and Refugee Center), 1357
- Shammut, Isma’il Abdul-Qader, 1357–1358
- Shana, Fadel, 64
- Shapira, Haim Moshe, 975
- Shapira, Rabbi Avraham, 932
- Shapira, Rabbi Yaakov, 932
- Shapira, Yonatan, 1163
- Shapiro, Adam, 620
- al-Shar’, Faruq, 1423
- Sharabi, Hisham B., 279, 1108, 1358–1359
- Sharah, Faisal Abu, 405
- Sharansky, Natan, 244, 887, 1359–1360, 1649
- Sharbev, Rabbi Uzi, 1088
- Sharett, Moshe, 84, 184, 652, 841, 855, 931, 1361–1362, 1475, 1478, 1608
- Sharlo, Yuval, 1647
- Sharm al-Shaykh Declaration (1996), 661, 845, 1362
- Sharm al-Shaykh Fact-Finding Committee, 67, 102, 246, 380, 940–941, 1201, 1525
- Sharm al-Shaykh Memorandum (1999), 153–154, 246, 1257, 1362–1363, 1639
- Sharon, Ariel, 950, 1196, 1363–1369; aggressive strategies toward the Palestinian people, 1368; al-Aqsa Intifada, response to, 627, 1368, 1447; Barrier, construction of, 1368–1367, 1603; Convergence Plan, 226–227, 294–295, 714, 1023–1024, 1526; “corridor plan,” efforts to undermine, 1225; as defense minister, 1364–1367; Drobles Plan, support for, 335; and France, testy relations with, 1368; election of to prime ministership, 282, 430, 627, 1368, 1524, 1658; as foreign minister, 1636; incapacitative stroke, 86, 661, 800, 1022, 1369; Israeli water rights, protection of, 1603; and Israel’s unilateral disengagement from Gaza, 714; and Jenin refugee

- Sharon, Ariel (continued)
 camp, destruction of, 1368; Jewish majority, need for, 319; “Jordan is Palestine” slogan, 789; Kadima Party, formation of, 800, 1369; Lebanon War, involvement of, 1364–1367; Likud Party, leadership of, 1363, 1364–1365, 1367; military career, 1363–1364, 1491; move to Muslim Quarter of Jerusalem’s Old City, 622, 1335; new settlement activity, promise of freeze on, 1293; outposts established under, 1293; Palestinians’ hatred of, 627; political career, 1367–1369; privatization of land under, 707; promise of amnesty for Palestinian prisoners, 885; Ras al-Amud, go-ahead for settlement in, 1225; Road Map to Peace, reservations concerning, 1266, 1368; Qibya massacre, role in, 338, 1199, 1363–1364; Sabra and Shatila Massacre, role in, 627, 802, 872, 1277–1278, 1365–1367, 1481; Sasson Report (2005), commissioning of, 1291; settlements, support for, 1367, 1388, 1615; and Syria, refusal to negotiate with, 1369, 1425; unilateral disengagement from Gaza (see Israel’s unilateral disengagement from Gaza); unilateral separation, concept of, 1473–1474; and U.S., relations with, 1367; visit to al-Haram Ash-Sharif/Temple Mount (September 2000), 56–57, 74, 126, 152, 293, 497, 616, 626, 845, 940, 1011, 1051, 1367, 1440; visits to Washington during Bush II administration, 1175, 1526; Village Leagues, I mplementation of, 1551; Wadi Juz, plan for eviction of Palestinian residents from, 1555
- Shas, 366, 398, 445, 933, 986, 1088, 1173, 1369–1371, 1437
- Sha’th, Nabil, 131, 300, 414, 415, 1093, 1371, 1433
- Shavit, Ari, 321, 552, 683
- Shaw, Sir Walter, 1372, 1625
- Shaw Commission (1930), 211, 567, 897, 1126, 1127, 1135, 1371–1372, 1611–1612, 1625
- al-Shawwa, Hajj Rashad, 299, 367, 423, 1372
- Shawwa passports, 1372
- Shaykh Jarrah neighborhood, 178, 557, 1223, 1317, 1336, 1372–1376, 1472; attempt to capture, 1948 War, 1567; in context, 1373–1374; evictions from, 1320; historical background, 1374–1375; legal battles re., 1374; location of, 1373; Nahalat Shimon International, 1373; 1972–2001, 1374–1375; post-2001, 1575; pre-1967, 1374; settlement activity in, 1373; Shimon Ha’Tzadik Association in, 178, 751, 1336, 1378, 1472; Taba Talks (2001) and, 1429
- Shebaa Farms, 86, 1495
- Shehadeh, Aziz, 1377
- Shehadeh, Bulus, 1376
- Shehadeh, Fuad, 1377
- Shehadeh, Raja, 668, 1377, 1615
- Shehadeh, Salah, 486, 1035
- Shehadeh family, 1376–1377
- Shellii Party, 138, 903, 1154, 1377
- Shemen Palestine Oil Industry, 1123
- Shemer, Naomi, 1377–1378
- Shenev, Ismail Abu, 233
- Shepherd’s Fields, 499–500, 739
- al-Sheqaqi, Fathi, 643
- Sher, Gilead, 155
- Shihab, Fu’ad, 862
- al-Shikai, Fathi, 951
- Shimon Ha’Tzadik Association, 178, 751, 1336, 1378, 1472
- Shin Bet, 246, 1039, 1378–1379; arrest and interrogation methods, 669–670, 671, 1378; collaborators, use of, 288, 1158, 1378; functions of, 1378; general strike in Nazareth, suppression of, 850; HUMINT, use of, 1378; journalists, interrogation of, 65; Landau Commission’s investigation of, 848–850, 1378–1379; and law enforcement against settlers, 1345; operatives in the Occupied Territories, 1378, 1379; organizational structure, 1379; permits, approval of, 271–272; prisoners, treatment of, 671; role of in suppressing the al-Aqsa Intifada, 140; rules of interrogation, 848; scandals involving, 669; targeted assassinations by, 140; torture, use of, 642, 669, 849, 1378–1379; undercover detachments (Mist’aravim), 1379
- Shinui Party, 905, 933, 1379
- al-Shishakli, Adib, 1419
- The Ship*, 722
- Shlaim, Avi, 415, 1200, 1467
- Shlonsky, Avraham, 515, 516
- Shministim, 294, 1249, 1379–1380
- Shocharey HaMikdash (Temple Lovers Group), 1452, 1453, 1454
- Shohat, Ella, 1172
- Shoman, Abd al-Hamid (I), 1380
- Shoman, Abd al-Hamid (II), 1381
- Shoman, Abd al-Majid, 1080, 1380–1381
- Shoman, Khalid, 1381
- Shoman family, 1380–1381
- Shrine of the Book, Israel Museum, 109, 110
- Shrines, religious. See Holy sites
- Shtayyeh, Dr. Mohammad, 1094
- Shultz, George Pratt, 6, 400, 899, 1228, 1230–1231, 1304, 1381–1382, 1511, 1534
- Shultz Plan (1988), 899, 1381–1382, 1423; “shuttle diplomacy,” 28, 405–406, 825, 900, 996, 1356, 1512
- Shuqayri, Ahmad, 250, 251, 356, 582, 853, 1063, 1064, 1076, 1128, 1382, 1420, 1585
- Shuqeiri, Shaykh As’ad, 884
- Shu’un Filastiniyya* (Palestinian Affairs), 1082
- Siege, Occupied Territories, 1382–1384; The Barrier, 1383; curfews, 1382, 1383; defined, 1382; farming, 1384; living standards under, 1382, 1383–1384; physical barriers, 1383; unemployment and, 1382, 1384; use of force to enforce closures and curfews, 1384; U.S. support for, 1525
- Sigel, Ian, 756
- “Silent transfer,” of Palestinians from the West Bank, 1615

- Silver, Abraham "Abba" Hillel, 1385
- Silwan, 109, 136, 178, 271, 363, 949, 1314, 1317, 1335, 1336, 1373, 1385–1396, 1472; Abbasi family home, seizure of, 1389; archaeological excavations in, 364, 560–561, 1386, 1393–1395; "archaeological park," 560–561, 1338, 1386, 1393–1395; al-Bustan, proposed destruction of, 1386, 1394–1395; City of David (Wadi Hilweh), 1386, 1388; City of David National Park, 560, 1391–1393; "construction offenders," 1387; ELAD activity in, 1336, 1342, 1386, 1388, 1389, 1391–1393, 1472; future of as an archaeological amusement park, 1393–1395; history and evolution of, 1386–1388; house demolitions, threat of, 1387; location of, 1385–1386; Palestinian homes, takeover of, 1386, 1388–1391; population, increases in, 1387; privatization of land in, 1386; public space, takeover of, 1391–1393; quality of life in, 1387; Segway tours of archaeological sites, 560; settler groups active in, 1386; Taba Talks (2001) and, 1429; Walls of Jerusalem National Park, 1391; Yemenite neighborhood (Kfar Shiloah), 1387, 1390
- Simpson Commission (1930). See Hope-Simpson Commission (1930)
- Sinai Accords, 123
- Sinai Peninsula: colonization of (El Arish project), 1631; eviction of Israeli settlers from, 176, 1322, 1438; Israeli occupation of, 843–844, 1570, 1579; October War (1973) and, 1017; return of to Egypt, 1438, 1590
- Sinai/Suez War (1956), 84, 338–339, 363, 421–422, 595, 646, 1396, 1518, 1572, 1585; and hostile relations between Arab states and Western countries, 435; Israeli invasion of Egypt, 421, 650; Kafr Qasim massacre, 202, 800–802; Mitla Pass, Israeli capture of, 1364; mediation of by Dag Hammarskjöld, 1302; underlying reasons for, 1396; United Nations peacekeeping force, deployment of, 1396, 1494
- Siniora, Hanna, 1396–1397, 1436
- Sivuv She'arim (the custom of walking around the Old City), 1459
- Sizer, Stephen, 1460
- Six Day War. See War, 1967
- Sizer, Reverend Stephen, 256
- Smilansky, Moshe, 514, 1149
- The Smile of the Lamb* (novel), 466, 521
- Social Democratic Party of Israel, 177
- Socialist League of Palestine, 504
- Social security system, Israeli. See National Insurance Institute (NII)
- Society for the Liberation of Palestine, 1418
- Society of Workers, 181. See also Histadrut
- Sokolow, Nahum, 1149, 1275, 1397–1398, 1632
- Solana, Javier, 380, 940, 1211
- al-Solh, Rashid, 865
- Solomon's Quarry, 559
- Sons of Martyrs, 1398
- Soobzokov, Tschirim, 804
- Sourani, Raji, 1083
- South Africa, 328, 331
- Southeast Asia Treaty Organization (SEATO), 336
- Southern Poverty Law Center, 756
- South Hebron Mountain. See Hebron District, southern area
- South Lebanon Army (SLA), 479, 1038, 1278, 1398–1399, 1496
- Soviet Jewry Zionist Forum, 1360
- Soviet Jews, 34, 53, 1399–1400; emigration of to Israel, 28, 53, 143, 221, 222, 378, 707, 946, 1072, 1262, 1309, 1399–1400, 1582, 1649, 1676; Free Soviet Jewry movement, 804; Israeli pressure on U.S. to restrict acceptance of, 330, 1399–1400, 1677; Jackson-Vanick Amendment, 28, 406, 1399; living in Natzerat Illit, 978; preference for emigration to U.S., 1676–1677; Right of Return law (1950), 856, 1262; Reagan's efforts to free, 1230; settlement of in Germany, 330; Yisrael b'Aliya party, 445, 888, 1360, 1649–1650; Yisrael Beitenu party, 470, 885, 1438, 1650–1651
- Soviet Union: anti-Semitism in, 945, 1399; and Arab states, close relations with, 436, 484; Bolshevik Revolution (1917), 48–49; Chernobyl nuclear disaster, 946; collapse of (1991), 53, 654, 945, 946, 1046, 1304, 1530, 1582; de jure recognition of Israel (1948), 50, 1072; Egypt, ties to, 1577; as "evil empire," Ronald Reagan's perceptions of, 1228–1229; invasion of Afghanistan (1979), 239, 945, 1448; Fatah alliance with, 8; foreign policy, post-Stalin era, 945–946; "Four Power Talks," 1273; and Iraq, alliances with, 638; and Israel, relations with, 378, 945–946, 1072; Jewish Diaspora in, 328; Jewish emigration from (see Soviet Jews, emigration of to Israel); joint statement with U.S. on the Middle East (1977), 240; Joint Security Assistance Planning Group (JSAP), formation of, 1408; miscommunication, and start of 1967 War, 1574; in Palestinian struggle, role of, 1287; and PNA, relations with, 1281; and PLO, relations with, 945, 946, 1072, 1589–1590; policy of refusing Jewish immigration to Israel, 803–804; provision of weapons to PLO, 98; Rakah party, recognition of as "official" communist party of Israel, 1219; and Syria, relations with, 1229, 1421, 1422, 1423, 1528, 1530; "Two Power Talks," 1273; UN General Assembly Resolution 181 (Partition Plan), support for, 945, 1674, 1678; U.S.-Soviet Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, 438; War of Attrition, involvement in, 1273. See also Moscow; Russian Empire; Russian Federation
- "Special Security Area" (SSA) plan, 846
- Special Security Force (PNA), 1100
- Spector, Yiftah, 1164

