Chapter 1

HEY!
YOU'RE AWESOME

Hey, reader of this book!

YOU ARE POSITIVELY AWESOME.

It's so easy to forget that.

Life gets in the way, we keep adding to our to-do lists and firefighting our way through (big and small) daily battles.

But you are capable, you are interesting, and you can do hard things.

You are enough—just as you are.

We fail to remember our awesomeness, and we don't give ourselves the credit we deserve. But this book aims to change that. I want to remind you of all the reasons you are your own kind of wonderful, to provide ideas and tools to help you through the days that feel grey, and to shine a light on the ways you can be your truest, sparkliest self.

I don't claim to be an expert.

But I am a full-fledged empath, excellent cheerleader (in the supportive sense: I couldn't do a handstand if you paid me), self-care enthusiast, and proud member of the "I'm not sure how, but we will get through this" club.

Qualifications like this obviously don't come for free. I've earned my stripes!

In fact, like lots of us, I've had my fair share of stormy times.

I supported my boyfriend (now husband) through cancer. I've championed those closest to me through mental health struggles. Family estrangement, loss, and grief have all been thrown in for good measure. I've had three babies in four years and particularly grueling pregnancies.

That's all on top of the drip, drip, drip of everyday rain showers. The juggle, never-ending mom-guilt, trying to maintain friendships, everyday anxieties (don't get me started on the stress of parallel parking), and wondering when I will get time to try all of the projects and recipes lingering on my Pinterest boards . . .

Top that with some imposter syndrome, poor body image, too much time on social media, not enough rest, and the constant nagging feeling of not quite being or doing enough.

I have a 4.0 GPA in this stuff!

Through these good days and bad days, I draw and I write: bold rainbows of illustrations and peeks into the ups and downs of my life that I share online.

With every illustration I share and each social media post,
I'm reminded it's not just me.

It's not just me who struggles with self-care; not just me who sneaks off to cry when the laundry is piling up and the kids are bickering; not just me who is juggling work and life and feeling bulldozed by the big stuff and overwhelmed by the little stuff.

And if it's not just me, it's not just you, either.

Remember, we are all in this together.

We all need a bit of TLC and a gentle reminder every so often.

We all have survived every bad day and overcome every obstacle we've faced.

And for the times we don't feel like the very best version of ourselves, this book promises to bring color to the greyest of skies.

Whenever we need a little more empathy and self-compassion, this book will inspire an extra dose of self-love.

For all of us spinning too many plates, comparing our worst days to a constant stream of shiny, staged social media photos, compromising boundaries, and putting self-care at the bottom of the to-do list, these pages are packed with positivity, illustrated reminders, and tips you can use every day.

They are sprinkled with activities to encourage us to identify and highlight ways to keep us twinkling. I promise you a rainbow of inspiration and kindness that will help even on the darkest of days!

You've got this.

Chapter 2

WHY IS THIS STUFF IMPORTANT?

We're constantly busy, constantly juggling.

We are forever doing more and stopping less. The incessant go, go, go of life ultimately means that looking after ourselves falls to the bottom of our list of priorities and we forget our own capabilities and awesomeness.

We people-please and take on too much.

We compromise our boundaries.

We keep going until we feel run-down and empty.

our sparkle dims.

We get used to being last on the "things to take care of" list, and it can be hard to shift the spotlight onto our own well-being.

Self-care, self-acceptance, self-love, self-kindness, self-worth . . . all the focus on "self" feels selfish and indulgent—so even if we do find the time, why do we deserve so much of our own care and attention?

YOU CAN'T POUR FROM AN EMPTY CUP

We just aren't able to give endlessly without topping ourselves off first. It's a simple enough idea, but it's also the foundation on which we can best pursue and maintain our twinkliness and happiness.

WE HAVE TO TAKE BETTER

CARE OF US.

SPARKLE

Investing in our mental and physical wellness ensures we can be the best, sparkliest version of ourselves at all times—whatever the weather, whatever life throws our way.