- Sprinzak, Ehud, 760
- Sprogis, Elmars, 804
- Stand With Us (SWU), 33–34
- State Land, 171, 172–173, 532, 793, 851, 895, 1400–1405; declaration of for Jewish settlement, 1400–1401; disposition of under the British Mandate, 1121; “good faith” argument, 1405; ignoring Arabs as potential beneficiaries of, 1089; Israeli Supreme Court, sanctioning of, 1401; Jewish settlements on, 1311, 1313, 1329, 1340; legal foundations for declaration of, 1009, 1088, 1313, 1401–1402; military appeals committee, 1403–1405; in the Occupied Territories, declarations of, 1329; Ottoman Land Law of 1858 and, 1401–1402; outposts on, 1292; and Palestinian citizens of Israel, 1471; Palestinian resistance to, and proof of ownership, 1401, 1403–1405; right to ownership, difficulty proving, 1404; seizure of land, emergency decrees for executing, 1008; taking land, process of, 1402–1403
- State of Israel Bonds Organization, 37–38, 1530, 1538, 1540–1541
- Stavsky, Abraham, 113
- “Stealth PACs,” 29
- Steiner, David, 28
- Steinhardt, Michael, 36
- Steinsaltz, Rabbi Adin, 1454
- Stern, Andrew, 37
- Stern, Avraham “Yair,” 641, 890, 1405–1406, 1445
- Stern Gang. See Lohamei Herut Yisrael (LEHI); Stern, Avraham
- Sternhell, Zeev, 1411
- Stevenson, Adlai, 146
- St. Louisans for Good Government, 29
- Stockwell, Hugh C., 483–484
- Stoltenberg, Thorvald, 1304, 1305
- Stone, I. F., 54
- Stop the Wall Campaign, 1306
- Storrs, Ronald, 145, 1622, 1680
- Strategic asset, 551, 823, 1273, 1406–1408, 1539, 1572
- Strategic cooperation, 221, 485, 1175, 1230, 1367, 1408–1409, 1521, 1538, 1638, 1678
- Strauss, Franz-Josef, 435, 436
- Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), 35
- Suez Canal: British interest in, 144–145, 421; Egyptian control of, 356, 855, 969; reopening of, 1973 War, 1521
- Suicide bombings, 293, 1409–1413, 1450–1451; appeal for end to published in al-Quds, 1397; in al-Aqsa Intifada, 59, 73–74, 627; Barrier, as a deterrent to, 163, 204–205, 619; bombers, theories about, 1411; B’Tselem statistics re., 1409; deaths related to, 1409; despair as reason for, 1412; economic deprivation as reason for, 1411; by Fatah, 233; Hamas campaign of, 103, 125, 140, 233, 300, 425, 488, 616, 657, 726, 1033, 1103, 1197, 1362, 1411; international condemnation of, 616–617; by Islamic Jihad, 645; Israeli response to, 60, 61, 442, 1035, 1525; justification for, 1450–1451; legitimate vs. illegitimate uses of violence, 1410; potential recruits, commitment among, 1411; and pro-Palestinian organizations, alienation of, 1109; reasons for, 1410–1412, 1451; restrictions on movement and, 1410; retaliation, rationalization for, 1109; revenge and, 1411–1412; role of father and power in, 1412; standard justification for, 616; surge in, following Hebron Massacre, 536, 1010; and targeted assassinations, link between, 1411, 1435; Tel Aviv disco (2001), 442; unaffiliated perpetrators, 1411–1412; as weapon of the powerless, 1409–1410
- Sukarno, Kusno, 997
- Sukenik, Eliezer, 106Sunni Muslim community, pre-1948 Palestine, 1250–1251
- Support Palestine Committees, 1080
- Supreme Court. See Israeli Supreme Court and the Occupation
- Supreme Muslim Council, 77, 481, 576, 577, 578, 733, 1196, 1250, 1413, 1624
- Sweden: asylum for Mordechai Vanunu, rejection of, 1546; Bernadotte, Count Folke, 187–188, 242, 507, 780, 788, 892, 1242, 1302, 1406, 1445, 1478, 1493, 1509, 1515, 1563, 1566, 1567; diplomatic relations with the PNA, 433. See also Scandinavian countries
- Sweeney, John, 37
- “Swedish Channel,” 131
- Sykes, Mark, 1289–1290, 1414
- Sykes-Picot Agreement (1916), 208, 457, 576, 580, 1413–1416, 1613, 1670
- Synthetic Zionism, 1611, 1632
- Syria, 1416–1426; al-Asad, Bashar, 142, 1425, 1528; al-Assad, Hafez, 86, 90, 91, 96, 99, 121, 123, 199, 282, 395, 432, 866, 875, 946, 1072, 1286, 1421, 1425; alliance with Egypt (1973), 433; alliance with Egypt and Saudi Arabia (1948), 1418; Arab Club, 1416; Arab summit conferences, representation at, 1418; Armistice Agreement (1949), 131, 1419, 1494, 1569; Ba’athist Party in, 88, 141, 142, 1065, 1191, 1283, 1418, 1420, 1528, 1545, 1585; border with Iraq, 1414; border with Israel, exact demarcation of, 1528; cautious participation in fighting, 1420–1422; Damascus Program, 1416; defeat of, 1967 War, 1070; defeat of, 1973 War, 1082; demilitarized zones along the Israeli border, 131, 1419, 1420, 1494, 1516, 1572, 1573; disengagement agreement with Israel (1974), 1070; and Egyptian-Israeli peace process, 1422–1423; Fatah in, 89, 1420, 1577; fighting against Jewish forces, 1418–1420; Geneva Conference (1973), refusal to attend, 432–433; Greater Syrian nation-state, 575, 1358; al-Hariri, Rafiq, assassination of, 1426; Hamas in, 1424, 1425; Hashemite genealogy, 503; Independence Party, 1417; influence of on Palestinian politics (Sa’iqa), 78, 1283; intervention of in Lebanon, 98,

- 123, 238, 865, 866, 1027, 1283, 1422–1423, 1426; and Israel, contentious relations with, 1421–1422, 1528, 1530; Israeli-occupied territory in (Golan Heights), 86, 843, 1007, 1014–1015, 1017, 1229, 1322, 1369, 1421, 1423–1424, 1425, 1494, 1512, 1528, 1530, 1570, 1571, 1579; and the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, origins of involvement in, 1416; Israeli-Syrian Armistice Conference (1949), 1419; Israeli-Syrian negotiations re: Golan Heights, 1423–1424, 1530; Jewish immigration, opposition to, 1416; Jordanian civil war, participation in, 90, 121, 199; King-Crane Commission (1919), 820–821, 1416; King Faisal bin al-Husayn, 1416–1417; League of National Action, 1417; League of Religious Scholars, 1418; Muslim Brotherhood in, 1417, 1418; National Bloc, 1417; new Israeli governments, relations with, 1424–1426; 1948 War, 1418–1419, 1563; 1967 War, 1420–1422, 1570, 1572–1573; nuclear capabilities, 1426; October War (1973), 357–358, 1017, 1421; Operation Kinneret, 1518; Operation Orchard, 1426; Ottoman Party for Administrative Decentralization, Syrian membership in, 1416; Palestinian guerrilla operations in, 120, 1587; Palestinian refugees in, 1236, 1244, 1419; partition of Israel, reaction to, 1418; Party of Syrian Unity, 1417; peace talks with Israel (1991), 1528; People's Party, opposition to Israel, 1419; PFLP in, 1424; and PLO, relations with, 90, 98–99, 938, 1420, 1422, 1431; popular support for Palestinians, 1417–1418, 1587; Red Line, 1422; revolt against the French, 1417; Sa'iqa (Thunderbolt), 78, 90, 100, 120, 399, 573, 971, 1065, 1070, 1283, 1421, 1545, 1587; Sharon's refusal to negotiate with, 1369; Society for the Liberation of Palestine, 1418; and Soviet Union, relations with, 1229, 1421, 1422, 1423, 1528, 1530; surprise attack on Israel (1973), 357; United Arab Republic (UAR), formation of, 88, 117, 1419; UN peacekeeping missions in, 1496; UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, acceptance of, 1528; U.S. efforts to destabilize, 1528; and U.S., relations with, 1418, 1421, 1422, 1425–1426; water diversion project, Arab anger over, 1420; Zionism, as a threat to national interests of, 1416–1418
- Syria-Israeli Agreement on Disengagement (1974), 1496
- Syrian Heights. See Golan Heights
- Syrian-Israeli conflict over water (1950–1965), 1419, 1420, 1518–1519. See also United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO)
- Syrian Social Nationalist Party (SSNP), 1358
- Syrkin, Nahum, 841
- Szold, Henrietta, 1150
- Ta'al party, 1205, 1464
- TAAS (Israel Military Industries), 820
- Ta'ayush, 534, 684, 998, 1427
- Taba Talks (2001), 430, 749, 1427–1430; agreement, Israeli rejection of, 1052; annexation, 1430; borders, delineation of, 1427; concessions by both sides, 1524; focus of, 537, 748; holy sites, 748, 1429; Jerusalem, 1427, 1429; map presented by Israel at, 1428; Palestinian negotiators, 177, 1371; refugees, 1429, 1246–1247; safe passage/corridor from Gaza to the West Bank, 1223, 1257, 1362, 1427, 1636; security, 1429–1430; territory, 1427
- Tabenkin, Yitzhak, 1134, 1430–1431
- Tafish, Ahmed, 115
- Taha, Hamdan, 110
- Ta'if Accord (Document of National Understanding), 867–868
- Tal al Za'tar, 98, 1431
- Talk Peace Make Peace, 1432
- al-Tal, Wasfi, 199–200, 201, 783, 1285
- TAMA 35, Israel's National Master Plan, 1177
- Tami (Movement for the Heritage of Israel), 143, 1432
- Tamir, Shmuel, 1642
- TANDI. See Movement of Democratic Women for Israel (TANDI)
- Tanzim, 61, 125–126, 1432–1434
- Tanzimat, 365, 1434
- Targeted assassinations, Israeli policy of, 1087, 1434–1436, 1644; in al-Aqsa Intifada, 60, 660; B'Tselem statistics re., 1435; bystanders, deaths of, 1435; errors in, 1434–1435; failure of U.S. to condemn, 224; Hagana order for, 1434; of Hamas leaders, 233, 425, 1039; IDF's "focused foiling" strategy, 648; international condemnation of, 381, 616; and international law, violations of, 1435; legality of, 701–702, 1014; LEHI responsibility for, 1445; Operation Journey of Colors (2002) and, 1036; Operation Zarzir, 1434; in retaliation for Munich Olympics massacre, 201–202, 951; security as justification for, 1103; by Shin Bet, 140; to stop manufacture of Qassam rockets, 1198; and suicide bombings, link between, 1411, 1435; support for, 1658; survivor of, 1351; as terrorism, 1434, 1450; U.S. support for Israel's use of, 1527–1528. See also Mossad
- Tartman, Esterina, 1651
- Tauran, Jean-Louis, 1549
- al-Tawil, Ibrahim, 1079, 1443
- al-Tawil, Suha, 103
- Tax revolt, Bayt Sahur, 1436–1437
- Tehiya Party, 462, 1391, 1437, 1489
- Tehomi, Avraham, 641
- Tekhiyat Israel (The Rebirth of Israel), 186
- Tekuma, 976, 1437–1438, 1658
- Tel Aviv: CIA office in, 245; electrification of, 1122; establishment of, 766, 1276, 1670; foreign embassies in, 746; immigrants, settling of, 1673; movement of U.S. embassy from, 1638
- Telem Party, 308, 1437, 1438

- Telephone service, Occupied Territories, 600–601
 Tel Hai settlement, defense of, 1479, 1480
 “Temple Culture,” 1452
 Temple Feasts, 1452
 Temple Institute (Machon HaMikdash), 763, 1455–1456, 1561
 Temple Mount, 496, 563–564, 1438–1441; archaeological claims, 1440–1441; Ariel Sharon’s visit to (2000), 56–57, 74, 126, 152, 293, 497, 616, 626, 845, 940, 1011, 1051, 1367, 1440; current conflict, sources of, 1439–1440; earthquakes and, 1439, 1441; Hasmonean Tunnel, 126, 388, 497, 505, 559, 740–741, 949, 1023, 1440, 1635–1636; historic and religious significance of, 1439; Jewish and Muslim traditions related to, 1438–1439; Jewish fundamentalist plot to destroy mosques on, 762, 763; Marwani Mosque, 1441; Muslim control of, 1287, 1440; and the Oslo Process, status of, 1440; reopening of to Jews (2004), 1453; sovereignty over (Taba Talks), 1429. See also al-Haram ash-Sharif; Dome of the Rock; Third Temple Movement
 Temple Mount Faithful (Ne’emany Har HaBayit), 497, 763, 1287, 1453, 1458, 1460, 1461
 Temple Mount Movement, 334
 Temple Mount Reclamation Movement, 496
 Temple Society, settlements in Palestine, 1663
 The Temple Treasury, 1460–1461
 The Temple Women, 1459
 Temporary International Presence in Hebron (TIPH), 536, 537, 1441–1442
 Tenet, George, 67, 102, 224, 226, 245, 246, 300, 1201, 1442–1443, 1525, 1638, 1660
 Tenet Plan, 245, 246, 1265, 1442–1443, 1525, 1526
 Territorialists, 1667
 Terror Against Terror (TNT), 762, 763, 881, 1443–1444, 1453
 Terrorism and terrorists, 1444–1451; Arafat’s use of, 97; broad definition of, 1409; Cairo Declaration, 91, 1068; casualties attributed to, 1444; children, attacks on, 1445; as defined by state, 1447–1449; “doctrine of double effect,” 1450; East German connections to, 441; emergence of under British Mandate, 1444–1445; errors in, 1434–1435; failing peace process, and escalation of, 682–683; family reunification and, 387; Fatah renunciation of, 1069; global war on, 1200, 1525; harm to innocents, justification for, 1647; hijackings, 9, 90, 93, 121, 201; history of violence in conflict, 1444–1445; house demolitions as deterrent to, 568; IDF counterterrorism tactics, 648, 1035; Iran, support for, 633, 634; Jewish Defense League (JDL) as, 756, 763, 1443; against Jewish settlers, 1331; by Jewish settlers, 136–137, 1331; joint Anti-Terrorism Working Group, 1409; Lohamei Herut Yisrael (LEHI) activities, pre-1948, 1130, 1131, 1445, 1513, 1674; monuments to, 448; in moral terms, defining, 1449–1451; mujahadeen, 1448; Munich Olympics (1972), massacre at, 201–202, 433, 440, 955–956, 1285; 1967 War, and escalation of, 1445–1446; against Palestinians, 1362; peace process, beginning of, 1446–1447; perpetrators, overview of, 1444; PLO justification for, 201; PLO renunciation of, 91, 101, 125, 231, 312, 1048, 1069, 1300, 1446, 1482; al-Qaida, 1447, 1448; randomness of, 1449; in response to MacDonald White Paper, 213, 1445; Road Map for Peace, call for dismantling “terrorist infrastructure,” 1526; September 11, 2001 attack on U.S., impact of, 1306, 1447, 1449; Sharm al-Shaykh Declaration (1996) against, 661, 845, 1362; targeted assassinations as revenge for, 1434; UN definition, failure to craft, 1448; U.S. definition of, 1448–1449; and warfare compared, 1449–1459; “War on Terror,” U.S., 622, 629, 634, 1525–1526, 1539, 1678. See also Irgun Tzeva’i Le’umi; Lohamei Herut Yisrael (LEHI); Suicide bombings; Targeted assassinations
Terrorism, the Infantile Disease of the Hebrew Revolution, 137
 Terrorists. See Terrorism and terrorists
 Textbooks: Arab, move to drop the word Nakba from, 1097; Palestinian and Israeli compared, 353–355
 al-Theeba, Ghazi, 1117
 Think tanks, 36–37, 921; American Enterprise Institute (AEI), 37; Arab Thought Forum (ATF), 95, 1306; Center for Security Policy (CSP), 37, 243–244; Foundation for the Defense of Democracies (FDD), 36–37; Health, Development, Information and Policy Institute (HDIP), 161; Hudson Institute, 37; Israeli-Palestinian Center for Research and Information (IPCRI), 679, 1397; Jaffee Center for Strategic Studies, 1473; Jewish Institute for National Security Affairs (JINSA), 37, 243; Middle East Forum (MIF), 33, 921; Middle East Media Research Institute (MEMRI), 31, 256, 921; Palestine Economic Policy Research Institute (MAS), 1062; Project for a New American Century (PNAC), 37, 243; Washington Institute for Near East Policy (WINEP), 36, 243, 279, 593, 921, 1275
 Third Aliya, 17, 320
 Third Temple Movement, 496, 888, 1451–1463; Ascend the Temple Mount in Purity, 1459; Begeg Ivri (Hebrew Clothing), 1456–1457; Bet Din (House of Judgment), 1455; biblical justification for, 1452; broad categories of groups involved in, 1452–1453; Chai Vekayam (Alive and Existing Movement), 1459; Christian involvement in, 254, 1287, 1341, 1460–1461; Christian Zionists and, 752, 1454, 1461; cornerstone, attempts to lay, 497; financial support for, 1454, 1460–1461; fringe elements, 1453; general ideology of, 1453–1453; Gershon, Salomon in, 1287; growth of among Jews, 1453–1454; Hai v’Kayam (Enduring: David, King of Israel, Lives and

- Endures), 1457; Hara'ayon Hayehudi (The Jewish Idea), 1458; El Har Hamor (To Mount Hamor), 1457; El Har Hamor (To the Mountain of Myth), 1459; Hasmeanon Tunnel, as the beginning of, 1635–1636; HaTenu'ah LeChinun HaMikdash, 1459; The Hope, 1461; House of Harrari, 1456; Institute for Talmudic Commentaries, 1457; Israeli individuals involved in, 1454; Israeli state encouragement of, 334, 1453; Jerusalem Forum (The Amuta for Settling Jerusalem), 178,, 751, 1335, 1459–1460; Lechatchila (At the Beginning), 1458; Malchut Israel (Kingship for Israel/Kingdom of Israel), 1455; Mishmarot HaKohanim (The Kohanim's Preserves), 1457; Mishmarot hamikdash (Temple Work Shifts), 1457; Mitpeh Yericho, 1456; The Movement for the Establishment of the Temple, 1457–1458; overview of, 1451–1453; The Red Heifer, 1456; Revava (Masses), 1458–1459; Sanhedrin (Council of Elders), 1454–1455; Shocharey HaMikdash (Temple Lovers Group), 1452, 1453, 1454; Sivuv She'arim (the custom of walking around the Old City), 1459; "Temple Culture," 1452; Temple Institute (Machon HaMikdash), 763, 1455–1456, 1561; Temple Mount Faithful (Ne'emaney Har HaBayit), 497, 763, 1287, 1453, 1458, 1460, 1461; The Temple Treasury, 1460–1461; The Temple Women, 1459; Virtual Beis Hamikdash, 1459
- The Third Way, 950
- Tiberias, 1445, 1463–1464, 1561
- Tibi, Ahmad, 78, 144, 1205, 1464–1465
- Tikkun* (journal), 327, 988
- Tikkun olam* (redemption of the world), 218, 760
- Tillich, Paul, 257
- Tito, Josip Broz, 997
- Toledano, Shmuel, 724
- Tomb of Nabi Musa (Moses), 730. See also Jericho
- Tomb of the Patriarchs. See Cave of Machpelah/Cave of the Patriarchs; al-Ibrahimi Mosque
- Torah and Shabbat Judaism, 1465
- Torat Cohanim, 1465
- Torture: collaborators, participation in, 289, 671; defined, 849; and Fourth Geneva Convention, 849; Israeli Committee on Torture, 681; Israeli Supreme Court prohibition against, 1193; at Khiam detention center, reports of, 1398; PNA use of, 246, 1102; Public Committee Against Torture in Israel (PCATI), 616, 671, 1193; reports of, Israeli military court system, 668, 669, 670–671, 928, 1180, 1182, 1379; Shin Bet, use of, 642, 669, 849, 1378–1379. See also Collaborators, Palestinian; Israeli military court system in the Occupied Territories; Israeli Supreme Court; Mossad
- To the Promised Land: A History of Zionist Thought*, 589
- Toubi, Tawfik, 1219
- Toussia-Cohen, Itzhak, 1375
- "Tower and stockade" settlements, 820, 1607, 1634
- Transfer Agreement (1933). See Ha'avara (Transfer agreement) (1933)
- Transfer and displacement of Palestinians, 49, 50, 319, 744, 1137, 1465–1475; administrative measures inducing emigration, 1472–1473; advocates for, 370, 566; "Arab Trek," 1467; assumption behind policies of, 1465–1466; "cantonization" plan, 1473; closed military zones, declaration of, 1469; consolidation of territory gains following 1948 war, 1469–1470; Dalet Plan/Plan Dalet, 304, 1235, 1469, 1561; Davidka Monument in Safed to commemorate, 1280; de-Arabization, 172, 1470–1471, 1509; exodus after 1948 War, 1468–1469; expulsion of Palestinians from Lydda, 1948 War, 893, 894; extralegal means of expulsion, 1470; Gamla and "The Logistics of Transfer," 414; HaShomer, forced eviction of Palestinians (pre-World War I), 1467; illegal transfers, Klugman Report, 825–827, 1339, 1388, 1389, 1555; Israel claims sovereignty, 1469; Israeli and South African strategies compared, 1615–1616; Israel takes ownership, 1470; Kach party platform for, 799; Lieberman Plan, 886, 1650; main forms of (1967–present), 1471–1473; military measures inducing displacement, 1470, 1472; nishul, 1466, 1469, 1471, 1473–1474; Oslo Process (1993–2000), 1473–1474; Palestinian villages, destruction of, 1476, 1509, 1552–1554; Peel Commission's recommendations on, 182–183; present absentees, 247, 297, 372, 543, 569, 767, 1176–1178, 1239, 1469–1470; "quiet transfer," 1009, 1466, 1473; replacement of Arab place-names by Jewish ones, 106, 1471, 1553; "retroactive transfer," 1238–1239, 1476; "security areas," declaration of, 1570; settlements, expansion of, 1471–1472; stages of, 1466–1473; during systematic Zionist expansion (1918–1947), 1467–1468; Transfer Committee, formation of, 1468; unilateral separation, policy of (2001–present), 1473–1474; voluntary vs. compulsory, 1468, 1470; and Zionism, beginnings of (1904–1914), 1466–1467; zoning laws, 1472–1473
- Transfer Committee (1948), 766, 767, 1468, 1475–1477, 1553, 1606–1607
- Transfer of Property Law (1950), 326, 705. See also Development Authority
- Trans-Israel Highway, construction of, 1471
- Transjordan, 296, 457, 778, 780, 1131, 1489, 1559. See also British Mandate in Palestine (1922–1948); Jordanian option
- Treaties of Rome (1958), 379
- Treaty of Lausanne (1924), 1291