How we choose to replenish our cups is as unique and individual as everything else about us. There's no one-size-fits-all answer, but there are some things we can all do in our own way to treat ourselves a little better:

Acknowledge we are deserving of our own love and kindness

Treat ourselves with the compassion we would show to others

Accept everything about ourselves: the good, the bad (and the non-Instagrammable)

Create strong and clear boundaries

Build our self-belief and work on our self-worth

Find joy in our everyday experiences

Remember we are strong, resilient, and a unique force of nature

Knowing this is one thing, but in reality, of course, putting it into effect can be tricky.

We need to make a commitment to ourselves . . .

SELF-CARE
isn't SELFISH

We may worry that focusing on our own needs will result in people liking us less.

The truth is, we can't control the feelings and reactions of anyone else—positive or negative. We are able to change only our own thoughts and actions.

We may feel constrained by finances, time, or ability.

We can only do what we can. And that's OK.

Even our smallest acts of self-kindness can make a difference: being more mindful with our use of social media, practicing positive self-talk, prioritizing early nights over Netflix . . . it all adds up.

We may be overwhelmed with plans to aim big—to approach self-care with a dramatic overhaul and great gusto (all my fellow overachievers, I'm talking to you!).

Step back. Slow down.

Sneaking small wins into our everyday lives can be the spark that transforms into steady radiance!

We may just not feel worthy.

Despite what our inner voices may tell us,
we matter.

Our happiness matters.

WE DESERVE TO GIVE TIME TO THE THINGS THAT HELP US KEEP SPARKLING AND SHINING OUR BRIGHTEST.

Being dedicated to looking after ourselves equips us with the resources we need to deal with the huge and the small things. It makes our outlook more positive and keeps us happier and healthier.

We are better able to pick ourselves up and dust ourselves off when we face hard times, or wobble, or realize we've stopped feeling as awesome as we could.

Chapter 3

WE ALL HAVE TIMES WHEN LIFE IS A BIT RAINY

On difficult days, the storm clouds arrive and things feel messy and hard to manage—it seems as though the bad outweighs the good, and so our ability to recognize our strength diminishes.

We fixate on our perceived shortcomings: everything we don't have, the emotions too big to share in 280 characters, the ways we aren't living up to our own expectations, and the things that can't be easily tidied away out of view and kept hidden from judgment and comment.

When we are wading through our messiest times and only see our flaws, it is easy to assume that everyone else has it together. Other people's lives look neat and simple, perfectly ordered and contained—we focus on the highlight reels we are shown on social media and don't step back to see the full picture.

We may feel overwhelmed, embarrassed, and solitary in our struggles, but it's important to remember we are not alone.

While everyone else's forecasts may give the impression of being 100% sunshine, the rain showers happen to us all, without exception.

★ STRENGTH ★

Sprinkling some honesty through our lives, on and offline, gives us the opportunity to be the light in someone else's dark days.

By allowing ourselves to be open and authentic, we can shine a little brighter, too.

Strength through the stormiest times doesn't mean shouldering the clouds alone.

STRENGTH CAN LOOK LIKE:

REACHING OUT FOR HELP

GIVING OURSELVES OPPORTUNITY FOR GROWTH

PUTTING OURSELVES FIRST

DOING WHAT WE CAN WITH WHAT WE HAVE

SLOWING DOWN

EMBRACING OUR FEELINGS

We may not be able to stop every rain shower, but there are some things we can do to help when we feel overwhelmed.

The banner is surrounded by various colorful floral illustrations, including pink, blue, and white flowers, and small white dots scattered across the yellow field.

IT'S OK NOT TO BE OK.

We can give ourselves permission to find some things hard, even when other people don't understand.

It's totally fine to live by our own rules.

The world won't end if we make mistakes or choose to start again.

We are allowed to change, grow and become different versions of ourselves, accept ourselves as we are,
and forgive our previous errors.

It's totally, 100% OK.
You are not failing.

There are no prizes for struggling through, though.

We can take time to pause and

WE ARE MADE OF MORE

THERE IS LOTS

It's not always easy to practice self-love.

our inner critics can be sneaky and persistent.

We find it so much easier to believe the negative than the positive—but in order to love ourselves a little more, we need to learn to be gentler with ourselves,

to focus on the positive,

to train our inner voices to be more compassionate and altogether a little kinder.