- Treaty of Sèvres, 1291, 1414
 Treaty of Versailles, 296, 457, 1139
 Trees, uprooting of, 56
 Trotsky, Leon, 48
 Truman, Harry S., 41, 187, 213, 277, 854, 1477–1479, 1627; arms embargo against Israel (1947), 1478; halt to Israeli offensive, 1948 War, 1568; and immediate U.S. recognition of Israel, 1478, 1520, 1612; Israel's admission to UN membership, support for, 1479; Jacobson, Eddie, friendship with, 1477; Jewish immigration to Palestine, commitment to, 1478; military wastefulness, exposure of (Truman Committee), 1478; Palestinian refugees, failure to provide for, 1479; partition of Palestine, support for, 1294, 1418, 1477; State Department under, opposition to partition of Palestine, 1478, 1561; and U.S. aid to Israel, 1478
 Trumka, Richard, 27
 Trumpeldor, Joseph, 765, 1430, 1479–1480, 1682
 Tsabin, Yair, 1134
 Tsemel, Lea, 673, 906, 1181, 1489–1482
 Tubi, Tawfik, 801
 Tunis/Tunisia: Israeli bombing of PLO headquarters in (1985), 1482; League of Arab States, headquarters in, 1482; PLO headquarters in, 9, 98, 100, 123, 622, 875, 1192, 1258, 1305, 1482–1483; relocation of Fatah to, 395; support for Palestinian cause, 1192; “The Tunisian Interlude,” 1482–1483
 Tunisians. See Old Guard; Returnees
 Tuqan, Fadwa, 1112, 1114–1115, 1483–1484
 Tuqan, Ibrahim, 808, 1112, 1483, 1484
 Turkey, 631, 1291, 1358, 1414, 1416, 1442, 1484–1488; Egypt, relations with, 1485–1486; Goldstone Report re: Israeli war crimes, support for, 1487; independent Palestinian state, support for, 1486; and Israel, fluctuating relations with, 1484–1487; Israeli UN membership, abstention on, 1485; as a mediator between Israelis and Palestinians, 1487; Military Cooperation and Training Agreement with Israel, 1487; 1948 War, neutrality during, 1485; and partition of Palestine, opposition to, 1484–1485; peace process, support for, 1485; PLO, relations with, 1485; Sinai/Suez War, role in, 1485; UN General Assembly Resolution 3379, support for, 1486; and U.S., relations with, 1485, 1486
 Two-state solution, 138, 1488–1489; Bush, George W., support for, 361; Christian support for, 256, 260; Clinton Parameters for, 284; defined, 1488; European Union support for, 379–380; Fatah support for, 233, 394; first articulation of, 1040, 1488; Geneva Accord (2003), 430, 1526; Hamas support for, 233; lobbying for, 30; miscellaneous individuals and groups in favor of, 649, 1003, 1138, 1141, 1582, 1649; Nuseibeh-Ayalon Agreement (2002), 140, 1003–1004; PFLP opposition to, 1168; PLO support for, 52, 90, 100, 138, 311, 423, 477, 1065, 1069, 1077–1078, 1076, 1167, 1446, 1488, 1589; Principles of Peace based on, 2, 1179; Prisoners' Document, endorsement of, 1186; Quartet, call for, 1200; Sharon's concept of, 715; UN Security Council call for, 1067, 1488; U.S. response to, 1261, 1521; variations on, 1488
 Tzedakah, 1061
 Tzomet party, 444, 1367, 1391, 1437, 1489–1490
 'Udwan, Kamal, 118, 201, 832, 956, 1491, 1606
 Uganda, plans to establish a Jewish state in, 1000, 1610, 1631, 1654, 1665, 1667
 UNCCP. See United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine (UNCCP)
 Uncultivated land, confiscation of, 372, 895, 1403, 1404, 1570
 Unemployment: Bedouin in Israel, 173; in Hebron, 528; Palestinian, 114, 173, 350, 351, 528, 727, 1392, 1838–1384, 1593; and suicide bombings, contributing factor to, 1410
 UNESCO. See United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)
 Unified National Leadership of the Uprising (UNLU), 124, 232, 622, 623, 1002, 1110, 1169
 Unilateral disengagement from Gaza. See Israel's unilateral disengagement from Gaza (2005)
 Union for the Mediterranean (UfM), 380
 Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, 38
 Union of Palestinian Medical Relief Committees (UPMRC), 161, 622, 1108
 Union of Zionist-Revisionists. See World Union of Zionist Revisionists
 Unit 101, 1199, 1363, 1491–1492
 United Arab List. See Ra'am
 United Arab Republic (UAR), 88, 117, 1419
 United Hebrew Immigrant Aid Service (HAIS), 1399
 United Jewish Appeal, 327, 338
 United Jewish Communities (UJC), 30
 United Kibbutz movement, 14
 United National Front (UNF), 1110, 1488, 1492–1493
 United National Leadership of the Uprising, 101
 United Nations, 1200, 1493–1504; anti-Israel bias, charges of, 1502–1503; Battle of Jenin (2002), investigation of, 1176; China, admission of, 251; Commission on Human Rights (CHR), 1270; Committee Against Torture, 700; Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR), 386; Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), 386, 1242; Convention on the Rights of the Child, 12; Economic and Social Council, 1083; establishment of, 1140; financial contributions to, U.S. dominance of, 1503, 1526–1527; Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO), 907, 1503, 1526; General Assembly (see United Nations General Assembly); High Commissioner for Human Rights, 1270–1271 (see also Robinson, Mary);

- High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), 1239, 1241, 1510; humanitarian relief, 1497–1498; Human Rights Commission, 616, 1498, 1502; Human Rights Committee, 386, 700, 1041, 1498; Human Rights Council, 1041, 1502; International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), 948, 1426, 1499, 1503; International Court of Justice (ICJ), 1501–1502; Israel, admission of to membership in, 337, 611, 853, 1479; Israeli ambassador to, 541; Israeli assault on Gaza (2008), condemnation of, 1041; Israeli military actions against Lebanon, 1494–1495; Military Working Group, 1496; 1967 War, 1494; 1973 War, 1494; Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), 962; Oslo Accords, UN resolutions and, 1503, 1527; partition and the 1948 War, 1493–1494; peace efforts, 1495–1496; role of in resolving Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 1504, 1526, 1449; peacekeeping missions, 1496–1497; Qibya massacre, condemnation of, 1200; Quartet, participation in, 947, 1200, 1496; Security Council (see United Nations Security Council); Security Council Resolutions re: al-Aqsa Intifada, 66–67; Sinai/Suez War (1956), 1494; treatment of Israel, monitoring of, 34; Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR), 140, 311, 314, 385, 1241, 1254; UN role in Israeli-Palestinian conflict, U.S. ambassadors to, 15–16; U.S. public opinion re:, 1504, 1527; U.S., role of in, 1503–1504, 1526; U.S. Security Council vetoes on behalf of Israel, 66–67, 824, 1024, 1067, 1206, 1229, 1488, 1495, 1500–1501, 1521, 1527; World Food Program, 66, 907; World Health Organization (WHO), 1497, 1503, 1526; Zionist colonization, as a legitimate project, 1559
- United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine (UNCCP), 83, 815, 853–854, 1119–1120, 1236, 1280, 1429, 1494, 1504–1507, 1509, 1568, 1569
- United Nations Disaster Relief Project, 187
- United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), 1496, 1515
- United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) 1497, 1503, 1526; World Heritage Sites, 732, 1010
- United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF): creation of first-ever (1956), 1494, 1496, 1516; deployment of to Egypt-Israel border, 1396, 1516, 1572; withdrawal of at 'Abd al-Nasir's request, 1572, 1577
- United Nations General Assembly, 52, 143, 221, 437, 1498; first emergency Special Session of, (Suez Crisis), 1494; organizational structure, 1498; otherwise unanimous resolutions, U.S. blockage of, 1503, 1527; resolutions related to Israeli-Palestinian conflict (see individual resolutions by number)
- United Nations General Assembly Resolutions; No. 43/177(proclamation of Palestinian state), 613; No. 181 (partition plan), 78, 87, 101, 129, 130, 145, 184, 187, 188, 208, 213, 214, 250, 311, 336, 399, 453, 610, 1119, 1126, 1131, 1150, 1234, 1235, 1245, 1477, 1482, 1493–1494, 1507–1509, 1514–1515, 1561, 1567, 1559, 1569, 1623, 1656, 1674; No. 194 (refugees and right of return) 50, 53, 90, 97, 122, 187, 280, 611, 767, 1110, 1067, 1119, 1120, 1140, 1300, 1429, 1489, 1494, 1498, 1504, 1509–1510, 1527, 1569; No. 273 (UN membership for Israel), 611; No. 392 (UNRWA, establishment of), 1497; No. 394 (Refugee Office, Jerusalem), 1506; No. 998 (UNEF, creation of, 1494; No. 2253 (annexation of Jerusalem), 612; No. 3236 (recognition of Palestinian national and political rights), 1300; No. 3237 (UN observer-member status for PLO), 90, 1300, 1489; No. 3379 (Zionism as racism), 1486, 1498, 1510–1511; No. 4686 (participation in Madrid Conference), 53
- United Nations Human Rights Commission, 616, 1498, 1502
- United Nations Human Rights Committee, 386, 700
- United Nations Human Rights Council, 1041, 1502
- United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), 1038, 1067, 1495, 1496, 1515–1516
- United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), 353, 421, 523, 872, 1222, 1383; donors to, 1306; education and, 1497; establishment of, 187, 1497; European Union, support of, 382; facilities, Israeli bombing of, 66; funding sources, 1497; in Gaza, 421; German aid to, 436–437; and health care in Palestine, 510, 1497; Jenin camp, administration of, 725, 1271; locations, 1497; microfinancing by, 1497; Palestinian refugees served by, 1497; relief and social services, 1497–1498; sewage disposal, provision of, 597; small-business initiatives, 1497; support for terrorism, allegations of, 1498; water study sponsored by, 774
- United Nations Security Council, 1498–1501; enforcement powers 1498; organizational structure, 1498–1499; resolutions related to Israeli-Palestinian conflict (see individual resolutions by number); U.S. vetoes on behalf of Israel, 824, 1488, 1495, 1500–1501, 1521, 1527; violations of UNSC resolutions related to Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 1499, 1504, 1524
- United Nations Security Council Resolutions: No. 100 (Israeli water diversion project), 777; No. 242 (Israeli withdrawal from territories occupied in 1967 War), 87, 90, 97, 101, 154, 198, 223, 232, 236, 240, 282, 311, 313, 344, 393, 399, 406, 422, 437, 612, 617, 747, 748, 843, 1068, 1110, 1141, 1300, 1482, 1494, 1499, 1501, 1511–1513, 1520,

United Nations Security Council

Resolutions (continued)

1572; No. 334 (international peace conference), 1495–1496; No. 338 (implementation of Resolution 242), 154, 223, 282, 311, 313, 344, 612–613, 1068, 1110, 1265, 1482, 1494, 1499, 1512, 1543; No. 425/426 (Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon), 241, 868, 1038, 1067, 1495; No. 465 (assisting Israel's colonization efforts), 1524; No. 487 (Israeli nuclear program), 1503; No. 516 (cease-fire in Lebanon), 1495; No. 605 (nonviolent resistance), 615; No. 664 (Iraq invasion of Kuwait), 466, 1502; No. 681, (resumption of Palestinian deportations, condemnation of) 223; No. 904 (Hebron Massacre, condemnation of), 1441; No. 1322 (Israeli obligation to abide by Fourth Geneva Convention), 614, 616; No. 1337 (UNTSO, establishment of), 1496; No. 1397, (cessation of violence in favor of political settlement) 67, 1265; No. 1402/1403, (reaffirmation of Resolutions 242, 338, 1397) 67; No. 1435 (call for end to Israeli occupation), 102; No. 1701 (cease-fire/rearming of Hizbullah), 890, 1024, 1260, 1495; No. 3538 (Israeli violation of Armistice Agreement), 1419; Nos. 252, 267, 298 (annexation of Jerusalem), 612; Nos. 446, 452, 465, 471 (Israeli withdrawal from its illegal settlements), 940

United Nations Special Committee on Palestine (UNSCOP), 184, 213, 344, 1149, 1250, 1478, 1493, 1507, 1513–1515, 1559, 1674

United Nations Special Coordinator (UNSC), 68

United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), 187, 337, 1200, 1491, 1493, 1496, 1515–1519; Armistice Agreements, and violations of, 1515, 1518–1519; creation of, 1496, 1515; demilitarized zones, supervision of, 1516–1518; functions of, 1616; Israeli water diversion project, 1518, 1519, 1569; military observers, deployment of, 1515; Mixed Armistice Commissions (MACs), 1516

United Nations World Conference against Racism, 54

United Resistance Movement, 753

United States, 1200, 1519–1534, 1678; American-Israeli Memorandum of Understanding (1975), 406; arms, sale of to Israel, 773, 1478, 1520, 1521, 1531–1532; Biltmore Program, endorsement of, 1130; Bush I administration, contentious relations with the PLO, 1522; Bush II administration, support for Israel, 1175–1176, 1524–1525; Carter administration, peace overtures, 1521; cease-fire, U.S.-brokered (2001), 1525; Christian right wing, support for Israel, 1531; Clinton administration, departure from previous foreign policy, 1522–1524; conditions placed on PLO, 1522; Dayton Plan, 490; defense of Israel's war on Lebanon, 869; Department of Defense, and U.S. foreign policy under George

W. Bush, 1525; diplomatic efforts re: al-Aqsa Intifada, 67–68; double standards in policy toward Syria and Israel, 1528; Eisenhower administration, challenges to Israeli policies, 1520; and European Union position on Israeli-Palestinian conflict compared, 383; exclusion of PLO from peace process, 1527; Fahd Plan (1981), rejection of, 1298; failure of opposition to challenge policy toward Israel and Palestine, 1532; financial aid to Israel (see U.S. aid to Israel); final status talks, failure of, 1524–1525; foreign aid to Israel, 1529–1530 (see also U.S. aid to Israel); Foreign Assistance Act of 1968, 773; Free Trade Agreement with Israel, 1367; Gaza Plan, support for, 421; and guilt re: Western anti-Semitism, 1531; and Iran-Iraq War, sale of weapons to Iraq, 635; and the Islamic world, growing tensions between, 1522, 1523, 1531, 1532, 1678; and Israeli elections, influence of policies on, 1522; Israeli-Jordanian conflict, 1529; Israeli-Lebanese conflict, 1528–1529; Israeli-Palestinian peace process, efforts to initiate, 617, 1522–1524; Israeli settlement policy, refusal to condemn, 499; Israeli-Syrian conflict, 1528; Jerusalem, official policy toward, 746; Jewish Diaspora in, 326–328; Jewish immigration to, 1662; Johnson administration, support for Israel, 1520; joint military exercises with Israel, 1408, 1521; Kennedy administration, challenges to Israeli policies, 1520; Lebanon, U.S. relations with, 1528–1529; Memorandum of Understanding (1981) re: Israel as a strategic asset, 1229, 1354, 1406, 1408, 1504, 1521; Middle East foreign policy, primary influences on, 357–358, 948; missile-warning satellite system, Israeli link to, 1409; neoconservatives, influence of, 37, 46, 53, 225, 227, 255, 256, 328, 983–984, 1175, 1525; 1973 War, involvement in, 1521; Nixon administration, military and economic aid to Israel, 1520–1521; outposts, official stance on, 1055; Palestinian National Authority, relations with, 1520; Palestinian refugees, limited support for, 1520; Palestinian rights, opposition to, 1527; Palestinian Unity Government, opposition to, 301; pledge to Israel not to negotiate with the PLO, 1286; PLO, contentious relations with, 1522, 1527–1528; pro-Jewish lobby in, 2, 1531 (see also American Jewish organizations); racism toward Arabs and Muslims, 1532; Reagan administration, military and economic aid to Israel, 1521–1522; recognition of Israel (1948), 278; Rogers peace plan, 1521; role in Israeli-Palestinian conflict, history of, 1520–1522; record of hostility toward Palestinian national aspirations, 1519–1520; sale of arms to Arab states, 222; as self-appointed custodian of the Middle East following September 11, 868; sentimental attachment to Israel, 1531; September 11, 2001 terrorist attack on, 224, 227, 868, 1306; Shah of Iran, relations

- with, 631, 632; strategic cooperation with Israel, examples of, 1408–1409; strategic needs vs. interests of the Palestinian and Israeli people, 899; and Syria, relations with, 1528; Truman administration, immediate recognition of Israel, 1478, 1520; two-state solution, response to, 1261, 1521; UN General Assembly Resolution 181 (partition plan), support for, 1674, 1678; United Nations and the Palestinian question, 1525, 1526–1528; UN Security Council vetoes on behalf of Israel, 66–67, 824 1024, 1067, 1206, 1229, 1488, 1495, 1500–1501, 1521, 1527; unwavering support for Israel, reasons for, 1519, 1530–1532; “War on Terror,” 622, 629, 634, 1525–1526, 1539
- United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, 553
- United States-Palestine Liberation Organization Dialogue (1988), 3, 92, 423, 878, 1069, 1304, 1382, 1534–1535; PLO, fulfillment of conditions for, 312; suspension of, 222, 640, 1304, 1522, 1534, 1659; U.S. conditions for participation in, 1522, 1534
- United Torah Judaism (Yahadut HaTorah), 13, 445, 986, 1535
- Unity government, Palestinian (2007). See Mecca Agreement and the Palestinian unity government
- Unlawful Association, Defense Emergency Regulation 84, 315
- Unrecognized villages, 1466, 1535–1538; Association of Forty, 133–134, 1536; basic rights, withholding of to, 1535; Bedouin population in, 172, 173, 706, 768; demolition of, 569, 1536; education, 1535, 1537; health care in, 1163, 1535; inhabitants of as lawbreakers, 1535; Markovitz Committee (1986), recommendations of, 828, 1536; monthly monitoring of, 1536; Palestinian citizens of Israel living in, 1084, 1535; Planning and Construction Law (1965), 1535–1536; population density, 1536; recognition of, 133–134; road system, connection to, 1537; sustainable building techniques in, 228–229; water, availability of, 1535, 1536–1537
- UNRWA. See United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA)
- UNTSO. See United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO)
- UN Watch, 34
- Urayqat, Kamal, 412
- al-ʿUrwa al-Wuthqa (The Firmest Bond), 117
- U.S. aid to Israel, 1529–1530, 1538–1541; and condition of U.S. economy, correlation between, 1539; Cranston amendment and, 1540; as deterrent to peace in the Middle East, 1532; emergency arms appropriations, 1540; under George W. Bush, 1538; gradual elimination of, 1530, 1540; grants vs. repayable loans, 1529, 1540; high levels, justification for, 1530, 1539; Homeland Security Act (2002), provisions for, 1538; identification of with Israeli security, 1538, 1580; increases in, 279–280, 1524; loan guarantees, 1523, 1529, 1538, 1540; under Lyndon Johnson, 773–774, 1520; and the Marshall Plan compared, 1538; military aid, 1519–1521, 1530–1531, 1538–1540; and military purchases from U.S. companies, 1540; as a percentage of total U.S. foreign aid budget, 1530, 1539; perks not available to other aid recipients, 1530, 1539–1540; policies re., history and evolution of, 1538–1539; private, tax-deductible cash transfers, 1530, 1538; prohibitions tied to, 1540; pro-Israel lobby and, 1539, 1678; questions raised by Israeli citizens re., 1530; for redeployment of Israeli troops, 1538; research and development grants, 1538; State of Israel Bonds, 37–38, 1530, 1538, 1540–1541; tied to protecting U.S. interests in the Middle East, 1530, 1538; total of from all sources, 1529, 1538, 1539; Wye River Memorandum and, 1524, 1538
- Ussishkin, Menahem, 1632, 1680
- U.S. media. See Media, U.S.
- USSR. See Moscow; Russian Federation; Russian Empire; Soviet Union
- Vaʿad Leʿumi, 113, 753, 1149
- Van Buren, Paul, 257
- Vance, Cyrus Robert, 239, 1422, 1543–1545
- Vanguards of the Popular Liberation War (Forces of the Lightning Bolt), 120, 1283, 1545, 1585. See also Saʿiqa (Thunderbolts)
- Vanunu, Mordechai, 951, 1545–1547
- Vatican, 258–259, 1547–1550; anti-Semitism within the Catholic Church, 1547; Bethlehem University, 1132; Catholic-Jewish Liaison Committee, 258; diplomatic relations with Israel, establishment of, 259, 1547, 1548; direct intervention into Israel-Palestinian conflict, 1549; Fundamental Agreement between Israel and the Holy See (1993), 1548; holy sites, protection of, 1547; and the Jews through history, 1547–1548; Latin patriarch of Jerusalem, appointment of, 1549; Nostra Aetate Declaration (1965), 1547, 1548; and the Palestinians through history, 1548–1550; and PLO, recognition of, 259, 1281, 1549–1550; Pontifical Mission for Palestine, 259; Pope John Paul II, meeting with Tawfiq Zayyad, 1657; Pope John Paul II, visit to the Great Synagogue in Rome, 1547–1548; Pope John Paul II, visit to the Holy Land, 1281; Roman Catholic adherents in the Holy Land, welfare of, 1547; Roman Catholic population in pre-1948 Palestine, 1251; Second Vatican Council, “Statement on the Relationship to Non-Christian Religion,” 258, 1548; Vatican-PLO accord, 1549–1550; Zionism, reaction to, 1398

- Vaux, Father Roland de, 109
 Védrine, Hubert, 410
 Venice Declaration (1980), 379, 410–411, 439, 1068, 1550–1551
 “Victory gardens,” First Intifada, 624, 642, 998
 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1549
 Village Leagues, 176, 272, 336, 871, 876, 1046, 1551–1552
 Villages, Palestinian: depopulated in 1948 and 1967 and razed by Israel, 1565; destruction of, 1476, 1509, 1552–1554, 1560, 1561, 1564 (see also Nakba Catastrophe); Israeli raids on, as contributing factor to 1967 War, 1573
 Vilner, Meir, 903, 1219
 Virshubsky, Mordechi, 23
 Virtual Beis Hamikdash, 1459
- Wadi Hilweh, 1386, 1387, 1388, 1390
 Wadi Juz neighborhood, 1555–1557
 Wagner, Donald, 256
 Wahhabism, 1294
 Waking Up on Time, 408
 Walesa, Lech, 553
 Walters, Vernon, 1286
 Walzer, Michael, 642
- War, 1948, 1557–1570; abandoned property resulting from, 1118–1119; Acre, capture of, 1562; Aida Refugee Camp, 192; air force, Czech planes and the formation of, 1567; armistice and futile peace negotiations, 1568–1569; Arab defeat, 87, 1675; Arab humiliation and loss of honor following, 1190; Arab Liberation Army, creation of, 1560; and Arab states, repercussions for, 1569; Arab troops, sources of, 1562; Arab villages, Israeli destruction of, 1476, 1509, 1552–1554, 1560, 1561, 1564; Armistice Agreements (1949), 129, 130–131, 868, 1494, 1509, 1515, 1557, 1568–1569; arms, procurement of, 1558, 1566; Balad al-Shaykh, massacre at (1947), 1562; borders, changes to, 203, 843, 1508; British, departure of, 1557, 1558–1560, 1564; compulsory military service, introduction of, 1558; Dalet Plan (1948), 116, 303–305, 991, 1235, 1561; Deir Yassin, massacre at, 116, 175, 304, 316–317, 641–642, 780, 892, 991, 1235, 1445, 1561, 1564; diplomatic preparations, 1558–1559; Druze communities, sparing of, 1566; Egyptian troops, participation in, 1563; ethnic cleansing, first phase, 1468–1469, 1509, 1557–1558, 1559, 1560–1561; ethnic-cleansing front (until the first truce), 1564–1565; final confrontation, 1558; first truce, 1565–1566; Galilee region, final takeover of, 1568; Haifa, fall of, 1562; Iraqi troops, participation in, 1563–1564; Israeli army, size of, 1563; Israeli troops, unification of, 1566; Jaffa, capture of, 1562; Jenin, capture of, 1564; Jerusalem, attacks on, 1561–1562, 1567; Jordanian Arab Legion, participation in, 1563, 1565; kibbutzim in, 820; Lebanese units, participation in, 1563; Lydda, Israeli attack on, 893, 894, 1206, 1567; mass punishment of entire villages, 1560, 1564; Nazareth, Israel’s seizure of, 1566; Operation An-Far, 1567; Operation Cedar, 1564; Operation Cleansing the Leaven, 1562; Operation Cypress, 1566; Operation Dani, 1221, 1567; Operation Dekel, 980; Operation Fait Accompli, 1569; Operation Hiram, 991, 1568; Operation Misparayim, 1562; Operation Nachson, 1564; Operation Palm Tree, 1566; Operation Policeman (1948), 1566–1567; Operation Winery, 1568; Operation Yiftah, 1280; Operation Yoav, 1470, 1567, 1568; Operation Zarzir, 1434; outcome, impact of on Palestinian people, 1569; Palestinian expulsion and flight, 107, 610–611, 1118, 1177, 1561; preparations for by Jewish Agency for Israel, 1558–1559; present absentees, creation of, 1177, 1469–1470; property transfer and, 1122; Ramla, fall of, 1221, 1567; “real war,” early stages, 1563–1564; refugees, creation of, 853, 1565–1566; Safed, capture of, 1562; second truce and resumption of battle, 1567–1568; Syrian army, participation in, 1563; Tantura, massacre at, 1564; temporary truce, 187; ten-day war, 1566–1567; Tiberias, fall of, 1561; timeframe of, 1556; UN General Assembly Resolution 181, and the beginning of, 1557, 1560, 1675; UN sanctions, threat of, 1568; urban Palestine, destruction of, 1561–1563; Zionist military operations outside the UN-proposed Jewish state, 1562
- War, 1967, 1570–1574; Arab defeat, speed of, 119, 393, 1583, 1584; casualties, 1571; causes of, 1572–1573, 1574; domestic issues leading up to, 1576–1577; East Jerusalem, Israeli annexation of, 746, 1315, 1322, 1323, 1334, 1523, 1573; Egypt, effects of, 356–358; escalation of terrorism following, 1445–1446; expulsion of Palestinians during, 1571–1572; Golan Heights, Israeli occupation of, 1571; Israeli air attacks, 1570, 1573; Israeli control of occupied territory, plans for, 1573; Israeli sense of encirclement by hostile Arab forces, 1574, 1577; Israel’s use of force, self-examination of, 1671; Jericho, Israeli capture of, 1570; length of, 1570; National Water Carrier project as a contributing factor to, 1572, 1573; participating countries, 1570; refugees, Israeli offer for return of, 1572; and Saudi Arabia, reaction to, 1296; settlement of territories captured in, (Galili Protocols), 413–414; territory captured in, 1570–1571 (see also Occupied Territories); United Nations, response to (see United Nations Security Council Resolution 2420; U.S. intervention in, 1571; Western Wall, Israeli capture of, 1438, 1623
- War, 1967, consequences for Israel, 1574–1583; American Jewish community, impact on, 1579, 1580; domestic context of the war, 1576–1577; geographic, political, social, and economic alterations, 1582; immediate military successes,

- 1573; Israeli victory, interpreting, 1574, 1577–1578; Israel’s military superiority, proof of, 1581; Near East after, map of, 1575; Occupation, effects of, 1580–1581; PLO, emergence of on the international stage, 1578; public discourse and division, 1581–1582; settlement movement, emergence of, 1579; U.S.-Israeli relations, 1574, 1579–1580; Zionism, debates about the meaning of, 1581
- War, 1967, consequences for the Palestinians, 1583–1590; Arab states and the PLO, 1587–1588; and Fatah, competition for, 1585–1586; new guerrilla strategy, 1584–1585; new ideological orientation, 1588–1589; international consequences, 1589–1590; Occupied Territories, life in, 1583–1584; PLO, transformation of, 1586–1587
- War, 1973; Arab defeat, 90; Arab diplomacy following, 1589; impact of on Palestinian resistance organizations, 122; intelligence failures related to, 848, 931–932; U.S. support for Israel, 1521
- Warburg, Otto, 1062, 1610, 1632
- “Warm Jews,” 28
- War of Attrition, 89, 1578, 1587, 1590–1591; casualties, 1590; cease-fire, Rogers’ arrangement of, 1273; international response to, 1590–1591; Israel’s “asymmetrical response,” 1591; reasons for, 1590; Rogers Plan (1969), 1273–1274, 1512; Soviet Union, involvement of, 1273
- War of the Camps. See Camps’ War
- “War on Terror,” U.S.-led, 622, 629, 634, 1525–1526, 1539
- War or Peace in the Semitic Region*, 137
- Warschawski, Michel, 906, 1350, 1591–1592
- Washington Institute for Near East Policy (WINEP), 36, 243, 279, 593, 921, 1275
- Waskow, Arthur, 327
- Waste management, 374, 597–598
- Water resources and access, 430, 431, 1592–1605; “absorptive capacity” and, 1628; acts of violence related to, 777; Arab Plan (1954), 776; availability of to unrecognized villages, 1535, 1536–1537; Barrier and the Eastern Segregation zone, effects of, 1603; changes in sovereignty over, 394; Coastal Aquifer, 1600, 1601; desalination, proposals for, 1603; diseases related to, 1593; diversion project, Arab anger over, 1420; future needs, estimates of, 1602; Gardiner Formula, 776; Gaza Strip, 596–597, 598–599, 1039, 1600–1601; groundwater, defined, 1597; inter-Arab conflicts over, 89; irrigation of Palestinian land, Israeli limits on, 347, 1595; Israeli policies toward, 347; Israeli retention of, 1489; Israeli Water Authority, 1594; Israel’s restrictions on, adverse affects of, 1593; Israel’s water policies, goals in, 1595–1596; for Jerusalem, 743; Johnston Plan (1956), 337, 774–778, 1520, 1601–1602; Joint Water Committee (JWC), 1602–1603; Jordan Basin, 1597; Jordanian plan, and National Water Carrier project compared, 1519; Jordan River, Israel’s secret water diversion project, 337–338, 776–777, 1520; Lake Tiberias, diversion of water from (see National Water Carrier project); Litani River in south Lebanon as a critical source of, 1568; mobile water tankers, 1593; Mountain Aquifer, 1597, 1600; National Water Carrier project, 89, 393, 777, 843, 1420, 1518–1519, 1572, 1573, 1602; natural water sources, 1596–1601, 1602; in the Occupied Territories, 598–599, 1010, 1016, 1593, 1602; Palestinian rights to, denial of, 347, 417, 426; Palestinian Water Administration (PWA), 1594, 1595; peace process and, 1602–1603; pipe maintenance, 1593; pollution, 376, 1600; price of water, 1595; quality, deterioration of, 375–376; rainwater-harvesting cisterns, 1594; rationing, 1593; scarcity, reasons for, 1592; surface water, defined, 1597; Syrian-Israeli conflict over water (1950–1965), 1419, 1420, 1518–1519 (see also United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO)); wastewater treatment, 374–375, 598; water conflict, history of, 1601–1602; water consumption, Israeli and Palestinian compared, 1593, 1594, 1597, 1600, 1601, 1602; water quality, deterioration of, 375–376; wells, 1594; West Bank, 598, 844, 1593, 1596–1601
- Wattad, Nizar, 1117
- al-Wazir, Intisar, 1606
- al-Wazir, Khalil Ibrahim (Abu Jihad), 1605–1606; assassination of, 2, 100, 152, 202, 395, 628, 877, 951, 1069, 1435, 1482, 1544, 1606; expulsion from Jordan, 100, 876; and Fatah, founding and leadership of, 95, 133, 832, 1218, 1605; and PLO, leadership of, 118, 1064; “Soviet group,” 1287; Supreme Military Council, leadership of, 1605; and Yasir Arafat, relationship with, 97
- Weaponry: cluster bombs, 1030; dense inert material explosives (DIMEs), 1030; flechettes, 1030; Israel Defense Force, 647; Israeli, and Palestinian compared, 60; Israeli, sale of to China, 1538; Israeli, sale of to Iran, 631–632, 633; Palestinian, in Gaza, 1028–1029; smuggling of into Palestine, 115; unconventional, Israeli use of in Operation Cast Lead, 1029–1030, 1032; unmanned aerial vehicles (drones), use of, 1029; white phosphorus shells, 1029–1030
- Wedeman, Ben, 929
- Weinberg, Larry, 36
- Weinberg, Moshe, 955
- Weisgan, Asher, 1344
- Weisglass, Dov, 714
- Weismann, Keith, 28
- Weiss, Daniela, 458

- Weitz, Yosef, 766, 767, 991, 1468, 1475–1476, 1606–1608
- Weizman, Eyal, 1326
- Weizman, Ezer, 179, 506, 1608–1610, 1641
- Weizmann, Chaim Arizel, 48, 1000, 1275, 1289, 1610–1613, 1631; Balfour Declaration, involvement in, 144, 1610, 1670, 1680; Biltmore Program (1942), participation in, 194; death of, 186; first visit to Palestine, 1611; havlagah (self-restraint) policies, 1611–1612; Hovevei Zion, involvement in, 1610, 1611; immigration to Palestine, 1612; London/St. James Conference (1939), participation in, 893; media, control of, 911; meetings with Emir Faysal of Saudi Arabia (1918–1919), 1611, 1613; non-Zionists, coining of the term, 48; Passfield White Paper, response to, 1136; presidency of Israel, 1612; proposal for Jewish purchase of the Western Wall, 1622; Ramsay MacDonald's letter to (see MacDonald "Black Letter"); scientific accomplishments, 1610, 1612, 1670; Synthetic Zionism, founding of, 1611; vision of Zionism, 206, 649; visit to the White House (1947), 1478; World Zionist Organization, involvement in, 206, 1610–1612, 1613
- Weizmann-Faysal Agreement (1919), 1611, 1613–1614
- Weizmann Institute of Science, 1001, 1612
- Welfare Association, 332, 543, 1358, 1614
- West Bank, 1614–1621; agricultural sector in, 1616–1617, 1683; Bantustans, 147–151, 226–227, 248, 936, 1351, 1473, 1526, 1616, 1678; Barrier, impact of, 1617, 1618; checkpoints, 6, 58, 62, 147; Civil Administration (CA), 176, 271–272, 343, 349, 423, 1007, 1046, 1372, 1472, 1551, 1683; as a closed military zone, 715; consequences of al-Aqsa Intifada in, 68; context and background, 1615–1616; defined, 1614; E1 Plan, 341–343, 895–897, 1024, 1025, 1223–1224; economy, 1616–1617; education in, 600; energy, sources and supply of, 595–596; entry/exit of goods, 1616; and Gaza Strip compared, 1616; Geneva Accord (2003), 430–431, 1526; health care in, 599–600; house demolitions, 1683; incentives for settlement in, 711; internal migration, 1617–1618; international law, applicability of, 1615; Internet, access to, 601; Israeli policies aimed at complete control of, 1615–1616; Israeli reoccupation of (2002), 159, 1036; Jerusalem, loss of status as chief metropolitan center, 1618; Jewish settlements in, 68–69, 102; Jordanian rule, 1469, 1614–1615; major cities and towns, 1617–1618; master plan for Palestinian villages, 1683; media coverage of, 752, 915; Metropolitan Jerusalem Plan and, 934; natural water sources in, 1596–1600; 1967 War and, 1570, 1573; outposts in, 1055, 1322, 1326, 1330; permanent status map, projection of, 157; Palestinian National Authority (PNA), establishment of, 1617; Palestinian population of, 1322, 1323, 1614; Palestinian refugees in, 1236, 1614, 1617; public sphere, expansion of, 1619–1620; refugee camps in, 1614, 1619; "resident alien" status, 1016; restrictions on movement, impact of, 1618; roads (see Road system, West Bank); settlements, and the Israel Lands Administration (ILA), 711; "silent transfer" of Palestinians from, 1615; social hierarchies in, 1618; society, 1618–1620; telephone service in, 600–601; territorial fragmentation of, 148, 149, 150; territory annexed to Israel vs. land ceded to Palestinians, ratios for, 1430; waste management, 597; water, 598; Yesh Plan for settlement of, 1324; zoning laws and regulations, 1683
- The West Bank and the Rule of Law*, 668
- West Bank Database Project, 185
- Western Segregation Zone, 846
- Western Wall, 550, 739, 1621–1623; clashes between Jews and Palestinians at, 1622–1623; defined, 1621, 1623; excavations of, 559–560; first Israeli woman to see, 1480; Hasmonean Tunnel, 126, 388, 497, 505, 559, 740–741, 1023, 1440, 1635–1636; Israeli capture of (1967 War), 1438, 1623; Israeli sovereignty over (Taba Talks), 1429; Jewish attempts to purchase, 1622, 1623–1624, 1680; Jewish right of access to, 1623; Jordanian control of, 1623; political and nationalist significance of, 1623; prayer area, destruction of Arab Moroccan Quarter to create, 109; and Second Temple, destruction of, 1621; significance of to Muslims, 1621–1622, 1623; Third Temple movement and, 1622; and Wailing Wall segment, delineation between, 1429, 1621
- Western Wall Disturbances (1929), 188, 1623–1625; British response to, 779, 1611; Hagana suppression of, 1406; international interest in, 636; investigation of, 567, 897, 1135, 1371–1372; Jewish community, dispersal of following, 522; participants in, 1150; rehabilitation of agricultural communities following, 1062; triggering events, 114–115, 211, 1122, 1127, 1439; violence, surprising level of, 516. See also Shaw Commission (1930)
- Western Wall Tunnel, 559, 1336, 1341, 1440–1441
- West Jerusalem, 452, 734. See also Jerusalem
- Whitelam, 111
- White Nights*, 175
- White Papers of British Rule, 210–214; Churchill Memorandum (1922), 194, 210–211, 262–263, 1127, 1135, 1414, 1467; MacDonald White Paper (1939), 41, 82, 116, 183, 188, 212–214, 320, 577, 636, 779, 891, 898, 1126, 1129, 1290, 1445, 1478, 1607, 1628; Passfield White Paper (1930), 211–212, 576, 897, 898, 1126, 1127, 1128, 1130, 1135–1136, 1372, 1612, 1625
- White supremacists, 35
- Wiesel, Elie, 550, 551, 552
- Wiesenthal, Simon, 317
- Williams, Rowan, 257–258

- Wilson, Woodrow, 816, 1625–1627; Balfour Declaration, endorsement of, 1626; Fourteen Points, 145, 1626; Justice Brandeis, friendship with, 206, 1626; King-Crane Commission, proposal for, 820, 1627; Mandate system compromise, 1626; racial bias, 1625; support for Jewish state, 1627
- Winograd Commission, 1024
- Withdrawal from Gaza. See Israel's unilateral disengagement from Gaza
- Wolf, Lucien, 1655
- Wolffsohn, David, 1397, 1610, 1632
- Wolfowitz, Paul, 225, 256, 328, 984, 1004, 1525
- Women for Coexistence. See NELED (Women for Coexistence)
- Women in Black, 288, 654, 683, 684, 928, 997, 1627
- Women in Green, 470, 1627–1628
- Women's groups: Bat Shalom (Women with a Vision for a Just Peace), 171, 288, 683, 751; Coalition of Women for Peace, 287–288, 684, 998; The Fifth Mother, 288, 402; Four Mothers Movement, 402, 407–408, 659; General Union for Palestinian Women (GUPW), 1606; International Women's Peace Service, 451; MachsomWatch, 248, 288, 898, 997; Movement of Democratic Women for Israel (TANDI), 288, 954; NELED (Women for Coexistence), 288, 983; Noga, 288, 996; pro-Israel in the U.S., 38–39; Rafiqat al-Qassam (the Comrades of Qassam), 1197; Waking Up on Time, 408; Women in Black, 288, 654, 683, 684, 928, 997, 1627; Women in Green, 470, 1627–1628; Women's International League for Peace and Freedom (WILPF), 288
- Women's International League for Peace and Freedom (WILPF), 288
- Woodhead Commission (1938), 212, 1628–1629
- Workers Council of Haifa, 850
- World Council of Churches (WCC), and Israel, 258, 259, 451, 1406; Ecumenical Accompaniment Programme in Palestine and Israel, 451
- World Court. See International Court of Justice (ICJ)
- World Heritage Sites, UNESCO, 732, 1019
- World Jewish Congress, 447
- World of Difference Institute, Anti-Defamation League, 36
- World Social Forum, 1592
- World Student Christian Federation, 258
- World Union of Zionist Revisionists, 719–720, 1612, 1629–1630
- World Zionist Congresses, 329–330, 719, 1000, 1233, 1630–163; Eighth (1907), 1632; Eleventh (1913), 1632; Fifth (1901), 1631; First (1897), 43, 47, 171, 540, 1000, 1630, 1664 (see also Basel Program); Fourth (1900), 1631; Hebrew language instruction, 329; Jewish Colonial Trust (JCT), founding of, 755, 1664; Jewish Diaspora, related to, 330; Ninth (1909), 1632; Second (1898), 1630–1631; Seventh (1905), 1631–1632, 1654; Sixth (1903), 1631; Tenth (1911), 1632; Third (1899), 1631; Twelfth (1921), 1632–1633
- World Zionist Organization (WZO), 217, 540, 677, 1629, 1633–1635; acquisition of land by, 209, 211; Anglo-Palestine Bank, 1633, 1634; Balfour Declaration and, 145; Chaim Weizmann's involvement in, 206, 1610–1612, 1613; Democratic Faction, 1631; executive, election of, 1635; federations comprising, 1635; financial arm of (Keren HaYesod), 1632, 1633, 1634, 1635; founding of, 171, 540, 999, 1633, 1664; Jew and non-Jew, distinction between, 678; and Jewish Agency for Israel, 753, 1633–1634; Jewish Colonial Trust (JCT), 755, 1633, 1664; Jewish Diaspora and, 329; Jewish National Fund, establishment of, 1633, 1664; national home for “the Jewish people,” call for establishment of, 47, 1633; Palestine Land Development Corporation (PLDC), 495, 1062–1063, 1121, 1276; Palestine office, establishment of, 1467; primary mission of, 1089, 1633; separation from Jewish Agency, 1634–1635; Settlement Division, 1292; Sokolow, Nahum, 1397–1398, 1632; Uganda plan, 1000, 1631, 1654, 1665, 1667; Zionist Executive, 328, 902, 1149, 1398, 1681; Zionist General Council, 1681–1682
- World Zionist Organization–Jewish Agency (Status) Law (1952), 677
- Wye River Memorandum (1998), 279, 499, 786, 1362, 1635–1640; Arafat's compliance with, 42, 1078; CIA involvement in, 245, 1635, 1638; Gaza airport, 1257, 1636; genesis of, 1635–1636; Hebron, status of, 243; human rights, references to, 1246; Israeli implementation of, 152, 153, 1638–1639; joint security cooperation, 1637–1639; key components of, 1635; land, control of, 845; new settlements in the West Bank, restrictions on, 1638; opposition to, 444, 885; purpose of, 1635; redeployment dimension, Israeli commitment, 1636–1637; safe passage, promise of, 1257, 1362, 1636; security dimension, Palestinians' commitment, 1637; signing of, 1050, 1635; U.S. aid to Israel, stipulations of, 1524, 1538, 1638
- Wye II. See Sharm al-Shaykh Memorandum (1999)
- Ya'alon, Moshe, 160
- Yachad Party (of Ezer Weizman), 179, 1609, 1641
- Yachad Party (of Yossi Beilin), 1351, 1641–1642
- Yadin, Yigal, 108, 109, 1642–1643
- Yad Vashem (Holocaust memorial), 550
- Yaffa. See Jaffa
- Yahadut HaTorah. See United Torah Judaism (Yahadut HaTorah)
- Yahia, Rafik Haj
- Yahya, Adel, 111
- Ya'qub, Tal'at, 1063

- Yaron, Amos, 802, 1278, 1366
 Yasin, Shaykh Ahmad Ismail, 60, 234, 425, 486, 487, 494, 616, 933, 1222, 1643–1645
 Yasir Arafat International Airport, 1257. See also Gaza Strip, airport Yassin, Ali, 146
 al-Yazuri, Ibrahim, 486
 Yehoshua, A. B., 518–519, 552, 683, 778, 1645
 Yehoshua Plan. See Dalet Plan/Plan Dalet
 Yehuda, Netiva Ben, 518
 Yemen, 88
 “Yerushalayim shel Zahav,” 1377
 Yesha Council, 470, 762, 1293, 1324, 1345, 1453, 1646
 Yesha rabbis, 1646–1649
 Yesh Din, 1346, 1649
 Yesh G’vul (There Is a Limit), 64, 292, 654, 680, 681, 683, 997, 1154, 1249, 1592, 1649
 Yeshiva Shuvu Banim, 136
 Yeshiva system, development of, 1061
 Yeshiva Torat Cohanim, 134
 Yesh Plan, 1324
 Yeshurun, Avot, 517
 Yiddish, 48, 1666
 Yiftachel, Oren, 1330
 Yishuv, defined, 1663
 Yisrael B’Aliya, 445, 888, 1360, 1438, 1649–1650
 Yisrael Beiteinu (Israel Is Our Home) party, 470, 885, 959, 976, 986, 1438, 1650–1651
 Yizhar (Yizhar Smilansky), 517–518
 Yoffe, Avraham, 1476
 Yom HaShoah (Holocaust and Ghetto Rebellion Memorial Day), 550
 Yom Kippur War. See October War (1973)
 Yosef, Rabbi Ovadia, 1088, 1651–1652
 Yosef, Rabbi Ya’acov, 1088
 Younan, Munib, 260
 The Young Guard. See HaShomer HaTzair youth movement
 Young guard, 299, 621, 1020, 1073, 1218, 1432. See also Intifada Elite
 Young Israel Movement, 134
 Young Men’s Christian Association (YMCA), 958
 Young Men’s Muslim Association, 1195
 Youth Coalition against Civil Service, 543
 Youth Congress, 77
 Young Palestine Movement, 137
 Youth Revenge Group, 1166, 1652
- Zabar* (Jew born in the land of Palestine), 264
 al-Zabri, Mustafa, 60, 477, 1169, 1653, 1658
 Zach, Nathan, 518
 Zahalka, Jamal, 1088
 Zahar, Mahmoud, 302, 492, 1041
 Zaim, Husni, 83, 89, 853, 1419, 1569
 Zamir, Danny, 1031
 Zamir, Zvi, 8
 Zangwill, Israel, 852, 1467, 1632, 1653–1656
 Zaqtan, Ghassan, 1117
 Za’rur, Ahmad, 1586
- Zawiya*, 15
 Zayyad, Tawfiq, 980–981, 1113–1114, 1656–1657
 Ze’evi, Rehavam, 174, 656, 886, 944, 976, 1134, 1169, 1653, 1657–1658
 Zeidan, Muhammad Ahmad Fahd Abbas (Abu al-Abbas), 9, 222, 231, 1063, 1069, 1304, 1534, 1658–1659
 Zertal, Adam, 109
 Zerubavel, Jacob, 181
 Zhou Enlai, 250
 Ziad, Tawfik, 850
 Zinni, Anthony, 67, 224, 1659–1660
 Zinni Plan (2002), 1659–1660
 Zionism, 1660–1680; accomplishments and assessment of, 1677–1679; American vision of, 206–207; in Arab and Islamic countries, 49, 51; Arab animosity toward, 163, 1671–1672; and archaeology, attitude toward, 106–107; Balfour Declaration and, 649, 1671; beginnings of Zionist settlement in Palestine, 1663; under the British Mandate, 208, 1671–1672; British-Zionist alliance, breakdown of, 1673; Christian, 144, 254–256, 751, 1662; claims to the Gaza Strip, 420; “conquest of labor” doctrine, 545; after the creation of Israel, 1675–1677; Cultural, 49, 473, 572, 1668; defined, 457–458; and demography of pre-1948 Palestine, 1241; discrimination against Arabs, 1672; drive for statehood, 1674–1675; in Eastern Europe, 1662–1663; establishment of a “national Jewish home,” call for, 46, 194; as ethnic separation, 1592; as extreme ethnonationalism, 1465–1466; faith-based opposition to, 47–48, 51–52; First Aliya, 17, 319, 514, 1251, 1663, 1666; first book in Arabic on, 970; and Greater Land of Israel Movement, 456–463, 1437; Hebrew language, revival, 1251, 1666; Herzl and the foundation of Zionist organizations, 1663–1665, 1667; historical origins of, 1661–1662; indigenous Arab opposition to, 650; international opposition to, 46; and Israeli-Palestinian conflict, relations between, 1172; Jabotinsky’s conceptualization of, 719, 1672–1673 (see also Revisionist Zionism); Jewish Diaspora and, 1666–1667; Jewish identity and, 1662, 1666; as Jewish nationalism, 50, 179, 1465, 1661, 1662; Jewish resistance to, 46–47, 48; Labor, 49, 113, 175, 495, 721, 841, 1165, 1581, 1611, 1665, 1672; “a land without a people,” 49, 144, 172, 852, 1323, 1467, 1668–1669; Levantinization, threat of, 1669; and the marginalization of Palestinian Arabs, 49; “maximalist,” 1467; modern dilemma of, 54; Muslim-Christian Associations’ opposition to, 578; needs of Arabs and, 1148; 1967 War and, 1581; nishul, process of, 1466–1467, 1471; opposition to among Orthodox Jews, 986, 1662, 1667, 1680; Other, 1147–1151; Palestinian resistance to, 46, 52–53, 209, 1660; and patriotism, overlapping of, 1675–1676; Political, 217, 572, 588, 1275, 1632; post-Zionism,

- emergence of, 54, 1171–1174; Practical, 1632, 1665; primary goal of, 1660; as racism, 52, 53–54, 143, 221, 1510–1511, 1668, 1676 (see also UN General Assembly Resolution 3379 (Zionism as Racism)); and Reform Judaism, rejection of, 48, 50; and the refugee problem, historical evolution of, 1233–1234; Religious, 48, 830, 942, 975, 1059, 1173, 1631, 1665–1666; Revisionist, 23, 49, 113, 175, 227, 457, 459, 539, 641, 720, 887, 985, 1149, 1467, 1611, 1629, 1650, 1654, 1672–1673, 1674; right-wing, rise of, 1673; rise of, 42, 44–45; rival factions, emergence of, 1665–1666; Second Aliya, 17, 319, 514, 1251, 1665, 1666; and the Second Coming of Christ, 1662, 1678; “separation,” notion of, 1472; sociologists’ criticism of, 1667; Sokolow’s history of, 1397; statehood and, 1674, 1675–1677; Synthetic, 1611, 1632; systematic expansion of (1918–1947), 1467; Temple Society settlements as precursor to, 1663; term “Jewish state,” 1671; as victimization, 1172, 1676; World War I and, 1667, 1669–1671; World War II and the Holocaust, 610, 1667, 1673–1674; Zionist discourse, key elements of, 1666–1668
- Zionism: Its History, Objective and Importance*, 970
- Zionist Commission (1917), 1, 719, 821, 1613, 1680–1681
- Zionist Congresses. See World Zionist Congresses
- Zionist Executive, 328, 902, 1149, 1398, 1681
- Zionist Fascist Youth, 385
- Zionist General Council, 1681–1682
- Zionist Organization. See World Zionist Organization (WZO)
- Zionist Organization–Jewish Agency for Israel Status Law (1952), 1634
- Zionist Organization of America (ZOA), 30, 327
- Zionists: alliances with Western powers, 1071; Arab nationalists’ land sales to, 79, 81, 114, 209–210; and Arabs, relations with, 1632–1633; British alliance with, end to, 214; and Palestinian population, policies re:, 1559; procurement of weapons illegally in the U.S. (1947), 1478; self-identity, 1172
- Zion Mule Corps, 765, 1479, 1682
- Zippori, Mordechai, 802
- al-Zir, Ata, 1484
- Zo Artzenu (This Is Our Land), 470, 657, 1682–1683
- Zoning laws and regulations, 1682–1684; application of to Jerusalem, 741–742, 829, 1473; building permits, denial of to Palestinians, 465, 742, 1473, 1535–1536; East Jerusalem, 1683–1684; Green Line, 1682–1683; Jerusalem Regional Planning Scheme (1942), 1473; Markovitz Committee (1986), recommendations re: unlicensed construction, 828, 1536; Samaria Regional Planning Scheme (1945), 1473; use of to limit construction of Palestinian housing, 829; Wadi Juz neighborhood, rezoning of for Jewish settlement, 1556; as a way to induce emigration, 1472–1473; West Bank, 1683
- Zonshein, David, 290
- Zu’ayter, Akram, 1128
- Zucker, Dudy, 271
- Zuckerman, Mortimer, 30, 921
- Zuhri, Sami Abu, 492
- Zurayk, Constantine, 476
- Zurayq, Qustantin, 953
- Zureik, Elia, 1615
- Zwaiter, Wael ‘Aadel, 956